2. Cidade no território de Benjamim (Jos 18:28), também chamada "Gibeá de Benjamim" (1Sa 13:2), "Gibeá dos filhos de Benjamim" (2Sa 23:29) e "Gibeá de Saul" (2Sa 21:6). Evidentemente, ficava perto da estrada principal entre Jebus (Jerusalém) e Ramá. (Jz 19:11-15) Por causa da sua posição numa das elevações na cordilheira central da Palestina, Gibeá servia bem como ponto de observação em tempos de guerra. (1Sa 14:16) Os peritos, em geral, identificam esta cidade com Tell el-Ful (Giv'at Sha'ul), situada a uns 5 km ao N do monte do Templo em Jerusalém.

As grafias hebraicas de Geba (forma masculina da palavra que significa "Morro; Colina") e de Gibeá (forma feminina do termo que significa "Morro; Colina") são quase idênticas. Muitos acreditam que isso resultou em erros de escriba no texto massorético, e, portanto, recomendam mudar certos textos para ler "Geba", em vez de "Gibeá", e vice-versa. Sobre isto, certo comentário, com referência a Primeiro Samuel, capítulos 13 e 14, observa o seguinte: "Os comentadores, porém, discordam mui-to com respeito a onde tais substituições devem ser feitas (e.g., Smith lê Geba em lugar de Gibeá em toda ocorrência; Kennedy lê Geba, em lugar de Gibeá no [capítulo 13] versículo 2, Gibeá em lugar de Geba no versículo 3, e Geba, em lugar de Gibeá em xiv. 2); e não é impossível entender o progresso da campanha sem tais alterações." (Soncino Books of the Bible [Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino], obra editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1951, Samuel, p. 69) Em Juízes 20:10, 33, o contexto sugere que se intencionou "Gibeá", e, por isso, muitos tradutores divergem aqui do texto massorético e usam "Gibeá" em vez de "Geba".

No período dos juízes, a cidade de Gibeá figurou num incidente que quase levou ao extermínio de toda a tribo de Benjamim. Um homem idoso convidou um levita efraimita e sua concubina a pernoitarem com ele. Logo depois, homens imprestáveis de Gibeá cercaram a casa, exigindo que o levita lhes fosse entregue, de modo a terem relações sexuais com ele. Depois de o levita ter entregue sua concubina nas mãos deles, estes abusaram tanto dela a noite toda, que ela morreu de manhã. (Talvez se faça alusão a este pecado chocante em Os 9:9 e 10:9.) Visto que a tribo de Benjamim protegeu os homens culpados de Gibeá, as outras tribos guerrearam contra Benjamim. Duas vezes sofreram grandes perdas, antes de finalmente derrotarem os benjamitas e consignarem Gibeá ao fogo. (Jz 19:15-20:48) (Alguns relacionam o registro bíblico a respeito da destruição de Gibeá com a evidência arqueológica descoberta em Tell el-Ful, que indica que a cidade foi incendiada.)

Gibeá era a cidade do primeiro rei de Israel, Saul (1Sa 10:26; 15:34), e evidentemente também de Itai, um dos poderosos de Davi (2Sa 23:8, 29; 1Cr 11:26, 31), bem como de Aiezer e de Joás, dois guerreiros que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague. (1Cr 12:1-3) Evidentemente, Gibeá serviu também como primeira capital do reino israelita sob Saul. Em Gibeá, mensageiros de Jabes (Jabes-Gileade) pediram ajuda quando esta se viu confrontada com um sítio pelos amonitas, e dali o Rei Saul convocou imediatamente Israel para a guerra, para enfrentar esta ameaça. (1Sa 11:1-7) Mais tarde, as operações de guerra de Saul contra os filisteus foram lançadas na vizinhança de Gibeá. (1Sa 13:2-4, 15; 14:2, 16) Também, em duas ocasiões, homens de Zife contaram a Saul, em Gibeá, onde estava o esconderijo do proscrito Davi. — 1Sa 23:19; 26:1.

Durante o reinado de Davi, sete dos filhos e netos de Saul foram mortos em Gibeá ("Gibeão", segundo Áquila, Símaco e a LXX), por causa da culpa de sangue que recaía sobre a casa de Saul por ele ter morto muitos gibeonitas. E a enviuvada concubina de Saul guardou vigília sobre os homens mortos, para que aves e animais necrófagos não se alimentassem dos seus cadáveres. — 2Sa 21:1-10.

No oitavo século AEC, por meio do profeta Isaías, Jeová falou profeticamente a respeito de Gibeá, como tendo fugido diante do exército assírio, que estaria a caminho de Jerusalém. (Is 10:24, 29-32) E, por meio de Oseias, Deus retratou profeticamente uma situação que fazia parecer que o reino setentrional das dez tribos já tinha sido conquistado, o inimigo ameaçando Gibeá e Ramá, em Benjamim (no reino meridional de Judá). — Os 5:8-10. Veja também GIBEIA.

GIBEÃO [De Morro, Colina], GIBEONITAS. A cidade de Gibeão é hoje relacionada com el-Jib, a uns 9,5 km ao NNO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. Ali foram encontradas numerosas alças de jarros de barro com o nome Gibeão em caracteres hebraicos antigos. Situada num morro que se eleva uns 60 m acima da planície circunvizinha, o lugar antigo abrange uns 6,5 ha.

Em anos recentes, este lugar tem sido cenário de escavações arqueológicas. Os escavadores desobstruíram um túnel de 51 m cortado através de rocha sólida. Este túnel era antigamente iluminado por lâmpadas colocadas em nichos em intervalos regulares ao longo das paredes. Este túnel, com sua escadaria de 93 degraus cortada na rocha, conduzia desde um lugar logo dentro de Gibeão a um reservatório escavado numa caverna, alimentado por uma fonte a cerca de 25 m abaixo da muralha da cidade. Isto assegurava aos gibeonitas um suprimento seguro de água mesmo em tempos de sítio. Os escavadores descobriram também um poço ou reservatório redondo, cortado na rocha, com um diâmetro de 11,3 m. Uma escadaria circular, cujos degraus têm a largura aproximada de 1,5 m, leva ao fundo, em sentido horário, beirando o poço. Do fundo do poço, a uma profundidade de 10,8 m, os degraus prosseguem por 13,6 m através duma galeria até a câmara da água. Não se tem certeza se este poço, ou reservatório, deve ser identificado com o bíblico "reservatório de água de Gibeão". — 2Sa 2:13.

Tratos com Josué. No tempo de Josué, Gibeão era habitada pelos heveus, uma das sete nações cananeias destinadas à destruição. (De 7:1, 2; Jos 9:3-7) Os gibeonitas também eram chamados amorreus, visto que este nome às vezes parece ter sido aplicado de modo geral a todos os cananeus. (2Sa 21:2; compare isso com Gên 10:15-18; 15:16.) Dessemelhantes dos outros cananeus, os gibeonitas se deram conta de que, apesar da sua força militar e da grandiosidade da sua cidade, sua resistência fracassaria porque Jeová estava lutando por Israel. Assim, depois da destruição de Jericó e de Ai, os homens de Gibeão, evidentemente representando também as outras três cidades heveias de Quefira, Beerote e Quiriate-Jearim (Jos 9:17), enviaram uma delegação a Josué em Gilgal, pedindo paz. Os embaixadores gibeonitas — trajados de roupas e sandálias gastas, e trazendo odres de vinho rebentados, sacos estragados, e pão ressequido e em migalhas — apresentaram-se como vindo de uma terra distante, portanto, não estando no caminho das conquistas de Israel. Reconheceram a mão de Jeová por detrás do que antes havia acontecido ao Egito e aos reis amorreus, Síon e Ogue. Mas, sabiamente, não fizeram menção do que acontecera a Jericó e a Ai, visto que a notícia disso não poderia ter chegado ainda à sua "terra mui distante" antes da sua suposta partida. Os representantes de Israel examinaram e aceitaram a evidência, e fizeram com eles um pacto para deixá-los viver. — Jos 9:3-15.

Pouco depois, o ardil foi descoberto. Mas o pacto continuou em vigor; rompê-lo teria lançado dúvida sobre a fidedignidade de Israel e causado desprezo pelo nome de Jeová entre as outras nações. Quando Josué expôs a astúcia dos gibeonitas, eles novamente reconheceram que Jeová lidava com Israel e então se colocaram à mercê dele, dizendo: "Agora, eis que estamos na tua mão. O que for bom e direito aos teus olhos fazer conosco, faze." Foram então feitos ajuntadores de lenha e tiradores de água para a assembleia e para o altar de Jeová. — Jos 9:16-27.

Embora Josué e os outros maiorais tivessem sido enganados para fazer um pacto com os gibeonitas, isto, evidentemente, estava em harmonia com a vontade de Jeová. (Jos 11:19) Uma prova disso se vê no fato de que, quando cinco reis amorreus procuraram destruir os gibeonitas, Jeová abençoou a operação de socorro de Israel; ele até mesmo lançou grandes pedras de saraiva sobre o adversário e prolongou milagrosamente a luz do dia para a batalha. (Jos 10:1-14) Também, os gibeonitas, tanto ao procurarem fazer um pacto de paz com Israel como por apelarem a Josué para ajudá-los quando ameaçados, manifestaram fé na capacidade de Jeová, de cumprir sua palavra e de realizar a libertação, algo pelo qual Raabe, de Jericó, foi elogiada e que resultou na preservação da sua vida e na da sua família. Além disso, os gibeonitas tinham um temor sadio do Deus de Israel. — Veja Jos 2:9-14; 9:9-11, 24; 10:6; He 11:31.

Sob o Controle de Israel. Depois disso, Gibeão passou a ser uma das cidades do território de Benjamim, designadas aos sacerdotes arônicos. (Jos 18:21, 25; 21:17-19) O benjamita Jeiel, pelo que parece, 'tornou-se pai', ou fundador, duma casa ali. (1Cr 8:29; 9:35) Um dos poderosos de Davi, Ismaías, era gibeonita (1Cr 12:1, 4), e o falso profeta Hananias, contemporâneo de Jeremias, procedia de Gibeão. — Je 28:1.

No século 11 AEC, Gibeão e sua vizinhança presenciaram um conflito entre o exército de Is-Bose-

A atual Gibeão. Os antigos gibeonitas deram-se conta de que Jeová lutava por Israel, de modo que pediram paz. O tabernáculo ficava aqui antes de Salomão mudá-lo para Jerusalém.

te, sob o comando de Abner, e o de Davi, sob a chefia de Joabe. Inicialmente, sem dúvida para resolver a questão de quem deveria ser rei sobre todo o Israel, travou-se um combate entre 12 homens de cada lado. Mas este nada resolveu, pois cada guerreiro atravessou seu oponente com a espada, de modo que pereceram todos os 24. Depois disso, irrompeu um feroz combate, perdendo Abner 18 vezes mais homens do que Joabe. Ao todo, houve 380 baixas, incluindo o irmão de Joabe, Asael, morto por Abner. (2Sa 2:12-31) Em vingança, por causa de Asael, Joabe assassinou depois Abner. (2Sa 3:27, 30) Algum tempo depois, perto da pedra grande em Gibeão, Joabe também matou seu próprio primo, Amasa, sobrinho de Davi, a quem Davi designara como chefe do exército. — 2Sa 20:8-10.

No decorrer dos séculos, os gibeonitas originais continuaram a existir como povo, embora o Rei Saul tramasse destruí-los. Os gibeonitas, porém, esperaram pacientemente que Jeová revelasse a injustiça. Ele fez isso por meio duma fome de três anos no reinado de Davi. Ao indagar de Jeová e ficar sabendo que estava envolvida culpa de sangue, Davi entrevistou os gibeonitas para saber o que devia ser feito para se fazer expiação. Os gibeonitas responderam corretamente que não era uma “questão de prata ou de ouro”, porque, segundo a Lei, não se podia aceitar nenhum resgate por um assassino. (Núm 35:30, 31) Reconheceram também que não podiam matar um homem sem autorização legal. Portanto, foi só depois de indagações adicionais feitas por Davi que solicitaram que sete “filhos” de Saul lhes fossem entregues. Serem tanto Saul como sua casa culpados de sangue sugere que, embora Saul provavelmente tomasse a dianteira na ação assassina, os “filhos” de Saul talvez participassem nela direta ou indiretamente. (2Sa 21:1-9) Neste caso, não se trataria de filhos morrerem pelos pecados de seus pais (De 24:16), mas envolveria a administração de justiça retributiva, em harmonia com a lei de “alma por alma”. — De 19:21.

Durante a vida de Davi, o tabernáculo foi transferido para Gibeão. (1Cr 16:39; 21:29, 30) Foi ali que Salomão ofereceu sacrifícios logo cedo no seu reinado. Foi também em Gibeão que Jeová lhe apareceu num sonho, convidando-o a solicitar qualquer coisa que desejasse. — 1Rs 3:4, 5; 9:1, 2; 2Cr 1:3, 6, 13.

Anos depois, o profeta Isaías (28:21, 22), ao predizer o ato estranho e a obra incomum de Jeová, de se levantar contra o seu próprio povo, compara isso ao que aconteceu na baixada de Gibeão. Provavelmente, a alusão é à vitória sobre os filisteus, que Deus concedeu a Davi (1Cr 14:16), se não for também à derrota bem anterior da liga amorreia, no tempo de Josué. (Jos 10:5, 6, 10-14) A profecia teve cumprimento em 607 AEC, quando Jeová permitiu que os babilônios destruíssem Jerusalém e seu templo.

Em Mispá, não muito depois da predita destruição, Ismael assassinou Gedalias, o governador designado por Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia. O assassino e seus homens também levaram cativas as pessoas remanescentes em Mispá. Mas Joanã, acompanhado de seus homens, alcançou Ismael, junto às abundantes águas de Gibeão, e recuperou os cativos. — Je 41:2, 3, 10-16.

Homens de Gibeão estavam entre aqueles que retornaram do exílio em Babilônia, em 537 AEC, e certos deles participaram mais tarde na reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:7; 7:6, 7, 25.

GIBEATE-ARALOTE [Morro dos Prepúcios]. Lugar em que todos os varões israelitas, nascidos no ermo, foram circuncidados, após a travessia do Jordão. Gibeate-Aralote ficava perto da cidade de Jericó e veio a ser chamada de Gilgal. — Jos 5:3-10; veja GILGAL N.º 1.

GIBEATITA [De (Pertencente a) Gibeá]. Habitante de “Gibeá de Benjamim” (1Sa 14:16; 1Cr 12:1-3); o termo é aplicado a Semaá, cujos “filhos” serviram no exército de Davi.

GIBEIA [Morro, Colina]. Descendente de Calebe, da tribo de Judá (1Cr 2:42, 49); ou, possivelmente, a cidade de Gibeá (Jos 15:57), da qual Seva, um dos descendentes de Calebe, ‘tornou-se pai’, ou fundador. — Veja GIBEÁ N.º 1.

GIBETOM [Dorso; Elevação]. Cidade originalmente designada à tribo de Dã (Jos 19:40, 41, 44), mas depois dada aos coatitas como cidade levita. (Jos 21:20, 23) Séculos depois, Gibetom estava nas mãos dos filisteus, e foi quando o Rei Nadabe, de Israel, tentou arrebatar a cidade deles, que o conspirador Baasa o assassinou. (1Rs 15:27) Gibetom estava sob controle filisteu uns 24 anos mais tarde, quando Onri, chefe do exército de Israel, acampou contra ela. Aclamado como rei pelo acampamento israelita ali, Onri interrompeu o sítio de Gibetom para atacar Zinri, o rei rival de Israel. — 1Rs 16:15-18.

Gibetom é geralmente identificada com Tell el-Melate (Tel Malot), a uns 9 km ao N do lugar sugerido para a cidade filisteia de Ecrom.

GIDALTI [Eu Engrandeci]. Filho de Hemã; cantor levita que, no tempo de Davi, foi designado por sortes para servir como cabeça do 22.º dos 24 grupos de serviço, cada um com 12 músicos. — 1Cr 25:1, 4, 29.

GIDEÃO [Cortador; Decepador]. Um dos notáveis juízes de Israel; filho de Joás, da família de Abiezer, da tribo de Manassés. Gideão morava em Ofra, povoado evidentemente situado ao O do Jordão. A divisão tribal a que pertencia era a mais insignificante de Manassés, e ele era "o menor da casa de [seu] pai". — Jz 6:11, 15.

Gideão viveu numa época muito turbulenta da história de Israel. Por causa da infidelidade dos israelitas a Jeová, eles não usufruíam os frutos da sua labuta. Durante vários anos, nações pagãs vizinhas, especialmente os midianitas, haviam invadido Israel na época da colheita com hostes 'tão numerosas como os gafanhotos'. A mão de Midiã mostrou-se tão pesada sobre eles por sete anos, que os israelitas fizeram para si locais subterrâneos de armazenagem, a fim de ocultar dos invasores seus suprimentos de alimentos. — Jz 6:1-6.

Chamado para Servir Como Libertador. Para evitar que os midianitas o descobrissem, Gideão não malhava os grãos num lugar aberto, mas num lagar de vinho, quando lhe apareceu um anjo, dizendo: "Jeová está contigo, ó valente, poderoso." Isto induziu Gideão a perguntar como isso podia ser assim, em vista da opressão midianita sobre a nação. Quando informado de que ele seria aquele que libertaria Israel, Gideão mencionou modestamente a sua própria insignificância. Mas, foi-lhe assegurado que Jeová mostraria estar com ele. Em vista disso, Gideão pediu um sinal, para saber que o mensageiro era realmente o anjo de Jeová. Ele trouxe uma oferta de carne, pães não fermentados e um caldo, e à indicação do anjo, colocou-os sobre uma grande penha e derramou o caldo. O anjo tocou com o bastão na carne e nos pães não fermentados, e então começou a subir fogo da rocha e a consumir a oferta, desaparecendo o anjo a seguir. — Jz 6:11-22.

Naquela mesma noite, Jeová pôs Gideão à prova por ordenar-lhe que derrubasse o altar erigido por seu pai para o deus Baal, que cortasse o poste sagrado ao lado dele, que construísse um altar para Jeová e então oferecesse nele o novilho de sete anos de seu pai (evidentemente um touro considerado como sagrado para Baal), usando como lenha o poste sagrado. Gideão, com a devida cautela, fez isso de noite, com a ajuda de dez servos. Quando os homens da cidade se levantaram de manhã e viram o que tinha acontecido, e então souberam que Gideão era o responsável por isso, exigiram a vida dele. Joás, porém, não lhes entregou seu filho, mas replicou no sentido de que Baal devia fazer a sua própria defesa. Joás deu então ao seu filho Gideão o nome de Jerubaal (que significa "Pleiteie (Contenda) Baal em Defesa"), dizendo: "Pleiteie Baal em sua própria defesa, visto que alguém demoliu o seu altar." — Jz 6:25-32.

Vitória sobre Midiã. Depois disso, quando os midianitas, junto com os amalequitas e os orientais, invadiram novamente Israel e acamparam no vale de Jezreel, o espírito de Jeová envolveu Gideão. Convocando para a batalha os abiezritas, Gideão enviou mensageiros através de Manassés e a Aser, Zebulão e Naftali, exortando os homens a se juntarem a ele. Desejando evidência adicional de que Jeová estava com ele, Gideão solicitou que um velo exposto à noite na eira estivesse molhado de orvalho na manhã seguinte, mas que o chão estivesse seco. Quando Jeová lhe concedeu este milagre, Gideão cautelosamente quis confirmar com um segundo sinal que Jeová estava com ele, e assim solicitou e obteve o milagre com as circunstâncias invertidas. — Jz 6:33-40.

Trinta e dois mil combatentes juntaram-se a Gideão em resposta à sua convocação. Eles acamparam junto ao poço de Harode, ao sul do acampamento midianita junto ao morro de Moré, na baixada. Os 32.000 israelitas foram superados em mais de quatro por um pelos invasores, os quais tinham uma força de uns 135.000. (Jz 8:10) Mas, Jeová indicou que havia homens demais com Gideão, no sentido de que, se Deus entregasse Midiã na mão deles, poderiam concluir que foi sua própria valentia que trouxe a salvação. Sob a orientação de Deus, Gideão disse que os que tivessem medo ou que tremessem se retirassem. Vinte e dois mil se retiraram, mas ainda havia homens demais. A seguir, Jeová mandou que Gideão levasse os remanescentes 10.000 homens para baixo, à água, a fim de testá-los. Uns poucos, apenas 300, levaram a água com a mão à boca, e estes foram postos à parte. Os outros, que se puseram de joelhos para beber, não deviam ser usados. Os 300, pelo seu modo de beber, manifestaram atenção, preocupação com a luta pela adoração verdadeira em nome de Jeová. Por meio deste pequeno grupo de 300, Jeová prometeu salvar Israel. — Jz 7:1-7.

Gideão, com seu ajudante Pura, passou a reconhecer o acampamento inimigo à noite. Ali Gideão ouviu um homem contar um sonho ao seu companheiro. Este companheiro, por sua vez, interpretou o sonho no sentido de que Midiã e todo o acampamento seriam entregues na mão de Gideão. Fortalecido por aquilo que ouviu, Gideão retornou ao acampamento de Israel, organizou os 300 em três grupos, a fim de poder chegar-se ao acampamento de Midiã de três lados, e deu a cada homem uma buzina e um jarro grande, dentro do qual se colocou uma tocha. — Jz 7:9-16.

Com seu grupo de 100, Gideão chegou à beirada do acampamento dos midianitas logo depois de estes terem postado sentinelas para a vigília média da noite. Daí, seguindo as instruções de Gideão, seus homens fizeram exatamente o mesmo que ele. A calada da noite foi interrompida pelo toque de 300 buzinas, pelo espatifamento de 300 jarros grandes para água e pelo som de 300 gritos de guerra; ao mesmo tempo, o céu foi iluminado por 300 tochas. O acampamento foi tomado pela confusão. Os invasores começaram a gritar e a fugir, e "Jeová passou a tornar a espada de cada um contra o outro, em todo o acampamento; e o acampamento continuou na sua fuga até Bete-Sita, de lá para Zererá, até as cercanias de Abel-Meolá, junto a Tabate". — Jz 7:17-22.

No ínterim, foram convocados os homens de Naftali, Aser e Manassés para irem no encalço de Midiã. Além disso, enviaram-se mensageiros a Efraim, para interceptar a fuga dos midianitas. Os efraimitas fizeram isso, capturando as águas até Bete-Bara e o Jordão. Capturaram e mataram também os dois príncipes midianitas, Orebe e Zeebe. No entanto, ao se encontrarem com Gideão, os efraimitas "tentaram veementemente altercar com ele", visto que não os chamara logo de início para ajudar. Gideão, porém, por indicar modestamente que aquilo que ele fizera não era nada em comparação com o que eles fizeram ao capturarem Orebe e Zeebe, acalmou o espírito deles e assim evitou um choque. — Jz 7:23-8:3.

Atravessando o Jordão, Gideão e os 300 homens com ele, embora cansados, continuaram a perseguir Zeba e Zalmuna, os reis de Midiã, bem como os homens com eles. Em caminho, solicitou alimentos dos homens de Sucote, mas os príncipes de Sucote negaram-se a dar ajuda, dizendo: "Já tens na mão as palmas das mãos de Zeba e de Zalmuna, de maneira que se tenha de dar pão ao teu exército?" Os homens de Penuel também se negaram a atender a solicitação de Gideão. — Jz 8:4-9.

Chegando a Carcor, onde os invasores, reduzidos a cerca de 15.000 homens, se acamparam, Gideão golpeou o acampamento enquanto o inimigo estava desprevenido. Zeba e Zalmuna puseram-se em fuga. Gideão foi imediatamente no encalço deles e capturou-os. Além disso, "pôs todo o acampamento a tremer". — Jz 8:10-12.

Ao retornar da luta, Gideão capturou um moço de Sucote e informou-se dele dos nomes dos príncipes e dos anciãos da cidade. De acordo com o que dissera antes, quando não atenderam seu pedido de alimentos, Gideão deu aos anciãos de Sucote uma lição com espinhos e sarças. Também, conforme avisara de antemão, Gideão demoliu a torre de Penuel e matou os homens daquela cidade por não terem cooperado em prover alimentos aos seus homens. — Jz 8:13-17.

Daí, Gideão mandou que seu filho primogênito, Jeter, matasse Zeba e Zalmuna, assim como estes haviam matado os irmãos de Gideão, os filhos da sua mãe. Sendo ainda moço, Jeter tinha medo de matar os reis midianitas. Assim, Gideão, desafiado por Zeba e Zalmuna de fazê-lo ele mesmo, executou-os. — Jz 8:18-21.

Feito o Éfode. Israelitas gratos pediram que Gideão estabelecesse sua família como dinastia governante. Gideão, porém, reconheceu que Jeová era o Rei legítimo de Israel, e, por isso, não atendeu a solicitação deles. Sugeriu, então, que contribuíssem as joias de ouro que haviam obtido como despojo de guerra, sendo que apenas as argolas para as narinas somaram 1.700 siclos de ouro (US$ 218.365). Gideão fez então um éfode dos despojos contribuídos, exibindo-o em Ofra. Mas todo o Israel começou a ter "relações imorais" com o éfode, tornando-se este um laço até mesmo para Gideão e sua casa. Assim, embora a sua ação, sem dúvida, tivesse motivação correta, o éfode desviou a atenção do verdadeiro santuário designado por Jeová — o tabernáculo. Os esforços de Gideão malograram, produzindo um resultado contrário ao que ele pretendera. — Jz 8:22-27; veja ÉFODE, I.

Morre Como Testemunha Aprovada. Tão completa foi a libertação que Jeová trouxe por meio de Gideão, que não houve mais perturbação durante os 40 anos do seu juizado. Gideão passou a ter muitas esposas, com as quais teve 70 filhos. Depois da morte de Gideão, numa boa idade, Israel tornou-se novamente vítima da adoração de Baal. Além disso, Abimeleque, filho de Gideão com sua concubina, uma mulher de Siquém, matou os outros filhos de Gideão. Escapou apenas Jotão, o mais jovem. — Jz 8:28-9:5; veja ABIMELEQUE N.º 4; OFRA N.º 3.

A fé de Gideão, em face de grandes desvantagens, habilitou-o a ser mencionado como um dentre a "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas". (He 11:32; 12:1) Além disso, sua modéstia era exemplar, e ela era acompanhada de cautela. Pelo visto, a cautela de Gideão era salutar, e não deve ser encarada como proveniente de falta de fé da sua parte, porque nunca foi censurado por ser cauteloso. Outrossim, conforme indicado no Salmo 83, a derrota de Midiã, nos dias de Gideão, fornece um padrão profético da vindoura destruição de todos os opositores de Jeová. Por meio dessa destruição, Jeová vai santificar o seu nome e defender a sua soberania. — Veja Is 9:4; 10:26.

GIDEL [Engrandecido].

1. Antepassado duma família de escravos netineus do templo, os quais estavam entre os que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 47; Ne 7:49.

2. Cabeça paterno de uma das famílias dos "filhos dos servos de Salomão", alistados entre aqueles que retornaram a Jerusalém e Judá em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 55, 56; Ne 7:58.

GIDEONI [Cortador; Decepador]. Pai de Abidã, maioral da tribo de Benjamim, no tempo de Moisés. — Núm 1:11, 16.

GIDOM [Cortador; Decepador]. Lugar mencionado em Juízes 20:45. Depois de um grave crime sexual cometido por benjamitas, as outras tribos israelitas perseguiram os benjamitas até este ponto. Sua localização exata é desconhecida.

GIESTA(-DAS-VASSOURAS) [hebr.: ró·them]. A giesta-das-vassouras (Retama raetam) é na realidade um arbusto desértico da família da ervilha. O nome árabe correspondente (ratam) ajuda a identificar a planta e mostra ser incorreta a tradução "junípero" na versão de Antônio Pereira de Figueiredo.

Este arbusto é uma das mais abundantes plantas do ermo de Judá, da península de Sinai, bem como do restante da Arábia, e encontra-se em ravinas, em lugares rochosos, em encostas de morros e mesmo em trechos arenosos de áreas desérticas, onde suas raízes penetram fundo para captar umidade. Atinge aproximadamente de 1 a 4 m de altura, tendo numerosos ramos finos, semelhantes a varas, e folhas estreitas e retas. Quando floresce, os pequenos cachos de flores delicadas, que variam de cor desde o branco ao rosa, apresentam uma linda vista ao recobrirem as encostas de morros de outro modo desprovidos de vegetação. O nome hebraico da planta (ró·them) evidentemente deriva dum radical que significa "ligar; amarrar", referindo-se talvez à sua capacidade de segurar dunas de areia. Segundo Plínio, seus ramos flexíveis eram usados para amarrar coisas. — Natural History (História Natural), XXIV, XL, 65.

Quando Elias fugiu para o ermo, a fim de escapar da ira de Jezabel, o registro em 1 Reis 19:4, 5, diz que ele "sentou-se debaixo de certa giesta-das-vassouras" e então dormiu ali. Ao passo que as giestas-das-vassouras menores dariam muito pouca sombra contra o escaldante sol do ermo, uma de bom tamanho daria um agradável alívio. Este arbusto do ermo servia também de combustível. A madeira da giesta-das-vassouras fornece um excelente carvão vegetal, que queima com calor intenso.

Visto que as raízes da giesta-das-vassouras são amargas e nauseantes, alguns têm sugerido que referir-se Jó (30:4) a elas como usadas qual alimento por pessoas famintas numa desolação estéril talvez se refira a uma planta parasítica comestível (Cynomorium coccineum), que cresce como fungo nestas raízes. Embora talvez seja assim, é também possível que outra variedade desta planta existisse nos dias de Jó (há mais de 3.000 anos), em vez de apenas a giesta-das-vassouras branca (Retama raetam) que agora cresce ali. N. Hareuveni escreveu, apresentando outro ponto de vista sobre Jó 30:4: "Visto que, dessemelhantes das folhas da salgadeira [KJ], as raízes da giesta são totalmente incomestíveis, em qualquer forma, é óbvio que Jó está falando de raízes da giesta branca, transformadas em algo que pode ser vendido para ganhar o pão. Estes jovens, que agora escarnecem de Jó, fizeram carvão das raízes da giesta branca para vender na feira." (Tree and Shrub in Our Biblical Heritage [Árvore e Arbusto na Nossa Herança Bíblica], Kiryat Ono, Israel, 1984, p. 31) Em harmonia com isto, alguns sugerem que os sinais vocálicos da palavra hebraica traduzida como "seu alimento" sejam ajustados de modo que o hebraico reze "para aquecê-los".

GIGANTE. A Bíblia fornece relatos de homens de estatura extraordinária. Havia Ogue, rei de Basã, um dos refains, cujo esquife tinha nove côvados (4 m) de comprimento e quatro côvados (1,8 m) de largura. (De 3:11) Golias, de Gate, morto por Davi, tinha seis côvados e um palmo (2,9 m) de altura. Um indício do tamanho e da força de Golias era o peso da sua armadura. Sua cota de malha de cobre pesava 5.000 siclos (57 kg); a lâmina de ferro da sua lança pesava 600 siclos (6,8 kg). — 1Sa 17:4-7.

Além de Ogue e Golias, havia outros homens de Refaim, de tamanho extraordinário, entre os quais estava Isbi-Benobe, cuja lança era de 300 siclos de cobre (3,4 kg) (2Sa 21:16); Safe ou Sipai (2Sa 21:18; 1Cr 20:4); Lami, irmão de Golias, "cuja haste de lança era como o cilindro dos tecelões" (1Cr 20:5); e um homem de tamanho extraordinário, cujos dedos das mãos e dos pés eram aos seis, no total de 24 (2Sa 21:20).

Os espias sem fé relataram aos israelitas que em Canaã viram "os nefilins, os filhos de Anaque, que são dos nefilins; de modo que ficamos aos nossos próprios olhos como gafanhotos, e assim também éramos aos olhos deles". (Núm 13:33) Estes homens de estatura extraordinária, chamados de filhos de Anaque (provavelmente significando "Pescoço Comprido [quer dizer, de estatura alta]"), não eram realmente nefilins, conforme relatado, mas eram apenas homens extraordinariamente altos, porque os nefilins, descendentes de anjos e mulheres (Gên 6:4), pereceram no Dilúvio.

GILALAI. Músico levita no cortejo providenciado por Neemias por ocasião da inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. — Ne 12:27, 31, 36.

GILBOA [possivelmente: Região Colinosa]. Monte tradicionalmente identificado com Jebel Fuqu'ah, uma cordilheira de montes calcários, em forma de crescente, que fica ao SE de Jezreel e ao O de Bete-

Seã. Ravinas dividem a cordilheira em vários planaltos. Grande parte dela é constituída de rocha desnuda, com canais escarpados nas partes setentrional e ocidental, onde o calcário sofreu erosão. Mas, nas encostas ocidentais, menos íngremes, cultivam-se trigo e cevada. Ali podem ser encontradas também pastagens, bem como figueiras e oliveiras. O lado setentrional é o mais íngreme e mais alto, elevando-se a uns 520 m acima do nível do mar.

Por causa da sua localização estratégica, na fértil planície de Jezreel, entre o vale da torrente do Quisom e o vale do Jordão, Gilboa figurou em pelo menos duas grandes batalhas. Junto ao "poço de Harode", comumente relacionado com a fonte situada no espigão NO de Gilboa, acamparam Gideão e seus homens. (Jz 7:1) Mais tarde, o Rei Saul reuniu suas forças em Gilboa e ali sofreu derrota às mãos dos filisteus. Foi também ali que três de seus filhos, Jonatã, Abinadabe e Malquisua, foram mortos, e o próprio Saul cometeu suicídio. — 1Sa 28:4; 31:1-4, 8; 2Sa 1:4-10, 21; 1Cr 10:1-8.

GILEADE [provavelmente derivado de Galeede, que significa "Montão de Testemunho"]. — Gên 31:47, 48.

1. Filho de Maquir e neto de Manassés; antepassado dos iezeritas e dos helequitas. — Núm 26:29, 30; 27:1; Jos 17:1, 3; 1Cr 2:21, 23; 7:14-17.

2. Gadita alistado na genealogia de Abiail. — 1Cr 5:11-14.

3. Pai de Jefté. — Jz 11:1, 2.

4. Termo geográfico empregado em vários sentidos na Bíblia. Em sentido estrito, Gileade indicava a região montanhosa cupular ao L do rio Jordão, que se estendia ao N e ao S do vale da torrente do Jaboque. (Jos 12:2) Ao N, confinava com Basã; ao S, com o planalto ao N do vale da torrente do Árnon; e ao L, com o território de Amom. (De 2:36, 37; 3:8-10) No entanto, ocasionalmente, "Gileade" ou "a terra de Gileade" aplicava-se de modo geral a todo o território israelita ao L do Jordão, incluindo Basã e o planalto ao N do Árnon. — Jos 22:9; Jz 20:1, 2; 2Sa 2:9; 2Rs 10:32, 33; veja GALEEDE.

Evidentemente, pensava-se que Gileade se compunha de duas partes. Embora simplesmente chamado de Gileade, em Números 32:40, o território designado à meia tribo de Manassés é mais especificamente chamado de "o resto de Gileade" (De 3:13) ou a "metade de Gileade". (Jos 13:31) De modo similar, em sentido mais específico, o território conjunto de Gade e de Rubem, ao S da região dada à meia tribo de Manassés, foi chamada de "metade da região montanhosa de Gileade". (De 3:12) No entanto, esta mesma região, ocasionalmente, é também chamada apenas de Gileade, como é a parte dela designada a Gade (onde ficava a cidade de refúgio de Ramote). — Núm 32:29; Jos 13:24, 25; 21:38.

De pelo menos 210 m abaixo do nível do mar, no vale do Jordão, Gileade se eleva a mais de 1.000 m. Abençoada com abundante chuva no inverno e forte orvalho no verão, bem como por muitas fontes, esta região fértil antigamente tinha grandes florestas e era bem conhecida pelo seu bálsamo curativo. (Je 8:22; 46:11; veja BÁLSAMO, BÁLSAMO DE GILEADE.) Seus planaltos ondulantes eram ideais para a criação de gado e para o cultivo de cereais. Também uvas vicejavam em Gileade. — Núm 21:22; 32:1.

Eventos Históricos em Gileade. Pouco antes de os israelitas entrarem na Terra da Promessa, Síon, o rei amorreu, controlava a parte de Gileade ao S do vale da torrente do Jaboque, ao passo que Ogue, o rei de Basã, dominava a parte ao N. (Jos 12:1-4) Sob a liderança de Moisés, os israelitas derrotaram ambos esses reis, e as tribos de Gade e de Rubem, por causa do seu numeroso gado, pediram que esta região lhes fosse dada como herança. (Núm 21:21-24, 33-35; 32:1-5) Atendeu-se a sua solicitação, sob a condição de que os combatentes de ambas as tribos cruzassem o Jordão e ajudassem na conquista da Terra da Promessa. (Núm 32:20-24, 28-30) Eles concordaram em fazer isso, e reconstruíram imediatamente as cidades para as suas famílias, que deixariam para trás. (Núm 32:25-27, 31-38) A meia tribo de Manassés também recebeu uma herança ao L do Jordão. — Núm 32:33, 39, 40.

No caminho de volta para a sua herança em Gileade, os homens de Rubem, de Gade e da meia tribo de Manassés, construíram um altar como marco comemorativo de fidelidade a Jeová. (Jos 22:9, 10, 26-29) Mais tarde, participaram na ação tribal unida contra os benjamitas, por estes terem abrigado os transgressores de Gibeá para não serem levados à justiça. (Jz 20:1-48) Mas, em nítido contraste com isso, "Gileade" foi censurada por deixar de se juntar a Baraque na luta contra Sísera. (Jz 5:17) De modo similar, num período posterior, os homens de Sucote e de Penuel, duas cidades em Gileade, negaram-se a suprir Gideão e seus homens de alimentos, quando estes perseguiam os midianitas. — Jz 8:4-9.

Após a morte do juiz Jair, de Gileade, Israel retornou à idolatria, e seguiram-se então 18 anos de severa opressão por parte dos amonitas. Confrontados com esta ameaça, os homens de Gileade abandonaram a adoração falsa e apelaram para o gileadita Jefté, para que fosse seu comandante na luta contra Amom. Subsequentemente, os amonitas foram subjugados. — Jz 10:3, 5-10; 11:4-11, 32, 33.

Anos mais tarde, porém, Gileade continuou a ter dificuldades com os amonitas. (Am 1:13) Pouco depois de Saul ter sido ungido como primeiro rei de Israel, Naás, o amonita, sitiou Jabes-Gileade e só aceitava a rendição da cidade sob a condição de que os homens consentissem em ter o olho direito furado. Ao saber disso, Saul ajuntou rapidamente um exército de 330.000 homens e derrotou os amonitas. (1Sa 11:1-11) Gileade parece ter entrado então num período de relativa segurança, que continuou mesmo depois da morte de Saul, conforme sugerido por Abner ter escolhido a cidade gileadita de Maanaim como lugar para fazer rei a Is-Bosete, filho de Saul. (2Sa 2:8, 9) Todavia, em algum tempo durante o reinado de Davi, surgiram novamente dificuldades com os amonitas. Gileade e sua vizinhança tornaram-se cenário de batalhas que por fim resultaram na subjugação total de Amom. — 2Sa 10:6-19; 11:1; 12:26-31.

Mais tarde, durante a rebelião de Absalão, o Rei Davi fugiu para Gileade, e, em Maanaim, foi acolhido bondosa e hospitaleiramente, em especial pelo idoso Barzilai. (2Sa 17:27-29; 19:32) Pelo visto, foi em Gileade que as forças de Davi e de Absalão travaram batalha. A significativa derrota de Absalão preparou o caminho para Davi deixar Gileade e retornar ao trono. — 2Sa 17:24; 18:6-8.

Não muito depois de se estabelecer o reino de dez tribos (997 AEC), os sírios anexaram algum território de Gileade. Ramote-Gileade, cidade de refúgio gadita, na parte oriental de Gileade, estava na mão dos sírios no tempo do Rei Acabe e do profeta gileadita Elias. (1Rs 17:1; 22:3) Daí, durante os reinados do Rei Jeú e de seu filho Jeoacaz, Gileade perdeu ainda mais território e sofreu um severo trilhamento às mãos dos reis sírios Hazael e de seu filho Ben-Hadade III. (2Rs 10:32-34; 13:1, 3, 7; Am 1:3, 4) Todavia, Jeoás, filho de Jeoacaz, derrotou os sírios três vezes e recuperou as cidades que Israel havia perdido para os sírios durante o reinado de seu pai. — 2Rs 13:25.

Por fim, nos dias do rei israelita Peca (c. 778-759 AEC), o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III levou os habitantes de Gileade ao exílio. (2Rs 15:29) Pelo visto, os amonitas aproveitaram-se prontamente desta situação e começaram a ocupar o território de Gileade. (Sal 83:4-8; Je 49:1-5) Jeová, porém, por meio dos seus profetas, assegurou que, com o tempo, os israelitas seriam novamente restabelecidos nesta região. — Je 50:19; Miq 7:14; Za 10:10.

5. "Uma vila" mencionada por Oseias como cheia de inveracidade, derramamento de sangue e de praticantes do que é prejudicial. (Os 6:8; veja 12:11.) Visto que em parte alguma das Escrituras Gileade é identificada como cidade, alguns acham que se trata ou de Jabes-Gileade ou de Ramote-Gileade. Outros sugerem que se trata de toda a região ao L do Jordão.

GILGAL [Rolar; Rolar Para Longe].

1. Cidade "nos limites orientais de Jericó". (Jos 4:19) Perto das "pedreiras" de Gilgal, o rei moabita Eglom, opressor de Israel no tempo de Eúde, pelo visto, tivera sua residência. — Jz 3:12-26.

No passado, a maioria dos geógrafos preferia Khirbet en-Nitleh como possível lugar de Gilgal. Todavia, especialmente desde 1931, tem-se sugerido Khirbet El Mafjir. Sua localização a 2 km ao NE da antiga Jericó (Tell es-Sultan; Tel Yeriho), corresponde mais de perto a antigas referências literárias (tais como as de Josefo e de Eusébio) a respeito da distância entre Jericó e Gilgal. Também, escavações arqueológicas feitas em Khirbet en-Nitleh não forneceram nenhuma evidência de ter sido habitada antes da Era Comum. Por outro lado, explorações superficiais feitas na vizinhança de Khirbet El Mafjir resultaram em se obterem fragmentos de cerâmica, que indicam a presença de alguma espécie de povoação, séculos antes da Era Comum. Embora este sítio não esteja diretamente ao L da antiga Jericó, a menção bíblica de "limites orientais de Jericó" pode incluir o NE.

Gilgal foi o lugar do primeiro acampamento de Israel depois da travessia do Jordão, em abibe (nisã) de 1473 AEC. Ali, em comemoração de Jeová ter secado as águas do Jordão para que Israel o pudesse atravessar, Josué erigiu as 12 pedras tiradas do meio do leito do rio. (Jos 4:8, 19-24) Em Gilgal, todos os varões israelitas nascidos no ermo foram circuncidados, dizendo Jeová depois que ele 'rolara de cima deles o vitupério do Egito'. O lugar recebeu então o nome de "Gilgal", que significa "Rolar; Rolar Para Longe", a fim de servir de recordação disso. (Jos 5:8, 9) Mais tarde, gibeonitas disfarçados, da região montanhosa ao O, desceram ao vale do Jordão e se chegaram a Josué em Gilgal, fazendo um pacto com Israel. (Jos 9:3-15) Depois, quando os gibeonitas foram atacados, o exército de Josué marchou a noite toda, de Gilgal para cima, até a cidade deles, para desbaratar a liga de cinco reis amorreus. (Jos 10:1-15) A distribuição da terra de Canaã foi inicialmente feita em Gilgal (Jos 14:6-17:18) e foi completada em Silo. — Jos 18:1-21:42.

Relata-se que o anjo de Jeová foi "de Gilgal a Boquim". (Jz 2:1) Isto talvez seja uma alusão à aparição angélica perto de Gilgal, pouco depois de Israel ter atravessado o Jordão (Jos 5:10-14), e, portanto, sugere que o mesmo anjo apareceu em Boquim.

Não se tem certeza se era a Gilgal perto do Jordão ou a N.º 2 abaixo que estava incluída no circuito anual de Samuel. (1Sa 7:15, 16) Depois de ungir Saul, ele ofereceu ali sacrifícios (1Sa 10:1, 8), e, junto com o povo, renovou a realeza de Saul. — 1Sa 11:14, 15.

Ao passo que forças filisteias se ajuntavam na região montanhosa em torno de Micmás, o Rei Saul se encontrava embaixo em Gilgal, no vale do Jordão. Temendo que o inimigo caísse sobre ele vindo de cima, Saul presunçosamente ofereceu um sacrifício queimado. (1Sa 13:4-15) Foi também em Gilgal que Saul foi informado de ter sido rejeitado por Jeová como rei, por não ter obedecido à ordem de Jeová de devotar à destruição todos os amalequitas, bem como seus rebanhos e suas manadas. — 1Sa 15:12-28.

Após o fracasso da revolta de Absalão, os homens de Judá vieram a Gilgal, a fim de conduzir Davi através do Jordão. — 2Sa 19:15, 40.

Jeová, por meio do profeta Miqueias, lembrou ao seu povo as Suas bênçãos sobre eles. "De Sitim, até Gilgal", ele havia bloqueado os esforços dos moabitas de corrompê-los, havia levado Israel através do Jordão e havia rolado para longe o vitupério do Egito. Mas Israel deixara de discernir estes "atos justos de Jeová". — Miq 6:5; Núm 25:1.

Gilgal talvez fosse também conhecida como Gelilote. — Veja GELILOTE.

A pós-exílica Bete-Gilgal talvez seja a mesma Gilgal perto de Jericó, ou então a N.º 2. — Ne 12:28, 29.

2. Embora alguns encarem isso de outro modo, a Gilgal mencionada com relação a Elias e Eliseu evidentemente não é a N.º 1. Antes de ser levado por um vendaval em direção aos céus, Elias, acompanhado por Eliseu, desceu de Gilgal a Betel, e daí a Jericó. (2Rs 2:1-5) Esta rota sugere um lugar perto de Betel. Também, o fato de 'descerem' subentende que esta Gilgal se encontrava numa região montanhosa. A Gilgal no vale do Jordão não se enquadra nesta descrição. Portanto, essa Gilgal costuma ser ligada com Jil Jiliya, uma aldeia grande no cume dum morro, a uns 11 km ao N de Betel. Mais tarde, Eliseu tornou ali inofensivo um cozido venenoso. (2Rs 4:38-41) Talvez esta, ou ainda outra Gilgal, seja a descrita em Deuteronômio 11:29, 30, como estando defronte do monte Gerizim e do monte Ebal.

Em períodos posteriores, esta cidade (ou talvez a N.º 1) evidentemente se tornou centro de adoração falsa. (Os 4:15; 9:15; 12:11) Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Amós, prevendo o subsequente exílio do reino setentrional, diz zombeteiramente aos israelitas incorrigíveis a 'cometerem frequentemente transgressão' em Gilgal, predizendo também o exílio dos habitantes dela. — Am 4:4; 5:5.

3. Lugar ao O do Jordão, mencionado numa lista de conquistas dos israelitas sob Josué. (Jos 12:7, 8, 23) Alguns acreditam que o texto talvez contenha um erro de escriba, preferindo assim a leitura "Galileia", da Septuaginta grega, assim como em A Bíblia na Linguagem de Hoje.

GILO. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá (Jos 15:48, 51) e lugar de origem do traidor "Aitofel, o gilonita". (2Sa 15:12; 23:34) Embora se desconheça sua localização exata, alguns geógrafos provisoriamente identificam Gilo com Khirbet Jala, a uns 10 km ao NNO de Hébron.

GILONITA [De (Pertencente a) Gilo]. Habitante de Gilo. Este termo é aplicado a Aitofel, conselheiro de Davi. — Jos 15:51; 2Sa 15:12; 23:34.

GINATE. Pai de Tibni, rival malsucedido de Onri no reinado sobre o reino de dez tribos de Israel. — 1Rs 16:21, 22.

GINETOI. Um dos cabeças de sacerdotes que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC (Ne 12:1, 4, 7); talvez seja o Ginetom de Neemias 12:16.

GINETOM.

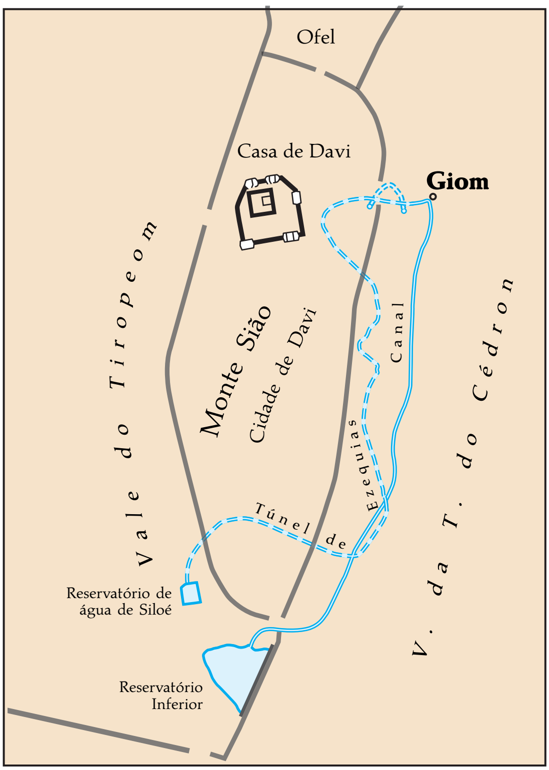
1. Casa paterna de sacerdotes chefiada por certo Mesulão, enquanto Neemias era governador. — Ne 12:12, 16, 26.

2. Um dos sacerdotes, ou antepassado de um deles, que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado enquanto Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 6, 8.

GINZO. Cidade de Judá que, junto com suas aldeias dependentes, foi capturada pelos filisteus durante o reinado de Acaz. (2Cr 28:18, 19) Costuma ser identificada com Gimzu, uma aldeia a uns 23 km ao SE da moderna Tel Aviv-Yafo.

GIOM [Irromper; Jorrar].

1. Um dos quatro rios que se ramificavam do rio que saía do Éden, descrito como "aquele que circunda toda a terra de Cus". (Gên 2:10, 13) Atualmente, não é possível identificar este rio com certeza. Não parece provável, pelo menos dum ponto de vista geográfico, que "a terra de Cus" mencionada aqui represente a Etiópia, conforme ocorre frequentemente em relatos posteriores. Pode referir-se à terra ocupada por Cus antes da dispersão que ocorreu depois da confusão das línguas em Babel. (Gên 11:9) Alguns relacionariam o Giom com o rio Araxes (o atual rio Araques), que nasce nos montes ao NO do lago Van e desemboca no mar Cáspio. Alguns lexicógrafos associam "a terra de Cus" de Gênesis 2:13 com os cassitas (em acadiano: kassu), um povo do planalto da Ásia central, mencionado em antigas inscrições cuneiformes, mas cuja história continua bastante obscura. (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Livros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden 1958, p. 429; A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento], de Brown, Driver e Briggs, 1980, p. 469) Em outro sentido, pode-se notar que certos árabes na península da Arábia eram chamados de Kusi ou Kishim, conforme indicado por Habacuque 3:7, onde Cusã é mencionado em paralelo com Midiã, evidentemente como o mesmo lugar ou uma terra vizinha. De modo que há diversas possibilidades, mas, por causa das aparentes mudanças topográficas na superfície da terra, em resultado do Dilúvio global, não se pode chegar a nenhuma conclusão positiva. — Veja CUS N.º 2.



2. Uma fonte chamada hoje Ha Gihon, que tem seu manancial numa caverna natural no vale do Cédron, um pouco ao L da extremidade superior do setor de Jerusalém antigamente chamado de "Cidade de Davi". (2Cr 32:30) Nos tempos antigos, era uma das principais fontes de água da cidade, havendo nesta vizinhança apenas duas fontes. O nome Giom é especialmente apropriado para esta fonte, visto que 'jorra' intermitentemente, até quatro ou cinco vezes por dia depois dum inverno chuvoso, e com menos frequência na estação da seca.

De modo geral, crê-se que a fonte de Giom estava envolvida no método usado pelo general Joabe para penetrar no quase inexpugnável baluarte dos jebuseus em Jerusalém, tornando possível sua captura por Davi. (1Cr 11:6) Embora a tradução do texto hebraico de 2 Samuel 5:8 apresente certos problemas, a maneira usual de vertê-lo indica a presença de um "túnel de água", mencionado por Davi quando promoveu o ataque contra a cidade. Em 1867 EC, Charles Warren descobriu um canal de água que penetrava no fundo da caverna na qual surge a fonte de Giom, e, depois de uns 20 m, terminava num tanque ou reservatório. Um poço vertical na rocha, por cima deste tanque, ascendia 11 m, e, no alto do poço, havia um lugar em que as pessoas podiam ficar de pé e baixar com uma corda recipientes para tirar água do tanque embaixo. Uma passagem inclinada estendia-se do poço para trás uns 39 m até o interior da cidade. Acredita-se que era assim que os jebuseus mantinham acesso à sua fonte de água, mesmo quando não podiam arriscar-se a sair fora das muralhas da cidade por causa dum ataque inimigo. Embora a fonte de Giom não seja diretamente mencionada no relato, sugere-se que Joabe e seus homens ousadamente conseguiram penetrar na cidade através deste túnel de água.

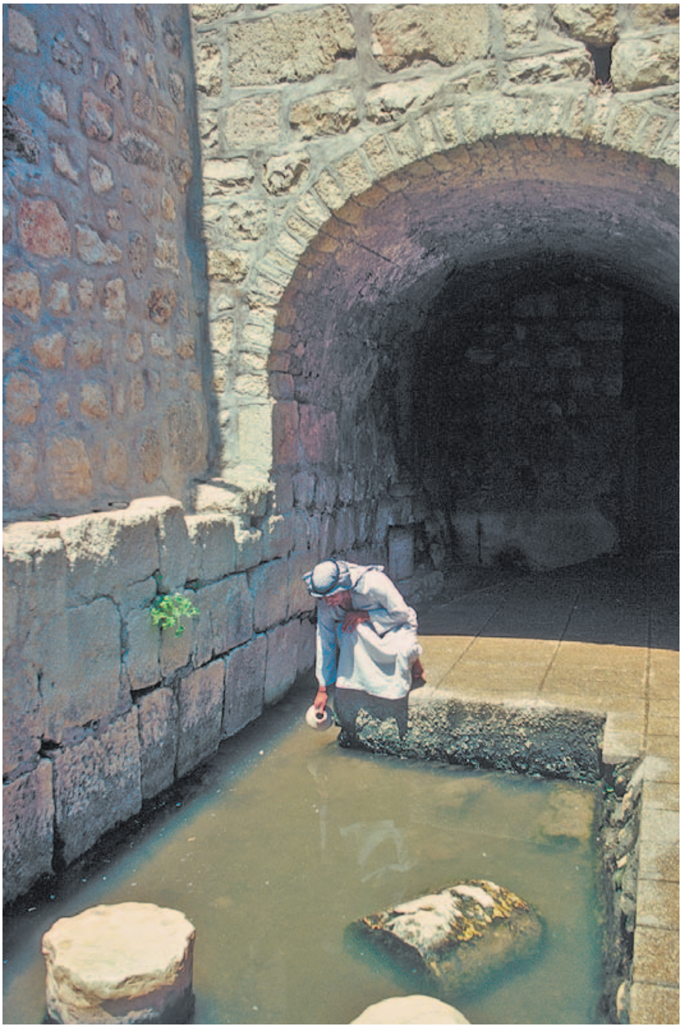
Giom foi depois o lugar em que Salomão foi ungido rei, às ordens de Davi. O desfile ruidoso que se seguiu, quando as pessoas acompanhavam alegremente a Salomão de volta à cidade, embora não fosse visível desde a fonte chamada En-Rogel, uns 700 m distante de Giom, podia facilmente ser ouvido pelo presunçoso Adonias e seus convivas, enquanto se banqueteavam em En-Rogel. — 1Rs 1:9, 10, 33-41.

Escavações arqueológicas revelaram também um antigo canal de superfície que levava da fonte de Giom para o sul, ao longo da encosta da “Cidade de Davi”. Este canal terminava num tanque à base do espigão em que a cidade antiga estava inicialmente situada — na extremidade meridional do espigão, perto da junção do vale de Tiropeom com o vale do Cédron. O canal foi construído com declive ou gradiente mínimo, o que resultava num fluxo muito lento da água. É provável que este seja o canal mencionado pela profecia de Isaías, na época do Rei Acaz (761-746 AEC), contrastando-se suas ‘águas que correm suavemente’ com a onda violenta de assírios invasores, os quais, segundo Isaías predisse, por fim atacariam Judá. — Is 8:5-8.



O reservatório de água de Siloé, alimentado pelas águas da fonte de Giom.

Quando o ataque assírio se tornou iminente, no reinado de Ezequias (732 AEC), o Rei Ezequias tomou medidas para assegurar que o suprimento de água de Jerusalém não caísse nas mãos do inimigo. (2Cr 32:2-4) Todavia, possivelmente com referência a outra época, o registro de 2 Crônicas 32:30 mostra que ele tapou o fluxo de Giom através do seu canal já existente e desviou as águas para o lado ocidental da “Cidade de Davi”, bem dentro das fortificações de Jerusalém. Evidência da maneira em que isto foi realizado veio a lume em 1880 EC, quando se encontrou uma inscrição gravada na parede de um túnel de águas que terminava no que atualmente é conhecido como o reservatório de água de Siloé, na parte O da antiga “Cidade de Davi”. A inscrição, na antiga escrita hebraica, considerada como sendo do oitavo século AEC, descrevia a escavação do túnel através da rocha sólida por duas turmas de homens trabalhando das extremidades opostas para se encontrarem. Quando o túnel foi completamente desobstruído em 1910, verificou-se que tinha uns 533 m de extensão com a altura média de 1,8 m e estreitava-se às vezes para a largura de apenas 50 cm. Parece evidente que esta notável façanha de engenharia é o resultado das medidas adotadas por Ezequias para proteger e manter o suprimento de água procedente de Giom.

O Rei Manassés, filho de Ezequias, estendeu as fortificações de Jerusalém durante o seu reinado (716-662 AEC), construindo uma muralha externa para "a Cidade de Davi, ao oeste de Giom", portanto, não incluindo a fonte de Giom dentro dos seus limites. — 2Cr 32:33; 33:14.

As águas de Giom continuam a fluir até hoje através do "Túnel de Siloé", atribuído a Ezequias.

GIRGASEU(S). Povo descendente de Cã, através de Canaã. (Gên 10:6, 15, 16; 1Cr 1:8, 13, 14) Os girgaseus moravam ao O do Jordão. Embora poderosos, eles e mais seis nações cananeias sofreram derrota, porque Jeová os entregou nas mãos do Seu povo. (De 7:1, 2; Jos 3:10; 24:11) Isto cumpriu a promessa que Deus fizera a Abraão, séculos antes. (Gên 15:13-21; Ne 9:7, 8) Os nomes "Girgash" e "Ben-Girgash", encontrados em literatura ugarítica, têm sido citados como confirmação indireta da existência dos girgaseus.

GIRZITAS. Povo que estava entre as vítimas duma incursão feita por Davi e seus 600 homens durante a sua estada de 16 meses com os filisteus. Davi tomou muito gado como despojo, mas não preservou vivos os girzitas. Estes, provavelmente nômades, viviam no território ao S de Judá, na direção geral do Egito. — 1Sa 27:2, 7-9.

GITAIM [Dois Lagares de Vinho]. Lugar para o qual fugiram os beerotitas (por motivos não declarados). (2Sa 4:1-3) Benjamitas povoaram Gitaim após o exílio. (Ne 11:31, 33) Desconhece-se sua localização exata; alguns sugerem a identificação com um lugar chamado Gamteti nas Tabuinhas de Amarna, situado provavelmente na vizinhança da atual Ramleh. — Veja BEEROTE.

GITITE. Expressão musical de significado incerto, que aparece nos cabeçalhos dos Salmos 8, 81 e 84. O termo parece derivar da palavra hebraica gath, que também é o nome duma cidade situada na fronteira entre Judá e a Filístia. Alguns têm sugerido que "Gitite" denota um tom associado com cânticos de vindima, visto que gath se refere a um lagar de vinho. A Septuaginta grega e Vulgata latina, portanto, vertem "Gitite" por "lagares de vinho".

GIZ. A única ocorrência da palavra hebraica séredh, na Bíblia, dá-se em Isaías 44:13, e tem que ver com o "giz vermelho" utilizado por talhadores de madeira para fins de marcação.

GIZONITA [possivelmente: De (Pertencente a) Ginzo]. Designação dada quer à família, quer ao lugar de origem de Hasém, cujos "filhos" estavam entre os poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 34.

GLÓRIA. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra mais vezes traduzida por "glória" é ka·vóhdh, a qual basicamente tem o sentido de "peso; o que dá peso". (Veja Na 2:9, onde ka·vóhdh é traduzido "grande quantidade", e 1Sa 4:18, onde o adjetivo aparentado é traduzido "pesado".) De modo que glória pode referir-se àquilo que faz a pessoa ou a coisa parecer ponderosa ou impressionante, tal como riqueza material (Sal 49:16), posição ou reputação. (Gên 45:13) O equivalente grego de ka·vóhdh é dó·xa, que originalmente significava "opinião; reputação", mas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs passou a significar "glória". Entre os seus sentidos estão reputação ou "honra" (Lu 14:10), esplendor (Lu 2:9; 1Co 15:40) e aquilo que dá honra ao seu dono ou criador (1Co 11:7).

Muitas vezes, as Escrituras mencionam a glória relacionada com Jeová Deus. A respeito de seu significado nestes casos, o Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), editado por G. Kittel, explica: "Se com relação ao homem [ka·vóhdh] denota aquilo que o torna impressionante e que exige reconhecimento, quer em termos de bens materiais, quer em notável [dignidade ou importância], em relação a Deus subentende aquilo que torna Deus impressionante para o homem." (Traduzido para o inglês por G. Bromiley, 1971, Vol. II, p. 238) De modo que a glória pode ter referência a uma impressionante evidência da onipotência de Deus. Neste respeito, os corpos celestiais visíveis "declaram a glória de Deus". (Sal 19:1) No monte Sinai, a "glória de Jeová" evidenciou-se por meio de manifestações atemorizantes como "fogo devorador". — Êx 24:16-18; compare isso com 16:7, 10; 40:34.

A Bíblia diz a respeito do primeiro milagre de Jesus que ele "tornou manifesta a sua glória". (Jo 2:11) A glória, neste caso, refere-se a uma impressionante evidência do poder milagroso que identificava a Jesus como o prometido Messias. (Veja Jo 11:40-44.) Numa outra ocasião, Jesus orou: "Pai, glorifica-me junto de ti com a glória que eu tive junto de ti antes de haver o mundo." (Jo 17:5) Jesus usou aqui este termo para se referir à condição enaltecida que usufruía no céu antes de vir à Terra. Em resposta a esta oração, Jeová "glorificou o seu Servo, Jesus", por ressuscitá-lo e levá-lo de volta ao céu. (At 3:13-15) Na transfiguração de Jesus, os apóstolos presentes "viram a glória dele". (Lu 9:29-32) Esta tem que ver com a "magnificência" régia que Jesus havia de receber na sua "presença" no poder do Reino. — 2Pe 1:16.

Os servos de Deus são admoestados a 'fazer todas as coisas para a glória de Deus'. (1Co 10:31) A glória de Deus é manifestada pela honra ou louvor que se lhe dá. A conduta da pessoa pode induzir outros a 'dar glória a Deus'. (Mt 5:16; 1Pe 2:12) Os cristãos que realmente acatam a orientação de Jeová são "transformados . . . de glória em glória", fazendo progresso contínuo em refletir a glória de Deus. (2Co 3:18) Por outro lado, devemos precaver-nos de não buscar receber glória de homens, assim como alguns fizeram no primeiro século. (Jo 12:42, 43) Tanto Jesus como o apóstolo Paulo deram um excelente exemplo de não buscar ou aceitar glória de homens. — Jo 5:41; 8:50; 1Te 2:5, 6.

GLUTÃO. Pessoa egoísta, gananciosa, dada a excessos, especialmente a comer vorazmente. A glutonaria em qualquer forma é diametralmente oposta aos preceitos e princípios bíblicos.

Sob a Lei mosaica, os pais de um filho incorrigível, que era glutão e beberrão, deviam levá-lo aos anciãos da cidade, os quais fariam com que fosse apedrejado até morrer. (De 21:18-21) Os Provérbios, como aviso para outros, condenavam até mesmo a associação com glutões: "Aquele que mantém companheirismo com os glutões humilha seu pai." "Não venhas a ficar entre os beberrões de vinho, entre os que são comilões de carne. Porque o beberrão e o glutão ficarão pobres, e a sonolência vestirá a pessoa de meros trapos." (Pr 28:7; 23:20, 21) O termo hebraico usado aqui para "glutão" e 'comilão' é zoh·lél. O sentido básico desta palavra possivelmente é "ser pródigo", isto é, desperdiçador, esbanjador. — Veja De 21:20, n.

No esforço de desacreditar Jesus, uma das acusações caluniosas lançadas contra ele por seus oponentes era: "Eis um homem comilão e dado a beber vinho." Jesus simplesmente refutou a acusação falsa por dizer: "A sabedoria é provada justa pelas suas obras" ou "por todos os seus filhos". (Mt 11:19; Lu 7:34, 35) Em outras palavras, Jesus estava dizendo: 'Vejam as minhas obras e conduta justas e saberão que a acusação é falsa.'

Certamente não há lugar para a glutonaria na congregação cristã, e o apóstolo Paulo quis certificar-se de que ela não se introduzisse nela. Assim, ao deixar Tito em Creta, para cuidar da jovem organização cristã ali, ele lembrou a Tito o que um dos próprios profetas de Creta (que alguns acham ter sido Epimênides, poeta cretense do sexto século AEC) havia dito: "Os cretenses são sempre mentirosos, feras prejudiciais, glutões [literalmente: barrigas] desempregados." Portanto, os superintendentes que Tito designasse, disse Paulo, deviam ser homens livres de todas essas acusações, homens que não fossem beberrões ou gananciosos, e que tivessem bom autodomínio. — Tit 1:5-12.

Embora a glutonaria não seja alistada separadamente como 'obra da carne', ela frequentemente acompanha bebedeiras e festanças (folias), e certamente está incluída na abrangente expressão "coisas semelhantes a estas", cujos praticantes "não herdarão o reino de Deus". (Gál 5:19, 21) A moderação nos hábitos de comer, como em todas as outras atividades, é uma virtude cristã. — 1Ti 3:2, 11.

GOA. Lugar, agora desconhecido, mencionado junto com o morro de Garebe na profecia de Jeremias a respeito da reconstrução e ampliação de Jerusalém. — Je 31:38, 39.

GOBE. Lugar em que os homens de Davi em duas ocasiões golpearam guerreiros gigantes das forças dos filisteus. (2Sa 21:18, 19) A narrativa paralela em 1 Crônicas 20:4 alista o lugar do primeiro embate como "Gezer" ("Gate" em algumas cópias da Septuaginta grega e da Pesito siríaca), ao passo que não menciona o nome do lugar do segundo embate. (1Cr 20:5) Ambos os relatos, porém, mostram que ocorreu um terceiro confronto em "Gate" (2Sa 21:20; 1Cr 20:6), e, portanto, muitos peritos presumem que "Gobe" seja erro de escriba em lugar de "Gate". Outros, porém, acham improvável que tal lapso ocorresse duas vezes em versículos consecutivos, e eles concluem que Gobe talvez seja simplesmente o nome de um lugar agora não identificado, perto de Gezer.

1. Descendente de Rubem. — 1Cr 5:3, 4.

2. O nome é encontrado nos capítulos 38 e 39 de Ezequiel, e é ali aplicado ao líder dum ataque tempestuoso, multinacional, contra o povo de Deus. O ataque ocorre depois de Jeová ter recolhido os do seu povo dentre as nações e de os ter restabelecido nos anteriormente devastados "montes de Israel". Porque moram em segurança, sem nenhum sinal visível de proteção, e por usufruírem abundante prosperidade, Gogue é engodado a lançar contra eles um feroz ataque total. Para este fim, ele congrega um vasto exército de muitas nações. Mas o ataque dele suscita a ira de Jeová e resulta em terrível derrota e destruição de Gogue e de toda a sua massa de gente. Os cadáveres deles se tornam alimento para aves e animais, e seus ossos são enterrados no vale que depois é chamado de Vale da Massa de Gente de Gogue (literalmente: Vale de Hamom-Gogue).

Fonte e Intenção do Ataque. O ataque tem uma fonte muito distante da terra de Israel. Gogue é "da terra de Magogue", situada nas "partes mais remotas do norte". (Ez 38:2, 15) Ele é o "maioral-chefe ["príncipe supremo", BV; "príncipe e chefe", Al, So] de Meseque e Tubal". (Ez 38:2, 3) Algumas traduções rezam aqui "príncipe de Rôs, Meseque e Tubal" (AS, JB, VB), fazendo com que "Rôs [hebr. rosh, "cabeça"]" se refira a um país ou a um povo. No entanto, em nenhuma outra parte da Bíblia se menciona tal terra ou povo. Meseque e Tubal, assim como Magogue, são nomes dados aos filhos de Jafé (Gên 10:2), e as três terras que levam estes nomes ficavam ao N de Israel. (Veja MAGOGUE N.º 2; MESEQUE N.º 1; TUBAL.) Outros membros setentrionais das forças de ataque, também jaféticos, eram Gômer e Togarma (que se pensa serem respectivamente os progenitores dos antigos cimerianos e armênios). A Pérsia jafética ficava ao NE. Mas a conspiração abrangia também membros camíticos, meridionais — a Etiópia e Pute, lá na África. (Ez 38:4-6, 15) Portanto, o papel de Gogue é o de comandante de uma maciça força de ataque, que exerce tremendas pressões para esmagar o povo de Jeová como se este estivesse apertado num torno.

Israel é descrito como "morando no meio da terra". (Ez 38:12) O antigo Israel não somente estava situado num ponto central no que se refere aos continentes eurasiano e africano, mas era também o centro da adoração pura do verdadeiro Deus e era considerado por ele como "menina de seu olho". — De 32:9, 10; Za 2:8.

Jeová declara que 'porá ganchos nas maxilas de Gogue' e o levará a este ataque. (Ez 38:4; veja 2Rs 19:20, 21, 28.) No entanto, a profecia mostra claramente que este já é o desejo de Gogue, sendo a trama fruto do seu próprio coração. (Ez 38:10, 11) Todavia, Jeová engoda Gogue por estabelecer e fazer prosperar o povo do seu próprio nome. Isto incita Gogue a mostrar sua malevolência para com o povo de Deus, e ele avança voluntariamente num rumo que provoca a rápida destruição tanto dele como de todos os seus associados. Com a derrota e o aniquilamento de Gogue e das suas forças, Jeová magnifica e santifica o seu próprio nome perante todos os observadores. — Ez 38:12-23; 39:5-13, 21, 22; compare isso com Jl 3:9-17.

Identificação de Gogue. As terras e os povos mencionados na profecia relacionada com Gogue são conhecidos na Bíblia e até certo ponto na história secular. Mas os esforços de identificar Gogue com algum governante conhecido na história não foram bem-sucedidos. O mais frequentemente sugerido é Giges, rei da Lídia, na Ásia Menor ocidental, chamado Guggu nos registros de Assurbanipal, monarca assírio. (Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia [Registros Antigos da Assíria e de Babilônia], de D. Luckenbill, 1927, Vol. II, pp. 297, 351, 352) Todavia, Giges tinha morrido décadas antes de se escrever a profecia de Ezequiel. Portanto, tal identificação é inaceitável. Ademais, a própria profecia situa o ataque de Gogue "na parte final dos anos", "na parte final dos dias". (Ez 38:8, 16; compare isso com Is 2:2; Je 30:24; 2Ti 3:1.) Por estes motivos, o nome Gogue evidentemente é críptico ou simbólico, não o de algum rei ou líder humano conhecido.

A evidência aponta para um cumprimento no que em outra parte é chamado de "o tempo do fim". (Da 11:35; 12:9; compare isso com Re 12:12.) Eruditos e comentadores bíblicos em geral reconhecem a profecia como relacionada com o tempo do Reino messiânico. Como exemplo, The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge (A Nova Enciclopédia de Conhecimento Religioso de Schaff-Herzog) comenta: "Gogue aparece como líder do último ataque hostil das potências mundiais contra o reino de Deus." (Editada por S. Jackson, 1956, Vol. V, p. 14) Não se conhece nenhum cumprimento disso no Israel natural. O cumprimento na "parte final dos dias" logicamente se refere ao Israel espiritual, a congregação cristã (Ro 2:28, 29; Gál 6:16), descrita pelo apóstolo Paulo como filhos da "Jerusalém de cima" e dirigida por esta. (Gál 4:26) Estes pontos ajudam na identificação de Gogue.

Ajuda adicional é encontrada no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse). Visões proféticas contidas nele predisseram um grande aumento da perseguição movida contra a congregação cristã por parte do dragão simbólico, Satanás, o Diabo. Isto aconteceria depois de ele, junto com seus demônios, ser lançado dos céus para baixo, para a região da terra, ato realizado pelo Reino de Deus por meio de Jesus Cristo, no tempo em que este começasse a exercer autoridade régia. (Re 12:5-10, 13-17) O ajuntamento de nações terrestres contra Deus, seu Filho e os servos fiéis de Deus, na terra, figura com destaque nestas visões, assim como também a total derrota e desolação dessas forças inimigas. (Re 16:13-16; 17:12-14; 19:11-21) Banquetearem-se as aves nos cadáveres de tais inimigos do Reinado de Cristo também encontra nisso uma correspondência. — Compare Ez 39:4, 17-20, com Re 19:21.

A profecia a respeito de Gogue, em Ezequiel, indica um ataque maldoso, global, contra o povo de Deus. Embora Gogue evidentemente representa uma coalizão, ou grupo, de nações que realiza o ataque, a mente por trás desse ataque será a de Satanás, o Diabo. Esse ataque é o que desencadeia a total eliminação dessas forças satânicas por meio do assombroso poder de Deus. — Ez 38:18-22.

Enterro da Massa de Gente de Gogue. O enterro de "Gogue e toda a sua massa de gente" ocorre no "vale dos que passam, ao leste do mar".

(Ez 39:11) A Bíblia Vozes reza aqui, "o vale de Abarim, a leste do mar Morto". O nome Abarim é usado em Números 33:47, 48, com referência aos montes ao L do Mar Morto. (Veja ABARIM.) Há dois vales fundos ou ravinas nesta região, o Árnon e o Zerede. O Árnon tem no alto uns 3 km de largura e tem uma fundura de uns 520 m. O Zerede é um desfiladeiro ainda mais colossal, com paredões de rocha que descem uns 1.190 m. Qualquer um destes vales pode ser usado para representar este profético lugar de sepultamento, o Árnon ficando diretamente ao L do mar, ao passo que o Zerede, ao SE, era o mais percorrido dos dois. Ou, visto que o quadro apresentado é simbólico, talvez não se faça referência a um vale específico. Este enterro num lugar fundo junto ao Mar Morto também tem um certo paralelo na descrição, em Revelação, da eliminação dos opositores do Reino de Deus, por serem lançados no simbólico lago de fogo, e por Satanás ser lançado no abismo. — Re 19:20; 20:1-3.

É o Gogue mencionado em Revelação o mesmo que o de Ezequiel?

3. Revelação 20:8 também fala de "Gogue de Magogue". Mostra-se que ambos os nomes são de "aquelas nações nos quatro cantos da terra", que se deixam desencaminhar por Satanás depois de ele ser solto do simbólico "abismo". Visto que outros textos mostram que o Governo Milenar de Cristo acaba com governos e divisões nacionais (Da 2:44; 7:13, 14), parece que tais "nações" são o produto de rebelião contra o domínio global dele. Elas avançam "sobre a largura da terra" para cercar "o acampamento dos santos e a cidade amada". Isto acontece depois de o Governo Milenar de Cristo Jesus sobre a terra ter chegado ao seu término. — Re 20:2, 3, 7-9.

Usarem-se os nomes "Gogue e Magogue" evidentemente serve para enfatizar certas similaridades entre esta situação após o Milênio e a do ataque anterior. Tanto em Ezequiel como em Revelação, os opositores são numerosos (sendo os em Revelação de número indefinido, "como a areia do mar"); o ataque é o resultado duma ampla conspiração e é dirigido contra os servos de Deus quando estes usufruem grande prosperidade. Assim, o uso de "Gogue e Magogue" para descrever aqueles que são levados a uma rebelião pós-milenar é bem apropriada. O fim deles é a destruição total. — Re 20:8-10, 14.

GOIM [Nações].

1. Domínio do Rei Tidal, aliado do rei elamita Quedorlaomer. (Gên 14:1-9) Embora se tenham feito muitas sugestões, não se conseguiu fixar sua localização. Em vista do significado do termo e da sua tradução em outros textos (Jz 4:2; Is 9:1) como substantivo comum ("nações"), em vez de como nome próprio, alguns sugerem que Goim era um conjunto de tribos com diversas formações nacionais. — Veja TIDAL.

2. O domínio, ao O do Jordão, de um rei cananeu derrotado por Josué. Ele é chamado de "o rei de Goim, em Gilgal". (Jos 12:7, 23) Nada se sabe sobre este Goim, exceto que Gilgal, possivelmente a sua sede, ou centro, não é o bem-conhecido lugar de acampamento dos israelitas, do mesmo nome, perto do Jordão.

GOLÃ. Cidade de Basã, no território de Manassés, escolhida como cidade de refúgio. (De 4:41-43; Jos 20:2, 8) Os levitas gersonitas receberam esta cidade para sua residência. (Jos 21:27; 1Cr 6:71) A maioria dos peritos a identifica com Sahm el Joulane, a uns 28 km ao L do mar da Galileia. Um distrito ao qual deu seu nome, hoje chamado O Golã, mas anteriormente Gaulanítis, encontra-se um pouco mais perto do mar da Galileia.

GÓLGOTA [[Lugar da] Caveira]. O lugar fora da cidade de Jerusalém, embora perto dela, em que Jesus Cristo foi pregado na estaca. (Mt 27:33; Jo 19:17-22; He 13:12) Perto dali havia uma estrada e um túmulo num jardim. (Mt 27:39; Jo 19:41) "Gólgota", ou "Lugar da Caveira", também é chamado "Calvário" (Lu 23:33, ALA, So), do latim calvaria (caveira). O registro bíblico não declara que Gólgota se encontrava num morro, embora mencione que alguns, de certa distância, observaram Jesus ser pregado na estaca. — Mr 15:40; Lu 23:49.

A Igreja do Santo Sepulcro se ergue agora num dos lugares tradicionais de Gólgota e do túmulo de Jesus. No quarto século EC, o Imperador Constantino deu a tarefa de determinar o lugar em que Jesus foi pregado na estaca, e o seu túmulo, ao Bispo Macário, o qual decidiu que o então existente templo de Afrodite (Vênus), de Adriano, fora erigido neste lugar. Por conseguinte, Constantino ordenou a demolição deste templo e a construção duma basílica, a qual mais tarde passou por uma expansão e modificação, tornando-se a Igreja do Santo Sepulcro. Escavações arqueológicas feitas desde 1960 indicam que esta área era usada como lugar de sepultamento, e acredita-se que era assim no primeiro século EC. Embora situado dentro das atuais muralhas de Jerusalém, acredita-se que o lugar tenha estado fora das muralhas da cidade nos dias de Jesus.

Outro lugar sugerido como local em que Jesus foi pregado na estaca é um promontório a 230 m ao NE do Portão de Damasco, agora conhecido como Calvário de Gordon. Foi sugerido, em 1842, como o lugar verdadeiro de Gólgota e do túmulo de Jesus. Em 1883, esta localização foi endossada pelo General C. G. Gordon, herói militar britânico. A identificação baseava-se em conjectura. Gabriel Barkay, à base de evidência arqueológica disponível, declara que o Túmulo do Jardim, bem perto, que frequentemente é apontado para turistas como lugar de sepultamento de Jesus, originalmente fora escavado e usado em algum tempo no oitavo ou no sétimo século AEC. Isto não se enquadraria na descrição de João 19:41, de "um túmulo memorial novo, no qual ainda ninguém tinha sido deitado". — Biblical Archaeology Review (Revista de Arqueologia Bíblica), março/abril de 1986, p. 50.

A identificação de Gólgota frequentemente se tem tornado uma questão religiosa, emocional. No entanto, não há nenhuma evidência arqueológica de que o "Calvário de Gordon" seja o lugar certo. Quanto ao sítio marcado pela Igreja do Santo Sepulcro, sua identificação leva em conta achados arqueológicos, mas baseia-se na maior parte em tradição que data do quarto século. A respeito desta última localização, a revista Biblical Archaeology Review (maio/junho de 1986, p. 38) declara: "Talvez não possamos ter certeza absoluta de que o lugar da Igreja do Santo Sepulcro seja o local do sepultamento de Jesus, mas certamente não temos nenhum outro lugar que possa reivindicar isso com mais peso do que este." De modo que a identificação continua sendo conjectura.

GOLIAS. O gigante da cidade de Gate, campeão do exército filisteu, que foi morto por Davi. Golias tinha a altura extraordinária de seis côvados e um palmo (2,9 m). Sua cota de malha, de cobre, pesava 5.000 siclos (57 kg) e a lâmina de ferro da sua lança pesava 600 siclos (6,8 kg). (1Sa 17:4, 5, 7) Golias era um dos refains; talvez fosse soldado mercenário no exército filisteu. — 1Cr 20:5, 8; veja REFAINS.

Pouco depois de Davi ter sido ungido por Samuel, e depois de o espírito de Jeová ter abandonado o Rei Saul (1Sa 16:13, 14), os filisteus ajuntaram-se em Socó para uma guerra contra Israel, e então acamparam em Efes-Damim. Enquanto as linhas de frente dos filisteus e do exército de Saul se defrontavam nos dois lados do vale, o guerreiro gigante Golias saía do acampamento filisteu e desafiava Israel em alta voz para apresentarem um homem que lutasse com ele em combate individual, determinando-se pelo resultado qual o exército que se tornaria servo do outro. De manhã e à noitinha, durante 40 dias, o exército de Israel, com muito medo, ficou sujeito a estes escárnios. Nenhum soldado israelita tinha coragem para aceitar o desafio. — 1Sa 17:1-11, 16.

Ao escarnecer os exércitos do Deus vivente, Jeová, Golias selou a sua própria ruína. O jovem pastor Davi, tendo sobre si o espírito de Deus, aceitou o desafio de Golias. Este, precedido pelo seu escudeiro que carregava um escudo grande, avançou, invocando por meio de seus deuses o mal sobre Davi. A isto Davi respondeu: "Tu vens a mim com espada, e com lança, e com dardo, mas eu chego a ti com o nome de Jeová dos exércitos, o Deus das fileiras combatentes de Israel, de quem escarneceste." (ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 1, p. 745) Davi atirou com a sua funda uma pedra; esta penetrou na testa de Golias, e ele caiu por terra. Davi aproximou-se de Golias e decepou a cabeça do gigante com a própria espada deste. A isto se seguiu prontamente uma debandada geral e a matança de filisteus. — 1Sa 17:26, 41-53.

"Davi tomou então a cabeça do filisteu e a levou a Jerusalém, e as armas dele pôs na sua tenda." (1Sa 17:54) Embora seja verdade que o baluarte de Sião só foi conquistado mais tarde, por Davi (2Sa 5:7), a própria cidade de Jerusalém por muito tempo já fora habitada por israelitas, junto com jebuseus. (Jos 15:63; Jz 1:8) Mais tarde, Davi, evidentemente, entregou a espada de Golias ao santuário. Isto é indicado por Aimeleque, o sacerdote, dá-la a Davi quando este fugia de Saul. — 1Sa 21:8, 9.

Uma passagem que tem causado certa dificuldade encontra-se em 2 Samuel 21:19, onde se declara: "Elanã, filho de Jaare-Oregim, o belemita, chegou a golpear a Golias, o geteu, cuja haste de lança era como o cilindro dos tecelões." O relato paralelo, em 1 Crônicas 20:5, reza: "Elanã, filho de Jair, chegou a golpear Lami, irmão de Golias, o geteu, cuja haste de lança era como o cilindro dos tecelões."

Ofereceram-se diversas sugestões para explicar este problema. O Targum preserva a tradição de que Elanã deve ser identificado como Davi. A obra The Soncino Books of the Bible (Os Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino; Londres, 1951, 1952), editada por A. Cohen, comenta que não há nenhuma dificuldade em se assumir que havia dois Golias, comentando também que Golias pode ter sido um título descritivo tal como "Faraó", "Rabsaqué", "Sultão". O fato de que um texto menciona "Jaare-Oregim", enquanto o outro reza "Jair", e também que apenas o relato em Segundo Samuel contém o termo "belemita [hebr.: behth hal·lahh·mi]", ao passo que só o relato em Crônicas contém o nome "Lami ['eth-Lahh·mi]", foi sugerido pela maioria dos comentadores como resultado de erro de copista. — Veja JAARE-OREGIM; LAMI.

GOLPES. Veja ESPANCAMENTO.

GÔMER.

1. Neto de Noé e primeiro filho nominalmente citado de Jafé, e nascido após o Dilúvio. (Gên 10:1, 2; 1Cr 1:4, 5) Ele e seus filhos, Asquenaz, Rifá e Togarma, são alistados entre "as famílias dos filhos de Noé, segundo as suas linhagens", das quais se espalharam as nações depois do Dilúvio. — Gên 10:3, 32.

A nação que descendeu de Gômer é historicamente associada com os antigos cimerianos, raça ariana que evidentemente se fixou na região ao N do Mar Negro. No oitavo século AEC, durante o reinado do rei assírio Sargão, aparentemente eles foram expulsos pelos citas para o outro lado do Cáucaso (a região montanhosa entre os mares Negro e Cáspio). Os cimerianos avançaram através da Ásia Menor, atacando o reino de Urartu (Ararate) e penetrando na Ásia Menor oriental, onde o nome armênio para Capadócia, Gamirk', sem dúvida reflete a invasão deles. Confrontados pelo forte Império Assírio ao L, os cimerianos avançaram para o O e guerrearam contra os frígios e os lídios. Foram finalmente expulsos da Lídia pelo rei lídio Aliates (antecessor de Creso).

A profecia de Ezequiel (cuja escrita evidentemente foi completada por volta de 591 AEC), a respeito do ataque de "Gogue da terra de Magogue" contra o reajuntado povo de Jeová, alista "Gômer e todas as suas tropas" entre as forças de Gogue, ao lado de Togarma, "das partes mais remotas do norte, e todas as suas tropas". — Ez 38:2-8; veja GOGUE N.º 2; MAGOGUE N.º 2; TOGARMA.

2. Filha de Diblaim, que se tornou esposa de Oseias, em harmonia com as instruções de Jeová dadas a este profeta. (Os 1:2, 3) Gômer, depois, deu à luz três filhos, cujos nomes significativos foram usados por Deus para predizer o resultado desastroso do adultério espiritual de Israel, na forma de idolatria. Ao contar o nascimento do primeiro filho, chamado Jezreel, o relato declara que Gômer "deu à luz um filho [a Oseias]". Com relação ao nascimento dos próximos dois filhos, porém, não se faz referência ao profeta como pai, e isto tem sido a base para serem considerados como provavelmente ilegítimos. (Os 1:3-9) Oseias 3:1-3 parece descrever Gômer abandonar seu proceder adúltero e voltar para o profeta, sendo ela comprada como se fosse uma escrava, ilustrando deste modo como Israel seria recebido de volta por Deus à base de seu arrependimento.

GÔMOR. Medida de secos equivalente à décima parte de um efa. (Êx 16:16, 18, 22, 32, 33, 36) O efa é calculado em 22 l à base da evidência arqueológica a respeito da capacidade da correspondente medida de líquidos, o bato. (Compare isso com Ez 45:10, 11.) Portanto, o gômor seria equivalente a 2,2 l.

A comparação do texto hebraico de Êxodo 29:40 e de Números 28:5 revela que uma "décima parte" significa um décimo de um efa, ou um gômor. Isto fornece a base para se traduzir a hebraica "décima parte" como "décimo de um efa". — Núm 15:4, NM, IBB, LEB, PIB; veja ÔMER.

GOMORRA. Uma das "cidades do Distrito", provavelmente situada perto da extremidade meridional do Mar Morto. (Gên 13:12) Sodoma e Gomorra aparentemente eram as principais dessas cidades. Muitos peritos acreditam que as ruínas delas estejam atualmente submersas sob as águas do Mar Morto, embora outros recentemente tenham afirmado que as ruínas das cidades podem ser identificadas com sítios ao longo de uádis ao L e SE do Mar Morto. No tempo de Abraão, a região foi descrita como "bem regada . . . semelhante ao jardim de Jeová". (Gên 13:10; veja DISTRITO DO JORDÃO.) Durante o tempo em que Ló, sobrinho de Abraão, morava neste Distrito fértil, o Rei Birsa, de Gomorra, junto com os reis de outras quatro cidades do Distrito, rebelaram-se contra o domínio de Quedorlaomer, de Elão, e de outros três reis aliados dele. Eles foram atacados e fugiram, caindo alguns dos seus soldados nos numerosos poços de betume naquela região. Sodoma e Gomorra foram saqueadas pelos reis orientais, os quais levaram Ló cativo. — Gên 14:1-12.

Mais de 14 anos depois, o clamor de queixa por causa da iniquidade de Sodoma e Gomorra tornou-se tão grande, que Jeová enviou anjos para examinar a situação e depois destruir as cidades com uma chuva de fogo e enxofre. — Gên 18:20, 21; 19:24, 28.

A maneira cabal da destruição destas cidades foi depois usada como símbolo de total aniquilamento. (De 29:22, 23; Is 1:9; 13:19; Je 49:18) Jeová expressou figurativamente a profundeza da iniquidade em que os governantes e o povo de Judá e de Jerusalém tinham caído quando se dirigiu a eles por meio do profeta Isaías: "Ouvi a palavra de Jeová, ditadores de Sodoma. Dai ouvidos à lei de nosso Deus, povo de Gomorra." — Is 1:1, 10; Je 23:14.

Quando Jesus censurou certas cidades judaicas do primeiro século, ele fez referência às gritantemente iníquas cidades de Sodoma e Gomorra. Dirigiu tal expressão de censura à impenitente Cafarnaum, onde ele mesmo tinha realizado muitas das suas obras poderosas. E a respeito de qualquer cidade que rejeitasse seus discípulos, deixando de exercer fé, apesar das obras poderosas que eles realizassem como evidência de terem apoio divino, Jesus disse: "No Dia do Juízo será mais suportável para a terra de Sodoma e Gomorra do que para essa cidade." (Mt 10:5-15; 11:23, 24) Visto que Sodoma e Gomorra, e as cidades em volta delas, haviam sido punidas com "fogo eterno", representando o aniquilamento eterno, Jesus evidentemente usava uma hipérbole para enfatizar quão improvável era que tais judeus sem fé se endireitassem, mesmo que estivessem presentes no Dia do Juízo. — Ju 7.

GORDURA. A palavra portuguesa "gordura" é usada para traduzir diversas palavras hebraicas, que descrevem não somente a substância chamada gordura, mas também aquilo que é carnudo e rechonchudo. Estes termos podem também ser usados em sentido figurado para expressar algo rico ou fértil (como na expressão "gordura da terra") ou para transmitir a ideia de insensibilidade ou obtusidade da mente e do coração.

Costumeiramente usa-se hhé·lev para se referir à própria "gordura", quer animal (Le 3:3), quer humana (Jz 3:22). O "sebo", ou a gordura, em volta dos rins ou dos lombos, nas ofertas queimadas, é também expresso por outra palavra, pé·dher. (Le 1:8, 12; 8:20) Hhé·lev aparece pela primeira vez em Gênesis 4:4, relacionado com o sacrifício oferecido por Abel a Jeová, de "pedaços gordos" das primícias do seu rebanho. A maioria das referências a hhé·lev, depois disso, simplesmente se relacionam com sacrifícios. Hhé·lev é também usado metaforicamente para a parte melhor ou mais rica de alguma coisa. Por exemplo, em Gênesis 45:18, Faraó diz a José que a família deste é bem-vinda a comer "a parte gorda do país". Neste respeito, também, Números 18:12 reza: "Todo o melhor [hhé·lev] do azeite e todo o melhor [hhé·lev] do vinho novo e dos cereais . . . a ti [os] tenho dado." — Veja Sal 81:16; 147:14.

A Lei a Respeito da Gordura. No terceiro capítulo de Levítico, Jeová deu aos israelitas instruções a respeito do uso da gordura em sacrifícios de participação em comum. Ao oferecerem gado bovino ou cabritos, deviam fazer fumegar sobre o altar a gordura que cobre os lombos e os intestinos, e a que havia sobre os rins, bem como a gordurosa acrescência sobre o fígado. No caso das ovelhas, a inteira cauda gorda devia igualmente ser ofertada. (As ovelhas da Síria, da Palestina, da Arábia e do Egito têm cauda gorda, frequentemente chegando a pesar 5 kg ou mais.) A Lei dizia especificamente: "Toda a gordura pertence a Jeová . . . Não deveis comer nenhuma gordura nem sangue algum." — Le 3:3-17.

A gordura queimaria com intensidade e seria cabalmente consumida sobre o altar. Nenhuma gordura oferecida sobre o altar devia ser deixada até a manhã seguinte; provavelmente se estragaria e se tornaria malcheirosa, algo bem impróprio para qualquer parcela das ofertas sagradas. — Êx 23:18.

Não obrigatória para os cristãos. Após o Dilúvio, quando Noé e sua família receberam permissão para acrescentar carne à sua alimentação, não se declarou nada a respeito da gordura. (Gên 9:3, 4) No entanto, proibiu-se comer sangue. Isto ocorreu mais de 850 anos antes de se fazer com Israel o pacto da Lei com suas proibições de comer quer o sangue, quer a gordura. No primeiro século EC, o corpo governante da congregação cristã confirmou a proibição do sangue como ainda em vigor para os cristãos. (At 15:20, 28, 29) Como no caso de Noé e sua família, porém, não se declarou nada a respeito de os cristãos comerem ou não comerem gordura. De modo que a lei contra comer gordura só foi dada à nação de Israel.

Motivo dessa lei. Sob o pacto da Lei, tanto o sangue como a gordura eram considerados como pertencentes exclusivamente a Jeová. O sangue contém a vida, que apenas Jeová pode dar; portanto, pertence a ele. (Le 17:11, 14) A gordura era encarada como a parte mais rica da carne do animal. A oferenda da gordura do animal, evidentemente, seria feita em reconhecimento de que as partes melhores pertenciam a Jeová, o qual faz amplas provisões, e demonstraria o desejo do adorador de oferecer a Deus o melhor. Por ela ser simbólica de os israelitas devotarem o seu melhor a Jeová, dizia-se que fumegava sobre o altar como "alimento" e como "cheiro repousante" para ele. (Le 3:11, 16) Portanto, comer a gordura era uma apropriação indébita do que fora santificado para Deus, uma violação dos direitos de Jeová. Comer gordura incorria na pena de morte. Dessemelhante do sangue, porém, a gordura podia ser usada para outros fins, pelo menos no caso dum animal que morreu por si só ou que foi morto por outro animal. — Le 7:23-25.

Alcance da aplicação da lei. Por causa deste último texto, muitos comentadores têm procurado limitar a proibição de Levítico 3:17 apenas à gordura dos animais que eram aceitáveis para ser oferecidos em sacrifício, tais como novilhos, ovelhas e caprídeos. O ensino rabínico judaico está dividido neste assunto. Todavia, a injunção quanto à gordura, em Levítico 3:17, é ligada com aquela quanto a comer sangue, uma lei que claramente incluía o sangue de todos os animais. (Veja Le 17:13; De 12:15, 16.) Portanto, parece ser mais coerente que a lei a respeito da gordura também abrangesse a gordura de todos os animais, inclusive dos abatidos para fins comuns pelos israelitas.

O conceito de que essa proibição se aplicava a toda a gordura não é refutada pelo texto em Deuteronômio 32:14, que fala de Jeová dar a Israel "a gordura de carneiros" para comer. Trata-se duma expressão figurativa que se refere ao melhor do rebanho, ou, conforme a edição em inglês da Bíblia de Jerusalém verte a frase, o "rico alimento dos pastos". (Veja também BLH, Da n. e Kx.) Este sentido poético é indicado por trechos posteriores do mesmo versículo, referindo-se à "gordura de rins do trigo" e ao "sangue da uva". Assim também em Neemias 8:10, onde se ordena às pessoas: "Ide, comei as coisas gordurosas", não devemos concluir que elas literalmente consumissem gordura pura. "Coisas gordurosas" refere-se a porções ricas, coisas que não são magras ou secas, mas deliciosas, incluindo coisas gostosas preparadas com óleos vegetais. Assim, a Bíblia Mensagem de Deus reza aqui "comei pratos suculentos", ao passo que a tradução de Moffatt, em inglês, diz "comei os petiscos".

A restrição imposta pela Lei mosaica não impedia a alimentação ou engorda de ovelhas ou de gado vacum para consumo. Lemos a respeito do "novilho cevado" abatido para o filho pródigo. (Lu 15:23) Os alimentos de Salomão incluíam "cucos cevados" e gado vacum. (1Rs 4:23) O termo hebraico 'e·ghel-mar·béq, traduzido por "bezerro cevado", ocorre em 1 Samuel 28:24; mé·ahh e merí' referem-se a um 'animal cevado'. (Is 5:17; Ez 39:18) Todavia, isto não significa que esta 'engorda' tinha por fim produzir sebo ou camadas de gordura; antes, o sentido novamente é o de animais com bastante carne ("carnudos"), não magros. — Veja Gên 41:18, 19.

Outros Termos Hebraicos. Entre os termos hebraicos usados para descrever algo 'gordo' estão os derivados do verbo radical sha·mén. Embora signifique "engordar" (De 32:15; Je 5:28), transmite também a ideia de ser "robusto". Sha·mén ocorre em Isaías 6:10, onde a versão Almeida, revista e corrigida, reza "engorda o coração deste povo", isto é, torna-o insensível e embotado, como se o coração deles estivesse envolto em gordura. Juízes 3:29 descreve certos moabitas como "cada qual robusto [sha·mén, literalmente: "gordo"] e cada qual homem valente". A palavra aparentada shé·men costuma ser traduzida por "óleo".

A ideia por detrás do verbo da·shén talvez seja a de 'prosperar', sendo ele também usado literalmente para significar "engordar". Neste caso, da·shén (e o aparentado dé·shen) daria a entender prosperidade, fertilidade e abundância. Jeová disse a Israel que o levaria a uma terra "que mana leite e mel, e certamente comerão e se fartarão, e engordarão [wedha·shén]". (De 31:20) Somos informados de que 'far-se-á engordar', quer dizer, prosperar abundantemente, aqueles que são generosos, diligentes e confiantes em Jeová. (Pr 11:25; 13:4; 28:25) Em Provérbios 15:30, diz-se que uma boa notícia "engorda os ossos", ou os enche de tutano — em outras palavras, revigora-se todo o organismo. O substantivo dé·shen também reflete esta ideia de afluência, como no Salmo 36:8, onde diz que os filhos dos homens "bebem fartamente da gordura [mid·dé·shen; "abundância", ALA] da" casa de Deus. — Veja Je 31:14.

O substantivo dé·shen é por muitos tradutores também vertido por "cinza(s)", como quando se refere ao refugo do altar de sacrifício do tabernáculo. (Le 1:16; 4:12; 6:10, 11, Al, CBC, PIB) Para outros peritos, porém, "cinza(s)" não reflete plenamente a raiz da língua original. Portanto, preferem um termo tal como "cinzas gordurosas" (BJ, NM), argumentando que o termo indica que a gordura quente dos sacrifícios engordurava a lenha queimada embaixo.

A ideia de estar bem alimentado e sadio é expressa pela palavra ba·rí'. Ela é traduzida "gordo" (Ez 34:3, 20) e "saudável" (Hab 1:16), embora possa também ser vertida por "gordura", para descrever homens, gado e cereais. — Gên 41:2, 7; Jz 3:17.

GÓSEN.

1. Região do Egito em que os israelitas residiram por 215 anos (1728-1513 AEC). (Gên 45:10; 47:27) Embora não haja certeza sobre a localização exata de Gósen, esta parece ter sido na parte oriental do delta do Nilo, a entrada do Egito propriamente dito. Isto é indicado pelo fato de que José, partindo da sua moradia egípcia, encontrou-se com seu pai (que procedia de Canaã) em Gósen. (Gên 46:28, 29) Textos da Septuaginta grega indicam que Gósen se encontrava na vizinhança do uádi Tumilat.

Faraó mantinha gado em Gósen, e ali também pastavam os rebanhos e as manadas dos hebreus. (Gên 47:1, 4-6; 50:8) A descrição da região como 'a melhor da terra do Egito', pelo visto é uma expressão relativa, referindo-se à melhor terra pastoril, mais adequada para as necessidades específicas da família de Jacó. Gósen talvez fosse a própria "terra de Ramessés". (Gên 47:6, 11) A partir do quarto golpe sobre o Egito, Jeová separou especificamente "Gósen" para ficar incólume. — Êx 8:22; 9:26.

2. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 51) Alguns peritos identificam-na provisoriamente com Edh Dhahiriya, a uns 18 km ao SO de Hébron. A "terra de Gósen", mencionada em Josué 10:41 e 11:16, evidentemente era um distrito na vizinhança dela. Este distrito abrangeria a região montanhosa entre Hébron e o Negebe.

GOVERNADOR. Os governadores, nos tempos bíblicos, em geral, tinham poderes militares e judiciais, e eram responsáveis pela cobrança de tributos, impostos e receita pública devidos ao rei ou ao governante superior dos distritos jurisdicionais ou províncias administrados pelos governadores.

(Lu 2:1, 2) Muitos deles impunham pesadas cargas ao povo, com o fim de que este suprisse alimentos para eles e seu grande corpo de ajudantes. — Ne 5:15-18.

O Rei Salomão designou governadores sobre os distritos de Israel. Eles são mencionados em 1 Reis 10:15 e talvez sejam os 12 prepostos de 1 Reis 4:7-19, cujo dever era suprir de alimentos o rei e os da sua casa, cada um deles durante um mês do ano.

Praticamente todas as principais potências dos tempos bíblicos são mencionadas como tendo mandatários da categoria de governador, quer como regentes nativos, locais, quer como governadores que controlavam territórios ocupados. (Síria, 1Rs 20:34; assíria, Ez 23:5, 6, 12, 23; babilônica, Je 51:57; persa, Esd 8:36, Ne 2:7, 9; árabe, 2Co 11:32; romana, Lu 3:1) José era governador em sentido amplo, sobre todo o Egito, sujeito apenas ao rei. (Gên 41:40, 41; At 7:9, 10) Rabsaqué, oficial do Rei Senaqueribe, da Assíria, escarneceu de Ezequias referente à fraqueza de Jerusalém, dizendo que ela não podia fazer voltar atrás nem mesmo a um dos governadores menores de Senaqueribe. Mas, Rabsaqué deixou de levar em conta a força sobrepujante de Jeová que havia do lado de Ezequias. — Is 36:4, 9; 37:36.

Nabucodonosor designou Gedalias para governar os israelitas remanescentes na terra de Judá, depois de ter levado muitos do povo para o exílio, em 607 AEC. Gedalias foi assassinado uns dois meses depois. (2Rs 25:8-12, 22, 25) Quando se aproximava o fim do período de 70 anos de exílio, o Rei Ciro, da Pérsia, nomeou Sesbazar (provavelmente Zorobabel) governador dos judeus que retornavam para Jerusalém, em 537 AEC. (Esd 5:14; Ag 1:1, 14; 2:2, 21) Sob o Rei Artaxerxes, da Pérsia, Neemias foi constituído governador quando retornou para reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. — Ne 5:14; veja TIRSATA.

A Judeia, sob domínio romano, era uma província imperial; os governadores ali eram diretamente responsáveis ao imperador pelas suas ações. Pilatos foi o quinto da série de governadores da Judeia. (Mt 27:2; Lu 3:1) Félix e Festo eram o 11.º e o 12.º governador (se não contarmos Públio Petrônio e seu sucessor Marsus, os quais, designados governadores da Síria, ao mesmo tempo administravam os assuntos dos judeus). (At 23:24-26; 24:27) Estes governadores romanos tinham o poder de aplicar a punição capital, como vemos no caso de Jesus, julgado por Pilatos. — Mt 27:11-14; Jo 19:10.

Jesus se referiu a governadores das nações, em geral, quando disse aos seus seguidores que eles seriam levados perante tais homens a fim de dar testemunho. Os cristãos não devem temer tais governadores, embora estes sejam poderosos, nem se devem preocupar com o que dizer ao dar testemunho perante eles. (Mt 10:18-20, 26) Todos esses governadores são parte das autoridades superiores, às quais os cristãos devem sujeição relativa, não total. (Ro 13:1-7; Tit 3:1; 1Pe 2:13, 14; At 4:19, 20; 5:29; Mt 22:21) Foi com o devido respeito pelo cargo de governador que Paulo se dirigiu a Festo, perante quem estava sendo julgado, dizendo: "Excelência, Festo." (At 26:25) Todavia, em contraste com os apóstolos, que rendiam o devido respeito e honra primeiro a Jeová, que governa tudo, a nação de Israel degradou-se a ponto de atribuir aos governadores terrenos mais respeito do que dava a Jeová. Esta situação foi usada por Jeová na forte repreensão dada àquela nação por meio do Seu profeta Malaquias. — Mal 1:6-8; veja AUTORIDADES SUPERIORES.

Mateus, citando Miqueias 5:2, mostra que Belém, embora muito insignificante quanto a poder governante em Judá, tornar-se-ia significativa por proceder desta cidade o maior dos governadores, para pastorear o povo de Jeová, Israel. Esta profecia tem seu cumprimento em Cristo Jesus, o Grande Governador sob o seu Pai, Jeová Deus. — Mt 2:6.

GOVERNADOR, PALÁCIO DO. O termo grego prai·tó·ri·on (do lat.: praetorium) refere-se à residência oficial dos governadores romanos. No palácio do governador, em Jerusalém, Pôncio Pilatos interrogou Cristo Jesus, e no pátio do palácio, soldados romanos zombaram dele. (Mr 15:16; Jo 18:28, 33; 19:9) Alguns têm identificado o palácio do governador com a Torre de Antônia, mas outros sugerem que provavelmente se tratava do palácio construído por Herodes, o Grande. Apresentaram-se as seguintes razões em apoio deste último ponto de vista: (1) De acordo com Fílon, filósofo judeu do primeiro século (The Embassy to Gaius [A Embaixada a Gaio], XXXIX, 306), o palácio de Herodes era chamado de "a casa dos governadores", e foi ali que o Governador Pilatos pendurou escudos em honra de Tibério César. (2) O historiador judeu Josefo relata que o procurador Géssio Floro se instalou ali. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 301 [xiv, 8]) (3) O palácio de Herodes, em Cesareia, serviu como palácio do governador naquela cidade. — At 23:33-35.

O palácio de Herodes, em Jerusalém, ficava no canto NO da cidade superior, isto é, na parte meridional da cidade. De acordo com a descrição de Josefo, era cercado por um muro de 30 côvados de altura (13 m), dotado de torres equidistantes. Dentro dos muros havia pórticos, pátios e bosques. Os aposentos eram suntuosamente mobiliados com objetos de ouro, de prata e de mármore. Havia dormitórios para cem convidados. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XV, 318 (ix, 3); The Jewish War, V, 173-182 (iv, 4).

GOVERNANTE. Alguém que exerce autoridade ou controle; um soberano. O verbo hebraico ma·shál tem o sentido de "governar, dominar"; o termo grego ár·khon é traduzido por "governante". — Veja GOVERNANTES DA CIDADE.

O Governante supremo é Jeová Deus, que exerce autoridade soberana absoluta sobre o universo, visível e invisível, por ser o Criador e Dador da Vida. — Da 4:17, 25, 35; 1Ti 1:17.

Os reis da linhagem de Davi no trono de Israel governavam como representantes de Jeová, seu verdadeiro Rei invisível. Por isso dizia-se que eram os ungidos de Deus, sentados no "trono de Jeová". (1Cr 29:23) Quando apareceu Jesus Cristo, "o Filho de Davi" (Mt 21:9; Lu 20:41), ele não foi ungido com óleo, mas com espírito santo, para governar num trono celestial. (At 2:34-36) Sob Jeová, Jesus e seus co-herdeiros do Reino constituem o governo do universo. — Re 14:1, 4; 20:4, 6; 22:5.

Satanás, o Diabo, e seus demônios também são governantes. Ele é chamado de "o governante deste mundo" e de "o governante da autoridade do ar". (Jo 12:31; 14:30; Ef 2:2) Que todos os governos deste mundo estão sob o seu poder é indicado por ele os oferecer a Jesus Cristo em troca de um ato de adoração. (Mt 4:8,9) Satanás confere a estes governos a autoridade que detêm. (Re 13:2) Dentro da sua organização, os demônios também exercem poder governante. São chamados de "os governantes mundiais desta escuridão", os quais têm exercido autoridade sobre as potências mundiais da história, como, por exemplo, os 'príncipes' invisíveis sobre a Pérsia e a Grécia. (Ef 6:12; Da 10:13, 20) O governante deles, naturalmente, é o próprio Diabo. — Mt 12:24.

Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus, a Palestina estava sob o governo duplo do Império Romano e de governantes judeus, sendo o corpo principal destes últimos o Grande Sinédrio, um conselho de 70 anciãos, aos quais o governo romano concedeu autoridade limitada sobre assuntos judaicos. A referência a governantes, em João 7:26, 48, é a governantes judeus; Nicodemos era um deles. (Jo 3:1) O presidente duma sinagoga era chamado de ár·khon. (Compare Mt 9:18 com Mr 5:22.) A Lei exigia que os governantes fossem respeitados. (At 23:5) Todavia, os governantes judeus tornaram-se corruptos e são mencionados como aqueles a quem principalmente cabia a culpa pela morte de Jesus Cristo. — Lu 23:13, 35; 24:20; At 3:17; 13:27, 28.

Ár·khon é também aplicado a magistrados civis e a autoridades governamentais em geral. (At 16:19, 20; Ro 13:3) A palavra hebraica segha·ním, traduzida "governantes" (KJ), "magistrados" (Al), "delegados governantes" (NM), é usada com referência a governantes judeus subordinados ao Império Persa (Ne 2:16; 5:7), também a respeito daqueles que exerciam autoridade sob os reis da Média, da Assíria e de Babilônia. — Je 51:28; Ez 23:12, 23; veja PREPOSTO.

Os governantes podem dar aos seus súditos prosperidade e felicidade, ou causar-lhes pobreza e sofrimento. (Pr 28:15; 29:2) Davi citou Jeová Deus como dizendo: "Quando aquele que governa a humanidade é justo, governando no temor de Deus, então é como a luz da manhã quando raia o sol, uma manhã sem nuvens." (2Sa 23:3, 4) Jesus Cristo, o Príncipe da Paz, é tal governante. — Is 9:6, 7.

GOVERNANTES DA CIDADE. Magistrados civis (gr.: po·li·tár·khai) em Tessalônica, perante os quais uma turba furiosa arrastou Jasão e outros cristãos. (At 17:5-8) G. Ernest Wright diz a respeito do uso do termo grego: "Uma inscrição neste portão [o portão Vardar, de Tessalônica], agora no Museu Britânico, menciona algumas autoridades da cidade chamadas de 'poliarcas'. Diversas outras inscrições contêm a mesma palavra. Em Atos 17:6, este termo é também usado como o nome das autoridades perante as quais os cristãos foram arrastados durante o distúrbio em resultado da pregação de Paulo. A palavra, de outra forma, é desconhecida na literatura grega existente, e a informação arqueológica é uma confirmação da exatidão da narrativa de Lucas neste ponto." — Biblical Archaeology (Arqueologia Bíblica), 1962, p. 260; veja ARQUEOLOGIA (Relacionada com as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs).

GOVERNO. Orientação e restrição exercidas com autoridade sobre as ações de homens em comunidades, sociedades e estados. Também, a pessoa, o grupo de pessoas ou as organizações que constituem a autoridade governante.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, as formas da palavra ar·khé (princípio) são diversamente traduzidas por "principados", "governos", "governantes", "Soberania". (Al; NM; BMD; BJ) Ky·bér·ne·sis e ky·ri·ó·tes, palavras vertidas por "governo" em algumas traduções, significam respectivamente, de modo mais correto, "dirigir [guiar ou orientar]" e "senhorio". Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, "governo" é o termo português às vezes usado para traduzir mem·sha·láh, "domínio" (Is 22:21), e mis·ráh, "domínio" ou "domínio [ou poder] principesco". — Is 9:6.

A Bíblia revela que há governos invisíveis que são bons, estabelecidos por Deus (Ef 3:10), e aqueles que são iníquos, estabelecidos por Satanás e pelos demônios. (Ef 6:12) Jesus Cristo foi o agente ativo de Deus no estabelecimento original de todos os governos e autoridades justos, invisíveis e visíveis. (Col 1:15, 16) Foi posto por seu Pai, Jeová, como cabeça de todo governo (Col 2:8-10), e ele tem de governar até que todos os governos opositores, visíveis e invisíveis, sejam reduzidos a nada. (1Co 15:24) O apóstolo Paulo indicou que viria um sistema de coisas no qual haveria um governo sob a autoridade de Cristo. — Ef 1:19-21.

Governos Mundiais. A Bíblia retrata governos mundiais como "animais" e diz que eles obtêm sua autoridade do Dragão, Satanás, o Diabo. Deus permitiu que continuassem e limitou o alcance e a duração do domínio deles, em harmonia com o Seu propósito. — Da caps. 7, 8; Re caps. 13, 17; Da 4:25, 35; Jo 19:11; At 17:26; 2Co 4:3, 4; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

Os Cristãos e os Governos. Jesus Cristo e os primitivos cristãos nada fizeram para interferir nos governos humanos dos seus dias. (Jo 6:15; 17:16; 18:36; Tg 1:27; 4:4) Reconheceram que era necessário haver alguma forma de governo para a existência da sociedade humana, e nunca fomentaram revoluções ou a desobediência civil. (Ro 13:1-7; Tit 3:1) Jesus especificou o princípio orientador a ser seguido pelos verdadeiros adoradores de Deus ao dizer: "Portanto, pagai de volta a César as coisas de César, mas a Deus as coisas de Deus." (Mt 22:21) Este princípio habilitou os primitivos cristãos (e os cristãos desde então) a manter o equilíbrio correto na relação com as duas autoridades, a dos governos civis e a de Deus. Jesus mostrou adicionalmente que a sua posição, enquanto na terra, e, portanto, a de seus discípulos, não era de lutar contra os governos de "César", mas, antes, de acatar os regulamentos que não estivessem em conflito com a lei de Deus. O próprio Pilatos reconheceu este fato ao dizer: "Não acho falta nele." (Jo 18:38) Os apóstolos seguiram o exemplo de Jesus. — At 4:19, 20; 5:29; 24:16; 25:10, 11, 18, 19, 25; 26:31, 32; veja AUTORIDADES SUPERIORES; REINO.

GOZÃ. Nome aparentemente aplicado tanto a um lugar como a um rio. Em 2 Reis 19:12 e em Isaías 37:12, Gozã parece abranger uma área maior do que a duma cidade, porque seus habitantes estão alistados entre as "nações" conquistadas pelos assírios. Muitos peritos, evidentemente baseando suas conclusões na similaridade de palavras, acreditam que Gozã talvez corresponda a Gauzanítis, distrito da Mesopotâmia mencionado por Ptolomeu e considerado como a "Guzana" mencionada nos registros assírios. A antiga Guzana costuma ser relacionada com a moderna Tell Halaf, no curso superior do rio Cabur, a uns 590 km ao ENE do mar da Galileia.

Em 2 Reis 17:6 e 18:11, algumas traduções rezam "Habor, o rio de Gozã" (IBB, BJ), em vez de "Habor, junto ao [ou: perto do] rio Gozã" (NM, So), tornando assim Gozã um lugar, nestes textos. Mas a versão "Habor, o rio de Gozã", não se harmoniza com 1 Crônicas 5:26. Nesta passagem, Habor é alistada entre Hala e Hara; e Hara, não Habor, é alistada antes de Gozã. Isto indica que Habor e o "rio de Gozã" (IBB) não são sinônimos. Portanto, aqueles que identificam Gozã sempre como lugar se veem obrigados a rejeitar a referência de Crônicas. No entanto, visto que o hebraico permite uma tradução coerente de "rio Gozã" em todos os três textos, há motivos para se crer que foi na vizinhança de um rio chamado Gozã que o rei da Assíria fixou alguns dos israelitas exilados do reino setentrional. O Qezel Owzan, do NO do Irã, tem sido sugerido como possível identificação do "rio Gozã". Ele nasce nos montes ao SE do lago Urmia (no que costumava ser a terra dos medos), e por fim desemboca como o Sefid Rud, ou rio Branco (nome aplicado ao seu curso inferior), na parte SO do mar Cáspio. Segundo outro ponto de vista, o Gozã é um rio da Mesopotâmia.

GRAL, ALMOFARIZ. Vaso em forma de tigela, no qual se trituravam cereais, especiarias, azeitonas ou outras substâncias com um pilão.

Pinturas em túmulos egípcios retratam grais de considerável capacidade. Tratava-se provavelmente de almofarizes de madeira e os pilões talvez fossem de metal. Uma pintura em túmulo mostra dois homens junto a um gral, alternadamente levantando e deixando cair pilões de metal (com ambas as extremidades em forma de maça), que seguravam no meio com ambas as mãos. A pintura indica que, depois de se ter triturado suficientemente certa quantidade do material no gral, ele era passado numa peneira para outro recipiente, e os restos mais grossos eram devolvidos ao gral para trituração adicional.

No ermo, os israelitas preparavam o maná para consumo por moê-lo em moinhos manuais ou por pilá-lo num gral (hebr.: medho·kháh). — Núm 11:7, 8.

O melhor azeite de oliveira era obtido batendo as azeitonas com um pilão num gral. Isto produzia azeite apenas da polpa da azeitona, ao passo que uma prensa esmagava também os caroços. O azeite batido, puro, era necessário para a queima no candelabro na tenda de reunião. Azeite batido também era usado na "contínua oferta queimada", e evidentemente no óleo de santa unção. No santuário usava-se incenso pulverizado. — Êx 27:20, 21; 29:40, 42; 30:23-25, 35, 36.

Visto que o gral, ou almofariz, é oco, é usado apropriadamente na Bíblia para descrever a configuração duma área específica de terreno. Por exemplo, segundo Juízes 15:18, 19, Deus forneceu a Sansão água potável por fender em Leí "uma cavidade em forma de almofariz" (hebr.: makh·tésh).

Também, certo setor de Jerusalém, o "Mactés" ou "Bairro do Almofariz" (hebr.: Makh·tésh, que significa "almofariz, gral"), talvez fosse chamado assim para identificar uma baixada ou depressão em forma de bacia naquela parte da cidade. — Sof 1:11 n.

Cereais transformados em farinha num almofariz passam por um tratamento severo. Por isso, as Escrituras usam este processo de modo ilustrativo, dizendo: "Ainda que triturasses o tolo com o pilão no almofariz, no meio de grãos pilados, não se afastaria dele a sua tolice." — Pr 27:22.

GRAMA. Quaisquer plantas que pertençam à família das gramíneas, que incluem os cereais, as plantas de prados e pastos, a cana-de-açúcar e o bambu. No entanto, mesmo hoje, no uso comum, não se adere estritamente a esta classificação científica, e, portanto, é improvável que os antigos hebreus fizessem distinção entre a grama ou relva (capim) propriamente e plantas semelhantes a gramíneas.

Trazidas à existência durante o terceiro dia criativo (Gên 1:11-13), as gramíneas têm servido como fonte tanto direta como indireta de alimentos para o homem e para os animais. Também, junto com outras plantas, quando expostas à luz do sol, elas desempenham um papel significativo na purificação do ar, assimilando suficiente bióxido de carbono e desprendendo bastante oxigênio para satisfazer as necessidades normais dos humanos e dos animais. O extenso sistema de raízes das gramíneas serve para impedir a erosão do solo. A grama, apropriadamente, é mencionada como uma das provisões de Jeová, assim como a luz do sol e a chuva, tão vitais para a grama brotar. — Sal 104:14; 147:8; Za 10:1; 2Sa 23:3, 4; Jó 38:25-27; Mt 5:45.

Os israelitas estavam bem familiarizados com o ressecamento da grama sob o calor intenso do sol durante a época de estio. De modo que a transitoriedade da vida do homem é apropriadamente comparada com a da grama e é contrastada com a eternidade de Jeová e daquela da Sua "palavra" ou "declaração". (Sal 90:4-6; 103:15-17; Is 40:6-8; 51:12; 1Pe 1:24, 25) Também os malfeitores são comparados à relva que murcha rapidamente. (Sal 37:1, 2) Os que odeiam Sião, bem como os prestes a serem subjugados por conquistas militares, são comparados à grama de raízes curtas, que cresce em telhados de terra, grama que murcha mesmo já antes de ser arrancada, ou que resseca no rastro do vento oriental. — Sal 129:5, 6; 2Rs 19:25, 26; Is 37:26, 27.

Uma profecia de restauração predizia que os ossos dos servos de Deus 'floresceriam como a tenra relva', quer dizer, seriam revigorados com renovada força. — Is 66:14; compare isso com Is 58:9-11.

Antigo gral com pilão.

GRANDE MAR. A imensa massa de água que separa a Europa da África, tendo a Ásia ao leste. Ao passo que os hebreus a chamavam de Grande Mar, costuma hoje ser chamada pelo seu nome de origem latina, Mediterrâneo, que significa "no Meio das Terras", pois é praticamente cercada por terra. Esta situação, além do fato de soprarem sobre este mar ventos quentes procedentes do deserto do Saara, resulta numa proporcionalmente mais elevada taxa de evaporação, e isto, por sua vez, dá à água uma gravidade específica mais elevada. Este é o motivo pelo qual, no estreito de Gibraltar, a água mais leve do Atlântico entra no Mediterrâneo perto da superfície e a água mais pesada deste sai perto do fundo. A navegação oceânica pode entrar e sair deste mar "interior" apenas através de passagens estreitas — pelo estreito de Gibraltar ao O, pelos Dardanelos e pelo Bósforo ao NE, e, desde o século 19, pelo canal de Suez, ao SE.

Não é errado chamar hoje o Mediterrâneo de Grande Mar, assim como faziam povos antigos, desde o tempo de Moisés, porque certamente é tudo o que este nome dá a entender. (Núm 34:6, 7) Não contando os seus diversos braços, que também são mares, o Mediterrâneo tem cerca de 3.700 km de comprimento, tem mais de 970 km no ponto mais largo e cobre uma área de cerca de 2.510.000 km^2. Sua maior profundidade é quase de 5.100 m.

As penínsulas italiana e grega, que penetram nele desde o N, criam os mares Tirreno, Jônico, Adriático e Egeu, contribuindo assim para a sua forma irregular e aumentando em muito a extensão do seu litoral. Aproximadamente a meia distância entre o L e o O, o mar se estreita para a largura de uns 150 km entre a Sicília e a África do Norte, e ali a água também é comparativamente rasa.

A profecia de Ezequiel fala sobre 'muitíssimos peixes' no Grande Mar. (Ez 47:10) Nestas águas são encontrados excelentes corais e uma abundância de esponjas, além de mais de 400 variedades de peixe.

Os escritores bíblicos não usavam apenas o nome "Grande Mar" (Jos 1:4; 9:1, 2; 15:12, 47; 23:4; Ez 47:15, 19, 20; 48:28), mas referiam-se a ele também por outros termos abrangentes. Para eles, esta massa de água era "o mar ocidental", visto que constituía a fronteira ocidental da terra dada por Deus. (De 11:24; 34:1, 2) Da posição de Jerusalém, era encarado como "o mar ocidental", em contraste com "o mar oriental", isto é, o Mar Morto. (Jl 2:20; Za 14:8) Ou era chamado de "o mar dos filisteus" (Êx 23:31) ou simplesmente de "o Mar". — Núm 34:5.

Desde tempos imemoriais, os fenícios e outros intrépidos povos navegadores cruzavam o Grande Mar, descobriram diversas das suas ilhas e realizavam comércio entre muitas das suas cidades portuárias. A Bíblia menciona ilhas tais como Arvade, Cauda, Chipre, Cós, Creta, Malta, Patmos, Quios, Rodes, Samos e Samotrácia. Alistam-se também na Bíblia algumas das cidades costeiras e outros lugares nestas ilhas, e ao longo do litoral continental da parte oriental do Grande Mar, a saber: Aco (Ptolemaida), Aczibe, Adramítio, Alexandria, Anfípolis, Ascalom, Atália, Bons Portos, Cnido, Dor, Fênix, Gebal, Laseia, Pátara, Putéoli, Régio, Salamina, Salmone e Siracusa.

Jesus Cristo visitou as regiões portuárias de Tiro e de Sídon (Mr 7:24, 31); Pedro esteve em Jope e em Cesareia (At 10:5, 6, 24); Paulo esteve em Pafos, Trôade, Neápolis, Cencreia, Éfeso, Assos, Mitilene e Mileto (At 13:13; 16:11; 18:18, 19; 20:14, 15). O Grande Mar é famoso pelas suas violentas tempestades, que têm resultado em muitos naufrágios e em grande perda de vidas. Entre os mais afortunados estavam aqueles que sobreviveram junto com Paulo. — At 27:14, 15, 39-44.

GRANDE MULTIDÃO. Expressão que, em si, é bastante comum nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. "Grande(s) multidão(ões)" é uma expressão às vezes usada com respeito aos grandes grupos de pessoas que ouviam o ensino público de Jesus Cristo. (Mt 14:14; 19:2; 20:29) Após a visão da destruição da simbólica Babilônia, a Grande, o apóstolo João ouviu "o que era como a voz alta duma grande multidão no céu". (Re 19:1) Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:9, porém, menciona-se uma "grande multidão", cuja identificação, em especial, tem sido motivo de muito interesse.

Neste capítulo, o apóstolo João primeiro menciona a selagem de 144.000 escravos de Deus, "de toda tribo dos filhos de Israel". (Re 7:2-8) Depois, ele observou numa visão "uma grande multidão", procedente de todas as nações, tribos, povos e línguas. Estes, em pé diante do trono de Deus, atribuem sua salvação a Deus e ao Cordeiro. Saíram da "grande tribulação", servem a Deus no seu templo e Ele estende sobre eles a sua tenda. Acabar-se-á com sua fome e sede, e enxugar-se-á toda lágrima dos seus olhos, ao passo que Seu Filho (o Cordeiro; Jo 1:29) os guia a águas da vida. — Re 7:9-17.

Conceitos Populares. Diversos conceitos têm sido apresentados sobre a significação e a identificação desta "grande multidão". Muitos comentadores encaram os 144.000 selados, mencionados primeiro, como membros do "Israel espiritual" e creem que simbolizam a congregação cristã enquanto na Terra. Eles acham que a "grande multidão" representa esta mesma congregação cristã no céu, depois de essas pessoas terem morrido em fé e terem sido ressuscitadas. Outros sustentam que os 144.000 procedem literalmente "de toda tribo dos filhos de Israel" (Re 7:4), quer dizer, são judeus carnais que se tornam cristãos, e entendem que a "grande multidão" representa todos os cristãos gentios. Um exame do capítulo 7 de Revelação e de outros textos relacionados, porém, revela sérias incoerências nestes conceitos, indicando ao mesmo tempo uma conclusão diferente.

Afirmar que os 144.000 selados são os membros da congregação cristã enquanto na Terra, ao passo que os da "grande multidão" são os cristãos ressuscitados no céu, não se harmoniza com a outra menção dos 144.000, no capítulo 14 de Revelação. Ali, os 144.000 estão em pé com o Cordeiro no "Monte Sião". Em Hebreus 12:18-24, o apóstolo Paulo contrasta a experiência dos israelitas junto ao monte Sinai terrestre com a dos cristãos que se chegaram "a um Monte Sião e a uma cidade do Deus vivente, a Jerusalém celestial, e a miríades de anjos, em assembleia geral, e à congregação dos primogênitos que foram alistados nos céus". Portanto, é óbvio que, embora Revelação 14:3 diga que os 144.000 foram "comprados da terra", o contexto representa-os como estando, não na Terra, mas no céu, com o Cordeiro celestial, Cristo Jesus. (Re 14:3, 4) Isto torna inválido o conceito de que os 144.000 representem a congregação cristã enquanto na Terra, em contraste com serem a "grande multidão" no céu.

Além disso, a maneira em que o apóstolo João introduz a sua visão da "grande multidão" indica uma nítida diferença de identidade entre ela e os 144.000 selados. Ele declara: "Depois destas coisas [o relato a respeito dos 144.000 selados] eu vi, e, eis uma grande multidão, que nenhum homem podia contar." (Re 7:9) Ele apresenta assim a "grande multidão" como entidade separada e faz um nítido contraste entre o número específico dos 144.000 e os da "grande multidão" sem número. Estes são também diferenciados por não serem "dos filhos de Israel", mas de todas as nações, tribos, povos e línguas. Não são vistos em pé 'com o Cordeiro', assim como os 144.000, em Revelação 14:1, mas estão "diante do Cordeiro". Estes diversos fatores argumentam todos que os da "grande multidão" são separados e distintos dos 144.000 selados.

Por outro lado, o conceito de que aqui se diferenciam cristãos de origem judaica dos cristãos gentios contraria a declaração inspirada do apóstolo Paulo, no sentido de que as diferenças carnais não entram em consideração na congregação cristã, visto que todos os seus membros são um só em união com Cristo Jesus. (Ro 10:12; Gál 3:28) Dificilmente se poderia esperar que Jeová, depois de ter 'reconciliado plenamente ambos os povos [judeus e não judeus] consigo mesmo, em um só corpo', por meio de Cristo, agora, na visão dada a João, fizesse uma divisão entre os dois grupos por separar os judeus carnais dos gentios. (Ef 2:11-21; At 15:7-9) Isto é especialmente evidente quando se leva em conta o princípio divino declarado por Paulo. O apóstolo escreveu: "Não é judeu aquele que o é por fora, nem é circuncisão aquela que a é por fora, na carne. Mas judeu é aquele que o é no íntimo, e a sua circuncisão é a do coração, por espírito." (Ro 2:28, 29) Também, por que é que não se faria nenhuma menção duma 'selagem' dos cristãos gentios, nesta visão divina? E por que não seriam os cristãos gentios capazes de aprender o novo cântico entoado pelos 144.000? (Re 14:3) Parece assim claro que os 144.000 selados são do Israel espiritual, não do Israel carnal — portanto, incluem tanto cristãos judeus como gentios. — Gál 6:16.

Sua Identificação. A chave para a identificação dos da "grande multidão" se encontra na própria descrição dela no capítulo 7 de Revelação, e em passagens obviamente paralelas. Revelação 7:15-17 diz que Deus 'estende sobre eles a sua tenda', que eles são guiados a "fontes de água da vida" e que Deus enxuga "toda lágrima dos olhos deles". Em Revelação 21:2-4, encontramos expressões paralelas: "A tenda de Deus está com a humanidade", e Ele 'enxugar dos seus olhos toda lágrima' e de 'não haver mais morte'. A visão apresentada ali é a respeito de pessoas que não estão no céu, de onde 'desce a Nova Jerusalém', mas na Terra, entre a humanidade.

Isto suscita a pergunta: Se os da "grande multidão" são pessoas que obtêm a salvação e permanecem na Terra, como se pode dizer que 'estão em pé diante do trono de Deus e diante do Cordeiro'? (Re 7:9) Às vezes usa-se na Bíblia a posição de alguém 'estar em pé' para indicar uma posição favorecida ou aprovada aos olhos daquele em cuja presença a pessoa ou o grupo está em pé. (Sal 1:5; 5:5; Pr 22:29, Tr; Lu 1:19) De fato, no capítulo anterior de Revelação, "os reis da terra, e os dignitários, e os comandantes militares, e os ricos, e os fortes, e todo escravo e toda pessoa livre" são retratados como procurando esconder-se "do rosto Daquele que está sentado no trono e do furor do Cordeiro, porque veio o grande dia do seu furor, e quem é que pode ficar de pé?" (Re 6:15-17; compare isso com Lu 21:36.) Parece, assim, que a "grande multidão" é formada por aqueles que têm sido preservados durante esse tempo de furor e que puderam ficar "de pé" como aprovados por Deus e pelo Cordeiro.

Serem eles guiados pelo Cordeiro a "fontes de águas da vida" encontra paralelo em Revelação 22:17, que diz: "O espírito e a noiva estão dizendo: 'Vem!' E quem ouve diga: 'Vem!' E quem tem sede venha; quem quiser tome de graça a água da vida." A "noiva" é claramente identificada nas Escrituras como a congregação dos cristãos ungidos, prometida em casamento ao Noivo celestial, Cristo Jesus. (Ef 5:25-27; 2Co 11:2; Re 19:7-9; 21:9-11) O convite, de 'tomar de graça a água da vida', feito pelos da classe celestial da "noiva", obviamente se estende a um número ilimitado de pessoas, a "quem quiser". Também a "grande multidão" não tem número, harmonizando-se assim a visão de Revelação 7:9 com a de Revelação 22:17.

Toda a evidência, portanto, aponta a "grande multidão" como representando todos aqueles que não são da classe celestial da "noiva", ou dos 144.000 selados, mas que estão em pé como aprovados na época da "grande tribulação" e são preservados vivos na Terra. — Veja CÉU, I; CONGREGAÇÃO (A Congregação Cristã de Deus); TERRA (Propósito).

GRANDE TRIBULAÇÃO. Veja TRIBULAÇÃO.

GRAVIDEZ. A condição de se ter concebido um filho e este estar ainda por nascer no ventre da mãe.

Pela ordem que Jeová deu a Adão e Eva: "Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos, e enchei a terra", ele indicou que a gravidez faria parte do papel normal desempenhado pela mulher. (Gên 1:28) Com a introdução da imperfeição na família humana, Deus explicou que aumentaria a dor da gravidez. (Gên 3:16; veja DORES DE PARTO.) A palavra hebraica harāh significa "conceber, ficar grávida". (1Cr 4:17; 7:23) O sentido equivalente em grego foi muitas vezes expresso pela expressão idiomática "ter [na] barriga", que significava "estar grávida". — Mt 1:18, 23.

Entre os judeus, os filhos, especialmente os varões, eram encarados como bênção (Sal 127:3; 128:3; Gên 29:32-35; 30:5, 6), e a esterilidade, como vergonha e vitupério. (Lu 1:24, 25; Gên 25:21; 30:1) Por conseguinte, a gravidez era almejada pela mulher casada. (1Sa 1:2, 11, 20) Uma vez concebida a criança, o embrião ou o feto em desenvolvimento era considerado como alma. Alguma ação que resultasse na morte da criança em desenvolvimento no ventre era tratada segundo a regra de "alma por alma". (Êx 21:22, 23) Era um ato horrendo o inimigo estripar uma mulher grávida, ou rasgar-lhe o ventre. — Os 13:16; Am 1:13; 2Rs 8:12; 15:16.

A gravidez acarretaria dor no fim (Sal 48:6; 1Te 5:3), mas esse pesar temporário acabaria com o nascimento da criança, de modo que a gravidez teria normalmente uma conclusão feliz e satisfatória. — Jo 16:21, 22.

"Ai das Mulheres Grávidas." Ao responder à pergunta dos apóstolos sobre a terminação do sistema de coisas, Jesus falou sobre fugir da Judeia e disse: "Ai das mulheres grávidas e das que amamentarem naqueles dias!" (Mt 24:19; Mr 13:17; Lu 21:23) O cumprimento e a veracidade destas palavras tornaram-se evidentes nos acontecimentos anteriores à destruição de Jerusalém em 70 EC e durante esta. Embora usualmente seja possível que a mulher mantenha atividades e movimentos razoáveis durante a gestação (Lu 1:39, 56; 2:5), uma prolongada fuga a pé, por terreno montanhoso, seria difícil para ela, e especialmente na iminência do parto. Às mulheres grávidas e às que amamentavam seus bebês sobreveio uma extrema adversidade quando as forças romanas sitiaram Jerusalém. Prevalecia a fome. Durante a gravidez, é importante que a mulher tenha a alimentação correta. Por exemplo, se ela não receber cálcio suficiente, poderá perder os dentes, visto que o organismo toma o cálcio para formar os ossos do bebê em desenvolvimento. Ademais, o instinto maternal protetor da mulher aumentaria o sofrimento dela ao ver crianças passando fome e morrendo, sabendo que ela em breve daria à luz um filho em tais condições. Josefo escreveu sobre alguns homens que passavam fome na Jerusalém sitiada: "Não havia compaixão para com os encanecidos ou os pequeninos: crianças foram realmente levantadas com as migalhas a que se apegavam e arrebentadas no chão." — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), V, 433 (x, 3) compare isso com Lu 23:29.

Uso Figurado. A gravidez que culmina no nascimento duma criança é usada diversas vezes em sentido figurado. Israel perdeu o favor de Deus porque seu povo infiel 'concebia a desgraça e dava à luz o que era prejudicial'. (Is 59:2-8; compare isso com Sal 7:14.) Este processo começou por permitirem que "pensamentos prejudiciais" e desejos errados lhes impregnassem a mente e o coração, e, na realidade, incubassem ali, com o resultado inevitável de se darem à luz "trabalhos prejudiciais". — Veja Tg 1:14, 15.

Em outra parte, Isaías retrata Israel como mulher que grita com dores de parto e diz a Deus: "Assim nos tornamos nós por tua causa, ó Jeová. Ficamos em gravidez, tivemos dores de parto; é como se tivéssemos dado à luz o vento. Não conseguimos nenhuma salvação real no que se refere à terra, e nenhuns habitantes para o solo produtivo passam a nascer ["passam a viver", JP]." (Is 26:17, 18) Isto talvez tenha referência a que, apesar das bênçãos de Deus (veja Is 26:15) e de ele ter apresentado a Israel a oportunidade de se tornar "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa" (Êx 19:6), Israel ainda não vira a realização do há muito aguardado cumprimento da promessa a respeito da Semente (Descendente) através de quem viriam bênçãos. (Gên 22:15-18) Os esforços de salvação do próprio Israel não resultaram em nada, senão em irrealidade; como nação, não conseguiu libertar-se "da escravização à corrupção", algo pelo qual toda a criação "persiste em gemer e junta está em dores". (Ro 8:19-22; compare isso com 10:3; 11:7.) Com a conquista pelos babilônios, essa terra "desvaneceu-se" por estar poluída pela violação do pacto de Deus, e "os habitantes da terra diminuíram em número". — Is 24:4-6.

Em contraste, por fazer seu povo retornar do exílio, Jeová tornou Jerusalém como a mulher que ficara grávida de seu marido e que dera à luz muitos filhos. — Is 54:1-8.

O apóstolo Paulo cita esta profecia de Isaías, capítulo 54, e a aplica à "Jerusalém de cima [que] é livre, e ela é a nossa mãe". (Gál 4:26, 27) Isto, evidentemente, fornece a chave para se entender a visão registrada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:1-5, na qual uma "mulher" celestial, grávida, dá à luz "um filho, um varão, que há de pastorear todas as nações com vara de ferro". O pastoreio das nações com vara de ferro está diretamente relacionado com o messiânico Reino de Deus, e, por isso, a visão deve relacionar-se com a produção deste Reino, de modo que, depois da derrota do ataque de Satanás contra o "filho" recém-nascido, sai o resultante clamor: "Agora se realizou a salvação, e o poder, e o reino de nosso Deus, e a autoridade do seu Cristo." (Re 12:10) A angústia da "mulher" celestial, grávida, antes do nascimento, faz lembrar a expressão de Paulo em Gálatas 4:19, sendo que as "dores de parto" ali aparentemente representam vivo interesse e fervoroso desejo de ver realizado o pleno desenvolvimento de assuntos (no caso de Paulo, o pleno desenvolvimento dos crentes gálatas como cristãos).

GRÉCIA, GREGOS. Estes nomes derivam de Grai·koí, nome de uma tribo do NO da Grécia. Os italianos aplicavam este nome (lat.: Graeci) aos habitantes da Grécia como um todo. Por fim, até mesmo Aristóteles, nos seus escritos, usou este termo de modo similar.

Outro nome antigo, jônios, aparece a partir do oitavo século AEC em registros cuneiformes assírios, bem como em relatos persas e egípcios. Este nome deriva do de Javã (hebr.: Ya·wán), filho de Jafé e neto de Noé. Javã foi o antepassado jafético dos primitivos povos da Grécia e das ilhas circunvizinhas, bem como, evidentemente, dos primitivos habitantes de Chipre, de partes da Itália meridional, da Sicília e da Espanha. — Gên 10:1, 2, 4, 5; 1Cr 1:4, 5, 7; veja ELISÁ; JAVÃ; QUITIM.

Ao passo que "jônio" é o nome agora aplicado geograficamente ao mar entre a Itália meridional e a Grécia meridional, incluindo a cadeia de ilhas ao longo da costa O da Grécia, tinha outrora uma aplicação mais ampla, mais em harmonia com o uso de "Javã" nas Escrituras Hebraicas. O profeta Isaías, no oitavo século AEC, falou do tempo em que os retornados exilados de Judá seriam mandados a nações distantes, incluindo "Tubal, e Javã, as ilhas longínquas". — Is 66:19.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, esta terra é chamada Hel·lás ("Grécia", At 20:2), e o povo, hél·le·nes. Os próprios gregos tinham usado estes nomes vários séculos antes da Era Comum e continuam a usá-los. "Hélade" (Hel·lás) talvez tenha alguma relação com "Elisá", um dos filhos de Javã. (Gên 10:4) O nome Acaia também era aplicado à Grécia central e meridional após a conquista romana de 146 AEC.

A Terra e Suas Particularidades. A Grécia ocupava a parte meridional da montanhosa península balcânica e as ilhas vizinhas, no mar Jônico ao O e no mar Egeu ao L. Ao S ficava o Mediterrâneo. A fronteira setentrional é indeterminada, especialmente porque os javanitos da Grécia, nos períodos primitivos, não estavam consolidados como nação específica. Todavia, em tempos posteriores, entende-se que a "Grécia" estendia-se às regiões da Ilíria (que faziam divisa com a costa adriática) e à Macedônia. Na realidade, os macedônios talvez fossem da mesma estirpe básica dos que posteriormente foram chamados de gregos.

Aquela terra, naquele tempo, assim como hoje, era tanto acidentada como rochosa, com agrestes montanhas de calcário ocupando cerca de três quartos do terreno. As encostas dos montes eram densamente arborizadas. A escassez de planícies e vales férteis, e o solo pedregoso reduziam em muito a capacidade agrícola daquela terra. O clima ameno, porém, era favorável à cultura de oliveiras e videiras. Outros produtos eram cevada, trigo, maçã, figo e romã. Rebanhos de ovelhas e de cabras encontravam pastos nas áreas não cultivadas. Havia também alguns depósitos de minérios — prata, zinco, cobre, chumbo — e os montes forneciam quantidades abundantes de excelente mármore. A profecia de Ezequiel (27:1-3, 13) inclui Javã entre os que negociavam com Tiro e alista "objetos de cobre" entre os produtos negociados.

Vantagens marítimas. A viagem por terra era vagarosa e difícil, por causa das montanhas. As carroças puxadas por animais se atolavam facilmente no inverno. De modo que o mar era o melhor meio de transporte e comunicação gregos. A longa e irregular costa, com muitas baías e enseadas, oferecia muitos portos e abrigos aos navios. Por causa dos vários golfos penetrantes, poucos pontos dentro das antigas fronteiras encontravam-se a mais de 60 km do mar. A parte meridional da Grécia continental, chamada Peloponeso, quase que era uma ilha. Apenas uma estreita faixa de terra, entre o golfo Sarônico e o golfo de Corinto, ligava o Peloponeso com a Grécia central. (Atualmente, o canal de Corinto corta este estreito istmo por uns 6 km, sem eclusas, tornando a separação completa.)

Os javanitos da Grécia tornaram-se logo cedo um povo navegador. O calcanhar da "bota" da Itália ficava apenas a uns 160 km ao NO da Grécia, do outro lado do estreito de Otranto. Ao L, arquipélagos (cadeias de ilhas formadas por montes submersos, cujos cumes se erguem acima da superfície da água) serviam de gigantescas alpondras através do mar Egeu para a Ásia Menor. No canto NE do mar Egeu, uma passagem estreita, o Helesponto (também chamado de Dardanelos), levava ao mar de Mármara e daí, através do estreito do Bósforo, ao Mar Negro. Também, os navios gregos, navegando ao longo da costa meridional da Ásia Menor, já cedo chegavam às costas da Síria e da Palestina. Um navio podia percorrer até 100 km durante o período diurno. A entrega das cartas de Paulo aos tessalonicenses, na Macedônia, provavelmente escritas em Corinto, portanto, talvez levasse uma semana ou mais, dependendo das condições meteorológicas (e do número de portos em que o navio fazia escala ao longo do percurso).

A influência e as povoações gregas de modo algum se limitavam à Grécia continental. As muitas ilhas que havia nos mares Jônio e Egeu eram consideradas parte da Grécia tanto quanto a parte continental. O sul da Itália e a Sicília estavam incluídos no que era chamado de Grande Hélade, ou, em latim, Graecia Magna. A evidência histórica indica que os javanitos da Grécia mantinham contatos e intercâmbio comercial com os de Társis (Espanha), neste respeito ultrapassando em muito os fenícios. Encontra-se uma associação similar entre os gregos e os javanitos de Chipre.

A Origem das Tribos Gregas. Os historiadores hodiernos apresentam diversas ideias a respeito da origem das tribos gregas e sobre a sua entrada nesta região. O conceito popular sobre "invasões" sucessivas de tribos setentrionais baseia-se na maior parte em mitos gregos e em conjecturas arqueológicas. Na realidade, a história secular a respeito da Grécia só começa por volta do oitavo século AEC (realizando-se a primeira olimpíada em 776 AEC), e um registro contínuo só é possível a partir do quinto século AEC. Isto era muitos séculos depois do Dilúvio, e, portanto, muito depois da dispersão das famílias por causa da confusão de línguas da humanidade em Babel. (Gên 11:1-9) Durante estes muitos séculos, outros grupos talvez se infiltrassem na estirpe de Javã e seus filhos, mas, quanto ao período anterior ao primeiro milênio AEC, só existem teorias de valor duvidoso.

As principais tribos gregas. Entre as principais tribos encontradas na Grécia havia os acaianos, da Tessália, do Peloponeso central e da Beócia; os eólios no centro-leste da Grécia e na parte NO da Ásia Menor chamada Aeolia; e nas ilhas vizinhas; os dórios do Peloponeso oriental, das ilhas meridionais do Egeu e da parte SO da Ásia Menor; e os jônios de Ática, da ilha Eubeia, das ilhas no meio do Egeu e das costas ocidentais da Ásia Menor. Entretanto, não há nenhuma certeza sobre algum relacionamento entre essas tribos e os macedônios, nos períodos primitivos.

Tradição Patriarcal e as Cidades-Estados. As tribos de língua grega eram bastante independentes, e até mesmo as cidades-estados que se desenvolveram dentro das tribos eram igualmente bastante independentes. Os aspectos geográficos contribuíam para isso. Muitos gregos viviam em ilhas, mas, no continente, a maioria vivia em pequenos vales cercados por montes. Sobre a sua primitiva estrutura social, The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana) oferece o seguinte conceito: "A derradeira unidade social era a família patriarcal. . . . A tradição patriarcal estava firmemente arraigada na cultura grega: os cidadãos ativos duma cidade-estado (polis) eram somente os varões adultos. A família patriarcal encerrava-se numa série de círculos concêntricos de parentesco — o clã (genos), a fratria [ou grupo de famílias], a tribo." (1956, Vol. XIII, p. 377) Isto se harmoniza muito bem com o arranjo patriarcal pós-diluviano descrito no livro bíblico de Gênesis.

O padrão, na Grécia, era de certo modo similar ao de Canaã, onde as diversas tribos (descendentes de Canaã) formavam pequenos reinos, muitas vezes baseados em determinada cidade. A cidade-estado grega era chamada de pó·lis. Este termo parece ter sido aplicado originalmente a uma acrópole, ou elevação fortificada, ao redor da qual se desenvolviam povoações. Mais tarde, passou a designar toda aquela área e os cidadãos que constituíam a cidade-estado. A maioria das cidades-estados gregas eram pequenas, usualmente não tendo mais de 10.000 cidadãos (além das mulheres, dos escravos e das crianças). Diz-se que Atenas, no seu apogeu no quinto século AEC, tinha apenas uns 43.000 cidadãos do sexo masculino. Esparta tinha apenas uns 5.000. Iguais aos minúsculos reinos cananeus, as cidades-estados gregas às vezes formavam ligas e também lutavam entre si. O país permaneceu politicamente fragmentado até o tempo de Filipe (II) de Macedônia.

Experiências Democráticas. Embora seja obscuro o conhecimento sobre os métodos governamentais da maioria das cidades-estados gregas, conhecendo-se razoavelmente bem apenas os de Atenas e de Esparta, seus governos evidentemente vieram a diferir consideravelmente daqueles de Canaã, da Mesopotâmia ou do Egito. Pelo menos durante o que talvez possa ser classificado secularmente como período histórico, as cidades-estados gregas, em vez de terem reis, tinham magistrados, conselhos e uma assembleia (ek·kle·sí·a) de cidadãos. Atenas experimentou o governo democrático direto (a palavra "democracia" derivando da grega dé·mos, que significa "povo", e krá·tos, que significa "governo"). Neste arranjo, todo o corpo de cidadãos constituía o legislativo, falando e votando na assembleia. Os "cidadãos", porém, eram uma minoria, visto que mulheres, residentes de origem estrangeira e escravos não possuíam a cidadania. Pensa-se que os escravos constituíam tanto quanto um terço da população em muitas cidades-estados, e, sem dúvida, seu trabalho escravo tornava possível que os "cidadãos" tivessem o tempo livre necessário para participar na assembleia política. Deve-se notar que a mais antiga referência à Grécia nas Escrituras Hebraicas, por volta do nono século AEC, fala de os de Judá serem vendidos por Tiro, por Sídon e pela Filístia como escravos "aos filhos dos gregos [literalmente: "javanitos" ou "jônios"]". — Jl 3:4-6.

Manufatura e Comércio. Além da agricultura, como atividade principal, os gregos produziam e exportavam muitos produtos manufaturados. Os vasos gregos tornaram-se famosos em toda a região do Mediterrâneo; também eram importantes os artigos de prata e de ouro, e tecidos de lã. Havia numerosas oficinas pequenas, independentes, de propriedade de artífices, os quais tinham a ajuda de alguns trabalhadores, quer escravos quer livres. Na cidade grega de Corinto, o apóstolo Paulo juntou-se a Áquila e Priscila na fabricação de tendas, usando provavelmente tecido feito de pelos de cabra, dos quais havia um bom suprimento na Grécia. (At 18:1-4) Corinto tornou-se um grande centro comercial por causa da sua localização estratégica perto do golfo de Corinto e do golfo Sarônico. Outras das principais cidades comerciais eram Atenas e Egina.

Cultura e Artes Gregas. A educação grega ficava restrita aos varões, e seu principal objetivo era produzir "bons cidadãos". Mas, cada cidade-estado tinha seu próprio conceito sobre o que era um bom cidadão. Em Esparta, a educação era quase que inteiramente física (contraste isso com o conselho de Paulo a Timóteo, em 1Ti 4:8), tirando-se os meninos dos pais à idade de 7 anos e transferindo-os a casernas até a idade de 30 anos. Em Atenas, dava-se, por fim, mais ênfase à literatura, à matemática e às artes. Um escravo de confiança, chamado de pai·da·go·gós, acompanhava o menino à escola, onde o treinamento começava à idade de 6 anos. (Note a comparação de Paulo da Lei mosaica com um pai·da·go·gós, em Gál 3:23-25; veja TUTOR.) A poesia era muito popular em Atenas, e exigia-se dos alunos decorar muitos poemas. Embora Paulo fosse educado em Tarso, na Cilícia, fez uso de curtos trechos poéticos, em Atenas, para fazer com que sua mensagem fosse entendida. (At 17:22, 28) Dramas, tanto tragédias como comédias, tornaram-se populares.

Em Atenas, e, com o tempo, em toda a Grécia, dava-se muita importância à filosofia. Entre os principais grupos filosóficos estavam os sofistas, que sustentavam que a verdade era uma questão de opinião individual; este conceito (similar ao dos hindus) sofria oposição de famosos filósofos gregos tais como Sócrates, seu discípulo Platão, e o discípulo de Platão, Aristóteles. Outras filosofias tratavam da derradeira fonte da felicidade. Os estoicos sustentavam que a felicidade consiste em viver de acordo com a razão e apenas esta é que importa. Os epicureus acreditavam que a verdadeira fonte da felicidade é o prazer. (Contraste isso com a declaração de Paulo aos coríntios, em 1Co 15:32.) Filósofos destas últimas duas escolas estavam entre os que passaram a conversar com Paulo em Atenas, o que levou a ser ele conduzido ao Areópago para uma audiência. (At 17:18, 19) Outra escola de filosofia era a dos cépticos, que sustentavam que, a bem dizer, nada realmente importava na vida.

Os gregos, como povo, pelo menos em períodos posteriores, demonstravam uma tendência inquisitiva, e caracteristicamente gostavam de debater e de conversar sobre algo novo. (At 17:21) Esforçavam-se a solucionar algumas das principais questões da vida e do universo pelo processo da lógica (e especulação) humana. De modo que os gregos consideravam-se a classe intelectual do mundo antigo. A primeira carta de Paulo aos coríntios colocou a sabedoria e o intelectualismo humano no seu devido lugar, quando ele, entre outras coisas, disse: "Se alguém entre vós pensa que é sábio neste sistema de coisas, torne-se ele tolo, para que se torne sábio. . . . 'Jeová sabe que os raciocínios dos sábios são fúteis.' " (1Co 1:17-31; 2:4-13; 3:18-20.) Apesar de todos os seus debates e investigações filosóficos, os escritos deles mostram que não encontraram nenhuma base genuína para esperança. Conforme salientaram os professores J. R. S. Sterrett e Samuel Angus: "Nenhuma outra literatura contém lamentos mais patéticos pelas tristezas da vida, pela transitoriedade do amor, pela ilusão da esperança e pela impiedade da morte." — Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Bible Dictionary (Novo Dicionário Bíblico Padrão de Funk e Wagnalls), 1936, p. 313.

Religião Grega. O conhecimento mais antigo sobre a religião grega provém da poesia épica de Homero. Os historiadores presumem que dois poemas épicos, a Ilíada e a Odisseia, tenham sido escritos por ele. Acredita-se que as partes mais antigas destes poemas, em papiro, datem de algum tempo antes de 150 AEC. Conforme George G. A. Murray, professor de grego, diz a respeito destes antigos textos, eles "diferem 'violentamente' de nosso texto vulgar", quer dizer, do texto popularmente aceito nos últimos séculos. (Encyclopædia Britannica [Enciclopédia Britânica], 1942, Vol. 11, p. 689) Assim, dessemelhante da Bíblia, não se preservou a integridade dos textos homéricos, mas eles existiam numa condição extremamente variável, conforme demonstra o Professor Murray. Os poemas homéricos tratavam de heróis guerreiros e deuses, que eram bem semelhantes aos homens.

Há evidência de influência babilônica na religião grega. Uma antiga fábula grega é praticamente uma tradução literal dum original acadiano.

Atribui-se a outro poeta, Hesíodo, provavelmente do oitavo século AEC, a sistematização da multidão de mitos e lendas gregos. A Teogonia de Hesíodo, junto com os poemas homéricos, constituíam os principais escritos sagrados, ou teologia, dos gregos.

Ao se considerarem os mitos gregos, é interessante ver como a Bíblia lança luz sobre sua possível ou mesmo provável origem. Conforme mostra Gênesis 6:1-13, antes do Dilúvio, filhos angélicos de Deus vieram à Terra, evidentemente materializando-se em forma humana, e coabitaram com mulheres atraentes. Produziram descendentes chamados de nefilins, ou derrubadores, isto é, "os que fazem outros cair". O resultado desta união desnatural de criaturas espirituais com humanos, e a raça híbrida que produziu, foi uma terra cheia de imoralidade e de violência. (Compare isso com Ju 6; 1Pe 3:19, 20; 2Pe 2:4, 5; veja NEFILINS.) Javã, progenitor do povo grego, igual a outros dos tempos pós-diluvianos, sem dúvida ouviu os relatos sobre os tempos e as circunstâncias pré-diluvianos, provavelmente de seu pai Jafé, sobrevivente do Dilúvio. Observe, agora, o que os escritos atribuídos a Homero e a Hesíodo revelam.

Os numerosos deuses e deusas que eles descreveram tinham forma humana e grande beleza, embora frequentemente fossem gigantescos e sobre-humanos. Comiam, bebiam, dormiam, tinham relações sexuais entre si ou até mesmo com humanos, viviam como família, brigavam e lutavam, seduziam e estupravam. Embora supostamente santos e imortais, eram capazes de cometer qualquer tipo de fraude e de crime. Podiam locomover-se entre a humanidade de forma quer visível quer invisível. Escritores e filósofos gregos posteriores tentaram expurgar os relatos de Homero e de Hesíodo de alguns dos atos mais vis atribuídos aos deuses.

Zeus. Os deuses gregos tinham forma humana e frequentemente eram encarados como crassamente imorais.

Estes relatos talvez reflitam, embora de forma grandemente ampliada, floreada e distorcida, o relato autêntico das condições pré-diluvianas encontrado em Gênesis. Uma notável correspondência adicional é que as lendas gregas descrevem, além dos principais deuses, também semideuses ou heróis de ascendência tanto divina como humana. Estes semideuses tinham uma força sobre-humana, mas eram mortais (sendo Hércules o único a quem se concedeu o privilégio de obter a imortalidade). Os semideuses têm assim uma notável similaridade com os nefilins do relato de Gênesis.

Observando esta correspondência básica, o orientalista E. A. Speiser remonta o tema dos mitos gregos à Mesopotâmia. (The World History of the Jewish People [A História Mundial do Povo Judaico], 1964, Vol. 1, p. 260) A Mesopotâmia era onde se encontrava Babilônia e também o ponto central de onde a humanidade se espalhou após a confusão de línguas do homem. — Gên 11:1-9.

Dizia-se que os principais deuses gregos residiam nas alturas do monte Olimpo (de 2.917 m de altitude), situado ao S da cidade de Bereia. (Paulo estava bem perto das encostas do Olimpo quando ministrava aos bereanos na sua segunda viagem missionária; At 17:10.) Entre estes deuses olímpicos estavam Zeus (chamado Júpiter pelos romanos; At 28:11), o deus do céu; Hera (a Juno romana), esposa de Zeus; Ge ou Geia, a deusa da terra, também chamada de Grande Mãe; Apolo, deus solar, deus da morte repentina, que atirava de longe suas flechas mortíferas; Ártemis (a Diana romana), a deusa da caça; a adoração de outra Ártemis, como deusa da fertilidade, tinha destaque em Éfeso (At 19:23-28, 34, 35); Ares (o Marte romano), o deus da guerra; Hermes (o Mercúrio romano), o deus dos viajantes, do comércio e da eloquência, o mensageiro dos deuses (em Listra, Ásia Menor, o povo chamou Barnabé de "Zeus, mas a Paulo de Hermes, visto que ele tomava a dianteira no falar"; At 14:12); Afrodite (a Vênus romana), a deusa da fertilidade e do amor, considerada a "irmã da Istar assírio-babilônica e da Astarteia [Astarte] siro-fenícia" (Greek Mythology [Mitologia Grega], de P. Hamlyn, Londres, 1963, p. 63); e numerosos outros deuses e deusas. Na realidade, cada cidade-estado parece ter tido seus próprios deuses menores, adorados segundo costumes locais.

Festividades e jogos. As festividades desempenhavam um papel importante na religião grega. Competições atléticas, junto com dramas, sacrifícios e orações, atraíam pessoas de uma ampla área, e, assim, estas festividades serviam de vínculo de união para as cidades-estados politicamente divididas. Entre as mais destacadas destas festividades estavam os Jogos Olímpicos (em Olímpia), os Jogos Ístmicos (realizados perto de Corinto), os Jogos Pítios (em Delfos) e os Jogos Nemeus (perto de Nemeia). A realização dos Jogos Olímpicos, cada quatro anos, fornecia a base para o cálculo das Eras Gregas, chamando-se cada período de quatro anos de Olimpíada. — Veja JOGOS.

Oráculos, astrologia e santuários. Os oráculos, médiuns por meio dos quais os deuses supostamente revelavam conhecimento oculto, tinham muitos devotos. Os mais famosos oráculos ocupavam templos em Delos, Delfos e Dodona. Ali, por um preço, as pessoas recebiam respostas às perguntas feitas ao oráculo. As respostas usualmente eram ambíguas, exigindo a interpretação dos sacerdotes. Em Filipos, na Macedônia, a moça que tinha a arte da predição (moça da qual Paulo fez o demônio retirar-se), atuava como oráculo e 'fornecia muito ganho aos seus amos'. (At 16:16-19) O Professor G. Ernest Wright remonta a origem da astrologia moderna através dos gregos até os adivinhos de Babilônia. (Biblical Archaeology [Arqueologia Bíblica], 1962, p. 37) Santuários de cura também eram populares.

Ensino filosófico da imortalidade. Visto que os filósofos gregos se interessavam nas derradeiras questões da vida, seus conceitos serviram também para formular os conceitos religiosos do povo. Sócrates, do quinto século AEC, ensinava a imortalidade da alma humana. Em Phaedo (Fédon; 64C, 105E), Platão cita a conversa de Sócrates com dois dos seus colegas: "'Cremos que existe tal coisa como a morte? . . . Cremos, não é, que a morte é a separação da alma do corpo, e que o estado de se estar morto é o estado em que o corpo está separado da alma e existe sozinha, e a alma está separada do corpo e existe sozinha? É a morte outra coisa senão isto?' 'Não, é isto', disse ele. 'E a alma não admite a morte?' 'Não.'" Sócrates prossegue: "'Então, a alma é imortal.' 'Sim.'" Contraste isso com Ezequiel 18:4 e Eclesiastes 9:5, 10.

Templos e ídolos. Construíram-se magníficos templos em honra dos deuses, e, para representar seus deuses, produziram-se estátuas de mármore e de bronze belamente trabalhadas. As ruínas de alguns dos mais famosos destes templos podem ser encontradas na Acrópole de Atenas, e elas incluem o Partenon e o Erecteion, junto com os propileus. Foi nesta mesma cidade que Paulo falou perante uma assistência, comentando o notável temor aos deuses evidente em Atenas, e ele disse claramente aos seus ouvintes que o Criador do céu e da terra "não mora em templos feitos por mãos", e que eles, como progênie de Deus, não deviam imaginar que o Criador seja "semelhante a ouro, ou prata, ou pedra, semelhante a algo esculpido pela arte e inventividade do homem". — At 17:22-29.

Período das Guerras Persas. A ascensão do Império Medo-Persa sob Ciro (que conquistou Babilônia em 539 AEC) constituía uma ameaça para a Grécia. Ciro já conquistara a Ásia Menor, inclusive as colônias gregas ali existentes. No terceiro ano de Ciro (evidentemente como governante de Babilônia), o mensageiro angélico de Jeová informou Daniel que o quarto rei da Pérsia 'incitaria tudo contra o reino da Grécia'. (Da 10:1; 11:1, 2) O terceiro rei persa (Dario Histaspes) sufocou uma revolta das colônias gregas em 499 AEC e se preparou para invadir a Grécia. A frota invasora persa foi destroçada por uma tempestade, em 492 AEC. Daí, em 490, uma grande força persa invadiu a Grécia, mas foi derrotada por um pequeno exército de atenienses, nas planícies de Maratona, ao NE de Atenas. Xerxes, filho de Dario, decidiu vingar esta derrota. Como o predito 'quarto rei', incitou todo o império para formar uma maciça força militar, e, em 480 AEC, cruzou o Helesponto.

Embora certas das principais cidades-estados da Grécia mostrassem então uma rara união na sua luta para impedir a invasão, as tropas persas marcharam através da Grécia setentrional e central, chegando a Atenas, e incendiaram a fortaleza elevada dela, a Acrópole. No entanto, no mar, os atenienses e gregos apoiadores superaram em estratégia a frota persa (com seus aliados fenícios e outros) e a destroçaram em Salamina. Depois desta vitória infligiram outra derrota aos persas em terra, em Plateia, e mais outra em Micale, na costa O da Ásia Menor, após o que as forças persas abandonaram a Grécia.

Supremacia Ateniense. Atenas obteve então a liderança na Grécia, em virtude da sua forte armada. O período que se seguiu, até por volta de 431 AEC, era a "Idade de Ouro" de Atenas, em que se produziram as mais famosas obras de arte e de arquitetura. Atenas chefiava a Liga de Delos, de diversas cidades e ilhas gregas. Devido ao ressentimento da Liga do Peloponeso com o destaque de Atenas, irrompeu a Guerra do Peloponeso chefiada por Esparta. Esta durou de 431 até 404 AEC, sofrendo os atenienses por fim a derrota total às mãos dos espartanos. O domínio rígido de Esparta durou até por volta de 371 AEC, e então Tebas obteve a superioridade. Os assuntos gregos entraram num período de decadência política, embora Atenas continuasse a ser o centro cultural e filosófico do Mediterrâneo. Por fim, a potência emergente da Macedônia, sob Filipe II, conquistou a Grécia em 338 AEC, e a Grécia foi unificada sob controle macedônio.

A Grécia sob Alexandre, o Grande (Magno). Lá no sexto século AEC, Daniel recebera uma visão profética, predizendo a derrubada do Império Medo-Persa pela Grécia. Alexandre, filho de Filipe, fora educado por Aristóteles, e, após o assassinato de Filipe, tornou-se o paladino dos povos de língua grega. Em 334 AEC, Alexandre empreendeu vingar-se dos ataques persas contra cidades gregas na costa O da Ásia Menor. Sua conquista veloz, não somente de toda a Ásia Menor, mas também da Síria, da Palestina, do Egito e de todo o Império Medo-Persa até a Índia, cumpriu o quadro profético de Daniel 8:5-7, 20, 21. (Veja Da 7:6.) Ao assumir o controle de Judá, em 332 AEC, a Grécia tornou-se então a quinta potência mundial sucessiva com relação à nação de Israel — tendo sido os quatro precedentes o Egito, a Assíria, Babilônia e a Medo-Pérsia. Em 328 AEC, a conquista de Alexandre estava completa, e então a parte remanescente da visão de Daniel teve cumprimento. Alexandre morreu em Babilônia, em 323 AEC, e, conforme predito, seu império foi subsequentemente dividido em quatro domínios, nenhum deles igual em força ao império original. — Da 8:8, 21, 22; 11:3, 4; veja MAPAS, Vol. 2, p. 334; ALEXANDRE N.º 1.

Antes de falecer, porém, Alexandre havia introduzido a cultura grega e a língua grega em todo o seu vasto domínio. Estabeleceram-se colônias gregas em muitas das terras conquistadas. No Egito construiu-se a cidade de Alexandria, e esta tornou-se rival de Atenas como centro de erudição. Assim se iniciou a helenização (ou grecização) de grande parte das regiões do Mediterrâneo e do Oriente Médio. O grego comum, ou coiné, tornou-se a língua franca, falada por pessoas de muitas nacionalidades. Foi a língua usada por eruditos judeus, em Alexandria, na produção de sua tradução das Escrituras Hebraicas, a Septuaginta. Mais tarde, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs foram registradas em coiné, e a popularidade internacional desta língua contribuiu para a rápida difusão das boas novas cristãs pela região do Mediterrâneo. — Veja GREGO.

Efeito da Helenização sobre os Judeus. Quando a Grécia foi dividida entre os generais de Alexandre, Judá tornou-se um estado fronteiriço entre o regime ptolomaico do Egito e a dinastia selêucida da Síria. Essa terra, primeiro controlada pelo Egito, foi tomada pelos selêucidas em 198 AEC. No empenho de unificar Judá com a Síria numa cultura helênica, promoveram-se em toda a Judá a religião, a língua, a literatura e a vestimenta gregas.

Fundaram-se colônias gregas em todo o território judaico, inclusive as em Samaria (depois chamada Sebaste), Aco (Ptolemaida) e Bete-Seã (Citópolis), bem como algumas estabelecidas em lugares antes despovoados ao L do rio Jordão. (Veja DECÁPOLIS.) Em Jerusalém estabeleceu-se um ginásio, que atraiu os jovens judeus. Visto que os jogos gregos estavam vinculados com a religião grega, o ginásio serviu para corromper a aderência dos judeus aos princípios bíblicos. Até mesmo o sacerdócio sofreu uma considerável infiltração do helenismo durante este período. Deste modo, crenças antes alheias aos judeus, passaram aos poucos a arraigar-se; essas incluíam o ensino pagão da imortalidade da alma humana e a ideia de um mundo subterrâneo de tormento após a morte.

A dessacração do templo em Jerusalém por Antíoco Epifânio (168 AEC) pela introdução da adoração de Zeus ali, marcou o ponto extremo da helenização dos judeus e provocou a Guerra dos Macabeus.

Em Alexandria, no Egito, onde o setor judaico ocupava uma parte considerável da cidade, a influência helenizante também era forte. (Veja ALEXANDRIA.) Alguns judeus alexandrinos deixaram-se levar pela popularidade da filosofia grega. Certos escritores judeus sentiram-se obrigados a procurar ajustar as crenças judaicas ao que então era a "tendência moderna". Tentaram demonstrar que as ideias filosóficas gregas então em voga realmente foram precedidas por ideias similares nas Escrituras Hebraicas ou até mesmo derivadas delas.

Domínio Romano sobre os Estados Gregos. A Macedônia e a Grécia (que constituíam uma das quatro partes em que fora dividido o império de Alexandre) caíram diante dos romanos em 197 AEC. No ano seguinte, o general romano proclamou a "liberdade" de todas as cidades gregas. Isto significava que não se cobrariam tributos, mas que Roma esperava plena cooperação com os seus desejos. Aos poucos desenvolveu-se um sentimento antirromano. A Macedônia guerreou contra os romanos, mas foi novamente derrotada em 168 AEC, e uns 20 anos mais tarde tornou-se província romana. A Liga Acaica, chefiada por Corinto, rebelou-se em 146 AEC, e os exércitos de Roma invadiram a Grécia meridional e destruíram Corinto. Formou-se a província da "Acaia", e, por volta de 27 AEC, esta passou a incluir toda a Grécia meridional e central. — At 19:21; Ro 15:26; veja ACAIA.

O período de domínio romano foi de declínio político e econômico para a Grécia. Apenas a cultura grega continuou forte e foi amplamente adotada pelos romanos conquistadores. Estes importaram entusiasticamente estátuas e literatura gregas. Até mesmo templos inteiros foram desmantelados e enviados à Itália. Muitos dos jovens varões de Roma foram educados em Atenas e em outras sedes gregas de erudição. A Grécia, por outro lado, voltou seus pensamentos para si mesma e passou a viver do passado, desenvolvendo uma atitude antiquada.

"Helenos" no Primeiro Século EC. Na época do ministério de Jesus Cristo e de seus apóstolos, os nativos da Grécia ou os de origem grega ainda eram conhecidos como hél·le·nes (no singular: hél·len). Os gregos chamavam os não gregos de "bárbaros", significando simplesmente estrangeiros ou os que falavam língua estrangeira. O apóstolo Paulo, igualmente, contrasta "gregos" com "bárbaros" em Romanos 1:14. — Veja BÁRBARO.

Em alguns casos, porém, Paulo usa também o termo hél·le·nes em sentido mais amplo. Especialmente em contraste com os judeus, ele se refere aos hél·le·nes, ou gregos, como representativos de todos os povos não judaicos. (Ro 1:16; 2:6, 9, 10; 3:9; 10:12; 1Co 10:32; 12:13) Assim, em 1 Coríntios, capítulo 1, Paulo, evidentemente, equipara "os gregos" (v. 22) às "nações" (v. 23). Isto, sem dúvida, se devia ao destaque e proeminência da língua e cultura gregas em todo o Império Romano. Em certo sentido, os gregos 'encabeçavam a lista' dos povos não judaicos. Isto não significa que Paulo, e outros escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, usavam hél·le·nes num sentido muito livre, de modo que hél·len não significava mais do que um gentio, conforme alguns comentadores dão a entender. Mostrando que hél·le·nes foi usado para identificar um povo distinto, Paulo, em Colossenses 3:11, refere-se ao "grego" como diferente do "estrangeiro [bár·ba·ros]" e o "cita".

Em harmonia com o precedente, o perito em grego Hans Windisch comenta: "O sentido de 'gentio' [da palavra hél·len] não pode ser provado, . . . nem com o judaísmo helenístico, nem com o NT." (Theological Dictionary of the New Testament [Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento], editado por G. Kittel; tradutor da edição em inglês, G. Bromiley, 1971, Vol. II, p. 516.) No entanto, ele apresenta mesmo alguma evidência de que escritores gregos, às vezes, aplicavam o termo hél·len a pessoas de outras raças, que haviam adotado a língua e cultura gregas — pessoas "helenizadas". Portanto, ao se considerarem as referências bíblicas a hél·le·nes, ou gregos, em muitos casos precisa-se pelo menos admitir a possibilidade de que estes não o eram por nascença ou ascendência.

A mulher "grega" de nacionalidade siro-fenícia, cuja filha Jesus curou (Mr 7:26-30), provavelmente era de ascendência grega, para ser diferenciada assim. Os "gregos entre os que subiram para adorar" na Páscoa, e que pediram uma entrevista com Jesus, evidentemente eram prosélitos gregos da religião judaica. (Jo 12:20, note a declaração profética de Jesus no versículo 32 , sobre 'atrair a si toda sorte de homens'). Tanto o pai de Timóteo como Tito são chamados de hél·len. (At 16:1, 3; Gál 2:3) Isto talvez signifique que eram de ascendência grega. No entanto, em vista da alegada tendência de alguns escritores gregos, de usar hél·le·nes para se referir a não gregos que falavam grego e eram de cultura grega, e em vista do uso do termo por Paulo em sentido representativo, já considerado, pode-se admitir a possibilidade de que tais pessoas eram gregos neste último sentido. Não obstante, estar a mulher grega na Siro-Fenícia, ou morar o pai de Timóteo em Listra, da Ásia Menor, ou que Tito parece ter morado em Antioquia da Síria, não prova que eles não eram etnicamente gregos ou descendentes de tais — porque havia colonos e imigrantes gregos em todas essas regiões.

Quando Jesus disse a um grupo que ele 'iria para aquele que o enviou' e que "onde eu [vou] vós não podeis ir", os judeus disseram entre si mesmos: "Para onde pretende ir este homem, de modo que não o havemos de achar? Será que pretende ir para os judeus dispersos entre os gregos e ensinar os gregos?" (Jo 7:32-36) Por "judeus dispersos entre os gregos" evidentemente eles se referiam exatamente a tais, não aos judeus estabelecidos em Babilônia, mas aos espalhados pelas longínquas cidades e terras gregas ao ocidente. Os relatos sobre as viagens missionárias de Paulo revelam o notável número de imigrantes judeus que havia em tais regiões gregas.

Os textos de Atos 17:12 e 18:4 certamente se referem a pessoas de ascendência grega, pois tratam de acontecimentos nas cidades gregas de Bereia e de Corinto. O mesmo pode dar-se também com os "gregos" na Tessalônica macedônia (At 17:4); os em Éfeso, na costa ocidental da Ásia Menor, há muito colonizada por gregos e certa vez a capital da Jônia (At 19:10, 17; 20:21); e até mesmo os em Icônio, na Ásia Menor central (At 14:1). Embora a combinação "judeus e gregos", em alguns destes textos, talvez indique que Lucas, igual a Paulo, usava neste caso "gregos" como representativos de povos não judeus em geral, na realidade apenas Icônio ficava geograficamente fora da principal esfera de influência grega.

Helenistas. No livro de Atos aparece outro termo: Hel·le·ni·staí (singular: Hel·le·ni·stés). Este termo não é encontrado nem na literatura grega, nem na helenística judaica; portanto, não se tem plena certeza do seu sentido. Todavia, a maioria dos lexicógrafos acredita que designe "judeus que falavam grego", em Atos 6:1 e 9:29. No primeiro destes dois textos, estes Hel·le·ni·staí são contrastados com os "judeus que falavam hebraico" (E·braí·oi [texto de Westcott e Hort]). No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, judeus e prosélitos de muitas terras estavam ali presentes. Que muitas pessoas que falavam grego vieram à cidade é evidenciado pela "Inscrição de Teódoto" encontrada no morro de Ofel, em Jerusalém. Escrita em grego, declara: "Teódoto, filho de Vêneto, sacerdote e presidente de sinagoga, filho de um presidente de sinagoga e neto de um presidente de sinagoga, construiu a sinagoga para a leitura da Lei e para o ensino dos Mandamentos, e (ele construiu) a casa de hóspedes, os quartos e as cisternas de água a fim de hospedar os que viessem de fora e precisassem de hospedagem — (a sinagoga) que foi fundada por seus antepassados e pelos anciãos, e por Simônides." (Biblical Archaelogy, de G. Ernest Wright, 1962, p. 240) Alguns relacionariam esta inscrição com a "Sinagoga dos Libertos", da qual alguns membros estavam entre os responsáveis pelo martírio de Estêvão. — At 6:9; veja LIBERTO, HOMEM LIVRE.

A forma Hel·le·ni·staí, que aparece em Atos 11:20, porém, com referência a certos habitantes de Antioquia, da Síria, talvez se refira em geral "ao povo que falava grego", em vez de a judeus que falavam grego. Isto parece ser evidenciado pela indicação de que, até a chegada de cristãos de Cirene e de Chipre, a pregação da palavra em Antioquia ficara restrita apenas "a judeus". (At 11:19) De modo que os Hel·le·ni·staí mencionados ali talvez se refiram a pessoas helenizadas de diversas nacionalidades, as quais falavam a língua grega (e que talvez vivessem segundo costumes gregos). — Veja ANTIOQUIA N.º 1; CIRENE, CIRENEU.

O apóstolo Paulo visitou a Macedônia e a Grécia tanto na sua segunda como na sua terceira viagem missionária. (At 16:11-18:11; 20:1-6) Gastou tempo ministrando nas importantes cidades macedônias de Filipos, Tessalônica e Bereia, e nas principais cidades acaicas de Atenas e Corinto. (At 16:11, 12; 17:1-4, 10-12, 15; 18:1, 8) Devotou um ano e meio ao ministério em Corinto, na sua segunda viagem (At 18:11), ocasião em que escreveu as duas cartas aos tessalonicenses e possivelmente aquela aos gálatas. Na sua terceira viagem, escreveu de Corinto a sua carta aos romanos. Após o seu primeiro encarceramento em Roma, Paulo, pelo visto, visitou de novo a Macedônia, entre 61 e 64 EC, provavelmente escrevendo ali a sua primeira carta a Timóteo e possivelmente sua carta a Tito.

Durante os primeiros séculos da Era Comum, a cultura grega continuava a influenciar o Império Romano, e a Grécia preservava suas realizações intelectuais, possuindo Atenas uma das principais universidades do Império Romano. Constantino esforçou-se a fundir o cristianismo com certas práticas e ensinos pagãos, e seu próprio proceder preparou o cenário para tal religião amalgamada tornar-se a religião oficial do império. Isto tornou a Grécia parte da cristandade.

Atualmente, a Grécia controla uma área terrestre de 131.957 km², e tem uma população de 10.096.000 (segundo estimativas de 1989).

GREGO. Língua que pertence à família indo-europeia de línguas. (O hebraico é da família semítica, outra família de línguas.) O grego é a língua em que se escreveram originalmente as Escrituras Cristãs (exceto o Evangelho de Mateus, que foi primeiro escrito em hebraico) e na qual também apareceu a primeira tradução completa das Escrituras Hebraicas, a saber, a Septuaginta grega (ou Versão dos Setenta). É uma língua flexional, que alcança uma variedade de expressão por meio de radicais, prefixos e desinências.

Coiné. Desde cerca de 300 AEC a aproximadamente 500 EC estendeu-se a era do grego coiné, ou comum, uma mistura de diferentes dialetos gregos, dos quais o ático era o mais influente. Coiné tornou-se a língua internacional. Tinha uma nítida vantagem sobre as outras línguas daquele tempo, por ser quase que universalmente conhecida. Coiné significa língua comum, ou dialeto comum a todos. Quão amplo era o uso do coiné pode ser visto no fato de que os decretos dos governadores imperiais e do senado romano eram traduzidos para o coiné, a fim de serem distribuídos em todo o Império Romano. Concordemente, a acusação afixada acima da cabeça de Jesus Cristo, quando ele foi pregado na estaca, foi escrita não só em latim oficial, e em hebraico, mas também em grego (coiné). — Mt 27:37; Jo 19:19, 20.

Sobre o uso do grego na terra de Israel, certo perito comenta: "Embora o grosso do povo judaico rejeitasse o helenismo e seus modos, o intercâmbio com os povos gregos e o uso da língua grega não era de forma alguma evitado. . . . Os instrutores palestinos consideravam de forma favorável a tradução grega das Escrituras, como um instrumento para levar a verdade aos gentios." (Hellenism [Helenismo], de N. Bentwich, 1919, p. 115) Naturalmente, o motivo primário da Septuaginta grega era beneficiar os judeus, especialmente os da Dispersão, os quais não mais falavam o hebraico puro, mas conheciam o grego. Antigos termos hebraicos, que envolviam a adoração judaica, vieram a ser substituídos por termos de origem grega. A palavra sy·na·go·gé, que significa "uma reunião (assembleia)", é um exemplo da adoção de palavras gregas pelos judeus.

Coiné usado por escritores gregos inspirados. Visto que os escritores das inspiradas Escrituras Cristãs se preocupavam em transmitir a sua mensagem com entendimento a todas as pessoas, não usavam o grego clássico, mas o coiné. Todos estes escritores eram eles mesmos judeus. Embora fossem semitas, não estavam interessados na divulgação do semitismo, mas sim da verdade do puro cristianismo, e, por meio da língua grega, podiam alcançar mais pessoas. Podiam cumprir melhor sua comissão de 'fazer discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações'. (Mt 28:19, 20) Também, o coiné era um excelente instrumento por meio do qual podiam expressar bem as complexidades sutis de pensamentos que desejavam apresentar.

Os inspirados escritores cristãos deram ao coiné poder, dignidade e calor humano em razão da sua sublime mensagem. As palavras gregas assumiram um sentido mais rico, mais pleno e mais espiritual no contexto das Escrituras inspiradas.

Alfabeto. Todos os atuais alfabetos europeus derivam quer direta quer indiretamente do alfabeto grego. No entanto, os gregos não inventaram o seu alfabeto; adotaram-no dos semitas. Isto se evidencia no fato de que as letras alfabéticas gregas (de cerca do sétimo século AEC) assemelham-se aos caracteres hebraicos (de cerca do oitavo século AEC). Seguem também a mesma ordem geral, com poucas exceções. Além disso, a pronúncia dos nomes de algumas das letras é bem similar; por exemplo: ál·fa (alfa, grego) e 'á·lef (álefe, hebraico); bé·ta (beta, grego) e behth (bete, hebraico); dél·ta (delta, grego) e dá·leth (dálete, hebraico); e muitas outras. O coiné tem 24 letras. Ao adaptarem o alfabeto semítico à língua grega, os gregos fizeram um valioso acréscimo a ele, por tomarem as letras excedentes, para as quais não tinham consoantes correspondentes ('á·lef, he', hhehth, 'á·yin, waw e yohdh) e as usaram para representar os sons vocálicos a, e (breve), e (longo), o, y e i.

Vocabulário. O vocabulário grego é bem abundante e exato. O escritor grego tem à sua disposição palavras suficientes para o habilitar a fazer distinções sutis e a transmitir a nuança exata do sentido que deseja transmitir. Para ilustrar, o grego faz uma distinção entre o conhecimento comum, gnó·sis (1Ti 6:20), e o conhecimento intensificado, e·pí·gno·sis (1Ti 2:4), e entre ál·los (Jo 14:16), que significa "outro" da mesma espécie, e hé·te·ros, que significa "outro" de espécie diferente. (Gál 1:6) Muitas expressões em outras línguas incorporaram palavras gregas, bem como radicais básicos de palavras gregas, resultando numa língua de expressões mais precisas e mais específicas.

Substantivos. Os substantivos são declinados segundo os casos, o gênero e o número. Palavras relacionadas, tais como pronomes e adjetivos, são declinadas para concordar com as antecedentes ou com aquelas que as regem.

Caso. Em geral, o coiné mostra ter cinco casos. (Alguns peritos ampliam-nos para oito.) Em português, não há mudança na forma dos substantivos, exceto quanto à flexão de gênero, número ou grau. (Os pronomes estão sujeitos a mais variações.) No coiné, porém, cada caso usualmente requer uma forma ou desinência diferente, tornando a língua neste respeito muito mais complexa do que o português.

O Artigo. Em português, existe tanto os artigos definidos ("o", "a", "os", "as") como os indefinidos ("um", "uma", "uns", "umas"). O coiné tem apenas um artigo ὁ (ho), que em alguns aspectos é equivalente ao artigo definido em português. O artigo grego é flexionado segundo o caso, o gênero e o número, assim como os substantivos.

O artigo grego não só é usado para destacar substantivos, mas também o é com infinitivos, adjetivos, advérbios, frases, orações subordinadas e até mesmo sentenças inteiras. O uso do artigo junto a um adjetivo ocorre em grego em João 10:11, cuja tradução literal seria: "Eu sou o pastor, o excelente." Isto é mais forte do que apenas: "Eu sou o pastor excelente." É como que colocar "excelente" em grifo.

Um exemplo de um artigo reger a toda uma oração ocorre em Romanos 8:26, onde a frase "em prol de que devemos orar assim como necessitamos" é precedida pelo artigo no gênero neutro. A frase rezaria literalmente "o . . . em prol de que devemos orar". (Int) Para transmitir o sentido em português, é de ajuda acrescentar as palavras "problema de". O artigo definido enfoca o assunto de modo tal, que o problema é englobado como questão separada. Portanto, a versão: "Pois não sabemos o [problema de] em prol de que devemos orar assim como necessitamos" (NM) transmite com mais exatidão o sentido do pensamento do escritor.

Verbos. Os verbos gregos são formados primariamente de raízes verbais por meio de temas e desinências, ou afixos e sufixos. São conjugados segundo voz, modo, tempo, pessoa e número. No grego, eles constituem um estudo mais difícil do que os substantivos. Um entendimento melhor do coiné, nos últimos anos, especialmente com respeito aos verbos, tem habilitado os tradutores a destacar melhor o sentido e significado real das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, do que foi possível nas versões mais antigas. Alguns dos aspectos mais interessantes a respeito dos verbos gregos e da sua influência sobre o entendimento da Bíblia são considerados nos parágrafos seguintes.

Voz. O português possui quatro vozes verbais, a saber: ativa, passiva, reflexiva e neutra. O grego tem três vozes, a ativa, a passiva e uma distintiva "voz média". Nesta voz, o sujeito participa nos resultados da ação, ou, às vezes, produz a ação. A voz média enfatiza o interesse do agente na ação do verbo.

A voz média era também usada como força intensificadora. Tinha uma finalidade similar à do grifo em português. Paulo, depois de ser informado de que o aguardavam laços e tribulações ao chegar a Jerusalém, disse: "Não obstante, não levo a minha alma em conta como estimada por mim, desde que eu possa terminar a minha carreira e o ministério que recebi do Senhor Jesus." (At 20:22-24) Aqui, o verbo traduzido por "levo [faço]", poi·oú·mai, está na voz média. Paulo está dizendo, não que ele não dê valor à sua vida, mas que o cumprimento do seu ministério é muito mais importante. Esta é a conclusão dele, não importando o que outros pensem.

A voz média é também usada em Filipenses 1:27: "Somente comportai-vos [ou: "procedei como cidadãos"] da maneira digna das boas novas acerca do Cristo." O verbo po·li·teú·o·mai, neste texto, está na voz média, po·li·teú·e·sthe, "procedei como cidadãos", isto é, participai nas atividades dos cidadãos, participando em divulgar as boas novas. Os cidadãos romanos, em geral, tinham parte ativa nos assuntos do Estado, porque a cidadania romana era altamente estimada, especialmente nas cidades cujos habitantes receberam de Roma a cidadania, como no caso de Filipos. De modo que Paulo está aqui dizendo aos cristãos que não devem ser inativos, como apenas ocupando a posição de cristãos, mas que têm de participar na atividade cristã. Isto está em harmonia com as suas palavras posteriores dirigidas a eles: "Quanto a nós, a nossa cidadania existe nos céus." — Fil 3:20.

Tempos. Outra característica importante e distintiva do grego, que contribui para a sua exatidão, é o uso dos tempos dos verbos. Os verbos e seus tempos envolvem dois elementos: a espécie de ação (o mais importante) e o momento da ação (de menor importância). Na língua grega há três pontos principais de se encarar a ação, cada um com características modificadoras: (1) ação continuada ("estar fazendo"), representada basicamente no tempo presente, cuja força primária é a ação progressiva ou a habitual ou sucessivamente recorrente; (2) ação perfeita ou completada ("feito"), sendo o tempo principal aqui o perfeito; (3) ação em si, do momento ("fazer"), representada pelo aoristo. Naturalmente, há outros tempos, tais como o imperfeito, o pretérito perfeito e o futuro.

Para ilustrar a diferença nos tempos gregos: Em 1 João 2:1, o apóstolo João diz: "Se alguém pecar, temos um Advogado para com o Pai" (Al). O verbo grego para "pecar" está no tempo do aoristo, de modo que o ato é só do momento, é transitório. O aoristo indica aqui um ato de pecado, ao passo que o presente denotaria a condição de pecador, ou a ação contínua ou progressiva de pecar. De modo que João não fala de alguém se entregar à prática do pecado, mas de alguém que 'comete um pecado'. (Compare isso com Mt 4:9, onde o aoristo indica que o Diabo não pediu que Jesus lhe prestasse constante ou contínua adoração, mas que fizesse "um ato de adoração".)

Mas, quando se lê 1 João 3:6, 9, sem tomar em consideração que o verbo (em grego) aqui está no tempo presente, João parece contradizer as palavras acima. A versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, reza: "Qualquer que permanece nele não peca", e: "Qualquer que é nascido de Deus não comete pecado." Esta forma de traduzir não transmite bem em português a ação contínua indicada pelo tempo presente dos verbos gregos usados. Algumas das versões modernas, em vez de dizerem simplesmente "não peca" e "não comete pecado", destacam a ação contínua e vertem os verbos concordemente: "não pratica pecado", "não está praticando o pecado" (NM); "não vive pecando", "não vive na prática de pecado" (ALA); "não peca habitualmente", "não pratica pecado" (Ph); "não continua pecando" (BLH). Jesus, em Mateus 6:33, ordenou aos seus seguidores: "Persisti, pois em buscar primeiro o reino", indicando um esforço contínuo, em vez de apenas "buscai primeiro o reino" (Al).

Nas proibições, o tempo presente e o aoristo também se diferenciam nitidamente. No tempo presente grego, uma proibição significa mais do que apenas não fazer certa coisa. Significa parar de fazê-la. Jesus Cristo, em caminho para Gólgota, não apenas disse às mulheres que o seguiam: "Não choreis", mas, antes, visto que elas já estavam chorando, ele disse: "Parai de chorar por mim." (Lu 23:28) Similarmente, aos que vendiam pombas no templo, Jesus disse: "Parai de fazer da casa de meu Pai uma casa de comércio!" (Jo 2:16) No Sermão do Monte, ele disse: "Parai de estar ansiosos" sobre o que se havia de comer, de beber ou de vestir. (Mt 6:25) Por outro lado, no aoristo, uma proibição era uma ordem de em nenhum tempo ou momento fazer determinada coisa. Mostra-se Jesus dizendo aos seus ouvintes: "Portanto, nunca estejais ansiosos [isto é, que em nenhum momento estejam ansiosos] quanto ao dia seguinte." (Mt 6:34) Aqui, o aoristo é usado para indicar que os discípulos nunca deveriam estar ansiosos.

Outro exemplo da necessidade de tomar em consideração o tempo grego na tradução encontra-se em Hebreus 11:17. Algumas traduções desconsideram o significado especial do tempo do verbo. Com respeito a Abraão, a versão Almeida (rev. e corr.) diz: "Aquele que recebera as promessas ofereceu o seu unigênito." O verbo grego, traduzido aqui por "ofereceu", está no imperfeito, que pode transmitir a ideia de uma ação pretendida ou tentada, mas não realizada ou completada. Portanto, em harmonia com o que realmente aconteceu, o verbo grego é traduzido mais apropriadamente por "tentou oferecer". Igualmente, em Lucas 1:59, falando sobre a ocasião da circuncisão do filho de Zacarias e Elisabete, o imperfeito usado indica que, em vez da tradução: "E lhe chamavam Zacarias, o nome de seu pai" (Al), a passagem deveria rezar: "Iam dar-lhe [ao me-nino] o nome do pai dele, Zacarias" (NM). Isto está em harmonia com o que realmente aconteceu, a saber, que lhe deram o nome de João, segundo as instruções do anjo Gabriel. — Lu 1:13.

Transliteração. Refere-se à grafia das palavras gregas com letras de outro alfabeto. Na maioria dos casos, trata-se simplesmente da substituição de uma letra por outra: b substitui β, g substitui γ, e assim por diante. O mesmo se aplica também às vogais gregas: a substitui α, e substitui ε, e substitui η, i substitui ι, o substitui ο, y substitui υ, e o substitui ω.

Ditongos. A acima mencionada regra geral, da substituição de uma letra por outra, também se aplica à maioria dos ditongos: ai substitui αι, ei substitui ει, oi substitui οι. A letra grega ý·psi·lon (υ) é uma exceção nos seguintes casos: αυ é au, não ay; ευ é eu, não ey; ου é ou, não oy; υι é ui, não yi; ηυ é eu, não ey.

No entanto, há ocasiões em que aquilo que no princípio talvez pareça ser um ditongo tem uma diérese (¨) sobre a segunda letra, como, por exemplo, αϋ, εϋ, οϋ, ηϋ, ωϋ, αϊ, οϊ. A diérese sobre um i·ó·ta (ϊ) ou ý·psi·lon (ϋ) mostra que estas letras realmente não formam um ditongo com a vogal que as precede. De modo que o ý·psi·lon com diérese é transliterado y, não u. Exemplos do acima seriam ay, ey, oy, ey, oy, ai, oi, respectivamente.

Algumas vogais (α, η, ω) têm um pequeno i·ó·ta (ͺ) (chamado de i·ó·ta subscrito) escrito abaixo delas. Na transliteração destas formas gregas, o i·ó·ta (ou i) não é colocado abaixo da linha, mas ao lado e após a letra debaixo da qual aparece. Assim ᾳ é ai, ῃ é ei, e ῳ é oi.

Acentos. Há três tipos de acentos no grego: o agudo (´), o circunflexo (˜), e o grave (`). No grego, eles aparecem acima da vogal da sílaba tônica. Também nesta publicação, o acento é colocado acima da vogal, ou da última vogal da sílaba, mas se usa apenas um tipo de sinal para todos os três tipos de acentos gregos. Assim, λόγος é marcado ló·gos; ζῷον seria zoi·on.

Sílabas. Como ajuda na pronúncia, a divisão silábica, nas transliterações, é indicada por um pontinho. A palavra grega tem tantas sílabas quantas tem vogais ou ditongos. Assim, λόγος (ló·gos) tem duas vogais, e portanto duas sílabas. As duas vogais dum ditongo pertencem à mesma sílaba, não a duas. A palavra πνεῦμα (pneú·ma) tem um ditongo (eu) e mais uma vogal (a), e portanto tem duas sílabas.

Na divisão silábica, observaram-se as seguintes regras: (1) Quando uma única consoante ocorre no meio duma palavra, ela é colocada junto à vogal seguinte da próxima sílaba. Assim, πατήρ seria pa·tér. (2) Às vezes, no meio duma palavra grega, ocorre uma combinação de consoantes. Quando esta mesma combinação de consoantes pode ser usada para iniciar uma palavra grega, também pode iniciar uma sílaba. Por exemplo, κόσμος seria dividida kó·smos. O sm fica com a segunda vogal. Isto se dá porque muitas palavras gregas — tais como Smýr·na — começam com essas mesmas duas consoantes. Entretanto, quando certa combinação de consoantes ocorre no meio duma palavra e não existe palavra grega que comece com esta mesma combinação, elas são separadas. Assim, βύσσος é aqui transliterado como býs·sos, visto que nenhuma palavra grega começa com ss.

Sinais de pronúncia aspirada. Uma vogal no começo duma palavra exige, quer um sinal de aspiração "branda" (ʼ), quer um sinal de aspiração "áspera" (ʽ). O sinal de aspiração "branda" (ʼ) pode ser desconsiderado na transliteração; o sinal de

[1] Esta pronúncia difere daquela do grego moderno.
[2] É nasal antes de κ, ξ, χ, ou outro γ, e é pronunciado como n em nu*n*ca.
[3] Usado apenas no fim duma palavra quando ocorre síg·ma.
[4] Ý·psi·lon é u quando faz parte dum ditongo.

aspiração "áspera" (ʽ) exige que se acrescente um h no início da palavra. Se a primeira letra for maiúscula, este sinal de aspiração ocorre antes da palavra. Neste caso, ʼI torna-se I, ao passo que ʽI é transliterado como Hi. Quando as palavras começam com letra minúscula, os sinais de aspiração ocorrem sobre a primeira letra, ou, no caso da maioria dos ditongos, sobre a segunda. Portanto, αἰών torna-se ai·ón, ao passo que ἁγνός é ha·gnós e αἱρέομαι é hai·ré·o·mai.

Adicionalmente, a letra grega rho (ρ), transliterada r, sempre requer um sinal de aspiração "áspera" (ʽ) no início da palavra. Assim, ῥαββεί é rhab·bei.

GRILHÕES. Veja CADEIAS (LAÇOS, VÍNCULO).

GRILO [hebr.: hhar·gól]. Espécie de inseto saltador, aparentado com o gafanhoto, embora difira deste por ter antenas salientes na ponta do abdome. Tanto o grilo doméstico como o campestre podem ser encontrados nas terras bíblicas. A única menção deste inseto encontra-se em Levítico 11:22, onde é alistado como alimento puro.

Diversas traduções da Bíblia (KJ; Yg) vertem o termo hebraico hhar·gól como "besouro", do qual as espécies mais típicas rastejam em vez de pularem. Mas, em geral, concorda-se que a palavra hebraica se refira a uma espécie de saltador, conforme indicado por este estar alistado junto com o gafanhoto. No entanto, há incerteza quanto a que saltador específico se faz referência. Tradutores têm vertido hhar·gól de forma variada como "gafanhoto voador" (AT), "ofiómaco" (Fi; So) e "grilo" (ALA; NM); e, às vezes, a palavra hebraica foi simplesmente transliterada. — CBC; IBB.

GRINALDA. Coroa ou festão usado como ornato na cabeça. O termo hebraico tsefi·ráh (grinalda) foi usado simbolicamente numa profecia a respeito do julgamento de Jeová sobre Samaria, capital de Efraim, isto é, o reino de dez tribos de Israel. Naquela época, Samaria estava cheia de "ébrios" políticos, embriagados com a independência que o reino setentrional tinha de Judá, e com as suas alianças políticas com a Síria e com outros inimigos do reino de Jeová em Judá. (Veja Is 7:3-9.) Assim como os ébrios costumavam usar grinaldas de flores na cabeça durante as suas bebedeiras de vinho, assim Samaria usava a grinalda deste poder político. Era um ornato de beleza, mas era uma flor desvanecente, que desapareceria. Jeová se tornaria então para os remanescentes do seu povo como coroa de ornato e como grinalda (ou "diadema", segundo diversas traduções) de beleza. — Is 28:1-5.

A mesma palavra hebraica aparece em Ezequiel 7:7, 10. No entanto, neste caso, os tradutores não têm certeza quanto ao sentido ou à aplicação desta palavra. Uma palavra aramaica similar significa "manhã", e a tradução de Lamsa, em inglês, da Pesito siríaca reza aqui "alva", em vez de grinalda ou diadema. Alguns tradutores (AS, Fi, IBB) relacionam esta palavra com um substantivo cognato árabe e a vertem como "ruína". Outros, na crença de que o sentido básico da palavra hebraica seja "rondar" a traduzem por "vez", no sentido da vez da ocorrência. — BJ; BV; CBC.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o plural da palavra grega stém·ma, "grinalda", ocorre em Atos 14:13. Conforme relatado ali, o sacerdote de Zeus, em Listra, trouxe touros e grinaldas até os portões da cidade para oferecer sacrifícios, porque o povo supunha que Paulo e Barnabé fossem deuses. As grinaldas possivelmente eram para ser colocadas na cabeça de Paulo e de Barnabé, conforme às vezes se fazia com ídolos, ou sobre os participantes e sobre os animais sacrificiais. Essas grinaldas eram geralmente feitas de folhagem que supostamente agradava ao deus adorado. — At 14:8-18; veja COROA.

GUARDA. Nas Escrituras pré-cristãs, o substantivo "guarda", em muitos casos, deriva do verbo hebraico sha·már, que significa "guardar; tomar nota; vigiar". (Gên 3:24; 17:9; 37:11; 1Sa 26:15) Os trabalhadores que reconstruíram a muralha de Jerusalém sob a direção de Neemias também serviam de guardas à noite. (Ne 4:22, 23) Os reis tinham batedores para acompanhar seus carros como guardas, assim como tiveram Absalão e Adonias, quando respectivamente tentaram tomar o trono de Israel. (2Sa 15:1; 1Rs 1:5) Batedores serviam sob o Rei Roboão como guardas junto às portas do palácio e mantinham guarda sobre os valiosos escudos de cobre. (1Rs 14:27, 28) O sumo sacerdote Jeoiada usou batedores no templo, junto com a escolta cariana, para proteger o jovem Rei Jeoás e para executar Atalia. — 2Rs 11:4-21; veja CORREDORES (BATEDORES); ESCOLTA CARIANA.

A palavra hebraica tab·báhh, traduzida "cozinheiro" em 1 Samuel 9:23, significava basicamente "açougueiro; abatedor" e passou a significar "executor"; em outra parte é usada com referência à guarda pessoal do Faraó do Egito e do Rei Nabucodonosor de Babilônia. (Gên 37:36; 2Rs 25:8, 11, 20; Da 2:14) A palavra hebraica mish·má·ʽath, que basicamente significa "ouvintes" e é traduzida "súditos" em Isaías 11:14, é usada com referência à escolta de Davi (2Sa 23:23; 1Cr 11:25) e à escolta de Saul, da qual Davi havia sido chefe. — 1Sa 22:14.

Nas prisões romanas era costume acorrentar o preso a um soldado de guarda, ou, para segurança máxima, a dois guardas, como aconteceu com Pedro. (At 12:4, 6) Na primeira vez em que o após-tolo Paulo ficou preso em Roma, por respeito, foi permitido que ele ficasse em sua própria casa alugada, com só um soldado de guarda o vigiando. (At 28:16, 30) A segunda vez em que ele ficou preso com certeza foi mais restritiva.

Para impedir que o povo soubesse da ressurreição de Jesus, os principais sacerdotes subornaram guardas romanos, para divulgarem a mentira de que os seguidores de Jesus haviam furtado o corpo dele. — Mt 27:62-66; 28:11-15; veja SOLDADO.

A Guarda Pretoriana romana foi formada por César Augusto em 13 AEC para servir de escolta imperial. (Fil 1:12, 13) O Imperador Tibério mantinha esta guarda permanentemente acampada perto das muralhas de Roma, e por meio dela tinha sob controle qualquer distúrbio do povo. Isto atribuía muita importância ao comandante da guarda, cuja força chegou a ter uns 10.000 homens. Com o tempo, a Guarda Pretoriana tornou-se tão poderosa, que tanto podia empossar imperadores como destroná-los.

Sacerdotes e levitas estavam organizados sob capitães para guardar o templo em Jerusalém. — Veja CAPITÃO DO TEMPLO.

GUARDA PRETORIANA. Corpo especial de soldados romanos, originalmente organizado por Augusto como escolta imperial para o imperador. Compunha-se de nove (mais tarde aumentadas para dez) coortes de 1.000 homens cada uma. Todos eram voluntários italianos; seu soldo era o dobro ou o triplo do de um soldado das legiões. Tibério concentrou este corpo de elite em Roma, por construir quartéis fortificados ao N das muralhas da cidade. Embora as coortes pudessem ser enviadas a terras estrangeiras, três delas sempre ficavam aquarteladas em Roma, uma delas nos quartéis ao lado do palácio do imperador. Visto que a Guarda Pretoriana, basicamente, era a única tropa permanente na Itália, ela passou a tornar-se uma poderosa força política para apoiar ou derrubar um imperador. Por fim, modificou-se o tamanho e a constituição da Guarda Pretoriana, admitindo-se nela até mesmo homens das províncias. Ela foi finalmente abolida pelo Imperador Constantino, em 312 EC.

Nos Evangelhos e nos Atos, usa-se o latinismo prai·tó·ri·on com referência a um palácio ou uma residência. A tenda dum comandante do exército havia ficado conhecida como praetorium, e assim, com o tempo, o termo foi aplicado à residência do governador provincial. De modo que Pilatos interrogou Jesus no praetorium, ou "palácio do governador". (Jo 18:28, 33; 19:9; veja GOVERNADOR, PALÁCIO DO.) Era evidentemente ali que se faziam os julgamentos e as tropas ficavam aquarteladas. (Mt 27:27; Mr 15:16) Em Cesareia, Paulo foi "mantido sob guarda, no palácio pretoriano de Herodes". — At 23:35.

Em vista deste uso, alguns têm sugerido que prai·tó·ri·on, em Filipenses 1:13, se aplica ao palácio de Nero, no monte Palatino, ou a uma sala de julgamento em que a causa de Paulo pudesse ser ouvida. No entanto, a Cyclopædia (Ciclopedia, de M'Clintock e Strong; Vol. VIII, p. 469) salienta: "Não era o palácio imperial, . . . porque este nunca foi chamado de prætorium em Roma; tampouco era a sala de julgamentos, porque não havia tal edifício em Roma, e o nome prætoria só foi muito mais tarde aplicado às cortes de justiça."

A primeira vez que foi encarcerado em Roma, "permitiu-se a Paulo que ficasse sozinho com um soldado para guardá-lo". (At 28:16) Assim, suas cadeias, em associação com Cristo, tornar-se-iam do conhecimento público entre os soldados da Guarda Pretoriana, e especialmente se havia troca diária de guarda. Em consequência disso, muitos tradutores entendem que prai·tó·ri·on, em Filipenses 1:13, significa a Guarda Pretoriana, e não algum edifício ou corpo judicial. — Al, ALA, IBB, NM; veja também BLH; BV; CT.

O Textus Receptus (Texto Recebido) inclui em Atos 28:16: "o centurião entregou os presos ao general dos exércitos [capitão da guarda, KJ]". (Al) Alguns têm explicado que este último oficial era Sexto Afrânio Burro, prefeito da Guarda Pretoriana sob Nero, até 62 EC. Darby até mesmo o verte (em inglês): "o centurião entregou os prisioneiros ao prefeito pretoriano". Todavia, a versão de Darby coloca esta matéria entre colchetes, como um dos pontos em que há variações nos manuscritos. Outras versões modernas omitem totalmente esta frase, visto que não ocorre em manuscritos antigos, tais como o Sinaítico, o Alexandrino e o Vaticano N.º 1209. — ALA, BLH, CBC, NM.

GUARNIÇÃO. O termo hebraico netsív pode indicar um contingente mais permanente de soldados, aquartelados numa instalação militar. A palavra hebraica aparentada, mats·tsáv (posto avançado), contém uma ideia similar. — 1Sa 13:23; 14:1, 4, 6, 11, 12, 15; 2Sa 23:14.

Os filisteus possuíam guarnições em território israelita durante os reinados de Saul e de Davi. (1Sa 10:5; 13:3, 4; 1Cr 11:16) Depois de Davi derrotar a Síria e Edom, ele manteve no território deles guarnições para impedir uma rebelião. (2Sa 8:6, 14; 1Cr 18:13) A bem da paz e da segurança do país, Jeosafá colocou guarnições em Judá e nas cidades de Efraim, que Asa havia capturado. (2Cr 17:1, 2) A presença de tal contingente militar contribuiu muito para manter a ordem e para proteger os interesses reais em territórios em que os habitantes nativos propendiam a rebelar-se.

Em Jerusalém, durante o primeiro século EC, manteve-se uma guarnição romana. Seu quartel se encontrava na elevada Torre de Antônia, adjacente à área do templo. Quando uma multidão de judeus arrastou Paulo para fora do templo e tentou matá-lo, soldados da guarnição puderam descer com suficiente rapidez para resgatá-lo. (At 21:31, 32) Durante as épocas festivas, judaicas, traziam-se tropas adicionais para reforçar esta guarnição. — Veja ANTÔNIA, TORRE DE.

GUDEGODÁ. Acampamento dos israelitas no ermo; provavelmente o mesmo que Hor-Hagidgade. (De 10:6, 7; compare isso com Núm 33:33.) Alguns, acreditando que o nome "Gudegodá" esteja preservado no uádi Khadakhid, sugerem que este lugar talvez estivesse situado no uádi Khadakhid, a uns 65 km ao NNO do golfo de ʽAqaba. Mas, isto tem sido posto em dúvida, visto que as consoantes hebraicas de Gudegodá realmente não correspondem às de Khadakhid. Quanto à ordem em que se alistam os acampamentos israelitas em Números e em Deuteronômio, veja BENE-JAACÃ.

GUERRA. Estado de hostilidade acompanhado por ações destinadas a subjugar ou destruir os considerados como inimigos. São diversas as palavras hebraicas que envolvem travar guerra; uma delas, derivada da raiz verbal qa·ráv, significa basicamente "aproximar-se", isto é, para lutar. O substantivo grego pó·le·mos significa "guerra"; e o verbo stra·teú·o deriva duma raiz que se refere a um exército acampado.

A Bíblia diz que Ninrode "saiu para a Assíria", para o território de Assur, filho de Sem, evidentemente num ato de agressão. Ali, Ninrode construiu cidades. (Gên 10:11) Nos dias de Abraão, Quedorlaomer, rei de Elão, subjugou diversas cidades (todas aparentemente situadas em torno da extremidade meridional do Mar Morto) durante 12 anos, obrigando-as a servi-lo. Depois que elas se rebelaram, Quedorlaomer e seus aliados guerrearam contra elas, desbaratando as forças de Sodoma e Gomorra, apossando-se dos seus bens e capturando o sobrinho de Abraão, Ló, e os da casa deste. Em vista disso, Abraão reuniu 318 servos treinados, e, junto com três confederados, perseguiu Quedorlaomer e recuperou os cativos e os bens saqueados. Todavia, Abraão não tomou nada do despojo para si mesmo. Este é o primeiro registro duma guerra travada por um servo de Deus. Guerrear Abraão para recuperar seu conservo de Jeová teve a aprovação Deste, porque, quando Abraão retornou, ele foi abençoado por Melquisedeque, sacerdote do Deus Altíssimo. — Gên 14:1-24.

Guerras Ordenadas por Deus. Jeová é "pessoa varonil de guerra", "o Deus dos exércitos" e "poderoso na batalha". (Êx 15:3; 2Sa 5:10; Sal 24:8, 10; Is 42:13) Ele, como Criador e Soberano Supremo do universo, não somente tem o direito, mas também a obrigação, por justiça, de executar os contrários à lei ou autorizar a execução deles, de guerrear contra todos os obstinados que se negam a obedecer às Suas leis justas. Portanto, Jeová foi justo ao eliminar os iníquos no tempo do Dilúvio, ao destruir Sodoma e Gomorra, e ao causar a destruição das forças de Faraó. — Gên 6:5-7, 13, 17; 19:24; Êx 15:4, 5; compare isso com 2Pe 2:5-10; Ju 7.

Israel usado por Deus como executor. Jeová deu aos israelitas o dever sagrado de servir como executores da parte dele na Terra da Promessa, à qual os levou. Antes da libertação de Israel do Egito, a nação não conhecera a guerra. (Êx 13:17) Por dirigir os israelitas vitoriosamente contra "sete nações mais populosas e mais fortes" do que eles, Deus magnificou seu nome como "Jeová dos exércitos, o Deus das fileiras combatentes de Israel". Isto provou que "não é nem com espada nem com lança que Jeová salva, porque a Jeová pertence a batalha". (De 7:1; 1Sa 17:45, 47; compare isso com 2Cr 13:12.) Deu também aos israelitas a oportunidade de demonstrar sua obediência aos mandamentos de Deus, a ponto de porem sua vida em perigo em guerras ordenadas por Deus. — De 20:1-4.

Nenhuma agressão além dos limites fixados por Deus. Todavia, Deus ordenou estritamente aos israelitas que não deviam empenhar-se em guerras de agressão ou de conquista além do território que lhes concedera e que não deviam lutar contra nenhuma nação, exceto aquelas que ele lhes ordenara combater. Não deviam empenhar-se em luta com as nações de Edom, Moabe ou Amom. (De 2:4, 5, 9, 19) Mas, posteriormente, foram atacados por estas nações e se viram obrigados a se defender delas em guerra. Nisto tiveram a ajuda de Deus. — Jz 3:12-30; 11:32, 33; 1Sa 14:47.

Durante o período dos juízes, quando o rei de Amom tentou justificar suas agressões contra Israel por acusar falsamente Israel de se ter apoderado de terras amonitas, Jefté o refutou por relembrar fatos históricos. Jefté passou então a combater estes agressores, baseado no princípio de que 'todo aquele a quem Jeová desapossar diante de nós é que nós desapossaremos'. Jefté não cederia ao intruso nenhuma polegada da terra que Deus deu a Israel. — Jz 11:12-27; veja JEFTÉ.

Guerra santificada. Antigamente, as forças combatentes, antes de entrarem em batalha, costumavam ser santificadas. (Jos 3:5; Je 6:4; 51:27, 28) Durante a guerra, as forças de Israel, inclusive os não judeus (por exemplo, Urias, o hitita, que provavelmente era prosélito circuncidado), tinham de permanecer cerimonialmente limpos. Não podiam ter relações sexuais, nem mesmo com a própria esposa, durante a campanha militar. Portanto, não havia prostitutas seguindo o exército de Israel. Além disso, o próprio acampamento tinha de ser mantido livre de aviltamento. — Le 15:16, 18; De 23:9-14; 2Sa 11:11, 13.

Quando se tornava necessário punir o Israel infiel, os exércitos estrangeiros que causavam a destruição eram considerados 'santificados', no sentido de que haviam sido 'postos à parte' por Jeová para executarem Seus julgamentos justos. (Je 22:6-9; Hab 1:6) Similarmente, as forças militares (principalmente os medos e os persas) que causaram a destruição de Babilônia foram chamadas por Jeová de "meus santificados". — Is 13:1-3.

Dizia-se que os falsos profetas em Israel, na sua ganância, 'santificavam a guerra' contra todos os que não punham algo na sua boca. Sem dúvida, afirmavam santimoniosamente ter a sanção divina para os seus atos de opressão, os quais incluíam compartilharem a responsabilidade pela perseguição e até mesmo a morte dos verdadeiros profetas e servos de Deus. — Miq 3:5; Je 2:8; La 4:13.

Recrutamento. À ordem de Jeová, os varões vigorosos, de 20 anos para cima, eram recrutados para o serviço militar. De acordo com Josefo, serviam até a idade de 50 anos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], III, 288 [xii, 4]) Os temerosos e os receosos de coração eram rejeitados, porque as guerras de Israel eram as guerras de Jeová, e aqueles que demonstrassem fraqueza de fé por terem medo tenderiam a enfraquecer o moral do exército. Dava-se eximição a homens que acabavam de construir uma casa, bem como àqueles que haviam plantado um vinhedo mas ainda não aproveitado seus frutos. Estas eximições baseavam-se no direito do homem, de aproveitar os frutos do seu trabalho. O homem recém-casado estava eximido por um ano. Durante este tempo, talvez pudesse gerar e ver um herdeiro. Nisto Jeová revelava sua preocupação e consideração para com a família. (Núm 1:1-3, 44-46; De 20:5-8; 24:5) Os levitas, que cuidavam do serviço no santuário, estavam eximidos, o que mostra que Jeová considerava o bem-estar espiritual do povo mais importante do que a defesa militar. — Núm 1:47-49; 2:32, 33.

Leis referentes ao ataque a cidades e ao sítio delas. Jeová instruiu Israel sobre o proceder militar a adotar na conquista de Canaã. As sete nações de Canaã, mencionadas em Deuteronômio 7:1, 2, deviam ser exterminadas, inclusive as mulheres e as crianças. As cidades deviam ser devotadas à destruição. (De 20:15-17) De acordo com Deuteronômio 20:10-15, outras cidades eram primeiro avisadas e se lhes ofereciam termos de paz. Se a cidade se rendia, os habitantes eram poupados e postos a trabalhos forçados. Esta oportunidade de se render, junto com a garantia de que a vida deles seria poupada e que suas mulheres não seriam estupradas ou molestadas, era para tais cidades um induzimento para capitularem diante do exército de Israel, evitando assim muito derramamento de sangue. Quando a cidade não se rendia, todos os varões eram mortos. A matança dos homens evitava o perigo duma posterior revolta da cidade. "As mulheres e as criancinhas" eram poupadas. Que "mulheres", aqui, sem dúvida se referia a virgens é indicado por Deuteronômio 21:10-14, onde se descreve as prospectivas noivas de guerra como chorando os pais, não os maridos. Também, anteriormente, quando Israel derrotou Midiã, declara-se especificamente que apenas as virgens foram poupadas. Pouparem-se assim apenas as virgens servia para proteger Israel contra a adoração falsa, e, sem dúvida, de doenças sexualmente transmissíveis. (Núm 31:7, 17, 18) (Quanto à justiça do decreto de Deus contra as nações cananeias, veja CANAÃ, CANANEU [Conquista de Canaã por Israel].)

Árvores frutíferas não deviam ser cortadas para obras de sítio. (De 20:19, 20) Os cavalos dos inimigos eram jarretados no calor da batalha, para incapacitá-los; depois da batalha, sem dúvida, eram mortos. — Jos 11:6.

Nem Todas as Guerras de Israel Foram Corretas. A recaída de Israel num proceder infiel veio acompanhada por conflitos que eram praticamente só lutas pelo poder. Foi assim com a guerra de Abimeleque contra Siquém e Tebes, no tempo dos juízes (Jz 9:1-57), e com a guerra de Onri contra Zinri e Tibi, que resultou em ele ficar firmemente estabelecido no reinado exercido sobre o reino de dez tribos. (1Rs 16:16-22) Também, em vez de confiarem em Jeová para serem protegidos contra seus inimigos, os israelitas começaram a confiar no poder militar, em cavalos e em carros. Assim, no tempo de Isaías, a terra de Judá estava "cheia de cavalos" e não havia "limite dos seus carros". — Is 2:1, 7.

Antigas Estratégias e Táticas de Guerra. Às vezes se enviavam espias antes do ataque, para reconhecer as condições existentes no país. Esses espias não eram enviados para incitar distúrbios, revoltas ou movimentos subversivos, ocultos. (Núm 13:1, 2, 17-19; Jos 2:1; Jz 18:2; 1Sa 26:4) Usavam-se toques especiais de trombeta para reunir as tropas, para toques de guerra e para convocar para uma ação em conjunto. (Núm 10:9; 2Cr 13:12; compare isso com Jz 3:27; 6:34; 7:19, 20.) Ocasionalmente, as forças eram separadas e dispostas para ataques pelos flancos, ou em operações de emboscada ou de armadilha. (Gên 14:15; Jos 8:2-8; Jz 7:16; 2Sa 5:23, 24; 2Cr 13:13) Pelo menos em um caso, sob a orientação de Jeová, colocaram-se na vanguarda cantores para entoar louvores a Deus, à frente das forças armadas. Deus lutou naquele dia por Israel, lançando o acampamento do inimigo em confusão, de modo que os soldados inimigos se mataram uns aos outros. — 2Cr 20:20-23.

O combate, em grande parte, era corpo a corpo, homem contra homem. Usava-se uma variedade de armas — espadas, lanças, dardos, flechas, pedras de funda, e assim por diante. Durante a conquista da Terra da Promessa, Israel não confiava em cavalos e em carros; depositava sua confiança no poder salvador de Jeová. (De 17:16; Sal 20:7; 33:17; Pr 21:31) Foi só em tempos posteriores que os exércitos de Israel empregavam cavalos e carros, assim como faziam os egípcios e outros. (1Rs 4:26; 20:23-25; Êx 14:6, 7; De 11:4) Exércitos estrangeiros às vezes estavam equipados de carros de guerra com foices de ferro, que se projetavam dos eixos. — Jos 17:16; Jz 4:3, 13.

As táticas de guerra mudaram no decorrer dos séculos. Israel, em geral, não se concentrou no desenvolvimento de instrumentos de guerra ofensiva, embora se desse considerável atenção às fortificações. O Rei Uzias, de Judá, é famoso por ter construído "máquinas de guerra, invenção de engenheiros", mas estas eram primariamente para a defesa de Jerusalém. (2Cr 26:14, 15) Especialmente, os exércitos assírios e babilônicos, para poderem atacar as partes mais altas e mais fracas da muralha duma cidade, eram conhecidos pelos seus muros de sítio e seus aterros de sítio. Estes aterros serviam de planos inclinados, pelos quais se levavam para cima torres com aríetes; era destas torres que os arqueiros e os fundibulários lutavam. Ao lado deles havia outros tipos de máquinas de sítio, inclusive gigantescas catapultas para atirar pedras. (2Rs 19:32; Je 32:24; Ez 4:2; Lu 19:43) Ao mesmo tempo, os defensores da cidade tentavam rechaçar o ataque por meio de arqueiros, fundibulários, bem como por soldados que atiravam tições lá de seus muros e torres, e por máquinas que arremessavam projéteis de dentro da cidade. (2Sa 11:21, 24; 2Cr 26:15; 32:5) No ataque a fortificações muradas, uma das primeiras coisas que se tentava fazer era cortar o suprimento de água da cidade, ao passo que a cidade que estava prestes a sofrer um sítio muitas vezes tapava as fontes de água em torno da cidade, para privar os atacantes do seu uso. — 2Cr 32:2-4, 30.

Ao derrotarem o inimigo, os vitoriosos às vezes tapavam as fontes e os mananciais na região, e espalhavam pedras sobre o solo, ocasionalmente lançando sal sobre ele. — Jz 9:45; 2Rs 3:24, 25; veja ARMAS, ARMADURA; FORTIFICAÇÕES.

Jesus Prediz Guerra. Jesus, homem de paz, mencionou que "os que tomarem a espada perecerão pela espada". (Mt 26:52) Ele declarou a Pilatos que, se o seu Reino fosse deste mundo, os seus assistentes teriam lutado para impedir que ele fosse entregue aos judeus. (Jo 18:36) Todavia, ele predisse que Jerusalém, por tê-lo rejeitado como o Mes-sias, com o tempo sofreria sítio e desolação, ocasião em que os "filhos" (habitantes) dela seriam despedaçados contra o chão. — Lu 19:41-44; 21:24.

Jesus, pouco antes da sua morte, declarou profecias que se aplicavam àquela geração e também à época em que começasse a sua presença no poder do Reino: "Ouvireis falar de guerras e relatos de guerras; vede que não fiqueis apavorados. Pois estas coisas têm de acontecer, mas ainda não é o fim. Porque nação se levantará contra nação e reino contra reino." — Mt 24:6, 7; Mr 13:7, 8; Lu 21:9, 10.

Cristo Trava Guerra Como "Rei dos Reis". A Bíblia revela que o ressuscitado Senhor Jesus Cristo, com "toda a autoridade no céu e na terra", que lhe foi concedida pelo seu Pai, travará uma guerra para destruir todos os inimigos de Deus e estabelecer a paz eterna, conforme indica seu título de "Príncipe da Paz". — Mt 28:18; 2Te 1:7-10; Is 9:6.

O apóstolo João teve uma visão de coisas que ocorreriam após a entronização de Cristo no céu. As palavras dos Salmos 2:7, 8; e 110:1, 2, haviam predito que o Filho de Deus seria convidado a 'pedir a Jeová as nações por herança', e que Jeová responderia por enviá-lo para 'subjugar no meio dos seus inimigos'. (He 10:12, 13) A visão de João retratava uma guerra no céu, na qual Miguel, isto é, Jesus Cristo (veja MIGUEL), liderava os exércitos do céu numa guerra contra o Dragão, Satanás, o Diabo. O resultado desta guerra foi o lançamento do Diabo e dos seus anjos para a terra. Esta guerra seguiu-se imediatamente ao 'nascimento do filho varão', que havia de reger as nações com vara de ferro. (Re 12:7-9) Uma voz alta no céu anunciou então: "Agora se realizou a salvação, e o poder, e o reino de nosso Deus, e a autoridade do seu Cristo." Isto deu alívio e alegria aos anjos; mas, pressagiou para a terra dificuldades, inclusive guerras, conforme a declaração prossegue: "Ai da terra e do mar, porque desceu a vós o Diabo, tendo grande ira, sabendo que ele tem um curto período de tempo." — Re 12:10, 12.

Depois de Satanás ter sido lançado para a terra, ele tomou por alvo principal os servos de Deus na terra, os remanescentes da 'semente da mulher', "que observam os mandamentos de Deus e têm a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus". Satanás iniciou contra eles uma guerra que incluía tanto um conflito espiritual, como perseguição real, que resultou até mesmo na morte de alguns. (Re 12:13, 17) Capítulos subsequentes de Revelação, ou Apocalipse (13, 17-19), descrevem os agentes e os instrumentos que Satanás usa contra eles, bem como o resultado vitorioso dos santos de Deus, sob o seu Líder, Jesus Cristo.

"Guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-poderoso." O capítulo 19 de Revelação fornece uma visão da maior guerra de toda a história humana, ultrapassando tudo o que os homens já presenciaram. Antes, na visão, ela é chamada de "a guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-poderoso". Enfileirados contra Jeová e o Senhor Jesus Cristo qual Comandante dos exércitos de Deus, as hostes do céu, encontram-se a simbólica "fera e os reis da terra, e os seus exércitos", ajuntados ao palco de guerra por "expressões inspiradas por demônios". (Re 16:14; 19:19) Nenhum dos servos terrestres de Deus é retratado como participando nesta batalha. Os reis terrestres "batalharão contra o Cordeiro, mas, porque ele é Senhor dos senhores e Rei dos reis, o Cordeiro os vencerá". (Re 17:14; 19:19-21; veja HAR-MAGEDON.) Após esta luta, o próprio Satanás, o Diabo, será amarrado por mil anos, 'para que não mais desencaminhe as nações até que tenham terminado os mil anos'. — Re 20:1-3.

Com o término desta guerra, a terra usufruirá paz por mil anos. O salmo que declara que "[Jeová] faz cessar as guerras até a extremidade da terra. Destroça o arco e retalha a lança; as carroças ele queima no fogo", teve cumprimento inicial quando Deus trouxe paz à terra de Israel por destroçar os instrumentos de guerra dos inimigos. Depois de Cristo derrotar no Har-Magedon os promotores de guerra, as extremidades deste globo terrestre usufruirão plena e satisfatória paz. (Sal 46:8-10) Os favorecidos com a vida eterna serão aqueles que tiverem forjado "das suas espadas relhas de arado, e das suas lanças, podadeiras", e que 'não aprenderem mais a guerra'. "Porque a própria boca de Jeová dos exércitos falou isso." — Is 2:4; Miq 4:3, 4.

Eliminada para sempre a ameaça de guerra. A visão de Revelação prossegue mostrando que, no fim dos mil anos, Satanás, o Diabo, será trazido de volta da sua amarração no abismo e novamente induzirá muitos a virem para travar guerra contra os que permanecem leais a Deus. Mas, não se fará dano algum, porque 'descerá fogo do céu' e devorará esses inimigos, eliminando assim para sempre toda ameaça de guerra. — Re 20:7-10.

Guerra Cristã. Embora o cristão não se empenhe em guerra física contra sangue e carne (Ef 6:12), ainda assim está empenhado numa guerra, numa luta espiritual. O apóstolo Paulo descreve a guerra travada no íntimo do cristão, entre a "lei do pecado" e a "lei de Deus", ou 'a lei da mente' (a mentalidade cristã em harmonia com Deus). — Ro 7:15-25.

Esta guerra do cristão é aflitiva, exigindo o uso de todo esforço para ele sair vencedor. Mas, ele pode confiar na vitória por meio da benignidade imerecida de Deus, por Cristo, e a ajuda do espírito de Deus. (Ro 8:35-39) Jesus disse a respeito desta luta: "Esforçai-vos vigorosamente a entrar pela porta estreita" (Lu 13:24), e o apóstolo Pedro aconselhou: "[Abstende-vos] dos desejos carnais, que são os que travam um combate [ou: "prestam serviço militar" (stra·teú·on·tai)] contra a alma." — 1Pe 2:11, Int; compare isso com Tg 4:1, 2.

Contra espíritos iníquos. Além de travar esta guerra contra a lei do pecado, o cristão tem uma luta contra os demônios, que se aproveitam das tendências da carne para induzir o cristão a pecar. (Ef 6:12) Nesta guerra, os demônios também induzem aqueles que estão sob a sua influência a tentar os cristãos, ou a opor-se a eles e persegui-los, no esforço de fazê-los violar sua integridade a Deus. — 1Co 7:5; 2Co 2:11; 12:7; compare isso com Lu 4:1-13.

Contra falsos ensinos. O apóstolo Paulo também falou duma guerra que ele e seus associados travavam no cumprimento da sua missão como os designados para cuidar da congregação cristã. (2Co 10:3) A congregação em Corinto fora influenciada erroneamente por homens presunçosos, que Paulo chamou de "falsos apóstolos", os quais, por darem indevida atenção a personalidades, haviam causado divisões e seitas na congregação. (2Co 11:13-15) Tornaram-se, virtualmente, seguidores de homens tais como Apolo, Paulo e Cefas. (1Co 1:11, 12) Os membros da congregação perderam o ponto de vista espiritual, de que tais homens eram apenas representantes de Cristo, servindo unidos no mesmo objetivo. Tornaram-se carnais. (1Co 3:1-9) Encaravam os homens na congregação 'segundo o que eram na carne', segundo a sua aparência, suas aptidões naturais, personalidade, e assim por diante, em vez de considerá-los como homens espirituais. Deixaram de reconhecer que o espírito de Deus operava na congregação, e que homens tais como Paulo, Pedro e Apolo faziam suas realizações por meio do espírito de Deus, para a glória Dele.

Portanto, Paulo sentiu-se impelido a escrever-lhes: "Deveras, rogo para que, quando eu estiver presente, não use de ousadia com aquela confiança com que espero tomar medidas firmes contra alguns que nos avaliam como se andássemos segundo o que somos na carne. Pois, embora andemos na carne, não travamos combate segundo o que somos na carne. Porque as armas de nosso combate não são carnais, mas poderosas em Deus para demolir as coisas fortemente entrincheiradas. Pois estamos demolindo raciocínios e toda coisa altiva levantada contra o conhecimento de Deus; e trazemos todo pensamento ao cativeiro, para fazê-lo obediente ao Cristo." — 2Co 10:2-5.

Paulo escreveu a Timóteo, a quem deixara em Éfeso para cuidar da congregação ali: "Desta ordem é que te encarrego, filho, Timóteo, de acordo com as predições que conduziram diretamente a ti, para que, por meio delas, possas prosseguir travando o bom combate, mantendo a fé e uma boa consciência." (1Ti 1:18, 19) Timóteo não somente se confrontava com conflitos por causa da carne pecaminosa e por causa da oposição dos inimigos da verdade, mas tinha de travar também uma guerra contra a infiltração de doutrinas falsas e daqueles que corromperiam a congregação. (1Ti 1:3-7; 4:6, 11-16) As ações dele fortaleceriam a congregação contra a apostasia, que Paulo sabia havia de ocorrer depois que os apóstolos desaparecessem do cenário. (2Ti 4:3-5) De modo que Timóteo tinha de travar uma verdadeira luta.

Paulo pôde dizer a Timóteo: "Tenho travado a luta excelente, tenho corrido até o fim da carreira, tenho observado a fé." (2Ti 4:7) Paulo mantivera sua fidelidade a Jeová e a Jesus Cristo por conduta correta e serviço em face de oposição, sofrimento e perseguição. (2Co 11:23-28) Desincumbira-se adicionalmente da responsabilidade do seu cargo como apóstolo do Senhor Jesus Cristo, travando a guerra para manter a congregação cristã pura e imaculada, como virgem casta, e como "coluna e amparo da verdade". — 1Ti 3:15; 1Co 4:1, 2; 2Co 11:2, 29; compare isso com 2Ti 2:3, 4.

Apoio material de Deus aos cristãos. Na guerra do cristão, Deus o encara como Seu soldado, e, portanto, provê-o das necessárias coisas materiais. O apóstolo argumenta com respeito à autoridade daquele que serve para os outros como ministro: "Quem é que jamais serve como soldado às suas próprias custas?" — 1Co 9:7.

Os Cristãos e as Guerras das Nações. Os cristãos sempre mantiveram uma estrita neutralidade para com a guerra carnal entre nações, grupos ou facções de qualquer tipo. (Jo 18:36; Ef 6:12) Para conhecer exemplos da atitude dos primitivos cristãos neste respeito, veja EXÉRCITO (Os Conhecidos Como Primitivos Cristãos).

Outros Usos. No cântico de Baraque e Débora, após a vitória sobre o exército de Jabim, rei de Canaã, recorda-se uma circunstância que estabelece um princípio: "[Os de Israel] passaram a escolher novos deuses. Foi então que houve guerra nos portões." (Jz 5:8) Assim que haviam abandonado a Jeová em troca da adoração falsa, surgiram dificuldades, o inimigo os assediando junto aos próprios portões das suas cidades. Isto está em harmonia com a declaração do salmista: "A menos que o próprio Jeová guarde a cidade, é fútil que o guarda se mantenha alerta." — Sal 127:1.

Em Eclesiastes 8:8, Salomão escreveu: "Não há homem que tenha poder sobre o espírito para reprimir o espírito; . . . nem há qualquer dispensa na guerra." No dia da sua morte, o moribundo não pode reprimir o espírito, ou a força de vida, e impedi-lo de retornar a Deus, o Dador e Fonte dele, a fim de viver mais tempo. Os humanos morredouros não podem controlar o dia da morte e impedir que lhes sobrevenha. Por nenhum esforço humano podem ser dispensados da guerra que o inimigo Morte trava contra toda a humanidade, sem exceção. O homem pecaminoso não pode fazer com que outro homem pecaminoso o substitua na morte, para assim ficar livre da morte. (Sal 49:6-9) Apenas por meio da benignidade imerecida de Jeová, mediante Jesus Cristo, é possível obter alívio. "Assim como o pecado reinou com a morte, do mesmo modo também a benignidade imerecida [reine] por intermédio da justiça, visando a vida eterna por intermédio de Jesus Cristo, nosso Senhor." — Ro 5:21.

GUEUEL [possivelmente: Eminência de Deus]. Filho de Maqui, da tribo de Gade; um dos 12 maiorais enviados por Moisés do ermo de Parã para espiar a terra de Canaã. — Núm 13:2, 3, 15, 16.

GUÍMEL [ג]. Terceira letra no alfabeto hebraico. É a letra mais branda das palatais, além de yohdh [י; iode], e em geral, quando traz um sinal (daghesh lene), corresponde em português ao "g" não seguido por "e" ou "i"; mas, sem este sinal, é pronunciado de forma mais branda, mais na garganta. (Veja HEBRAICO.) No hebraico, é a primeira letra na palavra inicial em cada um dos oito versos do Salmo 119:17-24.

GULOTE-MAIM [Bacias (Tigelas) de Águas]. Lugar solicitado pela filha de Calebe na ocasião do seu casamento com Otniel. (Jos 15:17-19; Jz 1:13-15) Muitas versões vertem Gul·lóth má·yim como "fontes de água", ao passo que "Gul·lóth Alta e Gul·lóth Baixa" são geralmente traduzidas por 'fontes superiores e fontes inferiores'. (Veja Al, ALA, BJ, CBC). Deve-se notar, porém, que a filha de Calebe, evidentemente, não pedia simplesmente "fontes" ao seu pai. Ela desejava "um campo", segundo Josué 15:18. De modo que Gul·lóth má·yim é às vezes vertido "terra bem regada". (Kx; veja também MC.) Alguns peritos preferem deixar o nome sem tradução, usando simplesmente as transliterações "Gullath-maim" (AT) ou "Gulote-Maim". (NM) A localização exata de Gulote-Maim não é conhecida. — Veja DEBIR N.º 2.

GUNI.

1. Segundo filho mencionado de Naftali, incluído nos da casa de Jacó no Egito. (Gên 46:24, 26; 1Cr 7:13) Ele fundou a família dos gunitas na tribo de Naftali. — Núm 26:48.

2. Antepassado de um destacado gadita. — 1Cr 5:11, 15.

GUNITAS. Família descendente de Guni, filho de Naftali. — Núm 26:48; Gên 46:24.

GUR. Acazias, rei de Judá, seguiu de carro "subindo a Gur, que está junto a Ibleão", onde foi abatido às ordens de Jeú. (2Rs 9:27) Desconhece-se agora a localização de Gur.

Ser Acazias ferido em Gur não é mencionado no relato paralelo da sua morte, em 2 Crônicas 22:8, 9, mas parece que os dois relatos se complementam e têm de ser usados juntos para apresentar o quadro inteiro dos acontecimentos. — Veja ACAZIAS N.º 2.

GURBAAL. Lugar habitado por árabes, no tempo do Rei Uzias. (2Cr 26:3, 7) Desconhece-se sua localização exata.

GUSANO [hebr.: rim·máh; gr.: skó·lex]. O estágio larval ou vermiforme dum inseto logo depois de sair do ovo. O termo "gusano" é aplicado especialmente à larva da mosca, que é encontrada em matéria vegetal ou animal em decomposição, e em tecidos vivos. A matéria viva ou putrefata fornece o calor necessário para a incubação dos ovos e para a nutrição dos gusanos.

O gusano tem um corpo desprovido de pernas, fino e segmentado, não parecendo ter cabeça. Todavia, com respeito à cabeça, The Smithsonian Series (A Série Smithsoniana; Vol. 5, p. 343) declara: "A extremidade afilada do corpo é a extremidade da cabeça, mas a verdadeira cabeça do gusano é inteiramente retirada dentro do corpo. Da abertura onde a cabeça desapareceu, a qual serve ao gusano de boca, estendem-se dois ganchos semelhantes a garras, e estes ganchos são tanto maxilas como órgãos agarradores do gusano."

As Escrituras aludem ao fato de que os gusanos subsistem de matéria orgânica morta. (Jó 7:5; 17:14; 21:26; 24:20; Is 14:11) O maná milagroso, se guardado pelos israelitas até a manhã seguinte, exalava um cheiro repulsivo e criava vermes ou gusanos, exceto o maná guardado no sexto dia para o sábado. (Êx 16:20, 24) Ao mencionar o "gusano" com relação à Geena, Jesus evidentemente aludiu ao depósito de lixo fora da cidade de Jerusalém, onde o fogo consumia o lixo e onde os vermes ou gusanos subsistiam da matéria em decomposição perto, mas não dentro do fogo. — Mr 9:48; compare isso com Is 66:24; veja GEENA.

A palavra "gusano" foi usada por Bildade para denotar alguém insignificante. — Jó 25:6.

H

HÃ. Cidade dos zuzins ao L do Jordão. (Gên 14:5) O rei de Elão junto com mais três reis infligiram a esta cidade uma derrota, na época em que esmagavam a rebelião das cidades do Distrito na região do Mar Morto. (Gên 14:1-12) A ordem em que Hã é alistada em Gênesis 14:5, 6, parece situá-la ao S de Asterote-Carnaim e ao N de Savé-Quiriataim. O nome da cidade é preservado no da atual aldeia de Ham no uádi er-Rejeileh (também chamado uádi Ham), a uns 6 km ao SSO de Irbid, em ʽAjlun, e a uns 30 km ao SE da extremidade S do mar da Galiléia. A própria cidade antiga parece ser o tel (Tell Ham) que fica próximo.

HAASTARI [O Aastarita]. Descendente de Judá; filho de Assur. — 1Cr 4:1, 5, 6.

HABACUQUE [Abraço Ardente]. Profeta hebreu de Judá e escritor do livro bíblico que leva seu nome. (Hab 1:1; 3:1) Com base na nota no fim do livro ("Ao regente, nos meus instrumentos de cordas") e da endecha no capítulo 3, deduziu-se que Habacuque era músico levita do templo. Mas, as palavras que seguem a Habacuque 3:19 não dão certeza disso, e endechas eram também entoadas por outros que não eram levitas. (2Sa 1:17, 18) Embora haja diversas tradições a respeito de Habacuque, estas não são de confiança, e as próprias Escrituras não fornecem nenhuma informação a respeito do parentesco, da tribo, das circunstâncias da vida ou da morte do profeta. A evidência contida no livro de Habacuque parece indicar que ele profetizou cedo no reinado de Jeoiaquim, possivelmente antes de Nabucodonosor derrotar o exército egípcio em Carquemis, em 625 AEC.

HABACUQUE, LIVRO DE. Livro das Escrituras Hebraicas, situado no oitavo lugar entre os chamados profetas menores nos textos hebraico e da Septuaginta, bem como nas Bíblias comuns em português. Consiste em duas partes: (1) Um diálogo entre o escritor e Jeová (caps. 1, 2); (2) uma oração em endechas. — Cap. 3.

Escritor. O escritor é identificado no próprio livro. A composição de ambas as partes é atribuída a "Habacuque, o profeta". — 1:1; 3:1; veja HABACUQUE.

Canonicidade. A canonicidade do livro de Habacuque é confirmada por antigos catálogos das Escrituras Hebraicas. Embora não o mencionem por nome, o livro evidentemente era abrangido pelas referências deles aos 'doze Profetas Menores', pois, de outro modo, o número 12 ficaria incompleto. A canonicidade do livro inquestionavelmente é apoiada por citações dele nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Embora Paulo não se referisse a Habacuque por nome, ele citou Habacuque 1:5 (LXX) quando falou a judeus sem fé. (At 13:40, 41) Citou Habacuque 2:4 ("Mas, quanto ao justo, continuará a viver pela sua fidelidade") ao incentivar os cristãos a demonstrarem fé. — Ro 1:16, 17; Gál 3:11; He 10:38, 39.

Entre os Rolos do Mar Morto encontra-se um manuscrito de Habacuque (caps. 1, 2) num texto hebraico pré-massorético, com um comentário acompanhante. É digno de nota que neste texto se escreveu o nome de Jeová com caracteres do hebraico antigo, ao passo que, no comentário, o nome divino é evitado, e, em lugar dele, se usa a palavra hebraica 'El (que significa "Deus").

Os peritos acreditam que este rolo foi escrito perto do fim do primeiro século AEC. Isto o torna o manuscrito hebraico mais antigo existente do livro de Habacuque. Este manuscrito, em Habacuque 1:6, reza "caldeus", confirmando assim a exatidão do texto massorético em mostrar que Jeová suscitaria os caldeus (babilônios) como seus agentes.

Data e Cenário. A declaração: "Jeová está no seu santo templo" (Hab 2:20) e a nota que segue Habacuque 3:19 ("Ao regente, nos meus instrumentos de cordas") indicam que Habacuque profetizou antes de o templo construído por Salomão em Jerusalém ser destruído em 607 AEC. Também, a declaração de Jeová: "Eis que suscito os caldeus" (1:6), e o teor geral da profecia, mostram que os caldeus, ou babilônios, ainda não haviam desolado Jerusalém. Mas, Habacuque 1:17 talvez sugira que já haviam começado a derrubar algumas nações. Durante o reinado do bom Rei Josias, de Judá (659-629 AEC), os caldeus e os medos tomaram Nínive (em 632 AEC), e Babilônia estava então em vias de se tornar potência mundial. — Na 3:7.

Há alguns que, concordando com a tradição rabínica, sustentam que Habacuque profetizou mais cedo, durante o reinado do Rei Manassés, de Judá. Acreditam ter ele sido um dos profetas mencionados ou aludidos em 2 Reis 21:10 e 2 Crônicas 33:10. Sustentam que os babilônios não constituíam ainda ameaça, fato que tornava a profecia de Habacuque menos crível para os de Judá. — Veja Hab 1:5, 6.

Por outro lado, na parte inicial do reinado de Jeoiaquim, Judá estava sob a esfera de influência do Egito (2Rs 23:34, 35), e esta também podia ter sido uma época em que suscitar Deus os caldeus para punir os habitantes refratários de Judá seria para

DESTAQUES DE HABACUQUE

Resposta à pergunta: Executará Deus os iníquos?

Evidentemente, escrito por volta de 628 AEC, quando os caldeus passaram a ter destaque, mas antes de Jeoiaquim se tornar seu vassalo.

Habacuque clama por ajuda, perguntando até quando Deus permitirá que os iníquos continuem. (1:1–2:1)

Quando Jeová responde que Ele suscitará os caldeus como Seu instrumento de punição, Habacuque não consegue entender como o Santo podia pensar em um agente tão traiçoeiro, um que transforma sua máquina de guerra num deus, cuja rede de arrasto apanha homens quais peixes, e que impiedosamente mata povos.

O profeta aguarda a resposta de Jeová, reconhecendo que ele merece uma repreensão.

Jeová responde que ele tem um tempo designado, profere ai sobre o instrumento caldeu. (2:2-20)

Jeová garante que, embora possa haver uma aparente demora, a visão profética é "para o tempo designado e prossegue arfando até o fim", avidamente avançando para o seu cumprimento.

Pronúncias de ais indicam que o instrumento caldeu não ficaria sem punição por saquear outras nações, decepar muitos povos, construir cidades mediante derramamento de sangue, fazer outros beber o copo de vergonhosa derrota e por empenhar-se em idolatria.

O profeta apela para Jeová agir e ainda assim mostrar misericórdia durante o vindouro dia de aflição. (3:1-19)

Relembrando manifestações passadas do poder de Jeová, o profeta é tomado de temor e tremor, mas está decidido a esperar tranquilamente o dia da aflição, rejubilando com o Deus da sua salvação.

Mesmo que os próprios meios de sustentar a vida fracassem, Habacuque decide rejubilar com Jeová qual Deus de salvação, Aquele que o fortalece.

eles 'uma atividade que não acreditariam, embora fosse relatada'. (Hab 1:5, 6) O rei babilônio Nabucodonosor derrotou Faraó Neco em Carquemis, em 625 AEC, no quarto ano do governo do Rei Jeoiaquim. (Jer 46:2) De modo que Habacuque talvez profetizasse e registrasse a profecia antes daquele evento, possivelmente completando a escrita por volta de 628 AEC, em Judá. O uso do tempo futuro a respeito da ameaça caldeia evidentemente indica uma data anterior à vassalagem de Jeoiaquim a Babilônia (620-618 AEC). — 2Rs 24:1.

Estilo. O estilo de escrita é tanto vigoroso como comovente. Usam-se ilustrações e comparações vívidas. (Hab 1:8, 11, 14, 15; 2:5, 11, 14, 16, 17; 3:6, 8-11) Comentando o estilo de Habacuque, S. R. Driver disse: "A capacidade literária de Habacuque é considerável. Embora seu livro seja breve, é repleto de vigor; suas descrições são vívidas e vigorosas; tanto suas ideias como sua expressão são igualmente poéticas." Essas qualidades, naturalmente, se devem em primeiro lugar à inspiração divina.

O livro de Habacuque enfatiza a supremacia de Jeová sobre todas as nações (Hab 2:20; 3:6, 12), salientando a Sua soberania universal. Enfatiza também o fato de que os justos vivem pela fé. (2:4) Gera confiança em Jeová, mostrando que Ele não morre (1:12), que trilha as nações justificadamente, e que sai para a salvação do seu povo. (3:12, 13) Mostra-se que Jeová é o Deus de Salvação e a Fonte de energia vital para aqueles que exultam nele. — 3:18, 19.

HABAÍAS [Jah Ocultou]. Sacerdote cujos descendentes retornaram do exílio em Babilônia. Mas, visto que seus "filhos" não conseguiram determinar sua genealogia, foram excluídos do sacerdócio e não se lhes permitiu "comer das coisas santíssimas até que um sacerdote se pusesse de pé com Urim e Tumim". — Esd 2:1, 2, 61-63; Ne 7:63-65.

HABAZINIAS. Descendente de Jonadabe, filho de Recabe. "Jaazanias, filho de Jeremias, filho de Habazinias", foi um dos recabitas testados pelo profeta Jeremias nos dias do Rei Jeoiaquim. — Je 35:1-6.

HABOR. Cidade ou distrito para o qual o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III exilou muitos israelitas do reino de dez tribos. (1Cr 5:26) Alguns peritos associaram esta Habor com Abhar, uma cidade situada junto ao rio Qezel Owzan, no NO do Irã, a uns 210 km ao O de Teerã. Em 2 Reis 17:6 e 18:11, alguns preferem a versão "Habor, rio de Gozã" (CBC, IBB), e eles sugerem a identificação de Habor com um tributário do Eufrates, o rio Cabur do SE da Turquia e do NE da Síria. Todavia, de acordo com 1 Crônicas 5:26, esta frase pode, em vez disso, ser vertida por "Habor, junto ao rio Gozã". — NM, Al; veja Gozã.

HACALIAS [possivelmente: Espera por Jah; Fica na Expectativa de Jah]. Pai do governador Neemias. — Ne 1:1; 10:1.

HACATÃ [O Pequeno]. Pai de Joanã, da família de Asgade, o qual, acompanhado por 110 varões, retornou de Babilônia junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:1, 12.

HACMONI. Veja Acmoni.

HACMONITA. Veja Acmoni.

HACOZ [O Espinho]. Sacerdote arônico e cabeça da casa paterna que no tempo de Davi foi constituída a 7.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais. — 1Cr 24:3-7, 10.

Depois de retornar de Babilônia, em 537 AEC, "filhos de Hacoz" estavam entre os desqualificados para o sacerdócio, por não conseguirem determinar sua genealogia. Estavam entre os proibidos de comer "das coisas santíssimas até que um sacerdote se pusesse de pé com Urim e Tumim". (Esd 2:61-63; Ne 7:63-65) Um descendente de Hacoz é especificamente mencionado como participando na reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:21.

HACUFA. Cabeça duma família de escravos netineus do templo. "Os filhos de Hacufa" estão alistados entre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 43, 51; Ne 7:6, 46, 53.

HADADE.

1. Um dos 12 filhos de Ismael, filho de Abraão e Agar, sua concubina. — Gên 25:12-15; 1Cr 1:28-30.

2. Sucessor no reinado de Edom, depois da morte de Husão. "Hadade, filho de Bedade, que derrotou os midianitas no campo de Moabe", evidentemente governou desde a cidade de Avite. — Gên 36:31, 35, 36; 1Cr 1:46, 47.

3. Outro rei de Edom; marido de Meetabel. Hadade sucedeu a Baal-Hanã no reinado, e "o nome de sua cidade era Pau". (1Cr 1:43, 50, 51) Ele é chamado de Hadar em Gênesis 36:39, o que talvez se deva a um erro de escriba, visto que as letras hebraicas correspondentes a "r" (ר) e a "d" (ד) são bem similares.

4. Edomita da descendência real e perturbador de Israel durante o reinado de Salomão. Enquanto ainda menino, Hadade, junto com alguns dos servos de seu pai, fugiu para o Egito pelo caminho de Parã, a fim de escapar da matança, por Joabe, de todos os varões de Edom. No Egito, Hadade e os com ele foram recebidos bondosamente, dando-lhe Faraó uma casa, bem como alimentos e terra, e, mais tarde, até lhe deu sua própria cunhada por esposa. Com esta mulher, Hadade teve um filho chamado Genubate, que vivia na própria casa de Faraó entre os filhos deste. Ao saber da morte do Rei Davi e de Joabe, Hadade retornou a Edom e mostrou ser opositor de Salomão. — 1Rs 11:14-22, 25.

5. Hadade (Adade em acadiano) é considerado a deidade principal da antiga Síria e em geral é identificado com Rimom. O nome Hadade aparece como componente dos nomes de certos reis sírios, tais como Ben-Hadade (1Rs 15:18) e Hadadezer (1Rs 11:23), e ocorre também no nome Hadadrimom. — Za 12:11; veja HADADRIMOM.

HADADEZER [Hadade É Ajudador]. Filho de Reobe e rei de Zobá, reino sírio (arameu) que se pensa ter estado situado ao N de Damasco (2Sa 8:3, 5; 1Rs 11:23; 1Cr 18:3, 5) e que incluía vassalos. (2Sa 10:19) Antes de ser derrotado pelo Rei Davi, Hadadezer havia travado guerra contra Toi (Toú), rei de Hamate. — 2Sa 8:9, 10; 1Cr 18:9, 10.

Depois de os sírios, contratados pelos amonitas para lutar contra Davi, terem sido derrotados, Hadadezer reforçou suas forças por recrutar mais sírios da região do Eufrates. (2Sa 10:6, 15, 16; 1Cr 19:16) Talvez haja alusão a isso em 2 Samuel 8:3 (veja 1Cr 18:3), onde a referência parece indicar que Hadadezer procurava novamente exercer controle junto ao rio Eufrates. Sobre isto, o Commentary (Comentário) de Cook observa que o hebraico significa literalmente "fazer sua mão voltar", e declara: "A força exata da metáfora deve . . . ser decidida pelo contexto. Se, como é mais provável, este versículo relaciona-se às circunstâncias mais plenamente pormenorizadas [em 2Sa 10:15-19], o sentido da frase aqui será quando ele (Hadadezer) foi renovar seu ataque (a Israel), ou, para recrutar sua força contra Israel, junto ao rio Eufrates."

Em Helão, as forças de Hadadezer, sob o comando de Sobaque (Sofaque), enfrentaram as de Davi e foram derrotadas. Logo depois disso, os vassalos de Hadadezer fizeram paz com Israel. (2Sa 10:17-19; 1Cr 19:17-19) No conflito, foram mortos 40.000 cavaleiros sírios. Talvez, a fim de escapar através de terreno escarpado, estes cavaleiros tivessem desmontado e assim fossem mortos como soldados de infantaria. Isto explicaria por que são chamados de "cavaleiros" em 2 Samuel 10:18 e de "homens a pé" em 1 Crônicas 19:18. A diferença no número de sírios, condutores de carros, mortos na batalha, usualmente é atribuída a um erro de escriba, considerando-se correto o número menor de 700 condutores de carros.

Davi tomou também muito cobre de Betá (evidentemente também chamada de Tibate) e de Berotai (talvez a mesma que Cum), duas cidades do domínio de Hadadezer, e trouxe para Jerusalém os escudos de ouro pertencentes aos servos de Hadadezer, provavelmente os reis vassalos. (2Sa 8:7, 8; 1Cr 18:7, 8; compare isso com 2Sa 10:19.) Davi capturou também muitos dos cavalos, cavaleiros, carros e soldados de infantaria de Hadadezer. A diferença no número destes, em 2 Samuel 8:4 e 1 Crônicas 18:4, pode ter surgido por erro de escriba. Na Septuaginta grega, ambas as passagens indicam 1.000 carros e 7.000 cavaleiros capturados, de modo que 1 Crônicas 18:4 talvez preserve a versão original.

No entanto, pode-se notar que aquilo que se costuma encarar como erros de escriba, no relato do conflito de Davi com Hadadezer, talvez simplesmente reflita outros aspectos da guerra ou modos de cálculo diferentes.

HADADRIMOM. Evidentemente, um lugar no vale plano de Megido. (Za 12:11) Hadadrimom é frequentemente identificado com Rummana, um lugar a uns 7 km ao SSE de Megido.

O 'grande lamento' em Hadadrimom, mencionado na profecia de Zacarias, talvez aluda ao lamento por causa do Rei Josias, morto em batalha em Megido. (2Rs 23:29; 2Cr 35:24, 25) Mas, alguns associam este lamento a cerimônias rituais semelhantes às feitas a favor do falso deus Tamuz (veja Ez 8:14) e acham que "Hadadrimom" seja o nome composto de um deus. Isto é pouco provável, especialmente visto que as palavras de Jeová, por meio de Zacarias, fazem parte duma profecia a respeito do Messias. Dificilmente poderiam cerimônias idólatras de choro servir de ilustração profética; mas o lamento por um fiel rei de Judá serviria bem para isso. — Compare Jo 19:37 e Re 1:7 com Za 12:10-14.

HADAR. Sucessor no reinado de Edom após a morte de Beel-Hanã; também chamado Hadade. — Gên 36:31, 39; 1Cr 1:43, 50, 51; veja HADADE N.º 3.

HADASA [Nova]. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:33, 37) Desconhece-se hoje sua antiga localização exata.

HADASSA [Murta]. Prima de Mordecai, que substituiu a rainha persa Vasti; mais conhecida pelo seu nome persa Ester. — Est 2:7; veja ESTER.

HADES. Esta é a transliteração comum para o português da palavra grega correspondente, haí·des. Talvez signifique "o lugar não visto". A palavra "Hades", ao todo, ocorre dez vezes nos mais antigos manuscritos das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. — Mt 11:23; 16:18; Lu 10:15; 16:23; At 2:27, 31; Re 1:18; 6:8; 20:13, 14.

A versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, traduz haí·des por "inferno" nos primeiros três e nos últimos quatro destes textos. Nos outros três o verte por "Hades". Muitas traduções usam "Hades" em vez de "inferno". — Veja, por exemplo, a versão Almeida publicada pela Imprensa Bíblica Brasileira.

A tradução Septuaginta grega das Escrituras Hebraicas (de Gênesis a Malaquias) usa a palavra "Hades" 73 vezes, empregando-a 60 vezes para traduzir a palavra hebraica she'óhl, comumente vertida "Seol". Lucas, o divinamente inspirado escritor de Atos, mostra definitivamente que Hades é o equivalente grego de Seol, ao traduzir a citação que Pedro fez do Salmo 16:10. (At 2:27) De modo inverso, nove modernas traduções hebraicas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs usam a palavra "Seol" para traduzir Hades em Revelação (Apocalipse) 20:13, 14; e a tradução siríaca usa a palavra aparentada Shiul.

Em todos os casos, com exceção de dois, em que a palavra Hades é usada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, ela se relaciona com a morte, quer no próprio versículo, quer no contexto imediato; os outros dois casos são considerados no próximo parágrafo. Hades não se refere a um único sepulcro (gr.: tá·fos), nem a um único túmulo (gr.: mné·ma), nem a um único túmulo memorial (gr.: mne·mei·on), mas à sepultura comum da humanidade, onde os mortos e enterrados não são vistos. Significa assim o mesmo que a correspondente palavra "Seol", e um exame de seu uso em todas as suas dez ocorrências confirma este fato. — Veja SEOL; SEPULTURA, SEPULCRO.

Na primeira ocorrência da palavra, em Mateus 11:23, Jesus Cristo, censurando Cafarnaum por sua descrença, usa Hades para representar a profundidade do rebaixamento a que Cafarnaum chegaria, em contraste com a altura do céu à qual ela tinha se exaltado por causa do ministério Jesus ali. Um texto correspondente é encontrado em Lucas 10:15. Note a maneira similar em que Seol é usado em Jó 11:7, 8.

Livrados Jesus e a Congregação. Jesus disse a respeito da congregação cristã, em Mateus 16:18; que "os portões do Hades ["poderes da morte", RS] não a vencerão". De modo similar, o Rei Ezequias, às portas da morte, disse: "No meio dos meus dias vou descer aos portões do Seol." (Is 38:10) Portanto, torna-se evidente que a promessa de Jesus, de uma vitória sobre o Hades, significa que os "portões" deste se abrirão para soltar os mortos por meio duma ressurreição, assim como se deu no caso do próprio Cristo Jesus.

Visto que Hades se refere à sepultura comum da humanidade, Jesus entrou pelos "portões do Hades" quando foi sepultado por José de Arimateia. Em Pentecostes de 33 EC, Pedro disse a respeito de Cristo: "Ele nem foi abandonado no Hades, nem viu a sua carne a corrupção. A este Jesus, Deus ressuscitou, fato de que todos nós somos testemunhas." (At 2:25-27, 29-32; Sal 16:10) Embora "os portões do Hades" (Mt 16:18) ainda prendessem Davi no seu domínio, nos dias de Pedro (At 2:29), elas se abriram para Cristo Jesus quando seu Pai o ressuscitou do Hades. Desde então, pelo poder da ressurreição que lhe foi dado (Jo 5:21-30), Jesus está de posse das "chaves da morte e do Hades". — Re 1:17, 18.

É evidente que o Hades bíblico não é o lugar imaginário que os antigos gregos não cristãos descreviam nas suas mitologias como "região escura, sem sol, dentro da terra", pois não havia ressurreição de tal mundo subterrâneo mitológico.

Uso Ilustrativo. Em Revelação 6:8, o Hades é figuradamente retratado como seguindo de perto o cavaleiro no cavalo descorado, a Morte personificada, para receber as vítimas dos mortíferos instrumentos: guerra, fome, pragas e feras.

O mar (que às vezes serve como sepultura aquosa para alguns) é mencionado junto com o Hades (a sepultura terrestre comum), com o fim de enfatizar a abrangência de todos esses mortos, quando Revelação 20:13, 14, diz que o mar, a morte e o Hades hão de entregar ou ser esvaziados dos mortos neles. Depois, a morte e o Hades (mas não o mar) são lançados no "lago de fogo", "a segunda morte". Eles assim figuradamente 'extinguem-se', e isto significa o fim do Hades (Seol), a sepultura comum da humanidade, bem como da morte herdada por meio de Adão.

O texto restante em que o Hades é usado encontra-se em Lucas 16:22-26, no relato sobre "o rico" e "Lázaro". A linguagem usada em todo o relato é claramente em forma de parábola e não pode ser tomada literalmente, em vista de todos os textos acima. Note, porém, que "o rico" da parábola é mencionado como "enterrado" no Hades, o que fornece evidência adicional de que o Hades refere-se à sepultura comum da humanidade. — Veja GEENA; TÁRTARO.

HADIDE. Cidade ancestral de certos benjamitas que retornaram do exílio babilônico (Esd 2:1, 2, 33; Ne 7:6, 7, 37; 11:31, 34), a qual costuma ser identificada com el-Haditheh (Tel Hadid), uma abandonada aldeia árabe a uns 5 km ao ENE de Lode (Lida). Costuma-se pensar que Hadide seja a "Huditi" mencionada na Lista de Karnak, de Tutmés III, e a "Adida" no livro apócrifo de Primeiro Macabeus (12:38; 13:13, BJ), descrita ali como situada na Sefelá sobranceira à planície costeira.

HADLAI [Cessante]. Pai do Amasa que era um dos cabeças dos filhos de Efraim nos dias do Rei Peca, de Israel, e do Rei Acaz, de Judá. — 2Cr 28:6, 12, 16.

HADORÃO.

1. Filho de Joctã e descendente de Sem, alistado entre os fundadores de famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:21, 25-27, 32) Esta família se estabeleceu na Arábia, possivelmente no Iêmen.

2. Filho do Rei Toú, de Hamate. Hadorão foi enviado pelo seu pai a Davi com congratulações e com presentes para marcar a vitória de Israel sobre o rei de Zobá. (1Cr 18:9-11) Ele é chamado de Jorão em 2 Samuel 8:10.

3. Superintendente dos recrutados para trabalhos forçados sob os reis Davi, Salomão e Roboão. Enviado por Roboão às rebeldes tribos setentrionais, Hadorão ("Adorão") foi apedrejado até morrer. (2Cr 10:18) Ele é chamado de Adorão em 1 Reis 12:18 e 2 Samuel 20:24, e de Adonirão em 1 Reis 4:6 e 5:14.

HADRAQUE. Uma terra contra a qual Jeová fez uma pronúncia por meio do seu profeta Zacarias. Esta profecia, feita provavelmente em 518 AEC, mostrava que Hadraque tinha incorrido no desagrado de Jeová. É mencionada em associação com diversas das cidades ao redor de Israel, tais como Damasco, Hamate, Tiro, Sídon, e as cidades filisteias de Ascalom, Gaza, Ecrom e Asdode. — Za 9:1-8.

Hadraque talvez fosse uma cidade-estado que exercia controle sobre a região em torno dela. Acredita-se tratar-se da Hatarikka, das inscrições assírias, identificada com o morro de Tell Afis, a uns 45 km ao SO de Alepo. O rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III alista Hatarikka entre os "19 distritos pertencentes a Hamate". — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282, 283.

HA-ELEFE [O Boi; A Vaca]. Cidade de Benjamim, cuja localização se desconhece atualmente. (Jos 18:21, 28) Alguns peritos acham que Ha-Elefe talvez fizesse realmente parte do nome da cidade precedente, "Zela". No entanto, os que ligam "Zela" com "Ha-Elefe" reduzem assim o número das cidades para 13, e isto não concorda com a menção de 14 cidades pela Bíblia.

HAFARAIM [Lugar de Escavações]. Lugar no termo territorial da tribo de Issacar. (Jos 19:17-19) Não pode ser identificado com certeza. Todavia, a maioria dos peritos situam-no provisoriamente em et-Taiyiba, a uns 12 km ao NO de Bete-Seã. Hafaraim aparece também na lista das cidades palestinas conquistadas pelo Rei Sisaque, do Egito.

HAGABA [Gafanhoto]. Antepassado duma família de escravos netineus do templo. "Os filhos de Hagaba" estavam entre os que retornaram em 537 AEC do exílio em Babilônia. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 45; Ne 7:48.

HAGABE [Gafanhoto]. Antepassado duma família de escravos netineus do templo. "Os filhos de Hagabe" estavam entre os que retornaram com Zorobabel em 537 AEC do exílio em Babilônia. (Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 46) O nome Hagabe, porém, não aparece na lista paralela em Neemias 7:48.

HAGI [[Nascido Numa] Festividade]. Segundo filho mencionado de Gade; neto de Jacó e cabeça ancestral dos hagitas. — Gên 46:8, 16; Núm 26:4, 15.

HAGIAS [Festividade de Jah; ou: Jah É Minha Festividade]. Filho de Simei; levita da família de Merari. — 1Cr 6:16, 29, 30.

HAGITAS. Veja HAGI.

HAGITE [[Nascida Numa] Festividade]. Uma esposa de Davi e mãe de Adonias; o filho dela tramou apossar-se do reinado sobre Israel. — 2Sa 3:2, 4; 1Rs 1:5, 11; 1Cr 3:1, 2.

HAGRI [possivelmente, De (Pertencente a) Agar]. Pai de Mibar, um dos poderosos de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 38.

HALA. Lugar para o qual monarcas assírios transportaram israelitas cativos. (2Rs 17:6; 18:11; 1Cr 5:26) Certos peritos acreditam que Obadias 20 talvez devesse rezar "exilados em Hala", em vez de "exilados desta ["exército", Al; "força", Ro, Yg; "hoste", AS, KJ] escarpa". (NM) Embora se tenham sugerido diversas identificações, a localização exata de Hala permanece desconhecida. Alguns a associam com os Hallahu mencionados em textos acadianos.

HALAQUE, MONTE [Monte Liso]. Monte que marca o limite geográfico meridional da conquista da Terra da Promessa por Israel sob a liderança de Josué. (Jos 11:16, 17; 12:7) Halaque, em geral, é identificado com Jebel Halaq (Har He-Halaq), a última das elevações ocidentais palestinas na estrada que leva de Berseba ao Arabá. A serra que começa com Jebel Halaq divide os pastos ao L do deserto arenoso ao O. Se esta identificação for correta, então a descrição bíblica de Halaque, como 'subindo' ou 'se elevando' até Seir talvez signifique que a encosta larga deste monte, do SO até o NE, dá para Seir.

HALEL. Cântico de louvor a Jeová. Os Salmos 113 a 118 constituem o que nos escritos judaicos é conhecido como "Halel Egípcio". Segundo a Míxena, este Halel era cantado no templo e nas sinagogas por ocasião da Páscoa (Pesahim 10:5-7) e das festividades de Pentecostes, Barracas e Dedicação (Sukkah 4:8; Ta'anit 4:5). Na celebração da Páscoa no lar, recitava-se a primeira parte deste Halel (quer o Salmo 113 [Segundo a Escola de Shamai], quer os Salmos 113 e 114 [Escola de Hillel]) depois de se servir o segundo copo de vinho e se ter explicado a significância da Páscoa. O Halel era levado a término com o quarto copo de vinho. O "Grande Halel" (diversamente considerado como somente o Salmo 136, os Salmos 120-136 ou o Salmo 135:4-136:26) supostamente era entoado em ocasiões alegres, e por aqueles que usavam um quinto copo de vinho na celebração da Páscoa.

HALI [Adorno]. Cidade no termo de Aser, alistada entre Helcate e Béten. (Jos 19:24, 25) Embora sua localização seja incerta, sugere-se o lugar de Khirbet Ras 'Ali (Tel 'Alil), a uns 17 km ao ESE de Haifa. Isto a situaria na beirada oriental da planície de Aco.

HALOÉS [O Encantador; O Sussurrador].

1. Pai de Salum. Salum, filho de Haloés, era "príncipe de metade do distrito de Jerusalém", e ele, junto com suas filhas, fez reparos na muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. — Ne 3:12.

2. Um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele próprio, atestou o contrato de confissão elaborado nos dias de Neemias; possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 1. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 24.

HALUL. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 58) O mesmo nome ainda é dado a uma aldeia e a um morro destacado, a uns 6 km ao N de Hébron.

HAMÃ. Filho de Hamedata, o agagita. A designação "agagita" pode significar que Hamã era da realeza amalequita. (Est 3:1; veja AGAGITA; AGAGUE N.º 1.) Se Hamã, de fato, era amalequita, isto já explicaria por que tinha tão grande ódio aos judeus, porque Jeová havia decretado que os amalequitas, por fim, seriam exterminados. (Êx 17:14-16) Isto se deu porque eles mostraram ódio a Deus e ao Seu povo por tomar a iniciativa de lançar ataques contra os israelitas quando estes passavam pelo ermo. — Êx 17:8.

Hamã era servo do Rei Assuero (Xerxes I), da Pérsia, o qual governou no começo do quinto século AEC. Hamã foi honrado e designado primeiro-ministro do Império Persa. Enfurecido pela recusa de Mordecai, o judeu, de se curvar diante dele, Hamã tramou a destruição de Mordecai e de todos os judeus no império. Retratou os judeus como indesejáveis no império, como violadores da lei, que tinham leis "diferentes de todo outro povo". Acrescentou um atrativo financeiro, dizendo ao rei: "Escreva-se que sejam destruídos; e eu pagarei dez mil talentos [c. US$ 66.060.000] de prata nas mãos dos que fizerem a obra, trazendo-os ao tesouro do rei." O rei entregou a Hamã seu anel de sinete e respondeu: "Dá-se-te a prata, também o povo, para fazer com eles conforme for bom aos teus próprios olhos." — Est 3:1-11.

Hamã ficou cheio de orgulho, por ter recebido do rei a autorização para emitir um decreto de aniquilamento e despojo dos judeus, e, além disso, por ser depois convidado a dois banquetes oferecidos pela Rainha Ester. (Est 3:12, 13; 5:4-12) Mas justamente quando Hamã pensava que estava prestes a realizar suas mais elevadas ambições, a situação se inverteu para ele. Egotistamente esperando ser enaltecido, Hamã sofreu uma esmagadora humilhação, quando o rei lhe ordenou que realizasse uma cerimônia pública em honra do odiado Mordecai, o qual anteriormente havia descoberto uma trama contra a vida do rei. (Est 6:1-12; 2:21-23) Os sábios de Hamã e sua esposa tomaram isso como presságio de que Hamã cairia diante do judeu Mordecai. — Est 6:13.

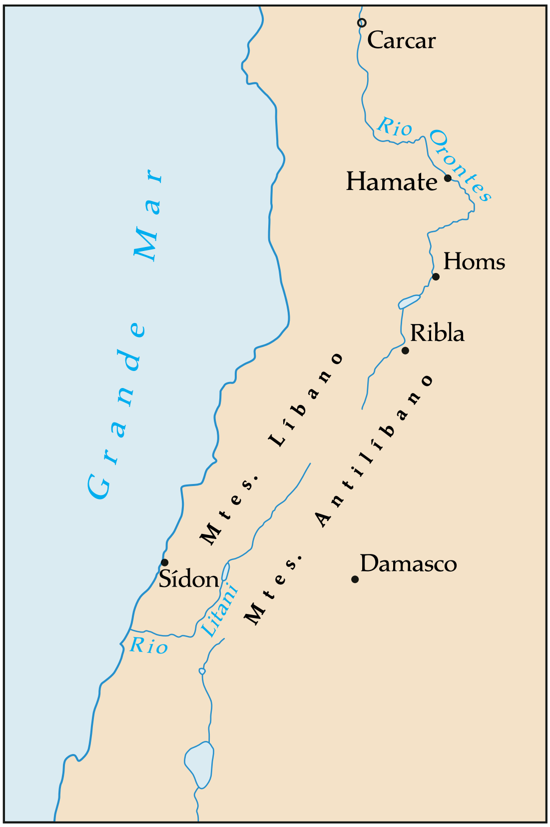
A queda de Hamã chegou a um esmagador clímax durante o segundo banquete especial oferecido pela Rainha Ester, que era prima de Mordecai. (Est 2:7) Na presença de Hamã, ela fez corajosamente um apelo ao rei. Revelou ao atônito rei que os próprios interesses dele estavam em perigo; de fato, a vida da sua rainha corria perigo por causa duma trama assassina. Ao passo que o furor do rei aumentava, Ester destemidamente identificou o então já aterrorizado primeiro-ministro como pérfido conspirador, "este mau Hamã". (Est 7:1-6) Subsequentemente, o rei ordenou que o assassino Hamã fosse pendurado no madeiro de 22 m de altura, que Hamã havia preparado para pendurar Mordecai. (Est 7:7-10) A casa de Hamã, por sua vez, foi entregue a Ester (Est 8:7), e Mordecai foi feito primeiro-ministro, recebendo a autorização de conceder aos judeus permissão para se defenderem. (Est 8:2, 10-15) Em dois dias em que os judeus se vingaram dos seus adversários, eles obtiveram uma esmagadora vitória, matando mais de 75.000 dos seus inimigos. Os dez filhos de Hamã foram mortos; daí, no dia seguinte, foram pendurados perante o povo em opróbrio. — Est 9:1-17; veja ESTER; ESTER, LIVRO DE; MORDECAI N.º 2; PURIM.



Hamã manifestava as características dos amalequitas. Obviamente, era adorador de deuses falsos, e talvez confiasse nos astrólogos quando mandou lançar a sorte para determinar o dia propício para a destruição dos judeus. (Est 3:7; veja SORTE.) Realizava "as obras da carne", praticando a idolatria, o espiritismo, manifestando seu ódio assassino aos judeus, mostrando um espírito orgulhoso, altivo, egotístico, com extremo ciúme e inveja de outros, especialmente dos servos de Deus. (Gál 5:19-21) Praticava a mentira e o engano (Est 3:8) e mostrava ser medroso covarde, quando seus planos foram frustrados e ele se viu condenado. (Est 7:6-8) Hamã mostrava ser servo do Adversário de Deus, o Diabo, segundo o princípio de Romanos 6:16.

HAMATE.

1. "Pai" da casa de Recabe e antepassado de certos queneus. — 1Cr 2:55.

2. [Lugar Duma (Fonte) Termal]. Cidade fortificada de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35) Em geral, é identificada com Hammam Tabariyeh (Hame Teveriya), logo ao S de Tiberíades, no lado O do mar da Galileia. A fonte sulfurosa ali evidentemente deu a Hamate seu nome. Se Hamote-Dor (Jos 21:32) e Hamom (1Cr 6:76), conforme a maioria dos peritos acredita, forem nomes alternativos do mesmo lugar, então Hamate funcionou também como cidade levita.

HAMATE, HAMATEU. A cidade de Hamate era a capital dum pequeno reino cananeu na Síria, durante os primórdios históricos de Israel. A rica região agrícola que a cercava também tinha o mesmo nome. Durante as épocas grega e romana, o nome clássico da cidade era Epifania, chamada assim por Antíoco IV (Epifânio). Atualmente, é chamada Hama, forma abreviada do seu nome original.

A cidade de Hamate ficava junto ao rio Orontes, ao longo de importantes rotas comerciais, a 81 km do Mediterrâneo, a uns 190 km ao N de Damasco e a uns 120 km ao S de Alepo.

Embora às vezes se diga que teve origem hitita, Hamate mais provavelmente foi fundada pelos hamateus, parentes dos hititas e uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. Hete e Hamate, os antepassados destas duas linhagens familiares, foram alistados respectivamente como o 2.º e o 11.º filho de Canaã, filho de Cã. — Gên 10:6, 15-18; 1Cr 1:8, 13-16; veja HITITAS.

"A Entrada de Hamate." O relato mais antigo que temos a respeito de Hamate conta que os 12 espias israelitas, no século 16 AEC, chegaram do S até "a entrada de Hamate", uma frase muitas vezes repetida, que se pensa referir-se, não aos portões da própria cidade, mas, antes, à fronteira meridional do território que ela dominava. (Núm 13:21) Foi até este limite que a conquista de Josué chegou no norte. (Jos 13:2, 5; Jz 3:1-3) No entanto, alguns peritos sugerem que a expressão "até a entrada de Hamate" (Jos 13:5) possivelmente deveria rezar "até Lebi-Hamate (Leão de Hamate)", referindo-se assim a um lugar específico. — Veja Vetus Testamentum (Antigo Testamento), Leiden, 1952, p. 114.

A localização exata deste limite (ou lugar) é incerta. Era considerado como o limite setentrional do território de Israel (Núm 34:8; 1Rs 8:65; 2Rs 14:25; 2Cr 7:8) e como beirando Damasco. (Je 49:23; Ez 47:15-17; 48:1; Za 9:1, 2) Alguns acham tratar-se da extremidade meridional do vale de Coele-Síria (também chamado Beqaʽ), que se estende entre as cordilheiras do Líbano e do Antilíbano. Outros dizem que se encontrava a meio caminho entre Baalbec e Ribla. E mais outros sugerem que se encontrava ainda mais ao N, no lugar onde um passo se abre entre Homs e o mar. — Ez 47:20.

Relações com Israel. Toi (Toú), rei de Hamate, enviou seu filho Jorão (Hadorão) para congratular o Rei Davi por ter derrotado seu inimigo comum, Hadadezer. Hamate era então um reino independente. (2Sa 8:3, 9, 10; 1Cr 18:3, 9, 10) No entanto, durante o reinado de Salomão, o reino de Hamate parece ter estado sob o controle de Israel, porque Salomão construiu cidades-armazéns naquela região. (2Cr 8:3, 4) Após a morte de Salomão, Hamate obteve sua independência e permaneceu independente exceto por um breve período no nono século AEC, quando Jeroboão II a trouxe de novo temporariamente sob o controle israelita. (2Rs 14:28) Por volta deste tempo, foi descrita como a "populosa Hamate". — Am 6:2.

No oitavo século AEC, Hamate e seus vizinhos, inclusive o reino de dez tribos de Israel, foram tomados pelos assírios no seu avanço pelo domínio mundial. A política da Assíria era trocar e relocar seus cativos, de modo que gente de Hamate foi trazida para substituir os habitantes de Samaria, os quais, por sua vez, foram mudados para Hamate e para outros lugares. (2Rs 17:24; 19:12, 13; Is 10:9-11; 37:12, 13) Os hamateus erigiram nos altos de Samaria imagens de seu deus Asima, embora este deus inútil se tivesse mostrado impotente contra os assírios. — 2Rs 17:29, 30; 18:33, 34; Is 36:18, 19.

Segundo uma inscrição cuneiforme existente (Museu Britânico 21946), após a batalha de Carquemis, em 625 AEC (Je 46:2), as forças de Nabucodonosor alcançaram e destruíram os egípcios fugitivos no distrito de Hamate. (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 99) Nesta mesma região, alguns anos antes, o Faraó Neco tomara cativo o Rei Jeoacaz (2Rs 23:31-33) Daí, em 607 AEC, com a queda de Jerusalém, Zedequias e outros cativos foram levados a Ribla, na região de Hamate, e ali, perante os olhos de Zedequias, seus filhos, junto com outros da nobreza, foram mortos. (2Rs 25:18-21; Je 39:5, 6; 52:9, 10, 24-27) Todavia, Deus prometera que, no tempo devido, restabeleceria um restante do seu povo cativo, inclusive os na terra de Hamate. — Is 11:11, 12.

HAMATE-ZOBÁ. Este lugar foi evidentemente conquistado por Salomão e assim consta no único envolvimento militar dele aludido nas Escrituras. (2Cr 8:3) A identificação exata de Hamate-Zobá é incerta. Hamate e Zobá talvez fossem reinos vizinhos (veja 1Cr 18:9; 2Cr 8:4), daí o nome composto de "Hamate-Zobá". Que dois lugares geográficos vizinhos podem ser juntados assim é ilustrado por 1 Crônicas 6:78. O hebraico literal deste texto reza "do Jordão Jericó", ou "do Jordão de Jericó", e usualmente é vertido por "do Jordão, [na altura] de Jericó". — NM, Al, BLH.

HAMEDATA. Agagita; pai de Hamã, que tramou o extermínio dos judeus nos dias de Mordecai e de Ester. — Est 3:1, 6.

HAMOLEQUETE [A Rainha]. Irmã de Gileade, neto de Manassés. Ela deu à luz Isode, Abiezer e Maala. — 1Cr 7:14, 17, 18.

HAMOM [que significa "Lugar Duma (Fonte) Termal"].

1. Cidade no termo de Aser. (Jos 19:24-28) Em geral, é identificada com Umm el ʽAwamid, na costa do Mediterrâneo, a uns 16 km ao SSO de Tiro.

2. Lugar no território de Naftali, dado aos levitas (1Cr 6:71, 76); aparentemente o mesmo que Hamate. — Jos 19:35; veja HAMATE N.º 2.

HAMOM-GOGUE [Massa de Gente de Gogue]. Derivação em português do nome hebraico dum vale, evidentemente simbólico, descrito como "o vale dos que passam, ao leste do mar [Morto]". Neste vale, Gogue e todas as suas forças são sepultados após a sua destruição por Jeová. — Ez 39:11, 15 n; veja GOGUE N.º 2.

HAMONÁ [que significa "Massa de Gente (Multidão)"]. Cidade simbólica nas proximidades do vale em que Gogue e sua massa de gente serão sepultados, depois de seu ataque conjunto contra o povo de Deus acabar em derrota e matança em massa. A cidade deriva seu nome destas circunstâncias e é um memorial da vitória de Jeová sobre esses adversários. (Ez 39:16) Uma cidade subentende um grupo organizado de pessoas, aqui evidentemente relacionado com as providências para a eliminação dos ossos, descrita em Ezequiel 39:11-15. — Veja GOGUE N.º 2.

HAMOR [Jumento; Asno]. Maioral heveu; pai de Siquém. Foi dos filhos de Hamor que Jacó comprou um terreno em que armou a sua tenda e mais tarde erigiu um altar. Depois de Siquém ter violentado Diná, a filha de Jacó, tanto Siquém como seu pai Hamor foram mortos por Simeão e Levi para vingar a irmã deles. — Gên 33:18-20; 34:1, 2, 25, 26.

HAMOTE-DOR [que significa "(Fontes) Termais de Dor"]. Cidade de Naftali, dada aos levitas gersonitas. (Jos 21:27, 32) Evidentemente, é a mesma que Hamate. — Jos 19:35; veja HAMATE N.º 2.

HAMUEL. Filho de Misma, da tribo de Simeão. — 1Cr 4:24-26.

HAMUL [que significa "Mostrado Compaixão; Poupado"], HAMULITAS. Filho mais moço de Peres e neto de Judá, de quem descenderam os hamulitas. — Gên 46:12; Núm 26:21; 1Cr 2:5.

HAMUTAL [possivelmente: Sogro É Orvalho]. Filha de "Jeremias, de Libna"; esposa do Rei Josias e mãe de Jeoacaz e de Matanias (Zedequias), que reinaram como reis sobre Judá. — 2Rs 23:30, 31; 24:17, 18; Je 52:1.

HANÃ [Mostrando Favor; Clemente].

1. Um dos "filhos de Sasaque"; benjamita. — 1Cr 8:1, 23-25.

2. Filho de Maacá; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 43.

3. Um dos seis filhos de Azel; descendente do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 8:33-38; 9:44.

4. Filho de Igdalias, "homem do verdadeiro Deus". Foi no refeitório dos filhos de Hanã que o profeta Jeremias testou a obediência dos recabitas à ordem do antepassado deles, Jonadabe, de não beber vinho. — Je 35:3-6.

5. Cabeça de uma família de escravos netineus do templo, dos quais alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 46; Ne 7:46, 49.

6. Um dos levitas que ajudaram Esdras a explicar a Lei à congregação de Israel, reunida na praça pública diante do Portão das Águas, de Jerusalém. (Ne 8:1, 7) Talvez fosse o N.º 7 ou o N.º 10.

7. Levita, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado quando Neemias era governador. (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9, 10) Se foi o próprio Hanã quem selou este acordo, então ele talvez fosse o N.º 6 ou o N.º 10.

8, 9. Dois "cabeças do povo", cujos descendentes, se não eles mesmos, atestaram a confissão pactuada quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 22, 26.

10. Filho de Zacur; levita fiel, designado por Neemias para distribuir as porções devidas aos levitas, sob a direção de Selemias, Zadoque e Pedaías. (Ne 13:13) Talvez fosse o N.º 6 ou o N.º 7.

HANAMEL. Filho de Salum, tio paterno do profeta Jeremias. Foi de Hanamel que o profeta comprou o campo em Anatote, na época em que os babilônios sitiavam Jerusalém. — Je 32:1-12.

HANANEL. Veja TORRE.

HANANI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Hananias].

1. Um dos 14 filhos de Hemã. Hanani foi designado por sortes para liderar o 18.º grupo de músicos no santuário, no tempo do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 25:4-6, 9, 25.

2. Vidente ou visionário que censurou o Rei Asa, de Judá, por formar uma aliança com o rei da Síria, em vez de confiar em Jeová, e que foi posto na casa dos troncos, porque o rei se ofendera com o que ele dissera. (2Cr 16:1-3, 7-10) Pelo visto, Hanani era o pai de Jeú, o profeta que censurou Baasa, rei de Israel, e Jeosafá, rei de Judá. — 1Rs 16:1-4, 7; 2Cr 19:2, 3; 20:34.

3. Sacerdote dos "filhos de Imer", dentre aqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras, acatando a exortação de Esdras. — Esd 2:36, 37; 10:10, 11, 20, 44.

4. Irmão de Neemias. Por ocasião da sua chegada a Susã, Hanani, junto com outros homens de Judá, informaram Neemias sobre a condição da muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 1:2, 3) Após a reconstrução da muralha, Neemias pôs seu irmão Hanani e também Hananias no comando de Jerusalém. — Ne 7:1, 2.

5. Sacerdote levita e músico que participou no cortejo providenciado por Neemias na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31-36.

HANANIAS [que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente"].

1. Filho de Sasaque e cabeça duma casa benjamita. — 1Cr 8:1, 24, 25, 28.

2. Um dos 14 filhos de Hemã e cabeça do 16.º dos 24 grupos de serviço de músicos levitas designados por Davi para servir no santuário. —1Cr 25:1, 4, 5, 8, 9, 23.

3. Oficial de alta patente, 'príncipe', no exército do Rei Uzias. — 2Cr 26:11.

4. Pai do Zedequias que era príncipe durante o reinado de Jeoiaquim, rei de Judá. — Je 36:12.

5. Filho de Azur; falso profeta, da cidade benjamita de Gibeão, que se opôs a Jeremias, profeta de Jeová. Durante o reinado do Rei Zedequias, de Judá, enquanto Jeremias incentivava o povo a trazer seu pescoço sob o jugo do rei de Babilônia e assim continuar vivo (Je 27:12-14), Hananias profetizou que o poder de Babilônia seria quebrado em dois anos, que os exilados judeus ali seriam então libertos e que todos os confiscados utensílios do templo seriam devolvidos. Para ilustrar seu ponto, Hananias removeu a canga de madeira do pescoço de Jeremias e a quebrou. Jeová ordenou então a Jeremias que informasse Hananias que a canga de madeira seria substituída por uma de ferro, e que a morte de Hananias ocorreria dentro daquele ano. Fiel à profecia, o falso profeta morreu naquele ano. — Je 28.

6. Provavelmente avô de Irijá, oficial junto ao Portão de Benjamim, que prendeu o profeta Jeremias, acusando-o falsamente de tentar desertar para os caldeus. — Je 37:1-15.

7. Nome hebraico de Sadraque, um dos três companheiros judeus de Daniel levados a Babilônia em 617 AEC. — Da 1:6, 7; veja SADRAQUE.

8. Filho de Zorobabel, e pai de Pelatias e Jesaías. — 1Cr 3:19, 21.

9. Descendente de Bebai, que estava entre os que acataram a exortação de Esdras, de despedir as esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:10, 11, 28, 44.

10. Sacerdote levita e cabeça da casa paterna de Jeremias quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 12:12, 26.

11. Membro dos misturadores de unguentos que fizeram reparos na muralha de Jerusalém no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 3:8.

12. Filho de Selemias; um dos que participaram em fazer reparos na muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. — Ne 3:30.

13. Trombeteiro sacerdotal que participou nas cerimônias providenciadas por Neemias por ocasião da inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31, 40, 41.

14. Um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele próprio, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 23.

15. Príncipe do Castelo, homem fidedigno, que temia a Deus mais do que muitos outros. Neemias o pôs no comando de Jerusalém junto com Hanani. — Ne 7:2.

HANATOM [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "mostrar favor; ser clemente"]. Cidade limítrofe de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 14) A maioria dos peritos identificam provisoriamente Hanatom com Tell el-Bedeiwiyeh (Tel Hannaton), a uns 10 km ao NNO de Nazaré. Hanatom ocorre nos registros do rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III e também nas Tabuinhas de Amarna.

HANES. Lugar mencionado em Isaías 30:4, na denúncia de Jeová, daqueles que buscavam a ajuda do Egito. (Is 30:1-5) Sua localização é incerta.

O texto pode ter diversos significados. Alguns comentadores acreditam que os "enviados" eram judeus, mandados para obter ajuda militar do Egito, e que estes chegaram a Hanes com tal missão. Outros sugerem que os enviados eram os de Faraó (mencionado em Is 30:3), retratado como acolhendo a delegação judaica quando chegou a Hanes. Qualquer que tenha sido o caso, Jeová mostrou que o Egito seria inútil como fonte de ajuda. — Is 30:5.

HANIEL [Deus Mostrou Favor; Deus Foi Clemente; ou Favor (Graça) de Deus].

1. Maioral escolhido por Jeová para representar a tribo de Manassés na repartição da terra ao O do Jordão entre as nove tribos e meia dos israelitas que se estabeleceram ali. Haniel era filho de Éfode e descendente de José. — Núm 34:13, 17, 23.

2. Cabeça duma casa aserita; filho de Ula. — 1Cr 7:30, 39, 40.

HANOQUE. Veja ANOQUE.

HANOQUITAS. Veja ANOQUITAS.

HANUM [Ele Mostrou Favor; Ele Foi Clemente].

1. Filho e sucessor no trono de Naás, rei de Amom. Por causa da benignidade de Naás para com ele, Davi enviou mensageiros para consolar Hanum pela perda do pai. Mas Hanum, convencido pelos seus príncipes de que se tratava apenas dum subterfúgio da parte de Davi para espionar a cidade, desonrou os servos de Davi por rapar-lhes a metade das suas barbas e cortar-lhes as roupas pelo meio até as nádegas, e depois os mandou embora. Quando os filhos de Amom viram que se haviam tornado malcheirosos para Davi, por causa da humilhação infligida aos mensageiros dele, Hanum tomou a iniciativa de se preparar para a guerra e contratou os sírios para lutar contra Israel. Nos conflitos resultantes, os amonitas e os sírios foram totalmente derrotados por Israel; Davi sujeitou os amonitas sobreviventes de Rabá a trabalhos forçados. — 2Sa 10:1-11:1; 12:26-31; 1Cr 19:1-20:3.

2. Alguém que, junto com os habitantes de Zanoa, reparou o Portão do Vale e parte da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:13.

3. "Sexto filho de Zalafe"; ele fez reparos na muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:30.

HAPIZEZ [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "despedaçar"]. Sacerdote arônico designado por sorte, no tempo de Davi, como chefe da 18.ª turma sacerdotal. — 1Cr 24:1-7, 15.

HAQUILÁ. Morro no ermo de Zife, onde Davi e seus homens se esconderam do Rei Saul. (1Sa 23:19; 26:1-3) Desconhece-se hoje sua localização exata.

HARA. Lugar para o qual o rei assírio Tilgate-Pilneser (Tiglate-Pileser III) transportou israelitas cativos. (1Cr 5:26) Referências similares (2Rs 17:6; 18:11) a um posterior exílio assírio falam de israelitas serem levados para as "cidades dos medos" (texto massorético) ou para os "montes dos medos". (LXX) Muitos peritos acham que a versão da Septuaginta seja a correta e sugerem que em 1 Crônicas 5:26 "Hara" (Ha·rá', talvez uma forma aramaica da palavra hebraica para "monte" [har]) tornou-se nome próprio quando a frase "dos medos" foi inadvertidamente omitida. Se esta suposição for correta, "Hara" talvez se tenha aplicado aos "montes dos medos" ao L do vale do rio Tigre. Todavia, alguns dos que consideram a Gozã de 2 Reis 17:6 e 18:11 um lugar (como em BJ, BV, IBB), não um rio, acreditam que "Hara" possivelmente foi a designação local duma região montanhosa da Turquia.

HARÃ.

1. Filho de Tera, e irmão de Abrão (Abraão) e Naor. Harã gerou Ló e duas filhas, Iscá e Milca; esta última casou-se com seu tio Naor. Harã morreu antes de Tera e Abrão partirem de Ur dos Caldeus. — Gên 11:26-31.

2. Descendente de Gérson através de Simei; da tribo de Levi. — 1Cr 23:6-9.

3. Filho de Calebe com sua concubina Efá, e "pai" de Gazez; da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3, 42, 46.

4. Cidade da Mesopotâmia setentrional, onde Abrão (Abraão) morou temporariamente; ali faleceu seu pai Tera. (Gên 11:31, 32; 12:4, 5; At 7:2-4) O nome Harã parece também ter abrangido a região circundante, porque Harã é alistada entre as "nações" conquistadas pelos reis da Assíria. — 2Rs 19:11, 12.

Algum tempo depois de deixar Harã, Abraão enviou seu servo mais idoso aos seus parentes (que evidentemente moravam em Harã ou numa cidade vizinha, "a cidade de Naor"), a fim de encontrar uma noiva para seu filho Isaque. (Gên 24) Mais tarde, Jacó, neto de Abraão, foi para Harã a fim de escapar da ira do seu irmão Esaú e também para encontrar uma esposa entre as filhas de seu tio Labão. (Gên 27:42-46; 28:1, 2, 10) Junto a um poço, evidentemente perto de Harã, Jacó encontrou-se com Raquel. — Gên 29:4-12.

No oitavo século AEC, o rei assírio Senaqueribe tentou intimidar o Rei Ezequias, de Judá, com mensagens em que se gabava de que seus antepassados haviam conquistado Harã e outros lugares. — 2Rs 19:8-13; Is 37:8-13.

Fontes assírias parecem referir-se a Harã como Harranu (que significa "Estrada"), talvez por se encontrar na rota de caravanas que a ligava com cidades tais como Nínive, Assur, Babilônia e Tiro, bem como com a terra do Egito. (Veja Ez 27:23.) O nome da cidade antiga é preservado na atual Harã, situada na junção de dois uádis que no inverno formam uma corrente que atinge o rio Balique, a uns 110 km rio acima de onde o Balique desemboca no rio Eufrates. Mas, alguns acreditam que o próprio lugar antigo fique ao N da atual Harã. Certos peritos acham evidência de patriarcas terem morado ali (conforme descrita na Bíblia) na correspondência de nomes antigos de lugares nesta região com nomes pessoais tais como Serugue, Naor e Tera. — Gên 11:22-26.

A atual Harã preserva o nome da cidade antiga, na qual, ou perto da qual, o servo de Abraão encontrou uma esposa para Isaque.

HARADA [possivelmente: Tremor]. Lugar onde os israelitas acamparam em caminho para a terra de Canaã. (Núm 33:24, 25) Sua localização é hoje desconhecida.

HARAÍAS. Pai de Uziel. O filho de Haraías, que era ourives, fez reparos na muralha de Jerusalém sob a direção de Neemias. — Ne 3:8.

HARARITA. Designação de certos poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:8, 11, 33; 1Cr 11:26, 34, 35) Eles talvez procedessem da região montanhosa de Judá.

HARÁS. Avô de Salum, marido da profetisa Hulda. (2Rs 22:14) No texto massorético, seu nome é dado como "Hasrá", em 2 Crônicas 34:22.

HARBONA. Um dos sete oficiais da corte de Assuero, enviados para transmitir a palavra do rei à Rainha Vasti, para que comparecesse perante ele. Depois, na ocasião em que se expôs a trama de Hamã para exterminar os judeus, mencionar Harbona o madeiro de 50 côvados de altura, feito por Hamã para Mordecai, induziu Assuero a ordenar que o próprio Hamã fosse pendurado nele. — Est 1:10-12; 7:9, 10.

HAREFE [que significa "Ele Vituperou (Escarneceu)"]. Descendente de Judá; filho de Hur e "pai de Bete-Gader". — 1Cr 2:3, 50, 51; veja BETE-GADER.

HARIFE [que significa "Ele Vituperou (Escarneceu)"]. Cabeça duma família da qual 112 varões retornaram do exílio babilônico em 537 AEC; também chamado Jora. (Ne 7:6, 7, 24; Esd 2:18) O nome Harife encontra-se novamente alistado entre os cabeças do povo, evidentemente representado por um descendente, o qual atestou com selo a confissão pactuada, feita quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 19.

HARIFITA [De (Pertencente a) Harife ou Harufe]. Designação aplicada a um benjamita, Sefatias, que se juntou a Davi em Ziclague, quando Davi ainda se achava restrito por causa de Saul. Ser Sefatias chamado de harifita talvez signifique que era nativo de Harife, ou Harufe (lugar de localização desconhecida), ou então era descendente de certo Harife, ou Harufe. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 5.

HARIM [Devotado; Banido].

1. Sacerdote arônico escolhido por sortes para encabeçar a 3.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais organizadas por Davi. (1Cr 24:1, 3, 7, 8) "Filhos [ou descendentes] de Harim" são mencionados entre os sacerdotes pós-exílicos: 1.017 retornaram de Babilônia em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 36, 39; Ne 7:42) Adna era cabeça desta casa paterna na geração seguinte. (Ne 12:12, 15) Cinco "dos filhos de Harim" tomaram esposas estrangeiras, mas as despediram acatando a exortação de Esdras neste sentido. (Esd 10:10, 11, 21, 44) Um representante da família (ou possivelmente um deles que tinha o mesmo nome) apoiou o pacto de fidelidade depois da chegada de Neemias em 455 AEC. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 5, 8.

2. Fundador duma família não sacerdotal, da qual 320 retornaram de Babilônia a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. (Esd 2:1, 2, 32; Ne 7:35) Assim como se deu com membros da família sacerdotal do mesmo nome (N.º 1), oito descendentes deste Harim também haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras e as despediram. (Esd 10:25, 31, 32, 44) Igualmente, seu representante atestou o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado quando Neemias era governador. (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 27) Um "filho" de Harim, Malquijá, ajudou a reparar a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:11.

HAR-MAGEDON [do hebr., significando "Monte de Megido"]. Este nome está diretamente associado com "a guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-poderoso". O termo aplica-se especificamente à condição, ou situação, à qual são ajuntados os "reis de toda a terra habitada" em oposição a Jeová e seu Reino por Jesus Cristo. Diversas versões o vertem por "Armagedom". (Re 16:14, 16, Al; ALA; BLH; IBB) O nome Har-Magedon, tirado do hebraico, significa simplesmente "Monte de Megido".

Não parece ter havido nenhum lugar literal chamado "Monte de Megido", quer dentro, quer fora da Terra da Promessa, antes ou durante os dias do apóstolo João, que registrou a visão. Portanto, Har-Magedon evidentemente deriva sua significância dos eventos associados com a antiga cidade de Megido.

Megido ficava a uns poucos quilômetros ao SE do monte Carmelo, sobranceira à planície de Esdrelom (Jezreel) e dominando-a, e controlando importantes rotas comerciais e militares N-S e E-O. Josué foi o primeiro a conquistar esta cidade cananeia. (Jos 12:7, 8, 21) O exército de Jabim, sob o comando de Sísera, foi posteriormente destruído perto deste lugar. Jeová empregou ali forças naturais para ajudar o exército israelita sob Baraque. O relato reza: "Baraque foi descer do monte Tabor com dez mil homens atrás de si. E Jeová começou a lançar em confusão tanto a Sísera como a todos os seus carros de guerra e todo o acampamento pelo fio da espada, diante de Baraque. Por fim, Sísera desceu do carro e pôs-se a fugir a pé. E Baraque foi no encalço dos carros de guerra e do acampamento até Harosete das nações, de modo que todo o acampamento de Sísera caiu ao fio da espada. Não restou nem sequer um." — Jz 4:14-16.

Após a vitória, Baraque e a profetisa Débora irromperam num cântico, o qual rezava, em parte:

"Vieram reis, eles lutaram; foi então que os reis de Canaã lutaram em Taanaque, junto às águas de Megido. Não tiveram lucro de prata. Desde o céu lutaram as estrelas, desde as suas órbitas lutaram contra Sísera. A torrente de Quisom os arrastou, a torrente dos dias antigos, a torrente de Quisom. Foste pisar a força, ó minha alma. Foi então que os cascos dos cavalos escarvaram por causa do galopar precipitado dos seus garanhões." — Jz 5:19-22.

Foi em Megido que o Rei Acazias, de Judá, morreu depois de ter sido mortalmente ferido às ordens de Jeú. (2Rs 9:27) Ali, o Rei Josias, de Judá, foi morto num encontro com o Faraó Neco. (2Rs 23:29, 30) Segundo a história secular, muitas outras nações guerrearam em torno de Megido, por causa da sua posição dominante. 'Judeus, gentios, sarracenos, cruzados, egípcios, persas, drusos, turcos e árabes, todos armaram suas tendas na planície de Esdrelom.' — Word Studies in the New Testament (Estudos de Palavras do Novo Testamento), de M. R. Vincent, 1957, Vol. II, p. 542.

O relato de Revelação (Apocalipse) retrata as forças conjuntas dos reis da terra como ajuntadas "ao lugar [gr.: forma de tó·pos] que em hebraico se chama Har-Magedon". (Re 16:16) Na Bíblia, tó·pos pode referir-se a um lugar literal (Mt 14:13, 15, 35); à oportunidade ou "chance" que a pessoa tem (At 25:16); ou a um domínio, uma condição ou uma situação figurativa (Re 12:6, 14). Em vista do contexto, é a um "lugar" no último sentido mencionado que os poderes militares conjuntos da terra estão marchando.

"A guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-poderoso", no Har-Magedon, não foi algum evento no passado, mas é retratada em Revelação como futura com respeito ao tempo da visão de João. O ajuntamento dos reis da terra ao Har-Magedon é descrito como resultado do derramamento da sexta das sete tigelas com as "últimas" pragas que levarão a término a ira de Deus. (Re 15:1; 16:1, 12) Como indício de que a guerra do Har-Magedon está intimamente associada com a presença de Cristo há o aviso da sua vinda como ladrão, colocado entre os versículos 14 e 16 do capítulo 16 de Revelação.

O contexto enfatiza o aspecto global desta guerra. Ali os oponentes de Jeová são identificados como os "reis de toda a terra habitada", os quais são mobilizados por "expressões inspiradas por demônios". — Re 16:14.

Mais adiante, João diz: "E eu vi a fera e os reis da terra, e os seus exércitos, ajuntados para travar guerra com aquele que está sentado no cavalo e com o seu exército." (Re 19:19) Este capítulo identifica o líder dos exércitos celestiais, sentado num cavalo branco, como o chamado de "Fiel e Verdadeiro" e "A Palavra de Deus". (Re 19:11-13) Portanto, é Jesus Cristo, A Palavra, que atua como comandante dos exércitos celestiais de Deus. (Jo 1:1; Re 3:14) Mostrando adicionalmente que Cristo lidera as forças celestiais há a declaração de que as forças terrestres "batalharão contra o Cordeiro [que é Jesus Cristo (Jo 1:29)], mas, porque ele é Senhor dos senhores e Rei dos reis, o Cordeiro os vencerá. Também o farão com ele os chamados, e escolhidos, e fiéis". — Re 17:13, 14.

Uma vez que a visão em Revelação, capítulo 19, revela apenas exércitos no céu como participando na guerra como apoiadores de Jesus Cristo, A Palavra de Deus, isso indica que nenhum dos servos cristãos de Jeová na terra participará na luta. Isto está em harmonia com as palavras de Jesus Cristo em Mateus 26:52, de que seus discípulos não recorrem a armas de guerra física. (Veja Êx 14:13, 14; 2Cr 20:15, 17, 22, 23; Sal 2:4-9.) As aves que voam pelo meio do céu eliminarão os cadáveres dos mortos. — Re 19:11-21.

Vê-se assim que o Har-Magedon não é uma luta apenas entre homens, mas é uma luta em que participam os exércitos invisíveis de Deus. Sua vinda é certa e ocorrerá no tempo marcado por Jeová Deus, que "age segundo a sua própria vontade entre o exército dos céus e os habitantes da terra". — Da 4:35; veja também Mt 24:36.

HARMOM. Não há certeza sobre o que é designado pelo termo hebraico transliterado "Harmom" (Am 4:3, ALA, IBB, NM), sendo que alguns tradutores apresentam versões tão diferentes como "monte de refugo" (AT), "palácio" (KJ) e "tesouros" (Tr). Se a versão da Septuaginta grega ("o monte Remman") for mais perto do texto hebraico original, então talvez "Harmom" se refira ao "rochedo de Rimom". — Jz 20:45, 47.

HARNEFER. Filho de Zofa, da tribo de Aser. — 1Cr 7:30, 36.

HARODE [Tremor]. Poço (manancial ou fonte, visto ser este o significado costumeiro da palavra hebraica, embora as palavras hebraicas para "poço" e "fonte" sejam às vezes usadas de modo intercambiável; veja Gên 16:7, 14; 24:11, 13), em cuja vizinhança acampou o exército israelita sob Gideão, e onde, mais tarde, se pôs à prova a força reduzida de 10.000 homens. Subsequentemente, escolheram-se 300 homens para desbaratar os midianitas. A partida anterior de 22.000 israelitas, por estarem 'com medo e tremerem', talvez fosse o motivo do nome do poço. — Jz 7:1-7.

O poço de Harode tem sido tradicionalmente identificado com 'Ain Jalud (Mayan Harod), um manancial no contraforte NO do monte Gilboa. A respeito de 'Ain Jalud, o famoso perito G. A. Smith observou: "Brota com cerca de quinze pés [menos de 5 m] de largura e dois [0,6 m] de profundidade do sopé do Gilboa, e mormente dali, mas, alimentada também por mais duas fontes ['Ain el-Meiyiteh e 'Ain Tuba'un], flui com força suficiente para operar seis ou sete moinhos. O leito fundo e as margens moles desta corrente constituem formidável trincheira em frente à posição de Gilboa, e fazem com que seja possível que os defensores desta retenham a fonte a seus pés em face dum inimigo na planície: e a fonte é indispensável para eles, pois nem à esquerda, nem à direita, nem na retaguarda existe outra água viva. . . . A corrente, que torna possível que os ocupantes da colina retenham também o poço contra o inimigo na planície, proíbelhes ser descuidados na utilização da água; pois eles bebem dela diante desse inimigo, e os juncos e os arbustos que assinalam seu curso fornecem abrigo para emboscadas hostis." — The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (A Geografia Histórica da Terra Santa), Londres, 1968, p. 258.

HARODITA [De (Pertencente a) Harode]. Morador de Harode ou alguém que morava perto dum lugar chamado Harode. O termo é aplicado a Samá e a Elica, dois dos poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:8, 25) Se "Samá" e "Samote" forem a mesma pessoa, então o uso de "harorita" em 1 Crônicas 11:27 é possivelmente um erro de escriba em lugar de "harodita", a mudança talvez surgindo por causa da similaridade entre as letras hebraicas "r" (ר) e "d" (ד).

HAROÉ [O Vidente]. Alguém alistado na genealogia de Judá como filho de Sobal. (1Cr 2:3, 52) Pensa-se geralmente que Haroé seja Reaías. — 1Cr 4:2; veja REAÍAS N.º 1.

HARORITA. Termo que identifica o lugar de procedência de Samote, um dos poderosos de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 27) "Harorita" talvez seja erro em lugar de "Harodita". — 2Sa 23:25; veja HARODITA.

HAROSETE. Lugar, cujo nome completo era "Harosete das nações", que serviu de sede militar para Sísera, chefe do exército do rei cananeu Jabim, que governava em Hazor. (Jz 4:2, 13) O juiz Baraque levou a sua vitória sobre essas forças inimigas até este mesmo lugar. (Jz 4:16) O nome Harosete (que significa "Floresta; Bosque Cerrado") parece estar preservado em el-Harithiyeh, perto da saída ocidental da planície de Jezreel e a uns 16 km ao NNO de Megido. Todavia, os peritos costumam sustentar que o próprio lugar antigo se encontrava perto de Tell 'Amr (Tel Me'ammer).

HARPA. Nome do primeiro instrumento musical mencionado nas Escrituras. (Gên 4:21, Al, ALA, BLH, BMD, IBB, LEB, MC, NM) A palavra hebraica kin·nóhr (harpa) é também vertida por "lira" em algumas traduções da Bíblia. (Bíblia Sagrada, Edição Pastoral, BJ, Mo, Ro, RS) Em cerca da metade das 42 ocorrências de kin·nóhr na Bíblia, os tradutores da Septuaginta verteram-na pela palavra grega ki·thá·ra. A ki·thá·ra era um instrumento parecido à lira (gr.: lý·ra), mas tinha uma caixa de ressonância mais rasa. Traduções modernas costumam verter ki·thá·ra nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs como "harpa". (1Co 14:7; Re 5:8) Representações pictóricas em monumentos egípcios indicam que as antigas harpas eram de muitos estilos e formatos, com um número variado de cordas. Em vista destes pontos, alguns têm sugerido que kin·nóhr talvez tenha sido um termo um tanto genérico para designar qualquer instrumento com as mesmas características básicas da antiga harpa.

Tudo o que as Escrituras Hebraicas indicam definitivamente a respeito de kin·nóhr é que era portátil e comparativamente leve, visto que podia ser tocado numa procissão, ou mesmo por uma prostituta ao passo que cantava andando pela cidade. (1Sa 10:5; 2Sa 6:5; Is 23:15, 16) Alguns eram feitos da madeira chamada "algum". (1Rs 10:12) As cordas talvez fossem feitas do intestino delgado de ovelhas, embora seja possível que se usassem também fibras vegetais torcidas.

Davi, perito em tocar o kin·nóhr "com a sua mão" (1Sa 16:16, 23), atribuiu a este instrumento um lugar de destaque ao lado do 'instrumento de cordas' (né·vel) na orquestra que mais tarde tocava no templo de Salomão. (1Cr 25:1; 2Cr 29:25) Quando Neemias inaugurou a muralha de Jerusalém, o kin·nóhr aumentou a alegria desta ocasião. (Ne 12:27) Visto que o kin·nóhr era essencialmente um instrumento "agradável" de "exultação", seu som cessaria em épocas de julgamento ou de punição. (Sal 81:2; Ez 26:13; Is 24:8, 9) Os israelitas, entristecidos pelo seu exílio em Babilônia, não tinham inclinação para tocar suas harpas, mas penduraram-nas nos choupos. — Sal 137:1, 2.

Por causa da incerteza que cerca a identificação exata do kin·nóhr, e especialmente o né·vel (instrumento de cordas), qualquer tentativa de comparar os dois instrumentos é especulativa. Primeiro Crônicas 15:20, 21, menciona "instrumentos de cordas [neva·lím (plural)] afinados segundo Alamote, . . . harpas [kin·no·róhth (plural)] afinadas segundo Seminite". Se "Alamote" se referir a uma escala musical mais alta e "Seminite" a uma escala mais baixa, isto poderia dar a entender que o kin·nóhr era o instrumento maior, de tonalidade mais baixa. Por outro lado, também se poderia dar o inverso (segundo o consenso geral), se Alamote e Seminite, deveras, forem aqui mencionados por serem afinações excepcionais destes instrumentos.

De qualquer modo, os dois instrumentos eram portáteis.

Em Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, 15, a palavra aramaica sab·bekhá' parece referir-se a uma "harpa triangular" (NM), também vertida como "trígone" (AT, JB, RS) e "sambuca" (Al, BJ, PIB). A sab·bekhá' é descrita por alguns como estridente harpa triangular, pequena, de quatro cordas, descrição que se harmoniza com as traduções acima. — Veja INSTRUMENTO DE CORDAS.

HARSA [possivelmente: Surdo; Ficar Calado]. Cabeça ancestral duma família de escravos netineus do templo, da qual alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 52; Ne 7:54.

HARUM. Homem da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 8.

HARUMAFE [provavelmente: Ter Nariz Fendido]. Pai (ou antepassado) do Jedaías que ajudou Neemias a reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:10.

HARUR [Febre Ardente]. Cabeça ancestral duma família de escravos netineus do templo. "Os filhos de Harur" são mencionados entre os que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 51; Ne 7:46, 53.

HARUZ [possivelmente: Ouro; ou: Diligente]. Homem de Jotbá; avô do Rei Amom, de Judá, e pai de Mesulemete, esposa do Rei Manassés. — 2Rs 21:19, 20.

HASABIAS [Jeová Tomou em Conta (Considerou)].

1. Levita da linhagem de Merari até Etã, cantor do templo. (1Cr 6:31, 44-47) Possivelmente é o N.º 6.

2. Cabeça do 12.º dos 24 grupos em que Davi dividiu os músicos levíticos do templo; um dos seis filhos de Jedutum e possivelmente descendente do N.º 1. — 1Cr 25:1, 3, 19.

3. Administrador "quanto a toda a obra de Jeová e quanto ao serviço do rei", designado por Davi, com seus irmãos, sobre o território ao O do Jordão. Era levita, descendente de Hébron, filho de Coate. (1Cr 26:30; 23:12) Possivelmente é o N.º 4.

4. Príncipe e líder da tribo de Levi durante o reinado de Davi. (1Cr 27:16, 17, 22) Possivelmente é o N.º 3.

5. Um dos "chefes dos levitas", que contribuíram muitos animais para a grande celebração de Páscoa realizada pelo Rei Josias. — 2Cr 35:1, 9.

6. Levita cujo descendente morava em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. (1Cr 9:2, 3, 14; Ne 11:1, 4, 15, 20) Possivelmente é o N.º 1.

7. Um dos chefes dos sacerdotes incumbidos por Esdras do transporte dos materiais preciosos de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. (Esd 8:24-30) Talvez seja o mencionado no versículo 19 e possivelmente é o N.º 9.

8. Levita, talvez descendente do N.º 1, que atestou o acordo nacional de fidelidade nos dias de Neemias. (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9, 11) Possivelmente é o N.º 10 ou 11.

9. Sacerdote que encabeçava a casa paterna de Hilquias durante a gestão do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim, sucessor de Jesua. (Ne 12:10, 12, 21) Possivelmente é o N.º 7.

10. Um dos cabeças dos levitas, que serviu durante a gestão de Joiaquim. — Ne 12:23, 24, 26; veja o N.º 8.

11. Príncipe levita de metade do distrito de Queila, que reparou um setor da muralha de Jerusalém para o seu distrito. — Ne 3:17; veja o N.º 8.

12. Levita "dos filhos de Asafe", cujo descendente foi superintendente dos levitas na Jerusalém pós-exílica. — Ne 11:22.

HASABNÁ [forma abreviada de Hasabneias]. Um dos cabeças do povo cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou com selo o pacto de confissão feito quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 25.

HASABNEIAS [possivelmente: Jah Me Tomou em Conta (Considerou)].

1. Pai de Hatus. Este último fez reparos na muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:10.

2. Um dos oito levitas que exortaram os filhos de Israel a bendizer a Jeová e seu glorioso nome, e então recapitularam os tratos de Deus com Israel antes da atestação com selo do pacto de confissão feito quando Neemias era governador. (Ne 9:5, 38) Conforme sugerido pela versão da Pesito siríaca, ele talvez seja um dos levitas chamados Hasabias, tais como o mencionado em Esdras 8:19 ou em Neemias 10:11.

HASADIAS [Benevolência de Jah; Jah É Benevolência]. Um dos filhos de Zorobabel. Estarem os filhos de Zorobabel alistados em dois grupos diferentes (estando os primeiros dois nomes separados dos outros cinco pela menção de Selomite, na genealogia dos descendentes do Rei Davi) possivelmente significa que eram filhos de mães diferentes. — 1Cr 3:1, 19, 20.

HASBADANA. Veja HAS-BADANA.

HAS-BADANA. Um dos sete homens, possivelmente levitas, que ficaram em pé à esquerda de Esdras quando este lia o livro da Lei para a congregação de Israel, na praça pública perto do Portão das Águas, de Jerusalém. — Ne 8:1-4.

HASÉM. "Os filhos de Hasém, o gizonita", estão alistados entre os poderosos de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 34) A lista correspondente dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi reza "os filhos de Jásen". — 2Sa 23:32.

HASMONA. Lugar de acampamento dos israelitas, evidentemente entre Mitca e Moserote. (Núm 33:29, 30) Sua localização exata é incerta. Hasmona tem sido relacionado com o uádi Hashim, perto do lugar sugerido de Cades-Barneia, e segundo outro conceito, talvez seja Azmom. — Núm 34:4, 5; veja AZMOM.

HASSENAÁ [possivelmente: O Odiado]. Os"filhos de Hassenaá" reconstruíram o Portão do Peixe, na época em que as muralhas de Jerusalém estavam sendo reparadas sob a direção de Neemias. (Ne 3:3) Hassenaá talvez seja Senaá, sem o artigo definido hebraico. — Esd 2:35; Ne 7:38; veja SENAÁ.

HASSENUA.

1. Pai de Hodavias, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 9:7.

2. Pai ou antepassado de certo Judá, benjamita contemporâneo de Neemias. — Ne 11:7, 9.

HASSUBE [Quem Toma em Conta (Considera)].

1. Filho de Paate-Moabe; um dos que fizeram reparos quando a muralha de Jerusalém estava sendo reconstruída sob a direção de Neemias. — Ne 3:11.

2. Um dos que repararam um setor da muralha de Jerusalém, evidentemente um setor defronte da sua casa. — Ne 3:23.

3. Um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestaram com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 23.

4. Levita merarita; filho de Azricão e pai de Semaías. — 1Cr 9:14; Ne 11:15.

HASUBÁ [Tomar em Conta; Consideração]. Filho de Zorobabel. — 1Cr 3:19, 20.

HASUFA. Antepassado duma família de netineus, da qual alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43; Ne 7:46.

HASUM. Cabeça ancestral duma família de israelitas, da qual alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 19; Ne 7:22) Com a chegada de Esdras a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC, sete homens "dos filhos de Hasum" despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 10:33, 44) O representante da família, ou alguém que tinha o nome de Hasum, estava em pé à esquerda de Esdras, quando este lia o livro da Lei para os israelitas reunidos na praça pública diante do Portão das Águas, de Jerusalém. (Ne 8:1-4) Do mesmo modo, um representante da casa de Hasum atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 18.

HATAQUE. Eunuco do Rei Assuero, designado para assistir a Rainha Ester e por meio de quem ela se comunicava com Mordecai. — Est 4:5, 6, 9, 10.

HATATE. Filho de Otniel, filho de Quenaz, provavelmente por meio de Acsa, filha de Calebe. — 1Cr 4:13; Jos 15:17.

HATIFA [Levado à Força]. Antepassado duma família de escravos netineus do templo, da qual alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 54; Ne 7:56.

HATIL. Cabeça da casa paterna dos filhos "dos servos de Salomão", que retornaram a Jerusalém de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 55, 57; Ne 7:59.

HATITA. Antepassado duma família de porteiros do templo, da qual alguns membros retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 42; Ne 7:45.

HATUS.

1. Um dos cabeças dos sacerdotes que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Ne 12:1, 2, 7.

2. Filho de Semaías; descendente de Davi por meio de Salomão. — 1Cr 3:1, 10, 22.

3. Cabeça da casa paterna dos filhos de Davi, que retornou com Esdras a Jerusalém em 468 AEC. (Esd 8:1, 2) Possivelmente é o N.º 2.

4. Filho de Hasabneias; um dos que participaram em reparar a muralha de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 3:10.

5. Sacerdote, ou antepassado de um, que, quando Neemias era governador, atestou com selo o pacto de confissão. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 4, 8.

HAURÃ [Empalidecido]. Lugar limítrofe na visão de Ezequiel sobre a herança de Israel. (Ez 47:13, 15, 16, 18) Segundo alguns peritos, incluía aproximadamente a mesma região anteriormente abrangida pelo termo "Basã". (Veja BASÃ.) Pelo visto, Haurã é o distrito mencionado em antigos textos egípcios (Huruna) e em documentos assírios de Salmaneser III (Hauranu). Parece também corresponder à região menor chamada de Auranítis nos tempos greco-romanos. O nome Haurã é hoje aplicado à ondulante pradaria de rico solo vermelho entre Damasco e o Iarmuc.

HAVILÁ [[Região de] Areia].

1. Uma terra 'circundada' pelo Píson, um dos quatro rios que se dividiam do rio que saía do Éden. É adicionalmente identificada como terra de ouro bom, bdélio e pedra de ônix. (Gên 2:10-12) Visto que o rio Píson não é mais identificável, continua incerta a localização da terra de Havilá. (Veja PÍSON.) A descrição dos seus recursos é considerada por alguns como tipicamente árabe, e é associada por alguns com uma região na Arábia. À base da referência bíblica a "toda a terra de Havilá", J. Simons sugere que o termo "Havilá" talvez abranja toda a península da Arábia, embora seja difícil de conceber como o rio Píson poderia ter 'circundado' toda aquela região. — The Geographical and Topographical Texts of the Old Testament (Os Textos Geográficos e Topográficos do Antigo Testamento), Leiden, 1959, pp. 40, 41.

2. Segundo Gênesis 25:18, os ismaelitas "passaram a residir desde Havilá, perto de Sur, que está defronte do Egito, até a Assíria". Isto exigiria que Havilá, ou pelo menos parte dela, se estendesse até a península do Sinai ou perto dela, onde provavelmente se encontrava o ermo de Sur. (Veja SUR.) O texto evidentemente mostra que os ismaelitas nômades vagueavam desde a península do Sinai através da Arábia setentrional até a Mesopotâmia. De modo similar, quando o Rei Saul golpeou os amalequitas "desde Havilá até Sur, que está defronte do Egito" (1Sa 15:7), parece que a expressão "desde Havilá" indica uma parte, provavelmente o canto NO, da península da Arábia como representando um dos limites do território em que os amalequitas se concentravam, ao passo que o ermo de Sur, na península do Sinai, representava o outro limite, ou, conforme expresso em The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), "desde o interior desértico do N do Nejd árabe até a região ao N da moderna Suez, no Egito". (Editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 1, p. 101) De modo que parece que abrangia pelo menos a parte NO da península da Arábia e talvez duma região muito maior.

3. Filho de Cus, filho de Cã. (Gên 10:6, 7) Muitos peritos consideram que o nome Havilá, neste texto, também representa uma região, e que o nome talvez passasse a ser aplicado à região povoada pelos descendentes deste filho de Cus. Visto que a maioria dos descendentes de Cus parece ter migrado para a África e para a Arábia, após a dispersão em Babel (Gên 11:9), geralmente se sugere que os descendentes do Havilá cusita devem ser relacionados com a região chamada Haulan em antigas inscrições sabeias. Esta região se encontrava na costa SO da Arábia, ao N do atual Iêmen. Além disso, alguns sugerem que, no decorrer do tempo, migrantes desta tribo cruzaram o Mar Vermelho para a região agora conhecida como Djibuti e Somália, na África, possivelmente preservando-se ali o nome antigo no dos aualis. (A Dictionary of the Bible [Dicionário da Bíblia], editado por J. Hastings, 1903, Vol. II, p. 311) É igualmente possível que a migração tenha ocorrido na direção inversa, isto é, da África para a Arábia. O estreito do Mar Vermelho chamado Bab el-Mandeb, que separa a Arábia de Djibuti, na África, tem apenas uns 32 km de largura.

4. Filho de Joctã e descendente de Sem através de Arpaxade. (Gên 10:22-29) Os nomes de certos outros dos filhos de Joctã, tais como Hazarmavete e Ofir, evidentemente estão relacionados com regiões na Arábia meridional. De modo que parece provável que o Havilá semítico e seus descendentes também se tenham estabelecido na Arábia, embora não necessariamente no S. Alguns o colocariam na região idêntica à do Havilá cusita; mas a mera correspondência dos nomes dificilmente constitui base para se presumir que, apesar das suas diferenças etnológicas, ambos se tenham deslocado para a mesma região. Embora a evidência que relaciona o Havilá cusita com a região no SO da Arábia conhecida como Haulan (mencionado no N.º 3) não seja conclusiva, possibilitando assim a ligação de Haulan com o Havilá semítico, a associação de Haulan com a África e sua proximidade da Etiópia (a terra de Cus) parece favorecer sua vinculação com o Havilá cusita. Nesta base, parece provável que o Havilá que descendeu de Sem ocupava um território mais ao N da Arábia, talvez fornecendo o motivo do nome da terra mencionada no N.º 1.

HAVOTE-JAIR [Aldeias de Tendas de Jair]. Aldeias situadas no território de Manassés ao L do Jordão. Visto que "Gileade" às vezes também denota toda a terra de Israel ao L do Jordão (Jos 22:9), isto talvez explique por que se fala das Havote-Jair como estando em Gileade (Núm 32:40, 41), embora outros textos situem essas aldeias em Basã. — De 3:14; Jos 13:29, 30.

Atribui-se a Jair (descendente de Judá por meio de Esrom, mas também considerado como descendente de Manassés), contemporâneo de Moisés, a captura dessas "aldeias de tendas", evidentemente 23 delas, e dar-lhes o nome de Havote-Jair, segundo o seu próprio. (Núm 32:39-41; De 3:14; 1Cr 2:3, 21-23; veja JAIR N.º 1.) Anos mais tarde, 30 cidades da posse dos 30 filhos do juiz Jair eram conhecidas como Havote-Jair. Alguns críticos consideram isso uma explanação contraditória da origem do nome Havote-Jair. Todavia, o relato de Juízes não declara que o nome Havote-Jair foi pela primeira vez usado neste período posterior. Simplesmente indica que, por ocasião da escrita, o nome ainda era usado e era aplicado a estas 30 cidades. — Jz 10:3, 4.

Durante o reinado de Salomão, as aldeias de tendas de Jair foram incluídas num dos distritos sob um preposto. (1Rs 4:7, 13) As 60 cidades mencionadas em 1 Reis 4:13 e em outros textos (Jos 13:30; 1Cr 2:23) eram naquele tempo cidades fortificadas da região de Argobe, em Basã, e possivelmente não incluíam as numerosas cidadezinhas rurais. (Veja De 3:4, 5.) "As aldeias de tendas" de Jair possivelmente eram distintas das 60 cidades, mas não há certeza disso.

Numa época não especificada da história de Israel, Gesur e a Síria capturaram as Havote-Jair. — 1Cr 2:23.

HAZAEL [Deus Contemplou; Viu]. Este notável rei da Síria evidentemente começou a governar durante o reinado do Rei Jeorão, de Israel (c. 917-905 AEC). (2Rs 8:7-16) Morreu durante o reinado do Rei Jeoás, de Israel (c. 859-845 AEC). (2Rs 13:24, 25) Hazael não era de linhagem real, mas tinha sido apenas um alto funcionário a serviço do seu predecessor, o Rei Ben-Hadade II, da Síria. — 2Rs 8:7-9.

Anos antes do reinado de Hazael, Jeová mandara Elias "ungir Hazael como rei sobre a Síria". O motivo desta designação era que Israel havia pecado contra Deus e Hazael devia executar a punição nessa nação. — 1Rs 19:15-18.

Hazael nunca foi literalmente ungido com óleo, não obstante, a comissão dada a Elias foi cumprida pelo sucessor deste, Eliseu, o profeta. Isto aconteceu quando o rei sírio Ben-Hadade II adoeceu e mandou Hazael a Damasco, principal cidade da Síria. Hazael devia levar um presente e indagar de Eliseu se Ben-Hadade sobreviveria à sua doença. Eliseu disse a Hazael: "Vai, dize [a Ben-Hadade]: 'Positivamente reviverás'", mas o profeta prosseguiu, dizendo: "E Jeová me mostrou que [ele] positivamente morrerá." E disse mais a Hazael: "Jeová me mostrou que eras rei sobre a Síria." Na volta de Hazael, em resposta à pergunta do rei a respeito da resposta de Eliseu, Hazael disse: "Ele me disse: 'Positivamente reviverás'"; mas então, no dia seguinte, Hazael sufocou o rei com uma colcha molhada e começou a governar em lugar dele. — 2Rs 8:7-15.

As palavras de Eliseu a Hazael têm sido motivo de consideráveis conjecturas. Segundo a margem do texto massorético, bem como segundo a Septuaginta grega, a Vulgata latina, a Pesito siríaca e 18 manuscritos hebraicos, o texto reza: "Dize-lhe: 'Positivamente reviverás'", ao passo que o corpo principal do texto massorético diz: "Dize: 'Positivamente não reviverás.'"

Caso se presuma que se mandou Hazael dizer a Ben-Hadade: "'Positivamente reviverás'", a resposta de Eliseu à indagação de Ben-Hadade talvez tenha sido na forma dum enigma, significando que a própria doença de Ben-Hadade não o mataria, mas que ele não obstante morreria (assim como morreu, às mãos de Hazael). De qualquer modo, Hazael transmitiu ao rei verbalmente a primeira parte da resposta de Eliseu: "Positivamente reviverás", mas o restante da resposta Hazael executou numa ação violenta. — 2Rs 8:10.

Hazael Oprime Israel. Pouco depois de tornar-se rei, Hazael travou guerra com os reis de Israel e de Judá, em Ramote-Gileade (Ramá). Naquela ocasião, o Rei Jeorão, de Israel, foi ferido, mas o resultado da própria batalha não é declarado no relato. (2Rs 8:25-29; 2Cr 22:1-6) Nos dias do Rei Jeú, de Israel, sucessor de Jeorão, Hazael começou a tomar a terra de Israel pedaço por pedaço, capturando Gileade e Basã, ao L do Jordão. (2Rs 10:32, 33) Parece que isto abriu o caminho para a sua posterior invasão do reino de Judá. Hazael tomou a cidade de Gate, na Filístia, e depois fixou a face em Jerusalém, para subir contra ela. Todavia, o Rei Jeoás, de Judá, subornou Hazael por dar-lhe coisas valiosas do templo e do palácio, de modo que Hazael se retirou, poupando Jerusalém. — 2Rs 12:17, 18.

Especialmente durante o reinado do filho de Jeú, Jeoacaz, de Israel, Hazael tornou-se grande opressor de Israel, cumprindo o que o profeta Eliseu havia previsto — que Hazael entregaria ao fogo os lugares fortificados de Israel, mataria seus homens seletos à espada, despedaçaria seus filhos e estriparia suas mulheres grávidas. (2Rs 13:3, 22; 8:12) Todavia, Deus não permitiu que a Síria esmagasse Israel totalmente. (2Rs 13:4, 5) Após a morte de Hazael, o rei Jeoás, de Israel, em três vitórias, recapturou de Ben-Hadade III, filho de Hazael, as cidades que Hazael havia tirado do Rei Jeoacaz, seu pai. (2Rs 13:23-25) Mais tarde, Jeroboão II, de Israel, "restaurou Damasco e Hamate a Judá, em Israel". — 2Rs 14:28.

Em Antigas Inscrições. Hazael é mencionado numa inscrição histórica encontrada num lugar agora chamado Afis, a uns 40 km ao SO de Alepo. Esta inscrição concorda com a Bíblia, no sentido de que Ben-Hadade III, filho de Hazael, aqui chamado de "Bar-Hadade", lhe sucedeu como rei da Síria.

As campanhas de Salmaneser III contra a Síria estão registradas nos seus anais, em que ele relata as suas vitórias sobre Hazael. Nestes anais, Hazael é chamado de plebeu (literalmente: filho de ninguém), sem dúvida porque não era de ascendência real, mas tomou o trono de Damasco por assassinar o Rei Ben-Hadade II. Uma destas inscrições reza: "No décimo oitavo ano do meu governo, cruzei o Eufrates pela décima sexta vez. Hazael, de Damasco (Imerisu), pôs a sua confiança no seu numeroso exército e convocou suas tropas em grande número, transformando o monte Senir (Sa-ni-ru), um monte, confrontando o Líbano, em sua fortaleza. Lutei com ele e infligi-lhe uma derrota, matando com a espada 16.000 de seus soldados experientes. Tirei-lhe 1.121 carros, 470 cavalos de monta, bem como seu acampamento. Ele desapareceu para salvar a sua vida (mas) eu o segui e o sitiei em Damasco (Di-mas-qi), sua residência régia. (Ali) destrocei seus jardins (fora da cidade, e parti). Marchei até os montes de Hauran (sade[e] [mat]Ha-u-ra-ni), destruindo, derrubando e incendiando inúmeras cidades, levando delas despojos além de conta." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 280.

Todavia, Salamaneser III evidentemente fracassou em tomar a própria Damasco. Pelo visto, isto ficou a cargo de Tiglate-Pileser III, nos dias do rei sírio Rezim. Isto cumpriu a profecia de Jeová por meio de Amós: "Vou enviar fogo sobre a casa de Hazael e terá de devorar as torres de habitação de Ben-Hadade. E quebrarei a tranca de Damasco." — Am 1:4, 5; 2Rs 16:9.

HAZAÍAS [Jah Contemplou; Viu]. Descendente de Selá, filho de Judá. — Ne 11:4, 5; Núm 26:20.

HAZAR-ADAR [Pátio (Povoado) de Adar]. Cidade na fronteira meridional de Judá, talvez a Adar perto de Cades-Barneia. — Núm 34:4; Jos 15:3; veja ADAR, II N.º 2.

HAZAR-ENÃ, HAZAR-ENOM [Pátio (Povoado) da Fonte (Manancial)]. Um lugar na fronteira setentrional da "terra de Canaã". (Núm 34:2, 7-10) Ezequiel mencionou Hazar-Enom (Hazar-Enã), junto com Damasco e Hamate, na sua previsão do território de Israel. (Ez 47:13, 17; 48:1) Atualmente não é possível fazer uma identificação positiva do lugar. Todavia, a maioria dos peritos tentativamente o situam em Qaryatein, a uns 120 km ao NE de Damasco, na estrada de Palmira.

HAZAR-GADA [Pátio (Povoado) de Gada]. Cidade em Judá meridional (Jos 15:21, 27); sua localização é desconhecida.

HAZARMAVETE [Pátio (Povoado) de Morte]. Descendente de Noé através de Sem e de Joctã. (Gên 10:1, 21, 25, 26; 1Cr 1:20) Acredita-se geralmente que os descendentes de Hazarmavete se estabeleceram na região de Hadramaute, na Arábia meridional. A relação entre Hadramaute e Hazarmavete é sugerida pela similaridade das consoantes nos nomes originais hebraicos e árabes. Os limites geográficos de Hadramaute não estão bem definidos. Tem aproximadamente 880 km de comprimento e 240 km de largura. A planície costeira é um tanto estreita, e dali a terra se eleva de forma íngreme, formando um planalto pedregoso com uma altitude média de 900 a 1.200 m. Muitos vales de torrente fundos, beirados por penhascos, cortam o planalto. Estes vales são muito férteis. Vicejam ali palmeiras e tamareiras; ovelhas, camelos, jumentos e gado bovino encontram ali pastos; e painço, alfafa, índigo, algodão e milho estão entre as culturas ali. O principal vale de torrente é o uádi Hadramaute. Esta corrente inicia seu curso uns 480 km da costa O da península da Arábia, e faz uma curva gradual para o L, por uns 640 km, desembocando finalmente no mar Arábico como o uádi Masila (nome aplicado ao seu curso inferior). A região de Hadramaute desempenhava antigamente um papel importante por causa do seu comércio de incenso. Mas o olíbano, antigamente abundante ali, agora é escasso.

HAZAR-SUAL [Pátio (Povoado) da Raposa]. Cidade de Simeão encravada no S de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 28; 19:1-3; 1Cr 4:28) Foi novamente ocupada após o exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:25-27) Sua localização é incerta; alguns peritos sugerem uma identificação com Khirbet el-Watan, a uns 3 km ao ESE de Berseba.

HAZAR-SUSA [Pátio (Povoado) da Égua]. Cidade simeonita encravada na parte meridional de Judá (Jos 19:1, 2, 5) também chamada de Hazar-Susim. (1Cr 4:31) Uma lista similar de cidades originalmente designadas a Judá tem o nome "Sansana" em lugar de Hazar-Susa. (Jos 15:21, 31) Alguns as consideram como lugares distintos, colocando Sansana ao NNE de Berseba e Hazar-Susa a uns 26 km ao O de Berseba, em Sbalat Abu Susein, perto das planícies da Filístia. Diversos peritos, porém, acham provável que Hazar-Susa simplesmente seja um segundo nome para Sansana, sendo que tal nome secundário, pelo seu significado, descreve uma notável função do lugar. Se Hazar-Susa for Sansana, então poderá tentativamente ser identificada com Khirbet esh-Shamsaniyat, ao NNE de Berseba, a pouca distância do lugar sugerido de Madmana (provavelmente Bete-Marcabote), mencionada antes (de Hazar-Susa, Hazar-Susim ou Sansana) nos textos acima. — Veja BETE-MARCABOTE.

HAZAR-SUSIM. Veja HAZAR-SUSA.

HAZAZOM-TAMAR [[Encosta de] Cascalho da Palmeira]. Cidade habitada por amorreus e evidentemente situada na vizinhança da Baixada de Sidim. O Rei Quedorlaomer e seus aliados derrotaram os amorreus que moravam em Hazazom-Tamar. (Gên 14:5-8) Séculos mais tarde, as forças conjuntas de Moabe, Amom e da região montanhosa de Seir vieram contra Judá pelo caminho de "Ha-zazom-Tamar, isto é, En-Gedi". (2Cr 20:2, 10, 11) Muitos peritos acham que a referência de Gênesis indica um lugar a certa distância ao S de En-Gedi, e, por isso, consideram as palavras "isto é, En-Gedi", como acréscimo posterior. O nome "Hazazom-Tamar", porém, parece estar preservado no do uádi Hasasa (Nahal Hazezon), a uns 10 km ao N do lugar sugerido para En-Gedi. Também, o significado de Hazazom-Tamar se ajustaria à região de En-Gedi, descrita por Josefo como lugar onde são cultivadas "as melhores palmeiras". (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], IX, 7 [i, 2]) Portanto, se esta passagem de Gênesis se referir a uma localização mais sulina, existiam possivelmente dois lugares chamados Hazazom-Tamar: um ligado a En-Gedi, o outro talvez sendo o lugar ao SO do Mar Morto, chamado simplesmente de Tamar. — Ez 47:19; 48:28.

HAZELELPONI [possivelmente: Ofereça Sombra à Minha Face]. Provavelmente a filha "do pai de Étão"; irmã de Jezreel, Isma e Idbas. — 1Cr 4:1, 3.

HAZER-HATICOM. Lugar mencionado na visão de Ezequiel como termo de Israel e como estando "na direção do termo de Haurã". (Ez 47:13, 16) Desconhece-se um lugar com este nome; alguns o consideram erro de escriba, devendo ser "Hazar-Enom". — Ez 47:16, 17; veja HAZAR-ENÃ, HAZAR-ENOM.

HAZEROTE [Pátios; Povoados]. Último lugar de acampamento de Israel antes de entrar no ermo de Parã. (Núm 11:35; 12:16; 33:17, 18; De 1:1) Em Hazerote, Miriã foi atacada de lepra, depois de ela e Arão terem questionado a autoridade de Moisés e de este ter tomado uma esposa cusita. (Núm 11:35; 12:1-16) A maioria dos peritos relaciona o Hazerote bíblico com o oásis ʽAin Khadra, a uns 60 km ao NE do lugar tradicional do monte Sinai.

HAZIEL [Deus Contemplou; Viu]. Filho de Simei; levita gersonita no tempo de Davi. — 1Cr 23:6-9.

HAZO [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Hazael, que significa "Deus Contemplou; Viu"]. Sobrinho de Abraão; quinto filho mencionado de Naor e Milca. — Gên 22:20-22.

HAZOR [Pátio; Povoado].

1. Principal cidade do N de Canaã na época da conquista feita por Israel sob Josué. (Jos 11:10) Hazor tem sido identificada com Tell el-Qedah (Tel Hazor), situado a uns 11 km ao SSE do lugar sugerido de Quedes. Segundo o arqueólogo Yigael Yadin, sob cuja direção se fizeram escavações neste lugar, de 1955 a 1958, e de 1968 a 1969, a Hazor da época de Josué abrangia uma área de aproximadamente 60 ha e podia ter comportado de 25.000 a 30.000 habitantes.

Ruínas dos portões de Hazor, que evidentemente remontam ao tempo de Salomão.

Jabim, rei de Hazor, conduziu as forças unidas de Canaã setentrional contra Josué, mas sofreu uma humilhante derrota. A própria Hazor foi incendiada, a única cidade construída sobre uma elevação a ser tratada assim. (Jos 11:1-13) Embora Hazor fosse mais tarde designada à tribo de Naftali (Jos 19:32, 35, 36), no tempo de Débora e de Baraque era a sede de outro poderoso rei cananeu, também chamado Jabim. — Jz 4:2, 17; 1Sa 12:9.

Num período posterior, Hazor, igual a Gezer e Megido, foi fortificada pelo Rei Salomão. (1Rs 9:15) Achados arqueológicos indicam que os portões dessas três cidades eram de construção similar. Relatando sobre as escavações em Hazor, Yigael Yadin, na sua obra The Art of Warfare in Biblical Lands (A Arte de Guerra em Terras Bíblicas; 1963, Vol. II, p. 288), escreve: "Ao passo que os primeiros indícios do portão desta muralha começaram a emergir do pó e da terra, removidos com cuidado, ficamos impressionados com a sua similaridade com o 'Portão de Salomão', que havia sido descoberto em Megido. Antes de prosseguirmos com a escavação, fizemos marcações provisórias no solo, seguindo nosso cálculo da planta do portão à base do portão de Megido. E então dissemos aos trabalhadores que prosseguissem com a remoção dos escombros. Quando eles tinham terminado, olharam para nós com espanto, como se fôssemos mágicos ou adivinhos. Porque ali, diante de nós, estava o portão, cujos contornos havíamos marcado, uma réplica do portão de Megido. Isto não somente provou que ambos os portões tinham sido construídos por Salomão, mas também que ambos tinham seguido uma única planta-mestra."

Mais de 200 anos após a morte de Salomão, durante o reinado do rei israelita Peca, o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III conquistou Hazor e levou seus habitantes ao exílio. — 2Rs 15:29.

2. Cidade de Judá no Negebe, talvez vinculada com el-Jebariyeh, situada a uns 24 km ao ENE do lugar sugerido de Cades-Barneia (provavelmente Quedes). — Jos 15:21, 23.

3. Outro nome de Queriote-Esrom, cidade de Judá, geralmente identificada com Khirbet el-Qaryatein (Tel Qeriyyot), situada a uns 20 km ao S de Hébron. — Jos 15:21, 25.

4. Cidade situada no território de Benjamim. (Ne 11:31, 33) Khirbet Hazzur, situada a uns 7 km ao NO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém, tem sido sugerida como localização provável dela.

5. Região no deserto da Arábia ao leste do Jordão, mencionada na profecia de Jeremias como destinada a ser despojada pelo Rei Nabucodorosor (Nabucodonosor) de Babilônia. — Je 49:28-33.

HAZOR-HADATA [provavelmente: O Novo Pátio (Povoado)]. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 25) Desconhece-se sua localização exata.

HÊ [ה] (he'). Quinta letra do alfabeto hebraico. Na pronúncia, he' tem um som gutural situado entre o 'a'leph (álefe) mais brando e o mais duro hhehth (hete). De modo que corresponde em geral a um "h" aspirado, similar ao som de "h" em inglês, na palavra "behind", ou à pronúncia carioca de "r" inicial. No hebraico, aparece no começo de cada verso do Salmo 119:33-40. As letras he' [ה] e hhehth [ח] hete] têm forma bem similar. — Veja HEBRAICO.

HÉBER [Parceiro; Sócio].

1. Filho de Berias e neto de Aser; cabeça ancestral dos heberitas. — Gên 46:17; Núm 26:45; 1Cr 7:30-32.

2. Marido queneu de Jael (a mulher que matou Sísera, chefe do exército de Jabim) e descendente de Hobabe, "de quem Moisés era genro". Evidentemente, Héber se havia separado dos demais queneus e estava em paz com Jabim, rei de Hazor. — Jz 4:11, 17, 21; 5:24.

3. Homem da tribo de Judá e "pai de Soco". — 1Cr 4:1, 18.

4. Descendente de Elpaal; cabeça duma casa paterna da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 17, 18, 28.

HEBERITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Héber]. Família aserita descendente de Héber. — Núm 26:44, 45.

HEBRAICO. O idioma hebraico foi usado para a escrita da maior parte das Escrituras inspiradas — 39 livros ao todo (segundo a divisão da matéria conforme encontrada em muitas traduções), constituindo cerca de três quartos do conteúdo total da Bíblia. Pequenos trechos destes livros, porém, foram escritos em aramaico. — Veja ARAMAICO.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra "hebraico", ou "hebreu", não é aplicada ao idioma, mas o termo "hebreu" é aplicado apenas a pessoas ou ao povo de Israel como um todo. Faz-se referência ao "idioma judaico" (2Rs 18:26, 28), ao "judaico" (Ne 13:24) e ao "idioma de Canaã" (Is 19:18), o qual, naquele tempo (o oitavo século AEC), era primariamente o hebraico. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, porém, o termo "hebraico" é regularmente aplicado ao idioma falado pelos judeus. — Veja HEBREU.

Origem do Idioma Hebraico. A história secular não revela a origem do idioma hebraico — quanto a isso, nem a da maioria dos antigos idiomas conhecidos, tais como o sumeriano, o acadiano (assírio-babilônico), o aramaico e o egípcio. Isto se dá porque esses idiomas aparecem já plenamente desenvolvidos nos mais antigos registros escritos encontrados pelos homens. (Veja IDIOMA, LÍNGUA.) Os diversos conceitos apresentados pelos peritos sobre a origem e o desenvolvimento do hebraico — tais como os que afirmam que o hebraico derivou do aramaico ou de algum dialeto cananeu — portanto, são conjecturas. O mesmo se pode dizer a respeito das tentativas de explicar a derivação de muitas das palavras encontradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Os peritos frequentemente atribuem uma origem acadiana ou aramaica a muitas destas palavras. Todavia, conforme comenta o Dr. Edward Horowitz: "No campo da etimologia [estudo da origem das palavras] há enormes diferenças de opinião entre os peritos, mesmo entre os melhores." Ele cita então exemplos de explicações da etimologia de certas palavras hebraicas, por famosos peritos, mostrando em cada caso que outros peritos de destaque discordam, e então acrescenta: "E temos assim estas intermináveis diferenças entre autoridades de igual alta respeitabilidade." — How the Hebrew Language Grew (Como Se Desenvolveu a Língua Hebraica), 1960, pp. xix, xx.

A Bíblia é a única fonte histórica que apresenta evidência fidedigna da origem do idioma que conhecemos como hebraico. Naturalmente, este era falado pelos descendentes israelitas de "Abraão, o hebreu" (Gên 14:13), o qual, por sua vez, descendeu de Sem, filho de Noé. (Gên 11:10-26) Em vista da bênção profética de Deus sobre Sem (Gên 9:26), é razoável crer que o idioma de Sem não foi afetado quando Deus confundiu em Babel o idioma do povo desaprovado. (Gên 11:5-9) O idioma de Sem permaneceria o mesmo, aquele "um só idioma" que existiu desde Adão. (Gên 11:1) Isto significaria que a língua que por fim veio a ser chamada de hebraica era o único idioma original da humanidade. Conforme já declarado, a história secular não conhece outro.

A Questão da Estabilidade do Idioma. A história está repleta de exemplos de línguas que mudaram no decorrer de longos períodos de tempo. O inglês falado na época de Alfredo, o Grande (do nono século EC), pareceria ser uma língua estrangeira para a maioria dos que hoje falam o inglês. Portanto, parece provável que o idioma falado originalmente por Adão já tivesse mudado substancialmente na época em que Moisés começou a escrever as Escrituras Hebraicas. A vida longa usufruída naquele período de 2.500 anos, porém, seria um fator definitivo contrário a tais mudanças. Assim, precisava haver apenas um só elo humano, Metusalém, para ligar Adão com os sobreviventes do Dilúvio. Além disso, Sem, que evidentemente fora contemporâneo antediluviano de Metusalém por diversos anos, viveu ainda bastante tempo durante o período de vida de Isaque. E desde a morte de Isaque (1738 AEC) até o nascimento de Moisés (1593 AEC) decorreram menos de 150 anos. Esta sobreposição de vida de pessoas distanciadas por várias gerações serviria para manter o idioma uniforme. Naturalmente, nem sempre é conhecido até que ponto esses elos humanos, tais como Sem e Abraão, viveram numa proximidade geográfica. A comunicação regular é um fator importante na estabilidade dum idioma.

Que nem todos os descendentes de Sem continuaram a falar o "um só idioma" dos tempos antediluvianos, na sua forma mais pura, é evidente nas diferenças que se desenvolveram nos idiomas semíticos, inclusive no hebraico, no aramaico, no acadiano e nos diversos dialetos árabes. No século 18 AEC (por volta do ano 1761 AEC), o neto e o sobrinho-neto de Abraão usaram termos diferentes para o montão de pedras que haviam erigido como memorial ou testemunho entre eles. Jacó, pai dos israelitas, chamou-o de "Galeede", ao passo que Labão, habitante da Síria ou de Arã (embora não fosse descendente de Arã), usou o termo aramaico "Jegar-Saaduta". (Gên 31:47) A diferença entre estes dois termos, porém, não indica necessariamente uma grande diferença entre o aramaico e o hebraico naquela época, visto que Jacó não parece ter tido grandes problemas em comunicar-se ali na Síria. Sem dúvida, ao surgirem novas circunstâncias e situações, e ao se produzirem novos artefatos, cunhavam-se certas palavras para descrever esses desenvolvimentos. Tais termos talvez diferissem de lugar em lugar entre grupos da mesma família linguística, mas geograficamente separados, ao passo que a própria estrutura de seu idioma permanecesse bastante inalterada.

Entre os próprios israelitas desenvolveram-se pequenas variações de pronúncia, conforme evidencia a pronúncia diferente dada à palavra "Xibolete" pelos efraimitas durante o período dos juízes (1473 a 1117 AEC). (Jz 12:4-6) No entanto, isto não constitui base para se afirmar (conforme fizeram alguns) que os israelitas então falavam dialetos diferentes.

No oitavo século AEC, a diferença entre o hebraico e o aramaico ficara suficientemente grande para que fossem reconhecidos como idiomas distintos. Isto se evidencia na solicitação que os representantes do Rei Ezequias fizeram aos porta-vozes do rei assírio, Senaqueribe: "Por favor, fala com os teus servos em sírio [aramaico], pois podemos escutar; e não nos fales no idioma judaico, aos ouvidos do povo que está sobre a muralha." (2Rs 18:17, 18, 26)

Embora o aramaico fosse então a língua franca do Oriente Médio e fosse usado nas comunicações diplomáticas internacionais, não era entendido pela maioria do povo de Judá. Os mais antigos documentos não bíblicos escritos em aramaico, de que há conhecimento, são de aproximadamente daquele período, e eles confirmam a diferença entre os dois idiomas.

Será que tanto o hebraico como o aramaico divergiam daquele "um só idioma" original, ou preservou um deles a pureza daquele idioma original? Embora a Bíblia não diga isso especificamente, subentende-se que o idioma em que Moisés começou a escrever o inspirado Registro Sagrado era o mesmo que o falado pelo primeiro homem.

Se a história fosse assentada por escrito antes do Dilúvio, ela contribuiria muito para a preservação da pureza da língua original. Mesmo transmitindo-se esta história por tradição oral, ainda assim serviria para manter a estabilidade da fala original. O extremo cuidado com que os judeus de tempos posteriores se empenhavam em preservar a verdadeira forma do Registro Sagrado ilustra a preocupação que certamente se teria mostrado nos tempos patriarcais para transmitir com exatidão os mais antigos registros dos tratos de Deus com os homens.

Um motivo adicional para crer que o hebraico da Bíblia representa com exatidão o "um só idioma" dos tempos antes de Babel é a notável estabilidade do idioma hebraico durante o período de mil anos em que se escreveram as Escrituras Hebraicas. Conforme declara The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional): "Um dos fatos mais notáveis relacionados com o hebraico do V[elho] T[estamento] é que, embora essa literatura se estenda por um período de mais de mil anos, a língua (gramática e vocabulário) das partes mais antigas difere pouco daquela das mais recentes." — Editada por G. W. Bromiley, 1982, Vol. 2, p. 659.

O Conhecimento do Idioma É Incompleto. Na realidade, o conhecimento do hebraico antigo de modo algum é completo. Conforme diz o Professor Burton L. Goddard: "O hebraico do V[elho] T[estamento], em grande parte, tem de ser autoexplanatório." (The Zondervan Pictorial Bible Dictionary [O Dicionário Pictórico da Bíblia, de Zondervan], editado por M. Tenney, 1963, p. 345) O motivo é que se encontraram muito poucos escritos contemporâneos no idioma hebraico, que pudessem contribuir para o entendimento do uso das palavras. Entre os de certa importância há o calendário de Gezer (uma simples lista de atividades agrícolas, que se acha remontar ao décimo século AEC; FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 960), alguns óstracos (cacos inscritos de cerâmica) de Samaria (principalmente pedidos e recibos de vinho, azeite e cevada, e geralmente atribuídos à primeira parte do oitavo século AEC), a inscrição de Siloé (encontrada num túnel de água em Jerusalém e que se acredita datar do reinado do Rei Ezequias [745-717 AEC]), e os óstracos de Laquis (provavelmente da última parte do sétimo século AEC).

Além disso, há uma inscrição fenícia no sarcófago do Rei Airão, em Biblos (Gebal), cuja linguagem se assemelha muito ao hebraico, e que se pensa ser do começo do primeiro milênio AEC; também a Pedra Moabita, pelo visto do começo do nono século AEC. A língua na Pedra Moabita é bem similar ao hebraico, conforme é de esperar, visto que os moabitas descenderam de Ló, sobrinho de Abraão. — Gên 19:30-37.

A soma das informações em todas estas inscrições, porém, é apenas uma pequena fração das encontradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas.

As próprias Escrituras Hebraicas, embora abranjam uma ampla variedade de assuntos e empreguem um vocabulário extenso, de modo algum contêm todas as palavras ou expressões do antigo hebraico. Por exemplo, a inscrição de Siloé e os óstracos de Laquis contêm certas construções de palavras e gramaticais que não aparecem nas Escrituras Hebraicas, no entanto, essas construções são claramente de origem hebraica. Sem dúvida, o vocabulário antigo dos que falavam hebraico continha muito mais "raízes", além de milhares de palavras derivadas delas, do que conhecemos hoje.

Além das partes da Bíblia de que se sabe definitivamente que foram escritas em aramaico, há um número bastante grande de palavras e expressões encontradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas de que se desconhecem as "raízes". Os lexicógrafos classificam muitas delas como "estrangeirismos", afirmando que o hebraico as adotou de outras línguas semíticas, tais como o aramaico, o acadiano ou o árabe. Todavia, isto é especulação. Conforme declara Edward Horowitz: "Mas, às vezes, a adoção de termos é tão antiga, que os peritos não sabem que idioma os adotou e qual era o dono original." (How the Hebrew Language Grew, pp. 3, 5) Parece mais provável que tais termos questionados sejam genuinamente hebraicos e constituam evidência adicional da deficiência do conhecimento moderno do alcance deste idioma antigo.

Entre as evidências que indicam que o hebraico antigo tinha um abundante vocabulário há escritos do começo da Era Comum. Estes incluem escritos religiosos não bíblicos, que fazem parte dos Rolos do Mar Morto, e também a Míxena, um conjunto de escritos rabínicos em hebraico e que tratam das tradições judaicas. O Professor Meyer Waxman, es-crevendo em The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana; 1956, Vol. XIV, p. 57a), diz: "O hebraico bíblico . . . não esgota todo o estoque de palavras, conforme é provado pela Míxena, a qual emprega centenas de palavras hebraicas não encontradas na Bíblia." Naturalmente, algumas destas podem ter sido acréscimos posteriores ou expressões cunhadas, mas, sem dúvida, muitas delas faziam parte do vocabulário hebraico durante o período da escrita das Escrituras Hebraicas.

Quando Começou a Desvanecer o Hebraico? Acredita-se popularmente que os judeus começaram a mudar para a língua aramaica durante o seu exílio em Babilônia. No entanto, a evidência para isso não é forte. Exemplos modernos mostram que grupos subjugados ou imigrantes podem reter e frequentemente retêm sua língua nativa durante períodos muito maiores do que 70 anos. Especialmente, visto que os judeus tinham a promessa divina de retornar à sua pátria, seria de esperar que estivessem pouco inclinados a abandonar o hebraico em favor quer do acadiano (assírio-babilônico), quer do aramaico, a língua franca daquele tempo. É verdade que se encontram passagens e palavras aramaicas nos livros exílicos e pós-exílicos, tais como Daniel, Esdras e Ester. No entanto, isto não é incomum, visto que estes livros incluem relatos de eventos que ocorreram em terras de língua aramaica, bem como correspondência oficial, e visto que tratam dum povo sujeito ao domínio de potências estrangeiras, que usavam o aramaico como língua diplomática.

Neemias 8:8 explica que 'se fornecia esclarecimento' e 'se dava o sentido' na leitura da Lei. Tem-se sugerido que o hebraico talvez não fosse então perfeitamente entendido pelos exilados que retornaram e que se faziam paráfrases aramaicas. Isso pode ser verdade. Mas o texto destaca especificamente a exposição do sentido e a aplicação daquilo que se ensinava na Lei. — Veja Mt 13:14, 51, 52; Lu 24:27; At 8:30, 31.

Realmente, não há na Bíblia nenhuma referência a se ter abandonado o hebraico como língua cotidiana do povo. É verdade que Neemias encontrou certos judeus que tinham esposa asdodita, amonita e moabita, e cujos filhos não 'sabiam falar judaico'. Mas a menção deste fator em conexão com a indignação de Neemias com os judeus envolvidos nestes casamentos com não israelitas indica que se desaprovava muito tal desprezo pelo hebraico. (Ne 13:23-27) Isto seria de esperar, em vista da importância dada à leitura da Palavra de Deus, que até então era principalmente em hebraico.

O período decorrido desde o término do cânon hebraico (provavelmente no tempo de Esdras e de Malaquias, no quinto século AEC) até o começo da Era Comum, praticamente não é considerado na Bíblia. Também há poucos registros seculares. Mesmo estes, porém, não dão muito apoio à ocorrência duma mudança do hebraico para o aramaico por parte do povo judeu. A evidência indica que muitos dos livros apócrifos, tais como Judite, Eclesiástico (não Eclesiastes), Baruque e Primeiro Macabeus, foram escritos em hebraico, e estas obras são em geral consideradas como datando dos últimos três séculos antes da Era Comum. Conforme já mencionado, alguns dos escritos não bíblicos entre os Rolos do Mar Morto também eram em hebraico, e o hebraico foi usado para compilar a Míxena judaica após o começo da Era Comum.

Por causa destes e de outros fatores relacionados, o Dr. William Chomsky declara que a teoria de alguns peritos judeus e não judeus, de que o aramaico substituíra totalmente o hebraico, não tem nenhum fundamento e tem sido eficazmente refutada. Se é que aconteceu alguma coisa, é mais provável que os judeus se tenham tornado bilíngues, mas com o hebraico qual língua preferida. Conforme o Dr. Chomsky diz a respeito do hebraico da Míxena: "Este idioma tem todos os sinais duma típica língua vernácula usada pelos camponeses, pelos mercadores e pelos artesãos. . . . À base da evidência disponível, parece justo concluir que os judeus, em geral, durante o período da Segunda Comunidade, especialmente na sua parte final, estavam familiarizados com ambos os idiomas [hebraico e aramaico]. Às vezes usavam um, outras vezes, o outro." — Hebrew: The Eternal Language (Hebraico: O Idioma Eterno), 1969, pp. 207, 210.

No entanto, a evidência mais forte que favorece o conceito de que o hebraico continuou como língua viva até dentro do primeiro século da Era Comum é encontrada nas referências ao idioma hebraico nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Jo 5:2; 19:13, 17, 20; 20:16; Re 9:11; 16:16) Embora muitos peritos sustentem que o termo "hebraico", nestas referências, devia rezar "aramaico", há bons motivos para se crer que o termo realmente se aplica ao idioma hebraico, conforme se mostra no artigo ARAMAICO. Quando o médico Lucas diz que Paulo falou ao povo de Jerusalém "no idioma hebraico", parece pouco provável que ele se referisse ao idioma aramaico ou sírio. (At 21:40; 22:2; compare isso com 26:14.) Visto que as Escrituras Hebraicas já antes diferenciavam o aramaico (sírio) e o "idioma judaico" (2Rs 18:26), e visto que o historiador judeu Josefo, do primeiro século, ao considerar esta passagem da Bíblia, fala do "aramaico" e do "hebraico" como línguas distintas (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], X, 8 [i, 2]), não parece haver motivo para os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs dizerem "hebraico" quando queriam dizer aramaico ou sírio.

Que naquela época o aramaico era amplamente usado na Palestina é reconhecido. O uso do aramaico "Bar" (filho), em vez do hebraico "Ben", em diversos nomes (tais como Bartolomeu e Simão Barjonas) é uma evidência de que o aramaico era conhecido. Naturalmente, alguns judeus também tinham nome grego, como André e Filipe, e isto por si só não prova que sua língua normal fosse o grego, assim como o nome latino de Marcos tampouco prova que o latim fosse a língua falada pela sua família. Evidentemente, quatro idiomas eram comuns na Palestina no primeiro século da Era Comum: os três mencionados na Bíblia como aparecendo no letreiro acima da cabeça de Jesus quando estava pregado na estaca (hebraico, latim e grego [Jo 19:19, 20]), e o quarto, o aramaico. Dentre estes, o latim, sem dúvida, era o menos comum.

É bem possível que Jesus usasse ocasionalmente o aramaico, como quando falou com a mulher sirofenícia. (Mr 7:24-30) Certas expressões registradas como usadas por ele são geralmente consideradas de origem aramaica. No entanto, mesmo neste caso é preciso usar de cautela, visto que a classificação dessas expressões como aramaicas não deixa de ser questionável. Por exemplo, as palavras faladas por Jesus enquanto estava pregado na estaca: "Eli, Eli, lama sabactâni?" (Mt 27:46; Mr 15:34), costumam ser consideradas aramaicas, talvez num dialeto galileu. No entanto, The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete) diz: "As opiniões estão divididas quanto ao idioma original da declaração e quanto a se o próprio Jesus teria usado de modo mais natural o hebraico ou o aramaico. . . . Há documentos que indicam que uma forma de hebraico, um pouco influenciado pelo aramaico, talvez tenha sido usado na Palestina no primeiro século A.D." (Editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 86) Na realidade, a transliteração grega dessas palavras, conforme registradas por Mateus e por Marcos, não permite uma identificação positiva do idioma original usado.

O testemunho de que o Evangelho de Mateus foi originalmente escrito por ele em hebraico é mais uma evidência do continuado uso desta língua no período apostólico.

Portanto, parece que o hebraico começou a desvanecer depois e em resultado da destruição de Jerusalém e do seu templo, no ano 70 EC, e da dispersão dos habitantes remanescentes. Não obstante, continuava a ser usado nas sinagogas onde quer que houvesse judeus dispersos. Especialmente a partir de cerca do sexto século EC, os peritos judeus conhecidos como massoretas fizeram esforços zelosos de manter a pureza do texto hebraico das Escrituras. E especialmente a partir do século 16, reviveu o interesse no hebraico antigo, e no século seguinte houve o começo dum estudo intensivo de outras línguas semíticas. Isto tem contribuído para esclarecer o entendimento do idioma antigo e tem resultado em melhores traduções das Escrituras Hebraicas.

Alfabeto e Escrita Hebraicos. O alfabeto hebraico compunha-se de 22 consoantes; diversas destas evidentemente podem representar dois sons, dando o total de uns 28 sons. Os sons vocálicos eram supridos pelo leitor, que se guiava pelo contexto, similar a quando alguém supre as vogais em abreviaturas tais como "btl." (batalhão), "Drs." (doutores) e "Snr." ou "Sr." (senhor). Acredita-se que a tradicional pronúncia das Escrituras Hebraicas foi mantida viva e transmitida pelos especializados em ler a Lei, os Profetas e os Salmos para a instrução do povo. Daí, na segunda metade do primeiro milênio EC, os massoretas inventaram um sistema de pontos e de traços, chamados de sinais vocálicos, e estes foram inseridos no texto consonantal. Além disso, acrescentaram-se certos acentos para indicar a sílaba tônica, pausas, ligações entre palavras e frases, e notações musicais.

As mais antigas inscrições hebraicas conhecidas estão preservadas numa antiga escrita de forma consideravelmente diferente dos caracteres hebraicos quadrados em documentos posteriores, tais como os dos primeiros séculos da Era Comum. O estilo de escrita quadrado é frequentemente chamado de "aramaico", ou "assírio". Acredita-se que a mudança dos caracteres hebraicos antigos para os caracteres hebraicos quadrados ocorreu durante o exílio babilônico. Todavia, conforme diz Ernst Würthwein: "Por muito tempo, a escrita hebraica antiga continuou em uso ao lado da escrita quadrada. As moedas do período da revolta de Bar Kochba (Barcocheba) (A.D. 132-135) ostentam caracteres hebraicos antigos. Entre os textos encontrados nas cavernas do Mar Morto há alguns escritos em hebraico antigo." — The Text of the Old Testament (O Texto do Antigo Testamento), 1979, p. 5.

Orígenes, escritor cristão do segundo e terceiro séculos EC, declarou que, nas cópias mais corretas das traduções gregas das Escrituras Hebraicas, escreveu-se o Tetragrama, ou o nome sagrado de Jeová, em caracteres hebraicos antigos. Isto tem sido confirmado pela descoberta de rolos fragmentários de couro, que datam do primeiro século EC, os quais contêm os profetas "menores" em grego. Nestes rolos, o Tetragrama aparece em caracteres hebraicos antigos. (Veja o apêndice na NM, p. 1503, N.º 2-4.) Fragmentos do fim do quinto e começo do sexto século EC, da versão grega de Áquila, também contêm o nome divino escrito em caracteres hebraicos antigos. — Apêndice da NM, p. 1503, N.º 7, 8.

O Dr. Horowitz diz: "Foi o alfabeto do hebraico antigo que os gregos adotaram e transmitiram para o latim, e é com o alfabeto do hebraico antigo que o grego mais se parece." — How the Hebrew Language Grew, p. 18.

Qualidades e Características. O hebraico é uma língua muito expressiva, prestando-se à descrição vívida de acontecimentos. Suas sentenças curtas e suas conjunções simples contribuem movimento e um fluxo de ideias. A poesia hebraica, que acrescenta a estas qualidades paralelismo e ritmo, é notavelmente expressiva e comovente.

O hebraico é rico em metáforas. "Beira do mar", em Gênesis 22:17, no hebraico, é literalmente "lábio do mar". Outras expressões são "face da terra", "cabeça" dum monte, "boca da caverna", e expressões metafóricas similares. Que este uso de termos humanos de modo algum indica alguma crença animística pode ser observado na leitura das próprias Escrituras, porque se mostra o maior desprezo para com aqueles que adoravam árvores e outros objetos. — Veja Is 44:14-17; Je 10:3-8; Hab 2:19.

O vocabulário hebraico compõe-se de palavras concretas, palavras que envolvem os sentidos da visão, da audição, do tato, do paladar e do olfato. Deste modo, pintam quadros mentais para o ouvinte ou o leitor. Por causa desta qualidade concreta, alguns peritos dizem que o hebraico carece de termos abstratos. No entanto, no hebraico bíblico há definitivamente alguns substantivos abstratos. Por exemplo, o substantivo ma·hhasha·váh (derivado da raiz hha·sháv, que significa "pensar"), é traduzido por termos abstratos tais como "pensamento, desígnio, invenção, ardil". Ba·táhh (verbo que significa "confiar") é a base do substantivo bé·tahh (segurança). Não obstante, por via de regra, ideias abstratas são expressas por substantivos concretos. Considere o verbo radical ka·védh, que significa, basicamente, "ser pesado", ou "ser intenso" (como em 1Sa 4:18 e Jz 20:34). Em Ezequiel 27:25, este mesmo verbo é traduzido 'ficar glorioso', isto é, literalmente, 'ficar pesado'. De modo correspondente, deste radical deriva o substantivo ka·védh, que se refere ao fígado, um dos órgãos internos mais pesados, e o substantivo ka·vóhdh, que significa "glória". (Le 3:4; Is 66:12) Derivar assim o abstrato do concreto é adicionalmente ilustrado por yadh, que significa "mão", e também "cuidado", "meio" ou "direção" (Êx 2:19; Gên 42:37; Êx 35:29; 38:21); 'af refere-se tanto a "narina" como a "ira" (Gên 24:47; 27:45); zeróh·a', "braço", também transmite o conceito abstrato de "força" (Jó 22:8, 9).

Na realidade, esta mesma qualidade concreta faz com que a tradução das Escrituras Hebraicas seja desafiadora. Se a tradução for feita de forma literal, as expressões hebraicas quase sempre vão ter um sentido diferente em outro idioma. Além disso, já que os idiomas têm gramáticas diferentes, é um desafio para o tradutor transmitir o sentido, a forma de se expressar e a força do hebraico, especialmente nas suas formas verbais.

O hebraico é notável pela sua brevidade, sendo que a sua estrutura permite tal concisão. Em comparação, o aramaico, a mais próxima ao hebraico dentre as línguas semíticas, é mais ponderoso, perifrástico e verboso. Na tradução, frequentemente é necessário usar palavras auxiliares para expressar a forma vívida, a qualidade pitoresca e a ação dramática do verbo hebraico. Embora isso diminua um pouco a brevidade, transmite mais plenamente a beleza e a exatidão do texto hebraico.

Poesia Hebraica. Estas mesmas qualidades, inclusive o forte senso de realidade, tornam o hebraico também especialmente adequado para a poesia. As linhas poéticas hebraicas são breves — muitas não têm mais de duas ou três palavras — dando um forte impacto ao efeito total. O Professor James Muilenburg, membro da comissão de tradução da Revised Standard Version (Versão Padrão Revisada), observou apropriadamente: "A linguagem [na poesia hebraica] é concentrada, e dá-se toda a ênfase às palavras importantes. O texto hebraico do Salmo 23 contém apenas cinquenta e cinco palavras; nossas modernas traduções ocidentais utilizam duas vezes este número. Todavia, mesmo ao se traduzir, a economia patente no hebraico original não é desperdiçada. . . . A poesia hebraica é uma linguagem de expressão vívida. . . . O poeta hebreu ajuda-nos a ver, a ouvir, a sentir. As sensações físicas estão frescas e vivas . . . O poeta pensa imaginando quadros, e estes quadros são tirados do âmbito da vida diária, comum a todos os homens." — An Introduction to the Revised Standard Version of the Old Testament (Introdução à Versão Padrão Revisada do Velho Testamento), 1952, pp. 63, 64.

Para exemplificar a concisão da linguagem poética hebraica, observe o primeiro verso do Salmo 23, conforme se acha na Tradução do Novo Mundo. As palavras necessárias, em português, para traduzir cada palavra hebraica estão separadas por uma barra (/):

Jeová/ [é o] meu Pastor./
Nada/ me faltará./

Pode-se ver que o equivalente em português requer oito palavras para traduzir as quatro palavras hebraicas. Suprem-se as palavras "é o" para dar o sentido em português; em hebraico, estão subentendidas.

Formas primárias de paralelismo. O mais importante elemento formal na poesia hebraica é o paralelismo, ou ritmo, conseguido, não pela rima (como em português), mas pelo pensamento lógico; tem sido chamado de "ritmo de sentido". Considere as duas linhas do Salmo 24:1:

A Jeová pertence a terra e o que a enche,
O solo produtivo e os que moram nele.

Diz-se que as linhas citadas aqui constituem um paralelismo sinônimo, isto é, a segunda linha repete uma parte da linha anterior, mas com palavras diferentes. A frase: "A Jeová pertence" é essencial para ambas as linhas. Todavia, os termos "a terra" e "o solo produtivo" são sinônimos poéticos, como também o são "o que a enche" e "os que moram nela".

A maioria dos peritos contemporâneos concordam que existem mais dois estilos primários de paralelismo:

No paralelismo antitético, conforme esta designação dá a entender, cada linha expressa pensamentos opostos. O Salmo 37:9 ilustra isso:

Pois os próprios malfeitores serão decepados,
Mas os que esperam em Jeová são os que possuirão a terra.

Daí, há o paralelismo sintético (ou: formal, construtivo), em que a segunda parte não ecoa simplesmente o mesmo pensamento da primeira, nem apresenta um contraste. Antes, amplia-a e acrescenta-lhe uma nova ideia. O Salmo 19:7-9 é um exemplo disso:

A lei de Jeová é perfeita, fazendo retornar a alma.
A advertência de Jeová é fidedigna, tornando sábio o inexperiente.
As ordens de Jeová são retas, fazendo o coração alegrar-se;
O mandamento de Jeová é limpo, fazendo os olhos brilhar.
O temor de Jeová é puro, permanecendo de pé para todo o sempre.
As decisões judiciais de Jeová são verdadeiras;
mostraram-se inteiramente justas.

Note que a segunda parte de cada sentença, ou frase, completa o pensamento; portanto, o verso inteiro é uma síntese, isto é, o resultado da junção de dois elementos. Apenas com as segundas meias-linhas, tais como "fazendo retornar a alma" e "tornando sábio o inexperiente", fica o leitor sabendo como a 'lei é perfeita' e como "a advertência de Jeová é fidedigna". Em tal série de paralelos sintéticos, esta divisão entre a primeira e a segunda parte serve como pausa rítmica. Preserva-se assim, junto com a progressão do pensamento, certa estrutura de verso, uma forma de paralelismo. É por este motivo que às vezes é chamado de paralelismo formal ou construtivo.

Formas miscelâneas de paralelismo. Sugeriram-se vários outros estilos de paralelismo, embora estes sejam considerados apenas variantes ou combinações do sinônimo, antitético ou sintético. Três destas sugestões são: emblemático, escalonado e introvertido.

O paralelismo emblemático (ou comparativo) utiliza a símile ou metáfora. Considere o Salmo 103:12:

Tão longe como o nascente é do poente,
Tão longe pôs de nós as nossas transgressões.

No paralelismo escalonado, duas, três ou até mais linhas podem ser usadas para repetir ou promover a ideia da primeira. O Salmo 29:1, 2, é uma ilustração disso:

Atribuí a Jeová, ó vós filhos dos fortes,
Atribuí a Jeová glória e força.
Atribuí a Jeová a glória do seu nome.

O paralelismo introvertido é mais complexo e pode requerer vários versos. Observe este exemplo do Salmo 135:15-18:

(1) Os ídolos das nações são prata e ouro,
(2) Trabalho das mãos do homem terreno.
(3) Têm boca, mas não podem falar;
(4) Têm olhos, mas não podem ver;
(5) Têm orelhas, mas não podem dar ouvidos a nada.
(6) Tampouco há espírito na sua boca.
(7) Iguais a eles se tornarão os que os fazem,
(8) Todo aquele que neles confiar.

Este paralelismo é explicado por W. Trail na sua obra Literary Characteristics and Achievements of the Bible (Características e Realizações Literárias da Bíblia; 1864, p. 170): "Aqui, a primeira linha introverte-se com a oitava — numa temos os ídolos dos pagãos, na outra, os que depositam sua confiança em ídolos. A segunda linha introverte-se na sétima — numa há a fabricação, na outra, os fabricantes. A terceira linha introverte-se na sexta — numa há bocas sem expressão, na outra, bocas sem fôlego. A quarta linha introverte-se na quinta, onde se pode dizer que o paralelismo introvertido une suas duas metades num paralelismo de síntese — olhos sem visão, ouvidos sem o sentido da audição."

Uma forma similar, porém mais simples, é uma inversão de palavras em linhas contíguas, como em Isaías 11:13b (IBB):

Efraim não invejará a Judá
e Judá não vexará a Efraim.

Gramática

I. Verbos. Os verbos são a mais importante categoria gramatical no idioma hebraico. A forma verbal mais simples é a terceira pessoa do singular, masculina, no estado perfeito; esta é a forma encontrada nos léxicos. As três consoantes desta forma usualmente constituem a raiz. A raiz costuma ter estrutura triliteral, quer dizer, é composta de três consoantes, o arranjo usual nos idiomas semíticos. Tais raízes triliterais servem de fonte com a qual quase todas as outras palavras do idioma podem ser relacionadas.

A raiz verbal é o tronco mais simples do verbo. Frequentemente é chamado de "tronco básico". Deste tronco básico formam-se mais seis radicais com o acréscimo de prefixos, a duplicação de certas letras e mudanças de vogais. Os sete troncos verbais representam a ideia da raiz verbal em três graus: simples, intensivo, causativo.

Para indicar variações na pessoa, no número e no gênero, acrescentam-se ao tronco verbal certos prefixos e sufixos.

Estado. Em português, os verbos são considerados especialmente do ponto de vista do tempo: passado, presente, futuro. No hebraico, porém, a coisa mais importante é a condição da ação, em vez de o tempo envolvido. A ação é considerada ou concluída (completa) ou não concluída (incompleta).

Quando o verbo retrata uma ação concluída (completa), então está no perfeito. Por exemplo, Gênesis 1:1 diz: "No princípio Deus criou os céus e a terra." A ação foi concluída; Deus "criou", isto é, terminou a criação dos céus e da terra.

Quando a ação é considerada como não concluída (incompleta), então o verbo está no imperfeito. Isto pode ser ilustrado com Êxodo 15:1: "Moisés e os filhos de Israel passaram a cantar." Vemos aqui que a ação, embora começada ("passaram" a cantar), não tinha sido terminada e assim era "imperfeita", inacabada.

Naturalmente, visto que o perfeito, no hebraico, já pelo seu próprio caráter representa uma ação como concluída (completa), ele pertence de modo mais natural ao pretérito. Portanto, ka·tháv (verbo ativo no perfeito) significa, basicamente, "(ele) escreveu", "escreveram", e é frequentemente traduzido assim. (2Rs 17:37; 2Cr 30:1; 32:17; Esd 4:7; Est 8:5) A ideia de ação concluída (completa) no passado pode também ser observada na tradução "foi(ram) escrito(s)", "escreveu" e "escrevera". (2Cr 26:22; Est 9:23; Jó 31:35; Je 36:27). "Tem de escrever" também é usado para traduzir este verbo no perfeito, e mostra a certeza de se executar a ação. (Núm 5:23; De 17:18) Esta versão subentende corretamente ação concluída (completa), mas não no passado. De modo que o verbo ativo em si não necessariamente transmite um conceito de tempo. O perfeito pode descrever uma ação concluída (completa) em qualquer tempo: passado (pretérito), presente ou futuro; em contraste, o imperfeito, embora também possa mostrar ação em qualquer tempo, sempre a considera como não concluída (incompleta).

Portanto, embora os antigos hebreus obviamente podiam compreender a ideia do tempo, este ocupa na sua língua uma posição secundária. The Essentials of Biblical Hebrew (Os Elementos Básicos do Hebraico Bíblico), de K. Yates, declara: "O tempo, conforme entendido na maioria das línguas modernas, não é a mesma coisa que o é para a mente semítica. O discernimento do tempo da ação não é de importância vital para o padrão hebreu de ideias. É necessário para o pensador indo-germânico apenas para enquadrar a ação em sua avaliação exagerada do tempo. Para o semita bastava, em geral, o entendimento da condição da ação quanto a se era concluída ou não concluída (completa ou incompleta), e caso isso não bastasse, havia alguma palavra de significado temporal ou histórico que enfocava o tempo." (Revisado por J. Owens, 1954, p. 129) Se o hebraico, conforme a Bíblia indica, foi a língua original usada no Éden, esta falta de ênfase ao tempo do verbo pode refletir o ponto de vista do homem na sua perfeição, quando Adão tinha a perspectiva de ter vida eterna e quando a vida ainda não havia ficado reduzida a uns meros 70 ou 80 anos. Jeová supriu o hebraico como meio perfeitamente satisfatório de comunicação entre Deus e os homens, bem como entre os humanos.

Para a tradução em português, o tempo do verbo é determinado pelo contexto. O contexto indica se a ação narrada é considerada como já ocorrida, como ocorrendo no momento ou como a ocorrer ainda no futuro.

II. Substantivos. Conforme já mencionado, quase todas as palavras, inclusive os substantivos, podem ser relacionadas com uma raiz verbal. A raiz pode ser vista tanto na grafia do substantivo como no seu sentido.

Há dois gêneros: masculino e feminino. O feminino, em geral, distingue-se pela desinência ah (ohth, no plural) acrescentada ao substantivo, como no caso de 'ish·sháh (mulher), su·sóhth (éguas [feminino plural]).

Os três números no hebraico são o singular, o plural e o dual. O dual (identificado pelo sufixo á·yim) costuma ser usado para objetos que aparecem aos pares, tais como as mãos (ya·dhá·yim) e as orelhas ('oz·ná·yim).

Pronomes possessivos também podem ser inseparavelmente acrescentados aos substantivos. Assim, sus é "cavalo"; mas su·sí é "meu cavalo"; su·seý·kha, "teus cavalos".

III. Adjetivos. Os adjetivos também derivam de raízes verbais. Assim, o verbo ga·dh*á*l (crescer, tornar-se grande) é a raiz do adjetivo ga·dh*óh*l (grande). (No hebraico, o artigo definido é ha [o(s), a(s)]. Não existe artigo indefinido [um(ns), uma(s)].

O adjetivo pode ser usado de duas maneiras:

(1) Pode ser um adjetivo predicativo. Neste caso, geralmente vem antes do substantivo e concorda com este em gênero e número. A frase tohv haq·qóhl (literalmente: "boa a voz") é traduzida "a voz é boa", suprindo-se o verbo "é".

(2) Ou, pode ser usado como qualificativo (modificador). Nesta condição, ocorre depois do substantivo, concordando com ele não só em gênero e número, mas também na sua forma definida. Assim, haq·qóhl hat·tóhv (literalmente: "a voz a boa") significa "a boa voz".

Transliteração. Transliteração se refere à substituição de caracteres do alfabeto hebraico por letras em português. Escreve-se o hebraico da direita para a esquerda, mas, para os leitores do português, é transliterado para ser lido da esquerda para a direita. A tabela acompanhante e a explicação que segue especificam algumas das regras gerais adotadas nesta obra.

Referente às consoantes. Observar-se-á que cinco letras possuem forma final. Estas só aparecem no fim das palavras. Certas consoantes (ב, ג, ד, כ, פ, ת) têm tanto um som brando como um duro, indicando-se este último por um pontinho no interior da letra (בּ, גּ, דּ, כּ, פּ, תּ). Todavia, um pontinho numa destas consoantes indica também que ela deve ser duplicada se for precedida por uma vogal. Assim, גַּבַּי é gab·bai. A maioria das outras letras (embora tenham apenas um som) também são duplicadas por um pontinho no seu interior (por exemplo, זּ é zz). Uma exceção é a letra he' (ה), que às vezes tem um pontinho nela (הּ) quando ocorre no fim duma palavra; a letra he', porém, nunca é duplicada.

As consoantes waw e yohdh podem ser empregadas na formação de vogais. O waw (ו = vau) ocorre com a vogal hhóh·lem (˙) por cima dele para torná-lo o que se chama de hhóh·lem plenamente formado (וֹ), transliterado nesta obra como oh. A combinação וּ serve como u, e no começo duma palavra sempre fica sozinha como sílaba; todavia, se houver um sinal vocálico adicional abaixo da letra (וַּ), o pontinho indica que o waw deve ser duplicado. Assim, בַּוַּי é baw·wai; בּוּז é buz.

Na forma final de kaph, o shewá' (ְ) ou qá·mets (ָ) é escrito no interior da letra, em vez de abaixo dela: ךְ,ךָ.

Referente às vogais. Todas as vogais nesta tabela aparecem abaixo da linha, exceto hhóh·lem (˙), que é colocado acima dela, e shú·req (·), que, conforme observado acima, aparece no interior do waw (וּ= u).

Referente às semivogais. As equivalentes em português, mostradas na tabela, são apenas aproximadas. A pronúncia hebraica destas semivogais, em cada caso, é um som extremamente leve.

Em certas condições, o shewá' é pronunciado e transliterado como um e. No entanto, geralmente quando o shewá' segue a uma vogal breve, ou sempre que aparece sob uma consoante que encerra uma sílaba, é mudo e é considerado como divisão de sílabas. Assim, יִקְטֹל é yiq·tól.

Sílabas. No hebraico, toda sílaba começa com uma consoante e inclui (1) uma vogal plena ou (2) uma semivogal e uma vogal plena. Assim, קָטַל é composta de duas sílabas, uma sendo קָ (qa) e a outra טַל (tal). Ambas as sílabas contêm uma vogal plena e começam com uma consoante. Por outro lado, בְּרִית (berith) tem apenas uma sílaba, visto que contém apenas uma vogal plena (ִ=i); o shewá', e (ְ), é uma semivogal.

Há duas exceções evidentes a esta regra de apenas consoantes iniciarem uma sílaba: (1) Quando uma palavra começa com וּ (u). Neste caso, o u representa uma sílaba distinta. Assim, וּבֵן é u·vén; וּשְׁמִי é u·shemí. (2) Com um "breve pá·thahh". Este é a vogal pá·thahh (ַ) colocada sob as consoantes ה, ח, ע, quando aparecem no fim duma palavra; neste caso, o pá·thahh é pronunciado antes da consoante. Assim, רוּחַ é rú·ahh, e não ru·hhá.

Às vezes, uma pequena linha horizontal chamada maqqeph (־), similar ao hífen em português, ocorre entre palavras. Esta serve para juntar duas ou mais palavras, para serem consideradas como uma só, retendo apenas a última palavra o acento. Assim, כָּל־אֲשֶׁר é kol-'ashér.

Acentos. Todas as palavras hebraicas são acentuadas na última ou na penúltima sílaba. A maioria é acentuada na última sílaba.

Nesta obra, nas transliterações, um pontinho separa as sílabas; o acento agudo é colocado sobre a vogal acentuada da sílaba tônica.

HEBREU. A designação "hebreu" é usada primeiro referente a Abrão, diferenciando-o assim dos seus vizinhos amorreus. (Gên 14:13) Depois, virtualmente em cada caso em que é usado, o termo "hebreu(s)" continua a ser empregado como designação contrastante ou diferenciadora — quem fala é duma nação não israelita (Gên 39:13, 14, 17; 41:12; Êx 1:16; 1Sa 4:6, 9), ou é israelita que se dirige a um estrangeiro (Gên 40:15; Êx 1:19; 2:7; Jon 1:9), ou se mencionam estrangeiros (Gên 43:32; Êx 1:15; 2:11-13; 1Sa 13:3-7).

Conforme mostram os textos acima, a designação "hebreu" já era conhecida aos egípcios no século 18 AEC. Isto parece indicar que Abraão, Isaque e Jacó já se haviam tornado bem conhecidos numa ampla região, tornando assim reconhecível o apelativo "hebreu". Quando José falou da "terra dos hebreus" (Gên 40:15) a dois dos servos de Faraó, ele sem dúvida se referiu à região em torno de Hébron, que seu pai e seus antepassados há muito haviam tornado uma espécie de base de operações. Uns seis séculos mais tarde, os filisteus ainda chamavam os israelitas de "hebreus". Durante o tempo do Rei Saul, "hebreus" e "Israel" eram termos equivalentes. (1Sa 13:3-7; 14:11; 29:3) No nono século AEC, o profeta Jonas identificou-se como hebreu aos marujos (possivelmente fenícios) no navio que saíra do porto marítimo de Jope. (Jon 1:9) Também a Lei diferenciava os escravos "hebreus" daqueles de outras raças ou nacionalidades (Êx 21:2; De 15:12), e, ao se referir a isso, o livro de Jeremias (no sétimo século AEC) mostra que o termo "hebreu" era então equivalente a "judeu". — Je 34:8, 9, 13, 14.

Em períodos posteriores, escritores gregos e romanos chamavam os israelitas regularmente quer de "hebreus", quer de "judeus", não de "israelitas".

Origem e Significado do Termo. Os conceitos sobre a origem e o significado do termo "hebreu" geralmente podem ser divididos do seguinte modo:

Um conceito sustenta que o nome vem da raiz 'a·vár, que significa "passar; transitar; atravessar; cruzar". O termo se aplicaria então a Abraão como aquele que Deus tomou do "outro lado do Rio [Eufrates]". (Jos 24:3) Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega entenderam este termo deste modo, e assim, em Gênesis 14:13, chamaram a Abraão de "o passante" em vez de "o hebreu". Esta teoria é bastante popular, mas não sem problemas. A terminação do termo 'iv·rí (hebreu) é a mesma que a usada em outros termos que definitivamente são patronímicos, quer dizer, nomes formados pelo acréscimo de um prefixo ou sufixo para indicar a relação com o nome do pai ou do antepassado da pessoa. Assim, moh·'a·ví (moabita), denota primariamente um descendente de Moabe (Moh·'áv), em vez de alguém de uma região geográfica; o mesmo se dá com 'am·moh·ní (amonita), da·ní (danita), e muitos outros.

Adicionalmente, se o termo "hebreu" se aplicasse exclusivamente a Abraão, à base de ele ter 'cruzado' o Eufrates, o termo pareceria ser muito generalizado, aplicável a qualquer pessoa que fizesse o mesmo — e é provável que houvesse muitos de tais emigrantes no decorrer dos séculos. Com tal origem, o termo somente seria distintivo se fosse reconhecido que a travessia do Eufrates por Abraão foi por convocação divina. Suscita dúvidas, se este fato era reconhecido pelos pagãos que usavam esse termo, mas não pode ser considerado impossível.

Um segundo conceito, adotado por alguns peritos, é que o nome denota viandantes, aqueles que 'passam adiante', como distintos de residentes ou colonos. (Veja o uso de 'a·vár em Gên 18:5; Êx 32:27; 2Cr 30:10.) Embora os israelitas por um tempo realmente levassem uma vida nômade, não era assim depois da conquista de Canaã. Todavia, o nome hebreu continuou a ser aplicado a eles. Outra objeção a este conceito pode ser a de que este termo é tão amplo, que poderia incluir todos os grupos nômades. Visto que Jeová é biblicamente identificado como "o Deus dos hebreus", é evidente que isso não se refere a 'todos os nômades', visto que muitos povos nômades eram adoradores de falsos deuses. — Êx 3:18; 5:3; 7:16; 9:1, 13; 10:3.

Um terceiro conceito que concorda muito bem com a evidência bíblica é que "hebreu" ('iv·rí) deriva do nome Éber ('É·ver), o do bisneto de Sem e antepassado de Abraão. (Gên 11:10-26) É verdade que nada se sabe sobre Éber, além do seu parentesco como vínculo na linhagem de Sem a Abraão. Não se registrou nenhum notável ato ou outra particularidade pessoal que pudesse constituir a base para o nome de Éber ser usado com tanto destaque pelos seus descendentes. Não obstante, deve-se notar que Éber é especificamente destacado em Gênesis 10:21, chamando-se a Sem ali de "antepassado de todos os filhos de Éber". Que o nome Éber foi séculos depois da sua morte aplicado a certo povo ou região se evidencia na profecia de Balaão, no século 15 AEC. (Núm 24:24) O uso do nome como patronímico relacionaria também os israelitas com alguém específico das "linhagens" de Noé, segundo registradas em Gênesis 10:1-32.

Conforme também acontece no caso dos outros conceitos já considerados, surge a pergunta de por que "hebreu", se for derivado do nome Éber, devia ser aplicado de modo tão específico e distintivo aos israelitas. Éber teve também outros descendentes, através do seu filho Joctã, que não eram da linhagem que levava a Abraão (e Israel). (Gên 10:25-30; 11:16-26) Parece que o termo 'iv·rí (hebreu) se aplicaria a todos esses descendentes que poderiam de direito afirmar que Éber era seu antepassado. Alguns peritos sugerem que, originalmente, talvez fosse assim, mas que, no decorrer do tempo, o nome passou a ficar restrito aos israelitas, como os mais destacados eberitas, ou hebreus. Isto não deixaria de ter paralelos no registro bíblico. Embora houvesse muitos descendentes não israelitas de Abraão, inclusive os edomitas, os ismaelitas e os descendentes de Abraão por meio da sua esposa Quetura, são os israelitas que são distintivamente chamados de "descendência [literalmente: semente] de Abraão". (Sal 105:6; Is 41:8; compare isso com Mt 3:9; 2Co 11:22.) Naturalmente, isto se dava por causa da ação de Deus para com eles com relação ao pacto abraâmico. Mas, o mero fato de que Deus fez deles uma nação e lhes deu a terra de Canaã como herança, bem como vitórias sobre muitos inimigos poderosos, certamente distinguiu os israelitas não somente dos outros descendentes de Abraão, mas também de todos os outros descendentes de Éber. Há também a possibilidade de que muitos desses outros descendentes tivessem perdido a sua identidade "eberita" por causa de casamentos mistos com outros povos.

Assim, é bem possível que Éber fosse destacado nas listas genealógicas como indicação divina de que a bênção de Noé, proferida sobre Sem, teria seu cumprimento especialmente nos descendentes de Éber, mostrando os fatos subsequentes que os israelitas eram os beneficiários primários desta bênção. Tal menção específica de Éber teria também por objetivo indicar a linhagem do prometido Descendente, ou Semente, mencionado na profecia de Jeová de Gênesis 3:15, tornando-se assim Éber um elo específico entre Sem e Abraão. Tal conexão igualmente se harmonizaria bem com a designação de Jeová qual "Deus dos hebreus".

A profecia de Balaão. O entendimento da profecia de Balaão, em Números 24:24, depende de se Éber é usado aqui como termo geográfico, indicando a 'terra (ou o povo) do outro lado', ou como patronímico, aplicando-se especialmente aos hebreus (israelitas). A maioria dos comentadores reconhece que Quitim, de cujo litoral navios partiriam para afligir a Assíria e Éber, segundo a profecia, é primariamente uma antiga designação de Chipre. No entanto, conforme mostram os artigos CHIPRE e QUITIM, Chipre veio sob forte influência grega; também, o nome Quitim talvez tivesse uma aplicação mais ampla, além de à ilha de Chipre, talvez indicando adicionalmente uma ligação com a Grécia. De modo que a maioria dos peritos acha que a profecia se refere à conquista grega, ou macedônia, das nações do Oriente Médio, inclusive a Assíria. Os que sustentam que Éber é aqui usado em sentido geográfico acham que a aflição de Éber significa que não somente a Assíria, mas todas as potências mesopotâmicas (o povo 'do outro lado') viriam sob domínio ocidental. Aqueles que consideram Éber como designativo dos hebreus sugerem que a predita aflição lhes sobreveio após a morte de Alexandre, o Grande, e sob a linhagem dos governantes selêucidas, especialmente Antíoco Epifânio. Assim como o nome Assíria, neste texto, é realmente o nome Assur em hebraico, assim parece também que "Éber", de fato, é um patronímico que designa os hebreus, em vez de ser apenas uma designação geográfica.

Emprego nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o termo "hebreu" (Al), ou "hebraico", é usado especialmente para designar o idioma falado pelos judeus (Jo 5:2; 19:13, 17, 20; At 21:40; 22:2; Re 9:11; 16:16), idioma em que o ressuscitado e glorificado Jesus se dirigiu a Saulo de Tarso. (At 26:14, 15) Em Atos 6:1, os judeus que falavam hebraico são diferenciados dos judeus que falavam grego. — Veja GRÉCIA, GREGOS (Helenistas).

Paulo descreveu a si mesmo primariamente como hebreu; em segundo lugar, como israelita; em terceiro, como descendente (semente) de Abraão. (2Co 11:22) Talvez usasse aqui 'hebreu' para mostrar sua origem racial (veja Fil 3:4, 5) e possivelmente o idioma; 'israelita', ser ele membro natural da nação que Deus estabelecera originalmente como povo para o Seu nome (veja Ro 9:3-5), e 'descendente de Abraão', ser ele daqueles que herdariam as prometidas bênçãos do pacto abraâmico.

Os "Habirus". Em numerosos registros cuneiformes do começo do segundo milênio AEC ocorre o termo acadiano (assírio-babilônico) habiru, ou hapiru. Os habirus eram ativos na Mesopotâmia meridional e na Ásia Menor, bem como nas regiões de Harã e de Mari. Igualmente, em cerca de 60 das tabuinhas de Amarna, encontradas no Egito, governantes cananeus, vassalos, escrevendo ao Faraó do Egito (então seu suserano), queixaram-se, entre outras coisas, dos ataques contra suas cidades por certos governantes coligados com os "habirus".

Os "habirus" apareceram na Mesopotâmia como lavradores, soldados mercenários, saqueadores, escravos, e assim por diante. Ao passo que alguns peritos se têm esforçado a relacionar os habirus com a conquista israelita de Canaã, a evidência não apoia tal conceito. Neste respeito, The New International Dictionary of Biblical Archaeology (O Novo Dicionário Internacional de Arqueologia Bíblica) observou: "Desde a primeira revelação dos habirus nos textos de Amarna, em fins do século dezenove, os eruditos se viram tentados a associar os habirus com os bíblicos 'ibrim ou 'hebreus' — palavra que ocorre trinta e quatro vezes no VT, usualmente usada quer por estrangeiros, quer na presença de estrangeiros. . . . A maioria dos eruditos rejeita qualquer identificação direta dos hebreus com os habirus em vista das seguintes objeções: (1) dificuldades filológicas na equiparação; (2) a probabilidade de que habiru seja um termo apelativo descrevendo uma classe, ao passo que 'ibri é um termo étnico; (3) as consideráveis diferenças na distribuição, na atividade e no caráter dos dois grupos." — Editado por E. Blaiklock e R. Harrison, 1983, pp. 223, 224.

Os "habirus" aparecem em documentos egípcios sob o nome de 'apiru. Eram empregados como trabalhadores em pedreiras, em lagares de vinho e como transportadores de pedras. Em sentido linguístico, não é possível identificar a palavra egípcia 'apiru com a palavra hebraica 'iv·ri. Além disso, os documentos mencionam os "habirus" como estando no Egito muito depois de os hebreus terem partido daquele país.

HEBREUS, CARTA AOS. Carta inspirada das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. A evidência indica que foi escrita pelo apóstolo Paulo aos cristãos hebreus na Judeia, por volta de 61 EC. Para aqueles cristãos hebreus, esta carta era muito oportuna. Já se haviam passado uns 28 anos desde a morte e ressurreição de Jesus Cristo. Na primeira parte daquele período, os líderes religiosos judeus lançaram uma severa perseguição contra os cristãos judeus em Jerusalém e na Judeia, que resultou na morte de alguns cristãos e espalhou a maioria dos outros de Jerusalém. (At 8:1) Os espalhados continuaram ativos na divulgação das boas novas aonde quer que fossem. (At 8:4) Os apóstolos haviam permanecido em Jerusalém e haviam mantido unida a congregação que ficara ali, e esta havia aumentado, mesmo sob forte oposição. (At 8:14) Daí, por algum tempo, a congregação entrou num período de paz.

Objetivo da Carta. A congregação em Jerusalém compunha-se quase que inteiramente de judeus e daqueles que haviam sido prosélitos da religião dos judeus. Muitos destes obtiveram conhecimento da verdade depois da época da mais amarga perseguição. Na ocasião em que se escreveu a carta aos hebreus, a congregação usufruía comparativa paz, porque Paulo lhes disse: "Ainda nunca resististes até o sangue." (He 12:4) Todavia, o abrandamento da perseguição física, direta, até a morte, não significava que cessara a forte oposição dos líderes religiosos judeus. Os membros mais novos da congregação tinham de enfrentar a oposição do mesmo modo que os demais. E alguns outros eram

DESTAQUES DE HEBREUS

Um vigoroso tratado, que fortaleceu os cristãos hebreus e os habilitou a ajudar patrícios sinceros durante os últimos anos do sistema judaico.

Foi evidentemente escrito pelo apóstolo Paulo, menos de uma década antes de Jerusalém ser destruída em 70 EC.

A posição superior ocupada pelo Filho de Deus. (1:1–3:6)

Ele é o Filho único, herdeiro designado, a representação exata do próprio ser do seu Pai, por meio de quem tudo o que foi feito também é sustentado.

Comparados com o Filho, os anjos são apenas servos. O Pai chama somente a ele de "meu filho", o Primogênito, a quem até os anjos prestariam homenagem; a respeito dele, e não dos anjos, pode-se dizer que seu domínio real se baseia em Deus como seu trono, que sua permanência ultrapassa a dos céus e da Terra, feitos por meio dele, e que sua posição é à mão direita do Pai.

Se a Lei transmitida por meio de anjos não podia ser desconsiderada impunemente, então o que Deus falou por meio do seu Filho, que é maior que os anjos, tem de receber atenção extraordinária.

Embora Jesus Cristo, como homem, fosse menor que os anjos, depois ele foi enaltecido acima deles e se lhe concedeu domínio sobre a vindoura Terra habitada.

Moisés foi assistente na casa de Deus, mas Jesus Cristo está sobre a casa inteira.

Ainda é possível entrar no descanso de Deus. (3:7–4:13)

Por causa de desobediência e falta de fé, os israelitas que saíram do Egito deixaram de entrar no descanso de Deus.

Cristãos podem entrar no descanso de Deus, desde que evitem a desobediência de Israel e se esforcem a seguir um proceder de fidelidade.

A palavra viva que promete a entrada no descanso de Deus é mais afiada do que uma espada, dividindo (pela reação da pessoa a ela) o que a pessoa parece ser como alma e o que realmente é quanto ao seu espírito.

A superioridade do sacerdócio de Cristo e do novo pacto. (4:14–10:31)

Jesus Cristo, como sumo sacerdote, por ter sido provado em todos os sentidos e ainda permanecer sem pecado, pode compadecer-se dos humanos pecaminosos e lidar compassivamente com eles.

Ele é sacerdote, por designação de Deus, à maneira de Melquisedeque, cujo sacerdócio era maior do que o sacerdócio levítico.

Dessemelhante dos sacerdotes levitas na família de Arão, Jesus Cristo possui uma vida indestrutível e assim não necessita de sucessores para continuar sua obra salvadora; ele é sem pecado e portanto não precisa apresentar sacrifícios por si mesmo; ofereceu seu próprio corpo, não o de animais, e não entrou num santuário terrestre, mas no próprio céu, com o valor de seu sangue derramado, validando assim o novo pacto.

O novo pacto, com Jesus qual Mediador, é superior ao pacto da Lei, visto que os que estão nele têm as leis de Deus no seu coração e usufruem verdadeiro perdão de pecados.

O apreço por estes benefícios induzirá os cristãos a fazer declaração pública da esperança e a se ajuntar regularmente.

A fé é essencial para se agradar a Deus. (10:32–12:29)

Jeová se desagrada dos que retrocedem dele sem fé, em vez de perseverar para receber o que ele prometeu.

A fé exemplar dos que mantiveram a integridade, de Abel em diante, serve de incentivo para se perseverar na carreira cristã, ao passo que se considera de perto Jesus Cristo e seu imaculado proceder sob sofrimento.

O sofrimento que Deus permite que sobrevenha aos cristãos fiéis pode ser encarado como forma de disciplina da parte dele, destinada a produzir o fruto pacífico da justiça.

Exortações para se seguir um proceder fiel. (13:1-25)

Manifeste amor fraternal, seja hospitaleiro, lembre-se dos crentes que sofrem, mantenha o matrimônio honroso e contente-se com as coisas presentes, confiando na ajuda de Jeová.

Imite a fé daqueles que tomam a dianteira, e evite sucumbir a ensinos estranhos.

Esteja disposto a aturar vitupério assim como Cristo aturou; sempre ofereça a Deus sacrifícios de louvor por meio dele.

Seja obediente aos que tomam a dianteira.

imaturos, não tendo feito progresso em direção à madureza, o qual, em vista do tempo, já deveriam ter feito. (5:12) A oposição da parte dos judeus, com que se confrontavam diariamente, punha sua fé à prova. Eles tinham de desenvolver a qualidade da perseverança. — 12:1, 2.

O tempo estava se esgotando para Jerusalém. Nem o apóstolo Paulo, nem os da congregação de Jerusalém, sabiam quando ocorreria a predita desolação, mas Deus sabia. (Lu 21:20-24; Da 9:24, 27) A situação exigia que os cristãos ali ficassem atentos e exercessem fé, para fugir da cidade quando vissem Jerusalém cercada por exércitos acampados. Todos na congregação precisavam fortalecer-se para estes eventos momentosos. Segundo a tradição, foi apenas uns cinco anos depois da escrita desta carta que as tropas de Céstio Galo atacaram a cidade e depois se retiraram. Quatro anos mais tarde, Jerusalém e seu templo foram arrasados pelos romanos sob o General Tito. Mas, antes de estes eventos ocorrerem, Jeová havia providenciado o conselho inspirado de que seus servos precisavam.

Oposição judaica. Os líderes religiosos judeus, por meio de propaganda mentirosa, haviam feito tudo para suscitar ódio contra os seguidores de Cristo. Sua determinação de combater o cristianismo com todas as armas possíveis é demonstrado pelas suas ações, conforme registradas em Atos 22:22; 23:12-15, 23, 24; 24:1-4; 25:1-3. Eles e seus apoiadores hostilizavam constantemente os cristãos, pelo visto usando argumentos no empenho de quebrantar a lealdade deles a Cristo. Atacavam o cristianismo com o que para o judeu pareciam ser fortes argumentos, difíceis de refutar.

Naquele tempo, o judaísmo tinha muito para oferecer em sentido de coisas materiais, tangíveis, e de aparência externa. Os judeus talvez dissessem que estas coisas provavam que o judaísmo era superior e que o cristianismo era tolo. Ora, haviam dito a Jesus que a nação tinha por pai a Abraão, a quem se deram as promessas. (Jo 8:33, 39) Moisés, com quem Deus falara "boca a boca", era o grande servo e profeta de Deus. (Núm 12:7, 8) Os judeus tinham desde o começo a Lei e as palavras dos profetas. 'Não confirmaria a própria antiguidade que o judaísmo era a verdadeira religião?' poderiam perguntar. Por ocasião da inauguração do pacto da Lei, Deus falara por meio de anjos; de fato, a Lei fora transmitida por meio de anjos, pela mão do mediador Moisés. (At 7:53; Gál 3:19) Nesta ocasião, Deus dera uma atemorizante demonstração de poder, por abalar o monte Sinai; o som alto de buzina, fumaça, trovões e relâmpagos acompanharam a demonstração gloriosa. — Êx 19:16-19; 20:18; He 12:18-21.

Além de todas estas coisas antigas, lá estava o magnífico templo, com seu sacerdócio instituído por Jeová. Sacerdotes oficiavam no templo, manejando diariamente muitos sacrifícios. Junto com estas coisas, havia dispendiosas vestes sacerdotais e o esplendor dos ofícios realizados no templo. 'Não ordenara Jeová que os sacrifícios pelo pecado fossem trazidos ao santuário, e não entrava o sumo sacerdote, descendente do próprio irmão de Moisés, Arão, no Santíssimo, no Dia da Expiação, com um sacrifício pelos pecados da nação inteira? Nesta ocasião, não se chegava ele representativamente à própria presença de Deus?', talvez argumentassem os judeus. (Le 16) 'Além disso, não estavam os judeus de posse dum reino, com alguém (o Messias, que viria mais tarde, como diziam) para se sentar no trono em Jerusalém, a fim de governar?'

Se a carta aos hebreus estava sendo escrita para equipar os cristãos a responder a objeções realmente feitas pelos judeus, então os inimigos do cristianismo haviam argumentado do seguinte modo: 'O que podia esta nova "heresia" apresentar como evidência da sua genuinidade e de ter o favor de Deus? Onde estava o seu templo, e seu sacerdócio? Ora, onde estava seu líder? Fora ele alguém de importância entre os líderes da nação durante a sua vida — este Jesus, um galileu, filho de carpinteiro, sem instrução rabínica? E não teve ele uma morte ignominiosa? Onde estava o reino dele? E quem eram seus apóstolos e seguidores? Meros pescadores e cobradores de impostos. Além disso, na maior parte, quem era atraído pelo cristianismo? Os pobres e humildes da terra, e, ainda pior, aceitavam-se gentios incircuncisos, que não eram da descendência de Abraão. Por que confiaria alguém neste Jesus, que fora morto como blasfemador e sedicioso? Por que escutar os discípulos dele, homens indoutos e comuns?' — At 4:13.

A superioridade do sistema cristão. Alguns cristãos imaturos talvez se tornassem negligentes para com a sua salvação por meio de Cristo. (He 2:1-4) Ou talvez fossem influenciados pelos judeus descrentes que os cercavam. O apóstolo, vindo em auxílio deles com argumentos magistrais e usando as Escrituras Hebraicas, nas quais os judeus afirmavam basear-se, mostra irrefutavelmente a superioridade do sistema de coisas cristão, e do sacerdócio e da realeza de Jesus Cristo. Demonstra biblicamente que Jesus Cristo é o Filho de Deus, maior do que os anjos (1:4-6), do que Abraão (7:1-7), do que Moisés (3:1-6) e do que os profetas (1:1, 2). De fato, Cristo é o designado herdeiro de todas as coisas, coroado de glória e honra, e designado sobre as obras das mãos de Jeová. — 1:2; 2:7-9.

Quanto ao sacerdócio, o de Cristo é muito superior ao sacerdócio arônico da tribo de Levi. Não se baseia numa herança de carne pecaminosa, mas num juramento de Deus. (He 6:13-20; 7:5-17, 20-28) Então, por que suportou ele tantas dificuldades e teve uma morte de sofrimento? Isto foi predito como essencial para a salvação da humanidade, e para habilitá-lo como Sumo Sacerdote e como aquele a quem Deus sujeitaria todas as coisas. (2:8-10; 9:27, 28; compare isso com Is 53:12.) Ele tinha de se tornar carne e sangue, e tinha de morrer, a fim de emancipar todos aqueles que, pelo temor da morte, estavam em escravidão. Por meio da sua morte, ele pode reduzir a nada o Diabo, algo que nenhum sacerdote humano podia fazer. (He 2:14-16) Tendo sofrido assim, ele é um Sumo Sacerdote que pode compadecer-se das nossas fraquezas e pode vir em nosso auxílio, tendo sido posto à prova em todos os sentidos. — 2:17, 18; 4:15.

Além disso, argumenta o apóstolo, este Sumo Sacerdote "passou pelos céus" e apareceu na própria presença de Deus, não numa mera tenda ou construção terrestre, que apenas era representativa de coisas celestiais. (He 4:14; 8:1; 9:9, 10, 24) Ele precisava comparecer só uma vez com seu sacrifício perfeito, sem pecado, não vez após vez. (7:26-28; 9:25-28) Não tem sucessores, assim como tiveram os sacerdotes arônicos, mas vive para sempre, para salvar completamente aqueles a quem ministra. (7:15-17, 23-25) Cristo é o Mediador do pacto melhor, predito por meio de Jeremias, sob os quais os pecados podem realmente ser perdoados e a consciência purificada, coisas que a Lei nunca podia realizar. As Dez Palavras, as leis básicas do pacto da Lei, foram escritas em pedra; a lei do novo pacto, em corações. Esta palavra profética de Jeová, por meio de Jeremias, tornava o pacto da Lei obsoleto, fazendo-o desaparecer com o tempo. — 8:6-13; Je 31:31-34; De 4:13; 10:4.

É verdade, continua o escritor de Hebreus, que em Sinai se manifestou uma exibição atemorizante de poder, demonstrando a aprovação do pacto da Lei por Deus. De forma muito mais vigorosa, porém, Deus deu testemunho na inauguração do novo pacto, com sinais, portentos e obras poderosas, junto com distribuições de espírito santo a todos os membros reunidos da congregação. (He 2:2-4; compare isso com At 2:1-4.) E, quanto ao Reinado de Cristo, seu trono está no próprio céu, muito acima daquele dos reis da linhagem de Davi, que se sentavam no trono na Jerusalém terrestre. (He 1:9) Deus é a base do trono de Cristo, e o seu Reino não pode ser abalado, assim como foi o reino em Jerusalém, em 607 AEC. (1:8; 12:28) Além disso, Deus tem ajuntado seu povo perante algo muito mais espantoso do que a exibição milagrosa no monte Sinai. Ele tem feito os cristãos ungidos chegar-se ao Monte Sião celestial, e ainda abalará não só a terra, mas também o céu. — 12:18-27.

A carta aos hebreus é de inestimável valor para os cristãos. Sem ela, muitas das realidades referentes a Cristo, conforme prefiguradas pela Lei, não estariam claras. Por exemplo, os judeus sempre souberam das Escrituras Hebraicas que, quando seu sumo sacerdote entrava no compartimento Santíssimo do santuário a favor deles, ele os representava perante Jeová. Mas eles nunca souberam avaliar a seguinte realidade: Algum dia, o verdadeiro Sumo Sacerdote havia de aparecer nos céus na própria presença de Jeová! E, ao lermos as Escrituras Hebraicas, como poderíamos dar-nos conta do enorme significado do relato do encontro de Abraão com Melquisedeque, ou entender tão claramente o que este rei-sacerdote tipificava? Isto, naturalmente, são apenas dois exemplos dentre as muitas realidades que chegamos a visualizar ao ler a carta.

A fé edificada pela carta ajuda os cristãos a se apegarem à sua esperança por meio da "demonstração evidente de realidades, embora não observadas". (He 11:1) Numa época em que muitos se estribam na antiguidade, na riqueza material e no poder de organizações, no esplendor de ritos e cerimônias, e recorrem à sabedoria deste mundo, em vez de a Deus, a divinamente inspirada carta aos hebreus ajuda admiravelmente a tornar o homem de Deus "plenamente competente, completamente equipado para toda boa obra". — 2Ti 3:16, 17.

Escritor, Tempo e Lugar da Escrita. A escrita da carta aos hebreus tem sido amplamente atribuída ao apóstolo Paulo. Era aceita por primitivos escritores como epístola de Paulo. O Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 2 (P^{46}) (de aproximadamente 200 EC) contém Hebreus entre nove das cartas de Paulo, e Hebreus é alistado entre "quatorze cartas de Paulo, o apóstolo", em "O Cânon de Atanásio", do quarto século EC.

O escritor de Hebreus não se identifica por nome. Embora todas as suas outras cartas levem seu nome, esta falta de identificação do escritor obviamente não exclui Paulo. A evidência interna da carta aponta fortemente para Paulo como seu escritor, e para a Itália, provavelmente Roma, como lugar da escrita. (He 13:24) Foi em Roma, evidentemente durante os anos 59 a 61 EC, que Paulo foi encarcerado pela primeira vez. Timóteo estava com Paulo em Roma, sendo mencionado nas cartas do apóstolo aos filipenses, aos colossenses e a Filêmon, escritas em Roma durante este encarceramento. (Fil 1:1; 2:19; Col 1:1, 2; Flm 1) Esta circunstância se ajusta à observação feita em Hebreus 13:23 sobre a soltura de Timóteo da prisão e sobre o desejo do escritor de visitar em breve Jerusalém.

A época da escrita foi antes da destruição de Jerusalém em 70 EC, porque o templo em Jerusalém ainda estava de pé, realizando-se ali ofícios, conforme é evidente no argumento na carta. E a observação de Paulo, de que Timóteo tinha sido livrado, estabelece razoavelmente o tempo da escrita como cerca de nove anos antes, a saber, em 61 EC, quando se pensa que o próprio Paulo foi solto do seu primeiro encarceramento. — He 13:23.

HEBROM. Veja HÉBRON.

HÉBRON.

1. Neto de Levi e filho de Coate; antepassado "dos filhos de Hébron", ou hebronitas. — Êx 6:16, 18; Núm 3:19, 27; 26:58; 1Cr 6:2, 18; 15:4, 9; 23:12, 19; 26:30-32.

2. Filho de Maressa e pai de Corá, Tapua, Requém e Sema; descendente de Calebe, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:42, 43.

3. [Lugar de Associação (Parceria)]. Cidade antiga na região montanhosa de Judá, construída sete anos antes de Zoã, no Egito. (Núm 13:22) Hébron fica a uns 30 km ao SSO de Jerusalém e se encontra a 900 m acima do nível do mar. Tem a distinção de ser um dos lugares mais antigos ainda habitados do Oriente Médio. O antigo nome de Hébron, "Quiriate-Arba" (Cidade de Arba), parece ter sido derivado do seu fundador anaquim, Arba. (Gên 23:2; Jos 14:15) A cidade e os morros vizinhos já por muito tempo são famosos pelos vinhedos, romãzeiras, figueiras, oliveiras, damasqueiras, macieiras e nogueiras. Abençoada com numerosas fontes e poços, Hébron acha-se cercada por quilômetros e quilômetros de verde.

Os patriarcas Abraão, Isaque e Jacó passaram parte da sua residência como forasteiros em Hébron. (Gên 13:18; 35:27; 37:13, 14) Sara faleceu ali e foi enterrada numa caverna na vizinha Macpela. Esta caverna, junto com o terreno circundante, comprada por Abraão do hitita Efrom, tornou-se sepultura de família, onde também Abraão, Isaque, Rebeca, Leia e Jacó foram sepultados. — Gên 23:2-20; 49:29-33; 50:13.

Quando Moisés enviou 12 espias à Terra da Promessa, os descendentes gigantescos de Anaque moravam em Hébron. (Núm 13:22, 28, 33) Uns 40 anos mais tarde, Hoão, rei de Hébron, juntou-se a outros quatro reis numa ofensiva contra Gibeão, cidade que fizera a paz com Josué. Os israelitas atenderam o pedido de ajuda de Gibeão, e, com a ajuda de Jeová, derrotaram os exércitos dos cinco reis que haviam vindo contra Gibeão. Depois, estes cinco reis, que se haviam escondido numa caverna, foram executados e seus cadáveres pendurados em estacas até à noitinha. — Jos 10:1-27.

Ao prosseguir a campanha de Israel no S de Canaã, os habitantes de Hébron, inclusive seu rei (evidentemente o sucessor de Hoão), foram devotados à destruição. (Jos 10:36, 37) No entanto, embora os israelitas sob Josué quebrantassem o poder dos cananeus, parece que não estabeleceram imediatamente guarnições para manter suas conquistas. Evidentemente, enquanto Israel estava guerreando em outras partes, os anaquins estabeleceram-se novamente em Hébron, tornando necessário que Calebe (ou os filhos de Judá sob a liderança de Calebe), algum tempo depois, arrancasse a cidade do controle deles. (Jos 11:21-23; 14:12-15; 15:13, 14; Jz 1:10) Designada originalmente a Calebe, da tribo de Judá, Hébron recebeu depois a condição sagrada de cidade de refúgio. Servia também como cidade sacerdotal. Todavia, "o campo da cidade [de Hébron]" e seus povoados eram propriedade hereditária de Calebe. — Jos 14:13, 14; 20:7; 21:9-13.

Em Hébron, cerca de quatro séculos mais tarde, os homens de Judá ungiram Davi como rei. Ele governou dali por sete anos e meio, tornando-se no ínterim pai de seis filhos, Amnom, Quileabe (Daniel), Absalão, Adonias, Sefatias e Itreão. (2Sa 2:1-4, 11; 3:2-5; 1Cr 3:1-4) Anteriormente, os habitantes de Hébron, pelo visto, haviam ajudado Davi quando estava proscrito pelo Rei Saul. (1Sa 30:26, 31) Perto do fim do reinado de Davi em Hébron, Abner, principal apoiador do reinado rival de Is-Bosete, filho de Saul (2Sa 2:8, 9), bandeou-se para Davi. Joabe, ao retornar duma incursão e saber que Davi havia despedido Abner em paz, mandou mensageiros trazer Abner de volta e então ele mesmo o matou em Hébron, onde Abner depois foi sepultado. (2Sa 3:12-27, 32) Mais tarde, Recabe e Baaná assassinaram Is-Bosete, e, esperando receber uma recompensa, trouxeram a cabeça dele a Davi, em Hébron, mas ele mandou que fossem executados pela sua ação vil. (2Sa 4:5-12) Subsequentemente, Davi foi ungido rei sobre todo o Israel, e ele transferiu sua capital de Hébron para Jerusalém. — 2Sa 5:1-9.

Alguns anos depois, Absalão, filho de Davi, retornou a Hébron e ali iniciou sua usurpação malsucedida do reinado do seu pai. (2Sa 15:7-10) Foi provavelmente por causa da importância histórica de Hébron como antiga capital de Judá, bem como por ser a sua cidade natal, que Absalão escolheu esta cidade como ponto de partida de seu empenho pelo trono. Mais tarde, o neto de Davi, o Rei Roboão, reconstruiu Hébron. (2Cr 11:5-10) Após a desolação de Judá pelos babilônios e o retorno dos exilados judeus, alguns dos judeus repatriados estabeleceram-se em Hébron (Quiriate-Arba). — Ne 11:25.

HEBRONITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Hébron]. Família levítica descendente de Hébron, filho de Coate. (Êx 6:16, 18; Núm 3:27; 26:58; 1Cr 26:23, 24) O Rei Davi designou 1.700 hebronitas capazes para servir em cargos administrativos sobre a região ao O do Jordão, e 2.700 sobre o território ao L do Jordão. — 1Cr 26:30-32.

HEFER [Ele Procurou].

1. Filho de Gileade e bisneto de Manassés; antepassado dos heferitas. (Núm 26:29, 30, 32; 27:1) Hefer era o pai de Zelofeade, conhecido por não ter tido filhos, mas cinco filhas, cujo caso estabeleceu um precedente legal no manejo de propriedades hereditárias quando não houvesse descendente masculino. — Núm 26:33; 27:1-11; Jos 17:2, 3.

2. Descendente de Judá; filho de Assur com sua esposa Naará. — 1Cr 4:1, 5, 6.

3. Mequeratita; um dos notáveis guerreiros de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 36.

HÉFER [Cavar [isto é, um poço]]. Aparentemente, tanto uma cidade como um distrito ao O do Jordão. O rei da cidade cananeia de Héfer estava entre os derrotados por Josué. (Jos 12:7, 8, 17) No tempo de Salomão, o distrito de Héfer, bem como Socó, estavam sob a jurisdição de um preposto designado. (1Rs 4:7, 10) A localização exata da antiga Héfer não é conhecida com precisão. Alguns sugerem identificá-la com Tell el-Ifshar (Tel Hefer), a uns 40 km ao NNE de Tel Aviv-Yafo.

HEFERITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Hefer]. Família manassita descendente de Hefer. — Núm 26:29, 30, 32.

HEFZIBÁ [Meu Deleite Está Nela].

1. Esposa de Ezequias e mãe do Rei Manassés. — 2Rs 20:21; 21:1.

2. O nome "Hefzibá" é aplicado a Jerusalém numa profecia de restauração, segundo certas traduções da Bíblia. (Is 62:4, Al, AS, IBB) Aqui, outras usam expressões tais como "Meu prazer está nela" (BJ), "Minha delícia" (ALA) e "Meu Deleite Está Nela". (NM, AT, RS) Foi predito que Jeová se deleitaria com esta cidade, ao passo que ela se tornaria "uma coroa de beleza" na sua mão. — Is 62:1-4.

HEGAI. Eunuco da corte do Rei Assuero; guardião das mulheres que preparou Ester com tratamentos especiais de beleza antes de ela ser levada ao rei. — Est 2:3, 8, 9, 15.

HELA. Uma das duas esposas de Assur. Três dos filhos dela estão alistados nas genealogias de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 5, 7.

HELÃO. Lugar onde o exército de Davi derrotou as forças militares do rei sírio Hadadezer, que estavam sob o comando do chefe do exército Sobaque. (2Sa 10:15-19) Alguns peritos relacionam o lugar com "Alimas" mencionado no livro apócrifo de Primeiro Macabeus (5:26, BJ). Talvez seja a atual ʽAlma, a uns 55 km diretamente ao L do mar da Galileia.

HELBA. Cidade no território da tribo de Aser. Ela é mencionada como uma das cidades das quais a tribo de Aser não expulsou os habitantes cananeus. (Jz 1:31, 32) Alguns peritos acham ser ela Alabe e a identificam com Khirbet el-Mahalib, a uns 6 km ao NE de Tiro. No entanto, não há certeza da sua localização exata.

HELBOM. Lugar famoso pelo seu bom vinho, muito apreciado na cidade de Tiro. (Ez 27:18) Helbom geralmente é identificado com a atual aldeia de Halbun, a uns 20 km ao NNO de Damasco. A aldeia fica num vale estreito, com vinhedos em socalcos bem alto nas encostas dos montes. Nos tempos antigos, não somente Tiro, mas também a Assíria, Babilônia e a Pérsia obtinham vinho de Helbom.

HELCAI [forma abreviada de Hilquias, que significa "Meu Quinhão (Parte) É Jeová"]. Cabeça duma casa paterna sacerdotal de Meraiote, nos dias de Joiaquim, o sumo sacerdote. — Ne 12:12, 15.

HELCATE [Lugar Liso]. Cidade alistada entre os termos da tribo de Aser (Jos 19:24, 25, 31), mais tarde designada aos gersonitas como cidade levita. (Jos 21:27, 30, 31) Ocorre em 1 Crônicas 6:75, com a grafia variante de Hucoque. Sua localização é conjectural. Alguns a identificaram com Khirbet el-Harbaj (Tel Regev), a 18 km ao S de Aco e perto do sopé da serra do Carmelo. O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia, do editor organizador J. D. Douglas (1966, Vol. 2, p. 707), considera "talvez até mesmo melhor, Tell el-Qasis", a uns 9 km ao S de Khirbet el-Harbaj, que fica à entrada do vale de Jezreel. Visto que as cidades de Hali e Béten, mencionadas depois de Helcate na lista de Josué 19:24-26, são em geral tidas como situadas na parte meridional da planície de Aco, tal identificação com Tell el-Qasis (Tel Qashish) indicaria a descrição da fronteira como começando no extremo canto SE da planície de Aco, em vez de começar no norte e se estender para o sul. No entanto, seria necessária a identificação adicional de outras cidades para determinar isso.

HELCATE-HAZURIM [Campo de Facas de Pederneira; ou, por meio duma emenda: Campo de Lados]. Campo perto do "reservatório de água de Gibeão". Vinte e quatro moços, 12 representando os exércitos de Is-Bosete e 12 dos servos de Davi, morreram ali enquanto 'travavam um combate'. O lugar recebeu subsequentemente o nome deste incidente. — 2Sa 2:12-16.

HELDAI [possivelmente: Toupeira].

1. Cabeça do 12.º grupo de serviço mensal organizado por Davi; descendente de Otniel. (1Cr 27:1, 15) Sendo netofatita, ele é possivelmente o poderoso chamado Helebe, e Helede, filho de Baaná, o netofatita. — 2Sa 23:8, 29; 1Cr 11:26, 30.

2. Homem que retornou de Babilônia, e cuja prata e ouro foram usados na fabricação duma coroa para o sumo sacerdote Josué. (Za 6:10, 11) Este Heldai é chamado Helém no versículo 14.

HELEBE. Um dos poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:8, 29) Filho de Baaná, o netofatita, também chamado Helede na lista de Crônicas, tratando-se provavelmente de Heldai. — 1Cr 11:30; 27:15.

HELEDE [Duração da Vida; Sistema de Coisas; ou, possivelmente: Espálace]. Poderoso no exército de Davi. Era filho de Baaná, o netofatita. (1Cr 11:26, 30) É também chamado Helebe na lista paralela, tratando-se provavelmente de Heldai. — 2Sa 23:29; 1Cr 27:15.

HELEFE. Lugar na herança de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 33) Não há certeza da sua localização exata. Todavia, alguns geógrafos provisoriamente o situam em Khirbet ʽIrbadeh (Horvat ʽArpad), a uns 5 km ao O do cume NNE do monte Tabor.

HELÉM.

1. [Hebr.: Hé·lem]. Descendente de Aser, cuja família é alistada na genealogia da tribo. (1Cr 7:35, 40) Ele é provavelmente o Hotão do versículo 32.

2. [Hebr.: Hhé·lem]. Também chamado Heldai, foi um dos que contribuíram ouro e prata para a coroa do sumo sacerdote Josué, depois do retorno do restante de Babilônia. — Za 6:10, 11, 14.

HELEQUE [forma abreviada de Hilquias, que significa "Meu Quinhão (Parte) É Jeová"], HELEQUITAS. Segundo filho alistado de Gileade, e bisneto de Manassés. Fundou a família dos helequitas, que foi contada no censo realizado no fim da peregrinação dos israelitas no ermo e que recebeu uma herança no território de Manassés. — Núm 26:3, 4, 29, 30; Jos 17:2.

HELEZ [Ele Salvou].

1. Um dos poderosos de Davi, paltita ou pelonita. (2Sa 23:8, 26; 1Cr 11:26, 27) Quando Davi organizou os grupos de serviço mensal, Helez foi encarregado da sétima turma. — 1Cr 27:1, 10.

2. Descendente de Judá; filho de certo Azarias e pai de Eleasá. — 1Cr 2:3, 39.

HELOM [duma raiz que significa "energia vital"]. Homem da tribo de Zebulão, cujo filho Eliabe era maioral da sua tribo durante a peregrinação de Israel pelo ermo. — Núm 1:4, 9, 16; 2:7; 7:24; 10:16.

HEM [Favor, Graça]. Filho de certo Sofonias (não o profeta); um dos que retornaram do exílio em Babilônia. Ele é mencionado com relação à grandiosa coroa que havia de ser colocada na cabeça de Josué, o sumo sacerdote, e que depois viria a pertencer a Hem e mais três outros, como recordação no templo de Jeová. — Za 6:11, 14.

É provável que Hem possa ser identificado com o Josias mencionado em Zacarias 6:10. O nome Hem tem sido encarado variadamente como (1) nome próprio, (2) abreviatura ou corruptela do nome Josias, e (3) substantivo comum. Na Pesito siríaca, o nome Josias aparece tanto em Zacarias 6:10 como em 6:14, assim como ocorre em diversas traduções modernas. (BLH, CBC, MC, PIB) Ao passo que na American Standard Version (Versão Padrão Americana) o texto principal de Zacarias 6:14 reza "a Hem, filho de Sofonias", apresenta-se na nota ao pé da página outra versão, que diz: "Ou, pela benignidade do filho [de Sofonias]." A tradução "Hem", conforme encontrada na Tradução do Novo Mundo e em outras, baseia-se no texto massorético.

HEMÃ.

1. Um dos quatro sábios, cuja sabedoria, embora grande, era ultrapassada pela do Rei Salomão. Hemã, Calcol e Darda são chamados de "filhos de Maol", uma expressão que alguns pensam referir-se a uma associação de dançarinos ou músicos.

(1Rs 4:31) Em 1 Crônicas 2:3-6, Hemã é identificado como descendente de Judá por meio de Zerá. No cabeçalho do Salmo 88, ele é chamado de "ezraíta", que aparentemente é apenas outra palavra para "zeraíta". — Veja EZRAÍTA.

2. Filho de Joel e neto do profeta Samuel, da família dos coatitas; cantor e cimbaleiro levita durante os reinados de Davi e de Salomão. (1Cr 6:33; 15:17-19; 2Cr 5:11, 12) Pai de 14 filhos e 3 filhas, ele liderava sua família no canto na casa de Jeová. Todavia, ele mesmo, junto com Asafe e Jedutum, estava sob o controle direto do rei. — 1Cr 25:1, 4-6.

HEMÃO. Filho de Lotã e descendente de Seir, o horeu. (Gên 36:20, 22) O nome é grafado Homão em 1 Crônicas 1:39, segundo o texto massorético, mas a Septuaginta grega apresenta o nome como Hemão.

HEMORROIDAS. Dilatações das veias do ânus, frequentemente acompanhadas por sangramento. Neste distúrbio, muitas vezes doloroso, há tumores vasculares sob a membrana mucosa do reto, quer acima do esfíncter externo (hemorroidas internas), quer no seu lado externo (hemorroidas externas), quer em ambos os pontos.

As hemorroidas estavam entre os distúrbios de que Jeová avisou os israelitas que eles sofreriam se fossem desobedientes. (De 28:15, 17) Ele afligiu com hemorroidas os filisteus de Asdode e seus territórios, de Gate e de Ecrom, enquanto estavam de posse da Arca sagrada. — 1Sa 5:6-12.

A palavra hebraica traduzida por "hemorroidas" (CBC; NM), "tumores" (ALA; BJ; BLH), e "tumores pestíferos" (LEB; MC), como em 1 Samuel 5:6, é 'ofa·lím, denotando inchações ou saliências arredondadas, hemorroidas ou tumores no ânus. Em 1 Samuel 6:11, 17, no texto massorético, as inchações que afligiam os filisteus são chamadas de tehho·rím, que significa "tumores". Em todas as seis ocorrências bíblicas de 'ofa·lím (hemorroidas), os massoretas judeus marcaram esta palavra com os sinais vocálicos para tehho·rím (tumores) e indicaram este último termo na margem como palavra a ser lida em vez de 'ofa·lím.

Os cinco senhores do eixo filisteus devolveram a Arca a Israel com uma oferta pela culpa para Jeová, a qual consistia, em parte, em cinco imagens de ouro das hemorroidas, quer dizer, representações destas inchações. (1Sa 6:4, 5, 11, 17) De forma algo similar, certos povos antigos (especialmente os gregos e os romanos) invocavam suas deidades para obter curas por presenteá-las com réplicas das partes afetadas do corpo, ou apresentavam modelos delas em gratidão pelas supostas curas.

Visto que os gerbos (roedores saltadores parecidos a camundongos) arruinavam o país (1Sa 6:5), alguns peritos acreditam que os filisteus sofriam da peste bubônica, uma doença infecciosa altamente fatal, assinalada por sintomas tais como febre, calafrios, prostração e ingurgitamento doloroso das glândulas linfáticas, ou ínguas. Esta praga é transmitida principalmente por picadas de pulgas que picaram ratos ou outros roedores infetados, moribundos ou já mortos.

"Uma confusão mortífera" ocorreu quando a Arca estava em Ecrom, onde "os homens que não morreram foram golpeados com hemorroidas". (1Sa 5:10-12) Tanto as imagens de hemorroidas como de gerbos são mencionadas em 1 Samuel 6:4, onde se citam os sacerdotes e adivinhos filisteus como dizendo que "cada um de vós e vossos senhores do eixo tendes o mesmo flagelo". Mas isto talvez signifique apenas que a nação inteira, tanto os senhores do eixo como o povo, havia sofrido uma calamidade em comum, "o mesmo flagelo", não necessariamente que os roedores e as hemorroidas fossem associados com uma só doença ou praga epidêmica. A Bíblia parece indicar apenas que os gerbos destruíram a vegetação em toda a Filístia, arruinando o país, e não declara especificamente que fossem os portadores da infecção que atingiu os filisteus golpeados por Jeová.

HENA.

1. [hebr.: Hé·na']. Cidade ou região alistada junto com Sefarvaim e Iva, conquistada pelos assírios. (2Rs 18:34; 19:13; Is 37:13) A Septuaginta grega usa aqui A·na, nome duma cidade no curso médio do rio Eufrates. Alguns peritos, porém, acham mais provável que Hena, junto com Sefarvaim e Iva, ficava na Síria.

2. [hebr.: kó·fer]. Arbusto que tem panículas de pequenas flores de quatro pétalas, branco-amareladas, na ponta dos seus ramos; sua forte fragrância é muito apreciada pelos povos do Oriente Médio. Frequentemente, coloca-se um raminho de hena num ramalhete, e as mulheres o usam no cabelo ou junto ao busto. Desde a antiguidade, a hena tem sido também usada como cosmético.

Este arbusto (Lawsonia inermis), que ainda cresce silvestre na Palestina, atinge a altura máxima de uns 4 m. É mencionado apenas em O Cântico de Salomão (1:14; 4:13; 7:11).

A pasta de hena, produzida das folhas trituradas da planta, é usada como cosmético. Quando se tira a pasta por lavagem, permanece a coloração, comumente laranja ou avermelhada. A hena tem sido usada para tingir as unhas das mãos e dos pés, as pontas dos dedos, mãos, pés, barba, cabelo e até a crina e a cauda dos cavalos, bem como peles e couro. A raiz hebraica, da qual se pensa que kó·fer deriva, tem sido definida como "cobertura", aparentemente indicando seu uso como tintura. — Veja Gên 6:14.

HENADADE. Levita cujos descendentes aparentemente serviram quais supervisores com relação à reconstrução do templo por Zorobabel. (Esd 3:8, 9) Dois dos descendentes de Henadade são mencionados especificamente como participando nos reparos da muralha de Jerusalém, e um dos seus descendentes atestou com selo a confissão pactuada feita quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 3:17, 18, 24; 9:38; 10:1, 9.

HENDÃ [Desejável]. Um dos filhos de Disom, filho de Seir, o horeu. (Gên 36:20, 21, 26) Os horeus foram os habitantes originais das regiões montanhosas de Seir, até serem desapossados pelos descendentes de Esaú. (De 2:12, 21, 22) Seu nome, em 1 Crônicas 1:41, é diversamente vertido como "Hendã" (NM), "Hamdan" (LEB), "Hanrão" (Al; ALA; BLH; IBB), "Hamrão" (CBC; MC), "Hamrã" (BJ; BV) e "Hamran" (BMD; PIB).

HERANÇA. Qualquer propriedade que passa para o herdeiro ou para os que têm o direito de sucessão quando o dono falece; tudo o que é recebido de progenitores ou predecessores como que por sucessão. O principal verbo hebraico usado é na·hhál (substantivo: na·hhaláh). Envolve obter ou dar uma herança ou propriedade hereditária, usualmente em resultado duma sucessão. (Núm 26:55; Ez 46:18) O verbo ya·rásh é às vezes usado no sentido de "suceder como herdeiro", porém, mais vezes, "tomar posse" independentemente duma sucessão. (Gên 15:3; Le 20:24) Tem também o significado de "desapossar; expulsar", envolvendo ação militar. (De 2:12; 31:3) As palavras gregas que têm que ver com herança são aparentadas com klé·ros, que originalmente significava "sorte", mas passou a significar "quinhão", e, finalmente, "herança". — Mt 27:35; At 1:17; 26:18.

Em Israel, o termo herança aplicava-se primariamente às propriedades de terra, embora fosse também usado com referência a bens móveis. A Bíblia fala também da herança de coisas de natureza espiritual. Os cristãos gerados pelo espírito são chamados, "deveras, herdeiros de Deus, mas co-herdeiros de Cristo". Permanecendo fiéis, aguardam receber a "herança eterna". — Ro 8:17; He 9:15.

Período Patriarcal. Os fiéis patriarcas hebreus, Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, não possuíam terras, exceto um campo com a caverna usada como sepultura, e o campo perto de Siquém, comprado por Jacó. (Gên 23:19, 20; 33:19) Estêvão, o mártir cristão, disse a respeito da residência de Abraão em Canaã: "Contudo, não lhe deu nela nenhuma propriedade transmissível por herança, não, nem mesmo da largura de um pé; mas prometeu dar-lha como propriedade, e depois dele, ao seu descendente, quando ainda não tinha filho." (At 7:5) A herança material que esses homens legaram consistia em gado e em bens móveis. O primogênito herdava uma porção dupla (duas partes) da propriedade, em comparação com o aquinhoado aos outros filhos. No caso do patriarca Jó, suas filhas receberam uma herança entre os seus irmãos. Não se declara se esta incluía a herança de terras. — Jó 42:15.

Havendo um bom motivo, o pai podia transferir o direito da primogenitura, dando a herança do primogênito a um filho mais moço. Nos casos mencionados na Bíblia, não se tratava de capricho ou de favoritismo, mas o pai tinha uma base em que determinava fazer a mudança na herança da primogenitura. Ismael, como filho mais velho de Abraão, era o prospectivo herdeiro durante uns 14 anos. (Gên 16:16; 17:18-21; 21:5) Mas, a pedido de Sara, e com a aprovação de Jeová, Abraão despediu Ismael, que então tinha uns 19 anos. Isaque passou então a ter o direito da primogenitura, e mais tarde recebeu tudo o que Abraão possuía, com exceção dos presentes que Abraão deu aos filhos que lhe nasceram mais tarde através de Quetura. (Gên 21:8-13; 25:5, 6) Rubem, primogênito de Jacó, perdeu sua herança como tal por ter cometido fornicação com a concubina de seu pai. (Gên 49:3, 4; 1Cr 5:1, 2) Jacó deu a bênção maior a Efraim, filho mais moço de José, em vez de a Manassés, o mais velho. — Gên 48:13-19.

O concubinato era legal. De fato, na Bíblia, a concubina é às vezes chamada de "esposa", e o homem com quem vivia, de "esposo". O pai dela é chamado de sogro do homem, e este é chamado de genro do pai da esposa. (Gên 16:3; Jz 19:3-5) Os filhos de concubinas eram legítimos, e, portanto, estavam em condições de herdar o mesmo que os filhos da esposa legítima.

Antes de Abraão ter filhos, ele falou de seu escravo Eliézer como herdeiro prospectivo dos seus bens, mas foi informado por Jeová que teria um filho como herdeiro. — Gên 15:1-4.

Período da Lei. Sob a Lei, o pai não podia constituir em primogênito o filho duma esposa mais amada, às custas do verdadeiro primogênito duma esposa menos amada. Ele tinha de dar ao primogênito uma porção dupla de tudo o que possuía. (De 21:15-17) Quando não havia filhos varões, a herança passava para as filhas. (Núm 27:6-8; Jos 17:3-6) No entanto, as filhas que herdavam terras tinham de se casar apenas na família da tribo de seu pai, para impedir que a herança passasse de uma tribo para outra. (Núm 36:6-9) Quando não havia filhos varões, a ordem de transmissão da herança era para (1) os irmãos do falecido, (2) os irmãos do pai dele, (3) o parente consanguíneo mais próximo. (Núm 27:9-11) A esposa não recebia herança de seu marido. Não havendo filhos varões, a esposa era considerada a proprietária da terra até esta ser remida por aquele que tinha o direito de resgate. Neste caso, a esposa era resgatada junto com a propriedade. (Ru 4:1-12) Sob a lei do casamento de cunhado, o primeiro filho varão da mulher com o resgatador tornava-se herdeiro do falecido marido dela e dava continuidade ao nome deste. — De 25:5, 6.

Terras hereditárias. A herança dos filhos de Israel lhes foi dada por Jeová, que delineou para Moisés os termos da terra. (Núm 34:1-12; Jos 1:4) Os filhos de Gade, os filhos de Rubem e metade da tribo de Manassés receberam seu quinhão de território por meio de Moisés. (Núm 32:33; Jos 14:3) As demais tribos receberam sua herança por sortes, sob a direção de Josué e Eleazar. (Jos 14:1, 2) Em harmonia com a profecia de Jacó, em Gênesis 49:5, 7, Simeão e Levi não receberam setores separados de território por herança. O território de Simeão consistiu de terras (junto com cidades encravadas) dentro do território de Judá (Jos 19:1-9), ao passo que se concederam a Levi 48 cidades em todo o território de Israel. Visto que os levitas receberam a designação de prestar serviço especial no santuário, dizia-se que Jeová era a herança deles. Recebiam os dízimos como seu quinhão ou sua herança em troca dos serviços que prestavam. (Núm 18:20, 21; 35:6, 7) As famílias receberam designações dentro do território da sua tribo. Ao passo que as famílias aumentavam e os filhos herdavam, a terra era progressivamente subdividida em parcelas cada vez menores.

Visto que a terra ficava na posse da mesma família de geração em geração, não podia ser vendida em perpetuidade. Na realidade, a venda de terra era apenas o arrendamento dela pelo valor das safras que iria produzir, estabelecendo-se o preço de compra segundo uma escala do número de anos até o próximo jubileu, ocasião em que todos os bens de terra revertiam ao seu dono original, se não tivessem sido anteriormente resgatados ou remidos. (Le 25:13, 15, 23, 24) Este regulamento incluía casas em cidades não muradas, que eram consideradas como parte do campo aberto. Quanto a uma casa numa cidade murada, o direito de resgate valia apenas um ano a partir da compra, tornando-se após isso propriedade do comprador. No que referia às casas em cidades de levitas, o direito do resgate continuava por tempo indefinido, porque os levitas não tinham herança de terra. — Le 25:29-34.

A inviolabilidade da propriedade hereditária é ilustrada pelo caso do vinhedo de Nabote. Nabote recusou-se a vendê-lo ao rei, ou trocá-lo por outro vinhedo; a coroa não possuía o direito de domínio eminente. (1Rs 21:2-6) No entanto, a pessoa podia devotar parte da sua herança a Jeová, para o santuário. Neste caso, não podia ser remida, mas continuava sendo propriedade do santuário e do seu sacerdócio. Se um homem quisesse santificar parte da sua propriedade para uso temporário por parte do santuário, podia fazer isso; e se mais tarde quisesse remi-la, podia fazer isso acrescentando um quinto ao seu valor. Sem dúvida, isso protegia o tesouro do santuário contra perdas, e criava também maior respeito pelo santuário e por aquilo que se oferecia na adoração a Jeová. Se o campo santificado era vendido a outro homem, então, no jubileu, era um campo devotado e não voltava ao dono original, mas continuava a ser propriedade do santuário e do seu sacerdócio. — Le 27:15-21, 28; veja SANTIFICAÇÃO (Santificação de Terras).

Em vista do que já se mencionou, pode-se ver que não havia lugar para testamentos na terminologia ou na prática hebraicas, visto que as leis de herança obstavam a necessidade de tal documento. Mesmo os bens móveis eram distribuídos pelo dono durante a sua vida ou pelas leis de herança na ocasião da sua morte. Na ilustração do filho pródigo, apresentada por Jesus, o filho mais moço, a seu pedido, recebeu sua parte da propriedade antes do falecimento do pai. — Lu 15:12.

Benefícios das leis de herança. As leis que governavam as propriedades hereditárias e a divisão delas em parcelas menores, ao passo que a população aumentava, já eram por si sós um fator contribuinte para maior união da família. Numa terra tal como Israel, que consistia em grande parte de regiões montanhosas, como na Judeia, isto era vantajoso, visto que obrigava os israelitas a aproveitar ao máximo o terreno, mesmo fazendo socalcos nas encostas, o que resultava em revestirem o país de beleza e de verde, de oliveiras, de figueiras, de palmeiras e de videiras, fornecendo alimentos a uma grande população. Ser todo homem proprietário de terra desenvolvia maior amor ao solo em que vivia, promovia a laboriosidade, e, junto com o regulamento do jubileu, devolvia à nação a sua condição teocrática original em cada 50.º ano. Isto ajudava a manter a economia equilibrada. Todavia, assim como aconteceu com outros aspectos da Lei, com o tempo introduziram-se abusos.

Conforme Jeová dissera aos israelitas, era ele o verdadeiro Proprietário daquelas terras. Do ponto de vista dele, eles eram residentes forasteiros e colonos. Portanto, podia expulsá-los do país em qualquer momento que achasse apropriado. (Le 25:23) Por causa das muitas violações da lei de Deus por parte deles, foram mandados ao exílio por 70 anos, sob o poder de Babilônia, e permaneceram sob domínio gentio até mesmo depois do seu restabelecimento em 537 AEC. Finalmente, em 70 EC, os romanos os tiraram completamente da terra, ven-dendo milhares deles como escravos. Perderam-se ou destruíram-se até mesmo seus registros genealógicos.

Herança Cristã. Jesus Cristo, como o filho de Davi, herda o trono de Davi. (Is 9:7; Lu 1:32) Como Filho de Deus, ele herda o reino celestial por meio do pacto que Jeová fez com ele. (Sal 110:4; Lu 22:28-30) Portanto, Cristo herda as nações, para quebrantar todos os opositores e governar para sempre. — Sal 2:6-9.

Diz-se que os membros ungidos da congregação cristã têm uma herança celestial, compartilhando a herança de Jesus como seus "irmãos". (Ef 1:14; Col 1:12; 1Pe 1:4, 5) Isto inclui a terra. — Mt 5:5.

Visto que Deus remiu os israelitas do Egito, eles se tornaram sua propriedade ou "herança". (De 32:9; Sal 33:12; 74:2; Miq 7:14) Prefiguravam a "nação" do Israel espiritual, considerado por Deus como sua "herança", por ter a posse desta, tendo-a comprado pelo sangue do seu Filho unigênito, Jesus Cristo. — 1Pe 2:9; 5:2, 3; At 20:28.

Jesus Cristo salientou que aqueles que renunciam a coisas valiosas pela causa do Seu nome e pela causa das boas novas 'herdarão a vida eterna'. — Mt 19:29; Mr 10:29, 30; veja CASAMENTO DE CUNHADO; PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO; PRIMOGENITURA, DIREITO DE.

HERDEIRO. Veja HERANÇA.

HERES, I [hebr.: Hhé·res, Sol].

1. Montanha (hebr.: har) onde os amorreus continuaram a morar apesar da conquista de Canaã por Israel. É associada com o território da tribo de Dã. (Jz 1:34, 35) Muitos peritos a acham equivalente a Ir-Semes (que evidentemente é a mesma que Bete-Semes, na fronteira de Judá e Dã) mencionada em Josué 19:41. — Veja BETE-SEMES N.º 1.

2. Gideão voltou da guerra contra os midianitas "pelo passo que sobe a Heres". Este lugar não é conhecido fora da referência bíblica em Juízes 8:13. Por isso, alguns peritos sugerem que o texto hebraico talvez rezasse originalmente "antes de o sol [ha·hhé·res] se levantar", ou "de lá nos montes", em vez de "pelo passo que sobe a Heres".

HERES, II [hebr.: Hhé·resh, Surdo; Calado]. Levita cujo nome aparece numa lista dos que retornaram do exílio em Babilônia. — 1Cr 9:1, 14, 15.

HERETE, FLORESTA DE [Entalhado]. Um dos esconderijos de Davi enquanto era perseguido por Saul. (1Sa 22:5) A "floresta de Herete" evidentemente derivava seu nome duma cidade na vizinhança. Sua localização exata na terra de Judá é incerta.

HERMAS. Um dos cristãos na congregação de Roma a quem Paulo enviou saudações pessoais. — Ro 16:14.

HERMES.

1. Um dos cristãos da congregação em Roma a quem Paulo enviou saudações pessoais. — Ro 16:14.

2. Deus grego; filho de Zeus e Maia, identificado pelos romanos com seu deus do comércio, Mercúrio. Hermes era tido como o mensageiro dos deuses. Acreditava-se ser ele conselheiro discreto dos heróis e era considerado o deus do comércio, da eloquência, das habilidades de ginástica, do sono e dos sonhos. Cria-se que este deus não somente guiava os vivos, mas também conduzia os mortos ao Hades.

Quando o apóstolo Paulo estava em Listra, o povo nativo, depois de ver o apóstolo curar um coxo de nascença, identificou Paulo com o deus Hermes, visto que Paulo "tomava a dianteira no falar". (At 14:8-13) Esta identificação harmoniza-se com o conceito do povo, de Hermes ser mensageiro divino e deus da eloquência. Que Hermes era adorado pelo povo de Listra é indicado pela seguinte inscrição encontrada naquela vizinhança, em 1909: "Toues Macrinus, também chamado Abascantus, e Batasis, filho de Bretasis, tendo feito, de acordo com um voto, às suas próprias custas [uma estátua de] Hermes Grandíssimo, junto com um relógio de sol, dedicaram-na a Zeus, o deus-sol." — The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional), editada por J. Orr, 1960, Vol. III, p. 1944.

HERMÓGENES [Nascido de Hermes]. Um dos dois cristãos no distrito da Ásia, especificamente mencionado por nome como tendo-se desviado de Paulo, possivelmente por causa da violenta perseguição lançada por Nero contra os cristãos, após o incêndio de Roma, em 64 EC. — 2Ti 1:15.

HERMOM [Algo Devotado; Algo Banido]. O Hermom tem sido identificado com a montanha mais alta nas proximidades da Palestina, chamada pelos árabes de Jebel esh-Sheikh (possivelmente significando "Montanha do Velho") ou Jebel eth-Thalj (que significa "Montanha da Neve"). Estes nomes evidentemente derivam da circunstância de o monte Hermom ter o pico coberto de neve quase que o ano inteiro. Pode-se dizer que seu cume coberto de neve se parece à coroa de cabelo branco de um homem idoso. Nos tempos antigos, este monte era conhecido aos sidônios como "Sírion", e aos amorreus como "Senir". (De 3:8, 9) Este último nome parece também ter sido usado para indicar uma parte da cordilheira do Antilíbano. (1Cr 5:23) "Síon" (não Sião) era mais um nome aplicado ao monte Hermom. (De 4:47, 48) O salmista menciona o Hermom junto com Tabor, como gritando de júbilo em nome de Jeová. — Sal 89:12.

O monte Hermom, constituindo a extremidade S da cordilheira do Antilíbano, eleva-se a 2.814 m acima do nível do mar e se estende uns 30 km de N a S. Seus diversos cumes estão ligados por planaltos. (Sal 42:6) O monte Hermom é de pedra calcária, embora tenha afloramentos de basalto nas encostas orientais e ocidentais. A parte de cima é completamente destituída de vegetação, exceto por uns ocasionais arbustos rasos. Mais embaixo, porém, há abetos, árvores frutíferas e arbustos. As encostas inferiores dos lados ocidental e meridional estão cobertas por vinhedos.

Num dia claro, o cume do Hermom oferece uma esplêndida vista de grande parte da Palestina. Ao O, podem-se ver os montes do Líbano, a planície de Tiro e o mar Mediterrâneo; ao SO, o monte Carmelo; ao S, o vale do Jordão com a bacia de Hulé e o mar da Galileia; e ao L, a planície de Damasco.

O pico nevado do monte Hermom contribui para a condensação dos vapores noturnos, produzindo assim um orvalho abundante. "Jamais vimos tão copioso orvalho", observou o naturalista H. B. Tristram, do século 19, "tudo ficava ensopado dele, e as tendas davam pouca proteção". (The Land of Israel [A Terra de Israel], Londres, 1866, pp. 608, 609) O refrescante orvalho do Hermom preserva a vegetação durante a longa estação do estio. (Sal 133:3; veja ORVALHO.) A neve derretida do monte Hermom constitui a principal fonte do rio Jordão.

Antigamente, o monte Hermom era o habitat de animais selvagens, tais como leões e leopardos. (Cân 4:8) Em tempos recentes, noticiou-se haver ali raposas, lobos, leopardos e ursos pardos sírios.

O monte Hermom tornou-se o limite norte da Terra da Promessa. (Jos 12:1; 13:2, 5, 8, 11) Os heveus, que moravam ao sopé dele, foram derrotados por Josué. (Jos 11:1-3, 8, 16, 17) Este monte talvez tenha sido o cenário da transfiguração de Jesus Cristo (Mt 17:1; Mr 9:2; Lu 9:28; 2Pe 1:18), porque ele esteve pouco antes deste evento na vizinha Cesareia de Filipe. — Mr 8:27; veja BAAL-HERMOM; TRANSFIGURAÇÃO.

HERODES. Nome duma família de governantes políticos que dominavam os judeus. Eram idumeus, edomitas. Nominalmente eram judeus, porque João Hircano I, governante macabeu, impôs aos idumeus a circuncisão por volta de 125 AEC, segundo relata Josefo.

Além da breve menção bíblica dos Herodes, a maior parte das informações sobre eles está contida na história de Josefo. O progenitor dos Herodes era Antípater (Ântipas) I, a quem Alexandre Janeu, o rei asmoneu (macabeu), fizera governador da Idumeia. O filho de Antípater, também chamado Antípater, ou Ântipas, era o pai de Herodes, o Grande. Josefo relata que o historiador Nicolau de Damasco diz que Antípater (II) era da estirpe dos principais judeus que saíram de Babilônia para a terra de Judá. Mas, Josefo diz que a afirmação de Nicolau servia apenas para agradar a Herodes, que realmente era edomita, tanto por parte do pai como por parte da mãe.

Antípater II, homem muito rico, estava envolvido na política e em intrigas, e tinha grandes ambições para seus filhos. Apoiou João Hircano II, filho de Alexandre Janeu e Salomé Alexandra, contra Aristóbulo, irmão de Hircano, para a posição de sumo sacerdote e rei judeu. Na realidade, porém, Antípater empenhava-se ambiciosamente em proveito próprio, e por fim recebeu de Júlio César a cidadania romana e o cargo de governador da Judeia. Antípater designou Fasel, seu primeiro filho, governador de Jerusalém, e outro filho, Herodes, governador da Galileia. Sua carreira terminou quando foi envenenado por um assassino.

1. Herodes, o Grande, segundo filho de Antípater (Ântipas) II com sua esposa Cipros. A história confirma a veracidade do breve relance bíblico ao caráter inescrupuloso, ardiloso, suspeitoso, imoral, cruel e assassino deste homem. Ele possuía a habilidade do pai como diplomata e oportunista. Deve-se dizer, porém, que mostrou capacidade de organizador e de comandante militar. Josefo o descreve como homem de grande força física, perito no manejo de cavalos, e no uso do dardo e do arco. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], I, 429, 430 [xxi, 13]) Provavelmente, sua característica benéfica mais notável era sua habilidade como construtor.

Distinguiu-se primeiro como governador da Galileia por livrar este território dos bandos de assaltantes. Todavia, certos judeus eram invejosos, e, junto com as mães de assaltantes mortos, incitaram Hircano II (então sumo sacerdote) a convocar Herodes perante o Sinédrio, sob a acusação de que se adiantara a este corpo por executar sumariamente os assaltantes, em vez de levá-los primeiro ao julgamento. Herodes acatou isso, mas impudente e desrespeitosamente compareceu com uma escolta, embora ele, como professo prosélito, estivesse sujeito a este tribunal. Por causa deste insulto à suprema corte judaica, ele incorreu na ira dos juízes. Segundo Josefo, um único juiz, chamado Samaías (Simeão), foi intrépido o bastante para se levantar e falar, predizendo que, se Herodes escapasse da punição, ele, com o tempo, mataria os que o julgavam. Mas Hircano era homem passivo, indeciso. Sob a pressão da intimidação de Herodes, acompanhada duma carta de Sexto César (parente de Júlio César, e então presidente da Síria), que ameaçava Hircano se não negasse provimento às acusações, Hircano cedeu. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XIV, 168-176 (ix, 4).

Rei da Judeia. Herodes sucedeu seu pai, e, por volta de 39 AEC, foi feito rei da grande Judeia, por designação do senado romano; mas só pôde firmar-se de fato como rei três anos mais tarde, quando tomou Jerusalém e depôs Antígono, filho de Aristóbulo. Depois desta vitória, Herodes tomou medidas para manter sua posição por persuadir o romano Marco Antônio a matar Antígono, e por caçar os principais membros do partido de Antígono, ao todo 45 homens, e matá-los. Dentre os principais fariseus, ele poupou apenas Samaías e Pólio, porque, por fim, matou até mesmo João Hircano II, alguns anos mais tarde. Por assim matar aqueles que o haviam julgado, cumpriu a predição de Samaías.

Sempre político astuto, Herodes acreditava que seus melhores interesses residiam em apoiar Roma. Mas, ele tinha de ser muito diplomático, frequentemente mudando de lado, para acompanhar a situação mutável dos governantes romanos. Por ser amigo íntimo de Sexto, Herodes primeiro apoiou Júlio César, e depois se aliou a Cássio, assassino de César. Conseguiu obter o favor de Marco Antônio, inimigo de Cássio e vingador de César, parcialmente por meio de grandes subornos. Mais tarde, quando Otávio (Augusto César) derrotou Antônio na batalha de Áccio, Herodes astutamente obteve o perdão de Augusto por ter apoiado Antônio, e depois reteve a amizade de Augusto. Por apoiar Roma e por seu liberal uso de dinheiro como presentes para os césares, junto com sua linguagem macia, Herodes sempre se saiu bem quando queixas ou acusações contra ele eram levadas a Roma por judeus ou por outros, às vezes por membros da sua própria família.

Como governador da Galileia, Herodes exerceu seu primeiro domínio. Cássio fizera dele governador da Coele-Síria. Mais tarde, o senado romano, pela recomendação de Antônio, fez dele o rei da Judeia. A isto o Imperador Augusto acrescentou então Samaria, Gadara, Gaza e Jope, depois as regiões de Traconítis, Bataneia, Auranítis e Pereia, uma região ao leste do Jordão, correspondendo aproximadamente à Gileade. A Idumeia também estava sob o seu domínio.

O Templo e Outras Construções. No que se refere às construções feitas por Herodes, a mais notável é a reconstrução do templo de Zorobabel, em Jerusalém, especialmente do ponto de vista bíblico. Foi construído a um enorme custo, e é descrito por Josefo como realmente magnífico. (Jewish Antiquities, XV, 395, 396 [xi, 3]) Os judeus, por odiarem Herodes e suspeitarem dele, não lhe permitiram derrubar primeiro o templo existente, mas ele teve de reunir os materiais de construção e tê-los no canteiro de obras antes de poder começar a demolição. Segundo Josefo, o santuário do templo foi reconstruído em 18 meses. (Jewish Antiquities, XV, 421 [xi, 6]) Outros edifícios principais foram erigidos em oito anos. Mas, em 30 EC, os judeus declararam que o templo foi construído em 46 anos. Esta declaração foi feita durante uma conversa com Jesus Cristo perto da época da primeira Páscoa após o batismo de Jesus. (Jo 2:13-20) Segundo Josefo (Jewish Antiquities, XV, 380 [xi, 1]), esta obra começou no 18.º ano do reinado de Herodes.

Calculado do modo que os judeus encaravam os anos de reinado dos seus reis, isto poderia significar 18/17 AEC. Na realidade, a obra do templo continuou na forma de anexos, e assim por diante, até seis anos antes da sua destruição em 70 EC.

Herodes foi também responsável pela construção de teatros, anfiteatros, hipódromos, cidadelas, fortalezas, palácios, jardins, templos em honra de César, aquedutos, monumentos e até mesmo cidades. A estas cidades deu o seu próprio nome, o de parentes ou o de imperadores de Roma. Construiu um porto artificial em Cesareia, que rivalizava com o porto marítimo de Tiro. Segundo Josefo, assentaram-se na água enormes pedras a uma profundidade de 36 m, para construir um molhe de uns 60 m de largura. (Jewish Antiquities, XV, 334, 335 [ix, 6]) Herodes reconstruiu as fortalezas de Antônia e de Massada, sendo esta última a mais magnífica. Suas construções eram feitas em cidades tão afastadas como Antioquia da Síria, e Rodes (na ilha do mesmo nome).

Herodes era extremamente pródigo nas suas recepções e liberal com presentes, especialmente para dignitários romanos. Uma das principais queixas dos judeus contra ele era a sua construção de anfiteatros, tais como aquele em Cesareia, onde realizava jogos gregos e romanos, inclusive corridas de carros, lutas de gladiadores, homens lutando com feras, e outras festividades pagãs. Ele estava tão interessado em manter vivos os Jogos Olímpicos que, enquanto estava na Grécia, numa viagem a Roma, tornou-se até mesmo um dos combatentes. Daí ele doou uma grande soma de dinheiro para perpetuar os jogos, bem como, incidentalmente, seu próprio nome. Por ser ele nominalmente judeu, chamava os judeus de “meus patrícios”, e aqueles que tinham retornado de Babilônia para construir o templo de Zorobabel, de “meus pais”. Não obstante, seu proceder na vida era de completa negação da sua afirmação de ser servo de Jeová Deus.

Dificuldades na Família. Praticamente toda a família dos Herodes era ambiciosa, suspeitosa, crassamente imoral e problemática. Herodes enfrentou as maiores dificuldades e pesares na sua própria família. Sua mãe Cipros e sua irmã Salomé constantemente agravavam a situação. Herodes havia-se casado com Mariamne (I), neta de Hircano II e filha de Alexandre, o qual era filho de Aristóbulo. Ela era uma mulher muito bela, e Herodes a amava muito, mas surgiu ódio entre ela, e a mãe e a irmã de Herodes. Herodes era constantemente invejoso, e suspeitava que membros da sua família, especialmente seus filhos, tramavam contra ele; em alguns casos, sua suspeita era justificada. Sua cobiça de poder e suas suspeitas induziram-no então a causar o assassinato da sua esposa Mariamne, de três dos seus filhos, do irmão e do avô (Hircano) da sua esposa, de diversos dos que haviam sido seus melhores amigos, e de muitos outros. Recorria a torturas para arrancar confissões de quem quer que ele suspeitasse ter informações que confirmariam as suas suspeitas.

Relação com os Judeus. Herodes tentou apaziguar os judeus com a reconstrução do templo e por dar-lhes as coisas necessárias em épocas de fome. Ocasionalmente, aliviou os impostos de alguns dos seus súditos. Conseguiu até mesmo que Augusto concedesse aos judeus privilégios em diversas partes do mundo. Mas a sua tirania e sua crueldade excediam isso, e, durante a maior parte do seu domínio, ele tinha dificuldades com os judeus.

Sua Doença e Sua Morte. É bem possível que Herodes, por causa da vida licenciosa que levava, por fim padecesse de uma doença repugnante, acompanhada por febre, e, citando Josefo, “uma coceira intolerável em toda a pele, contínuas dores nos intestinos, tumores nos pés, como na hidropisia, inflamação do abdome e gangrena nos órgãos genitais, resultando em vermes, além de asma, com grande dificuldade de respiração, e convulsões em todos os membros”. — The Jewish War, I, 656 (xxxiii, 5).

Foi durante a sua doença fatal que ele ordenou o assassinato de seu ardiloso filho Antípater. Também, sabendo que os judeus se alegrariam de saber da sua morte, Herodes ordenou que os mais ilustres homens da nação judaica se reunissem num lugar chamado Hipódromo, em Jericó, e ali os trancafiou. Daí ele deu ordens aos achegados a ele para que, quando falecesse, a notícia da sua morte só fosse anunciada depois de estes líderes judaicos terem sido mortos. Então, disse ele, toda família na Judeia certamente choraria no seu sepultamento. Esta ordem nunca foi executada. Salomé, irmã de Herodes, e seu marido Alexas libertaram esses homens e os mandaram para casa.

Herodes faleceu à idade de aproximadamente 70 anos. Havia feito um testamento designando seu filho Ântipas como sucessor, mas, pouco antes da sua morte, acrescentou um codicilo, ou fez um novo testamento, no qual designou Arquelau para este cargo. Arquelau foi reconhecido como rei pelo povo e pelo exército (a Bíblia diz que José, pai adotivo de Jesus, soube que “Arquelau reinava na Judeia em lugar de seu pai Herodes”; Mt 2:22). Mas a ação foi contestada por Ântipas. Depois de uma audiência a respeito do assunto em Roma, Augusto César apoiou Arquelau. No entanto, constituiu Arquelau em etnarca e dividiu o território anteriormente governado por Herodes: metade para Arquelau; da outra metade, concedeu-se uma parte a Ântipas e outra a Filipe, dois dos outros filhos de Herodes.

Matança de Crianças. O relato bíblico sobre a matança ordenada por Herodes, de todos os menininhos de até dois anos de idade em Belém e nos seus distritos, está em harmonia com outros relatos históricos sobre Herodes e sua índole iníqua. Isto ocorreu pouco antes da morte de Herodes, porque Jesus escapou por ser levado pelos pais ao Egito, mas eles retornaram e se estabeleceram na Galileia após o falecimento de Herodes. Estes dois eventos foram preditos por Jeová por meio dos seus profetas Jeremias e Oseias. — Mt 2:1-23; Je 31:15; Os 11:1.

Data da Sua Morte. Surge um problema com respeito a quando Herodes morreu. Alguns cronologistas sustentam que ele morreu no ano 5 ou 4 AEC. A cronologia deles baseia-se em grande parte na história de Josefo. Ao datar quando Roma designou Herodes para ser rei, Josefo usa uma "datação consular", isto é, localiza o evento como ocorrido durante o governo de certos cônsules romanos. Segundo esta, a designação de Herodes como rei ocorreu em 40 AEC, mas os dados de outro historiador, Apiano, colocariam o evento em 39 AEC. Pelo mesmo método, Josefo situa a captura de Jerusalém por Herodes em 37 AEC, mas ele diz também que ela ocorreu 27 anos depois da captura da cidade por Pompeu (que ocorreu em 63 AEC). (Jewish Antiquities, XIV, 487, 488 [xvi, 4]) Sua referência a este último evento situaria a data em que Herodes tomou Jerusalém em 36 AEC. Ora, Josefo diz que Herodes faleceu 37 anos depois de ter sido designado rei pelos romanos, e 34 anos depois de tomar Jerusalém. (Jewish Antiquities, XVII, 190, 191 [viii, 1]) Isto indicaria que a data do seu falecimento era o ano 2 ou talvez 1 AEC.

O historiador judeu Josefo talvez tenha contado os reinados dos reis da Judeia pelo método dos anos de acessão, como se fazia com os reis da linhagem de Davi. Se Herodes foi designado rei, por Roma, em 40 AEC, seu primeiro ano de reinado se estendeu do nisã de 39 ao nisã de 38 AEC; de modo similar, se for contado a partir da sua captura de Jerusalém, em 37 (ou 36) AEC, o primeiro ano do seu reinado começou no nisã de 36 (ou 35) AEC. Portanto, se for como Josefo diz, que Herodes faleceu 34 anos depois de capturar Jerusalém, e se estes anos, em cada caso, forem contados segundo o ano de reinado, sua morte pode ter ocorrido em 1 AEC. Num argumento neste sentido, apresentado em The Journal of Theological Studies (A Revista de Estudos Teológicos), W. E. Filmer escreve que a evidência dada pela tradição judaica indica que a morte de Herodes ocorreu em 2 de sebate (o mês de sebate cai em janeiro-fevereiro de nosso calendário). — Editada por H. Chadwick e H. Sparks, de Oxford, 1966, Vol. XVII, p. 284.

Segundo Josefo, Herodes morreu pouco depois dum eclipse lunar e antes duma Páscoa. (Jewish Antiquities, XVII, 167 [vi, 4]; 213 [ix, 3]) Visto que houve um eclipse em 11 de março de 4 AEC (13 de março, calendário juliano), alguns chegaram à conclusão de que este era o eclipse a que Josefo se referiu.

Por outro lado, houve um eclipse total da lua em 1 AEC, uns três meses antes da Páscoa, ao passo que aquele em 4 AEC foi apenas parcial. O eclipse total em 1 AEC ocorreu em 8 de janeiro (10 de janeiro, calendário juliano), 18 dias antes de 2 de sebate, dia tradicional da morte de Herodes. Outro eclipse (parcial) ocorreu em 27 de dezembro de 1 AEC (29 de dezembro, calendário juliano). — Veja CRONOLOGIA (Eclipses lunares).

Outra forma de cálculo gira em torno da idade de Herodes quando morreu. Josefo diz que ele tinha cerca de 70 anos. Diz que, quando Herodes recebeu sua nomeação como governador da Galileia (que em geral é datada em 47 AEC), ele tinha 15 anos de idade; mas os peritos entendem tratar-se dum erro, evidentemente devendo ser 25 anos. (Jewish Antiquities, XVII, 148 [vi, 1] XIV, 158 [ix, 2]) Concordemente, a morte de Herodes ocorreu em 2 ou 1 AEC. Temos de lembrar-nos, porém, de que Josefo é muitas vezes incoerente na sua datação de eventos, e, portanto, não é a fonte mais fidedigna. Para obtermos a evidência mais fidedigna temos de recorrer à Bíblia.

A evidência disponível indica que Herodes provavelmente morreu no ano 1 AEC. Lucas, o historiador bíblico, informa-nos que João apareceu para fazer batismos no 15.º ano de Tibério César. (Lu 3:1-3) Augusto faleceu em 17 de agosto de 14 EC. Tibério foi nomeado imperador pelo Senado romano em 15 de setembro. Os romanos não usavam o sistema do ano de acessão; por conseguinte, o 15.º ano se estenderia de fins de 28 EC a fins de 29 EC. João era seis meses mais velho do que Jesus e iniciou seu ministério (evidentemente na primavera) antes dele, como seu precursor, preparando o caminho. (Lu 1:35, 36) Jesus, que segundo a Bíblia nasceu no outono, tinha cerca de 30 anos de idade quando se dirigiu a João para ser batizado. (Lu 3:21-23) Portanto, mui provavelmente, foi batizado no outono, por volta de outubro de 29 EC. Contando 30 anos para trás, chegamos ao outono de 2 AEC como a época do nascimento humano do Filho de Deus. (Compare Lu 3:1, 23, com a profecia de Daniel sobre as "setenta semanas", em Da 9:24-27.) — Veja SETENTA SEMANAS.

Os astrólogos que visitaram Jesus. O apóstolo Mateus nos conta que, depois de Jesus ter nascido em Belém "nos dias de Herodes, o rei", vieram a Jerusalém astrólogos das partes orientais, dizendo que viram a estrela dele quando estavam no Oriente. Isto imediatamente suscitou os temores e as suspeitas de Herodes, e ele averiguou dos principais sacerdotes e dos escribas que o Cristo havia de nascer em Belém. Convocou então os astrólogos e averiguou deles o tempo do aparecimento da estrela. — Mt 2:1-7.

Observamos que isto ocorreu algum tempo depois do nascimento de Jesus, porque ele não se encontrava mais numa manjedoura, mas sim com os pais numa casa. (Mt 2:11; compare isso com Lu 2:4-7.) Quando os astrólogos deixaram de voltar a Herodes com a informação sobre o paradeiro do menino, o rei ordenou a matança de todos os meninos de dois anos ou menos em Belém e nos seus distritos. No ínterim, Jesus fora levado pelos pais ao Egito, por causa do aviso de Deus. (Mt 2:12-18) A morte de Herodes dificilmente pode ter ocorrido antes de 1 AEC, porque, neste caso, Jesus (que nasceu por volta de 1.º de outubro de 2 AEC) teria tido menos de três meses de idade.

Por outro lado, não era necessário que Jesus tivesse dois anos quando ocorreu a matança dos meninos; pode ter tido até mesmo menos de um ano, porque Herodes fez o cálculo à base do tempo em que a estrela apareceu aos astrólogos no Oriente. (Mt 2:1, 2, 7-9) Pode muito bem ter decorrido um período de alguns meses, porque se os astrólogos vieram do secular centro de astrologia, Babilônia ou Mesopotâmia, como é bem provável, a viagem foi muito longa. Os israelitas haviam levado pelo menos quatro meses para fazer esta viagem, quando foram repatriados de Babilônia, em 537 AEC. Evidentemente, Herodes concluiu que, por matar todos os meninos de até dois anos de idade, ele com certeza atingiria este que nascera "rei dos judeus". (Mt 2:2) Que Herodes morreu não muito tempo depois destes acontecimentos é indicado por Jesus evidentemente não permanecer muito tempo no Egito. — Mt 2:19-21.

Portanto, podemos concluir que a cronologia bíblica, os dados astronômicos e os registros históricos disponíveis parecem indicar o tempo da morte de Herodes em 1 AEC, ou, possivelmente, até mesmo no começo de 1 EC.

2. Herodes Ântipas, filho de Herodes, o Grande, com Maltace, uma samaritana. Foi criado em Roma junto com seu irmão Arquelau. No testamento de Herodes, Ântipas fora nomeado para receber o reinado, mas Herodes, por fim, mudou o testamento, nomeando em vez disso Arquelau. Ântipas contestou o testamento perante Augusto César, que apoiou a pretensão de Arquelau, mas dividiu o reino, dando a Ântipas a tetrarquia da Galileia e da Pereia. "Tetrarca", que significa 'governante de uma quarta parte' duma província, era o termo aplicado ao governante dum distrito menor ou a um príncipe territorial. No entanto, popularmente, ele talvez tenha sido chamado de Rei, assim como Arquelau. — Mt 14:9; Mr 6:14, 22, 25-27.

Ântipas casou-se com a filha de Aretas, rei da Arábia, cuja capital era Petra. Mas, em uma das suas viagens a Roma, Ântipas visitou seu meio-irmão Herodes Filipe, filho de Herodes, o Grande, com Mariamne II (não Filipe, o tetrarca). Nessa visita, ficou apaixonado por Herodias, esposa de Filipe, a qual ambicionava uma posição. Levou-a consigo para a Galileia e casou-se com ela, divorciando-se da filha de Aretas e mandando-a de volta ao seu lugar de origem. Esta ação insultante resultou em guerra. Aretas invadiu o domínio de Ântipas e infligiu-lhe enormes perdas, a ponto de este quase ser derrubado. Ântipas foi salvo por um apelo para Roma, que resultou numa ordem do imperador para que Aretas fosse capturado ou morto.

Ântipas granjeou grande favor de Tibério César, sucessor de Augusto. Sendo construtor, como seu pai, mas em escala muito menor, Ântipas construiu uma cidade junto ao lago Genesaré (o mar da Galileia, ou Tiberíades) e chamou-a de Tiberíades, segundo o imperador. (Jo 6:1, 23) À outra cidade, Júlia, deu o nome da esposa de Augusto, Júlia (costumeiramente chamada de Lívia). Construiu também fortes, palácios e teatros.

Mata João, o Batizador. Foi o relacionamento adúltero de Herodes Ântipas com Herodias que trouxe a censura de João, o Batizador. João podia devidamente corrigir Ântipas nesta questão, porque Ântipas era nominalmente judeu e professava estar sob a Lei. Ântipas lançou João na prisão, desejando matá-lo, mas tinha medo do povo, o qual achava que João era profeta. Não obstante, na celebração do aniversário natalício de Ântipas, a filha de Herodias agradou-lhe tanto, que jurou dar-lhe tudo o que ela pedisse. Herodias mandou que sua filha pedisse a cabeça de João. Herodes, embora isto não lhe agradasse, covardemente cedeu, para salvar as aparências perante os presentes na celebração e por causa do seu juramento. (No entanto, sob a Lei, não era obrigado por um juramento de realizar um ato ilegal, tal como assassinato.) — Mt 14:3-12; Mr 6:17-29.

Posteriormente, quando Ântipas soube do ministério de pregação, das curas e das expulsões de demônios por Jesus, ele ficou amedrontado, temendo que Jesus na realidade fosse João que teria sido ressuscitado dentre os mortos. Depois, desejava muito ver Jesus, aparentemente não para ouvir sua pregação, mas por não ter certeza da conclusão a que chegara. — Mt 14:1, 2; Mr 6:14-16; Lu 9:7-9.

Foi provavelmente numa ocasião em que Jesus passava pela Pereia em caminho para Jerusalém que os fariseus lhe disseram: "Sai e vai embora daqui, porque Herodes quer matar-te." Pode ser que Herodes tivesse iniciado este rumor, esperando induzir Jesus a fugir do seu território por medo, porque Herodes talvez receasse levantar de novo a mão contra um profeta de Deus para matá-lo. Jesus, na sua resposta, evidentemente referindo-se à astúcia de Herodes, chamou-o de 'aquela raposa'. — Lu 13:31-33.

O "Fermento de Herodes". Foi durante o governo de Herodes Ântipas que Jesus advertiu seus seguidores: "Mantende os olhos abertos, acautelai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e do fermento de Herodes." (Mr 8:15) As duas seitas, os fariseus e os herodianos, ou partidários de Herodes, opunham-se a Jesus Cristo e seu ensino, e embora houvesse inimizade entre elas, ambas encaravam Cristo como inimigo comum e se uniam contra ele. Os herodianos eram mais políticos do que religiosos; tem-se dito que eles afirmavam seguir a Lei, mas sustentavam a opinião de que era lícito que os judeus reconhecessem um príncipe estrangeiro (porque os Herodes não eram realmente judeus, mas sim idumeus). Os herodianos eram muito nacionalistas e não apoiavam nem a ideia dum domínio teocrático, sob reis judeus, nem o domínio romano, mas queriam o restabelecimento do reino nacional sob um ou outro dos filhos de Herodes.

Um exemplo que revela seu "fermento" nacionalista foi a pergunta capciosa que eles, junto com os fariseus, fizeram na tentativa de enlaçar Jesus: "É lícito ou não pagar a César o imposto por cabeça? Devemos pagar ou não devemos pagar?" (Mr 12:13-15) Jesus chamou-os de "hipócritas" e mostrou que ele estava atento ao "fermento" deles, porque a sua resposta lhes tirou o argumento, frustrando a sua intenção de acusá-lo de sedição ou então de incitar o povo contra ele. — Mt 22:15-22.

Diverte-se às Custas de Jesus. No último dia da vida terrestre de Jesus, quando foi levado perante Pôncio Pilatos e este soube que Jesus era galileu, Pilatos o mandou a Herodes Ântipas, o governante distrital (tetrarca) da Galileia (que se encontrava então em Jerusalém), pois Pilatos já tivera dificuldades com os galileus. (Lu 13:1; 23:1-7) Ao ver Jesus, Herodes alegrou-se, não por estar preocupado com o bem-estar de Jesus ou por querer fazer alguma tentativa real de descobrir a verdade ou inverdade das acusações levantadas contra Jesus pelos sacerdotes e pelos escribas, mas porque desejava vê-lo realizar algum sinal. Jesus negou-se a isso, e ficou calado quando Herodes o interrogou "com muitas palavras". Jesus sabia que este comparecimento perante Herodes lhe fora imposto apenas como uma espécie de zombaria. Herodes, desapontado com Jesus, fez pouco dele e caçoou dele por trajá-lo com uma roupa vistosa e mandou-o de volta a Pilatos, que era a autoridade superior no que se referia a Roma. Pilatos e Herodes haviam sido inimigos, possivelmente por certas acusações que Herodes tinha levantado contra Pilatos. Mas este gesto da parte de Pilatos agradou a Herodes e eles se tornaram amigos. — Lu 23:8-12.

Depois de Pedro e João terem sido soltos, logo após o Pentecostes de 33 EC, os discípulos disseram em oração a Deus: "Tanto Herodes [Ântipas] como Pôncio Pilatos, com homens das nações e com povos de Israel, ajuntaram-se realmente nesta cidade contra o teu santo servo Jesus . . . E agora, Jeová, dá atenção às ameaças deles e concede aos teus escravos que persistam em falar a tua palavra com todo o denodo." — At 4:23, 27-29.

Em Atos 13:1, menciona-se que Manaém, um cristão, tinha sido educado junto com Herodes, o governante distrital. Visto que Ântipas fora criado em Roma, junto com certo cidadão, a declaração bíblica talvez indique que Manaém tenha sido educado em Roma.

Banido para a Gália. Quando Caio César (Calígula) constituiu Agripa I rei da tetrarquia de Filipe, Herodias, esposa de Ântipas, repreendeu seu marido, dizendo que foi só por causa do desleixo da parte dele que ele não recebeu um reinado. Ela argumentou que, visto ele já ser tetrarca, ao passo que Agripa, em contraste, antes não detinha nenhum posto, Ântipas deveria ir a Roma e solicitar a César um reinado. Ele finalmente cedeu à persistente pressão da sua esposa. Mas Calígula ficou irado com a solicitação ambiciosa de Ântipas, e, acolhendo as acusações de Agripa, baniu Ântipas para a Gália (à cidade de Lyon, na França); ele, por fim, morreu na Espanha. Herodias, embora pudesse ter-se livrado da punição, por ser irmã de Agripa, acompanhou seu marido, talvez por orgulho. A tetrarquia de Ântipas, e, depois do seu exílio, seu dinheiro, bem como os bens de Herodias, foram dados a Agripa I. De modo que Herodias foi responsável pelas duas grandes calamidades de Ântipas: a derrota que quase sofreu pelo Rei Aretas, e seu banimento.

3. Herodes Agripa I. Neto de Herodes, o Grande. Ele era filho de Aristóbulo, o qual, por sua vez, era filho de Herodes, o Grande, com Mariamne I, neta do sumo sacerdote Hircano II. Aristóbulo tinha sido morto por Herodes, o Grande. Agripa foi o último dos Herodes a se tornar rei de toda a Palestina, assim como fora seu avô.

Sua Formação. Agripa conseguiu sua posição de "Herodes, o rei", por diversas manobras e com a ajuda de amigos em Roma. (At 12:1) Educado em Roma, junto com o filho do Imperador Tibério, Druso, e seu sobrinho, Cláudio, tornou-se ali uma figura conhecida nos círculos importantes. Ele era extremamente extravagante e temerário. Muito endividado, devendo dinheiro até mesmo ao tesouro romano, partiu de Roma e fugiu para a Idumeia. Por fim, com a ajuda da sua irmã Herodias e da sua esposa Cipros (filha do sobrinho de Herodes, o Grande, cuja esposa era a filha de Herodes), passou a morar por um tempo em Tiberíades. Surgiu um desentendimento entre ele e Ântipas, induzindo-o a partir. Retornou por fim a Roma e às boas graças de Tibério César.

Todavia, uma declaração imprudente causou a Agripa dificuldades com o Imperador Tibério. Num descuido, expressou a Caio (Calígula), com quem havia travado amizade, o desejo de que Caio fosse em breve imperador. Suas observações, ouvidas pelo servo de Agripa, chegaram aos ouvidos de Tibério, que lançou Agripa na prisão. Por vários meses, sua vida estava por um fio, mas alguns meses mais tarde, Tibério morreu e Calígula tornou-se imperador. Este soltou Agripa e o elevou à posição de rei sobre os territórios que seu falecido tio Filipe havia governado.

Favorecido por Imperadores Romanos. Herodias, invejosa da posição de seu irmão como rei, persuadiu seu marido Herodes Ântipas, que era apenas tetrarca, a solicitar uma coroa ao novo imperador em Roma. Mas Agripa frustrou os planos de Ântipas neste assunto. Apresentou perante Caio (Calígula) a acusação de que Ântipas havia feito alianças com Sejano, conspirador contra Tibério, e com os partos, acusação que Ântipas não podia negar. Isto levou ao banimento de Ântipas. Os territórios de Ântipas, a Galileia e a Pereia, foram anexados ao reino de Agripa. Em certa passagem, Josefo diz que Calígula deu esses domínios a Agripa, e, em duas outras, que Cláudio fez isso. É provável que Calígula tenha feito a promessa e que Cláudio a tenha confirmado.

Por ocasião do assassinato de Calígula, datada pelos peritos como ocorrido em 41 EC, Agripa estava em Roma. Ele pôde atuar como intermediário, ou negociador, entre o Senado e seu amigo, o novo imperador Cláudio. Cláudio expressou seu apreço por recompensá-lo com o território da Judeia e de Samaria, bem como o reino de Lisânias. Agripa tornou-se então governante de quase o mesmo domínio de seu avô, Herodes, o Grande. Nesta ocasião, Agripa pediu e recebeu de Cláudio o reino de Cálcis para o seu irmão Herodes. (Este Herodes é mencionado na história apenas como rei de Cálcis, um pequeno território na encosta O dos montes do Antilíbano.)

Bajula os Judeus; Persegue os Cristãos. Agripa bajulava os judeus, afirmando ser devoto do judaísmo. Calígula, afirmando ser deus, havia decidido erigir uma estátua sua no templo em Jerusalém, mas Agripa habilmente o persuadiu a não fazê-lo. Mais tarde, Agripa começou a construir uma muralha em volta do subúrbio N de Jerusalém. Para Cláudio, isto parecia ser uma possível fortificação da cidade contra qualquer eventual ataque romano no futuro. Por conseguinte, Cláudio mandou que Agripa desistisse disso. Agripa desmentia sua afirmação de ser adorador de Deus por apoiar e providenciar jogos gladiatórios e outros espetáculos pagãos no teatro.

Agripa era aceitável aos judeus por sua ascendência asmoneia, por parte da sua avó Mariamne. Ao mesmo tempo em que patrocinava a causa dos judeus sob o jugo romano, também criava fama nada invejável de perseguidor dos cristãos, que em geral eram odiados pelos judeus descrentes. "Eliminou Tiago, irmão de João, pela espada." (At 12:1, 2) Vendo que isto agradava aos judeus, prendeu e encarcerou Pedro. A intervenção dum anjo, resultando na libertação de Pedro, causou muita comoção entre os soldados de Agripa e resultou na punição dos guardas encarregados de Pedro. — At 12:3-19.

Executado Pelo Anjo de Deus. O domínio de Agripa teve fim abrupto. Em Cesareia, durante uma festividade em honra de César, ele se vestiu de um magnífico traje real e começou a fazer um discurso público perante a assistência reunida de pessoas de Tiro e de Sídon, que vieram pleitear a paz com ele. Os presentes responderam gritando: "A voz de um deus e não de homem!" A Bíblia registra a execução sumária dele como hipócrita condenado: "O anjo de Jeová o golpeou instantaneamente, porque não deu glória a Deus; e, comido de vermes, expirou." — At 12:20-23.

Os cronologistas situam a morte do Rei Herodes Agripa I em 44 EC, à idade de 54 anos e depois de ter reinado por três anos sobre toda a Judeia. Sobreviveram-lhe seu filho Herodes Agripa II e suas filhas Berenice (At 25:13), Drusila, esposa do governador Félix, e Mariamne III. — At 24:24.

4. Herodes Agripa II. Bisneto de Herodes, o Grande. Era filho de Herodes Agripa I com sua esposa Cipros. Segundo os historiadores, era o último dos príncipes da linhagem herodiana. Agripa tinha três irmãs, chamadas Berenice, Drusila e Mariamne III. (At 25:13; 24:24) Fora criado na casa imperial em Roma. Quando tinha apenas 17 anos, seu pai morreu, e os conselheiros do Imperador Cláudio o consideravam jovem demais para assumir o governo dos domínios do seu pai. Por conseguinte, Cláudio, em vez disso, designou governadores sobre os territórios. Depois de Agripa II ter permanecido em Roma por algum tempo, ele recebeu o reinado de Cálcis, um pequeno principado na encosta ocidental da cordilheira do Antilíbano, após o falecimento do seu tio (Herodes, rei de Cálcis).

Foi pouco depois disso que Cláudio o designou rei sobre as tetrarquias antes pertencentes a Filipe e a Lisânias. (Lu 3:1) Recebeu também o encargo da supervisão do templo de Jerusalém e foi investido da autoridade de designar os sumos sacerdotes judeus. Seus domínios foram ainda mais ampliados por Nero, sucessor de Cláudio, que lhe concedeu Tiberíades e Tariqueia, na Galileia, e Júlia, na Pereia, com suas aldeias dependentes.

Mais tarde, Agripa voltou sua atenção para a construção dum anexo ao palácio erigido pelos reis asmoneus em Jerusalém. Visto que podia assim observar do anexo do seu palácio as ocorrências no pátio do templo, os judeus erigiram um muro que lhe bloqueava a vista e também obstruía a vista dos guardas romanos de certo ponto elevado. Isto desagradou tanto a Agripa como a Festo, mas quando os judeus apelaram para Nero, este imperador deixou o muro permanecer. Agripa embelezou também Cesareia de Filipe (mudando-lhe o nome para Nerônia, em honra de Nero). Seguindo o estilo de seu pai, construiu um teatro em Bérito, na Fenícia, gastando ali grandes somas com espetáculos.

Moeda de bronze, ostentando a cabeça de Domiciano, e, no verso, o nome do Rei Agripa (II).

Havia fortes rumores de que Agripa mantinha uma relação incestuosa com sua irmã Berenice antes de ela se casar com o rei da Cilícia. (Jewish Antiquities, de F. Josefo, XX, 145, 146 [vii, 3]) Josefo não menciona se Agripa era casado ou não.

Quando se tornou evidente que a rebelião dos judeus contra o jugo romano (66-70 EC) só resultaria em desastre nacional, Agripa tentou persuadi-los a adotar um proceder mais moderado. Quando seus apelos não produziram resultados, ele abandonou os judeus e se ligou ao exército romano, sendo ferido por uma pedra de funda no próprio combate.

A Defesa de Paulo Perante Ele. As Escrituras apresentam o Rei Herodes Agripa II e sua irmã Berenice na ocasião da sua visita de cortesia ao Governador Festo, por volta do ano 58 EC. (At 25:13) Festo havia sucedido ao Governador Félix. Foi enquanto Félix era governador que o apóstolo Paulo fora acusado pelos judeus, mas Félix, ao deixar o cargo, desejava granjear o favor dos judeus e manteve Paulo preso. (At 24:27) Incidentalmente, Félix era cunhado de Agripa, por se ter casado com Drusila, irmã deste. (At 24:24) Enquanto Paulo aguardava providências do seu apelo para César (At 25:8-12), o Rei Agripa expressou ao Governador Festo o desejo de ouvir o que Paulo tinha a dizer. (At 25:22) Paulo ficou contente de fazer a sua defesa perante Agripa, a quem ele chamou de "perito em todos os costumes bem como nas controvérsias entre os judeus". (At 26:1-3) O forte argumento de Paulo induziu Agripa a dizer: "Em pouco tempo me persuadirias a tornar-me cristão." A isto Paulo respondeu: "Quisera eu, perante Deus, quer em pouco tempo quer com muito tempo, que não somente tu, mas também todos os que hoje me ouvem se tornassem homens tais como também eu sou, com exceção destes laços." (At 26:4-29) Agripa e Festo determinaram que Paulo era inocente, mas que, visto ter apelado para César, ele tinha de ser enviado a Roma para julgamento. — At 26:30-32.

Após a destruição de Jerusalém, em 70 EC, Herodes Agripa e sua irmã Berenice mudaram-se para Roma, onde ele recebeu o cargo de pretor. Agripa morreu sem filhos por volta de 100 EC.

5. Herodes Filipe. Filho de Herodes, o Grande, com Mariamne II, filha do sumo sacerdote Simão. Filipe foi o primeiro marido de Herodias, a qual se divorciou dele para se casar com o meio-irmão dele, Herodes Ântipas. Ele é mencionado incidentalmente na Bíblia em Mateus 14:3; Marcos 6:17, 18, e Lucas 3:19.

O nome Herodes Filipe é usado para diferenciá-lo do tetrarca Filipe, pois este último, segundo Josefo, também era filho de Herodes, o Grande, com outra esposa, Cleópatra, de Jerusalém.

Filipe, evidentemente, era candidato à sucessão ao trono de seu pai, por ser o mais velho depois de seus meios-irmãos Antípater, Alexandre e Aristóbulo, todos os três executados pelo pai. Um dos testamentos anteriores de Herodes o alistava como herdeiro depois de Ântipas. Mas foi passado por alto no testamento derradeiro de Herodes, passando o reino para Arquelau. Josefo relata que Herodes eliminou o nome de Filipe do seu testamento porque Mariamne II, mãe de Filipe, soubera da trama de Antípater contra Herodes, mas não a havia revelado.

Filipe teve com Herodias uma filha, Salomé. Evidentemente, foi ela quem dançou perante Herodes Ântipas, e, devido à orientação da mãe, pediu a cabeça de João, o Batizador. — Mt 14:1-13; Mr 6:17-29.

6. Filipe, o tetrarca. Filho de Herodes, o Grande, com sua esposa Cleópatra, de Jerusalém. Ele foi criado em Roma. Casou-se com Salomé, filha de Herodes Filipe e Herodias. Quando seu pai faleceu, Augusto César dividiu o reino, dando a Filipe a tetrarquia de Itureia, Traconítis e outros distritos vizinhos, com uma renda anual de 100 talentos. (A Itureia talvez fosse acrescentada mais tarde, e por isso foi omitida por Josefo.) Ele governou por mais de 30 anos. Josefo diz: "Na sua conduta no governo, ele mostrou uma disposição moderada e tranquila. De fato, gastava todo o tempo nos territórios que lhe estavam sujeitos." Josefo prossegue, dizendo que Filipe atuava como juiz onde quer que estivesse e ouvia as causas sem demora. Morreu em Júlia e foi sepultado com grande pompa. Visto que não deixou filhos varões, o Imperador Tibério acrescentou sua tetrarquia à província da Síria. — Jewish Antiquities, XVIII, 106-108 (iv, 6).

O nome de Filipe é mencionado uma vez na Bíblia com relação à datação do ministério de João, o Batizador. (Lu 3:1) Este texto, junto com as informações históricas sobre os reinados de Augusto e de Tibério, mostra que o ministério de João começou em 29 EC.

HERODES, PARTIDÁRIOS DE. Tratava-se evidentemente de adeptos ou partidários judeus da dinastia herodiana, que recebera sua autoridade de Roma. Durante o ministério terrestre de Jesus Cristo, esta dinastia era encabeçada por Herodes Ântipas.

Não há menção dos herodianos na história secular, e há poucas referências bíblicas a eles. (Mt 22:16; Mr 3:6; 12:13) Todavia, há fortes objeções à ideia de alguns de que os herodianos eram os criados domésticos de Herodes, de que eram seus soldados ou então oficiais da sua corte.

Politicamente, os herodianos adotavam uma posição centrista, por um lado sofrendo oposição dos fariseus e dos zelotes judeus, que advogavam um reino judaico totalmente independente do controle romano, e por outro lado, dos que advogavam a anexação completa da Judeia pelo Império Romano. Alguns dos saduceus, classificados como livres-pensadores e moderados no judaísmo, provavelmente seguiam a mentalidade herodiana. Esta última conclusão é tirada dos relatórios de Mateus e de Marcos referentes à declaração de Jesus a respeito do fermento. Segundo Mateus 16:6, Jesus disse: "Vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e dos saduceus", ao passo que Marcos 8:15 diz: "Acautelai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e do fermento de Herodes." A repetição da palavra "fermento" enfatiza que havia uma diferença nos ensinos corruptos das duas partes. Em vez de "Herodes", este último texto reza "herodianos" em alguns manuscritos, a saber, no Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 1 (P[45]), no Codex Washingtonianus I e no Codex Koridethianus. — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 594; Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (A Nossa Bíblia e os Antigos Manuscritos), do Sir Frederic Kenyon, 1958, pp. 215, 216.

Uma coisa é certa: os partidários de Herodes e os fariseus, embora abertamente opostos uns aos outros nos seus conceitos políticos e judaísticos, estavam solidamente unidos na sua violenta oposição a Jesus. Pelo menos em duas ocasiões, estes partidos opostos consultaram-se sobre a melhor maneira de eliminar seu oponente comum. O primeiro caso relatado ocorreu pouco depois da Páscoa de 31 EC, durante o grande ministério galileu de Jesus. Quando viram Jesus restabelecer no sábado a mão ressequida de um homem, "os fariseus saíram então e começaram imediatamente a entrar em conselho contra ele com os partidários de Herodes, a fim de o destruírem". — Mr 3:1-6; Mt 12:9-14.

A segunda ocasião relatada ocorreu quase dois anos mais tarde, apenas três dias antes de Jesus ser morto, quando discípulos dos fariseus e partidários de Herodes se uniram para testar Jesus na questão da tributação. Estes homens foram secretamente contratados "para pretenderem ser justos, a fim de que o pudessem apanhar na palavra, para o entregarem ao governo e à autoridade do governador". (Lu 20:20) Prefaciaram sua pergunta direta sobre impostos com palavras de lisonja, destinados a pegar Jesus desprevenido. Jesus, porém, percebendo sua iniquidade astuciosa, declarou: "Por que me pondes à prova, hipócritas?" Silenciou-os então completamente com a sua resposta sobre a questão de pagar impostos. — Mt 22:15-22; Lu 20:21-26.

HERODIÃO. Alguém a quem Paulo enviou saudações pessoais na sua carta à congregação cristã em Roma. Paulo chama Herodião de "meu parente". (Ro 16:11) Alguns sugerem que isto simplesmente poderia significar que Herodião também era judeu, em vez de ser membro da família imediata de Paulo, por ele usar a designação "parentes" em Romanos 9:3. Todavia, visto que Paulo não se refere a todos os judeus a quem enviava saudações como "meus parentes" (veja At 18:2; Ro 16:3), a referência é provavelmente a um parente mais chegado. — Veja ANDRÔNICO.

HERODIAS. Esposa de Herodes Ântipas, a qual, por meio da sua filha Salomé, pediu e recebeu a cabeça de João, o Batizador, em 32 EC. (Mr 6:22-28) Seu pai, Aristóbulo, filho de Herodes, o Grande, com sua segunda esposa, Mariamne I, e sua mãe eram primos germanos. Seu irmão era Herodes Agripa I, que eliminou o apóstolo Tiago, irmão de João. — At 12:1, 2.

Herodias (ou: Herodíades) casou-se primeiro com seu meio-tio, que era meio-irmão de seu pai, outro filho de Herodes, o Grande (com sua terceira esposa, Mariamne II), filho que costumava ser chamado de Herodes Filipe, para diferenciá-lo de Filipe, o governante distrital de Itureia e Traconítis. (Lu 3:1) Este tio-marido de Herodias, Herodes Filipe, gerou Salomé, pelo visto, única prole dela. No entanto, Herodias divorciou-se e casou-se com o meio-irmão dele, Herodes Ântipas, também filho de seu avô, Herodes, o Grande, com a quarta esposa, Maltace. Herodes Ântipas, naquele tempo governante distrital (literalmente, "o tetrarca"), e a quem Jesus Cristo chamou de 'aquela raposa' (Lu 13:31, 32), também se divorciou da sua primeira esposa, filha do rei nabateu Aretas, da Arábia, a fim de se casar com Herodias.

Portanto, João, o Batizador, tinha motivos para condenar este casamento de Herodias com Herodes Ântipas, que tanto era ilegal como imoral sob a lei judaica, e por isso foi lançado na prisão e mais tarde decapitado. Sua destemida e justa condenação provocou o amargo ódio de Herodias, de modo que ela se aproveitou da primeira oportunidade para fazer com que o profeta fosse morto. — Mt 14:1-11; Mr 6:16-28; Lu 3:19, 20; 9:9.

O irmão de Herodias, Herodes Agripa I, retornou de Roma em 38 EC, tendo sido designado rei. Isto aborreceu muito a Herodias, porque seu marido, embora filho de rei, continuou a ser apenas governante distrital. Assim sendo, não deixou de pressionar seu marido até que ele também foi a Roma na esperança de ser coroado rei, recebendo um reino. Flávio Josefo conta que o irmão de Herodias, Agripa, enviou secretamente cartas ao Imperador Calígula, acusando Ântipas de conspirar com os partos. Em consequência disso, Ântipas foi banido para a Gália; Herodias o acompanhou. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVIII, 240-256 (vii, 1, 2); The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), II, 181-183 (ix, 6).

HESBOM. Veja HÉSBON.

HÉSBON. Lugar identificado com a atual Hisban, uma cidade em ruínas, situada a uns 20 km ao SO de Rabbah ('Amman). Fica quase a meio caminho entre o Árnon e o Jaboque. (Jos 12:2) Ainda não se encontraram ali restos arqueológicos que remontassem ao período cananeu. Um grande reservatório em ruínas fica a curta distância ao L de Hésbon, e a uns 180 m abaixo da cidade, encontra-se uma fonte que produziu uma sequência de tanques. — Compare isso com Cân 7:4; veja BATE-RABIM.

Síon, rei amorreu, capturou Hésbon dos moabitas e fez dela sua residência real. A derrota dos moabitas até mesmo forneceu a base para um dito zombeteiro, de origem quer amorreia, quer israelita. Caso este dito se tenha originado dos amorreus, escarnecia os moabitas e comemorava a vitória do Rei Síon. Mas, se foi originado pelos israelitas, indicava que, assim como Síon arrebatara Hésbon dos moabitas, assim Israel tomaria esta cidade e outras dos amorreus. A zombaria seria então no sentido de que a vitória de Síon preparou o caminho para os israelitas tomarem posse da terra, à qual de outro modo não teriam direito. — Núm 21:26-30; De 2:9.

Quando o Rei Síon se negou a deixar os israelitas, sob Moisés, atravessar pacificamente a sua terra, e, em vez disso, preparou-se para combatê-los, Jeová deu ao seu povo a vitória sobre Síon. Cidades amorreias, sem dúvida incluindo Hésbon, foram devotadas à destruição. (De 2:26-36; 3:6; 29:7; Jz 11:19-22) Depois disso, os rubenitas reconstruíram Hésbon (Núm 32:37), sendo ela incluída entre as cidades que Moisés lhes deu. (Jos 13:15-17) Como cidade fronteiriça entre Rubem e Gade, Hésbon tornou-se mais tarde parte do território de Gade e é citada como uma das quatro cidades gaditas designadas aos levitas. — Jos 21:38, 39; 1Cr 6:77, 80, 81.

Num período posterior, Hésbon evidentemente passou a estar sob controle moabita, conforme é indicado tanto por Isaías como por Jeremias a mencionarem nas suas pronúncias de ruína contra Moabe. (Is 15:4; 16:7-9; Je 48:2, 34, 45) Jeremias também se refere a esta cidade numa pronúncia contra Amom. (Je 49:1, 3) Alguns comentadores entendem que isto indica que Hésbon havia então passado para mãos amonitas. Outros sugerem que isto talvez signifique que Hésbon, de Moabe, também sofreria a mesma sorte que Ai, ou que se falava duma Hésbon diferente, no território de Amom.

Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, Hésbon estava nas mãos dos judeus na época de Alexandre Janeu (103-76 AEC). Mais tarde, Herodes, o Grande, teve jurisdição sobre essa cidade. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XIII, 395-397 (xv, 4); XV, 294 (viii, 5).

HESEDE [forma abreviada de Hasadias, que significa "Benevolência de Jah; Jah É Benevolência"]. Israelita, cujo filho era um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão, cada um dos quais era responsável por fornecer ao rei e à sua casa o alimento durante um mês no ano. — 1Rs 4:7, 10.

HESMOM. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá (Jos 15:21, 27), desconhecendo-se agora a sua localização.

HETE, I [ח]. (hhehth). Oitava letra do alfabeto hebraico. Esta letra tem o som mais ríspido dos guturais, similar ao "j" na palavra espanhola jamás ou ao "ch" alemão no nome Bach. Em hebraico, na oitava seção do Salmo 119 (vv. 57-64), cada versículo começa com esta letra.

Nesta obra, é transliterada como hh, para denotar uma forte aspiração.

HETE, II. Segundo filho alistado de Canaã,e bisneto de Noé, através de Cã. (Gên 10:1, 6, 15; 1Cr 1:13) Hete era genitor ancestral dos hititas (1Rs 10:29; 2Rs 7:6; veja HITITAS), dos quais um ramo se estabeleceu na região montanhosa de Judá. (Êx 3:8) Foi na vizinhança de Hébron que Abraão comprou de Efrom, o hitita, o campo de Macpela e a caverna que havia nele, como lugar de sepultamento. (Gên 23:2-20; 25:8-10; 49:32) Dentre as 14 ocorrências do nome Hete, 10 vezes aparece relacionado com os "filhos de Hete". Duas das esposas de Esaú eram das "filhas de Hete" (também chamadas de "filhas de Canaã"), sendo estas esposas fonte de amargura para os pais de Esaú. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:46; 28:1, 6-8.

HETLOM. Lugar ao qual se chegava pela fronteira setentrional da terra de Israel, conforme observado na visão de Ezequiel. (Ez 47:13, 15; 48:1) Alguns peritos provisoriamente identificam Hetlom com a atual Haitla, a uns 35 km ao NE de Trípoli, no Líbano.

HEVEUS. Povo descendente de Canaã, filho de Cã. (Gên 10:6, 15, 17; 1Cr 1:13, 15) Heveus moravam na cidade de Siquém, nos dias do patriarca Jacó. Os filhos de Jacó, chefiados por Simeão e Levi, mataram todo varão e saquearam a cidade, porque Siquém, filho de Hamor, o maioral, violentara Diná, irmã deles. — Gên 34:1-29.

Quando Israel entrou na Terra da Promessa, os heveus eram uma das sete nações cananeias que Deus prometeu expulsar diante deles. (Êx 3:8, 17; 13:5; 23:23, 28; 33:2; 34:11) Dizia-se que estas nações eram mais populosas e mais fortes do que Israel. (De 7:1) Moisés ordenou aos israelitas devotá-los à destruição, não deixando ninguém vivo ao capturarem as cidades deles, por causa das suas práticas detestáveis e dos seus deuses falsos. Porque senão, eles seriam um laço e fariam com que Israel caísse no desfavor de Deus. — Le 18:27, 28; De 18:9-13; 20:15-18.

A Bíblia registra a destruição total das cidades dessas nações por Josué. (Jos caps. 10, 11) Os heveus que moravam "ao sopé do [monte] Hermom, na terra de Mispá", estavam entre as tribos que se juntaram aos reis cananeus contra Josué às instâncias de Jabim, rei de Hazor. (Jos 11:1-3) Alistam-se heveus entre os que lutaram contra Israel e sofreram derrota. (Jos 9:1, 2; 12:7, 8; 24:11) No entanto, um grupo da nação heveia foi poupado. (Jos 9:3, 7) Este grupo eram os gibeonitas, evidentemente representando também mais três cidades heveias. Somente estes temeram a Jeová, reconhecendo que ele estava lutando a favor de Israel. Por meio dum estratagema, conseguiram fazer um pacto com os líderes de Israel, e assim não foram mortos, mas foram feitos servos de Israel para trabalhos braçais. (Jos 9:1-15, 24-27) Este é um caso do cumprimento da maldição de Noé sobre Canaã, no sentido de que os gibeonitas e seus associados, embora não destruídos, tornaram-se escravos dos semitas. — Gên 9:25-27.

Jeová indicou sua aprovação de que Israel cumpriu fielmente seu pacto com esses heveus, por lutar para a proteção de Gibeão contra as nações cananeias circunvizinhas, que vieram contra eles, por causa do pacto deles com Israel. (Jos 10:1-14) Deste tempo em diante, os gibeonitas conviveram pacificamente com Israel. (2Sa 21:1-6) São chamados de "amorreus" em 2 Samuel 21:2, mas, evidentemente, porque o termo "amorreus" era frequentemente aplicado às nações cananeias em geral, visto que os amorreus eram uma das mais poderosas tribos. (Veja AMORREU.) Na época da conquista por Josué, esses heveus aprovados moravam na cidade de Gibeão, situada não muito longe ao NO de Jerusalém, também em Quefira, Beerote e Quiriate-Jearim. Gibeão é descrita como 'cidade grande, como uma das cidades reais, e maior do que Ai, e todos os seus homens eram poderosos'. — Jos 10:2; 9:17.

Após a morte de Josué, Israel deixou de expulsar as nações cananeias conforme Deus ordenara, mas até mesmo realizaram casamentos com elas. Portanto, o registro bíblico reza: "Ora, estas são as nações que Jeová deixou ficar para por elas provar a Israel . . . Os cinco senhores do eixo dos filisteus, e todos os cananeus, até mesmo os sidônios e os heveus que habitavam no monte Líbano, desde o monte Baal-Hermom até a entrada de Hamate . . . e [os israelitas] foram servir aos deuses deles." — Jz 3:1-6.

Esta passagem situa os heveus como habitantes de montes na cordilheira do Líbano, até a parte mais setentrional da Terra da Promessa. (Núm 34:8; Jos 11:1, 3) Quando Joabe e seus homens fizeram um censo às ordens do Rei Davi, "chegaram então à praça forte de Tiro e a todas as cidades dos heveus". (2Sa 24:7) Evidentemente, Tiro ficava logo abaixo da extremidade meridional do território heveu.

Durante o programa de construção de Salomão, de alcance nacional, ele usou cananeus, inclusive heveus, em trabalhos forçados sob a direção de capatazes israelitas. Isto cumpriu adicionalmente a maldição profética de Noé sobre Canaã. — 1Rs 9:20-23; 2Cr 8:7-10.

Heveus, Horeus e Hurritas. Em Gênesis 36:2, Zibeão, avô de uma das esposas de Esaú, é chamado de heveu. Mas, os versículos 20 e 24 o alistam como descendente de Seir, o horeu. A palavra horeu talvez derive da hebraica hhor ("buraco") e pode significar apenas "habitante de caverna". Isto eliminaria qualquer aparente discrepância entre os textos de Gênesis 36:2 e os versículos 20, 24 . — Veja HOREU.

Os arqueólogos desenterraram escritos antigos que os peritos interpretam como prova de que uma nação chamada de hurritas (ou: hurrianos) habitava as regiões da Armênia, da Anatólia, da Síria e de partes da Palestina, desde tempos patriarcais; e eles acreditam que este povo incluía os heveus, os horeus e os jebuseus. Equacionam "horeu" com "heveu" e creem que os hurritas, de alguma forma, passaram a ser chamados de heveus. Sua teoria baseia-se em grande parte em similaridades linguísticas, especialmente dos nomes próprios. Eles pensam, assim, de modo geral, que o nome horeu é aparentado com "hurrita", em vez de significar "habitante de caverna".

A Bíblia, porém, parece fazer uma nítida diferença entre essas tribos, e ela não menciona o nome hurrita. Portanto, é mais sábio aguardar evidência adicional antes de se aceitar tal identificação como conclusiva.

HEZIOM. Avô do primeiro Rei Ben-Hadade, da Síria, mencionado na Bíblia. (1Rs 15:18) Alguns acham que Heziom era a pessoa chamada Rezom, em 1 Reis 11:23.

HEZIR [Porco; Varrão].

1. Sacerdote, cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes para a 17.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais de serviço, organizadas perto do fim do reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 24:1, 3, 5-7, 15.

2. Um dos "cabeças do povo", cujo descendente, se não foi ele mesmo, no tempo de Neemias, apoiou a resolução de ser fiel a Jeová. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 20.

HEZRO. Carmelita; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 2Sa 23:8, 35; 1Cr 11:26, 37.

HICSOS. Veja EGITO, EGÍPCIO.

HIDAI. Um dos poderosos do exército de Davi. Hidai procedia dos vales de torrente de Gaás, na região montanhosa de Efraim. (2Sa 23:8, 30; Jos 24:30) Seu nome ocorre como Hurai em 1 Crônicas 11:32.

HÍDEQUEL. Um dos quatro rios em que se dividia o rio que saía do Éden. (Gên 2:10-14) Na língua persa antiga, o Hídequel era conhecido como Tigra, do qual deriva o nome grego do rio Tigre. Em árabe, é conhecido como Shatt Dijla. Alguns o chamam de rio gêmeo do Eufrates, e ele, junto com este rio, rega as planícies da Mesopotâmia.

Foi nas margens do Tigre (Hídequel) que Daniel recebeu a visão a respeito da luta pelo poder a ser travada pelo "rei do norte" e pelo "rei do sul". (Da 10:4, 5; 11:5, 6) Depois de penetrar nas planícies da Mesopotâmia, o Tigre passa pelo lugar de muitas cidades antigas. Defronte da moderna Mosul, encontram-se as ruínas da antiga Nínive, na margem L do rio. Do mesmo lado, mais ao S, fica o lugar de Calá, e abaixo dela, na margem O, encontra-se a antiga Assur. A pouca distância abaixo de Bagdá, na margem O, ficam as ruínas de Selêucia, antiga capital da dinastia selêucida de governantes.

As nascentes do Tigre ficam na parte moderna da Turquia. A nascente mais distante é a que fica mais ao oeste. Ela começa nas montanhas ao sul do Lago Hazar, a uns 25 km ao SE da cidade de Elazig e apenas a poucos quilômetros de uma das nascentes do rio Eufrates. Torna-se assim evidente que estes dois rios poderiam facilmente ter tido uma única nascente, antes de o Dilúvio global produzir mudanças topográficas na superfície da terra. Nos primeiros 240 km, a cabeceira ocidental corre para o SE, e ali se juntam a ela outros tributários orientais mais curtos. Daí, num ponto ao sul da extremidade ocidental do lago Van, o rio segue um rumo mais sulino. Atravessa um desfiladeiro profundo antes de finalmente emergir das montanhas para a parte superior da planície mesopotâmica. Dali, até a sua junção com o rio Eufrates, o Tigre é alimentado do L por quatro tributários: o Grande Zab, o Pequeno Zab, o ʽAdhaim e o Diyala.

Acredita-se, em geral, que o Tigre e o Eufrates, antigamente, tinham fozes separadas para o mar, mas que, no decorrer dos séculos, o acúmulo de aluvião encheu a cabeceira do golfo, de modo que os dois rios agora estão unidos. Depois da sua junção, eles formam uma corrente larga chamada de Chatt al-Arab, que se estende por uns 160 km antes de desembocar no golfo Pérsico.

A extensão total do Tigre é de uns 1.850 km. Ele é um rio largo, em alguns pontos tendo a largura de 366 m, mas em geral é raso, e, acima de Bagdá, só é navegável por barcos de pequeno calado. O Tigre, rio muito mais veloz do que o Eufrates, tem apenas dois terços da extensão do seu "gêmeo" e comercialmente é de menor importância.

HIEL [forma abreviada de Ahiel, que significa "Meu Irmão É Deus; Irmão de Deus"]. Betelita que reconstruiu Jericó durante o reinado de Acabe, no décimo século AEC. Em cumprimento do juramento que Josué havia feito por ocasião da destruição de Jericó, mais de 500 anos antes, Hiel lançou o alicerce da cidade com a perda de Abirão, seu primogênito, e assentou-lhe as portas com a perda de Segube, seu filho mais moço. — Jos 6:26; 1Rs 16:33, 34.

HIERÁPOLIS [Cidade Santa]. Cidade da província da Ásia. Ficava na beirada setentrional do vale do Lico, da Ásia Menor, a uns 10 km ao N de Laodiceia, na atual Pamukkale, na Turquia.

Embora, pelo que parece, o apóstolo Paulo nunca visitasse Hierápolis, os efeitos do seu prolongado trabalho em Éfeso (desde o inverno de 52/53 EC até depois de Pentecostes de 55 EC [1Co 16:8]) se estenderam por 'todo o distrito da Ásia'. (At 19:1, 10) Na realidade, o cristianismo parece ter chegado a Hierápolis através dos 'esforços' de Epafras. — Col 4:12, 13.

Mesmo não tendo a cidade importância política, tornou-se próspera no pacífico período romano como centro de devoção à Cibele. A adoração dela ali foi realçada por dois fenômenos naturais: fontes hidrominerais e o Plutônio, ou Carônio, um abismo fundo e estreito de onde saíam emissões mortíferas.

HIGAIOM. Transliteração da expressão hebraica hig·ga·yóhn, entendida pelos lexicógrafos como indicando um termo técnico de orientação musical. (Sal 9:16) À base do contexto, nas suas ocorrências no texto hebraico, tem sido traduzida diversamente como "expressão suave", "meditação", "pensamentos", "melodia", "música suave", "música ressonante" e "sussurros". (Sal 19:14; 92:3; La 3:62, BLH, IBB, Mo, NM, Ro) No Salmo 9:16, Higaiom pode significar quer um interlúdio solene e de tom grave de harpa, quer uma pausa solene, que induz à meditação.

HILEL [possivelmente: Ele Lampejou [Luz]; ou: Ele Louvou]. Piratonita, habitante da cidade de Piratom, em Efraim. Abdom, filho de Hilel, julgou Israel durante oito anos. — Jz 12:13-15.

HILÉM. Pelo visto, trata-se de Holom, uma das 13 cidades sacerdotais. — Jos 21:13-19; 1Cr 6:54-60; veja HOLOM N.º 1.

HILQUIAS [Meu Quinhão (Parte) É Jeová].

1. Levita da família de Merari; filho de Anzi e antepassado do Etã que foi designado por Davi como cantor no santuário. — 1Cr 6:31, 32, 44-46.

2. Porteiro levita da família de Merari, que recebeu esta designação no tempo de Davi; filho de Hosa. — 1Cr 26:10-12.

3. Pai do Eliaquim que era oficial da corte do Rei Ezequias. — 2Rs 18:37.

4. O sumo sacerdote nos dias do Rei Josias; filho de Salum e pai de Azarias; evidentemente, antepassado de Esdras, o copista. (2Rs 22:3, 4; 1Cr 6:13; Esd 7:1, 2, 6) Hilquias, como sumo sacerdote, figurara com destaque na restauração da verdadeira adoração, empreendida por Josias. No decorrer da restauração do templo, Hilquias encontrou o próprio "livro da lei de Jeová pela mão de Moisés". O que tornou notável esta descoberta foi que o manuscrito, mui provavelmente, era o livro original escrito por Moisés. Hilquias entregou-o a Safã, o secretário, que levou o manuscrito ao rei. Ao ouvir a leitura do livro feita por Safã, o Rei Josias enviou a Hulda, a profetisa, uma delegação encabeçada pelo sumo sacerdote Hilquias, para indagar de Jeová em nome do rei e do povo. — 2Rs 22:3-14; 2Cr 34:14.

5. Pai do profeta Jeremias; sacerdote em Anatote, na terra de Benjamim. — Je 1:1.

6. Pai do Gemarias que o Rei Zedequias enviou, junto com Elasá, ao Rei Nabucodonosor, em Babilônia. — Je 29:3.

7. Sacerdote levita que retornou de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. — Ne 12:1, 7.

8. Um dos que ficaram em pé à direita de Esdras, quando este leu a Lei para o povo. — Ne 8:2-4.

9. Nome de uma casa paterna sacerdotal nos dias de Neemias, o governador. — Ne 12:12, 21, 26.

HIM. Medida de líquidos (Êx 30:24; Núm 28:14; Ez 45:24; 46:5, 7, 11); também usada com referência ao recipiente de medição do him. (Le 19:36) Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, um him equivalia a dois choes atenienses; um bato equivalia a 72 sextários. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas), III, 197 [viii, 3]; VIII, 57 [ii, 9]) Visto que outras fontes indicam que dois choes atenienses equivaliam a 12 sextários, pode-se calcular o him como um sexto de um bato, ou cerca de 3,67 l.

As Escrituras mencionam também frações do him: meio, um terço, um quarto e um sexto; esta última medida era a ração diária de água concedida a Ezequiel quando encenava a condição severa que Jerusalém sofreria sob o sítio. — Êx 29:40; Le 23:13; Núm 15:4-7, 9, 10; 28:5, 7; Ez 4:11; 46:14.

HIMENEU [nome derivado de Hímen, deus grego do casamento]. Himeneu, apóstata do cristianismo, durante o primeiro século, foi identificado por Paulo como blasfemador, cheio de "falatórios vãos que violam o que é santo". No seu desvio da verdade, Himeneu, junto com certo Fileto, ensinava doutrinas falsas, subvertendo a fé de alguns. Um dos seus ensinos falsos era que 'a ressurreição já havia ocorrido' nos dias deles. Evidentemente, o ensino deles era o seguinte: que a ressurreição era apenas espiritual, simbólica, e que os cristãos dedicados já tiveram a sua ressurreição, que isto era tudo o que o assunto envolvia e que não havia nenhuma ressurreição adicional no futuro sob o Reino messiânico de Deus. — 2Ti 2:16-18; compare isso com 1Co 15:12-23.

Na primeira carta de Paulo a Timóteo, o nome de Himeneu é associado com outro apóstata, Alexandre. O apóstolo declara que havia entregue Himeneu e Alexandre "a Satanás", evidentemente referindo-se a Paulo expulsá-los ou desassociá-los da congregação. — 1Ti 1:18-20.

HINOM, VALE DE. Vale situado ao S e ao SO de Jerusalém; estende-se para o S desde as imediações do atual Portão de Jaffa, vira abruptamente para o L no canto SO da cidade, e segue ao longo do lado S ao encontro dos vales de Tiropeom e do Cédron, num ponto perto do canto SE da cidade. É também conhecido como o "vale do(s) filho(s) de Hinom"; o "Vale", como na expressão "Portão do Vale" (Jos 15:8; 2Rs 23:10; Ne 3:13); possivelmente, "a baixada dos cadáveres e das cinzas gordurosas", em Jeremias 31:40. A pessoa de que o vale talvez derive o nome é desconhecida, assim como também o significado do nome Hinom. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 949.

No ponto pouco acima da convergência do vale do Hinom com os vales do Tiropeom e do Cédron, ele se alarga. Esta era provavelmente a localização de Tofete. (2Rs 23:10) No lado S do vale, perto da sua extremidade oriental, encontra-se o lugar tradicional de Acéldama, o "Campo de Sangue", o campo do oleiro comprado com as 30 moedas de prata de Judas. (Mt 27:3-10; At 1:18, 19) Mais para cima, o vale é bastante estreito e fundo, com muitas câmaras sepulcrais nos socalcos dos seus penhascos.

O vale de Hinom fazia parte da fronteira entre as tribos de Judá e de Benjamim, encontrando-se o território de Judá ao S, o que situava Jerusalém no território de Benjamim, conforme delineado em Josué 15:1, 8; 18:11, 16. O vale é agora conhecido como uádi er-Rababi (Ge Ben Hinnom).

Acaz, rei apóstata de Judá, fazia fumaça sacrificial e queimou seu(s) filho(s) neste vale. (2Cr 28:1-3) Seu neto, o Rei Manassés, excedeu a Acaz, promovendo iniquidade em grande escala, também fazendo "os seus próprios filhos passar pelo fogo no vale do filho de Hinom". (2Cr 33:1, 6, 9) O Rei Josias, neto de Manassés, acabou com esta prática detestável em Tofete por profanar este lugar, dessagrando-o, tornando-o assim impróprio para adoração, possivelmente por espalhar ali ossos ou refugo. — 2Rs 23:10.

Jeremias, que profetizou nos dias dos reis Josias, Jeoacaz, Jeoiaquim, Joaquim e Zedequias, expressou o julgamento de Jeová sobre os pecados da nação, um dos mais destacados sendo o abominável sacrifício dos filhos deles a Moloque. Ordenou-se-lhe levar alguns dos anciãos do povo e dos sacerdotes pelo Portão dos Cacos (Portão dos Montes de Cinzas), situado no canto SE de Jerusalém, ao vale de Hinom, na área de Tofete. Ali declarou-lhes a pronunciação de Jeová: "Eis que vêm dias . . . em que este lugar não mais será chamado Tofete e o vale do filho de Hinom, mas o vale da matança." Daí, destroçando uma botija de barro diante dos olhos deles, prosseguiu com o julgamento de Jeová: "Assim destroçarei este povo e esta cidade . . . e far-se-á o sepultamento em Tofete até que não haja mais lugar em que sepultar." (Je 19:1, 2, 6, 10, 11) Em outras palavras, a matança, não das vítimas sacrificadas a Moloque, mas dos iníquos, pelo julgamento de Deus, seria tão grande, que alguns cadáveres jazeriam insepultos no vale. Isto o poluiria em grau ainda maior do que Josias havia feito.

As palavras proféticas de Jeremias não necessariamente significavam que tais sacrifícios a Moloque ainda eram oferecidos no tempo de Jeremias, mas que Jeová puniria a nação pelas suas práticas, tanto passadas como presentes, e pelo sangue inocente derramado por ela, especialmente pelos sacrifícios humanos durante o reinado de Manassés. O profeta, em outra pronunciação, disse à nação que ela seria punida por causa do que Manassés fizera. (Je 15:4; compare isso com 2Rs 23:26; Je 32:30-35.) Também, a declaração de Jeremias, no capítulo 19, versículo 3 , corresponde à declaração em 2 Reis 21:12. Todavia, nos dias de Jeremias, o povo certamente ainda praticava idolatria, o que evidenciava que não se havia arrependido nem um pouco dos graves pecados em que participara durante o reinado de Manassés. Em Jeremias 2:23, Jeremias talvez se refira a Hinom ao trazer à atenção de Judá os pecados idólatras deste.

Na muralha de Jerusalém, os portões que davam para o vale de Hinom provavelmente eram o Portão da Esquina, no canto NO da cidade, o Portão do Vale, no seu canto SO, e o Portão dos Cacos (Portão dos Montes das Cinzas), perto de onde o vale de Hinom se juntava aos vales de Tiropeom e do Cédron. (2Rs 14:13; Ne 2:13; 12:31; Je 19:2) Entre o Portão da Esquina e o Portão do Vale, as laterais do vale de Hinom são tão íngremes que tornavam impraticável a colocação de outros portões ao longo desta parte da muralha de Jerusalém. O Rei Uzias construiu torres junto ao Portão da Esquina e ao Portão do Vale, por serem os lugares mais vulneráveis ao longo desta parte do vale. — 2Cr 26:9.

Foi neste vale ao S de Jerusalém que Neemias fez a sua inspeção noturna, examinando a muralha da cidade indo em direção ao L, do Portão do Vale até o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas, seguindo um trecho do Cédron e então voltando para entrar novamente na cidade pelo Portão do Vale. (Ne 2:13-15) No tempo de Neemias, o vale do Hinom aparentemente marcava os limites setentrionais dos povoados dos filhos de Judá (não incluindo os que moravam em Jerusalém). — Ne 11:25, 30.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o vale de Hinom é chamado pelo equivalente termo grego Gé·en·na. — Mt 5:22; Mr 9:47; veja GEENA.

HIPÓCRITA. Alguém que finge ser o que não é; alguém cujas ações não se harmonizam com as suas palavras.

Embora palavras derivadas da raiz hebraica hha·néf sejam vertidas "hipócrita" ou "hipocrisia" em algumas traduções, tais como as versões Almeida (ed. rev. e corr.), Figueiredo e Matos Soares, outros tradutores verteram estas palavras de modo diverso, como "profano" (Yg), "ímpio" (ALA; IBB; PIB) e "apóstata" (NM). Segundo A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento), de Brown, Driver e Briggs (1980, pp. 337, 338), hha·néf, quando usado como adjetivo, pode ser definido como "profano, irreligioso . . ., ímpio"; ou, como verbo, "ser poluído, profano . . ., desviar-se do que é direito". Nas Escrituras, hha·néf é posto em paralelo com os que se esquecem de Deus (Jó 8:13), os iníquos (Jó 20:5), malfeitores (Is 9:17), e é usado em contraste com as pessoas retas e os inocentes. — Jó 17:8; veja APOSTASIA.

A palavra grega traduzida "hipócrita" (hy·po·kri·tés) significa "alguém que responde", bem como um ator teatral. Os atores gregos e romanos utilizavam grandes máscaras com dispositivos mecânicos para amplificar a voz. Por isso, a palavra grega hy·po·kri·tés passou a ser usada em sentido metafórico para se aplicar a alguém que finge ou que se dá uma falsa aparência. A mesma palavra aparece na Septuaginta grega em Jó 34:30; 36:13. Os hipócritas são "infiéis" (compare Lu 12:46 com Mt 24:51), e "hipocrisia" (hy·pó·kri·sis), conforme usada nas Escrituras, pode também denotar "iniquidade" e "astúcia". — Compare isso com Mt 22:18; Mr 12:15; Lu 20:23; veja também Gál 2:13, onde hy·pó·kri·sis é traduzido "fingimento".

Jesus Cristo identificou como hipócritas aqueles que fazem dádivas de misericórdia com ostentação, que oram e jejuam para ser vistos pelos homens, e que implicam com as faltas, semelhantes a argueiros, dos seus irmãos, mas não fazem nada para remover as suas próprias faltas, semelhantes a traves. Cristo classificou como tais os que afirmavam ser servos de Deus, mas que não discerniam o significado dos tempos em que viviam e dos eventos que ocorriam, embora tirassem prontamente conclusões à base da aparência da terra e do céu sobre quais seriam as condições meteorológicas. — Mt 6:2, 5, 16; 7:1-5; Lu 6:42; 12:54-56.

O Filho de Deus, enquanto estava na terra, não só denunciou os líderes religiosos de Israel como hipócritas, mas também declarou seus motivos para isso. Eles louvavam o Criador apenas da boca para fora, invalidando a palavra de Deus por causa das suas tradições. (Mt 15:1, 6-9; Mr 7:6, 7) As ações deles estavam em desacordo com as suas palavras. (Mt 23:1-3) Os escribas e os fariseus não somente se negavam deliberadamente a aproveitar a oportunidade de entrar no Reino dos céus, mas aumentavam seu pecado por tentar impedir que outros entrassem nele. Faziam muitos esforços para converter alguém, apenas para fazer dele objeto para a Geena duas vezes mais do que eles mesmos. Insistiam nas minúcias da Lei, mas desconsideravam os assuntos mais importantes dela — a justiça, a misericórdia e a fidelidade. Quais hipócritas, tinham um aspecto apenas aparentemente limpo; mas, por dentro, estavam cheios de intemperança. Iguais a sepulcros caiados, belos por fora, pareciam justos aos homens, mas por dentro estavam "cheios de hipocrisia e do que é contra a lei". Construíam os sepulcros dos profetas e decoravam os túmulos memoriais dos justos, afirmando que não teriam derramado o sangue destes. No entanto, seu proceder mostrava que eram iguais aos seus antepassados assassinos. (Mt 23:13-36) O ensino dos fariseus e dos saduceus na realidade era hipocrisia. — Mt 16:6, 12; Lu 12:1; veja também Lu 13:11-17.

Um notável exemplo de proceder hipócrita era o adotado pelos discípulos dos fariseus e pelos partidários de Herodes quando se dirigiram a Jesus com a questão dos impostos. Primeiro, recorreram a lisonjas, dizendo: "Instrutor, sabemos que és veraz e que ensinas o caminho de Deus em verdade." Daí fizeram a pergunta capciosa: "É lícito ou não pagar a César o imposto por cabeça?" Jesus chamou-os apropriadamente de hipócritas, visto que não queriam realmente obter uma resposta à sua pergunta, mas apenas a suscitaram para enlaçar Jesus nas suas palavras. — Mt 22:15-22; Lu 20:19-26; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 544.

Não se pode ocultar indefinidamente um proceder hipócrita. (Lu 12:1-3) Os hipócritas são condenados por Deus como indignos da vida eterna. (Mt 24:48-51) Portanto, o amor e a fé do cristão têm de ser sem hipocrisia. (Ro 12:9; 2Co 6:4, 6; 1Ti 1:5) A sabedoria de cima não é hipócrita. — Tg 3:17.

HIRA. Companheiro adulamita de Judá. — Gên 38:1, 12.

HIRÃO [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Airão, que significa "Meu Irmão É Elevado (Enaltecido)"]. No texto massorético, em certas passagens, encontram-se grafias alternativas: "Hirom" (1Rs 5:10, 18; 7:40a) e "Hurão" (2Cr 2:3).

1. Rei de Tiro, e contemporâneo amistoso dos reis Davi e Salomão, no século 11 AEC.

Depois de Davi ter conquistado a fortaleza de Sião e começado a construir um palácio neste lugar, Hirão enviou mensageiros para providenciarem um tratado comercial entre ele e Davi. Hirão forneceu então a Davi cedro das encostas ocidentais do Líbano, bem como artífices peritos em trabalhar madeira e pedra. — 2Sa 5:11; 1Cr 14:1.

Ao saber que Davi tinha morrido e que Salomão reinava em lugar dele, Hirão enviou seus servos para renovar o acordo de amizade. (1Rs 5:1) Salomão recorreu então à ajuda de Hirão para o fornecimento de materiais e de parte da mão de obra necessária para a construção do grande templo, ao mesmo tempo negociando para pagar os trabalhadores de Hirão com grandes quantidades de trigo, cevada, vinho e azeite. (1Rs 5:2-6; 2Cr 2:3-10) Hirão, por sua vez, bendisse a Jeová, e as duas nações concluíram um pacto de amizade. — 1Rs 5:7-12; 2Cr 2:11-16.

Ao fim dos vinte anos de construção de Salomão, este deu a Hirão 20 cidades, mas elas mostravam ser bem indesejáveis aos olhos de Hirão. (1Rs 9:10-13; veja CABUL N.º 2.) Não há certeza se Hirão devolveu estas mesmas cidades a Salomão ou lhe deu outras. (2Cr 8:1, 2) Nem se sabe ao certo se Hirão deu a Salomão 120 talentos de ouro (US$ 46.242.000) depois de receber o presente das cidades, ou se isto de algum modo fazia parte da transação. — 1Rs 9:14.

Hirão participou também com Salomão em outro empreendimento conjunto, no qual este último construiu uma frota de navios no golfo de ʽAqaba, em Eziom-Géber. Hirão forneceu então marinheiros experientes para tripulá-los junto com os servos de Salomão. Além destes navios, que navegavam nas águas ao largo da costa L da África, Hirão e Salomão tinham outros navios que velejavam até Társis, evidentemente no extremo ocidental do Mediterrâneo. Ao todo, estas extensas operações em alto-mar produziram muitas riquezas — ouro, prata, marfim, pedras preciosas, madeiras valiosas, e raridades tais como macacos e pavões. — 1Rs 9:26-28; 10:11, 12, 22; 2Cr 8:18; 9:10, 21; veja EZIOM-GÉBER.

2. O artesão perito que fez grande parte da mobília do templo de Salomão. Seu pai era tírio, mas a mãe era uma viúva "da tribo de Naftali" (1Rs 7:13, 14), "dos filhos de Dã". (2Cr 2:13, 14) Esta aparente diferença é resolvida quando adotamos o conceito, segundo alguns peritos, de que ela nasceu na tribo de Dã, ficou viúva do primeiro marido da tribo de Naftali e depois se casou de novo com um tírio.

Hirão, rei de Tiro (N.º 1), enviou este Hirão para supervisionar a construção especial para Salomão, por causa da sua habilidade e experiência em trabalhar com materiais tais como ouro, prata, cobre, ferro, pedra e madeira. Hirão era também extraordinariamente perito em tingir, em gravar e em projetar todo tipo de dispositivos. Sem dúvida, desde a infância, parte deste treinamento técnico nas artes industriais daqueles tempos ele recebera do seu pai tírio, que era um consumado artífice em trabalhos de cobre. — 1Rs 7:13-45; 2Cr 2:13, 14; 4:11-16.

Pelo visto, o rei de Tiro chamava este homem de Hirão-Abi, que parece ser apelido que significa literalmente "Hirão, Meu Pai". (2Cr 2:13) Com isto, o rei não queria dizer que Hirão fosse seu pai literal, mas, talvez, que ele era o "conselheiro" ou "artífice-mestre" do rei. De modo similar, a expressão Hirão-Abive (literalmente: "Hirão, Seu Pai") parece significar 'Hirão é seu artífice-mestre', isto é, do rei. — 2Cr 4:16.

HIRÃO-ABI [Hirão, Meu Pai]. Apelido dado ao "homem hábil" enviado pelo rei de Tiro para fabricar a mobília do templo de Salomão. Evidentemente, indicava que Hirão era "pai" no sentido de ser artífice-mestre. — 2Cr 2:13; veja HIRÃO N.º 2; HIRÃO-ABIVE.

HIRÃO-ABIVE [Hirão, Seu Pai]. Termo usado com referência ao artífice perito enviado de Tiro para supervisionar a fabricação da mobília do templo de Salomão. Parece indicar que Hirão era "pai", não em sentido literal, mas por ser artífice-mestre. — 2Cr 4:16; veja HIRÃO N.º 2.

HISQUI [forma abreviada de Ezequias, que significa "Jeová Fortalece"]. Benjamita alistado entre os filhos de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 17, 18.

HISQUIAS [forma abreviada de Ezequias, que significa "Jeová Fortalece"]. Um dos três filhos de Nearias, descendente do Rei Salomão. — 1Cr 3:10, 23.

HISSOPO [hebr.: 'e·zóhv; gr.: hý·sso·pos]. Não há certeza da identificação exata do hissopo. Os termos hebraico e grego, na realidade, podem abranger diversas espécies de planta.

Alguns peritos modernos dizem que o hissopo das Escrituras Hebraicas provavelmente é uma variedade de manjerona (Origanum maru). Esta planta, da família da hortelã, é comum na Palestina. Em condições favoráveis, atinge de 50 a 90 cm de altura. Seus ramos e suas folhas grossas são pilosos, e, conforme indicado em 1 Reis 4:33, pode ser encontrada em fendas de rochas e em muros.

O hissopo foi usado pelos israelitas no Egito para aspergir o sangue da vítima pascoal nas duas ombreiras e nas vergas das suas casas. (Êx 12:21, 22) Na inauguração do pacto da Lei, Moisés usou hissopo para aspergir o livro da Lei e o povo. (He 9:19) O hissopo figurava também na cerimônia de purificação de pessoas ou casas anteriormente infectadas de lepra (Le 14:2-7, 48-53; veja LIMPO, LIMPEZA [Lepra]) e na preparação das cinzas a serem usadas na "água da purificação", bem como para se espargir esta água em certos objetos e pessoas. (Núm 19:6, 9, 18) Assim, Davi orou apropriadamente para ser purificado de pecado, com hissopo. — Sal 51:7.

O hissopo mencionado em relação com Jesus Cristo, quando estava pregado na estaca (Jo 19:29), é considerado por alguns como referindo-se à durra, ou painço-da-índia, uma variedade de sorgo comum (Sorghum vulgare). Trata-se duma planta alta, de grãos pequenos, com folhas longas e largas. Visto que esta planta costuma atingir na Palestina a altura de pelo menos 1,8 m, pode ter fornecido uma haste, ou "cana", de comprimento suficiente para levar a esponja ensopada de vinho acre até a boca de Jesus. (Mt 27:48; Mr 15:36) Outros acham que mesmo neste caso o hissopo talvez fosse a manjerona e sugerem que um molho de manjerona talvez fosse amarrado à "cana" mencionada por Mateus e por Marcos. Ainda outros acham que João 19:29 rezava originalmente hys·soí (pique, dardo [azagaia]), não hys·só·poi (hissopo); motivo da tradução por "num pique" (AT) e "num dardo" (BJ n).

HITITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Hete]. Povo descendente de Hete, segundo filho mencionado de Canaã. (Gên 10:15) Portanto, eram de origem camita. — Gên 10:6.

Abraão tinha alguns tratos com os hititas, que moravam em Canaã na época em que ele se mudou para lá. Jeová prometera dar à descendência, ou semente, de Abraão a terra de Canaã, habitada por diversas nações, inclusive pela nação hitita. (Gên 15:18-21) No entanto, Jeová disse a Abraão que 'ainda não se completara o erro dos amorreus [termo frequentemente usado, em sentido geral, para as nações em Canaã]'. (Gên 15:16) Por isso, Abraão respeitava serem os hititas proprietários da terra, e quando sua esposa Sara faleceu, negociou com Efrom, filho de Zoar, o hitita, uma caverna para sepultá-la. — Gên 23:1-20.

Nos dias de Josué, os hititas são descritos como habitando a terra que abrangia uma área "desde o ermo e este Líbano até o grande rio, o rio Eufrates, isto é, toda a terra dos hititas". (Jos 1:4) Pelo visto, moravam principalmente nas regiões montanhosas, que podiam incluir o Líbano, e, possivelmente, regiões da Síria. — Núm 13:29; Jos 11:3.

Sob a Maldição de Noé. Descenderem os hititas de Canaã os colocou sob a maldição que Noé lançou sobre Canaã, e quando Israel os subjugou, foi em cumprimento das palavras de Noé em Gênesis 9:25-27. A religião dos hititas era pagã, sem dúvida, fálica, assim como as outras religiões cananeias. Quando o neto de Abraão, Esaú, se casou com mulheres hititas, isto era "uma fonte de amargura de espírito para Isaque e Rebeca", pai e mãe de Esaú. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:46.

Deus descreveu a terra ocupada pelos hititas e por outras nações associadas como "terra que mana leite e mel". (Êx 3:8) Mas, essas nações haviam ficado tão corruptas, que sua presença na terra a profanava. (Le 18:25, 27) Muitos foram os avisos que Deus deu a Israel sobre o perigo da associação com elas nas suas práticas degradadas e imundas. Ele alista muitas imoralidades, proibindo aos israelitas empenhar-se nelas, e então diz: "Não vos façais impuros por qualquer destas coisas, porque por todas estas coisas se fizeram impuras as nações [inclusive os hititas] que ponho para fora diante de vós." — Le 18:1-30.

Decretada a Destruição. Os hititas eram uma das sete nações mencionadas como destinadas a ser devotadas à destruição. Estas nações foram descritas como "mais populosas e mais fortes" do que Israel. De modo que as sete nações, naquele tempo, devem ter tido mais de três milhões de pessoas, e os hititas no seu baluarte montanhesco seriam um tremendo adversário. (De 7:1, 2) Eles manifestaram sua inimizade por juntar-se às outras nações de Canaã na luta contra Israel (liderado por Josué), quando souberam que Israel tinha atravessado o Jordão e destruído as cidades de Jericó e Ai. (Jos 9:1, 2; 24:11) Portanto, as cidades dos hititas deviam ter sido destruídas e seus habitantes eliminados, para não constituírem mais perigo para a lealdade de Israel a Deus e para não fazer Israel incorrer no desfavor de Deus. (De 20:16-18) Mas, Israel cumpriu a ordem de Deus de modo imperfeito. Depois da morte de Josué, falharam desobedientemente em eliminar essas nações, as quais continuaram como espinhos nos seus lados e uma constante hostilização para eles. — Núm 33:55, 56.

História Posterior. Visto que Israel não obedeceu a Deus quanto a destruir completamente as nações cananeias, Deus declarou: "Eu disse, da minha parte: 'Não os expulsarei de diante de vós, e eles têm de tornar-se ciladas para vós, e seus deuses servirão de laço para vós.'" (Jz 2:3) Parece que aqueles cananeus remanescentes em Israel eram tolerados, e, em raros casos, receberam até mesmo posições de respeito e de responsabilidade. Parece também que, dentre as nações cananeias, apenas os hititas continuaram em destaque e força como nação. — 1Rs 10:29; 2Rs 7:6.

Dois hititas eram soldados, possivelmente oficiais, no exército de Davi, a saber, Aimeleque e Urias. Urias era homem zeloso que desejava a vitória de Israel sobre os seus inimigos, e ele observava a Lei. Davi teve relações sexuais com Bate-Seba, esposa de Urias, e, subsequentemente, mandou que Urias fosse colocado numa posição perigosa na batalha, onde foi morto. Por causa disso, Davi foi punido por Deus. — 1Sa 26:6; 2Sa 11:3, 4, 11, 15-17; 12:9-12.

O Rei Salomão recrutou homens dentre os hititas para trabalhos forçados, como de escravos. (2Cr 8:7, 8) Todavia, suas esposas estrangeiras, entre as quais havia hititas, fizeram Salomão desviar-se de Jeová, seu Deus. (1Rs 11:1-6) Na Bíblia mencionam-se os hititas como tendo reis e condições de guerrear ainda na época do reinado do Rei Jeorão, de Israel (c. 917-905 AEC). (2Rs 7:6) No entanto, as conquistas da terra pelos sírios, pelos assírios e pelos babilônios evidentemente destroçaram o poderio dos hititas.

Após o restabelecimento de Israel do exílio, em 537 AEC, o povo de Israel, e até mesmo alguns dos sacerdotes e dos levitas, casaram-se com mulheres das nações cananeias, e deram suas filhas a homens cananeus, entre os quais havia hititas. Isto era uma violação da lei de Deus. Por causa disso, Esdras os repreendeu, induzindo-os a fazer um acordo, para despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 9:1, 2; 10:14, 16-19, 44.

Uso Figurado. Jeová, falando através do profeta Ezequiel, usou o termo "hitita" em sentido figurado, ao falar a Jerusalém. Ele disse: "Tua origem e teu nascimento é da terra do cananeu. Teu pai era amorreu e tua mãe hitita." (Ez 16:3) Jerusalém, capital da nação, em que Jeová havia colocado seu nome, era, quando Israel entrou na terra, uma cidade ocupada pelos jebuseus. Mas, visto que as tribos mais destacadas eram os amorreus e os hititas, estas foram aparentemente usadas para representar as nações de Canaã, inclusive os jebuseus. De modo que a cidade tinha herança humilde, mas Jeová fez com que fosse embelezada. Por meio do Rei Davi, sentado no "trono de Jeová" (1Cr 29:23), com a Arca do Pacto no monte Sião, e, finalmente, o glorioso templo construído por Salomão, filho de Davi, a fama de Jerusalém espalhou-se entre as nações. Mas, Jerusalém tornou-se igual às nações cananeias em sua volta, corrupta e imoral, motivo pelo qual Jeová finalmente causou a desolação dela. — Ez 16:14, 15.

Tentativas de Identificação Seculares. Historiadores e arqueólogos têm tentado identificar os hititas da Bíblia na história secular. A principal base deles para as identificações tem sido a linguística, a comparação das palavras de som ou grafia aparentemente similares.

Nos textos cuneiformes, assírios, há frequentes referências a "Hatti", num contexto que usualmente coloca "Hatti" na Síria ou na Palestina. Talvez sejam referências aos hititas bíblicos. Todavia, à base deste termo, "Hatti", os peritos procuram identificar os hititas bíblicos com o chamado Império Hitita, que tinha sua capital na Ásia Menor, bem ao N e ao O da terra de Canaã. Procuram fazer isso do modo indicado a seguir, mas nisto se referem a três grupos diferentes de pessoas.

"Identificados" Três Grupos. Na Anatólia (parte da atual Turquia), na Ásia Menor, muitos textos antigos foram descobertos em Bogazköy, antigamente chamada "Hattushash". Era a capital duma terra que os peritos atuais chamam de Hatti e cujos habitantes falavam o 'hatita'. Este primitivo povo foi evidentemente dominado por conquistadores que introduziram uma língua diferente, a qual, segundo os peritos, era uma língua indo-europeia. Esta língua usava escrita cuneiforme e é chamada de "hitita cuneiforme". Mais tarde, ainda outra língua indo-europeia diferente, que usava escrita hieroglífica, suplantou a escrita cuneiforme, e esta língua é chamada de "hitita hieroglífica". Diz-se que alguns exemplos de textos nesta língua foram encontrados tanto na Ásia Menor como na Síria setentrional. Os peritos dizem que estas três línguas representam três grupos diferentes. Mas não há nenhuma prova de que qualquer deles fosse os hititas da Bíblia. Acerca do chamado hitita cuneiforme, Martin Noth declarou: "O termo 'hitita' não é encontrado nos textos antigos, mas foi inventado por estudantes modernos, baseado na relação histórica entre esta língua e o reino de Hatti, na Ásia Menor." Ele prossegue, dizendo a respeito dos "hieróglifos hititas": "O termo convencional hitita é irrelevante e confuso quando aplicado a eles." (The Old Testament World [O Mundo do Antigo Testamento], 1966, p. 231) Outro historiador, E. A. Speiser, conclui: "O problema dos hititas na Bíblia é . . . complexo. Para começar, há a questão de saber que tipo de hititas talvez esteja envolvido em qualquer determinada passagem bíblica: hatianos, hititas indo-europeus dos registros cuneiformes, ou hititas hieroglíficos." — The World History of the Jewish People (A História Mundial do Povo Judaico), 1964, Vol. 1, p. 160.

À base do precedente, pode-se ver que qualquer suposta identificação dos hititas da Bíblia com o "Império Hitita", que teve por capital a cidade de Hattushash, é mera conjectura e não foi comprovada. Por causa desta incerteza, nesta publicação, as referências aos "hititas" seculares são geralmente colocadas entre aspas, para lembrar ao leitor que tal identificação não foi comprovada e que não achamos a evidência suficientemente forte para aceitar tal identificação como conclusiva.

HIZQUI. Veja HISQUI.

HOÃO. Rei de Hébron; um dos cinco reis que subiram para guerrear contra Gibeão, porque tinha feito paz com Josué e os israelitas. Estes cinco reis foram derrotados quando Josué veio em ajuda dos gibeonitas. Depois de serem mortos, foram pendurados em estacas até à noitinha, e depois foram lançados numa caverna. — Jos 10:1-27.

HOBÁ. Um lugar "ao norte de Damasco", até onde Abraão perseguiu os exércitos derrotados de Quedorlaomer. (Gên 14:13-17) Certos peritos associam a localização bíblica dele com Hoba, uma fonte na estrada entre Palmira e Damasco, onde pelo menos parece preservado o nome antigo. Hoba, igual a outras fontes grandes perto do deserto, antigamente talvez tivesse uma aldeia por perto.

HOBABE [possivelmente: Querido]. Cunhado de Moisés; filho de Reuel (Jetro) e midianita, da tribo dos queneus. (Núm 10:29; Êx 3:1; Jz 1:16) Quando chegou o tempo de os israelitas se mudarem da região do monte Sinai para a Terra da Promessa, Moisés pediu que Hobabe os acompanhasse para servir de "olhos", ou batedor, para a nação, porque conhecia a região. Embora Hobabe no começo rejeitasse isso, parece que realmente acompanhou os israelitas, porque seus descendentes, os queneus, passaram a morar no ermo de Judá, ao S de Arade, e são mencionados como ainda morando naquela região no tempo de Saul e de Davi. — Núm 10:29-32; Jz 1:16; 1Sa 15:6; 27:10; 30:26, 29.

O texto massorético de Juízes 4:11, porém, identifica Hobabe como sogro de Moisés. (NM, Al, ALA, BJ, BMD, BV, IBB, LEB, MC) De modo que esse único nome pode designar duas pessoas diferentes, a saber, tanto o sogro como o cunhado de Moisés. Que isto não é impossível se vê no fato de que se dá mais de um nome ao sogro de Moisés. — Veja Êx 2:16-22; 3:1.

Por outro lado, se Hobabe era deveras apenas o nome do filho de Reuel, e, portanto, apenas o nome do cunhado de Moisés, então a referência a Hobabe como sogro de Moisés deve significar que Hobabe era encarado como representativo de seu pai Reuel, o qual, neste caso, provavelmente já tinha morrido. — Veja JETRO; QUENEU.

HODAVIAS.

1. Um dos sete filhos de Elioenai, descendente do Rei Salomão. — 1Cr 3:10, 24.

2. Um dos sete cabeças paternais da meia tribo de Manassés. — 1Cr 5:23, 24.

3. Benjamita; "filho de Hassenua" e pai, ou antepassado, de Mesulão. — 1Cr 9:7.

4. Cabeça duma família levita, da qual 74 "filhos" (descendentes) retornaram de Babilônia em 537 AEC e alguns dos quais, se não todos, serviram como supervisores na reconstrução do templo. (Esd 2:1, 2, 40; 3:9) Hodavias é chamado Judá em Esdras 3:9, e Hodeva, em Neemias 7:43.

HODE [Dignidade]. Filho de Zofa, da tribo de Aser. Hode provavelmente era cabeça de uma das divisões maiores do exército, tendo outros maiorais sob o seu comando. — 1Cr 7:36, 37, 40.

HODES [Lua Nova]. Uma das esposas do benjamita Saraim. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 9.

HODEVA. Antepassado de certos levitas dentre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico (Ne 7:6, 7, 43); forma alternativa do nome "Hodavias". — Esd 2:40; veja HODAVIAS N.º 4.

HODIAS [Dignidade É Jah].

1. Homem que se casou com a irmã de certo Naão. O nome aparece na genealogia de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 19.

2. Levita que ajudou Esdras em explicar a lei de Jeová à congregação de Israel, reunida na praça pública diante do Portão das Águas, de Jerusalém, e evidentemente também um daqueles que exortaram os filhos de Israel a bendizer a Jeová e Seu glorioso nome, e depois recapitularam os tratos de Deus com o Seu povo. (Ne 8:1, 5, 7; 9:5) Este Hodias pode ser o mesmo que o N.º 3 ou o N.º 4.

3, 4. Nome de dois levitas, cujos descendentes, se não eles mesmos, atestaram com selo a confissão pactuada feita quando Neemias era governador. Se eles pessoalmente fizeram a selagem, então um deles talvez fosse o N.º 2. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9, 10, 13.

5. Um dos "cabeças do povo", cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou a confissão pactuada nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 10:1, 14, 18.

HOFNI [do egípcio, significando "Girino"]. Um dos filhos do sumo sacerdote Eli. Hofni e seu irmão Fineias eram "homens imprestáveis", culpados de conduta sacrílega e de crassa imoralidade. (1Sa 1:3; 2:12-17, 22-25) Por causa da sua infidelidade ao servir como sacerdote no santuário de Jeová, Jeová julgou Hofni merecedor da morte, que lhe sobreveio na ocasião em que os filisteus capturaram a Arca sagrada. — 1Sa 2:34; 4:4, 11, 17; veja FINEIAS N.º 2.

HOFRA [do egípcio, significando "O Coração de Rá [o deus-sol] Perdura"]. Na Septuaginta grega (Je 51:30, correspondendo a 44:30 na maioria das versões), ele é chamado Ou·a·fré. O Faraó Hofra é chamado Apriés por Heródoto. Acredita-se que Hofra tenha reinado 19 anos. No entanto, segundo Heródoto (II, 161), ele reinou 25 anos.

Depois que os judeus fugiram para o Egito, em 607 AEC, Jeová disse pela boca de Jeremias: "Eis que entrego Faraó Hofra, rei do Egito, na mão dos seus inimigos e na mão dos que procuram a sua alma." (Je 44:1, 26, 30) Isto devia servir de sinal da iminência duma calamidade que sobreviria aos judeus que moravam no Egito. (Je 44:29) Segundo Heródoto (II, 161-169), Hofra (Apriés) empreendeu uma expedição desastrosa a Cirene, para ajudar os líbios contra os gregos, no sexto século AEC. As tropas de Hofra revoltaram-se contra ele e estabeleceram Ahmose II (Amásis) como rei rival. Mesmo assim, Hofra era tão arrogante, que "estava convencido de que nem mesmo um deus podia destroná-lo". Todavia, foi preso e finalmente morto por estrangulamento.

HOGLA. Terceira das cinco filhas alistadas de Zelofeade. Visto que o pai dela não tinha filhos varões, a herança dele foi dividida entre as cinco filhas, com a estipulação de que se casassem dentro da sua própria tribo, Manassés, "para que a sua herança continuasse na tribo da família de seu pai" e não fosse "circular de uma tribo para outra". — Núm 36:1-12; 26:33; 27:1-11; Jos 17:3, 4.

HOLOM [Lugar Arenoso; Areal].

1. Cidade da região montanhosa de Judá, designada aos coatitas sacerdotais (Jos 15:21, 48, 51; 21:9-19); parece ser chamada de Hilém em 1 Crônicas 6:58. Holom, de Judá, é provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet 'Illin (Horvat 'Illit), a uns 17 km ao NNO de Hébron.

2. Cidade moabita do planalto, ou "planície", ao L do Jordão, mencionada junto com outras cidades numa pronunciação contra Moabe. (Je 48:21) Sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

HOMÃ. Veja HOMÃO.

HOMÃO. Filho do xeque horeu Lotã; também chamado Hemão. — Gên 36:20-22; 1Cr 1:39; veja HEMÃO.

HOMEM. A forma mais elevada de vida terrestre e produto do Criador, Jeová Deus. Jeová formou o homem do pó do solo, soprou-lhe nas narinas o fôlego de vida, "e o homem veio a ser uma alma vivente". (Gên 2:7; 1Co 15:45) Depois de Adão ter sido criado e de ter dado nome aos animais, Jeová Deus fez cair um profundo sono sobre o homem; e, enquanto este dormia, tirou-lhe uma das costelas e usou-a para fazer a mulher. Por isso, quando ela foi apresentada ao homem Adão, este podia dizer: "Esta, por fim, é osso dos meus ossos e carne da minha carne." Ele chamou-a de Mulher, 'ish·sháh, "porque do homem foi esta tomada". (Gên 2:21-23) Mais tarde, Adão deu-lhe o nome de Eva (que significa "Vivente"). — Gên 3:20.

Diversos termos hebraicos e gregos se referem ao homem. 'A·dhám significa "homem; humano; homem terreno; humanidade" (em sentido genérico); 'ish, "homem; indivíduo; marido"; 'enóhsh, "homem mortal"; gé·ver, "varão vigoroso"; za·khár, "macho"; outras palavras hebraicas também são às vezes traduzidas "homem". A palavra grega án·thro·pos significa "homem; humanidade" (em sentido genérico); a·nér, "homem; pessoa do sexo masculino; marido".

Atestando a criação do homem por Jeová Deus, o apóstolo Paulo disse aos atenienses: "Ele fez de um só homem toda nação dos homens, para morarem sobre a superfície inteira da terra." (At 17:26) De modo que todas as nações e raças têm origem comum.

Adão e Eva foram criados perto do fim do sexto "dia" criativo. (Gên 1:24-31) Realmente, não existe nenhum registro sobre um homem antigo, sua escrita, sua agricultura e seus outros empenhos, que remonte a um tempo antes de 4026 AEC, data da criação de Adão. Visto que as Escrituras delineiam a história do homem desde a própria criação do primeiro casal humano, não pode haver tal coisa como um "homem pré-histórico". O registro dos fósseis, na terra, não fornece nenhum elo entre o homem e os animais. Por outro lado, também, nos mais antigos registros do homem, quer documentos escritos, quer gravuras em cavernas, esculturas ou coisas assim, há uma total ausência de referências a criaturas subumanas. As Escrituras tornam evidente o contrário, que o homem era originalmente filho de Deus e que ele tem degenerado desde então. (1Rs 8:46; Ec 7:20; 1Jo 1:8-10) O arqueólogo O. D. Miller comentou: "A tradição da 'idade de ouro', então, não era mito. A antiga doutrina de um declínio subsequente, de uma triste degeneração da raça humana, de um estado original de felicidade e de pureza, sem dúvida incorporava uma grande, mas lamentável, verdade. As nossas filosofias modernas sobre a História, que começam com o homem primevo qual selvagem, necessitam evidentemente de nova introdução. . . . Não; o homem primevo não era um selvagem." — Har-Moad, 1892, p. 417.

A Bíblia revela que o lar original do homem era "um jardim no Éden", (Gên 2:8; veja ÉDEN N.º 1.) Sua localização indicada é relativamente perto do lugar da primeira civilização pós-diluviana da humanidade. O ponto de vista geralmente aceito pelos peritos é expresso por P. J. Wiseman como segue: "Toda a evidência real que possuímos, a de Gênesis, da arqueologia e das tradições dos homens, aponta para a planície mesopotâmica como o lar mais antigo do homem. A civilização do Extremo Oriente, quer chinesa quer indiana, não pode competir com esta terra na antiguidade dos seus povos, porque ela pode facilmente sustentar a sua afirmação de ser o berço da civilização." — New Discoveries in Babylonia About Genesis (Novas Descobertas em Babilônia sobre Gênesis), 1949, p. 28.

Em que sentido é o homem feito "à imagem de Deus"?

Deus disse, ao revelar ao seu "mestre de obras" o propósito divino de criar a humanidade: "Façamos o homem ['a·dhám] à nossa imagem, segundo a nossa semelhança." (Gên 1:26, 27; Pr 8:30, 31; compare isso com Jo 1:1-3; Col 1:15-17.) Note que as Escrituras não dizem que Deus criou o homem à imagem dum animal selvagem, dum animal doméstico ou dum peixe. O homem foi feito "à imagem de Deus"; era "filho de Deus". (Lu 3:38) Quanto à forma ou figura do corpo de Deus, "ninguém jamais viu a Deus". (1Jo 4:12) Ninguém na terra sabe que aspecto tem o glorioso, celestial e espiritual corpo de Deus, de modo que não podemos comparar o corpo do homem com o corpo de Deus. "Deus é Espírito." — Jo 4:24.

Todavia, o homem é "à imagem de Deus" no sentido de ter sido criado com qualidades morais tais como as de Deus, a saber, amor e justiça. (Veja Col 3:10.) Possui também poderes e sabedoria acima daqueles dos animais, de modo que é capaz de apreciar as coisas de que Deus gosta e que aprecia, tais como a beleza e as artes, a fala, o raciocínio e processos similares da mente e do coração, algo de que os animais são incapazes. Ademais, o homem é capaz de ter espiritualidade, conhecimento e comunicação com Deus. (1Co 2:11-16; He 12:9) Por tais razões, o homem estava qualificado para ser representante de Deus e ter em sujeição todas as formas de vida animal, nos céus, na terra e no mar.

O homem, como criação de Deus, era originalmente perfeito. (De 32:4) Por conseguinte, Adão podia ter legado à sua posteridade a perfeição humana e a oportunidade de ter vida eterna na terra. (Is 45:18) Ordenou-se a ele e a Eva: "Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos, e enchei a terra, e sujeitai-a." À medida que sua família aumentasse, eles teriam cultivado e embelezado a terra segundo o projeto de seu Criador. — Gên 1:28.

O apóstolo Paulo, ao considerar as posições relativas do homem e da mulher no arranjo de Deus, diz: "Quero que saibais que a cabeça de todo homem é o Cristo; por sua vez, a cabeça da mulher é o homem; por sua vez, a cabeça do Cristo é Deus." Ele indica então que a mulher que ora ou profetiza na congregação com a cabeça descoberta envergonha aquele que é sua cabeça. Para reforçar seu argumento, ele declara então: "Pois o homem não deve ter a cabeça coberta, visto ser imagem e glória de Deus; mas a mulher é a glória do homem." O homem foi criado primeiro e ficou por algum tempo a sós, somente ele sendo à imagem de Deus. A mulher foi feita do homem e devia ficar sujeita a ele, numa situação dessemelhante da de Deus, que não está sujeito a ninguém. A posição do homem como cabeça, porém, está sujeita à posição de Deus e de Cristo como cabeças. — 1Co 11:3-7.

Dotado de Livre-Arbítrio. O homem, feito à imagem de Deus, segundo a Sua semelhança, tinha livre-arbítrio. Possuía a liberdade de escolher fazer o bem ou o mal. Pela sua livre e amorosa obediência ao seu Criador, estava capacitado para dar honra e glória a Deus em condições muito superiores às da criação animal. Podia com inteligência louvar a Deus pelas Suas maravilhosas qualidades e podia apoiar Sua soberania. Mas a liberdade de Adão era relativa; não era absoluta. Só continuaria a viver em felicidade se reconhecesse a soberania de Jeová. Isto foi indicado pela árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau, da qual se proibira Adão de comer. Comer dela seria um ato de desobediência, uma rebelião contra a soberania de Deus. — Gên 2:9, 16, 17.

Sendo Adão "filho de Deus" (Lu 3:38), sua relação com Deus era a de um filho para com o pai, e ele deveria ter obedecido concordemente. Além disso, Deus criou o homem com o desejo inato de adorar. Este desejo, quando pervertido, levaria o homem na direção errada e destruiria sua liberdade, colocando-o em escravidão ao que fora criado, em vez de ao Criador. Isto, por sua vez, resultaria na degradação do homem.

Um filho espiritual rebelde de Deus induziu a esposa de Adão, Eva, a pecar, e ela apresentou a tentação a Adão, o qual deliberadamente se rebelou contra Jeová. (Gên 3:1-6; 1Ti 2:13, 14) Tornaram-se semelhantes àqueles que Paulo mais tarde descreveu em Romanos 1:20-23. Adão, pela sua transgressão, perdeu a qualidade de filho e a perfeição, e transmitiu o pecado, junto com a imperfeição e a morte, à sua descendência, a inteira raça humana. Esta, mesmo já ao nascer, era à imagem de seu pai Adão, imperfeita, com a morte operando no seu corpo. — Gên 3:17-19; Ro 5:12; veja ADÃO N.º 1.

"O Homem Que Somos por Dentro." Ao falar do conflito do cristão, inclusive o travado com a carne decaída, pecaminosa, a Bíblia usa as expressões "o homem que sou no íntimo", "o homem que somos por dentro" e frases similares. (Ro 7:22; 2Co 4:16; Ef 3:16) Essas expressões são apropriadas, porque os cristãos foram "feitos novos na força que ativa a [sua] mente". (Ef 4:23) A força impulsionadora, ou inclinação da mente, está voltada para coisas espirituais. Eles fazem empenhos para se 'desnudar da velha personalidade [literalmente: do velho homem]' e revestir-se da "nova personalidade [literalmente: (do) novo]". (Col 3:9, 10; Ro 12:2) Os cristãos ungidos, ao serem batizados em Cristo, foram "batizados na sua morte"; a velha personalidade foi pregada na estaca, "para que o . . . corpo pecaminoso ficasse inativo". Mas, até a morte deles na carne e sua ressurreição, o corpo carnal ainda combate o 'homem espiritual'. Trata-se duma luta difícil, a respeito da qual Paulo diz: "Gememos deveras nesta casa de moradia." Mas o sacrifício resgatador de Jesus Cristo cobre os pecados da velha personalidade, com os desejos carnais que operam nos seus membros, a menos que os cristãos cedam e deliberadamente sigam o caminho da carne. — Ro 6:3-7; 7:21-25; 8:23; 2Co 5:1-3.

O Homem Espiritual. O apóstolo contrasta o homem espiritual com o homem físico. Ele diz: "Mas o homem físico [literalmente: (homem-) alma; de alma] não aceita as coisas do espírito de Deus, porque para ele são tolice." (1Co 2:14) Este "homem físico" não se refere apenas a alguém que vive na terra, alguém que tem um corpo carnal, porque, obviamente, os cristãos, na terra, têm corpo carnal. O homem físico de que se fala aqui refere-se a alguém que não tem um lado espiritual na sua vida. Ele é "de alma" no sentido de que segue os desejos da alma humana, excluindo as coisas espirituais.

Paulo prossegue falando sobre o "homem físico", dizendo que este não pode chegar a conhecer as coisas do espírito de Deus, "porque são examinadas espiritualmente". Daí, ele diz: "No entanto, o homem espiritual examina deveras todas as coisas, mas ele mesmo não é examinado por homem algum." O homem espiritual tem entendimento das coisas que Deus revela; compreende também a posição e o proceder errados do homem físico. Mas a posição, as ações e o proceder na vida do homem espiritual não podem ser entendidos pelo homem físico, nem pode algum homem julgar o homem espiritual, porque só Deus é seu Juiz. (Ro 14:4, 10, 11; 1Co 4:3-5) Como ilustração e argumento, o apóstolo diz: "Pois 'quem veio a conhecer a mente de Jeová para o instruir?' " Naturalmente, ninguém. "Mas", diz Paulo a respeito dos cristãos, "nós temos a mente de Cristo". Por terem a mente de Cristo, o qual revela Jeová e Seus propósitos aos cristãos, eles são homens espirituais. — 1Co 2:14-16.

HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI. Expressão usada pelo apóstolo Paulo em 2 Tessalonicenses 2:2, 3, ao avisar sobre a grande apostasia anticristã que se desenvolveria antes do "dia de Jeová". A palavra grega para "apostasia", usada aqui, a·po·sta·sí·a, indica mais do que um simples afastamento, um retrocesso indiferente. Significa defecção, revolta, rebelião planejada, deliberada. Em antigos documentos de papiro, a·po·sta·sí·a era usada em sentido político referente a rebeldes.

Revolta Religiosa. Esta rebelião, porém, não é política. É religiosa, uma revolta contra Jeová Deus e Jesus Cristo, e, portanto, contra a congregação cristã.

Predita. Outras previsões desta apostasia foram feitas pelos apóstolos Paulo e Pedro, tanto verbalmente como por escrito, e o próprio Senhor Jesus Cristo avisou sobre a sua vinda. Jesus disse, na sua ilustração do trigo e do joio (Mt 13), que o Diabo semearia "joio", cristãos de imitação, "filhos do iníquo", entre o "trigo", os "filhos do reino". Eles existiriam até a terminação do sistema de coisas, quando seriam identificados e 'queimados'.

Paulo advertiu os superintendentes cristãos de Éfeso que, depois da sua partida, "lobos opressivos" penetrariam entre os verdadeiros cristãos e não tratariam o rebanho com ternura, mas tentariam atrair a si "os discípulos" (não apenas fazer discípulos para si mesmos, mas tentar atrair os discípulos, os discípulos de Cristo). (At 20:29, 30) Ele escreveu, em 1 Timóteo 4:1-3: "No entanto, a pronunciação inspirada diz definitivamente que nos períodos posteriores de tempo alguns se desviarão da fé, prestando atenção a desencaminhantes pronunciações inspiradas e a ensinos de demônios, pela hipocrisia de homens que falam mentiras, marcados na sua consciência como que por um ferro de marcar [insensíveis, cauterizados, de modo que não sentem dores de consciência por hipocritamente falarem mentiras]; proibindo o casar-se, mandando abster-se de alimentos que Deus criou para serem tomados com agradecimentos."

Paulo escreveu posteriormente a Timóteo que "haverá um período de tempo em que não suportarão o ensino salutar, porém, de acordo com os seus próprios desejos, acumularão para si instrutores para lhes fazer cócegas nos ouvidos; e desviarão os seus ouvidos da verdade, ao passo que serão desviados para histórias falsas". — 2Ti 4:3, 4.

O apóstolo Pedro traçou um paralelo entre a apostasia de tais do cristianismo e aquela que ocorreu na casa natural de Israel. Ele disse: "No entanto, houve também falsos profetas entre o povo, assim como haverá falsos instrutores entre vós. Estes mesmos introduzirão quietamente seitas destrutivas e repudiarão até mesmo o dono que os comprou, trazendo sobre si mesmos uma destruição veloz. Outrossim, muitos seguirão os seus atos de conduta desenfreada, e, por causa destes, falar-se-á de modo ultrajante do caminho da verdade." Pedro passa a salientar que estes explorariam a congregação, mas que "a destruição deles não está cochilando". — 2Pe 2:1-3.

"Homem" composto. O "homem" de 2 Tessalonicenses 2:1-12, portanto, não é uma pessoa, mas um "homem" composto, um grupo coletivo, conforme mostram os textos precedentes, e este "homem" havia de continuar após a morte dos apóstolos e existir até o tempo da presença do Senhor.

Traição contra Deus. 'Aquilo que é contra a lei', que este apóstata "homem" composto pratica, é contra Jeová Deus, o Soberano Universal. Este "homem" é culpado de traição. Ele é chamado de "filho da destruição", assim como foi Judas Iscariotes, aquele que traiu o Senhor Jesus Cristo e que contribuiu para causar a morte dele. Tal homem, igual a Judas, há de ser aniquilado, extinto para sempre. Este "homem" não é "Babilônia, a Grande", que também luta contra Deus, pois esta é mulher, meretriz. Todavia, visto que ele se empenha numa rebelião religiosa contra Deus, evidentemente faz parte da Babilônia mística. — Jo 17:12; Re 17:3, 5.

O "homem que é contra a lei" coloca-se em oposição a Deus, e portanto, é um "satanás", que significa "opositor". E, deveras, sua "presença . . . é segundo a operação de Satanás". (2Te 2:9) Nos dias do apóstolo Paulo, havia um "mistério", ou segredo religioso, a respeito da identidade deste "homem que é contra a lei". Até o dia de hoje, este mistério oculta a identidade dele na mente de muitas pessoas, porque a sua iniquidade é praticada sob o disfarce de devoção piedosa. (2Te 2:7) Por meio de seus ensinos mentirosos, contrários à lei de Deus, ou como que suplantando-a, "o homem que é contra a lei" arvora-se acima de Jeová Deus e outros 'deuses', os poderosos da terra, e também contra os santos de Deus, os verdadeiros irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo. (Veja 2Pe 2:10-13.) Visto que ele é hipócrita, falso instrutor, que afirma ser cristão, ele "se assenta no templo de O Deus", isto é, naquilo que esses falsos instrutores afirmam ser esse templo. — 2Te 2:4.

Uma restrição. Paulo fala de algo "que age como restrição". (2Te 2:6) Parece que os apóstolos constituíam esta restrição. Paulo dissera aos superintendentes efésios que, depois de ele ter ido embora, entrariam homens iguais a lobos. (At 20:29) Ele escreveu repetidas vezes admoestações a respeito de tal apostasia, não só na Segunda aos Tessalonicenses, mas em muitas exortações a Timóteo. E aconselhou Timóteo a encarregar das coisas que tinha ouvido de Paulo a homens fiéis, os quais estariam habilitados para ensinar outros. Chamou a congregação do Deus vivente de "coluna e amparo da verdade". Queria torná-la o mais forte possível antes que surgisse a grande apostasia. — 2Ti 2:2; 1Ti 3:15.

Muito mais tarde, Cristo ordenou que o apóstolo João escrevesse, advertindo contra seitas, com menção especial da seita de Nicolau, e falando de falsos profetas tais como Balaão e da mulher Jezabel, que se chamava de profetisa. — Re 2:6, 14, 15, 20.

Em operação nos dias dos apóstolos. O apóstolo Paulo disse que o mistério 'já estava operando'. (2Te 2:7) Havia os que tentavam ensinar doutrinas falsas, sendo que alguns destes até mesmo perturbavam a congregação tessalonicense, o que, em parte, induziu-o a escrever-lhe a sua segunda carta. Havia anticristos quando João escreveu suas cartas, e, sem dúvida, já antes disso. João falou da "última hora" do período apostólico, e disse: "Assim como ouvistes que vem o anticristo, já está havendo agora muitos anticristos . . . Saíram do nosso meio, mas não eram dos nossos; pois, se tivessem sido dos nossos, teriam permanecido conosco. Mas, saíram para que se mostrasse que nem todos são dos nossos." — 1Jo 2:18, 19; veja ANTICRISTO.

Revelado. Depois da morte dos apóstolos, este "homem que é contra a lei" revelou abertamente a sua hipocrisia religiosa e os seus ensinos falsos. (2Te 2:3, 6, 8) Segundo as palavras de Paulo, este "homem" obteria muito poder, operando sob o controle de Satanás, realizando "toda obra poderosa, e sinais e portentos mentirosos". Os enganados pela operação deste composto "homem que é contra a lei" são mencionados como "os que estão perecendo [literalmente: "destruindo-se"], em retribuição por não terem aceito o amor da verdade, para que fossem salvos". O apóstolo mostra que ficam "acreditando na mentira" e serão todos "julgados, porque não acreditaram na verdade, mas tiveram prazer na injustiça". (2Te 2:9-12; veja Int.) Portanto, o julgamento é condenatório. — Veja RESSURREIÇÃO (Pecado contra o espírito santo).

Destruído. Este composto e hipócrita "homem que é contra a lei" há de ser eliminado pelo Senhor Jesus "com o espírito de sua boca" e reduzido a nada "pela manifestação de sua presença". O aniquilamento deste opositor iníquo de Deus será prova visível, concreta, de que o Senhor Jesus Cristo está assentado como Juiz e atua como tal. Não julgará segundo as suas próprias normas, de modo que a destruição "com o espírito de sua boca" evidentemente significa ser ela expressão do julgamento de Jeová contra esta classe iníqua de pessoas. — 2Te 2:8; compare isso com Re 19:21, referente à "longa espada . . . que se estendia da sua boca".

HOMEM QUE VIOLA A LEI. Veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

HOMENAGEM. Ato de se curvar, ajoelhar, prostrar ou de fazer outro gesto para indicar submissão; ou simplesmente demonstrar respeito. Em muitos casos, traduz adequadamente a palavra hebraica hish·ta·hhawáh e a grega pro·sky·né·o.

Hish·ta·hhawáh significa, basicamente, "curvar-se". (Gên 18:2) Curvar-se podia ser um ato de respeito ou deferência para com outro humano, tal como um rei (1Sa 24:8; 2Sa 24:20; Sal 45:11), o sumo sacerdote (1Sa 2:36), um profeta (2Rs 2:15) ou outra pessoa de autoridade (Gên 37:9, 10; 42:6; Ru 2:8-10), um parente mais idoso (Gên 33:1-6; 48:11, 12; Êx 18:7; 1Rs 2:19) ou mesmo para com estranhos, como expressão de cortesia (Gên 19:1, 2). Abraão curvou-se diante dos filhos cananeus de Hete, dos quais procurava comprar um lugar para sepultamento. (Gên 23:7) A bênção de Isaque sobre Jacó exigia que grupos nacionais e os próprios "irmãos" de Jacó se curvassem diante dele. (Gên 27:29; compare isso com 49:8.) Quando alguns homens passaram a curvar-se diante do filho de Davi, Absalão, este agarrava-os e beijava-os, evidentemente para promover suas ambições políticas por ostensivamente colocar-se no nível deles. (2Sa 15:5, 6) Mordecai negou-se a se prostrar diante de Hamã, não porque considerasse a prática errada em si, mas, sem dúvida, porque esta alta autoridade persa era por ascendência um amalequita amaldiçoado. — Est 3:1-6.

À base dos exemplos acima citados, é evidente que este termo hebraico, em si, não necessariamente tem sentido religioso ou significa adoração. Não obstante, num grande número de casos, é usado com respeito a adoração, quer do verdadeiro Deus (Êx 24:1; Sal 95:6; Is 27:13; 66:23), quer de deuses falsos. (De 4:19; 8:19; 11:16) As pessoas talvez se curvassem em oração a Deus (Êx 34:8; Jó 1:20, 21) e frequentemente se prostravam ao receber alguma revelação da parte de Deus, ou alguma expressão ou evidência de Seu favor, mostrando assim sua gratidão, reverência e submissão humilde à Sua vontade. — Gên 24:23-26, 50-52; Êx 4:31; 12:27, 28; 2Cr 7:3; 20:14-19; compare isso com 1Co 14:25; Re 19:1-4.

Curvar-se diante de humanos como ato de respeito era admissível, mas curvar-se diante duma deidade que não fosse Jeová Deus era proibido por ele. (Êx 23:24; 34:14) De modo similar, curvar-se em adoração diante de imagens religiosas ou diante de alguma coisa criada positivamente era condenado. (Êx 20:4, 5; Le 26:1; De 4:15-19; Is 2:8, 9, 20, 21) Assim, nas Escrituras Hebraicas, quando certos servos de Jeová se prostraram diante de anjos, só fizeram isso para mostrar que os reconheciam como representantes de Deus, não para lhes prestar homenagem como deidades. — Jos 5:13-15; Gên 18:1-3.

Homenagem nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. O termo grego pro·sky·né·o corresponde de perto ao hebraico hish·ta·hhawáh, quanto a transmitir a ideia tanto de homenagem a criaturas como de adoração a Deus ou a uma deidade. A maneira de expressar a homenagem talvez não se destaque tanto em pro·sky·né·o como em hish·ta·hhawáh, em que o termo hebraico transmite vividamente a ideia de se prostrar ou curvar. Os peritos derivam o termo grego do verbo ky·né·o, "beijar". O uso da palavra nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs (como também na tradução grega, a Septuaginta, das Escrituras Hebraicas) mostra que aqueles a cujas ações se aplicava este termo prostravam-se ou curvavam-se. — Mt 2:11; 18:26; 28:9.

Assim como se dá com o termo hebraico, tem de se considerar o contexto para determinar se pro·sky·né·o se refere à homenagem exclusivamente na forma de profundo respeito, ou a uma homenagem na forma de adoração religiosa. Quando se refere diretamente a Deus (Jo 4:20-24; 1Co 14:25; Re 4:10) ou a deuses falsos e seus ídolos (At 7:43; Re 9:20), é evidente que a homenagem vai além da aceitável e costumeiramente prestada a homens e passa para o campo da adoração. Assim, também, quando não se declara o objeto da homenagem, entende-se que ela é dirigida a Deus. (Jo 12:20; At 8:27; 24:11; He 11:21; Re 11:1) Por outro lado, a ação daqueles da "sinagoga de Satanás", induzidos a "vir e prestar homenagem" diante dos pés dos cristãos, claramente não é adoração. — Re 3:9.

A homenagem prestada a um rei humano é encontrada na ilustração de Jesus em Mateus 18:26. É evidente que este era o tipo de homenagem prestado pelos astrólogos ao menino Jesus, "que nasceu rei dos judeus", homenagem que Herodes professou estar interessado em prestar, e que os soldados em zombaria prestaram a Jesus antes de este ser pregado na estaca. Eles claramente não consideravam Jesus como Deus ou como deidade. (Mt 2:2, 8; Mr 15:19) Embora alguns tradutores usem a palavra "adorar" na maioria dos casos em que pro·sky·né·o descreve as ações das pessoas para com Jesus, a evidência não justifica que se lhe dê um sentido adicional. Antes, as circunstâncias que motiva-ram a homenagem correspondem bem de perto às que produziram a homenagem prestada a anteriores profetas e reis. (Compare Mt 8:2; 9:18; 15:25; 20:20, com 1Sa 25:23, 24; 2Sa 14:4-7; 1Rs 1:16; 2Rs 4:36, 37.) As próprias expressões dos envolvidos muitas vezes revelam que, embora claramente reconhecessem Jesus como representante de Deus, não lhe prestavam homenagem como Deus ou como deidade, mas sim como "Filho de Deus", o predito "Filho do homem", o Messias, dotado de autoridade divina. Em muitas ocasiões, a homenagem deles expressava gratidão por uma revelação divina ou evidência de favor, assim como a expressa em tempos anteriores. — Mt 14:32, 33; 28:5-10, 16-18; Lu 24:50-52; Jo 9:35, 38.

Ao passo que anteriores profetas e também anjos haviam aceito homenagem, Pedro impediu que Cornélio a prestasse a ele, e o anjo, ou anjos, da visão de João o impediu duas vezes de prestá-la, referindo-se a si mesmo como "coescravo" e concluindo com a exortação: "Adora a Deus [toi The·oi pro·ský·ne·son]." (At 10:25, 26; Re 19:10; 22:8, 9) Evidentemente, a vinda de Cristo introduzira novas relações, que afetavam as normas de conduta para com outros servos de Deus. Ele ensinara aos seus discípulos que "um só é o vosso instrutor, ao passo que todos vós sois irmãos . . . o vosso Líder é um só, o Cristo" (Mt 23:8-12), porque era nele que se cumpriam as figuras e os tipos proféticos, assim como o anjo dissera a João, que "dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o profetizar". (Re 19:10) Jesus era o Senhor de Davi, era maior do que Salomão, era o profeta maior do que Moisés. (Lu 20:41-43; Mt 12:42; At 3:19-24) Portanto, Pedro negou-se corretamente a deixar que Cornélio lhe atribuísse importância demais.

Assim, também, João, em virtude de ter sido declarado justo ou justificado por Deus como cristão ungido, chamado para ser filho espiritual de Deus e membro do Reino, estava numa relação diferente com o(s) anjo(s) de Revelação (Apocalipse), do que os israelitas para com os anjos que lhes apareceram anteriormente. O(s) anjo(s) evidentemente reconheceu(ram) esta mudança de relação quando rejeitou(ram) a homenagem de João. — Compare isso com 1Co 6:3; veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

Homenagem ao glorificado Jesus Cristo. Por outro lado, Cristo Jesus foi exaltado por seu Pai a uma posição secundária somente à de Deus, de modo que, "no nome de Jesus, se dobre todo joelho dos no céu, e dos na terra, e dos debaixo do chão, e toda língua reconheça abertamente que Jesus Cristo é Senhor, para a glória de Deus, o Pai". (Fil 2:9-11; compare isso com Da 7:13, 14, 27.) Hebreus 1:6 também mostra que até os anjos prestam homenagem ao ressuscitado Jesus Cristo. Muitas traduções deste texto traduzem aqui pro·sky·né·o como "adorar", ao passo que outros o vertem por 'curvar-se' ou 'prostrar-se' (AT; TEB) e 'prestar homenagem' (NE). Não importa o termo que seja usado em português, o original grego permanece o mesmo, e o entendimento do que os anjos prestam a Cristo tem de harmonizar-se com o restante das Escrituras. O próprio Jesus declarou enfaticamente a Satanás que "é a Jeová, teu Deus, que tens de adorar [uma forma de pro·sky·né·o] e é somente a ele que tens de prestar serviço sagrado". (Mt 4:8-10; Lu 4:7, 8) De maneira similar, o(s) anjo(s) disse(ram) a João que 'adorasse a Deus' (Re 19:10; 22:9), e esta injunção foi dada depois da ressurreição e exaltação de Jesus, mostrando que a questão não tinha mudado neste respeito. É verdade que o Salmo 97, evidentemente citado pelo apóstolo em Hebreus 1:6, se refere a Jeová Deus, como aquele diante de quem 'curvar-se', e, ainda assim, este texto foi aplicado a Cristo Jesus. (Sal 97:1, 7) No entanto, o apóstolo mostrara anteriormente que o ressuscitado Cristo é "o reflexo da . . . glória [de Deus] e a representação exata do seu próprio ser". (He 1:1-3) Portanto, se aquilo que entendemos como "adoração" é aparentemente dirigido pelos anjos ao Filho, então, na realidade, ela é dirigida por meio dele a Jeová Deus, o Governante Soberano, "Aquele que fez o céu, e a terra, e o mar, e as fontes das águas". (Re 14:7; 4:10, 11; 7:11, 12; 11:16, 17; compare isso com 1Cr 29:20; Re 5:13, 14; 21:22.) Por outro lado, a tradução 'curvar-se' ou 'prestar homenagem' (em vez de 'adorar') de modo algum está em desacordo com o idioma original, quer o hebraico do Salmo 97:7, quer o grego de Hebreus 1:6, porque essas maneiras de traduzir transmitem o sentido básico tanto de hish·ta·hhawáh como de pro·sky·né·o.

HOMICIDA. Veja ASSASSÍNIO (HOMICÍDIO); CIDADES DE REFÚGIO.

HONRA. O principal termo hebraico que denota "honra" é ka·vóhdh, que significa literalmente "peso". (Compare o uso de termos aparentados em 1Sa 4:18 e 2Sa 14:26.) Portanto, a pessoa honrada é tida como ponderosa, ou como tendo importância. Em grego, o substantivo ti·mé transmite o sentido de "honra", "estima", "valor", "preciosidade". De modo que o verbo ti·má·o também pode significar 'pôr um preço em' (Mt 27:9); o substantivo ti·mé pode ter o sentido de "preço", 'valor' (Mt 27:6; At 4:34); e o adjetivo tí·mi·os pode significar "estimado", 'precioso'. — At 5:34; 20:24; 1Co 3:12.

Jeová Deus e Seu Filho. Por Jeová Deus ser Criador e Soberano, ele merece honra, reverência ou respeito. (1Ti 1:17; He 3:3, 4; Re 4:9-11) As pessoas o honram por fazer o que lhe agrada, assim como o Filho dele sempre fazia. (Jo 8:29, 49)

Enquanto vigorava o pacto da Lei, os israelitas podiam honrar a Jeová por apresentar o melhor que possuíam em sacrifício. — Pr 3:9; Mal 1:6-8.

A mera observância formalística de maneiras ostensivas de adoração não é verdadeira honra prestada ao Todo-Poderoso. Precisa haver também verdadeiro amor pelos modos de agir de Jeová e o desejo de coração de fazer a Sua vontade. Isto era o que faltava entre os líderes religiosos do judaísmo, no tempo do ministério terrestre de Jesus. — Mr 7:6; Is 29:13.

Jesus Cristo deu o exemplo perfeito de honrar seu Pai por cumprir a vontade Dele sem falha, a ponto de depor a sua vida em sacrifício. (Mt 26:39; Jo 10:17, 18) Por se deleitar em fazer a vontade do Pai, seu Pai o honrou por reconhecê-lo como Seu Filho amado e aprovado. (2Pe 1:17; Mt 17:5) Depois de Jesus terminar sua carreira terrestre, Deus conferiu ao seu Filho Jesus honra e dignidade muito maiores do que este tivera antes de se tornar homem. (Fil 2:9-11) O caso de Jesus Cristo ilustra como o Altíssimo honrará a todos os que O honrarem, reconhecendo-os como Seus servos aprovados e abençoando-os além de medida. — 1Sa 2:30.

Visto que foi Jeová Deus quem enalteceu tão altamente seu Filho, todos os que se recusarem a reconhecer Jesus Cristo como o imortal Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores desonram o Pai. Por causa do que o Filho é e o que tem realizado, ele merece honra e leal apoio. (Jo 5:23; 1Ti 6:15, 16; Re 5:11-13) Todos os que desejam ser honrados pelo Filho, como seus discípulos aprovados, têm de imitar seu exemplo e aderir fielmente ao seu ensino. — Ro 2:7, 10.

Outros a Serem Honrados. Ao passo que Jeová Deus e seu Filho merecem a maior honra, existem entre os humanos relações que também exigem honra. Os filhos devem honrar os pais por ser obedientes. (De 5:16; Ef 6:1, 2) Quando os pais passam necessidade, seus descendentes adultos podem dar-lhes honra por retribuir voluntariamente com ajuda material. (Mt 15:4-6; 1Ti 5:3, 4) Ao passo que o marido deve honrar a esposa por tratá-la com amor e dignidade, a esposa deve honrar o marido por estar em sujeição a ele e mostrar-lhe profundo respeito. (1Pe 3:1-7) Os anciãos que trabalham arduamente no ensino devem receber "dupla honra", a qual evidentemente inclui ajuda material. (1Ti 5:17, 18) Os escravos cristãos devem honrar seus amos por desincumbir-se respeitosamente das tarefas que recebem. (1Ti 6:1, 2) A governantes e outros em autoridade deve-se dar a honra, ou o respeito, que seu cargo exige. (Ro 13:7) Sem consideração da sua posição na vida, pessoas de todo tipo, por serem parte da criação de Deus, merecem ser honradas. — 1Pe 2:17.

Os cristãos devem tomar a dianteira em dar honra a concrentes. (Ro 12:10) Isto inclui não buscar a sua própria vantagem, mas a dos outros. (1Co 10:24) Requer estar disposto a realizar tarefas humildes. (Lu 22:26; Jo 13:12-17) Pode-se manter tal espírito excelente por se lembrar de que todo crente é precioso para Deus e que os cristãos precisam uns dos outros, assim como todo membro do corpo humano depende dos outros. — 1Co 12:14-27.

Embora não estejam à procura de glória, os cristãos se preocupam corretamente em manter uma posição honrosa perante Jeová Deus e o Filho dele. Para tanto, precisam precaver-se de associações que corrompem e resistir aos desejos da carne pecaminosa. A pessoa só continuará como vaso honroso para o uso de Deus se se mantiver moral e espiritualmente pura. (1Te 4:3-8; 2Ti 2:20-22; He 13:4) Este é o âmago da verdadeira honra.

HOR [hebr.: Hor ha·hár, "Hor, o Monte"].

1. Monte perto de Moserá, na fronteira de Edom, onde Arão faleceu pouco antes da entrada de Israel na Terra da Promessa. Enquanto a assembleia de Israel observava, Arão, Moisés e Eleazar, filho de Arão, subiram ao monte Hor. No cume do monte, Moisés despiu Arão das vestes sacerdotais e vestiu com elas Eleazar. Depois disso, Arão morreu, e Moisés e Eleazar provavelmente o enterraram ali. — Núm 20:22-29; De 32:50; compare isso com De 10:6.

Segundo o historiador Josefo, o monte Hor era um dos montes altos que rodeavam a cidade edomita de Petra. (Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), IV, 82, 83 [iv, 7]) A tradição o relaciona com Jebel Harun (que significa "Monte de Arão"), um monte de arenito vermelho, de dois picos, com a altitude de uns 1.460 m e situado a menos de 5 km ao OSO de Petra. Todavia, o Jebel Harun não parece enquadrar-se na descrição bíblica da vinda de Israel de Cades (Cades-Barneia) ao monte Hor, "nos limites da terra de Edom". (Núm 33:37-39, 41) O Jebel Harun não fica na fronteira de Edom, mas dentro daquele país. De modo que, para Israel chegar a este lugar tradicional, teria significado invadir o território de Edom. Mas isto não poderia ter ocorrido, visto que se havia negado aos israelitas a passagem por Edom. (Núm 20:14-22; De 2:5-8) Portanto, muitos peritos favorecem como possível identificação o isolado e alcantilado Jebel Madurah de calcário branco (Har Zin [Hor Ha Har]), um monte a uns 40 km ao SO do Mar Morto, e a uns 60 km ao ENE de Cades.

2. Monte que marca a extremidade setentrional de Canaã. (Núm 34:7, 8) Não se pode fazer uma identificação certa. Alguns peritos acreditam que este monte Hor (hebr.: Hor ha·hár) talvez seja o monte Hermom. Outros sugerem que possivelmente designa toda a cordilheira do Líbano, ou um pico proeminente desta.

HORA. A palavra grega hó·ra (hora) é usada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs para indicar um período curto; tempo fixo, definido; ou uma divisão do dia. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas não se encontra nenhum termo hebraico para "hora". Os antigos israelitas talvez dividissem o período diurno em quatro partes. (Ne 9:3) Em vez de designar certas horas, as Escrituras Hebraicas usam as expressões "manhã", "meio-dia", "noitinha" e "anoitecer" como marcadores de tempo para os eventos. (Gên 24:11; 29:23; De 28:29; 1Rs 18:26) Também, mais precisas talvez fossem indicações tais como "assim que o sol raiar" (Jz 9:33), a "viração do dia" (Gên 3:8), o "calor do dia" (Gên 18:1; 1Sa 11:11) e o "pôr do sol" (Jos 10:27; Le 22:7). O sacrifício da Páscoa devia ser abatido "entre as duas noitinhas", que parece significar o período após o pôr do sol e antes do escurecimento. (Êx 12:6) Este conceito é apoiado por alguns peritos, bem como pelos judeus caraítas e os samaritanos, embora os fariseus e os rabinistas achassem que se referia ao tempo entre o começo da declinação do sol e o pôr do sol propriamente dito.

Deus ordenou que se fizessem as ofertas queimadas no altar "pela manhã" e "entre as duas noitinhas". Junto com estas, fazia-se uma oferta de cereais. (Êx 29:38-42) De modo que expressões tais como "a ascensão da oferta de cereais", quando o contexto indicava a manhã ou a noitinha (como em 1Rs 18:29, 36), e o "tempo da oferenda da noitinha" (Da 9:21), se referiam a períodos bem específicos.

A noite era dividida em três períodos chamados de vigílias. Faz-se menção das "vigílias da noite" (Sal 63:6), "da vigília média da noite" (Jz 7:19) e da "vigília da madrugada" (Êx 14:24; 1Sa 11:11).

Dia de 24 Horas. Tem-se creditado ao Egito a divisão do dia em 24 horas, 12 para a luz do dia e 12 para a noite. Estas horas nem sempre teriam a mesma duração, de dia a dia, por causa da mudança das estações, tornando as horas da luz diurna mais compridas e as horas noturnas mais curtas no verão (exceto no equador). Nossa atual divisão do dia em 24 horas de 60 minutos cada uma resulta duma combinação do modo egípcio de calculá-las e da matemática babilônica, um sistema sexagesimal (baseado no número 60). O costume de contar o dia da meia-noite até a outra meia-noite, eliminando-se assim a variação sazonal na duração das horas, foi um desenvolvimento posterior, talvez romano.

No Primeiro Século. No primeiro século EC, os judeus costumavam contar 12 horas para o dia, começando com o nascer do sol. Jesus disse: "Não há doze horas de luz no dia?" (Jo 11:9) Naturalmente, isto fazia com que as horas do dia variassem em duração de um dia para outro, segundo a estação; as únicas vezes em que eram da mesma duração que as nossas horas era na época dos equinócios. Evidentemente, esta pequena variação, que não seria tão grande na Palestina, não criava grandes inconveniências. O início do dia corresponderia a cerca das 6 horas da manhã do nosso horário. Na ilustração dos trabalhadores no vinhedo, Jesus fez menção da 3.ª hora, da 6.ª, 9.ª, 11.ª, e, uma hora mais tarde, do "anoitecer" (que seria a 12.ª hora). Estas horas corresponderiam às nossas 8 às 9 horas, 11 horas até o meio-dia, 14 às 15 horas, 16 às 17 horas, e 17 às 18 horas, respectivamente. (Mt 20:3, 5, 6, 8, 12; At 3:1; 10:9) A meia-noite e o "canto do galo" são também designações de tempo usadas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Mr 13:35; Lu 11:5; At 20:7; 27:27; veja GALO, CANTO DO.) Sob o domínio romano, os judeus parecem ter adotado a divisão romana da noite em quatro vigílias, ao invés das três divisões anteriores. — Lu 12:38; Mt 14:25; Mr 6:48.

Aparente Discrepância. Alguns têm apontado o que parece ser uma discrepância entre a declaração de Marcos 15:25, que diz que Jesus foi pregado na estaca na "terceira hora", e a de João 19:14, que indica que foi "cerca da sexta hora" que acabou o julgamento final de Jesus perante Pilatos. João tinha acesso ao relato de Marcos, e ele certamente poderia ter repetido a hora indicada por Marcos. Portanto, João deve ter tido um motivo para declarar a hora de modo diferente de Marcos.

Qual é o motivo desta aparente discrepância? Fizeram-se uma variedade de sugestões. Nenhuma delas satisfaz todas as objeções. Simplesmente não temos informações suficientes para explicar com alguma certeza a razão desta diferença entre os relatos. Pode ser que a referência de Marcos, ou a de João, à hora era parentética, não em ordem cronológica. Qualquer que seja o caso, uma coisa é certa: Ambos os escritores foram inspirados por espírito santo.

Os Evangelhos sinópticos indicam claramente que, na sexta hora, ou ao meio-dia, Jesus já estava pendurado na estaca por tempo suficiente para os soldados lançarem sortes sobre a sua roupagem e os principais sacerdotes, os escribas, os soldados e outros transeuntes falarem dele de modo ultrajante. Indicam também que Jesus expirou por volta das 15 horas. (Mt 27:38-45; Mr 15:24-33; Lu 23:32-44) A coisa realmente importante é lembrar que Jesus morreu por nossos pecados em 14 de nisã de 33 EC. — Mt 27:46-50; Mr 15:34-37; Lu 23:44-46.

Outros Usos. A palavra hó·ra é frequentemente usada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs para significar "imediatamente" ou em muito pouco tempo. A mulher que tocou na orla da roupa exterior de Jesus ficou boa "daquela hora em diante". (Mt 9:22) "Hora" pode referir-se a um momento especial ou importante de tempo não especificado com exatidão, ou ao ponto de partida deste tempo. Por exemplo, Jesus disse: "Acerca daquele dia e daquela hora ninguém sabe" (Mt 24:36), "vem a hora em que todo aquele que vos matar imaginará que tem prestado um serviço sagrado a Deus" (Jo 16:2), e, "vem a hora em que não vos falarei mais em comparações" (Jo 16:25).

Outrossim, "hora" talvez indicasse um período geral do dia, como quando os discípulos falaram a Jesus sobre a multidão de pessoas que o havia seguido a um lugar solitário: "O lugar é solitário e a hora já está bem avançada; despede as multidões." — Mt 14:15; Mr 6:35.

Uso Figurado ou Simbólico. O termo "hora", usado em sentido simbólico ou figurado, significa um período relativamente curto. Jesus disse à multidão que viera contra ele: "Esta é a vossa hora e a autoridade da escuridão." (Lu 22:53) Diz-se que os dez chifres na fera cor de escarlate representam dez reis que haviam de receber autoridade como reis por "uma hora" junto com a fera. (Re 17:12) Diz-se a respeito de Babilônia, a Grande: "Numa só hora chegou o teu julgamento!" (Re 18:10) Em harmonia com as palavras de Jesus em Mateus 13:25, 38, a respeito do trigo e do joio, com os avisos de Paulo em Atos 20:29 e 2 Tessalonicenses 2:3, 7, a respeito da vindoura apostasia, e com a declaração de Pedro em 2 Pedro 2:1-3, João, o último apóstolo sobrevivente, bem que podia dizer: "Criancinhas, é a última hora, e, assim como ouvistes que vem o anticristo, já está havendo agora muitos anticristos; sendo que deste fato obtemos o conhecimento de que é a última hora." Deveras, o tempo era muito curto, "a última hora", a parte final do período apostólico, após o que surgiria plenamente a apostasia. — 1Jo 2:18.

Conforme registrado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 8:1-4, o apóstolo João viu, durante um silêncio que houve no céu por "cerca de meia hora", um anjo com incenso que oferecia junto com as orações de todos os santos. Isto faz lembrar o costume no templo em Jerusalém "na hora de se oferecer incenso". (Lu 1:10) Alfred Edersheim, em The Temple (O Templo; 1874, p. 138), apresenta o tradicional conceito judaico desta "hora": "O sacerdote que oferecia incenso e os seus ajudantes subiam devagar os degraus até o Santo . . . A seguir, um dos ajudantes reverentemente espalhava brasas sobre o altar de ouro; o outro arrumava o incenso; e, então o principal sacerdote oficiante era deixado a sós dentro do Santo, para aguardar o sinal do presidente para queimar o incenso. . . . Quando o presidente dava a palavra de ordem, que marcava que 'chegara a hora do incenso', 'toda a multidão das pessoas lá fora' se retirava do pátio interno e se prostrava diante do Senhor, estendendo as mãos em oração silenciosa. Este é o período mais solene, quando em todos os vastos edifícios do Templo havia um profundo silêncio na multidão adorante, ao passo que dentro do próprio santuário o sacerdote deitava o incenso sobre o altar de ouro, e a nuvem de 'odores' ascendia perante o Senhor."

HORÃO. Rei de Gezer; um dos 31 reis derrotados pelos israelitas sob a liderança de Josué, durante a conquista da Terra da Promessa. Horão e toda a sua hoste foram mortos quando foram ajudar a Laquis, na época da campanha de Josué contra esta cidade. — Jos 10:33; 12:7, 8, 12, 24.

HOREBE [Seco; Deserto]. "O monte do verdadeiro Deus", aparentemente o monte Sinai. (1Rs 19:8; Êx 33:6) De modo geral, porém, Horebe parece designar a região montanhosa em torno do monte Sinai, também chamada de ermo de Sinai. — De 1:6, 19; 4:10, 15; 5:2; 9:8; 18:16; 29:1; 1Rs 8:9; 2Cr 5:10; Sal 106:19; Mal 4:4; compare isso com Êx 3:1, 2; At 7:30; veja SINAI N.º 1 e 2.

Em Horebe, o anjo de Jeová apareceu a Moisés no meio dum espinheiro em fogo, comissionando-o a guiar Israel para fora do Egito. (Êx 3:1-15) Mais tarde, enquanto estavam em Refidim, os israelitas libertos se queixaram de não ter água para beber. Em vista disso, sob a direção de Jeová, Moisés, acompanhado por alguns dos anciãos de Israel, foi até uma rocha em Horebe, que era evidentemente a região montanhosa de Horebe, e golpeou a rocha com o seu bastão. Começou a sair milagrosamente água desta rocha. (Êx 17:1-6; compare isso com Sal 105:41.) Séculos mais tarde, o profeta Elias fugiu de diante da vingativa Rainha Jezabel para Horebe, pelo caminho de Berseba. — 1Rs 19:2-8.

HORÉM [possivelmente: Pequena Rocha Fendida]. Cidade fortificada de Naftali. (Jos 19:35, 38, 39) Sua localização é hoje desconhecida.

HORESA [Lugar Arborizado]. Lugar no ermo de Zife, onde Davi se escondeu de Saul. Foi também ali que Jonatã reconheceu Davi como o próximo rei de Israel, e os dois homens 'concluíram um pacto' de apoio mútuo. (1Sa 23:15-19) Horesa é provisoriamente identificado com a atual Khirbet Khoreisa, a uns 9 km ao SSE de Hébron.

HOREU. Povo que habitava as montanhas de Seir nos tempos patriarcais. Na Bíblia, é chamado de "os filhos de Seir, o horeu". (Gên 36:20, 21, 29, 30) Os edomitas "passaram a desapossá-los e a aniquilá-los de diante de si, e passaram a morar no seu lugar". — De 2:12, 22.

Em Gênesis 36:2, no texto massorético, o avô de uma das esposas de Esaú é chamado de "Zibeão, o heveu". Nos versículos 20 e 24 , porém, mostra-se ser ele descendente de Seir, o horeu. "Horeu" pode apenas significar "habitante de caverna", do hebraico hhor ("buraco"). Isto tornaria Zibeão um heveu, habitante de caverna.

Em Josué 9:7, a Septuaginta grega chama os gibeonitas de "chorreanos" (horeus) em vez de "heveus", mas isto aparentemente é um erro, pelo fato de que os gibeonitas pertenciam a uma das sete nações cananeias devotadas à destruição (o que não se dava com os horeus). O texto massorético usa "heveus". — Jos 9:22-27; De 7:1, 2.

Hurritas. Muitos dos hodiernos peritos acreditam atualmente que os horeus eram realmente um povo a quem chamam de hurritas (ou: hurrianos). Esta conclusão baseia-se principalmente em similaridades linguísticas, em especial nas similaridades em nomes próprios em tabuinhas antigas, descobertas em tempos recentes numa ampla região que se estende desde a atual Turquia até a Síria e a Palestina. De modo que sustentam que os "hurritas" passaram a ser chamados de horeus. Mas, note os comentários de E. A. Speiser, em The World History of the Jewish People (A História Mundial do Povo Judaico; 1964, Vol. 1, p. 159). Primeiro ele apresenta o seguinte argumento:

"Os jebuseus bíblicos, também, mostraram ser hurritas [hurrianos] disfarçados. Eram de origem estrangeira (Juí. 19:12), descrição comprovada pelo nome pessoal jebuseu Awarnah (II Sam. 24:16, K^e^thib). Um governante de Jerusalém, ou Jebus, do século 14, tinha um nome que continha o elemento comprovadamente hurriano, Hepa. Assim, tanto os jebuseus como os heveus — duas das caracterizadas nações pré-israelitas — eram simples subdivisões do grupo hurriano, amplamente espalhado." Mas, então ele acrescenta:

"A conclusão acima, porém, precisa agora ser modificada em um aspecto significativo. A mudança exigida nada detrai da posição dos hurritas locais nos primitivos tempos bíblicos; mas, realmente influi na identificação automática dos hurritas com os horeus. . . . Não existe nenhuma evidência arqueológica de um povoado hurrita em Edom ou na Transjordânia. Segue-se, portanto, que o termo bíblico Hori — dum modo bem semelhante a Cus — deve ter sido usado em certa época com dois significados distintos e não relacionados."

Portanto, embora os peritos queiram usar um nome não encontrado na Bíblia, para aplicá-lo a um povo de ampla difusão, o qual, segundo eles, incluía os horeus, os heveus e os jebuseus, eles admitem que, por exemplo, não há nenhuma evidência duma população hurrita em Edom, onde moravam os horeus da Bíblia. Portanto, a Bíblia, ao chamar os habitantes pré-edomitas de Seir de "horeus", evidentemente restringe o nome àquele grupo em Seir.

HOR-HAGIDGADE. Lugar dum acampamento israelita no ermo. Conforme considerado sob o verbete BENE-JAACÃ, uma comparação de Números 33:31-33 com Deuteronômio 10:6, 7, parece indicar que os israelitas passaram por esta mesma região duas vezes, sendo Hor-Hagidgade chamado "Gudegodá" na segunda viagem. (Veja GUDEGODÁ.) A localização do lugar não pode ser determinada com precisão. A maioria dos peritos, porém, identifica provisoriamente Hor-Hagidgade (Gudegodá) com um lugar junto ao uádi Khadakhid, a uns 65 km ao NNO do golfo de ʽAqaba.

HORI.

1. Descendente de Seir, o horeu, através de Lotã. — Gên 36:20-22; 1Cr 1:39.

2. Simeonita, cujo filho Safate foi um dos 12 espias enviados por Moisés do ermo de Parã. — Núm 13:2, 3, 5.

HORMÁ [Devotamento à Destruição]. Cidade na parte sul do território de Judá (1Cr 4:30), mas é possível que o nome tenha sido aplicado a mais de um lugar, o outro talvez sendo uma localidade ou uma região.

Após o retorno dos 12 espias israelitas a Cades (Núm 13:26), os israelitas primeiro se recusaram a tentar a invasão de Canaã. Daí, depois de Jeová condenar a sua atitude rebelde e a sua falta de fé, decidiram tentar a invasão, contrário às Suas instruções. "Levantaram-se de manhã cedo" para subir ao lugar que Jeová havia mencionado. O registro fala de seu esforço de "subir ao cume do monte". (Núm 14:40) Todavia, a declaração deles sobre subir "ao lugar que Jeová mencionou" talvez indique a "região montanhosa dos amorreus", mencionada por Moisés na sua recapitulação dos eventos, em vez de a um monte específico. (De 1:19-21, 41-43) O registro não indica até onde foram, nem indica especificamente se as ações descritas ocorreram num só dia, ou não; mas o texto parece indicar eventos que ocorreram dentro de um espaço de tempo relativamente curto.

Qualquer que tenha sido o caso, o registro mostra que foram enfrentados por amalequitas e cananeus (em De 1:44, "amorreus", termo usado para se referir ao povo de Canaã em geral; veja Gên 48:22; Jos 24:15), e estes derrotaram os israelitas, desbaratando-os "até Hormá". (Núm 14:45) O relato em Deuteronômio 1:44 diz que foram desbaratados "em Seir, até Hormá". Seir era o território dos edomitas, e seu domínio parece então ter-se estendido para o O do uádi Arabah, na região do Negebe. (Veja Núm 20:14, 16; Jos 11:17.) Depois desta derrota, os israelitas retornaram a Cades. — De 1:45, 46.

Ao término do seu período de peregrinação, os israelitas avançaram novamente em direção a Canaã, e foram atacados pelo rei cananeu de Arade. (Veja ARADE N.º 2.) Novamente, não sabemos até onde o rei de Arade avançou em direção S, antes de travar combate com os israelitas, mas estes, após um voto a Jeová, obtiveram a vitória sobre este rei e 'devotaram suas cidades à destruição', chamando o lugar depois de "Hormá". (Núm 21:1-3; veja DEVOTADA, COISA.) Embora Moisés já tivesse usado este nome no relato anterior da vitória dos cananeus sobre Israel, é provável que fez isso com antecipação, pretendendo referir-se a ele mais adiante no registro, para mostrar a origem do nome. (Núm 14:45) Os israelitas, porém, não se estabeleceram então naquela região, mas contornaram Edom e se viraram para o N, por fim entrando em Canaã por cruzarem o Jordão ao N do Mar Morto. — Núm 21:4; 22:1.

Em Josué 12:14, "o rei de Hormá" é alistado ao lado do rei de Arade, entre os 31 reis derrotados por Josué. Parece pouco provável que isto se refira à vitória obtida anteriormente, enquanto Moisés ainda vivia e Josué servia como comandante militar, visto que estas vitórias são alistadas como obtidas depois de Israel cruzar o Jordão para Canaã. (Jos 12:7, 8) Embora esta vitória de Josué não seja especificamente descrita, talvez esteja incluída na declaração de Josué 10:40-42. Isto indicaria que, depois de Israel ter partido daquela região, a fim de contornar a terra de Edom, os cananeus repovoaram aquele território. Embora se mostre que Josué derrotou o rei de Hormá, o registro não declara que os israelitas ocuparam então a cidade de Hormá. — Compare isso com o caso de Gezer, em Jos 12:12; Jz 1:29.

A cidade foi incluída na lista das cidades "na extremidade da tribo dos filhos de Judá em direção ao termo de Edom, no sul". (Jos 15:21, 30) No entanto, ela foi designada à tribo de Simeão como cidade 'encravada' no território de Judá. (Jos 19:1, 2, 4; compare isso com 16:9.) Visto que o registro só mostra que Josué derrotou o rei de Hormá (sem mencionar a conquista da cidade), as tribos de Judá e de Simeão juntaram depois suas forças para 'golpear os cananeus que habitavam em Zefate e devotá-la à destruição. Por isso se chamou a cidade pelo nome de Hormá'. (Jz 1:17) Darem assim este nome à cidade talvez fosse simplesmente em confirmação ou reafirmação do nome já aplicado a ela anteriormente. O uso do nome Hormá lá no tempo de Moisés é considerado por alguns como referência a todo o distrito ou região, em vez de àquela única cidade de Zefate. Isto significa que o distrito inteiro estava proscrito, ou devotado à destruição, quando quer que esta destruição finalmente fosse executada. — Veja o Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), de C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch, 1973, Vol. II, Josué, Juízes, Rute, p. 256; veja também ZEFATE.

Não há certeza da localização de Hormá. Ofereceram-se diversas sugestões, mas, visto que todos os lugares sugeridos se encontram a mais de 60 km ao N de Cades-Barneia, da qual os israelitas inicialmente partiram "de manhã cedo" (Núm 14:40), e visto que se declara que Hormá é o ponto até o qual foram desbaratados na derrota, evidentemente fugindo de volta para Cades, essas posições tanto ao N dificilmente se ajustariam ao relato bíblico.

Embora Hormá, no tempo de Davi, ainda fosse cidade simeonita, foi um dos lugares que ele visitou durante o seu exílio como fugitivo e uma das cidades à qual depois mandou presentes. — 1Sa 30:26-31; 1Cr 4:24, 28-31.

HORONAIM [possivelmente: Dois Buracos [isto é, cavernas]]. Lugar em Moabe que está incluído naqueles contra que se dirigia o julgamento de Jeová. (Is 15:1, 5; Je 48:1, 3, 5, 34) Não há certeza da sua localização exata. Todavia, o possível significado do seu nome tem levado alguns a identificar provisoriamente Horonaim com el-'Iraq (que significa "Caverna"), situada a uns 490 m abaixo do nível do planalto moabita e a uns 18 km ao L da extremidade meridional do Mar Morto. Horonaim talvez seja a "Hauronen" mencionada na Pedra Moabita como tomada em batalha por Mesa, o rei de Moabe.

HORONITA [De (Pertencente a) Bete-Horom ou Horonaim]. Designação aplicada a Sambalá, um dos homens que se opunham à obra de Neemias. (Ne 2:10, 19) Alguns peritos acham que Sambalá talvez procedesse da cidade moabita de Horonaim (Is 15:5; Je 48:3), e, em apoio disso, trazem à atenção ser ele mencionado junto com Tobias, o amonita, e Gesém, o árabe. Mas o ponto de vista geralmente preferido é que "horonita" provavelmente significa natural ou habitante de Bete-Horom. Tanto a Bete-Horom Alta como a Bete-Horom Baixa ficavam no território originalmente designado a Efraim. — Jos 16:1, 3, 5.

HORTELÃ [gr.: he·dý·o·smon]. Erva de cheiro forte, cuja única menção nas Escrituras é com referência ao escrupuloso cuidado tomado pelos escribas e fariseus em pagar o décimo da hortelã, ao passo que desconsideravam os assuntos mais importantes da Lei. (Mt 23:23; Lu 11:42) Diversas va-riedades de hortelã são encontradas na Palestina e na Síria, sendo a espécie mais comum a Mentha longifolia. É provável que a palavra grega he·dý·o·smon (literalmente: de cheiro agradável [doce]) não se restringia a determinada variedade, mas abrangia as diversas espécies conhecidas de hortelã.

Os caules da hortelã são quadrangulares, com folhas aos pares em lados opostos do caule. As flores pequenas, brancas, azuladas ou róseas, estão dispostas em cachos, quer em verticilos separados, quer em inflorescências terminais. Desde tempos antigos, a hortelã tem sido usada em remédios e para aromatizar alimentos; isto ocorre por causa do óleo fragrante contido nas folhas e nos caules desta planta.

HORTO. Veja JARDIM.

HOSA.

1. Porteiro merarita para a tenda em que Davi colocou a Arca do Pacto. (1Cr 16:1, 37, 38) Ele e seus filhos constituíam uma turma de porteiros designada para o Portão Salequete, ao O do santuário. — 1Cr 26:10-19.

2. Cidade em Aser, pelo visto, perto de Tiro, mas de outro modo desconhecida. — Jos 19:24, 29, 30.

HOSAMA [possivelmente uma forma abreviada do nome Jeosama, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"]. Um dos sete filhos nascidos ao Rei Joaquim (Jeconias) enquanto estava no exílio em Babilônia. — 1Cr 3:17, 18.

HOSPEDARIA. Em grego: pan·do·khei·on, que significa literalmente "lugar em que todos são recebidos ou acolhidos", quer dizer, onde viajantes podiam encontrar acomodações para si mesmos e para seus animais. As hospedarias antigas do Oriente Médio talvez se parecessem às construídas ali em tempos mais recentes. Estas costumam consistir numa praça murada, com apenas uma entrada. Ao longo dos muros, numa plataforma elevada, há quartos não mobiliados para abrigar os viajantes e os seus pertences, entrando-se neles pelo pátio interno. Os animais são deixados no pátio grande, que frequentemente dispõe dum poço num lugar central. Os hospedeiros dos tempos antigos supriam os viajantes de algumas provisões necessárias e cuidavam de pessoas deixadas aos seus cuidados, sendo compensados pelos seus serviços. — Lu 10:33-35.

HÓSPEDE. Veja HOSPITALIDADE.

HOSPITALIDADE. Recepção e acolhimento cordial e generoso de convidados ou de estranhos. "Hospitalidade" traduz a palavra grega fi·lo·xe·ní·a, que significa literalmente "amor a (afeição a, ou bondade para com) estranhos".

Nos Tempos Antigos. Nos tempos patriarcais, embora os egípcios e outros praticassem a hospitalidade, os semitas se destacavam mais por esta qualidade. Cuidar dum viajante era encarado como parte integrante da vida, e oferecia-se muita cortesia ao visitante, quer estranho, amigo, parente, quer convidado.

Aprendemos dos relatos bíblicos que era costume oferecer hospitalidade a um viajante. Ele era cumprimentado com um beijo, especialmente quando parente. (Gên 29:13, 14) Um membro da casa, usualmente um servo, lavava-lhe os pés (Gên 18:4), e alimentava-se e cuidava-se dos seus animais. (Gên 24:15-25, 29-33) Frequentemente, era convidado para passar a noite e às vezes até para ficar alguns dias. (Gên 24:54; 19:2, 3) O visitante era considerado como estando sob a proteção do dono da casa durante a sua estada. (Gên 19:6-8; Jz 19:22-24) Ao partir, talvez fosse acompanhado parte do caminho. — Gên 18:16.

A importância que se dava à hospitalidade é vista nas observações de Reuel, quando suas filhas lhe falaram sobre um viajante "egípcio" (na realidade, Moisés), que as havia ajudado a dar de beber ao seu rebanho. Reuel exclamou: "Mas onde está ele? Por que deixastes o homem para trás? Chamai-o, para que coma pão." — Êx 2:16-20.

Nas cidades. Pelos relatos bíblicos, torna-se evidente que, especialmente nas cidades, os não israelitas talvez nem sempre fossem hospitaleiros para com os israelitas. (Jz 19:11, 12) Também, nas cidades, provavelmente não se oferecia hospitalidade tão prontamente como nos lugares mais isolados. No entanto, certo levita, junto com seu ajudante e sua concubina, sentou-se depois do pôr do sol na praça pública de Gibeá, evidentemente esperando que se lhe oferecesse um lugar para pernoitar. Isto indica que a hospitalidade, mesmo nas cidades, era bastante comum. (Jz 19:15) Neste caso, o levita mencionou que tinha provisões para eles, bem como para os animais. (Jz 19:19) Ele só precisava de abrigo. Mas, a má atitude dos benjamitas que moravam nesta cidade tornava-a inóspita, conforme comprovado pelo que aconteceu depois. — Jz 19:26-28.

Para com servos de Deus. Embora geralmente se praticasse a hospitalidade, a hospitalidade excelente descrita nos relatos bíblicos sem dúvida, na maioria dos casos, se devia a que os que a ofereciam eram servos de Jeová. Especialmente marcante eram a hospitalidade e o respeito demonstrados para com os que eram profetas ou servos especiais de Deus. Abraão ficou de pé ao lado dos três anjos, enquanto eles comiam a refeição que lhes fornecera. Isto parece ter sido em sinal de respeito para com os homens que Abraão reconhecera serem representantes angélicos de Jeová. (Gên 18:3, 7, 8) E assim como Abraão "correu" para fazer preparativos para os seus convidados, Manoá mostrou muita prontidão em preparar alimentos para o homem que ele achava ser homem de Deus, mas que na realidade era um anjo. (Jz 13:15-18, 21) Certa mulher de destaque, de Suném, mostrou hospitalidade para com Eliseu, porque, conforme ela disse: "Ora, eis que bem sei que é um homem santo de Deus que está constantemente passando por nós." — 2Rs 4:8-11.

Condenada a falta de hospitalidade. Visto que os amonitas e os moabitas se negaram a oferecer hospitalidade à nação de Israel, quando esta se dirigia para a Terra da Promessa, e os moabitas até mesmo contrataram Balaão para invocar o mal sobre ela, Jeová decretou que nenhum amonita ou moabita podia ser admitido na congregação de Israel. (De 23:3, 4) Neste caso, não se tratava apenas de não demonstrar hospitalidade humanitária, mas era ódio a Deus e ao Seu povo que induziu os amonitas e os moabitas à inospitalidade e hostilidade.

Jeová, por meio do profeta Isaías, condenou o povo de Israel pela sua falta de hospitalidade, dizendo-lhes que jejuarem e se curvarem diante Dele não tinha nenhum valor quando ao mesmo tempo deixavam seus irmãos carecer de alimentos, roupa e abrigo. — Is 58:3-7.

No Primeiro Século EC. A prática da hospitalidade no primeiro século da Era Comum continuava de forma bem semelhante à que tinha sido exercida em tempos anteriores, embora as condições tivessem alterado um pouco a extensão em que era praticada. Os samaritanos e os judeus não mantinham boas relações, de modo que muitas vezes faltava a hospitalidade entre eles. (Jo 4:7-9; 8:48) Também, o domínio exercido por nações estrangeiras havia aumentado as inimizades, e as estradas rurais eram assediadas por assaltantes. Até mesmo algumas hospedarias eram dirigidas por homens desonestos e inóspitos.

Não obstante, entre os judeus, costumava-se praticar as mesmas cortesias para com o convidado como nos tempos antigos. Ele era cumprimentado com um beijo, ungia-se-lhe a cabeça com óleo e lavavam-se-lhe os pés. Nos banquetes, os convidados geralmente eram sentados segundo categoria e honra. — Lu 7:44-46; 14:7-11.

Para com os discípulos de Jesus. O Senhor Jesus Cristo, ao enviar os 12 e mais tarde os 70 a pregar em Israel, disse que eles seriam recebidos hospitaleiramente nos lares daqueles que apreciavam as boas novas pregadas por eles. (Mt 10:5, 6, 11-13; Lu 10:1, 5-9) Embora o próprio Jesus não tivesse "onde deitar a cabeça", era acolhido nos lares daqueles que o reconheciam como enviado por Deus. — Mt 8:20; Lu 10:38.

Paulo considerava como certo que seu irmão cristão, Filêmon, lhe ofereceria hospitalidade quando o visitasse depois de ser solto da prisão. Não era uma imposição a Filêmon, porque Paulo sabia, à base da associação passada com Filêmon, que este estaria mais do que disposto a fazer o que estivesse ao seu alcance. (Flm 21, 22) O apóstolo João, na sua carta escrita por volta de 98 EC, salientou que os membros da congregação cristã tinham a obrigação de ajudar os representantes viajantes enviados, "para que nos tornemos colaboradores na verdade". João também elogiou Gaio pela sua hospitalidade, dizendo que ele demonstrara este espírito para com os enviados que 'ainda por cima eram estranhos'. Quer dizer, Gaio não os conhecia antes, mas, apesar disso, dera-lhes acolhida cordial por causa do serviço que prestavam à congregação. — 3Jo 5-8.

Sinal do Verdadeiro Cristianismo. A hospitalidade genuína, de coração, é sinal do verdadeiro cristianismo. Depois do derramamento do espírito santo em Pentecostes de 33 EC, muitos cristãos recém-convertidos permaneceram em Jerusalém para aprender mais sobre as boas novas do Reino, antes de partirem para casa, nas diversas partes da Terra. Os cristãos que moravam em Jerusalém mostraram-lhes hospitalidade, acolheram-nos nos seus lares, e até mesmo venderam propriedades suas e consideraram todas as coisas como um bem comum. (At 2:42-46) Mais tarde, os apóstolos organizaram a distribuição de alimentos às viúvas necessitadas no seu meio. — At 6:1-6.

A hospitalidade é um requisito para os cristãos. Embora muitos tivessem sofrido severa perseguição e alguns tivessem sofrido o saque de seus bens, Paulo ordenou: "Não vos esqueçais da hospitalidade." (He 13:2; 10:34) Pedro mostrou que ela devia ser oferecida voluntariamente, dizendo: "Sede hospitaleiros uns para com os outros, sem resmungar." (1Pe 4:9; compare isso com 2Co 9:7.) Enfatizando a obrigação primária para com concrentes, Paulo escreveu que concristãos deviam fazer "o que é bom para com todos, mas especialmente para com os aparentados conosco na fé". — Gál 6:10.

A hospitalidade era uma das qualidades importantes exigidas daqueles que seriam designados como superintendentes nas congregações cristãs. (1Ti 3:2; Tit 1:7, 8) Também, Paulo instruiu Timóteo, superintendente em Éfeso, que as viúvas cristãs colocadas na lista para receber ajuda material da congregação fossem aquelas que 'tinham hospedado estranhos'. (1Ti 5:9, 10) Evidentemente, estas mulheres haviam aberto seus lares e os haviam colocado à disposição de ministros e missionários cristãos que visitavam ou serviam a congregação, embora antes disso muitos destes visitantes naturalmente lhes fossem "estranhos". Lídia era tal mulher. Ela era extraordinariamente hospitaleira, sendo que Lucas relata: "Ela simplesmente nos fez ir." — At 16:14, 15.

Prova de fé. O discípulo Tiago salienta que a hospitalidade é essencial como obra pela qual a pessoa demonstra sua fé. Ele diz: "Se um irmão ou uma irmã estiverem em nudez e lhes faltar alimento suficiente para o dia, contudo, alguém de vós lhes disser: 'Ide em paz, mantende-vos aquecidos e bem alimentados', mas não lhes derdes o necessário para os seus corpos, de que proveito é? Assim também a fé, se não tiver obras, está morta em si mesma." — Tg 2:14-17.

Bênçãos. As Escrituras, ao recomendarem a hospitalidade, salientam que são grandes as bênçãos espirituais colhidas pela pessoa hospitaleira. Paulo diz: "Não vos esqueçais da hospitalidade, porque por meio dela alguns, sem o saberem, hospedaram anjos." (He 13:2; Gên 19:1-3, 6, 7; Jz 6:11-14, 22; 13:2, 3, 8, 11, 15-18, 20-22) O próprio Jesus declarou o princípio: "Há mais felicidade em dar do que há em receber." — At 20:35.

Em expressão de apreço pela obra de Jesus, Mateus Levi deu um grande banquete para ele, e, por sua vez, foi abençoado por ouvir a resposta de Jesus às perguntas críticas dos fariseus, e por este adicionalmente contar uma das suas excelentes ilustrações. Usar Mateus a sua casa deste modo hospitaleiro deu aos cobradores de impostos e outros que Mateus conhecia a oportunidade de receberem um testemunho. — Lu 5:27-39.

Depois de Zaqueu ter oferecido hospitalidade a Jesus, por causa da sua fé, ele foi imensuravelmente abençoado ao ouvir Jesus dizer: "Neste dia entrou a salvação nesta casa." — Lu 19:5-10.

Numa profecia relativa ao tempo da sua volta na glória do Reino, Jesus disse que as pessoas seriam separadas, assim como ovelhas são separadas dos cabritos pelo pastor. Isto seria feito à base do tratamento dispensado aos "irmãos" dele, embora não vissem a Jesus com os seus olhos físicos. Aqueles que demonstrassem hospitalidade e bondade para com os "irmãos" de Cristo fariam isso por reconhecer que estes são irmãos de Cristo e filhos de Deus. (Mt 25:31-46) Em outra declaração, ele mostrou que não seria a mera hospitalidade humanitária que granjearia uma recompensa eterna da parte de Deus, mas sim a hospitalidade oferecida a profetas de Deus por serem reconhecidos como representantes de Deus, discípulos que pertencem a Cristo. — Mt 10:40-42; Mr 9:41, 42.

Quando Não Deve Ser Oferecida. A Bíblia diz aos cristãos que há alguns a quem não se deve oferecer hospitalidade. "Todo aquele que se adianta e não permanece no ensino do Cristo não tem Deus. . . . Se alguém se chegar a vós e não trouxer este ensino, nunca o recebais nos vossos lares, nem o cumprimenteis. Pois, quem o cumprimenta é partícipe das suas obras iníquas." (2Jo 9-11) Acolher a tal em casa ou confraternizar com ele seria perigoso para a espiritualidade da própria pessoa, e, na realidade, significaria tolerar o proceder dele. Desencaminharia outros e seria um vitupério para a congregação. Este princípio é expresso também em Romanos 16:17, 18; Mateus 7:15; 1 Coríntios 5:11-13.

Hospedarias e Pousadas. A antiga hospedaria, pelo visto, era pouco mais do que um lugar de abrigo para o viajante, oferecendo também espaço para os seus animais, de modo similar à chamada "caravançará". Talvez fosse numa pousada assim que os meios-irmãos de José pernoitaram na sua viagem de retorno do Egito para Canaã (Gên 42:27; 43:21), e onde o anjo apareceu a Zípora, esposa de Moisés. — Êx 4:24.

Parece que às vezes prostitutas mantinham pousadas. Raabe, a prostituta de Jericó, alojou os dois espiões enviados por Josué, e ela mostrou bondade e hospitalidade para com eles por escondê-los dos perseguidores deles. (Jos 2:1-13) Sansão pousou na casa duma prostituta em Gaza até a meia-noite, esperando para humilhar os filisteus por carregar com os portões da cidade. — Jz 16:1-3.

Algumas das hospedarias na Palestina, durante o primeiro século EC, evidentemente eram mais requintadas, talvez oferecendo não apenas abrigo, mas também comida e outros serviços, por um preço fixo. O hospitaleiro samaritano da parábola de Jesus, numa hospedaria, pagou do seu próprio bolso os cuidados dispensados ao homem ferido. — Lu 10:30-35.

O Convidado ou Hóspede. Nos tempos antigos, esperava-se que o convidado, ao passo que era tratado com extrema cortesia e honra, observasse certas convenções e requisitos. Por exemplo, era considerado um dos atos mais vis compartilhar o alimento de outro homem e depois traí-lo, ou causar-lhe dano. (Sal 41:9; Jo 13:18) O convidado não devia aproveitar-se do seu anfitrião, nem do grupo reunido, por tomar o assento de honra, ou o lugar de destaque, mas devia deixar a decisão disso para o anfitrião. (Lu 14:7-11) Tampouco devia tornar-se 'inconveniente' por ficar tempo demais no lar do anfitrião ou por visitá-lo com muita frequência. (Pr 25:17) Deve-se notar que Jesus sempre conferia bênçãos espirituais quando usufruía a hospitalidade do seu anfitrião. (Lu 5:27-39; 19:1-8) Por um motivo similar, ele disse aos seus discípulos que enviou, que, quando chegassem a uma cidade, ficassem no lar em que se lhes oferecesse hospitalidade e que não se estivessem "transferindo de casa em casa". Não deviam assim ficar procurando um lugar em que o dono da casa lhes pudesse oferecer mais conforto, entretenimento ou coisas materiais. — Lu 10:1-7; Mr 6:7-11.

O apóstolo Paulo, que viajou muito e que usufruiu hospitalidade da parte de muitos dos seus irmãos cristãos, mesmo assim não se tornou um fardo financeiro para nenhum deles. Grande parte do tempo ele trabalhava numa ocupação secular, e estabeleceu a lei: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." (2Te 3:7-12; 1Te 2:6) Por isso, Paulo tinha uma resposta para as acusações dos chamados superfinos apóstolos em Corinto, que o acusaram de se aproveitar dos cristãos da congregação ali. (2Co 11:5, 7-10) Ele podia jactar-se de lhes ter transmitido as boas novas sem custo nenhum, nem mesmo aceitando as coisas a que tinha direito como apóstolo e ministro de Deus. — 1Co 9:11-18.

Evite a Hospitalidade Hipócrita. Um aviso acerca de aceitar uma demonstração hipócrita de hospitalidade é dado em Provérbios 23:6-8: "Não te alimentes do alimento de alguém de olho não generoso [literalmente: "mau quanto ao olho"], nem te mostres almejante dos seus pratos gostosos. Pois ele é como alguém que estava calculando na sua alma. 'Come e bebe', ele te diz, mas o seu coração mesmo não está contigo. Vomitarás o teu bocado que comeste e terás desperdiçado as tuas palavras agradáveis." Não sendo do tipo generoso, mas que espera algo em troca pelo que dá, tal pessoa maquina contra você, convidando-o de maneira cordial, mas com segundas intenções. Por comer o alimento dele, e especialmente se almejar os pratos gostosos dele, a ponto de querer usufruí-los outra vez, você se colocará até certo ponto à mercê dele. Talvez ache depois difícil de recusar algum pedido dele, e poderá ficar envolvido em dificuldades. Depois se sentirá mal por ter comido com ele, e as palavras agradáveis que falou, esperando promover espiritualidade e uma amizade edificante, certamente terão sido desperdiçadas. — Veja Sal 141:4.

HOTÃO [Selo; Anel de Chancela].

1. Filho de Héber, da tribo de Aser (1Cr 7:30-32); provavelmente o Helém mencionado em 1 Crônicas 7:35.

2. Aroerita, cujos filhos, Sama e Jeiel, estão alistados entre os poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 44.

HOTIR [duma raiz que significa "mais que suficiente; superabundância"]. Um dos 14 filhos de Hemã, que serviram sob a direção de seu pai como músicos no santuário. No tempo de Davi, Hotir, seus filhos e seus irmãos constituíam a 21.ª turma dos 24 grupos que serviam como músicos. — 1Cr 25:1, 4-6, 28.

HUCOQUE [Gravado; Inscrito; Talhado].

1. Cidade fronteiriça de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 34) Ao passo que alguns acham que se encontra muito ao N e ao L, a atual Huqoq tem sido identificada com a antiga Hucoque. Este lugar fica a uns 7 km ao O da extremidade sententrional do mar da Galileia e dá vista para a fértil planície de Genesaré.

2. Evidentemente trata-se de Helcate, cidade fronteiriça no território de Aser, designada aos gersonitas, da tribo de Levi. — Jos 19:25; 21:31, 33; 1Cr 6:74, 75; veja HELCATE.

HUFÃO, HUFAMITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Hufão]. Também chamado Hupim; Hufão era "filho", provavelmente descendente posterior, de Benjamim, e cabeça ancestral dos hufamitas. — Gên 46:8, 21; Núm 26:39; veja HUPIM.

HUL. Filho de Arã. (Gên 10:23) No entanto, em 1 Crônicas 1:17, parece que Hul é alistado como filho de Sem. No Manuscrito Alexandrino e no manuscrito hebraico Kennicott 175, 1 Crônicas 1:17 reza como Gênesis 10:23, apresentando a frase "e os filhos de Arã" antes de alistar Uz, Hul, Géter e Más. De modo que a omissão das palavras "e os filhos de Arã", em 1 Crônicas 1:17, no texto massorético, talvez seja um erro de escriba. Mas, não necessariamente é assim; nas Escrituras, o termo "filhos" pode incluir netos e até mesmo descendentes posteriores. (Veja uma situação talvez comparável em 1Cr 1:4, onde Sem, Cã e Jafé não são apresentados como filhos de Noé, talvez porque seu parentesco com Noé era tão bem conhecido, que o escritor original achou desnecessário fazer tal identificação.)

Não se sabe ao certo qual a região povoada pelos descendentes de Hul. Josefo identifica Hul (Urus) como o fundador da Armênia. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 145 [vi, 4]) Outros sugeriram regiões na Mesopotâmia e em outras partes. Muitos preferem a região de Hula (Hulé), na vizinhança das águas bíblicas de Merom, ao N do mar da Galileia, visto que o nome Hul parece estar preservado em "Hula" e também em "Ulatha", uma região mencionada por Josefo. — Jewish Antiquities, XV, 360 (x, 3).

HULDA [forma feminina de Helede, que significa "Duração da Vida; Sistema de Coisas"; ou, possivelmente: "Espálace"]. Esposa de Salum; profetisa que morava em Jerusalém durante o reinado do fiel Rei Josias, de Judá.

Quando Josias ouviu a leitura do "próprio livro da lei", encontrado por Hilquias, o sumo sacerdote, durante a obra de restauração do templo, ele enviou uma delegação para indagar de Jeová. Esta dirigiu-se a Hulda, a qual, por sua vez, transmitiu a palavra de Jeová, que indicava que todas as calamidades decorrentes da desobediência, registradas no "livro", recairiam sobre aquela nação apóstata. Hulda acrescentou que Josias, por se ter humilhado perante Jeová, não contemplaria essa calamidade, mas que ele seria ajuntado a seus antepassados e levado ao seu cemitério em paz. — 2Rs 22:8-20; 2Cr 34:14-28.

Alguns consideram errada a profecia de Hulda, visto Josias ter morrido numa batalha desnecessária. (2Rs 23:28-30) No entanto, a "paz" em que Josias seria ajuntado ao seu cemitério obviamente é contrastada com "a calamidade" que sobreviria a Judá. (2Rs 22:20; 2Cr 34:28) Josias morreu antes da vinda desta calamidade em 609-607 AEC, quando os babilônios sitiaram e destruíram Jerusalém. Além disso, que a expressão 'ser ajuntado aos seus antepassados' não necessariamente exclui ter uma morte violenta em guerra é indicado pelo uso da expressão comparável 'deitar-se com os seus antepassados', que se refere tanto à morte em batalha como à morte não violenta. — Veja De 31:16; 1Rs 2:10; 22:34, 40.

HUMILDADE. Ausência de orgulho ou arrogância; despretensão. Não se trata duma fraqueza, mas dum estado mental agradável a Jeová.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, "humildade" deriva dum radical ('a·náh) que significa "ser afligido; ser humilhado; ser oprimido". Palavras derivadas deste radical são variadamente traduzidas por "humildade", "mansidão", "tribulação", e assim por diante. Mais dois verbos hebraicos que envolvem "humildade" são ka·ná' (literalmente: subjugar[-se]), e sha·fél (literalmente: ser ou tornar-se baixo). Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra ta·pei·no·fro·sý·ne é traduzida "humildade" e "humildade mental". Deriva das palavras ta·pei·nó·o, "rebaixar", e fren, "a mente".

Pode-se conseguir a condição de humildade por se raciocinar sobre a relação que se mantém com Deus e com o próximo conforme delineada na Bíblia, e depois praticar os princípios aprendidos. Uma palavra hebraica, hith·rap·pés, traduzida "vai humilhar-te", significa literalmente "pisoteia-te". Expressa bem a ação descrita pelo sábio escritor de Provérbios: "Filho meu, se tiveres prestado fiança pelo teu próximo, . . . se tiveres sido enlaçado pelas declarações da tua boca, . . . chegaste a ficar na palma da mão do teu próximo: Vai humilhar-te [pisotear-te] e arremete contra o teu próximo com importunações. . . . Livra-te." (Pr 6:1-5) Em outras palavras, deixe de lado o seu orgulho, reconheça seu erro, corrija os assuntos e procure o perdão. Jesus admoestou que a pessoa deve humilhar-se perante Deus, igual a uma criança, e que, em vez de tentar destacar-se, deve ministrar ou servir seus irmãos. — Mt 18:4; 23:12.

Ou, a pessoa talvez aprenda a humildade por ser rebaixada, humilhada pela experiência. Jeová disse aos de Israel que Ele os havia humilhado por fazer com que vagueassem 40 anos no ermo, a fim de pô-los à prova, para saber o que tinham no coração e para fazê-los saber que "o homem não vive somente de pão, mas que o homem vive de toda expressão da boca de Jeová". (De 8:2, 3) Muitos dos israelitas, sem dúvida, tiraram proveito desta dura experiência e adquiriram humildade através dela. (Veja Le 26:41; 2Cr 7:14; 12:6, 7.) Quando uma pessoa ou uma nação se recusa a se humilhar ou a aceitar disciplina que a torne humilde, então, no tempo devido, sofre humilhação. — Pr 15:32, 33; Is 2:11; 5:15.

Agrada a Deus. A humildade tem grande valor aos olhos de Jeová. Embora Deus não deva nada à humanidade, ele, em benignidade imerecida, está pronto para mostrar misericórdia e favor aos que se humilham diante dele. Tais pessoas mostram que não confiam em si mesmas, nem se jactam, mas se voltam para Ele e desejam fazer a vontade Dele. Conforme dizem os inspirados escritores cristãos Tiago e Pedro: "Deus opõe-se aos soberbos, mas dá benignidade imerecida aos humildes." — Tg 4:6; 1Pe 5:5.

Até mesmo aqueles que no passado praticaram coisas bem ruins, quando realmente se humilham diante de Jeová e lhe suplicam misericórdia, são ouvidos por Ele. O Rei Manassés, de Judá, por promover a adoração falsa no país, havia seduzido os habitantes de Judá e de Jerusalém "para fazerem pior do que as nações que Jeová aniquilara de diante dos filhos de Israel". Todavia, depois de Jeová ter permitido que Manassés fosse levado cativo ao rei da Assíria, ele "continuou a humilhar-se grandemente por causa do Deus de seus antepassados. E orava a Ele, de modo que se deixou suplicar por ele e ouviu seu pedido de favor, e restaurou-o a Jerusalém, ao seu reinado; e Manassés veio a saber que Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus". Manassés aprendeu assim a ser humilde. — 2Cr 33:9, 12, 13; compare isso com 1Rs 21:27-29.

Fornece Orientação Correta. Aquele que se humilha diante de Deus pode esperar receber a orientação de Deus. Esdras tinha uma pesada responsabilidade ao conduzir de Babilônia para Jerusalém mais de 1.500 homens, além dos sacerdotes, dos netineus, e das mulheres e das crianças. Além disso, levavam consigo uma grande quantidade de ouro e prata para o embelezamento do templo em Jerusalém. Eles precisavam de proteção durante a viagem, mas Esdras não queria pedir ao rei da Pérsia uma escolta militar e assim dar a entender que se estribava no poderio humano. Além disso, já dissera ao rei: “A mão de nosso Deus está sobre todos os que o procuram para o bem.” Assim, proclamou um jejum, para que o povo se humilhasse perante Jeová. Fizeram uma solicitação a Deus, e ele escutou e lhes deu proteção contra emboscadas inimigas em caminho, de modo que terminaram a viagem perigosa com bom êxito. (Esd 8:1-14, 21-32) O profeta Daniel, em exílio babilônico, foi altamente favorecido por Deus lhe enviar um anjo com uma visão, visto que Daniel se humilhara perante Deus na sua busca de orientação e entendimento. — Da 10:12.

A humildade guia a pessoa na vereda certa e a leva à glória, porque é Deus quem exalta este e rebaixa aquele. (Sal 75:7) “Antes da derrocada, o coração do homem é soberbo, e antes da glória há humildade.” (Pr 18:12; 22:4) Portanto, quem busca a glória pela soberba fracassará, assim como o Rei Uzias, de Judá, que se tornou presunçoso e ilicitamente usurpou deveres sacerdotais: “Assim que ficou forte, ensoberbeceu-se o seu coração a ponto de causar a ruína, de modo que agiu de maneira infiel contra Jeová, seu Deus, e entrou no templo de Jeová para queimar incenso sobre o altar do incenso.” Quando se enfureceu porque os sacerdotes o corrigiram, ele foi atacado de lepra. (2Cr 26:16-21) A falta de humildade desencaminhou a Uzias, resultando na sua queda.

Ajuda a Pessoa em Tempos de Adversidade. A humildade pode ajudar muito a pessoa a enfrentar o desafio da adversidade. Caso sobrevenha uma calamidade, a humildade habilitará a pessoa a resistir e a perseverar, bem como a continuar no serviço que presta a Deus. O Rei Davi sofreu muitas adversidades. Foi caçado como proscrito pelo Rei Saul. Mas, nunca se queixou de Deus, nem se enalteceu acima do ungido de Jeová. (1Sa 26:9, 11, 23) Quando pecou contra Jeová no caso que teve com Bate-Seba e foi mui severamente repreendido por Natã, profeta de Deus, ele se humilhou diante de Deus. (2Sa 12:9-23) Depois, quando certo benjamita chamado Simei começou a invocar publicamente o mal sobre Davi, e quando Abisai, oficial de Davi, quis matar o homem por tanto desrespeitar o rei, Davi demonstrou humildade. Replicou a Abisai: “Eis que meu próprio filho que saiu das minhas próprias entranhas está procurando a minha alma; e quanto mais agora um benjaminita! . . . Talvez Jeová veja com o seu olho e Jeová realmente me restitua a bondade em vez de sua invocação do mal neste dia.” (2Sa 16:5-13) Mais tarde, Davi recenseou o povo, contrário à vontade de Jeová. O relato conta: “E o coração de Davi começou a bater nele depois de ter contado o povo. Por conseguinte, Davi disse a Jeová: ‘Pequei muitíssimo naquilo que fiz. . . . Agi muito nesciamente.’” (2Sa 24:1, 10) Embora sofresse punição, Davi não foi destituído de ser rei; sua humildade contribuiu muito para ele ser restabelecido no favor de Jeová.

Uma Qualidade de Deus. O próprio Jeová Deus possui entre as suas qualidades a humildade. Não que haja qualquer inferioridade da sua parte, ou alguma submissão a outros. Antes, ele mostra humildade por exercer misericórdia e grande compaixão para com pecadores humildes. Só o fato de lidar ele até mesmo com pecadores e providenciar seu Filho como sacrifício pelos pecados da humanidade já é uma expressão de humildade. Jeová Deus tem permitido o que é mau por uns 6.000 anos e tem deixado surgir a humanidade, embora o pai dela, Adão, tivesse pecado. Por meio da benignidade imerecida, mostrou-se assim misericórdia com os descendentes de Adão, dando-lhes a oportunidade de obter vida eterna. (Ro 8:20, 21) Tudo isto, junto com outras qualidades excelentes de Deus, demonstra a Sua humildade.

O Rei Davi entendia e apreciava esta qualidade expressa na benignidade imerecida de Deus para com ele. Depois de Jeová o ter livrado da mão de todos os seus inimigos, ele cantou: “Tu me darás o teu escudo de salvação, e é a tua humildade que me engrandece.” (2Sa 22:36; Sal 18:35) Embora ele, na sua grande dignidade, esteja sentado no seu lugar exaltado no mais alto dos céus, ainda assim se pode dizer a respeito de Jeová: “Quem é semelhante a Jeová, nosso Deus, Aquele que faz a sua morada no alto? Ele condescende em olhar para o céu e para a terra, levantando o de condição humilde do próprio pó; ele ergue o pobre da própria cova de cinzas, para fazê-lo sentar-se com os nobres, com os nobres do seu povo.” — Sal 113:5-8.

A Humildade de Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo, quando esteve na terra, deu o maior exemplo de um servo humilde de Deus. Na noitinha antes da sua morte, Jesus cingiu-se com uma toalha, e lavou e enxugou os pés de cada um dos seus 12 apóstolos, algo que costumeiramente era realizado por serviçais e escravos. (Jo 13:2-5, 12-17) Ele dissera a seus discípulos: “Quem se enaltecer, será humilhado, e quem se humilhar, será enaltecido.” (Mt 23:12; Lu 14:11) O apóstolo Pedro, presente naquela noite, lembrou-se do excelente exemplo de Jesus em agir de acordo com as suas palavras. Mais tarde, admoestou concrentes: “Todos vós, . . . cingi-vos de humildade mental uns para com os outros . . . Humilhai-vos, portanto, sob a mão poderosa de Deus, para que ele vos enalteça no tempo devido.” — 1Pe 5:5, 6.

O apóstolo Paulo incentiva os cristãos a terem a mesma atitude mental que Jesus Cristo; ele aponta a posição elevada do Filho de Deus na sua existência pré-humana, nos céus, junto a seu Pai Jeová, sua disposição de se esvaziar, de assumir a forma de escravo e de vir a ser na semelhança dos homens. Paulo acrescenta: "Mais do que isso, quando [Jesus] se achou na feição de homem, humilhou-se e tornou-se obediente até à morte, sim, morte numa estaca de tortura." As palavras do próprio Jesus, sobre a recompensa da humildade, são rigorosamente provadas verdadeiras no seu próprio caso, conforme o apóstolo prossegue, dizendo: "Por esta mesma razão, também, Deus o enalteceu a uma posição superior e lhe deu bondosamente o nome que está acima de todo outro nome." — Fil 2:5-11.

Mais notável é que Cristo, mesmo em tal posição enaltecida, quando brandir "toda a autoridade no céu e na terra" para realizar a vontade de Deus com respeito à terra (Mt 28:18; 6:10), ainda terá a mesma humildade no fim do seu Reinado de Mil Anos. Neste respeito, as Escrituras nos dizem: "Quando todas as coisas lhe tiverem sido sujeitas, então o próprio Filho também se sujeitará Àquele que lhe sujeitou todas as coisas, para que Deus seja todas as coisas para com todos." — 1Co 15:28.

Jesus Cristo disse a respeito de si mesmo: "Sou de temperamento brando e humilde de coração." (Mt 11:29) Quando se apresentou ao povo de Jerusalém como seu Rei, cumpriu a profecia que dizia a respeito dele: "Eis que vem a ti o teu próprio rei. Ele é justo, sim, salvo; humilde, e montado num jumento, sim, num animal plenamente desenvolvido, filho de jumenta." (Za 9:9; Jo 12:12-16) Na sua enaltecida posição celestial, quando ele avança contra os inimigos de Deus, dá-se-lhe profeticamente a ordem: "No teu esplendor prossegue ao bom êxito; cavalga na causa da verdade, e da humildade, e da justiça." (Sal 45:4) Portanto, os humildes podem regozijar-se, mesmo que talvez tenham sido esmagados e maltratados pelos orgulhosos e soberbos. Podem derivar consolo das palavras: "Procurai a Jeová, todos os mansos da terra, que tendes praticado a Sua própria decisão judicial. Procurai a justiça, procurai a mansidão. Provavelmente sereis escondidos no dia da ira de Jeová." — Sof 2:3.

As palavras de Jeová a Israel, antes da destruição de Jerusalém, avisavam os humildes e os consolavam, ao declararem que Deus, não obstante, agiria em favor deles no Seu tempo devido. Ele disse: "Então removerei do teu meio os teus que altivamente se rejubilam; e nunca mais serás soberba no meu santo monte. E hei de deixar remanescer no teu meio um povo humilde e de condição humilde, e eles realmente se refugiarão no nome de Jeová." (Sof 3:11, 12) A humildade realmente resultará na salvação de muitos, conforme está escrito: "Salvarás o povo humilde; mas os teus olhos são contra os altaneiros, para os rebaixares." (2Sa 22:28) Temos assim a garantia de que o Rei Jesus Cristo, que cavalga na causa da verdade, da humildade e da justiça, salvará seu povo que se humilha diante dele e diante de seu Pai, Jeová.

Os Cristãos Têm de Cultivar a Humildade. Ao aconselhar concristãos a se revestirem da personalidade "que está sendo renovada segundo a imagem Daquele que a criou", o apóstolo Paulo diz: "Concordemente, como escolhidos de Deus, santos e amados, revesti-vos das ternas afeições de compaixão, benignidade, humildade mental, brandura e longanimidade." (Col 3:10, 12) Citando o excelente exemplo de Cristo, ele os admoesta: 'Com humildade mental, considerai os outros [servos de Deus] superiores a vós.' (Fil 2:3) Novamente, ele apela: "Tende a mesma mentalidade para com os outros como para com vós mesmos; não atenteis para as coisas altivas, mas deixai-vos conduzir pelas coisas humildes. Não vos torneis discretos aos vossos próprios olhos." — Ro 12:16.

No mesmo teor, Paulo diz aos cristãos na cidade de Corinto: "Pois, embora eu esteja livre de todos, fiz-me escravo de todos, para ganhar o máximo número deles. E, assim, para os judeus tornei-me como judeu, para ganhar judeus; para os debaixo de lei tornei-me como debaixo de lei, embora eu mesmo não estivesse debaixo de lei, para ganhar os debaixo de lei. Para os sem lei tornei-me como sem lei, embora eu não estivesse sem lei para com Deus, mas estivesse debaixo de lei para com Cristo, para ganhar os sem lei. Para os fracos tornei-me fraco, para ganhar os fracos. Tornei-me todas as coisas para pessoas de toda sorte, para de todos os modos salvar alguns." (1Co 9:19-22) Fazer isso requer verdadeira humildade.

Opera em prol da paz. A humildade promove a paz. O humilde não combate seus irmãos cristãos, para estabelecer seus supostos "direitos" pessoais. O apóstolo argumentou que, embora ele tivesse a liberdade de fazer todas as coisas, fazia apenas as coisas que eram edificantes, e quando suas próprias ações incomodavam a consciência dum irmão, refreava-se de tal prática. — Ro 14:19-21; 1Co 8:9-13; 10:23-33.

Requer também humildade para manter a paz por colocar em prática o conselho de Jesus, de perdoar aos outros os seus pecados contra nós. (Mt 6:12-15; 18:21, 22) E quando alguém ofende outro, isto põe à prova a sua humildade de obedecer à ordem de se dirigir ao outro e admitir o erro, pedindo perdão. (Mt 5:23, 24) Ou, quando o ofendido se dirige a ele, apenas o amor conjugado com a humildade o induzirá a admitir o erro e a agir imediatamente para endireitar o assunto. (Mt 18:15; Lu 17:3; compare isso com Le 6:1-7.) Mas a paz resultante de tal humildade, para a pessoa e para a organização, supera em muito o sentimento de humilhação; também, sua ação humilde desenvolve e fortalece adicionalmente na pessoa a excelente qualidade da humildade.

Essencial para a unidade na congregação. A humildade ajudará o cristão a se contentar com as coisas que possui, e o ajudará a manter a alegria e o equilíbrio. A interdependência existente na congregação cristã, conforme ilustrada pelo apóstolo na Primeira aos Coríntios, capítulo 12, baseia-se em obediência, humildade e submissão ao arranjo organizacional de Deus. Portanto, ao passo que se diz aos varões da congregação: "Se algum homem procura alcançar o cargo de superintendente, está desejoso duma obra excelente", diz-se-lhes também que não devem ambiciosamente procurar um cargo de responsabilidade como, por exemplo, de instrutores da congregação, porque estes hão "de receber um julgamento mais pesado". — 1Ti 3:1; Tg 3:1.

Todos, homens e mulheres, devem ser submissos aos que tomam a dianteira e devem esperar em Jeová para receber quaisquer nomeações ou designações de responsabilidade, porque a promoção vem Dele. (Sal 75:6, 7) Conforme disseram alguns dos filhos levitas de Corá: "Escolhi ficar de pé no limiar da casa de meu Deus, em vez de andar em volta nas tendas da iniquidade." (Sal 84:10) Desenvolver tal humildade verdadeira requer tempo. As Escrituras, ao especificarem as qualificações para alguém ser designado para o cargo de superintendente, declaram que não se deve designar nenhum homem recém-convertido, "para que não venha a enfunar-se de orgulho e a cair no julgamento aplicado ao Diabo". — 1Ti 3:6.

Pretensa Humildade. Avisa-se os cristãos para que sua humildade não seja apenas fachada. Quem se deleitar numa humildade fingida poderá ficar "enfunado sem causa devida pela carnalidade de sua mente". O verdadeiramente humilde não pensará que o Reino de Deus, ou a entrada nele, tem que ver com o que ele come ou bebe, ou com o que se refreia de comer ou beber. A Bíblia mostra que a pessoa pode comer ou beber, ou deixar de comer ou tomar certas coisas, se achar que deve fazer isso por motivo de saúde ou por causa da consciência. No entanto, quem pensa que sua posição favorável perante Deus depende de ele comer, beber ou tocar certas coisas, ou não, ou de observar, ou não, certos dias religiosos, não se dá conta de que suas ações "têm aparência de sabedoria numa forma de adoração imposta a si próprio e em humildade fingida, no tratamento severo do corpo; mas, não são de valor algum em combater a satisfação da carne". — Col 2:18, 23; Ro 14:17; Gál 3:10, 11.

A pretensa humildade pode na realidade resultar em levar alguém a se tornar soberbo, porque talvez tenda a pensar que é justo por mérito próprio; ou talvez ele ache que está alcançando seus objetivos, não se dando conta de que não pode enganar a Jeová. Caso ele fique soberbo, com o tempo será humilhado dum modo de que não gostará. Será rebaixado, e isto pode resultar na sua própria destruição. — Pr 18:12; 29:23.

HUNTA [Lugar do Lagarto de Areia]. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 54) Não se conhece mais a sua localização.

HUPA [Abrigo]. Cabeça da 13.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais organizadas por Davi. — 1Cr 24:1-3, 7, 13.

HUPIM. Filho, ou descendente, de Benjamim, incluído na lista dos que entraram no Egito junto com a família de Jacó, em 1728 AEC, ou que nasceram ali durante a vida de Jacó. (Gên 46:8, 21) Outras passagens sugerem que ele era ou neto ou bisneto através de Bela e de Iri. (1Cr 7:6, 7, 12; em 8:1-5, ele parece ser chamado Hurão.) O tempo quase que não permite que Benjamim tenha tido netos ao entrar no Egito, mas Gênesis 46:8 pode ser entendido como indicando que todas estas almas nasceram enquanto Jacó ainda vivia, mesmo lá no Egito, não necessariamente como tendo nascido antes de ele e sua família terem ido para lá. (Veja BENJAMIM N.º 1.) A família fundada por Hupim (também chamado Hufão), chamada de hufamitas, é contada na tribo de Benjamim, no segundo recenseamento dos israelitas no ermo. (Núm 26:1-4, 38, 39) Hupim é mencionado também em 1 Crônicas 7:14, 15, em associação com Manassés, mas a vinculação não é clara.

HUR.

1. Descendente de Judá; filho de Calebe e de Efrate; avô do artífice Bezalel. Alguns dos descendentes de Hur talvez se estabelecessem em Belém. (Êx 31:2; 35:30; 38:22; 1Cr 2:19, 20, 50, 51, 54; 4:1-4; 2Cr 1:5) Provavelmente é o N.º 2.

2. Destacado associado de Moisés e Arão. Quando Israel foi atacado pelos amalequitas, pouco depois de partir do Egito, Hur acompanhou Moisés e Arão ao cume dum morro, onde ele e Arão seguraram as mãos de Moisés, até que Jeová deu a Israel a vitória sobre os amalequitas. (Êx 17:8-13) Em certa ocasião, não muito depois disso, Moisés e Josué subiram ao monte Sinai para receber partes adicionais da Lei, deixando Hur e Arão encarregados do acampamento. (Êx 24:12-14) É provavelmente o Hur (N.º 1) que é avô de Bezalel, artífice do tabernáculo. Josefo escreveu que Hur era marido de Miriã, mas a Bíblia não diz nada a respeito dis-

so. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), III, 54 (ii, 4).

3. Rei de Midiã, um dos cinco dominados pelo rei amorreu Síon, até que Israel, avançando em direção à Terra da Promessa, derrotou Síon. (Jos 13:15, 16, 21; Núm 21:21-24) Depois, pelo que parece, Hur e seus quatro compatriotas aliaram-se ao Rei Balaque, de Moabe, em oposição a Israel. (Núm 22:1-7) Mais tarde, conforme dirigidos por Jeová, os israelitas guerrearam contra os midianitas e mataram Hur, bem como os quatro reis midianitas aliados com ele, e o ganancioso profeta Balaão. — Núm 31:1-8.

4. Pai do preposto de Salomão, que lhe fornecia alimentos da região montanhosa de Efraim. — 1Rs 4:7, 8.

5. Pai de Refaías. O filho de Hur, Refaías, ajudou Neemias a reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:9.

HURAI. Um dos poderosos de Davi; dos vales de torrente de Gaás. (1Cr 11:26, 32) Ele é chamado Hidai em 2 Samuel 23:30.

HURÃO. Provavelmente neto ou bisneto de Benjamim através de Bela e de Ir(i); evidentemente também chamado Hupim. — 1Cr 7:6, 7, 12; 8:3-5; veja HUPIM.

HURI. Descendente de Gade através de Buz. — 1Cr 5:11, 14.

HUSÁ. Quer "filho" de Ezer, da tribo de Judá, quer uma cidade de que Ezer era "pai" ou "fundador". (1Cr 4:1, 4) Se Husá se referir a uma cidade, então talvez seja o lugar de origem de um dos poderosos de Davi, Sibecai, que provavelmente também era chamado Mebunai. (1Cr 27:11; compare isso com 2Sa 23:27; 1Cr 11:29.) Alguns acham que Husá era o nome duma cidade e a identificam com Husan, a uns 6 km ao O de Belém.

HUSAI [possivelmente forma abreviada de Hasabias, que significa "Jeová Tomou em Conta (Considerou)"]. Leal amigo arquita do Rei Davi, que ajudou a frustrar a rebelião de Absalão. (1Cr 27:33) Husai, com sua veste comprida rasgada e com terra na cabeça, encontrou-se com o fugitivo rei no monte das Oliveiras. Seguiu a sugestão de Davi, de que voltasse à cidade, fingisse lealdade a Absalão, procurasse frustrar o conselho de Aitofel e mantivesse Davi informado por meio dos sacerdotes Zadoque e Abiatar. (2Sa 15:30, 32-37) No começo, Absalão mostrou-se desconfiado, mas Husai conseguiu granjear a sua confiança. (2Sa 16:16-19) Quando Absalão pediu a opinião de Husai a respeito da melhor estratégia militar, Husai expressou-se contrário a Aitofel e recomendou um proceder que na realidade daria a Davi tempo de se organizar. Husai apresentou a ideia dum modo que parecia melhor a Absalão e seus associados, do que o conselho de Aitofel, de atacar imediatamente. Husai informou então os sacerdotes sobre o que acontecera. (2Sa 17:1-16) O conselho de Husai frustrou o de Aitofel, conforme Davi pedira a Deus, e assim 'Jeová trouxe calamidade sobre Absalão'. — 2Sa 15:31; 17:14; veja AMIGO (Amigo [Companheiro] do Rei).

HUSÃO. Nativo da terra dos temanitas, que sucedeu a Jobabe como rei de Edom. (Gên 36:31, 34, 35; 1Cr 1:45, 46) Isto foi "antes de qualquer rei reinar sobre os filhos de Israel". — 1Cr 1:43.

HUSATITA [De (Pertencente a) Husá]. Morador, ou talvez descendente, de Husá. — 2Sa 21:18; 23:8, 27; 1Cr 11:26, 29; 20:4; 27:1, 11.

HUSIM.

1. Filho de Dã (Gên 46:23), evidentemente chamado Suão em Números 26:42.

2. Esposa do benjamita Saraim, e mãe de Abitube e de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 11.

HUSINS. Nome dado aos filhos de Aer, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 7:6, 12.

I

IAH. Veja JAH.

IAVÉ. Veja JEOVÁ.

IBAR [Que Jeová [o] Escolha]. Um dos filhos do Rei Davi nascido em Jerusalém, depois que Davi transferiu sua residência de Hébron para lá. — 2Sa 5:13-15; 1Cr 14:4, 5.

IBLEÃO [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "engolir"]. Cidade no território de Issacar, mas designada com suas aldeias dependentes a Manassés. Os manassitas, porém, deixaram de desapossar os cananeus de Ibleão. (Jos 17:11-13; Jz 1:27) Ibleão parece ser a mesma que Bileão, em Manassés, dada aos levitas coatitas. (1Cr 6:70)

Mas, o texto paralelo que menciona cidades levitas no território da metade da tribo de Manassés (Jos 21:25) diz "Gate-Rimom", em vez de "Bileão" ou "Ibleão". Geralmente se atribui isso a um erro de escriba, "Gate-Rimom", o nome de uma cidade em Dã, provavelmente tendo sido por engano repetida do versículo 24 .

Ibleão tem sido identificada com Khirbet Bel'ameh, cerca de 18 km a SSE de Megido.

Perto de Ibleão, o Rei Acazias, de Judá, foi abatido fatalmente, às ordens de Jeú. (2Rs 9:27) Mais tarde, a dinastia de Jeú terminou com o assassinato de Zacarias em Ibleão (Jeblaam) (segundo a edição lagardiana da LXX). — 2Rs 15:10-12, BJ, BLH, NM, PIB.

IBNEIA [Jeová Construiu]. Filho de Jeroão; cabeça benjamita de uma casa paterna que retornou do exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:1-3, 7-9.

IBNIAS [Jeová Construiu]. Benjamita, antepassado de um certo Mesulão. — 1Cr 9:7, 8.

IBRI [Hebreu]. Filho de Jaazias; levita merarita da época do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 24:27, 30, 31.

IBSÃ. Sucessor de Jefté como juiz de Israel. Ibsã era pai de 30 filhos e 30 filhas, indicando que era polígamo e, evidentemente, também um homem abastado. Ele mandou buscar 30 filhas de outros como esposas para seus filhos. Depois de julgar por sete anos, Ibsã morreu e foi sepultado na sua cidade natal, Belém, provavelmente a Belém de Zebulão. — Jz 12:7-10; Jos 19:10, 14, 15; veja BELÉM N.º 2.

IBSÃO [Perfumado; Óleo de Bálsamo; Aromático]. Um dos filhos de Tola; cabeça paterna da tribo de Issacar. — 1Cr 7:1, 2.

ICABODE [Onde Está a Glória?]. Filho de Fineias, nascido depois da morte deste; irmão de Aitube; neto do Sumo Sacerdote Eli. O nome Icabode, dado a ele por sua mãe que morreu ao dar à luz, significava que a glória havia-se afastado de Israel por causa da captura da Arca e das mortes de Fineias e Eli. — 1Sa 4:17-22; 14:3.

ICÔNIO. Antiga cidade da Ásia Menor, situada cerca de 1027 m acima do nível do mar. Icônio é hoje conhecida como Konya (Konia), situada a uns 240 km ao S de Ancara, no limite SO do planalto central da Turquia. No primeiro século EC, Icônio era uma das principais cidades na província romana da Galácia e margeava a principal rota comercial que ia de Éfeso para a Síria.

A cidade tinha uma influente população judaica. Paulo e Barnabé, depois de terem sido obrigados a deixar a Antioquia da Pisídia, pregaram na cidade de Icônio e em sua sinagoga, onde ajudaram muitos judeus e gregos a se tornarem crentes. Mas, quando houve uma tentativa de apedrejá-los, fugiram de Icônio para Listra. Contudo, logo depois vieram a Listra judeus de Antioquia e Icônio e atiçaram as multidões, de modo que apedrejaram a Paulo. Depois disso, Paulo e Barnabé foram para Derbe e, daí, corajosamente retornaram a Listra, Icônio e Antioquia, fortalecendo os irmãos e designando "anciãos" para cargos de responsabilidade nas congregações estabelecidas nessas cidades. — At 13:50, 51; 14:1-7, 19-23.

Mais tarde, depois que a questão da circuncisão surgiu e foi resolvida pelos apóstolos e anciãos da congregação de Jerusalém, Paulo talvez tenha revisitado Icônio. Foi nesta segunda viagem missionária que Paulo fez-se acompanhar de Timóteo, um jovem de excelente reputação entre os irmãos em Listra e Icônio. — At 16:1-5; 2Ti 3:10, 11.

Icônio situava-se na fronteira entre a Frígia e a Licaônia. Isto talvez explique por que certos escritores antigos, incluindo Estrabão e Cícero, incluíram-na na Licaônia, ao passo que Xenofonte a chamou de a última cidade da Frígia. Do ponto de vista geográfico, Icônio pertencia à Licaônia, mas, conforme indicado pelas descobertas arqueológicas, sua cultura e sua linguagem eram frígias. Inscrições encontradas nesse sítio em 1910 mostram que se usava ali a língua frígia por dois séculos, depois da época de Paulo. Apropriadamente, pois, o escritor de Atos não incluiu Icônio como parte da Licaônia, onde se falava a "língua licaônica". — At 14:6, 11.

IDADE, ERA. Idade é primariamente o tempo de vida de uma pessoa, em geral contado em anos, meses e dias. No idioma hebraico, para se dar a idade física de uma pessoa, dizia-se que ela era "filho de" tantos anos. Assim, fala-se de José literalmente como tendo morrido como "filho de cento e dez anos", isto é, "à idade de cento e dez anos". (Gên 50:26) Idade pode referir-se também à maturidade. A palavra hebraica sehv ou seh·váh (idade; velhice) vem duma raiz que significa "ficar grisalho" e é também traduzido "cãs". (1Sa 12:2; Pr 20:29) Bom número de palavras hebraicas relacionadas com velhice e envelhecimento derivam-se do substantivo za·qán, que significa "barba". (Le 19:27) A palavra grega he·li·kí·a primariamente denota "duração da vida" ou "idade" de uma pessoa, mas pode também referir-se ao "desenvolvimento físico" ou "estatura" da pessoa. (Mt 6:27; Jo 9:21; Lu 2:52; 19:3) Nas Escrituras Gregas ocorre também gé·ras ("velhice"; Lu 1:36), pre·sbý·tes ("homem idoso"; Flm 9), e pre·sbý·tis ('mulher idosa'; Tit 2:3).

As últimas duas palavras são aparentadas com pre·sbý·te·ros, que significa "homem mais idoso; ancião". — Veja ANCIÃO.

Sob a Lei, aos 20 anos, os homens se habilitavam para o serviço militar. (Núm 1:3) O cego de nascença a quem Jesus deu visão devia ter pelo menos 20 anos de idade, visto que seus pais disseram a seus interrogadores: "Perguntai-lhe. Ele é maior de idade. Tem de falar por si mesmo." (Jo 9:21, 23) Sara é mencionada como estando "além do limite da idade" para ter filhos, pois tinha então cerca de 90 anos de idade. — He 11:11.

Foi fixado um limite de idade para alguém qualificar-se para o serviço no templo, bem como um limite de idade em que o serviço obrigatório cessava. Alguns alegam haver uma discrepância nas declarações em Números 4:3, 30, 31 e 8:24-26, pois a idade para começar o serviço levítico é declarada primeiro como sendo de 30 anos em diante e, depois, como de 25 anos em diante. Contudo, o caso parece ser que estavam envolvidas duas categorias de serviço. Assim, certas fontes rabínicas apresentam o conceito de que aos 25 anos o levita era iniciado no serviço do tabernáculo, mas apenas para executar tarefas mais leves, e daí, ao completar 30 anos, recebia tarefas mais pesadas. Alegam que as referências a "obra" e "serviço laborioso e o serviço de levar cargas", mencionadas em Números 4:3, 47, não aparecem em Números 8:24, onde o limite de idade é 25. Outros acrescentam a sugestão de que aqueles que serviam com a idade acima de 30 tinham a ver com o transporte do tabernáculo e seu equipamento, quando em movimento, ao passo que os que serviam entre as idades de 25 e 30 serviam apenas quando o tabernáculo era erigido e instalado num acampamento. Os que defendem o conceito de que as designações de tarefas mais pesadas eram dadas apenas à idade de 30 dão como razão o fato de que nessa idade a pessoa já teria mais força, maturidade intelectual e solidez de julgamento. A Septuaginta grega dá a idade de 25 tanto em Números 4:3 como em 8:24. Mais tarde, nos dias de Davi, o limite de idade para começar o serviço no tabernáculo, que foi com o tempo substituído pelo serviço no templo, foi reduzido para 20 anos. — 1Cr 23:24-32; veja também Esd 3:8.

Quanto a deixar o serviço obrigatório, isto ocorria quando os levitas atingiam os 50 anos. A declaração em Números 8:25, 26 indica que, nessa idade, os levitas ainda podiam voluntariamente ajudar os que ainda eram elegíveis para deveres designados, no entanto, eles mesmos não recebiam nenhuma designação direta, tampouco eram responsáveis por cumpri-las. Alega-se que a razão do limite de idade para deixar o serviço levítico não era meramente em consideração à idade, mas sim para evitar um excesso de tais servidores. Este limite de idade para levitas não se aplicava ao sumo sacerdote arônico, pois o próprio sumo sacerdote servia nesse cargo santo até a morte, se continuasse capaz. (Núm 35:25) Arão, primeiro sumo sacerdote de Israel, foi escolhido para esse serviço quando tinha mais de 80 anos e serviu por quase 40 anos. — Êx 7:7; Núm 33:39.

O Grego (Aión). "Idade" ou "era" pode também referir-se a um período de tempo na história do homem, quer tenha, quer não, limites datáveis. Não raro é usado para traduzir a palavra grega ai·ón (plural, ai·ó·nes) em algumas traduções. Lexicógrafos gregos mostram que a palavra significa "espaço de tempo claramente definido, época, era", e também "duração da vida, vida", ou "era, geração". Visto que uma época, ou era, pode começar e findar, ou pode prosseguir eternamente, segue-se que ai·ón pode referir-se a um período de tempo infindável, embora tenha começo. Assim, conforme registrado em Marcos 3:29, Jesus disse que quem blasfemasse contra o espírito santo seria culpado de "pecado eterno [perene, perpétuo, sempiterno]", ou um pecado que jamais seria cancelado em tempo algum no futuro. Usou-se uma expressão similar com respeito à figueira infrutífera, onde "nunca mais" no grego literalmente é "era adentro". (Mt 21:19) A respeito de Jesus, a promessa angélica foi que "ele reinará sobre a casa de Jacó para sempre [literalmente, eras adentro]". — Lu 1:33; veja TEMPO INDEFINIDO.

Contudo, ai·ón pode também referir-se mais especificamente ao consistente estado de coisas ou à situação corrente dos assuntos ou características que distinguem um certo período de tempo, época, ou era, em vez de à questão do tempo em si. Conforme R. C. Trench diz em Synonyms of the New Testament (Sinônimos do Novo Testamento; Londres, 1961, p. 203): "Assim significando tempo, vem presentemente significar tudo o que existe no mundo sob condições de tempo; . . . e daí, mais eticamente, o curso e fluxo dos assuntos deste mundo." — Veja MUNDO; SISTEMAS DE COISAS.

IDALA. Cidade fronteiriça de Zebulão. (Jos 19:14-16) Embora sua localização exata seja desconhecida, alguns relacionam Idala com Khirbet el-Huwarah, 1,5 km a SO da sugerida localização da Belém em Zebulão.

IDBAS [duma raiz que significa "mel"]. Homem de Judá, evidentemente um dos filhos do fundador de Étão. — 1Cr 4:1, 3; veja ÉTÃO N.º 3.

IDIOMA, LÍNGUA. Qualquer meio, vocal ou outro, através do qual se expressam ou se comunicam sentimentos ou ideias. Em geral, contudo, língua significa um conjunto de palavras e o método de combiná-las, conforme entendido por uma comunidade de pessoas. As palavras hebraicas e gregas para "idioma" significam "língua". (Je 5:15; At 2:11, Int) O termo hebraico para "lábio" é usado de maneira similar. — Gên 11:1 n.

O idioma, naturalmente, está mui intimamente ligado à mente, que emprega os órgãos da fala — garganta, língua, lábios e dentes — como instrumentos. (Veja LÍNGUA.) Assim, a Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; edição de 1959) diz: "Raciocínio e palavras andam juntos. Pois, o raciocínio, para ser claro, tem de depender de nomes [ou substantivos] e de suas várias interligações. . . . Embora algumas pequenas ressalvas sejam justificáveis, há sobrepujante volume de evidência . . . que corrobora a afirmativa feita acima — sem palavras não há raciocínio." (Vol. 5, p. 740) As palavras são a principal maneira de o homem receber, armazenar, manipular e transmitir informações.

Origem da Fala. O primeiro humano, Adão, foi criado já com um vocabulário, bem como com a habilidade de cunhar novas palavras e, assim, de expandir seu vocabulário. Sem um vocabulário dado por Deus, o homem recém-criado, como no caso dos animais irracionais, não poderia compreender as instruções verbais de seu Criador. (Gên 1:27-30; 2:16-20; compare isso com 2Pe 2:12; Ju 10.) Assim, ao passo que dentre todas as criaturas da terra apenas o homem inteligente tem a habilidade da fala, no verdadeiro sentido da palavra, a linguagem não se originou do homem, mas sim do Criador Todo-sábio, Jeová Deus. — Veja Êx 4:11, 12.

Sobre a origem da linguagem, o bem-conhecido lexicógrafo Ludwig Koehler escreveu: "Tem havido, especialmente em tempos passados, muita especulação quanto a como 'veio a existir' a linguagem humana. Os escritores empenharam-se em explorar a 'linguagem animal'. Pois os animais também conseguem expressar audivelmente, por meio de sons e grupos de sons, seus sentimentos e suas sensações, tais como o contentamento, o temor, a emoção, a ameaça, a ira, o desejo sexual e a satisfação em sua realização, e talvez muitas outras coisas. Não importa quão múltiplas sejam essas expressões [animais] . . . falta-lhes concepção e ideia, o domínio essencial da linguagem humana." Depois de mostrar como os homens podem explorar o aspecto fisiológico da linguagem humana, ele acrescenta: "Mas o que realmente acontece na linguagem, como a centelha da percepção aviva o espírito da criança, ou da humanidade em geral, para se tornar a palavra falada, foge à nossa compreensão. A linguagem humana é um segredo; é um dom divino, um milagre." — Journal of Semitic Studies (Revista de Estudos Semíticos), Manchester, 1956, p. 11.

A linguagem já tinha sido usada por incontáveis eras, antes de o homem surgir no cenário universal. Jeová Deus se comunicava com seu Filho primogênito celestial e, evidentemente, empregava-o para se comunicar com seus outros filhos espirituais. Assim, tal Filho primogênito era chamado de "a Palavra". (Jo 1:1; Col 1:15, 16; Re 3:14) O apóstolo Paulo fez uma referência inspirada às "línguas de homens e de anjos". (1Co 13:1) Jeová Deus fala a suas criaturas angélicas na 'língua' delas e elas 'cumprem a Sua palavra'. (Sal 103:20) Visto que Ele e seus filhos espirituais não dependem da atmosfera (que torna possível as ondas e as vibrações sonoras, necessárias à fala humana) a linguagem angélica se acha, obviamente, além da concepção ou alcance humanos. Portanto, como mensageiros de Deus, os anjos empregaram linguagem humana para falar com os homens, e há mensagens angélicas registradas em hebraico (Gên 22:15-18), aramaico (Da 7:23-27) e grego (Re 11:15), sendo que os textos citados foram escritos em tais línguas, respectivamente.

Qual é a causa da diversidade de idiomas?

De acordo com a Organização das Nações Unidas para a Educação, a Ciência e a Cultura (Unesco), cerca de 6.000 línguas são faladas no mundo todo. Algumas são faladas por centenas de milhões de pessoas, outras por menos de mil. Embora as ideias expressas e comunicadas possam ser basicamente as mesmas, há muitas maneiras de expressá-las. Somente a história da Bíblia explica a origem desta estranha diversidade nas comunicações humanas.

Até certo tempo depois do Dilúvio global, toda a humanidade "continuava a ter um só idioma [literalmente, "lábio"] e um só grupo de palavras". (Gên 11:1) A Bíblia indica que a língua que mais tarde veio a ser chamada de hebraico era aquele "um só idioma" original. (Veja HEBRAICO.) Como veremos, isto não significa que todas as demais línguas tenham provindo do hebraico, e sejam aparentadas com ele, mas que o hebraico precedeu a todas as outras línguas.

O relato de Gênesis descreve a unificação de certa parte da família humana pós-diluviana num projeto que se opunha à vontade de Deus, conforme expressa a Noé e seus filhos. (Gên 9:1) Em vez de se espalharem e 'encherem a terra', estavam decididos a centralizar a sociedade humana, concentrando sua residência num local que se tornou conhecido como planícies de Sinear, na Mesopotâmia. Evidentemente, este local também deveria tornar-se um centro religioso, com uma torre religiosa. — Gên 11:2-4.

O Deus Todo-Poderoso fez com que esse projeto presunçoso sofresse um revés, desfazendo sua unidade de ação, realizando isto por confundir a língua comum. Isto impossibilitou qualquer trabalho coordenado em seu projeto, e resultou em serem espalhados para todas as partes do globo. Além disso, a confusão de línguas impediria ou desaceleraria qualquer futuro progresso numa direção errada, numa direção de desafio a Deus, uma vez que tanto limitaria a capacidade da humanidade de combinar seus poderes intelectuais e físicos em planos ambiciosos, como tornaria difícil recorrer ao conhecimento acumulado dos diferentes grupos linguísticos formados — conhecimento este que não provinha de Deus, mas que fora obtido pela experiência e pesquisa humanas. (Veja Ec 7:29; De 32:5.) Assim, ao passo que a confusão da fala humana introduziu um grande fator divisório na sociedade humana, ela realmente trouxe benefícios à sociedade humana por retardar a consecução de alvos perigosos e prejudiciais. (Gên 11:5-9; compare isso com Is 8:9, 10.) Basta apenas a pessoa considerar certos acontecimentos em nossos próprios tempos, que resultaram do conhecimento secular acumulado e do emprego errôneo do mesmo por parte do homem, para se compreender o que Deus há muito previu que ocorreria, caso não fosse frustrado o esforço visado em Babel.

A filologia, o estudo comparativo das línguas, geralmente classifica as línguas em diferentes "famílias". A língua-mãe de cada família principal geralmente não foi identificada; muito menos existe qualquer evidência que aponte qualquer língua-mãe como sendo a fonte de todos os milhares de línguas que hoje se falam. O registro bíblico não diz que todas as línguas descenderam ou se ramificaram do hebraico. No que é comumente chamado de Tabela das Nações (Gên 10), alistam-se os descendentes dos filhos de Noé: Sem, Cã e Jafé, e, em cada caso, eles são agrupados "segundo as suas famílias, segundo as suas línguas, nas suas terras, pelas suas nações". (Gên 10:5, 20, 31, 32) Por conseguinte, parece que, quando Jeová Deus confundiu miraculosamente a língua humana, ele produziu, não dialetos do hebraico, mas sim várias línguas inteiramente novas, cada qual sendo capaz de expressar a plena extensão dos sentimentos e das ideias humanos.

Assim, depois de Deus ter confundido a língua deles, os edificadores em Babel não só não tinham "um só grupo de palavras" (Gên 11:1), um vocabulário comum; também não tinham uma gramática comum, uma forma comum de expressar a relação entre as palavras. O professor S. R. Driver declarou: "As línguas, no entanto, diferem não só na gramática e nas raízes, mas também . . . no modo em que as ideias são construídas numa sentença. As diferentes raças não pensam da mesma forma; e, por conseguinte, as formas assumidas pela sentença em diferentes línguas não são as mesmas." (A Dictionary of the Bible [Dicionário da Bíblia], editado por J. Hastings, 1905, Vol. IV, p. 791) Assim, diferentes línguas exigem bem diferentes padrões de pensamento, tornando difícil que um aprendiz 'pense naquela língua'. (Veja 1Co 14:10, 11.) É também por isso que uma tradução literal de algo dito ou escrito numa língua desconhecida talvez pareça ilógico, não raro motivando as pessoas a dizerem: "Mas isto não faz sentido!" Assim, parece que, quando Jeová Deus confundiu a língua das pessoas em Babel, ele primeiro apagou toda a lembrança da língua comum anterior delas e, daí, introduziu na mente delas não só novos vocabulários, mas, também, modificou seus padrões de pensamento, produzindo novas gramáticas. — Veja Is 33:19; Ez 3:4-6.

Verificamos, por exemplo, que certas línguas são monossilábicas (compostas de palavras com apenas uma sílaba), tais como o chinês. Em contraste, o vocabulário de muitas outras línguas se constituem mormente de aglutinações, isto é, da junção de palavras, como se dá com a palavra alemã Hausfriedensbruch, que literalmente significa "rompimento da paz da casa", ou, de modo mais compreensível para a mente dos que falam português, "invasão de propriedade". Em algumas línguas a sintaxe, a ordem das palavras na sentença, é importantíssima; em outras, pouco importa. Ademais, algumas línguas dispõem de muitas conjugações (formas verbais); outras, tais como o chinês, não têm nenhuma. Poderíamos citar incontáveis diferenças, cada qual exigindo um ajuste na maneira de pensar, não raro com grande esforço.

Aparentemente, as línguas originais que resultaram da intervenção divina em Babel produziram, com o tempo, dialetos aparentados, e estes em muitos casos se transformaram em línguas distintas, seu parentesco com os dialetos-irmãos ou com a língua-mãe às vezes se tornando quase que indistinguível. Até mesmo os descendentes de Sem, que, aparentemente, não estavam entre a multidão de Babel, vieram a falar, não só o hebraico, mas também o aramaico, o acadiano e o árabe. Historicamente, vários fatores contribuíram para as alterações nas línguas: a separação, devido à distância ou a barreiras geográficas; guerras ou conquistas; o colapso das comunicações; e a imigração por parte daqueles que falavam outra língua. Devido a esses fatores, as principais línguas antigas se fragmentaram, certas línguas se fundiram parcialmente com outras, e algumas desapareceram por completo, sendo substituídas pelas dos conquistadores invasores.

A pesquisa linguística supre evidência disso, em harmonia com a informação precedente. A The New Encyclopædia Britannica (A Nova Enciclopédia Britânica) diz: "Os mais primitivos registros de linguagem escrita, os únicos fósseis linguísticos que o homem pode esperar ter, remontam a não mais de cerca de 4.000 ou 5.000 anos." (1985, Vol. 22, p. 567) Um artigo em Science Illustrated (Ciência Ilustrada) de julho de 1948 (p. 63) diz: "As formas mais antigas de línguas conhecidas hoje eram muito mais difíceis do que seus descendentes modernos . . . o homem não parece ter começado com uma linguagem simples, e, gradualmente, a tornado mais complexa, antes, porém, parece ter-se apoderado de uma linguagem tremendamente intricada, em alguma época do passado não registrado, e, gradualmente, a simplificando em formas modernas." O linguista Dr. Mason também indica que "a ideia de que 'selvagens' falam uma série de grunhidos, e não conseguem expressar muitos conceitos 'civilizados', é muitíssimo errada", e que muitas das línguas dos povos iliteratos são muito mais complexas do que as modernas línguas europeias". (Science News Letter [Boletim de Notícias Científicas], 3 de setembro de 1955, p. 148) Portanto, a evidência é contrária a qualquer origem 'evolucionária' da fala ou das línguas antigas.

A respeito do ponto focal de onde se espalharam as línguas antigas, Sir Henry Rawlinson, perito em línguas orientais, comentou: "Se nos guiássemos pela mera interseção das veredas linguísticas, e de modo independente de toda referência ao registro bíblico, deveríamos ainda assim ser levados a nos fixar nas planícies de Sinear, como o foco de onde radiaram as diversas linhas." — The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland (A Revista da Real Sociedade Asiática da Grã-Bretanha e Irlanda), Londres, 1855, Vol. 15, p. 232.

Entre as principais "famílias" alistadas pelos filólogos modernos acham-se as seguintes: indo-europeia, sino-tibetana, afro-asiática, japonesa e coreana, dravídica, malaio-polinésia e negro-africana. Há muitas línguas que ainda hoje desafiam uma classificação. Dentre cada uma das principais famílias há muitas subdivisões ou famílias menores. Assim, a família indo-europeia inclui a germânica, a românica (itálica), a balto-eslava, a indo-iraniana, a grega, a céltica, a albanesa e a armênia. A maioria dessas famílias menores, por sua vez, têm vários membros. As línguas românicas, por exemplo, incluem o francês, o espanhol, o português, o italiano e o romeno.

De Abraão Em Diante. Abraão, o hebreu, evidentemente não tinha dificuldade em se comunicar com os povos camíticos de Canaã. (Gên 14:21-24; 20:1-16; 21:22-34) Não se faz menção a uso de intérpretes, mas, por outro lado, tampouco tal uso é mencionado quando Abraão foi ao Egito. (Gên 12:14-19) Provavelmente ele conhecia acadiano (assiro-babilônico) por ter morado em Ur dos Caldeus. (Gên 11:31) O acadiano foi durante algum tempo uma língua internacional. É possível que o povo de Canaã, vivendo relativamente próximo dos povos semitas da Síria e da Arábia, era até certo ponto bilíngue. Ademais, o alfabeto dá clara evidência de ser de origem semítica, e isso poderia também ter exercido considerável influência no uso de línguas semíticas por pessoas de outros grupos linguísticos, em especial governantes e funcionários. — Veja CANAÃ, CANANEU N.º 2 (Língua); ESCRITA.

Jacó também, ao que parece, comunicava-se facilmente com seus parentes arameus (Gên 29:1-14), embora a terminologia às vezes diferisse. — Gên 31:46, 47.

José, que provavelmente aprendeu egípcio quando era escravo de Potifar, usou um intérprete na primeira vez em que falou com seus irmãos hebreus, quando estes chegaram ao Egito. (Gên 39:1; 42:6, 23) Moisés, criado na corte de Faraó, sem dúvida conhecia várias línguas, como o hebraico, o egípcio, provavelmente o acadiano e, talvez, outras. — Êx 2:10; compare isso com os versículos 15-22.

O aramaico com o tempo substituiu o acadiano como língua franca, ou internacional, sendo até mesmo usado na troca de correspondência com o Egito. Contudo, por volta da época do ataque do rei assírio Senaqueribe contra Judá (732 AEC), o aramaico (antigo sírio) não era entendido pela maioria dos judeus, ainda que funcionários de Judá o entendessem. (2Rs 18:26, 27) Assim, também, a língua caldeia dos babilônios semíticos, que por fim conquistaram Jerusalém em 607 AEC, soava para os judeus como se estivessem 'gaguejando com os seus lábios'. (Is 28:11; Da 1:4; compare isso com De 28:49.) Embora a Babilônia, a Pérsia e outras potências mundiais adquirissem enormes impérios e trouxessem sob seu controle povos de muitas línguas, elas não eliminaram a barreira divisória das diferenças linguísticas. — Da 3:4, 7; Est 1:22.

Neemias ficou grandemente preocupado quando soube que os filhos de casamentos mistos entre os judeus que retornaram do cativeiro não sabiam falar "judaico" (hebraico). (Ne 13:23-25) Sua preocupação era com a adoração pura, pois ele sabia da importância de entender as Sagradas Escrituras (até então disponíveis apenas em hebraico) quando fossem lidas e consideradas. (Veja Ne 13:26, 27; 8:1-3, 8, 9.) A unicidade de língua em si mesmo seria também uma força unificadora entre o povo. As Escrituras Hebraicas sem dúvida eram um fator principal na estabilidade da língua hebraica. Durante o período de mil anos de sua escrita, não se observa virtualmente nenhuma mudança na língua.

Quando Jesus esteve na terra, a Palestina se tornara, em grande medida, uma região poliglota ou multilíngue. Há sólida evidência de que os judeus ainda retinham seu uso do hebraico, mas o aramaico e o coiné também eram falados. O latim, também, aparecia em inscrições oficiais de governantes romanos do país (Jo 19:20) e, sem dúvida, era ouvido de soldados romanos ali aquartelados. Quanto à língua que Jesus em geral falava, veja ARAMAICO; também HEBRAICO.

No Pentecostes de 33 EC, o espírito santo foi derramado sobre os discípulos cristãos em Jerusalém, e eles subitamente começaram a falar em muitas línguas que jamais tinham estudado ou aprendido. Jeová Deus demonstrara, em Babel, sua capacidade miraculosa de colocar na mente das pessoas diferentes vocabulários e diferentes gramáticas. Em Pentecostes, ele o fez novamente, mas, com uma grande diferença, pois os cristãos, subitamente dotados da capacidade de falar novas línguas, não esqueceram sua língua original, o hebraico. O espírito de Deus, neste caso, cumpria também uma finalidade muito diferente, ou seja, não a de confundir e espalhar, mas sim de esclarecer e ajuntar pessoas de coração honesto numa união cristã. (At 2:1-21, 37-42) Dali em diante, o povo pactuado de Deus tornou-se um povo multilinguístico, mas, a barreira criada pela diferença de línguas foi vencida, porque a mente deles ficou cheia da língua comum ou mútua da verdade. Em união, falavam em louvor de Jeová e de seus justos propósitos por meio de Cristo Jesus. Assim, a promessa feita em Sofonias 3:9 teve cumprimento quando Jeová Deus deu aos 'povos a transformação para uma língua pura, para que todos eles invocassem o nome de Jeová, a fim de servi-lo ombro a ombro'. (Veja Is 66:18; Za 8:23; Re 7:4, 9, 10.) Para que isso ocorresse, 'todos deviam falar de acordo' e estar 'aptamente unidos na mesma mente e na mesma maneira de pensar'. — 1Co 1:10.

A 'pureza' da língua falada pela congregação cristã resultaria, também, de estar isenta de palavras que expressassem amargura maliciosa, ira, furor, gritaria e similar linguagem injuriosa, bem como de estar isenta de enganos, obscenidades e corrupções. (Ef 4:29, 31; 1Pe 3:10) Os cristãos deveriam utilizar a linguagem no seu plano mais elevado, louvando seu Criador e edificando o próximo por meio de linguagem saudável, verídica, especialmente as boas novas sobre o Reino de Deus. (Mt 24:14; Tit 2:7, 8; He 13:15; compare isso com Sal 51:15; 109:30.) À medida que se aproximasse a época para Deus executar sua decisão judicial sobre todas as nações do mundo, Jeová habilitaria muitos mais a falar essa língua pura.

A Bíblia começou a ser escrita na língua hebraica, e partes dela foram posteriormente registradas em aramaico. Daí, no primeiro século da Era Comum, o restante das Escrituras Sagradas foi escrito em coiné, ou grego comum (embora Mateus escrevesse seu Evangelho primeiro em hebraico). Já então se tinha feito também uma tradução das Escrituras Hebraicas para o grego. Chamada de Septuaginta, não era uma tradução inspirada, mas, mesmo assim, foi usada pelos escritores cristãos da Bíblia em numerosas citações. (Veja INSPIRAÇÃO.) Assim, também, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, e, por fim, a Bíblia inteira, vieram a ser traduzidas para outras línguas, entre as primeiras delas estando o latim, o siríaco, o etíope, o árabe e o persa. Hoje, a Bíblia — inteira ou em parte — está disponível em bem mais de 3.000 línguas. Isto tem facilitado a proclamação das boas novas, contribuindo assim para se transpor a barreira das divisões linguísticas, com o objetivo de unir pessoas de muitas terras na adoração pura de seu Criador.

IDO [1-5: forma abreviada de Adaías, que significa "Jeová Enfeitou [o portador do nome]"].

1. Filho de Joá; levita da família de Gersom. — 1Cr 6:19-21.

2. Pai de Ainadabe, que servia como preposto no fornecimento de alimentos para Salomão, em Maanaim. — 1Rs 4:7, 14.

3. Visionário cujos escritos foram consultados pelo compilador de Crônicas para informações concernentes aos assuntos dos reis Salomão, Roboão e Abias. Os escritos de Ido são mencionados como "explanação", "comentário" ou "midraxe". — 2Cr 9:29; 12:15; 13:22 n.

4. Pai de Berequias e avô do profeta Zacarias. (Esd 5:1; 6:14; Za 1:1, 7) Este Ido talvez seja o mesmo que o N.º 5.

5. Sacerdote alistado entre os que retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel em 537 AEC. Nos dias do Sumo Sacerdote Joiaquim, a casa paterna de Ido era encabeçada por Zacarias. (Ne 12:1, 4, 12, 16) Talvez seja o mesmo que o N.º 4.

6. [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "elogiar (louvar)"; ou duma diferente raiz que significa "conhecer"]. Filho de um certo Zacarias; príncipe da meia tribo de Manassés em Gileade, nos dias do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 27:21, 22.

7. Cabeça dos escravos netineus do templo que residiam em Casifia, 220 dos quais acompanharam Esdras a Jerusalém em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:17, 20.

ÍDOLO, IDOLATRIA. Ídolo é uma imagem, uma representação de algo, ou um símbolo que seja objeto de devoção passional, quer material, quer imaginado. De modo geral, idolatria é a veneração, o amor, a adoração ou reverência a um ídolo. É geralmente praticada para com um poder superior, real ou imaginário, quer se creia que tal poder tenha existência animada (como um humano, um animal ou uma organização), quer ele seja inanimado (como uma força ou um objeto sem vida da natureza). A idolatria geralmente envolve alguma formalidade, cerimônia ou ritual.

Os termos hebraicos usados para se referir a ídolos não raro sublinhavam a origem e a inerente inutilidade dos ídolos, ou então eram termos depreciativos. Entre estas há palavras traduzidas por "imagem esculpida ou entalhada" (literalmente: algo esculpido); "estátua, imagem ou ídolo fundidos" (literalmente: algo lançado ou despejado); "ídolo horrível"; "ídolo vão" (literalmente: futilidade); e "ídolo sórdido". "Ídolo" é a tradução usual da palavra grega eí·do·lon.

Nem Todas as Imagens São Ídolos. A lei de Deus para não fazer imagens (Êx 20:4, 5) não proibia a fabricação de toda e qualquer representação e estátua. Isto é indicado pela ordem posterior de Jeová para fazer dois querubins de ouro sobre a tampa da Arca e para bordar representações de querubins na cobertura interna da tenda, constituída de dez panos de tenda para o tabernáculo, e na cortina que separava o Santo do Santíssimo. (Êx 25:18; 26:1, 31, 33) Similarmente, o interior do templo de Salomão, cujos planos arquitetônicos foram dados por inspiração divina a Davi (1Cr 28:11, 12), era belamente ornamentado com figuras esculpidas de querubins, palmeiras e flores. Dois querubins de madeira de árvore oleaginosa, recobertos de ouro, estavam postados no Santíssimo daquele templo. (1Rs 6:23, 28, 29) O mar de fundição repousava sobre 12 touros de cobre, e os lados dos carrocins de cobre para uso no templo eram decorados com figuras de leões, touros e querubins. (1Rs 7:25, 28, 29) Doze leões perfilavam-se nas escadas que conduziam ao trono de Salomão. — 2Cr 9:17-19.

Tais representações, contudo, não eram ídolos para adoração. Apenas os sacerdotes oficiantes viam as representações no interior do tabernáculo e, mais tarde, no interior do templo. Ninguém, a não ser o sumo sacerdote, entrava no Santíssimo, e isso, apenas no Dia da Expiação. (He 9:7) Assim, não havia perigo de os israelitas ficarem enlaçados a ponto de idolatrar os querubins de ouro do santuário. Essas representações serviam primariamente como símbolo dos querubins celestes. (Veja He 9:23, 24.) Que não deviam ser venerados é evidente do fato de que os próprios anjos não deviam ser adorados. — Col 2:18; Re 19:10; 22:8, 9.

Naturalmente, houve ocasiões em que imagens se tornaram ídolos, embora originalmente não fossem projetadas como objetos de veneração. A serpente de cobre que Moisés formou no ermo veio a ser adorada e, por isso, o fiel Rei Ezequias a esmiuçou. (Núm 21:9; 2Rs 18:1, 4) O éfode feito pelo juiz Gideão tornou-se um "laço" para ele e para sua casa. — Jz 8:27.

Imagens Como Ajudas para a Adoração. As Escrituras não sancionam a utilização de imagens como meio de dirigir-se a Deus em oração. Tal costume colide com o princípio de que aqueles que procuram servir a Jeová têm de adorá-lo com espírito e verdade. (Jo 4:24; 2Co 4:18; 5:6, 7) Ele não tolera nenhuma mistura de práticas idólatras com a adoração verdadeira, conforme ilustrado por Sua condenação da adoração do bezerro, embora os israelitas tivessem ligado o Seu nome a esta. (Êx 32:3-10) Jeová não divide sua glória com imagens esculpidas. — Is 42:8.

Não existe um único caso nas Escrituras em que fiéis servos de Jeová tenham recorrido à utilização de ajudas visuais para orar a Deus ou tenham se empenhado numa forma de adoração relativa. Naturalmente, alguns talvez citem Hebreus 11:21, que, segundo a versão do Centro Bíblico Católico, reza: "Foi pela fé que Jacó, estando para morrer, abençoou cada um dos filhos de José e venerou a extremidade do seu bastão." [A versão católica Douay, em inglês, reza "adorou o topo de seu bastão".] Daí, numa nota sobre este texto, a Douay sustenta que Jacó prestou honra e veneração relativa ao topo do bastão de José, e faz o seguinte comentário: "Alguns tradutores, que não são amigos desta honra relativa, corromperam o texto, traduzindo-o: ele adorou, inclinando-se sobre o topo de seu bastão." No entanto, ao invés de ser uma corruptela do texto, como tal nota afirma, esta última tradução, e as variantes comparáveis, concordam com o sentido do texto hebraico em Gênesis 47:31, e têm sido adotadas até mesmo por várias traduções católicas, incluindo A Bíblia de Jerusalém.

Formas de Idolatria. Os atos de idolatria mencionados na Bíblia incluíam práticas revoltantes tais como a prostituição cerimonial, o sacrifício de crianças, a bebedice e a autoflagelação, a ponto de sangrar. (1Rs 14:24; 18:28; Je 19:3-5; Os 4:13, 14; Am 2:8) Veneravam-se os ídolos por partilhar com eles a comida e a bebida em festividades ou cerimônias em sua honra (Êx 32:6; 1Co 8:10), por curvar-se e oferecer sacrifícios a eles, por meio de cânticos e danças diante de tais, e até mesmo por beijá-los. (Êx 32:8, 18, 19; 1Rs 19:18; Os 13:2) Praticava-se também idolatria por preparar uma mesa com alimentos e bebidas para os deuses falsos (Is 65:11), por fazer ofertas de bebidas, de bolos sacrificiais e de fumaça sacrificial (Je 7:18; 44:17) e por chorar em cerimônia religiosa (Ez 8:14). Certas medidas, tais como fazer tatuagens, cortes na carne, impor a calvície na testa, cortar as madeixas laterais e destruir a extremidade da barba, eram proibidas pela Lei, possivelmente, pelo menos em parte, por estarem ligadas a práticas idólatras prevalecentes entre os povos vizinhos. — Le 19:26-28; De 14:1.

Daí, há as formas mais sutis de idolatria. A cobiça é idolatria (Col 3:5), visto que o objeto do desejo ardente dum indivíduo desvia sua afeição do Criador e, assim, efetivamente, torna-se um ídolo. Em vez de servir a Jeová Deus em fidelidade, a pessoa pode tornar-se escrava de seu ventre, isto é, de seu desejo ou apetite carnal, e fazer disto o seu deus. (Ro 16:18; Fil 3:18, 19) Visto que o amor ao Criador é demonstrado pela obediência (1Jo 5:3), comparam-se a rebelião e a presunçosa promoção pessoal com atos de idolatria. — 1Sa 15:22, 23.

Idolatria Antediluviana. A idolatria teve seu início, não no domínio visível, mas no invisível. Uma gloriosa criatura espiritual criou o desejo cobiçoso de assemelhar-se ao Altíssimo. Tão forte era o seu desejo que ela alienou as suas afeições de seu Deus, Jeová, e sua idolatria fez com que ela se rebelasse. — Jó 1:6-11; 1Ti 3:6; compare isso com Is 14:12-14; Ez 28:13-15, 17.

Similarmente, Eva se constituiu no primeiro idólatra humano por cobiçar o fruto proibido, desejo errado que a levou a desobedecer à ordem de Deus. Permitindo que o desejo errado se rivalizasse com o amor dele a Jeová, e daí desobedecendo-o, Adão também tornou-se culpado de idolatria. — Gên 3:6, 17.

Desde a rebelião no Éden, apenas uma minoria da humanidade tem permanecido isenta da idolatria. Nos dias de Enos, neto de Adão, os homens aparentemente praticavam uma forma de idolatria. "Naquele tempo se principiou a invocar o nome de Jeová." (Gên 4:26) Mas, evidentemente, não se tratava de invocar a Jeová com fé, algo que foi feito pelo justo Abel, muitos anos antes, em razão de que sofreu martírio às mãos de seu irmão, Caim. (Gên 4:4, 5, 8) Aparentemente, o que começou nos dias de Enos foi uma forma de adoração falsa, em que o nome de Jeová era usado mal ou indevidamente aplicado. Ou os homens aplicavam o nome de Jeová a si mesmos, ou a outros homens (através dos quais fingiam aproximar-se a Deus em adoração), ou, então, aplicavam o nome divino a objetos-ídolos (como ajuda visível e tangível na sua tentativa de adorar o Deus invisível).

O registro bíblico não revela até que ponto a idolatria era praticada a partir dos dias de Enos até o Dilúvio. A situação deve ter-se deteriorado progressivamente, pois, nos dias de Noé, "Jeová viu que a maldade do homem era abundante na terra e que toda inclinação dos pensamentos do seu coração era só má, todo o tempo". Além da inclinação pecaminosa herdada pelo homem, os anjos materializados, que mantinham relações sexuais com as filhas dos homens, e a descendência híbrida destas uniões, os nefilins, exerciam sobre o mundo daquele tempo uma forte influência para o mal. — Gên 6:4, 5.

A Idolatria nos Tempos Patriarcais. Embora o Dilúvio nos dias de Noé destruísse todos os idólatras humanos, a idolatria surgiu de novo, atiçada por Ninrode, "poderoso caçador em oposição a Jeová". (Gên 10:9) Sem dúvida, sob a direção de Ninrode, iniciou-se a construção de Babel e de sua torre (provavelmente um zigurate, para ser usado na adoração idólatra). Os planos de tais edificadores foram frustrados quando Jeová confundiu a língua deles. Não mais podendo compreender uns aos outros, gradualmente deixaram a construção da cidade e se espalharam. No entanto, a idolatria que começou em Babel não terminou ali. Para onde quer que tais edificadores fossem, levavam seus conceitos religiosos falsos. — Gên 11:1-9; veja DEUSES E DEUSAS.

A próxima cidade mencionada nas Escrituras, Ur dos Caldeus, semelhante a Babel, não estava devotada à adoração do Deus verdadeiro, Jeová. As escavações arqueológicas feitas ali revelaram que o deus padroeiro dessa cidade era Sin, o deus-lua. Era em Ur que morava Tera, pai de Abrão (Abraão). (Gên 11:27, 28) Convivendo no meio da idolatria, Tera talvez a praticasse, conforme indicado, séculos depois, pelas palavras de Josué aos israelitas: "Foi no outro lado do Rio [Eufrates] que os vossos antepassados moravam há muito tempo, Tera, pai de Abraão e pai de Naor, e eles costumavam servir a outros deuses." (Jos 24:2) Mas Abraão demonstrou fé no Deus verdadeiro, Jeová.

Para onde quer que Abraão, e, mais tarde, seus descendentes, fossem, eles deparavam-se com a idolatria, influenciada pela apostasia original em Babel. Assim, havia sempre perigo de se contaminarem com tal idolatria. Até os parentes de Abraão tinham ídolos. Labão, sogro de Jacó, neto de Abraão, tinha terafins, ou deuses da família. (Gên 31:19, 31, 32) O próprio Jacó achou necessário instruir sua casa a livrar-se de todos os deuses estrangeiros, e escondeu os ídolos que lhe foram entregues. (Gên 35:2-4) Talvez se tenha desfeito deles dessa forma, para que ninguém de sua casa pudesse utilizar erroneamente o metal deles como algo que tivesse um valor especial por causa de seu anterior emprego idólatra. Não se declara se Jacó primeiro fundiu ou despedaçou as imagens.

A Idolatria e o Povo Pactuado de Deus. Como Jeová indicara a Abraão, os israelitas, descendentes dele, tornaram-se residentes forasteiros numa terra que não era deles, a saber, o Egito, e sofreram aflições ali. (Gên 15:13) No Egito, entraram em contato com crassa idolatria, pois a fabricação de imagens grassava naquele país. Muitas das deidades ali adoradas eram representadas com cabeça de animais, entre elas achando-se Bast, de cabeça de gato; Hator, de cabeça de vaca; Hórus, de cabeça de falcão; Anúbis, de cabeça de chacal (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 946); e Tot, de cabeça de íbis, para citar apenas alguns. Criaturas marinhas, aéreas e terrestres eram veneradas, e, ao morrerem, tais animais "sagrados" eram mumificados.

A Lei que Jeová dera a seu povo, depois de libertá-lo do Egito, foi explicitamente dirigida contra as práticas idólatras tão predominantes entre os povos antigos. O segundo dos Dez Mandamentos proibia expressamente que se fizesse, para adoração, uma imagem esculpida, ou uma representação de qualquer coisa nos céus, na Terra ou nas águas. (Êx 20:4, 5; De 5:8, 9) Em suas exortações finais aos israelitas, Moisés sublinhou a impossibilidade de se fazer uma imagem do Deus verdadeiro, e avisou-os sobre o laço da idolatria. (De 4:15-19) Para salvaguardar ainda mais os israelitas da idolatria, ordenou-se-lhes que não selassem nenhum pacto com os habitantes pagãos da terra em que entravam, nem formassem alianças matrimoniais com eles, mas que os aniquilassem. Todos os acessórios da idolatria — altares, colunas sagradas, postes sagrados, e imagens esculpidas — deviam ser destruídos. — De 7:2-5.

Josué, sucessor de Moisés, ajuntou todas as tribos de Israel em Siquém e admoestou-as a remover os deuses falsos, e a servir fielmente a Jeová. O povo concordou em fazer isso, e continuou servindo a Jeová durante o período de vida de Josué e dos anciãos cujos dias se estenderam depois de Josué. (Jos 24:14-16, 31) Mas, depois disso, instalou-se a apostasia em grande escala. O povo começou a adorar as deidades cananeias — Baal, Astorete e o poste sagrado ou Axerá. Por isso, Jeová abandonou os israelitas às mãos de seus inimigos. Mas, quando se arrependiam, Ele misericordiosamente suscitava juízes para libertá-los. — Jz 2:11-19; 3:7; veja ASTORETE; BAAL N.º 4; COLUNA SAGRADA; POSTE SAGRADO.

Sob o governo dos reis. Durante os reinados de Saul, primeiro rei de Israel, de Is-Bosete, seu filho, e de Davi, não se menciona idolatria em grande escala por parte dos israelitas. Não obstante, há indícios de que a idolatria ainda subsistia naquele reino. A própria filha de Saul, Mical, por exemplo, possuía um terafim. (1Sa 19:13; veja TERAFINS.) Contudo, foi só na última parte do reinado de Salomão, filho de Davi, que flagrante idolatria veio a ser praticada, sendo que o próprio monarca, influenciado por suas muitas esposas estrangeiras, deu ímpeto à idolatria, sancionando-a. Construíram-se altos para Astorete, Quemós e Milcom ou Moloque. O povo em geral sucumbiu à adoração falsa e começou a curvar-se diante destes deuses-ídolos. — 1Rs 11:3-8, 33; 2Rs 23:13; veja MOLOQUE; QUEMÓS.

Devido a esta idolatria, Jeová tirou dez tribos de Roboão, filho de Salomão, e deu-as a Jeroboão. (1Rs 11:31-35; 12:19-24) Embora se lhe assegurasse que seu reino permaneceria firme caso continuasse servindo fielmente a Jeová, Jeroboão, ao tornar-se rei, instituiu a adoração do bezerro, receando que o povo se revoltasse contra sua regência se continuasse subindo a Jerusalém para adorar. (1Rs 11:38; 12:26-33) A idólatra adoração do bezerro continuou por todos os dias do reinado das dez tribos, o baalismo tírio sendo introduzido durante o reinado de Acabe. (1Rs 16:30-33) Nem todos, porém, apostataram. Enquanto Acabe reinava, havia ainda um restante de 7.000 que não tinha dobrado o joelho diante de Baal, nem o beijado, e isto numa época em que os profetas de Jeová estavam sendo mortos à espada, sem dúvida às instâncias de Jezabel, esposa de Acabe. — 1Rs 19:1, 2, 14, 18; Ro 11:4; veja BEZERRO (Adoração do).

Excetuando-se a erradicação da adoração de Baal feita por Jeú (2Rs 10:20-28), não há registro de qualquer reforma religiosa empreendida por um monarca do reino das dez tribos. O povo e os governantes do reino setentrional não davam atenção aos profetas repetidas vezes enviados por Jeová, de modo que, por fim, o Todo-Poderoso entregou-os às mãos dos assírios, por causa de seus sórdidos antecedentes idólatras. — 2Rs 17:7-23.

No reino de Judá, a situação não era muito diferente, salvo as reformas efetuadas por certos reis. Ao passo que um reino dividido viera à existência como resultado direto da idolatria, o filho de Salomão, Roboão, não tomou a peito a disciplina de Jeová, por evitar a idolatria. Assim que sua posição estava segura, ele e todo Judá com ele apostataram. (2Cr 12:1) O povo construiu altos, equipou-os com colunas sagradas e postes sagrados e passou a praticar a prostituição cerimonial. (1Rs 14:23, 24) Embora Abijão (Abias) expressasse fé em Jeová quando guerreou contra Jeroboão e fosse abençoado com a vitória, em grande medida ele imitou o proceder pecaminoso de seu pai e predecessor no trono, Roboão. — 1Rs 15:1, 3; 2Cr 13:3-18.

Os seguintes dois reis de Judá, Asa e Jeosafá, serviram a Jeová fielmente e empenharam-se em livrar o reino da idolatria. Mas, Judá estava tão profundamente mergulhado na adoração nos altos que, apesar dos empenhos desses dois reis de destruí-los, parece que os altos continuavam a existir secretamente ou, então, surgiam de novo. — 1Rs 15:11-14; 22:42, 43; 2Cr 14:2-5; 17:5, 6; 20:31-33.

O reinado do próximo rei de Judá, Jeorão, começou com derramamento de sangue e abriu um novo capítulo na idolatria de Judá. Atribui-se isso ao fato de ele ter como esposa a filha do idólatra Acabe, Atalia. (2Cr 21:1-4, 6, 11) A rainha-mãe Atalia foi também conselheira do filho de Jeorão, Acazias. Assim, durante o reinado de Acazias e o da usurpadora Atalia, a idolatria prosseguiu com a aprovação da coroa. — 2Cr 22:1-3, 12.

Cedo no reinado de Jeoás, depois da execução de Atalia, houve uma restauração da adoração verdadeira. Mas, com a morte do Sumo Sacerdote Jeoiada, houve um retorno à adoração de ídolos às instâncias dos príncipes de Judá. (2Rs 12:2, 3; 2Cr 24:17, 18) Por conseguinte, Jeová abandonou as forças de Judá às mãos dos invasores sírios, e Jeoás foi assassinado pelos seus próprios servos. — 2Cr 24:23-25.

Sem dúvida, a execução do julgamento de Deus contra Judá e a morte violenta do pai de Amazias, Jeoás, causou uma profunda impressão em Amazias, de modo que, de início, ele passou a fazer o que era correto aos olhos de Jeová. (2Cr 25:1-4) Mas, depois de derrotar os edomitas e apanhar as suas imagens, ele passou a servir aos deuses de seus inimigos subjugados. (2Cr 25:14) A retribuição veio quando Judá foi derrotado pelo reino das dez tribos e, mais tarde, quando Amazias foi assassinado por conspiradores. (2Cr 25:20-24, 27) Embora Azarias (Uzias) e seu filho Jotão sejam em geral mencionados como tendo feito o que era correto aos olhos de Jeová, seus súditos persistiram na idolatria nos altos. — 2Rs 15:1-4, 32-35; 2Cr 26:3, 4, 16-18; 27:1, 2.

Durante o reinado de Acaz, filho de Jotão, a condição religiosa de Judá atingiu novos níveis baixos. Acaz começou a praticar idolatria numa escala jamais vista antes em Judá; foi o primeiro rei de Judá de quem se diz ter sacrificado sua prole no fogo como ato da religião falsa. (2Rs 16:1-4; 2Cr 28:1-4) Jeová castigou Judá por meio de derrotas às mãos de seus inimigos. Acaz, em vez de se arrepender, concluiu que os deuses dos reis da Síria estavam dando-lhes a vitória e, por conseguinte, decidiu oferecer sacrifícios a essas deidades de modo que ajudassem também a ele. (2Cr 28:5, 23) Além disso, as portas do templo de Jeová foram fechadas e seus utensílios foram retalhados. — 2Cr 28:24.

Embora Acaz não se beneficiasse da disciplina de Jeová, seu filho Ezequias se beneficiou. (2Cr 29:1, 5-11) Logo no primeiro ano de reinado, Ezequias restaurou a adoração pura de Jeová. (2Cr 29:3) Durante seu reinado houve a destruição de utensílios da adoração falsa não só em Judá e em Benjamim, mas também em Efraim e Manassés. — 2Cr 31:1.

Mas, o próprio filho de Ezequias, Manassés, reavivou completamente a idolatria. (2Rs 21:1-7; 2Cr 33:1-7) Quanto às razões disso, o registro bíblico silencia. Manassés, que começou a governar aos 12 anos, talvez tenha sido de início erroneamente encaminhado por conselheiros e príncipes não exclusivamente devotados ao serviço de Jeová. Diferente de Acaz, porém, Manassés, como cativo em Babilônia, arrependeu-se depois de receber essa severa disciplina da parte de Jeová e empreendeu reformas ao retornar a Jerusalém. (2Cr 33:10-16)

Seu filho Amom, porém, retornou aos sacrifícios a imagens esculpidas. — 2Cr 33:21-24.

Daí veio o reinado de Josias e uma cabal erradicação da idolatria em Judá. Os locais de adoração idólatra foram profanados ali e até mesmo nas cidades de Samaria. Os sacerdotes de deuses estrangeiros e os que faziam fumaça sacrificial a Baal, bem como ao Sol, à Lua, às constelações do zodíaco, e a todo o exército dos céus, foram colocados fora de ação. (2Rs 23:4-27; 2Cr 34:1-5) Mesmo assim, essa extensiva campanha contra a idolatria não resultou numa reforma permanente. Os últimos quatro reis de Judá — Jeoacaz, Jeoiaquim, Joaquim e Zedequias — persistiram na idolatria. — 2Rs 23:31, 32, 36, 37; 24:8, 9, 18, 19; veja ALTOS; ASTRÓLOGOS; ZODÍACO.

As referências à idolatria nos escritos dos profetas também lançam luz sobre o que ocorreu durante os últimos anos do reino de Judá. Locais de idolatria, a prostituição cerimonial e o sacrifício de crianças continuaram a existir. (Je 3:6; 17:1-3; 19:2-5; 32:29, 35; Ez 6:3, 4) Até mesmo levitas eram culpados de praticar a idolatria. (Ez 44:10, 12, 13) Ezequiel, transportado em visão para o templo de Jerusalém, viu ali um ídolo detestável, "símbolo de ciúme", e a veneração de representações de coisas rastejantes e animais repugnantes, bem como a reverência ao falso deus Tamuz e ao Sol. — Ez 8:3, 7-16.

Apesar de adorarem ídolos a ponto de sacrificarem seus próprios filhos, os israelitas mantinham a aparência de adorarem a Jeová e imaginavam que calamidade alguma lhes sobreviria. (Je 7:4, 8-12; Ez 23:36-39) As pessoas em geral haviam-se tornado tão tolas por causa de sua prática de idolatria que, quando a calamidade deveras sobreveio e Jerusalém foi desolada pelos babilônios em 607 AEC, em cumprimento da palavra de Jeová, elas atribuíram isso ao fato de terem deixado de fazer fumaça sacrificial e ofertas de bebida à "rainha dos céus". — Je 44:15-18; veja RAINHA DOS CÉUS.

Por Que Israel se Voltou para a Idolatria. Houve vários fatores que moveram tantos israelitas a repetidas vezes abandonarem a adoração verdadeira. Sendo uma das obras da carne, a idolatria era atraente aos desejos da carne. (Gál 5:19-21) Uma vez fixados na Terra Prometida, os israelitas talvez tenham observado seus vizinhos pagãos (aos quais deixaram de expulsar por completo) terem bom êxito em suas safras por serem mais experientes em trabalhar a terra. É provável que muitos deles fizessem indagações e acatassem os conselhos de seus vizinhos cananeus quanto ao que era necessário fazer para agradar ao Baal ou "dono" de cada lote de terra. — Sal 106:34-39.

Outro induzimento à apostasia era a formação de alianças matrimoniais com os idólatras. (Jz 3:5, 6) A irrestrita indulgência sexual ligada à idolatria revelou ser uma tentação nada insignificante. Em Sitim, nas planícies de Moabe, por exemplo, milhares de israelitas cederam à imoralidade e se envolveram na adoração falsa. (Núm 22:1; 25:1-3) Para alguns, talvez fosse tentador poderem entregar-se ao beber irrestrito nos santuários dos deuses falsos. — Am 2:8.

Havia também o atrativo de supostamente ficar sabendo o que o futuro reservava, emanando isto do desejo de se assegurar de que tudo corresse bem. Exemplos disso são a consulta, feita por Saul, a uma médium espírita, e de Acazias mandar inquirir a Baal-Zebube, o deus de Ecrom. — 1Sa 28:6-11; 2Rs 1:2, 3.

A Tolice da Adoração de Ídolos. Vez após vez as Escrituras trazem à atenção a tolice de confiar nos deuses de madeira, de pedra ou de metal. Isaías descreve a fabricação de ídolos, e mostra a estupidez de alguém que emprega parte da madeira duma árvore para cozinhar o alimento, e para aquecer-se, e daí transforma o restante dela num deus de quem busca ajuda. (Is 44:9-20) No dia do furor de Jeová, escreveu Isaías, os adoradores de falsidades atirariam seus ídolos imprestáveis aos musaranhos e aos morcegos. (Is 2:19-21) "Ai daquele que diz ao pedaço de pau: 'Oh, acorda!' à pedra muda: 'Oh, desperta!'" (Hab 2:19) Os que fazem ídolos mudos tornar-se-ão iguais a eles, isto é, sem vida. — Sal 115:4-8; 135:15-18; veja Re 9:20.

Conceito sobre Idolatria. Os fiéis servos de Jeová sempre consideraram com desprezo os ídolos. Nas Escrituras, mencionam-se repetidas vezes os deuses falsos e os ídolos com termos de desprezo, como sendo imprestáveis (1Cr 16:26; Sal 96:5; 97:7), horríveis (1Rs 15:13; 2Cr 15:16), vergonhosos (Je 11:13; Os 9:10), detestáveis (Ez 16:36, 37) e repugnantes (Ez 37:23). Amiúde faz-se menção dos "ídolos sórdidos", sendo esta expressão uma tradução da palavra hebraica gil·lu·lím, que é aparentada a uma palavra que significa "esterco". (1Rs 14:10; Sof 1:17) Este termo de desprezo, que aparece inicialmente em Levítico 26:30, é encontrado quase 40 vezes apenas no livro de Ezequiel, a partir do capítulo 6, versículo 4.

O fiel Jó reconhecia que, mesmo que seu coração ficasse secretamente engodado ao contemplar os corpos celestes, tal como a lua, e sua 'mão passasse a beijar sua boca' (aparentemente aludindo a jogar um beijo com a mão numa prática idólatra), isto constituiria uma negação de Deus, assim sendo, idolatria. (Jó 31:26-28; compare isso com De 4:15, 19.) Com referência ao praticante da justiça, Jeová disse, mediante o profeta Ezequiel, que "não elevou seus olhos para os ídolos sórdidos da casa de Israel", isto é, para oferecer súplicas a eles, ou na expectativa de ajuda da parte deles. — Ez 18:5, 6.

Outro excelente exemplo de repulsa à idolatria foi dado pelos três hebreus, Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego, que, embora ameaçados de morte na fornalha ardente, recusaram-se a curvar-se diante da imagem de ouro erigida pelo Rei Nabucodonosor na planície de Dura. — Da 3.

Os primitivos cristãos atentaram ao conselho inspirado: "Fugi da idolatria" (1Co 10:14), e os fabricantes de imagens consideravam o cristianismo como uma ameaça a seu lucrativo negócio. (At 19:23-27) Conforme atestado pelos historiadores seculares, os cristãos que viviam no Império Romano, por manterem-se livres da idolatria, não raro se colocavam numa posição similar à dos três hebreus. Reconhecer o caráter divino do imperador, como cabeça do Estado, mediante o oferecimento de um pouquinho de incenso, podia ter poupado da morte a tais cristãos, mas poucos transigiram. Aqueles primitivos cristãos reconheciam plenamente que, uma vez se tendo desviado dos ídolos para servir ao verdadeiro Deus (1Te 1:9), voltar à idolatria representaria serem barrados da Nova Jerusalém e perderem o prêmio da vida. — Re 21:8; 22:14, 15.

Os servos de Jeová precisam guardar-se dos ídolos (1Jo 5:21), até mesmo hoje em dia. Foi predito que todos os habitantes da Terra sofreriam grandes pressões para adorar a "fera" simbólica e sua "imagem". Ninguém que persistir em tal adoração idólatra receberá o dom de vida eterna da parte de Deus. "Aqui é que significa perseverança para os santos." — Re 13:15-17; 14:9-12; veja ABOMINÁVEL, COISA; REPUGNANTE, COISA.

ÍDOLOS, CARNES OFERECIDAS AOS. No mundo pagão do primeiro século EC, era costumeiro oferecer carnes aos ídolos, de forma cerimonial. Em tais ocasiões, pedaços da vítima sacrificial animal eram colocados sobre o altar do ídolo; parte era para os sacerdotes, e parte era para os adoradores, que a utilizavam para uma refeição ou uma festa, seja no templo, seja num lar. Contudo, parte da carne que havia sido oferecida a ídolos muitas vezes era entregue ao má·kel·lon, ou açougue, para ser vendida.

Muitas pessoas, antes de se tornarem cristãos, estavam acostumadas a comer carnes oferecidas a ídolos, sentindo certa reverência pelo ídolo. (1Co 8:7) Ao assim procederem, estes anteriores pagãos tinham sido parceiros do deus-demônio representado pelo ídolo. (1Co 10:20) Bem apropriadamente, portanto, através duma carta formal escrita de Jerusalém, o corpo governante da primitiva congregação cristã, sob a orientação do espírito santo, proibiu este comer formal, religioso, de carnes oferecidas aos ídolos, salvaguardando assim os cristãos da idolatria, neste particular. — At 15:19-23, 28, 29.

Os cristãos, como os que moravam na Corinto pagã, viam-se confrontados por várias perguntas neste assunto. Poderiam conscienciosamente entrar num templo de ídolos e comer carne, fazendo isso sem terem nenhuma intenção de honrar ao ídolo? E, haveria qualquer objeção a comprarem no má·kel·lon carnes que haviam sido oferecidas cerimonialmente aos ídolos? Por fim, como deveria um cristão agir nesta questão quando comesse na casa de outrem, como convidado?

Sob inspiração, Paulo forneceu informações oportunas aos cristãos coríntios, a fim de ajudá-los a fazer as decisões corretas. Embora um "ídolo nada é", não seria aconselhável que o cristão entrasse num templo dum ídolo para comer carne (ainda que esse seu comer não fosse parte duma cerimônia religiosa), porque, desta forma, poderia dar a impressão errada a observadores espiritualmente fracos. Tais observadores poderiam deduzir que o cristão adorava o ídolo, e podiam tropeçar com isso. Isso poderia levar tais pessoas mais fracas ao ponto de realmente comerem carnes sacrificadas a ídolos numa cerimônia religiosa, em violação direta do decreto do corpo governante. Havia também o perigo de que o cristão, ao comer, violasse sua própria consciência e cedesse à adoração idólatra. — 1Co 8:1-13.

Uma vez que a oferta cerimonial de carnes aos ídolos não produzia nenhuma alteração da carne, o cristão poderia, contudo, com boa consciência, comprar carne num açougue que recebia alguma carne dos templos religiosos. Esta carne perdera seu significado "sagrado". Era tão boa quanto qualquer outra carne, e o cristão, por conseguinte, não estava obrigado a indagar a respeito de sua origem. — 1Co 10:25, 26.

Ademais, o cristão, ao ser convidado para uma refeição, não tinha que indagar a respeito da fonte da carne, mas podia comê-la em boa consciência. Se, contudo, uma pessoa presente à refeição observasse que a carne tinha sido 'oferecida em sacrifício', então o cristão se refrearia de comê-la, para evitar fazer com que outros tropeçassem. — 1Co 10:27-29.

As palavras do glorificado Jesus Cristo a João, sobre as congregações cristãs em Pérgamo e Tiatira, indicam que certas pessoas haviam deixado de acatar o decreto apostólico, não se mantendo isentas das coisas sacrificadas aos ídolos. — Re 2:12, 14, 18, 20.

IDUMEIA [do grego, significando "[Terra] dos edomitas"]. Nos tempos dos macabeus e dos romanos, as fronteiras geográficas da Idumeia não incluíam o coração da antiga Edom, a E do Arabá, mas abrangiam partes do que tinha anteriormente sido território de Simeão e de Judá. Conforme indicado pelo livro apócrifo de Primeiro Macabeus (4:29, 61; 5:65, BJ), a Idumeia incluía a região em torno de Hébron, chegando bem ao N, até Betsur (Bete-Zur, NM), uns 26 km a SSO de Jerusalém. Relata-se que os idumeus sofreram fragorosa derrota diante de Judas Macabeu. (1 Macabeus 5:3) Mais tarde, segundo Josefo, João Hircano I subjugou todos os idumeus, permitindo-lhes que permanecessem na terra, sob a condição de se submeterem à circuncisão e aderirem à lei judaica. Em vez de deixarem o país, os idumeus concordaram com tais condições. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIII, 257, 258 [ix, 1]) Alguns habitantes da Idumeia achavam-se entre os que pessoalmente vieram a Jesus, ao ouvirem falar de "quantas coisas fazia". — Mr 3:8; veja EDOM, EDOMITAS.

IÉZER [forma abreviada de Abiezer], IEZERITAS. Iézer é uma forma abreviada do nome Abiezer, sendo removido o prefixo "Ab" (que significa "Pai"). Ele e seus descendentes, os iezeritas, eram dos "filhos de Gileade". — Núm 26:30; veja ABIEZER N.º 1.

IFDEIAS [Que Jah Redima; Jah Redimiu]. Filho de Sasaque; cabeça da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 25, 28.

IFTÁ [forma abreviada de Iftá-El]. Cidade de Judá, na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 43) Tarqumiya, uns 10 km a ONO de Hébron, tem sido sugerida como sua possível localização.

IFTÁ-EL [Que Deus Abra; Deus Abriu]. Vale na fronteira entre as tribos de Zebulão e Aser. (Jos 19:10, 14, 24, 27) Vários lugares a NO de Nazaré têm sido sugeridos, mas a localização exata é incerta.

IGAL [Que [Deus] Redima (Recompre); [Deus] Redimiu (Recomprou)].

1. Maioral da tribo de Issacar, enviado por Moisés para espiar a terra de Canaã. — Núm 13:1-3, 7.

2. Um dos poderosos do Rei Davi; filho de Natã, de Zobá. — 2Sa 23:8, 36.

3. Homem da tribo de Judá, da linhagem real de Davi — 1Cr 3:1, 22.

IGDALIAS [Grande É Jeová]. Pai de Hanã. — Je 35:3, 4.

IIM. Veja IJIM N.º 1.

IJÉ-ABARIM [Ruínas dos Vaus (Travessias); Ruínas da Terra Fronteiriça (Regiões Além)]. Um dos lugares de acampamento de Israel no ermo. Sua localização exata é incerta, mas ficava evidentemente na fronteira sul de Moabe e perto do vale da torrente de Zerede. (Núm 21:11, 12; 33:44) Talvez Ijé-Abarim assinalasse o ponto mais ao sul da região de Abarim. (Núm 33:47, 48; veja ABARIM.) Yohanan Aharoni sugere uma identificação com el-Medeiyineh, no vau do arroio Zerede, cerca de 60 km ao S de Díbon-Gade, o próximo local de acampamento alistado. — The Land of the Bible (A Terra da Bíblia), 1979, pp. 202, 436.

IJIM [possivelmente: Montes de Ruínas].

1. Cidade no sul de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 29) Sua localização exata é incerta.

2. Aparentemente uma forma abreviada de Ijé-Abarim, local na fronteira de Moabe onde os israelitas acamparam. — Núm 33:44, 45.

IJOM. Um dos lugares tomados pelas forças militares do rei da Síria, Ben-Hadade I, durante o reinado de Baasa. (1Rs 15:20, 21; 2Cr 16:4) Uns dois séculos depois, o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III conquistou Ijom e exilou a sua população. (2Rs 15:29) Ijom é geralmente associada com Tell ed-Dibbin, cerca de 15 km a NNO de Dã.

ILAI. Aoíta; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi, aparentemente chamado de Zalmom em 2 Samuel 23:28. — 1Cr 11:26, 29.

ILEGÍTIMO. O que não está de acordo com a lei. A palavra hebraica para filho ilegítimo é mamzér, termo de etimologia incerta, possivelmente aparentado com uma palavra hebraica traduzida por "úlcera" em Jeremias 30:13 e em Oseias 5:13, e com uma palavra árabe que significa "putrefazer-se; causar náusea", indicando corrupção.

Em Deuteronômio 23:2, a Lei reza: "Nenhum filho ilegítimo pode entrar na congregação de Jeová. Mesmo até a décima geração não pode entrar ninguém seu na congregação de Jeová." O número dez representa inteireza; assim, a "décima" geração significaria que tais pessoas jamais poderiam entrar na congregação. A mesma lei é expressa a respeito dos amonitas e dos moabitas, e, ali, adicionam-se as palavras “por tempo indefinido”, o que torna claro o ponto. Contudo, os amonitas e os moabitas foram excluídos, não, como alguns afirmam, porque seus antepassados nasceram de incesto, mas por causa da atitude que mostraram para com Israel quando essa nação estava em sua jornada para a Terra Prometida. — De 23:3-6; veja AMONITAS.

A fornicação, o adultério e o incesto são detestáveis para Jeová. Sob a Lei, o adúltero e o incestuoso deviam ser mortos, e nenhuma das filhas de Israel devia tornar-se prostituta. (Le 18:6, 29; 19:29; 20:10; De 23:17) Ademais, causaria confusão, e um rompimento do arranjo familiar, caso um filho ilegítimo se tornasse herdeiro; ele não podia ter herança alguma em Israel.

Alguns comentaristas afirmam que Jefté era filho ilegítimo, mas isso não é correto. A Bíblia não diz que ele era filho ilegítimo; diz que “era filho duma mulher prostituta”. (Jz 11:1) Como Raabe, que havia sido prostituta mas se casou com o israelita Salmom, a mãe de Jefté sem dúvida casou-se honrosamente, e Jefté não era filho ilegítimo como tampouco o era o filho de Salmom e Raabe, que era ancestral carnal de Jesus Cristo. (Mt 1:5) Provavelmente, a mãe de Jefté era esposa secundária de Gileade, e Jefté talvez até mesmo tivesse sido o primogênito de Gileade. Ele não poderia ter sido membro da congregação de Israel se fosse filho ilegítimo, e seus meios-irmãos, que o expulsaram, não poderiam legalmente ter pedido que se tornasse cabeça sobre eles. (Jz 11:2, 6, 11) Que Jefté talvez tenha sido o filho duma esposa secundária não o tornaria ilegítimo. O filho duma esposa secundária tinha os mesmos direitos de herança que o filho de uma esposa favorita, como a Lei declara em Deuteronômio 21:15-17.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra nó·thos (‘filho ilegítimo’, NM; ‘bastardo’, BJ) é usada uma vez, em Hebreus 12:8. Como mostra o contexto, o escritor assemelha Deus a um pai que, por amor, disciplina seu filho. Assim, o escritor diz: “Se estais sem a disciplina de que todos se tornaram participantes, sois realmente filhos ilegítimos, e não filhos.” Os que afirmam ser filhos espirituais de Deus, mas que praticam o pecado e a desobediência, são cortados da congregação de Deus e não recebem a disciplina que Deus dá a seus filhos legítimos, para conduzi-los à perfeição.

Fogo e Incenso Ilegítimos. Em Levítico 10:1, a palavra hebraica zar (feminino, za·ráh; literalmente, estranho) é usada com referência a “fogo ilegítimo . . . que [Deus] não lhes tinha prescrito”, mas que Nadabe e Abiú, filhos de Arão, apresentaram perante Jeová, razão pela qual Jeová os executou por meio de fogo. (Le 10:2; Núm 3:4; 26:61) Subsequentemente, Jeová disse a Arão: “Não bebas vinho, nem bebida inebriante, nem tu nem teus filhos contigo, quando entrardes na tenda de reunião, para que não morrais. É um estatuto por tempo indefinido para as vossas gerações, tanto para se fazer diferença entre o santo e o profano, e entre o impuro e o puro, como para se ensinar aos filhos de Israel todos os regulamentos que Jeová lhes falou por meio de Moisés.” (Le 10:8-11) Isto parece indicar que Nadabe e Abiú estavam num estado de embriaguez, condição esta que fez que se atrevessem a oferecer fogo não prescrito. Tal fogo era provavelmente ilegítimo no que se referia à ocasião, ao local ou à maneira de oferecê-lo, ou poderia ter sido incenso diferente da composição prescrita em Êxodo 30:34, 35. Sua condição inebriada não lhes desculpou o pecado.

A mesma palavra, zar, é usada em Êxodo 30:9, com referência à queima de incenso ilegítimo sobre o altar de incenso no Lugar Santo. — Veja NM n.

ILHA. O termo hebraico 'i (plural: 'i·yím) não se restringe a uma massa terrestre menor que um continente e cercada de água por todos os lados (Is 11:11; 24:15), mas também designa a terra seca (Is 42:15), ou a área litorânea. (Is 20:6; 23:2, 6; Je 2:10) Figurativamente, a palavra 'i se aplica aos habitantes de tais ilhas ou regiões costeiras. (Gên 10:5 n; Is 49:1n; 59:18 n) Às vezes, “ilhas” representam os locais mais distantes e seus habitantes. (Is 41:5; 66:19; Ez 39:6; veja MAGOGUE N.º 2.) Assim, nada será remoto ou isolado demais, como as ilhas do mar, para escapar aos efeitos do terremoto simbólico sobre Babilônia, a Grande. (Re 16:18-21; compare isso com Re 6:12-14.) Do ponto de vista de Jeová, todas as ilhas são como “apenas pó miúdo”. — Is 40:15.

Entre as ilhas especificamente mencionadas na Bíblia acham-se Chipre (At 13:4-6), Cós, Rodes (At 21:1), Creta (At 27:7), Cauda (At 27:16), Malta (At 28:1) e Patmos (Re 1:9).

ILÍRICO. Província romana com fronteiras variáveis, localizada no NO da península Balcânica ao longo da costa do mar Adriático.

Depois que Tibério derrotou os panonianos e os dálmatas em 9 EC, a província romana de Ilírico passou a ter duas partes que, com o tempo, se tornaram duas províncias. A província do sul acabou recebendo o nome de Dalmácia.

Em Romanos 15:19, o apóstolo Paulo fala de pregar num circuito “até Ilírico”. Se o grego original deve ser entendido como significando que Paulo pregou realmente em Ilírico, ou apenas até lá, não é possível determinar com certeza.

ILUSTRAÇÕES. A expressão grega pa·ra·bo·lé (literalmente: colocar ao lado ou junto) tem maior amplitude de significado do que as palavras portuguesas "provérbio" ou "parábola". Contudo, "ilustração" abrange ampla gama de significados que pode incluir "parábola", e, em muitos casos, "provérbio". Um "provérbio" engloba uma verdade em linguagem expressiva, não raro metafórica, e uma "parábola" é uma comparação ou símile, uma narrativa breve, geralmente alegórica, da qual se tira uma verdade moral ou espiritual.

Que as Escrituras usam a palavra pa·ra·bo·lé com significado mais amplo do que o português "parábola", vê-se em Mateus 13:34, 35, onde Mateus indica que fora predito, a respeito de Jesus Cristo, que ele falaria com "ilustrações" (NM), "parábolas" (Al; BJ). O Salmo 78:2, citado por Mateus neste respeito, refere-se a uma "expressão proverbial" (hebr.: ma·shál), e, para este termo, o escritor do Evangelho utilizou a palavra grega pa·ra·bo·lé. Como subentende o significado literal do termo grego, pa·ra·bo·lé servia como meio de ensino ou de comunicação de uma ideia, como método de explicar algo por 'colocá-lo ao lado' de outra coisa similar. (Veja Mr 4:30.) A maioria das traduções em português simplesmente usa a forma aportuguesada "parábola" para traduzir este termo grego. No entanto, essa tradução não serve para transmitir o seu pleno significado em cada caso.

Por exemplo, em Hebreus 9:9 e 11:19, a maioria das traduções acha necessário recorrer a expressões diferentes de "parábola". No primeiro destes textos, o tabernáculo, ou tenda, usado por Israel no ermo é chamado pelo apóstolo Paulo de "uma ilustração [pa·ra·bo·lé; "alegoria", Al; "figura", CBC; "símbolo", BJ] para o tempo designado". No segundo texto, o apóstolo descreve Abraão como tendo recebido Isaque de volta dentre os mortos "em sentido ilustrativo" (NM) (en pa·ra·bo·lei; "e isso tem sentido figurativo", CT; "em figura", MH; "numa espécie de prefiguração", LR; "na qualidade de figura", PIB). A expressão: "Médico, cura-te a ti mesmo", também é chamada de pa·ra·bo·lé. (Lu 4:23) Assim sendo, um termo mais básico, como "ilustração" (NM), serve como tradução coerente de pa·ra·bo·lé em todos os casos.

Outro termo relacionado é "alegoria" (gr.: al·le·go·rí·a), que é uma metáfora prolongada em que uma série de ações simbolizam outras ações, ao passo que os personagens não raro são tipos ou personificações. Paulo usa o verbo grego al·le·go·ré·o (alegorizar) em Gálatas 4:24, a respeito de Abraão, Sara e Agar. Ele é traduzido "alegoria" (Al), "declaração alegórica" (AT), e "drama simbólico" (NM).

O apóstolo João também empregou um termo distinto (pa·roi·mí·a) que denota "comparação" (Jo 10:6; 16:25, 29); é traduzido de forma variada por "termos figurados", "parábolas" e "comparações" (Al; BV; CBC; NM). Pedro utilizou o mesmo termo com respeito ao "provérbio" de o cão retornar ao seu vômito, e de a porca revolver-se no lamaçal. — 2Pe 2:22.

Eficácia. Ilustrações ou parábolas quais poderosos instrumentos de ensino são eficazes em pelo menos cinco maneiras: (1) Captam e detêm a atenção; poucas coisas suscitam interesse como uma experiência ou uma história. Quem não conhece as ilustrações do filho pródigo e da ovelha perdida? (2) Estimulam a faculdade de raciocínio; um dos melhores exercícios mentais é procurar o significado duma comparação, captar as verdades abstratas que são assim apresentadas. (3) Estimulam emoções, e, pela sua aplicação prática — geralmente evidente — das verdades ao ouvinte, tocam a consciência e o coração. (4) Ajudam a memória; a pessoa pode mais tarde reconstituir a história e fazer uma aplicação dela. (5) Preservam a verdade, pois são sempre aplicáveis e entendíveis, em qualquer tempo e época. Isto se dá porque tratam da vida e de coisas naturais, ao passo que meras palavras talvez mudem de significado. Esta é uma das razões pelas quais as verdades bíblicas permanecem plenamente claras hoje, como eram na época em que foram proferidas ou escritas.

Objetivos. O objetivo primário de todas as ilustrações, conforme mostrado acima, é ensinar. Mas, as ilustrações da Bíblia também cumprem outros objetivos:

(1) O fato de a pessoa às vezes ter de ir fundo para captar o seu significado pleno, profundo e que toca o coração, tende a repelir os que não amam a Deus, mas que têm apenas interesse superficial, e, assim sendo, não desejam de coração as verdades. (Mt 13:13-15) Deus não está ajuntando tais pessoas. As ilustrações moviam os humildes a pedir mais explicações; os orgulhosos se recusavam a fazê-lo. Jesus disse: "Escute aquele que tem ouvidos", e, embora a maioria dentre as multidões que ouviam Jesus fosse embora, os discípulos vinham solicitar explicações. — Mt 13:9, 36.

(2) As ilustrações ocultam verdades daqueles que as utilizariam mal e que desejam enlaçar os servos de Deus. Jesus respondeu à pergunta capciosa dos fariseus com a ilustração da moeda dos impostos, concluindo: "Portanto, pagai de volta a César as coisas de César, mas a Deus as coisas de Deus." A seus inimigos coube fazer sua própria aplicação; os discípulos de Jesus, porém, entenderam plenamente o princípio da neutralidade ali delineado. — Mt 22:15-21.

(3) Visto que se deixa ao próprio ouvinte fazer a aplicação a si mesmo dos princípios da ilustração, ela pode transmitir-lhe clara mensagem de aviso e de censura, ao mesmo tempo desarmando-o, de modo que não disponha de base para retaliar contra o orador. Em outras palavras, como diz o ditado: 'Se a carapuça lhe couber, vista-a.' Quando os fariseus criticaram Jesus por comer junto com os cobradores de impostos e os pecadores, Jesus replicou-lhes: "As pessoas com saúde não precisam de médico, mas sim os enfermos. Ide, pois, e aprendei o que significa: 'Misericórdia quero, e não sacrifício.' Pois eu não vim chamar os que são justos, mas pecadores." — Mt 9:11-13.

(4) Mesmo quando usadas para corrigir uma pessoa, as ilustrações podem ser usadas para contornar preconceitos por parte do ouvinte, impedindo que sua mente fique ofuscada por tal preconceito, e, assim, conseguindo mais do que se conseguiria com uma simples declaração de fatos. Isto se deu quando Natã foi ouvido ao reprovar o Rei Davi pelo pecado deste, relacionado com Bate-Seba e Urias. (2Sa 12:1-14) Foi assim também quando se usou uma ilustração para fazer com que o iníquo Rei Acabe, sem se aperceber, pesasse os princípios envolvidos em sua própria ação desobediente de poupar a vida do Rei Ben-Hadade, da Síria, um inimigo de Deus, e proferisse um julgamento que condenava a ele próprio. — 1Rs 20:34, 38-43.

(5) As ilustrações podem motivar as pessoas a agir de um modo ou de outro, a 'mostrar o que realmente são', quanto a se são ou não servos genuínos de Deus. Quando Jesus disse: "Quem se alimenta de minha carne e bebe meu sangue tem vida eterna", "muitos dos seus discípulos foram embora para as coisas deixadas atrás e não andavam mais com ele". Desta forma, Jesus excluiu aqueles que realmente não criam de coração. — Jo 6:54, 60-66.

Conceito e Enfoque Corretos. As ilustrações bíblicas têm mais de um aspecto. Elas delineiam e esclarecem princípios, e, não raro, têm significado e aplicação proféticos. Ademais, algumas tinham significado profético para o tempo em que foram proferidas, ou pouco depois disso, e algumas teriam, adicionalmente, um cumprimento no futuro distante.

Há, em geral, duas concepções errôneas que podem impedir o entendimento das ilustrações da Bíblia. Uma é considerar todas as ilustrações como simplesmente boas histórias, bons exemplos ou boas lições. A parábola do filho pródigo, por exemplo, é tida por alguns como mera peça de primorosa literatura, e a ilustração do rico e do Lázaro como exemplo da recompensa e da punição após a morte.

Neste sentido, pode-se também observar que as ilustrações, embora tiradas da vida e das coisas naturais, não necessariamente ocorreram na realidade. Embora algumas ilustrações comecem com expressões como: "Aconteceu uma vez", "Um homem tinha", "Havia um homem", "Certo homem era" ou frases similares, elas foram imaginadas pelo orador sob a influência do espírito de Deus, e eram aquilo que são chamadas — ilustrações ou parábolas. (Jz 9:8; Mt 21:28, 33; Lu 16:1, 19) Sobre Jesus Cristo, diz-se: "Todas estas coisas falou Jesus às multidões por meio de ilustrações. Deveras, nada lhes falava sem ilustração." — Mt 13:34; Mr 4:33, 34.

Um segundo obstáculo ao entendimento é fazer uma aplicação minuciosa demais da ilustração, tentando fazer com que cada pormenor da narrativa dos eventos literais se enquadre simbolicamente, por meio de aplicação ou interpretação arbitrárias.

Faz-se o enfoque apropriado, primeiro, por se ler o contexto, determinando as circunstâncias em que a ilustração foi feita, perguntando: Quais eram as condições e as circunstâncias? Por exemplo, quando os governantes e o povo de Israel foram mencionados como "ditadores de Sodoma" e "povo de Gomorra", isso nos faz pensar em pessoas que eram crassos pecadores contra Jeová. (Is 1:10; Gên 13:13; 19:13, 24) Quando o salmista ora a Jeová para que faça aos inimigos de Deus e de Seu povo "como a Midiã", isso traz à mente o desarraigamento completo desses opressores do povo de Deus, mais de 120.000 deles sendo mortos. — Sal 83:2, 3, 9-11; Jz 8:10-12.

Em seguida, o conhecimento da Lei, dos usos e costumes, e da maneira de se falar naqueles dias, muitas vezes é útil. Por exemplo, o conhecimento da Lei nos ajuda a entender a ilustração da rede de arrasto. (Mt 13:47-50) Serem as árvores frutíferas submetidas a impostos na Palestina, naquele tempo, e serem abatidas as árvores improdutivas, ajuda-nos a entender por que Jesus fez com que a figueira infrutífera se secasse, de modo a utilizá-la para fins ilustrativos. — Mt 21:18-22.

Por fim, não se deve atribuir aos fatores duma ilustração um significado arbitrário, obtido através dum conceito pessoal ou da filosofia. Para os cristãos, estabelece-se a regra: "Ninguém veio a saber as coisas de Deus, exceto o espírito de Deus. Ora, não recebemos o espírito do mundo, mas o espírito que é de Deus, para que soubéssemos as coisas que nos foram dadas bondosamente por Deus. Destas coisas também falamos, não com palavras ensinadas pela sabedoria humana, mas com as ensinadas pelo espírito, ao combinarmos assuntos espirituais com palavras espirituais." — 1Co 2:11-13.

Uma aplicação dessa regra pode ser demonstrada considerando-se a ilustração profética em Revelação (Apocalipse), capítulo 6. Um cavalo branco é o primeiro de quatro ali mencionados. (Re 6:2) O que simboliza ele? Podemos recorrer a outras partes da Bíblia, bem como ao contexto, para captar o significado. Provérbios 21:31 diz: "O cavalo é algo preparado para o dia da batalha." O branco muitas vezes é usado para simbolizar a justiça. O trono de julgamento de Deus é branco; os exércitos no céu montam cavalos brancos e estão trajados de linho branco, limpo e fino. (Re 20:11; 19:14; compare isso com Re 6:11; 19:8.) Podemos concluir, pois, que o cavalo branco representa guerra justa.

O cavaleiro da montaria preta tem uma balança, com a qual se pesam gêneros alimentícios. (Re 6:5, 6) O que se prefigura aqui, evidentemente, é a fome, pois, na profecia da fome, de Ezequiel, foi-lhe dito: "Teu alimento que comerás será por peso . . . e eles terão de comer pão por peso e em ansiedade, e será por medida e em horror que beberão a própria água." (Ez 4:10, 16) Não raro, compreendendo o uso simbólico bíblico, como no caso de animais mencionados em ilustrações, pode-se obter ajuda e luz espiritual. — Veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

Bom número de ilustrações são compreendidas por causa da explicação que a própria Bíblia dá, não raro seguida duma narrativa de eventos em cumprimento delas. Entre estas, para mencionar duas: Ezequiel abrir um buraco numa parede e sair com a face coberta (Ez 12:1-16; 2Rs 25:1-7, 11; Je 52:1-15), bem como a tentativa de Abraão de sacrificar Isaque mas recebê-lo de volta pela intervenção de Deus (essas ilustrações eram também ocorrências reais, executadas em forma de drama). (Gên 22:9-13; He 11:19) Outras, em especial muitas feitas por Jesus Cristo, são depois explicadas pelo próprio Jesus. Em muitos casos, o entendimento das ilustrações da Bíblia é facilitado por eventos atuais em cumprimento delas.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Os profetas e os escritores bíblicos hebreus, movidos pelo espírito de Deus, registraram inúmeras boas ilustrações. Aparece linguagem ilustrativa em Gênesis, na promessa de Jeová de que ele multiplicaria a semente de Abraão "como as estrelas dos céus e como os grãos de areia que há à beira do mar". (Gên 22:15-18) Para frisar a triste aflição à qual o pecado levara seu povo em Judá, Jeová induziu Isaías a compará-la a um repugnante estado de doença física, dizendo: "A cabeça inteira está numa condição doentia e o coração inteiro está débil. . . . Ferimentos e contusões, e vergões novos — não foram espremidos nem pensados, nem houve qualquer amolecimento com óleo." (Is 1:4-6) Ao Rei Nabucodonosor, Jeová transmitiu mensagens proféticas com visões de uma enorme estátua e uma árvore muito alta, e Daniel viu certos governos da terra serem representados como animais. — Da caps. 2, 4, 7.

Frequentemente, os profetas usaram uma palavra ou uma expressão ao falarem de uma pessoa ou de um grupo, visando conferir as características delas ao indivíduo ou ao grupo, isto é, metaforicamente. Por exemplo, Jeová é descrito como "a Rocha de Israel", como "rochedo" e como "fortaleza", transmitindo assim a ideia de que Deus é uma sólida fonte de segurança. (2Sa 23:3; Sal 18:2) Fala-se de Judá como sendo "um leãozinho". (Gên 49:9) Fala-se dos assírios como sendo "o bastão" da ira de Deus. — Is 10:5.

Em numerosas ocasiões, os profetas representaram em mímica as mensagens que haviam sido comissionados a transmitir, reforçando assim o impacto da palavra falada. Jeremias predisse a calamidade para Jerusalém e enfatizou-a quebrando uma botija diante dos olhos dos anciãos do povo e dos sacerdotes reunidos. Predisse a servidão a Babilônia, e tornou isto vívido enviando ligaduras e cangas a vários reis. (Je caps. 19, 27) Isaías perambulou nu e descalço para salientar aos israelitas que seria dessa maneira que os egípcios e os etíopes, para os quais se voltavam por ajuda, seriam conduzidos ao exílio. (Is 20) Ezequiel gravou num tijolo uma ilustração de Jerusalém, construiu um muro de sítio contra ela, colocou uma assadeira de ferro entre ele e a representação, e deitou-se de lado para encará-la a fim de retratar o vindouro sítio de Jerusalém. — Ez 4.

Às vezes, relatavam-se histórias para destacar o ponto a ser transmitido. Jotão fez isso para mostrar aos proprietários de terras de Siquém a tolice deles em escolher um homem tão vil como Abimeleque para seu rei. (Jz 9:7-20) No livro de Ezequiel, há um relato que envolve duas águias e uma videira, a fim de ilustrar o proceder de Judá com relação a Babilônia e ao Egito. (Ez 17) Similarmente, Ezequiel usou duas irmãs, Oolá e Oolibá, que se tornaram prostitutas, para ilustrar o proceder de Samaria (o reino de dez tribos de Israel) e de Jerusalém (Judá). — Ez 23.

As ilustrações mencionadas aqui são apenas algumas das muitas ilustrações das Escrituras Hebraicas. Virtualmente todo escritor e profeta bíblico empregou ilustrações, algumas sendo-lhes fornecidas diretamente pelo próprio Deus, em forma de visões, algumas em palavras, e outras por meio de realidades tangíveis, como, por exemplo, o tabernáculo, que é chamado de "ilustração". — He 9:9.

Nas Escrituras Gregas. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs também estão repletas de ilustrações vívidas. De Jesus Cristo, se disse: "Nunca homem algum falou como este." Dentre todos os humanos que já viveram na terra, ele dispunha dos maiores recursos de conhecimento aos quais recorrer. (Jo 7:46) Ele é aquele por meio de quem tudo foi feito, por Deus. (Jo 1:1-3; Col 1:15-17) Estava intimamente familiarizado com toda a criação. Compreensivelmente, pois, suas comparações eram mui apropriadas e sua representação das emoções humanas refletia profundo entendimento. Ele era semelhante ao sábio do passado, que disse: "E além do fato de que o congregante se tornara sábio, ele ensinou também ao povo continuamente o conhecimento, e ponderou e fez uma investigação cabal, a fim de pôr em ordem muitos provérbios. O congregante procurou achar palavras deleitosas e a escrita de palavras corretas de verdade." — Ec 12:9, 10.

Jesus apropriadamente identificou seus discípulos como "o sal da terra" e "a luz do mundo". (Mt 5:13, 14) Ele instou-os a 'observar atentamente as aves do céu' e a 'aprender uma lição dos lírios do campo'. (Mt 6:26-30) Comparou-se a um pastor disposto a morrer por suas ovelhas. (Jo 10:11-15) A Jerusalém, ele disse: "Quantas vezes quis eu ajuntar os teus filhos, assim como a galinha ajunta os seus pintinhos debaixo de suas asas! Mas vós não o quisestes." (Mt 23:37) A hipócritas líderes religiosos, ele chamou de "guias cegos, que coais o mosquito, mas engolis o camelo!" (Mt 23:24) E a respeito de alguém que fizesse tropeçar outros, ele declarou: "Seria mais proveitoso para ele que se lhe pendurasse no pescoço uma mó e que fosse lançado no mar." — Lu 17:1, 2.

Ao passo que as ilustrações usadas por Jesus talvez fossem breves e sucintas expressões, similares às expressões proverbiais encontradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas, eram usualmente mais compridas e, não raro, tinham a extensão e o caráter duma história. Jesus geralmente baseava suas ilustrações na criação ao redor, nos costumes familiares da vida cotidiana, em acontecimentos casuais ou em situações não impossíveis, e nos eventos recentes, bem conhecidos por seus ouvintes.

Algumas das principais ilustrações de Jesus. Na matéria que segue, encontrará informações úteis a respeito do fundo e do contexto de 30 das ilustrações usadas por Jesus Cristo em seu ministério terrestre, e que foram registradas pelos escritores dos Evangelhos:

(1) Os dois devedores (Lu 7:41-43). O objetivo da parábola dos dois devedores, um dos quais devia dez vezes mais do que o outro, bem como a aplicação da parábola, acham-se no contexto, em Lucas 7:36-40, 44-50.

A ilustração foi motivada pela atitude de Simão, anfitrião de Jesus, para com a mulher que entrou e untou os pés de Jesus com óleo perfumado. A presença de tal pessoa não convidada não era considerada incomum, pois parece que, em algumas ocasiões, pessoas não convidadas podiam entrar no aposento, durante uma refeição, e sentar-se junto à parede, dali conversando com os que se reclinavam à mesa, no centro do aposento. Jesus fez uma aplicação apropriada da situação dos dois devedores, indicando que Simão tinha deixado de suprir água para seus pés, de saudá-lo com um beijo e de untar-lhe a cabeça com óleo; estas eram cortesias costumeiramente demonstradas a um convidado. Mas a mulher que tinha muitos pecados mostrou maior amor e hospitalidade para com Jesus, embora não fosse sua anfitriã. Ele então lhe disse: "Teus pecados estão perdoados."

(2) O semeador (Mt 13:3-8; Mr 4:3-8; Lu 8:5-8). Na própria ilustração não há indícios de sua interpretação, mas a explicação é fornecida claramente em Mateus 13:18-23; Marcos 4:14-20 e Lucas 8:11-15. Focaliza-se a atenção nas circunstâncias que influem no solo, ou coração, e nas influências que podem impedir o crescimento da semente, ou a palavra do Reino.

A semeadura era feita de várias maneiras naqueles dias. Uma maneira comum era o semeador carregar um saco de sementes a tiracolo e amarrado na cintura; outros formavam um bolso para as sementes com uma parte de suas vestes exteriores. Espalhavam amplamente as sementes com a mão, à medida que caminhavam. As sementes eram cobertas o mais rapidamente possível, antes que as gralhas e os corvos as apanhassem. Mas, quando o lavrador deixava trilhas sem arar entre os campos, ou se alguma semente caísse em solo duro ao longo da estrada, as aves comiam as sementes que ali caíam. "Os lugares pedregosos" não eram simplesmente locais em que havia pedras espalhadas no solo; mas, como diz Lucas 8:6, a semente caiu sobre a "rocha", ou saliência oculta de rocha, sobre a qual havia bem pouco solo. As plantas dessas sementes logo murchariam ao sol. O solo em que havia espinhos evidentemente havia sido arado, mas não se lhe haviam tirado as ervas daninhas, que cresceram e sufocaram as sementes recém-plantadas. A declarada produção das sementes produtivas — cem, sessenta e trinta vezes mais — está bem dentro do razoável. A semeadura e os vários tipos de solo eram coisas que os ouvintes de Jesus conheciam bem.

(3) Joio entre o trigo (Mt 13:24-30). Jesus forneceu a explicação, conforme registrada em Mateus 13:36-43, contrastando o "trigo", ou "filhos do reino", com o "joio", os "filhos do iníquo".

Semear joio por cima de um campo de trigo é um ato de inimizade não desconhecido no Oriente Médio. O mencionado "joio" em geral se supõe ser a venenosa erva Lolium temulentum, sendo que geralmente se acredita que as suas propriedades venenosas se originam de um fungo que cresce dentro dessas sementes. Tem aparência muito similar à do trigo até atingir a maturidade, mas, daí, pode ser prontamente identificada. Se consumida, pode resultar em tonturas e, sob certas circunstâncias, até mesmo na morte. Visto que as raízes dessa erva daninha prontamente se entrelaçam com as raízes do trigo, arrancá-las antes da colheita, mesmo se pudessem ser identificadas, resultaria em perda de trigo.

(4) O grão de mostarda (Mt 13:31, 32; Mr 4:30-32; Lu 13:18, 19). Declara-se que o assunto é "o reino dos céus". Conforme se mostra em outros textos, isto pode referir-se a alguma particularidade com relação ao Reino. Nesse caso, a ilustração destaca duas coisas: (1) o incrível crescimento da mensagem do Reino e (2) a proteção que é dada aos que aceitam essa mensagem.

O grão de mostarda era diminuto e, assim, podia ser usado para designar qualquer coisa extremamente pequena. (Lu 17:6) Quando plenamente desenvolvidas, algumas mostardeiras realmente atingem uma altura de 3 a 4,5 m, e seus ramos são robustos, tornando-se assim virtualmente uma "árvore", como Jesus disse. Fazendo uma comparação, a congregação cristã começou de um jeito bem pequeno no Pentecostes de 33 EC. Mas, no primeiro século, ela cresceu rapidamente. E hoje os ramos dessa "árvore" têm se expandido de maneira impressionante. — Is 60:22.

(5) O fermento (Mt 13:33). Novamente, o assunto é "o reino dos céus". As "três grandes medidas" são três sá·ta, isto é, três seás, totalizando cerca de 22 l de farinha. A quantidade de fermento seria comparativamente pequena, mas que afetaria tudo o que está a sua volta. O que podemos aprender sobre o Reino de Deus com essa ilustração? Assim como o fermento, o crescimento espiritual relacionado com o Reino é constante e se espalha em todas as direções, mesmo que muitas vezes não seja visto pelas pessoas. Como fermento colocado numa porção grande de farinha, a obra de pregação, que causa o crescimento espiritual das pessoas, tem se expandido tanto que hoje o Reino está sendo pregado "até à parte mais distante da terra". — At 1:8.

(6) O tesouro escondido (Mt 13:44). Proferida por Jesus, não às multidões, mas sim a seus próprios discípulos. (Mt 13:36) Conforme declarado no texto, o assunto é "o reino dos céus", que traz alegria a quem o acha; exige que tal pessoa faça mudanças e ajustes na vida e busque o Reino em primeiro lugar, renunciando a tudo em troca dele.

(7) O comerciante que procurava pérolas (Mt 13:45, 46). Proferida por Jesus a seus discípulos. Ele assemelha o Reino dos céus a uma pérola excelente, de tão grande valor que um homem vende todos os seus bens para adquiri-la.

Pérolas são gemas preciosas encontradas em conchas de ostras e de certos outros moluscos. Nem todas as pérolas são "excelentes", contudo; algumas talvez não sejam de um branco translúcido, mas sim amarelas, ou talvez tenham uma coloração escura, ou talvez não sejam lisas. Entre os antigos no Oriente Médio, a pérola era prezada e trazia deleite a seu possuidor. Nesta ilustração, o comerciante procurava pérolas; ele teve o discernimento de perceber o valor superior desta e dispunha-se a dar-se ao trabalho de tomar todas as providências necessárias e desfazer-se de tudo o mais a fim de adquiri-la. — Veja Lu 14:33; Fil 3:8.

(8) A rede de arrasto (Mt 13:47-50). Com esta ilustração, Jesus descreve uma separação, ou exclusão, dos desqualificados para o Reino dos céus. O versículo 49 aponta para "a terminação do sistema de coisas" como o tempo em que o cumprimento culmina.

Rede de arrasto é um entrelaçamento de cordas de linho ou outro material destinada a ser arrastada ao longo do fundo de um corpo de água. Por meio dela, todo o tipo de peixes seriam recolhidos. A ilustração era muito apropriada para os discípulos de Jesus, alguns dos quais eram pescadores. Eles bem sabiam que alguns peixes eram imprestáveis e tinham de ser descartados porque, não tendo barbatanas nem escamas, eram impuros e não serviam para o consumo, segundo a Lei mosaica. — Le 11:9-12; De 14:9, 10.

(9) O escravo sem misericórdia (Mt 18:23-35). A situação que levou Jesus a fazer essa ilustração apresenta-se em Mateus 18:21, 22, e a aplicação é expressa no versículo 35. Sublinha quão ínfimas são as dívidas de nosso próximo para conosco em comparação com a nossa dívida para com Deus. A ilustração inculca em nós, pecadores humanos, aos quais Deus perdoa uma dívida tão imensa por meio do sacrifício de Cristo, a necessidade de concedermos o perdão pelos pecados relativamente insignificantes que o nosso próximo cometa contra nós.

Um denário equivalia a um dia de salário; portanto, 100 denários, a dívida menor, equivaliam aproximadamente a um terço do salário de um ano. Dez mil talentos de prata, a dívida maior, correspondia a 60 milhões de denários, ou um salário que exigiria milhares de períodos de vida para acumular. O enorme montante da quantia devida ao rei avalia-se do fato de que, segundo Josefo, em seus dias os territórios da Judeia, Idumeia e Samaria e certas cidades juntas pagavam impostos que somavam 600 talentos por ano; a Galileia e a Pereia pagavam 200. O próprio Jesus (no versículo 35), declara o princípio expresso na parábola: "Do mesmo modo lidará também convosco o meu Pai celestial, se não perdoardes de coração cada um ao seu irmão."

(10) O prestimoso samaritano (Lu 10:30-37). O cenário, registrado em Lucas 10:25-29, mostra que a ilustração foi feita em resposta à pergunta: "Quem é realmente o meu próximo?" A conclusão apropriada a ser tirada da ilustração é indicada nos versículos 36 e 37.

A estrada de Jerusalém a Jericó atravessava uma área agreste e isolada, cenário de frequentes assaltos. A situação era tão ruim que, com o tempo, foi estacionada ali uma guarnição, para proteger os viajantes. A cidade de Jericó do primeiro século situava-se a uns 21 km a ENE de Jerusalém. Para identificar o "próximo" para com quem a Lei ordenava o exercício do amor, Jesus falou das reações de um sacerdote e de um levita para com um homem que havia sido assaltado e deixado semimorto. Os sacerdotes eram homens designados a oferecer sacrifícios no templo em Jerusalém, e os levitas os ajudavam. Os samaritanos reconheciam a Lei, conforme expressa no Pentateuco, mas os judeus não eram prestimosos para com eles, de fato, não queriam ter tratos com eles. (Jo 4:9) Tratavam os samaritanos com grande desprezo (Jo 8:48), e havia judeus que os amaldiçoavam publicamente em suas sinagogas, e diariamente oravam a Deus para que os samaritanos não usufruíssem a vida eterna. Azeite e vinho, derramados sobre as feridas do homem, eram costumeiramente usados para fins curativos. Os dois denários que o samaritano deixou com o hospedeiro para os cuidados do ferido, equivaliam a cerca do salário de dois dias. — Mt 20:2.

(11) O amigo persistente (Lu 11:5-8). Esta ilustração fazia parte da resposta de Jesus ao pedido de instruções sobre como orar, feito por seus discípulos. (Lu 11:1-4) Como mostram os versículos 9 e 10, o ponto a ser aprendido disso não é que Deus fique incomodado com nossas solicitações, mas sim que Ele espera que persistamos em pedir.

A hospitalidade é um dever que os povos do Oriente primam em cumprir. Mesmo que o convidado chegasse inesperadamente à meia-noite, talvez devido às incertezas das viagens naquele tempo, seu anfitrião sentir-se-ia compelido a fornecer-lhe alimento. Visto que não raro era difícil determinar exatamente quanto pão se precisava assar para suprir as necessidades duma família, os vizinhos costumavam pedi-lo emprestado entre si. Neste caso, o vizinho tinha ido dormir. Visto que algumas casas, especialmente as dos pobres, talvez consistissem em apenas um cômodo amplo, levantar-se ele perturbaria toda a família, daí a sua relutância em atender o pedido.

(12) O rico desarrazoado (Lu 12:16-21). Esta ilustração fazia parte da resposta de Jesus a um homem que lhe pedira que arbitrasse uma disputa sobre herança. Conforme indicado no versículo 15, o ponto destacado é que, "mesmo quando alguém tem abundância, sua vida não vem das coisas que possui". Compare isso com o que Jesus passou a dizer a seus discípulos, a partir do versículo 22.

A Lei exigia que duas partes de tudo que pertencesse ao pai fosse herdada pelo filho mais velho. (De 21:17) Aparentemente, a disputa surgiu por não se respeitar essa lei; daí o aviso contra a cobiça.

(13) A figueira improdutiva (Lu 13:6-9). Proferida em fins de 32 EC, três anos completos após o batismo de Jesus. Acabara de chegar a notícia de que Pilatos mandara matar alguns galileus. Jesus tinha também citado o caso da morte de 18 pessoas, sobre as quais desabara a torre de Siloé, e disse ao povo que, a menos que se arrependessem, seriam todos destruídos. (Lu 13:1-5) Daí, prosseguiu usando esta ilustração.

Era comum plantar tanto figueiras como oliveiras no meio dos vinhedos, a certos intervalos, de modo que, mesmo quando os vinhedos tivessem uma safra ruim, haveria uma certa renda. Novas árvores que provêm de mudas geralmente produzem pelo menos alguns figos em dois ou três anos. O paralelo entre os três anos mencionados na ilustração e os três anos que já haviam decorrido do ministério de Jesus era evidentemente significativo. Como item tributável, era uma carga, de modo que merecia ser destruída.

(14) A lauta refeição noturna (Lu 14:16-24). Os versículos 1-15 dão o cenário; numa refeição, a ilustração foi feita a um conviva, que dissera: "Feliz é aquele que comer pão no reino de Deus."

Era costumeiro avisar às pessoas previamente convidadas a uma festa quando a refeição estava realmente pronta. Aqueles que se escusaram a ir a esta lauta refeição noturna preferiram empenhar-se por outros interesses que, normalmente, pareceriam ser bem razoáveis. Contudo, suas respostas indicavam que não tinham real desejo de estar presentes, nem demonstravam a devida consideração pelo anfitrião. A maioria dos que foram convidados depois, os pobres, os aleijados, os coxos e os cegos, e outros que foram por fim trazidos, eram pessoas encaradas pelo mundo em geral como indignas. — Veja o v 13.

(15) A ovelha perdida (Lu 15:3-7). Lucas 15:1, 2 mostra que a ilustração foi motivada por murmúrios dos fariseus e dos escribas por Jesus acolher pecadores e cobradores de impostos. Mateus 18:12-14 registra uma ilustração similar, proferida numa ocasião diferente.

Os cobradores de impostos, especialmente os que eram judeus, eram odiados porque sua ocupação era coletar impostos para os odiados romanos. Eram desprezados. A ilustração de Jesus sobre a ovelha perdida era tal que seus ouvintes podiam prontamente reconhecer pela experiência cotidiana. Uma ovelha perdida torna-se desvalida; é o pastor que a procura para recuperá-la. A alegria que há no céu por causa de um pecador que se arrepende está em marcante contraste com o murmúrio dos escribas e dos fariseus quanto ao interesse que Jesus demonstrava por tais pessoas.

(16) A dracma perdida (Lu 15:8-10). O cenário se encontra em Lucas 15:1, 2, e esta ilustração segue de imediato a da ovelha perdida. O versículo 10 indica a aplicação.

Uma dracma valia 65 centavos de dólar, quase o salário de um dia. No entanto, esta moeda perdida pode ter tido valor especial como parte dum conjunto de dez, talvez como bem de família ou parte duma corrente muito apreciada, usada como adorno. Foi necessário acender uma lâmpada para procurá-la, porque a abertura para iluminação, duma casa, quando existente, era usualmente bem pequena, e varrer o chão seria de ajuda em procurá-la, porque o piso geralmente era de chão batido.

(17) O filho pródigo (Lu 15:11-32). Os fariseus e os escribas murmuravam porque Jesus acolhia cobradores de impostos e pecadores, e comia junto com eles. Jesus respondeu-lhes proferindo as ilustrações da ovelha perdida e da moeda perdida, seguidas por esta parábola.

A herança do filho mais novo equivalia à metade do que cabia ao irmão mais velho, segundo a lei judaica. (De 21:17) Assim como o filho mais novo foi para um país distante, assim também os judeus consideravam os cobradores de impostos como os tendo abandonado para servir a Roma. Ser obrigado a cuidar de porcos era degradante para um judeu, uma vez que tais animais eram impuros segundo a Lei. (Le 11:7) Ao retornar para casa, o filho mais novo pediu para ser aceito, não como filho, mas como trabalhador contratado. Tal trabalhador nem mesmo era parte da propriedade, como os escravos, mas era um estranho contratado, não raro um diarista. (Mt 20:1, 2, 8) O pai mandou trazer para o filho mais novo uma veste comprida, a melhor que houvesse. Não se tratava duma simples peça de vestimenta, mas, provavelmente, era uma rica veste bordada, como a que era apresentada a um convidado mui honrado. O anel e as sandálias eram, possivelmente, sinais de dignidade e de um homem livre.

(18) O mordomo injusto (Lu 16:1-8). A lição a ser tirada dessa ilustração é declarada nos versículos 9-13. O mordomo é elogiado, não por sua injustiça, mas por sua sabedoria prática.

O mordomo era encarregado dos assuntos de seu amo; era uma posição de alta confiança. (Gên 24:2; 39:4) Na ilustração de Jesus, ser o mordomo despedido significava que estava sendo mandado embora da casa, sem nenhum meio de sustento. A redução que fez nas dívidas dos devedores de seu amo não lhe trouxe nenhum dinheiro, mas foi feita para granjear amigos que talvez pudessem favorecê-lo no futuro. Cem batos de azeite equivaliam a 2.200 l, e cem coros de trigo totalizavam 22.000 l.

(19) O rico e Lázaro (Lu 16:19-31). O cenário, em Lucas 16:14, 15, mostra que os fariseus amantes do dinheiro estavam escutando e escarnecendo. Mas Jesus lhes disse: "Vós sois os que vos declarais justos perante os homens, mas Deus conhece os vossos corações; porque aquilo que é altivo entre os homens é uma coisa repugnante à vista de Deus."

A roupa "de púrpura e de linho" que o rico usava comparava-se à vestimenta usada apenas por príncipes, nobres e sacerdotes. (Est 8:15; Gên 41:42; Êx 28:4, 5) Era caríssima. O Hades, para onde se diz que o homem rico foi, é a sepultura comum da humanidade morta. Que não se pode concluir dessa parábola que o próprio Hades é um lugar de fogo ardente é tornado claro em Revelação 20:14, onde a morte e o Hades são descritos como sendo lançados no "lago de fogo". A morte do rico e estar ele no Hades deve, portanto, ser figurativo, sendo que morte figurativa é mencionada em outras partes das Escrituras. (Lu 9:60; Col 2:13; 1Ti 5:6) Assim, ele sofreu o tormento ardente enquanto figurativamente estava morto, mas, na realidade, vivo qual humano. O fogo é usado na Palavra de Deus para descrever Suas mensagens de julgamento ardente (Je 5:14; 23:29), e diz-se que a obra dos profetas de Deus de declarar Seus julgamentos 'atormenta' os que se opõem a Deus e a seus servos. — Re 11:7, 10.

Lázaro é uma forma grecizada do nome hebraico Eleazar, que significa "Deus Ajudou". Os cães que lambiam as suas feridas aparentemente eram do tipo que perambulavam pelas ruas e se alimentavam de carniça, sendo considerados impuros. Estar Lázaro na posição junto ao seio de Abraão indica que ele estava numa posição de favor (veja Jo 1:18), sendo que esta figura de linguagem se deriva da prática de se reclinar às refeições de tal modo que a pessoa podia recostar-se no peito de um amigo. — Jo 13:23-25.

(20) Escravos imprestáveis (Lu 17:7-10). O versículo 10 mostra a lição a ser tirada desta ilustração.

Os escravos que trabalhavam nos campos de seu amo não raro serviam também a sua ceia. Não só lhes era natural esperar até que seu amo tivesse acabado de comer, antes de se servirem, mas, muitas vezes, qual deles teria a honra de servi-lo era uma questão de disputa. Não se considerava isso como carga extra, mas sim como algo a que seu amo tinha direito.

(21) A viúva e o juiz (Lu 18:1-8). Conforme declarado no versículo 1, a ilustração era "a respeito da necessidade de sempre orarem e de nunca desistirem". Os versículos 7 e 8 também mostram a aplicação. Essa ilustração, que acentua a necessidade de orar, era especialmente apropriada, em vista do que se diz no capítulo precedente, versículos 20 a 37.

Pelo que parece, o juiz não estava ligado a um tribunal judaico. No primeiro século havia quatro tribunais judaicos: (1) o tribunal da aldeia, constituído de três homens; (2) um tribunal constituído de sete anciãos da aldeia; (3) em Jerusalém havia tribunais de menor instância, constituídos de 23 pessoas cada um, e tais tribunais eram estabelecidos nas cidades de suficiente tamanho por toda a Palestina; e (4) o tribunal principal, o Grande Sinédrio, constituído de 71 membros, com sede em Jerusalém e com autoridade sobre toda a nação. (Veja TRIBUNAL DE JUSTIÇA.) O juiz da ilustração, porém, não se enquadra no arranjo judicial judaico em que oficiava uma corte de pelo menos três homens; assim, deve ter sido um dos juízes ou magistrados policiais designados pelos romanos. Diz-se com clareza que ele não temia a Deus, tampouco era movido pela preocupação com a opinião pública. A ilustração não diz que Deus seja como o juiz injusto; em vez disso, contrasta Deus com tal juiz. Se este juiz finalmente faria o que era justo, quanto mais Deus o faria! A persistência da viúva induziu o juiz injusto a agir; da mesma forma, os servos de Deus devem persistir em oração. Deus, que é justo, responderá às suas orações, fazendo com que se faça justiça.

(22) O autojusto fariseu e o penitente cobrador de impostos (Lu 18:9-14). O cenário e o objetivo desta ilustração se encontram nos versículos 9 e 14 , respectivamente.

Os que se dirigiam ao templo para orar não entravam no Santo nem no Santíssimo, mas permitia-se-lhes entrar nos pátios circunvizinhos. Estes homens, judeus, provavelmente se achavam em pé no pátio exterior, o Pátio das Mulheres, como era chamado. Os fariseus eram orgulhosos e se julgavam justos, considerando com desprezo os outros homens. (Jo 7:47, 49) Jejuavam duas vezes por semana, embora a Lei mosaica não exigisse isso. Segundo se diz, os dias que escolhiam para isso eram os dias normais de mercado, ocasião em que muitas pessoas estariam na cidade, quando se realizavam ofícios especiais nas sinagogas e quando o Sinédrio local se reunia; assim, a piedade deles seria observada. (Mt 6:16; compare isso com 10:17 n.) Os cobradores de impostos judeus tinham permissão de ir ao templo, mas eram odiados pelo serviço que prestavam a Roma.

(23) Os trabalhadores a quem se pagou um denário (Mt 20:1-16). A ilustração faz parte da resposta de Jesus à pergunta de Pedro em Mateus 19:27: "Eis que abandonamos todas as coisas e te seguimos; o que haverá realmente para nós?" Observe também Mateus 19:30 e 20:16.

A época da vindima é uma ocasião de ansiedade para os donos de vinhedos. Alguns trabalhadores são empregados para trabalhar durante toda a colheita; outros são contratados conforme surge a necessidade. O pagamento dos salários no fim do dia estava em harmonia com a Lei mosaica; era uma necessidade para os trabalhadores pobres. (Le 19:13; De 24:14, 15) O denário, que era o pagamento do trabalho de um dia, era uma moeda romana de prata. Seu valor atual seria de 74 centavos de dólar. No primeiro século EC, o dia, do nascer do sol até o ocaso, era dividido pelos judeus em doze partes iguais; assim, a 3.ª hora seria por volta das 8 às 9 horas; a 6.ª hora, por volta das 11 horas até o meio-dia; a 9.ª hora, cerca das 14 às 15 horas; e a 11.ª hora, por volta das 16 às 17 horas.

(24) As minas (Lu 19:11-27). Proferida quando Jesus se dirigia a Jerusalém pela última vez, em 33 EC. (Lu 19:1, 28) O motivo desta ilustração, conforme declarado no versículo 11, era que "estavam imaginando que o reino de Deus ia apresentar-se instantaneamente".

No Império Romano, era comum alguém de ascendência nobre viajar a Roma em busca de poder régio. Arquelau, filho de Herodes, o Grande, fizera isto, mas os judeus enviaram 50 embaixadores à corte de Augusto para suscitar acusações contra ele e, se possível, frustrar-lhe a busca de poder. As minas de prata que foram inicialmente dadas a cada um dos escravos valeriam hoje US$ 65,40 cada uma, mas equivaliam então ao salário de 88 dias.

(25) Os dois filhos (Mt 21:28-31). Proferida no templo de Jerusalém, esta ilustração fazia parte da resposta de Jesus às perguntas constantes no versículo 23 : "Com que autoridade fazes estas coisas? E quem te deu esta autoridade?" Tendo lidado com as perguntas dos líderes religiosos, Jesus usou algumas ilustrações para mostrar-lhes que espécie de pessoas eles realmente eram.

Jesus aponta a aplicação de sua ilustração nos versículos 31 e 32. Indica que os principais sacerdotes e anciãos de influência a quem ele se dirigia eram comparáveis ao segundo filho, professando servir a Deus, mas, na verdade, não o fazendo. Por outro lado, os cobradores de impostos e as meretrizes que criam em João, o Batizador, eram como o primeiro filho; de início rudemente se recusaram a servir a Deus, mas, depois, lamentaram isto e mudaram de proceder.

(26) Os lavradores assassinos (Mt 21:33-44; Mr 12:1-11; Lu 20:9-18). Proferida no templo em Jerusalém, apenas três dias antes de Jesus, o Filho de Deus, ser morto. Esta ilustração também foi proferida em resposta à pergunta sobre a fonte da autoridade de Jesus. (Mr 11:27-33) Imediatamente depois da ilustração, os relatos dos Evangelhos declaram que os líderes religiosos compreenderam que ele falava a respeito deles. — Mt 21:45; Mr 12:12; Lu 20:19.

A cerca em volta do vinhedo poderia ter sido de pedra (Pr 24:30, 31), ou poderia ter sido uma cerca viva. (Is 5:5) O lagar de vinho era em muitos casos escavado na rocha e consistia em dois níveis, o suco fluindo do superior para o inferior. A torre era um ponto de vigília para o guarda, que devia afastar os ladrões e os animais. Em alguns casos, os lavradores empregados recebiam uma parcela dos frutos. Em outros casos, os cultivadores arrendavam o terreno ou concordavam em dar ao dono uma certa quantidade dos produtos, sendo este último, aparentemente, o caso na ilustração. Por assassinarem o filho, o herdeiro, talvez pensassem em apoderar-se do vinhedo, uma vez que aquele que o plantara estava ausente do país. Em Isaías 5:1-7, diz-se que o "vinhedo de Jeová" é "a casa de Israel". Conforme indicado pelos escritores dos Evangelhos, Jesus citou o Salmo 118:22, 23, como a chave para se entender esta ilustração.

(27) A festa de casamento do filho do rei (Mt 22:1-14). Conforme indicado pelo versículo 1, esta ilustração é uma sequência da consideração que a antecede, e é parte da resposta de Jesus à pergunta sobre com que autoridade ele cumpria sua obra. (Mt 21:23-27) Quanto à sua aplicação, note os versículos 2 e 14 .

Alguns meses antes disso, Jesus usara uma ilustração similar a respeito duma grande refeição noturna à qual muitos foram convidados; os convidados então mostraram preocupação com outros assuntos e desconsideração para com seu prospectivo anfitrião. (Lu 14:16-24) Agora, apenas três dias antes de sua morte, Jesus fala não só sobre a falta de vontade de comparecer, mas também de um espírito assassino da parte de alguns convidados. Assassinarem eles os representantes do rei equivalia a rebelião; assim, os exércitos do rei destruíram os assassinos e queimaram as suas cidades. Tratava-se de um casamento régio, e é provável que o anfitrião régio providenciasse uma roupa especial para seus convidados numa ocasião assim. Sendo assim, um dos convidados não usar a vestimenta adequada para o casamento indicava que ele desprezara a vestimenta providenciada pelo rei quando esta lhe fora oferecida.

(28) As dez virgens (Mt 25:1-13). Esta ilustração, sobre o "reino dos céus", faz parte da resposta de Jesus à pergunta de seus discípulos registrada em Mateus 24:3. O objetivo da ilustração é claramente indicado em Mateus 25:13.

Naqueles dias, um importante aspecto da cerimônia de casamento era trazer a noiva, solenemente, da casa de seu pai à casa de seu noivo ou à casa do pai do noivo. O noivo, trajando a sua melhor roupa, deixaria a sua casa à noitinha rumo à casa dos pais da noiva, escoltado pelos seus amigos. Dali, seguidos por músicos e cantores, e em geral por pessoas que portavam lâmpadas, a procissão se dirigia à casa do noivo. As pessoas ao longo do trajeto interessavam-se grandemente pela procissão; alguns se juntavam a ela, em especial moças portando lâmpadas. (Je 7:34; 16:9; Is 62:5) A procissão talvez se atrasasse até altas horas da noite, pois não havia nenhuma pressa especial, de modo que alguns que esperavam ao longo do caminho talvez cochilassem e adormecessem. O canto e a exultação eram ouvidos a uma boa distância, sendo que os que ouviam isto bradavam: "Aqui está o noivo!" Daí, depois que o noivo e seu séquito tivessem entrado na casa e fechado a porta, era tarde demais para a entrada de convidados atrasados. As lâmpadas usadas na procissão queimavam óleo e exigiam um reabastecimento frequente.

(29) Os talentos (Mt 25:14-30). Esta ilustração sobre um homem prestes a viajar para o exterior foi proferida por Jesus a quatro de seus discípulos, apenas três dias antes de morrer, não muito tempo antes de sua ascensão ao céu. Faz também parte da resposta de Jesus à pergunta que se acha em Mateus 24:3. — Mr 13:3, 4.

Diferente da ilustração das minas, em que a cada escravo se deu apenas uma mina, os talentos neste caso foram dados "a cada um segundo a sua própria capacidade". (Lu 19:11-27) O talento de prata, ao qual aparentemente se faz referência aqui, seria equivalente ao que, naqueles dias, um trabalhador poderia ganhar em 20 anos. Todos os escravos deviam ter estado interessados na propriedade de seu amo, e, assim, deviam ter negociado com diligência e sabedoria os bens de seu amo que lhes haviam sido confiados. O mínimo que deveriam ter feito era entregar o dinheiro em depósito aos banqueiros, de modo que, caso não quisessem eles mesmos aumentar os bens de seu amo, o dinheiro não ficasse inteiramente ocioso, mas rendesse juros. Mas o escravo iníquo e indolente escondeu no solo o talento que lhe fora confiado, desta forma realmente trabalhando contra os interesses de seu amo.

(30) As ovelhas e os cabritos (Mt 25:31-46). Conforme se diz nos versículos 31, 32, 41 e 46 , o que se ilustra aqui é a separação e o julgamento das pessoas das nações, quando chega o Filho do homem em sua glória. Esta ilustração faz parte da resposta de Jesus à pergunta de seus discípulos a respeito do 'sinal de sua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas'. — Mt 24:3.

Ovelhas e cabritos geralmente pastam juntos no Oriente Médio, e o pastor facilmente identifica os dois tipos de animais quando quer separá-los. A referência de Jesus a cabritos nesta ilustração não é um descrédito a animais desse gênero. (No anual Dia da Expiação, o sangue de um bode era usado para fazer expiação pelo pecado em favor de Israel.) Assim, os cabritos meramente representam uma classe de pessoas, e as ovelhas representam outra classe. A "direita", onde as "ovelhas" são colocadas, é um lugar de honra. (At 2:33; Ef 1:19, 20) A "esquerda", onde são colocados os "cabritos", representa um lugar de desonra. (Veja Ec 10:2.) Note que as "ovelhas", que são colocadas à direita do entronizado Filho do homem, são indicadas como diferentes dos "irmãos" de Jesus Cristo, a quem elas fizeram atos de bondade. — Mt 25:34-40; He 2:11, 12.

O livro de Revelação. O livro de Revelação conclui as Escrituras Sagradas com uma das mais notáveis concentrações de ilustrações na inteira Bíblia. Como o escritor João mesmo relata, isso foi-lhe apresentado "em sinais". (Re 1:1) Portanto, pode-se corretamente dizer que, do começo ao fim, a Bíblia é notável pelo seu uso de ilustrações apropriadas.

Ilustrações feitas pelos discípulos de Cristo. Além de registrarem as ilustrações proferidas por Jesus Cristo, os escritores cristãos da Bíblia também fizeram muito bom uso de tais. No livro de Atos, Lucas registra as excelentes ilustrações usadas pelo apóstolo Paulo quando falava a não judeus em Atenas. Paulo se referiu aos objetos de devoção com os quais estavam familiarizados e aos escritos de seus próprios poetas. (At 17:22-31) Como revelará a leitura da carta aos hebreus, o mesmo apóstolo (a quem geralmente se atribui a escrita desta carta) usou amplamente ilustrações tiradas da história dos tratos de Deus com Israel. Aos em Corinto, familiarizados com os esportes gregos, ele comparou o proceder cristão a uma corrida. (1Co 9:24-27) Notável é a ilustração da oliveira, com seu aviso contra a complacência e sua admoestação aos cristãos para executarem o serviço sagrado a Deus por exercerem sua faculdade de raciocínio. — Ro 11:13-32; 12:1, 2.

Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, entremeou lindamente seus escritos com circunstâncias comuns da vida diária, referindo-se a um homem que se olha no espelho, ao freio dum cavalo, ao leme dum navio, etc., para inculcar verdades espirituais. (Tg 1:23, 24; 3:3, 4) Pedro e Judas recorreram muito a escritos inspirados anteriores na busca de incidentes que ilustrassem a mensagem que o espírito santo os movia a transmitir. Todas essas excelentes ilustrações, dirigidas pelo espírito de Deus, cumprem seu objetivo de tornar a Palavra de Deus, a Bíblia, um livro vivo.

IMAGEM (ESTÁTUA). Qualquer representação ou figura de pessoa ou coisa. — Mt 22:20.

Ao passo que as referências a imagens na Bíblia não raro se relacionam com a idolatria, isto nem sempre é assim. Deus, antes de criar o homem, disse: "Façamos o homem à nossa imagem [ou, sombra, semelhança], segundo a nossa semelhança." (Gên 1:26, 27, n) Visto que o Filho de Deus declarou que seu Pai é um "Espírito", isto torna impossível qualquer semelhança física entre Deus e o homem. (Jo 4:24) Em vez disso, o homem possui qualidades que refletem ou espelham as de seu Criador celestial, qualidades estas que positivamente distinguem o homem da criação animal. (Veja ADÃO N.º 1.) Embora feito à imagem de seu Criador, o homem não foi feito para ser objeto de adoração ou veneração.

Assim como Sete, filho do próprio Adão (nascido, porém, na imperfeição), nascera "à sua semelhança, à sua imagem" (Gên 5:3), a semelhança de Adão com Deus originalmente o identificava como filho terrestre de Deus. (Lu 3:38) Apesar da queda do homem na imperfeição, ter sido a humanidade feita originalmente à imagem de Deus foi citado após o Dilúvio dos dias de Noé como a base para a lei divina que autorizava os humanos a servirem quais executores, infligindo a pena de morte aos assassinos. (Gên 9:5, 6; veja VINGADOR DO SANGUE.) Nas instruções cristãs a respeito da cobertura feminina para a cabeça, disse-se aos varões cristãos que eles não deviam usar tal cobertura, visto que o homem é "imagem e glória de Deus", ao passo que a mulher é a glória do homem. — 1Co 11:7.

Será que Jesus sempre refletiu a semelhança de seu Pai no mesmo grau?

O Filho primogênito de Deus, que mais tarde se tornou o homem Jesus, é a imagem de seu Pai. (2Co 4:4) Uma vez que tal Filho era, obviamente, aquele a quem Deus falara ao dizer: "Façamos o homem à nossa imagem", essa semelhança do Filho com seu Pai, o Criador, existia desde que o Filho fora criado. (Gên 1:26; Jo 1:1-3; Col 1:15, 16) Quando na Terra, qual homem perfeito, ele refletia as qualidades e a personalidade de seu Pai no máximo grau possível, dentro das limitações humanas, de modo que podia dizer: "Quem me tem visto, tem visto também o Pai." (Jo 14:9; 5:17, 19, 30, 36; 8:28, 38, 42) Esta semelhança, contudo, foi certamente ressaltada no tempo da ressurreição de Jesus à vida espiritual, e ao lhe ser concedida "toda a autoridade no céu e na terra" por seu Pai, Jeová Deus. (1Pe 3:18; Mt 28:18) Visto que Deus exaltou assim Jesus a "uma posição superior", o Filho de Deus refletia então a glória de seu Pai num grau ainda maior do que refletira antes de deixar os céus para vir à Terra. (Fil 2:9; He 2:9) Ele é agora a "representação exata do . . . próprio ser [Deus]". — He 1:2-4.

Todos os membros ungidos da congregação cristã são predeterminados por Deus para serem "modelados segundo a imagem de seu Filho". (Ro 8:29) Cristo Jesus é o modelo deles, não só no padrão de vida, ao seguirem as suas pisadas e imitarem seu proceder e seus modos de agir, mas também na morte e na ressurreição. (1Pe 2:21-24; 1Co 11:1; Ro 6:5) Tendo refletido a terrestre "imagem daquele feito de pó [Adão]", eles, ao se tornarem criaturas espirituais, refletem dali em diante "a imagem do celestial [o último Adão, Cristo Jesus]". (1Co 15:45, 49) Durante sua vida terrestre, eles têm o privilégio de 'refletir como espelhos a glória de Jeová', que brilha até eles, procedente do Filho de Deus, sendo progressivamente transformados na imagem transmitida por aquele Filho que reflete glória. (2Co 3:18; 4:6) Deste modo Deus cria neles uma nova personalidade, que é um reflexo, ou imagem, de Suas próprias qualidades divinas. — Ef 4:24; Col 3:10.

Uso Impróprio de Imagens. Ao passo que os humanos devem imitar e empenhar-se em refletir as qualidades de seu Pai celestial e modelar suas vidas segundo Seu Filho, a veneração de imagens físicas na adoração é coerentemente condenada de ponta a ponta nas Escrituras. A aversão de Deus a tais práticas foi claramente expressa na Lei dada a Israel. Não apenas fazer imagens esculpidas, mas também a "forma" do que quer que fosse, no céu, na Terra ou no mar, como objeto de adoração religiosa, era proibido. (Êx 20:4, 5; Le 26:1; Is 42:8) Tais objetos podiam ser feitos de qualquer substância, em qualquer forma — madeira, metal, pedra; esculpidos, fundidos, forjados, talhados; na figura de humanos, animais, aves, objetos inanimados, ou simples formas simbólicas — mas nenhum deles era aprovado por Deus para veneração. Fazê-los era um 'ato ruinoso', praticar o mal aos olhos de Jeová, uma coisa detestável e ofensiva que trazia Sua maldição sobre os que o faziam. (De 4:16-19, 23-25; 27:15; Núm 33:52; Is 40:19, 20; 44:12, 13; Ez 7:20) Revesti-los de ouro e de prata não os tornaria menos repugnantes à vista de Deus, nem evitaria que fossem aviltados e descartados como "mera sujeira". — De 7:5, 25; Is 30:22.

Tal uso de imagens é inescusável perante Deus, pois contraria toda razão e inteligência e revela tolice, raciocínio vazio, bem como uma recusa de reconhecer fatos óbvios. (Is 44:14-20; Je 10:14; Ro 1:20-23) As imagens mostrariam ser sem proveito; não dariam conhecimento, direção, nem proteção; sendo sem fala, indefesas e sem vida, uma consequente causa de vergonha. (Is 44:9-11; 45:20; 46:5-7; Hab 2:18-20) As declarações proféticas de Jeová, predizendo eventos futuros com exatidão, frustraram quaisquer empenhos dos israelitas infiéis de atribuir o desenrolar de tais eventos a suas imagens idólatras. — Is 48:3-7.

Apesar das claras pronunciações de Deus, os israelitas e outros tolamente tentaram combinar o uso de imagens religiosas com a adoração do Deus verdadeiro, Jeová. (Êx 32:1-8; 1Rs 12:26-28; 2Rs 17:41; 21:7) Certa mulher, na época dos juízes, até mesmo santificou certas peças de prata a Jeová e, daí, usou-as na confecção de uma imagem religiosa. (Jz 17:3, 4; 18:14-20, 30, 31) Antes da destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios, haviam sido introduzidas na área do templo detestáveis imagens religiosas, e uma dessas é descrita como "símbolo de ciúme", evidentemente referindo-se a incitar Deus ao ciúme por se dar a uma imagem o louvor que de direito pertence a Ele. — Ez 8:3-12; Êx 20:5.

Contudo, certos objetos, modelados à imagem de plantas, flores, animais e até mesmo querubins, foram feitos às ordens de Jeová e, assim sendo, eram corretos. Embora servissem como representações simbólicas relacionadas com a adoração de Deus, tais objetos em si não recebiam nenhuma veneração ou adoração, como na questão de oração ou de sacrifício. — Veja ÍDOLO, IDOLATRIA.

Imagens no Livro de Daniel. No segundo ano do reinado de Nabucodonosor (evidentemente contando-se a partir de sua conquista de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC), o rei babilônio teve um sonho, cujo efeito deixou-o muito perturbado, causando-lhe insônia. Evidentemente ele não se lembrava de todo o conteúdo do sonho, pois exigiu de seus sábios e sacerdotes que revelassem tanto o sonho como a sua interpretação. Apesar de sua alardeada capacidade de reveladores de coisas secretas, os sábios babilônios foram incapazes de satisfazer a exigência do rei. Isto lhes trouxe a pena de morte, e a vida de Daniel e de seus companheiros também corria risco. Com ajuda divina, Daniel pôde revelar não apenas o sonho mas também o seu significado. A expressão de louvor e de agradecimentos de Daniel ao receber a revelação dirige a atenção a Jeová Deus como Fonte de sabedoria e poder e como aquele que "muda os tempos e as épocas, removendo reis e estabelecendo reis". (Da 2:1-23) O sonho obviamente procedia de Deus e serviu para ilustrar de modo profético o domínio irresistível de Deus sobre os assuntos da terra.

O sonho de Nabucodonosor foi a respeito de uma enorme estátua, em forma humana. As partes do corpo eram de metal; do alto para baixo, eram feitas de metais progressivamente menos valiosos porém mais duros, começando com ouro e terminando com ferro; os pés e os dedos dos pés, porém, eram de uma mistura de barro e ferro. A estátua inteira foi reduzida a pó por uma pedra cortada dum monte, pedra esta que, depois disso, encheu a terra inteira. — Da 2:31-35.

Qual é o significado das partes da imagem que Nabucodonosor viu em sonho?

A estátua obviamente se relaciona com o domínio da Terra e com o propósito de Jeová Deus para com tal domínio. A interpretação inspirada de Daniel deixa isso claro. A cabeça de ouro representava Nabucodonosor, aquele que, por permissão divina, assumira o poder como governante mundial dominante e, o que é mais importante, tinha derrubado o reino típico de Judá. No entanto, ao dizer: "Tu mesmo és a cabeça de ouro", parece que Daniel não restringiu o significado da cabeça apenas a Nabucodonosor. Visto que as outras partes do corpo representavam reinos, a cabeça evidentemente representava a dinastia de reis babilônios de Nabucodonosor em diante, até a queda de Babilônia, no tempo do Rei Nabonido e de seu filho, Belsazar. — Da 2:37, 38.

O reino representado pelo peito e braços de prata, assim, seria a potência medo-persa, que derrubou Babilônia em 539 AEC. Era "inferior" à dinastia babilônica, mas não no sentido de dispor de menor área de domínio, ou de ter menor força militar ou econômica. A superioridade de Babilônia, portanto, pode relacionar-se a ter sido ela a derrubadora do reino típico de Deus, em Jerusalém, distinção esta que a Medo-Pérsia não tinha. A dinastia medo-persa de governantes mundiais findou com Dario III (Codomano), cujas forças foram cabalmente derrotadas por Alexandre, o Macedônio, em 331 AEC. A Grécia é, assim, a potência representada pelo abdome e pelas coxas de cobre da estátua. — Da 2:39.

O domínio grego ou helênico continuou, embora em forma dividida, até que finalmente foi absorvido pela ascendente potência de Roma. A Potência Mundial Romana aparece, assim, simbolizada na estátua pelo ferro, metal mais grosseiro, porém mais duro, encontrado nas pernas da grande estátua. A força de Roma para despedaçar e esmagar os reinos opositores, indicada na profecia, é bem conhecida na história. (Da 2:40) Todavia, Roma sozinha não pode preencher os requisitos de ser representada pelas pernas e pés da estátua, pois o governo do Império Romano não presenciou o desfecho do sonho profético, a saber, a vinda da pedra simbólica, cortada do monte, bem como o esmiuçamento da inteira estátua, enchendo depois a terra inteira.

Portanto, as expressões de alguns comentaristas bíblicos são muito semelhantes às de M. F. Unger, que diz: "O sonho de Nabucodonosor, conforme deslindado por Daniel, descreve o curso e o fim dos 'tempos dos gentios' (Lucas 21:24; Rev. 16:19); isto é, do poder mundial gentio a ser destruído na Segunda Vinda de Cristo." (Unger's Bible Dictionary [Dicionário Bíblico de Unger], 1965, p. 516) O próprio Daniel disse a Nabucodonosor que o sonho tinha que ver com "o que há de acontecer na parte final dos dias" (Da 2:28) e, visto que a pedra simbólica, segundo se mostra, representa o Reino de Deus, pode-se esperar que o domínio prefigurado pelas pernas e pelos pés de ferro da estátua se estenda até o tempo do estabelecimento daquele Reino, e até o tempo em que este aja para 'esmiuçar e pôr termo a todos estes reinos'. — Da 2:44.

A história mostra que, embora o Império Romano gozasse duma extensão de vida, na forma do Santo Império Romano da nação germânica, por fim cedeu seu lugar à potência ascendente de seu outrora súdito imperial, a Britânia. Por causa da íntima afinidade e unidade geral de ação, a Grã-Bretanha e os Estados Unidos são, atualmente, muitas vezes mencionados como Potência Mundial Anglo-Americana, a atual potência dominante na história mundial.

A mistura de ferro e argila nos pés da grande estátua ilustra vividamente a condição que se deveria manifestar na expressão final do domínio mundial político. A argila é, em outras partes, usada em sentido metafórico nas Escrituras para representar homens carnais, feitos do pó da terra. (Jó 10:9; Is 29:16; Ro 9:20, 21) A interpretação de Daniel parece assim igualar a argila à "descendência da humanidade", sendo que misturar isto produz fragilidade naquilo que é simbolizado pelos pés e pelos dedos da estátua. Isto indica um enfraquecimento e uma falta de coesão na força férrea da forma final do domínio mundial pelos reinos terrestres. (Da 2:41-43) O homem comum ganharia maior influência em assuntos de governo.

A imagem de ouro mais tarde erguida por Nabucodonosor, na planície de Dura, não se relaciona diretamente com a imensa estátua do sonho. Em vista das dimensões desta — 60 côvados (27 m) de altura e apenas 6 côvados (2,70 m) de largura (ou uma proporção de dez para um) — não parece ter sido uma estátua em forma humana, a menos que tenha tido um pedestal altíssimo, mais alto do que a própria estátua de homem. A forma humana tem uma proporção de apenas quatro por um, com relação à altura e largura. Assim, a imagem pode ter sido de natureza mais simbólica, talvez como os obeliscos do antigo Egito. — Da 3:1.

A Imagem da Fera. Depois da visão duma fera de sete cabeças que ascende do mar, o apóstolo João teve uma visão duma fera de dois chifres que subia da terra, falava como dragão e ordenava aos que moravam na Terra que 'fizessem uma imagem da fera [de sete cabeças]'. (Re 13:1, 2, 11-14) A Bíblia usa de forma coerente os animais quais símbolos de governos políticos. A imagem da fera de sete cabeças, por conseguinte, deve ser algum organismo que reflita as características e a vontade do sistema político que domina o globo, representado pela fera de sete cabeças. Logicamente, devia também ter sete cabeças e dez chifres, como a fera que ascendeu do mar, a qual ela representa. Portanto, é de interesse observar que outra fera de sete cabeças, diferente da fera que ascende do mar, é descrita em Revelação (Apocalipse), capítulo 17. Seu significado, bem como o da fera de sete cabeças e a fera de dois chifres, é considerado sob ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

Depois de sua primeira menção, em Revelação, capítulo 13, a imagem da fera é regularmente mencionada junto com a fera, especialmente em relação com a adoração dessa fera, e o recebimento de sua marca. A imagem da fera compartilha essas coisas. — Re 14:9-11; 15:2; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4; veja MARCA (SINAL).

IMER.

1. Descendente de Arão, designado cabeça da 16.ª turma sacerdotal nos dias de Davi. (1Cr 24:1, 6, 14) Aparentemente, 1.052 de seus descendentes retornaram de Babilônia, com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:37; Ne 7:40) Dois dos "filhos de Imer" estavam entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras nos dias de Esdras. —Esd 10:20, 44.

2. Pai de Mesilemite (ou Mesilemote); possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 1. — 1Cr 9:12; Ne 11:13.

3. Pai do sacerdote Pasur, oponente de Jeremias, que fez com que o profeta fosse colocado no tronco. Jeremias profetizou que Pasur e toda a sua casa seriam levados a Babilônia. (Je 20:1, 2, 6) Se a especificação "filho de Imer" deve ser entendida como denotando um descendente em vez de um filho mesmo, este Imer talvez seja o N.º 1.

4. Pai de Zadoque, que participou nos reparos da muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 3:29) Este Imer pode, porém, ser o mesmo que o N.º 1, se a especificação "filho de Imer" for considerada como significando um descendente.

5. Aparentemente um lugar em Babilônia do qual retornaram certos sacerdotes, incapazes de provar sua genealogia. — Esd 2:59; Ne 7:61.

IMERSÃO. Veja BATISMO.

IMNA [[Deus] Reteve (Negou)]. Filho de Helém; homem valente, poderoso, e cabeça duma casa paterna da tribo de Aser. — 1Cr 7:35, 40.

IMNÁ [Que [Deus] Designe (ou, Numere); [Deus] Designou (ou, Numerou)].

1. Primeiro filho mencionado de Aser e antepassado dos imnitas. — Gên 46:17; Núm 26:44; 1Cr 7:30.

2. Levita cujo filho Core era porteiro ao leste, no serviço do templo, encarregado das ofertas voluntárias a Jeová, nos dias de Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:14.

IMNITAS [De (Pertencente a) Imná]. Família da tribo de Aser, descendente de Imná. — Núm 26:44.

IMORALIDADE SEXUAL. Veja FORNICAÇÃO.

IMORTALIDADE. A palavra grega a·tha·na·sí·a é formada pelo prefixo negativo a, seguido duma forma da palavra para "morte" (thá·na·tos). Assim, o sentido básico é "imortalidade", e refere-se à qualidade de vida que se usufrui, seu caráter infindável e indestrutível. (1Co 15:53, 54 n; 1Ti 6:16 n) A palavra grega a·fthar·sí·a, que significa "incorrupção", refere-se àquilo que não pode decompor-se ou ser corrompido, aquilo que é imperecível. — Ro 2:7; 1Co 15:42, 50, 53; Ef 6:24; 2Ti 1:10.

As expressões "imortal" ou "imortalidade" não ocorrem nas Escrituras Hebraicas, as quais mostram, porém, que Jeová Deus, como Fonte de toda a vida, não está sujeito à morte, sendo assim imortal. (Sal 36:7, 9; 90:1, 2; Hab 1:12) Este fato é também enfaticamente declarado pelo apóstolo cristão Paulo ao referir-se a Deus como "Rei da eternidade, incorruptível". — 1Ti 1:17.

Como mostra o artigo ALMA, as Escrituras Hebraicas também deixam claro que o homem não é inerentemente imortal. As referências à alma humana (hebr.: né·fesh) como morrendo, caminhando para o túmulo e sendo destruída, são numerosas. (Gên 17:14; Jos 10:32; Jó 33:22; Sal 22:29; 78:50; Ez 18:4, 20) As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, naturalmente, estão em harmonia e contêm, igualmente, referências à morte da alma (gr.: psy·khé). (Mt 26:38; Mr 3:4; At 3:23; Tg 5:20; Re 8:9; 16:3) Portanto, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs não contradizem nem alteram o ensino inspirado das Escrituras Hebraicas de que o homem, a alma humana, é mortal, sujeito à morte. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, contudo, contêm deveras a revelação do propósito de Deus de conceder a imortalidade a determinados servos seus.

Como pode Jesus ser "o único que tem imortalidade"?

O primeiro a ser descrito na Bíblia como recompensado com o dom da imortalidade é Jesus Cristo. Que ele não possuía a imortalidade antes de ser ressuscitado por Deus vê-se nas palavras inspiradas do apóstolo em Romanos 6:9: "Cristo não morre mais, agora que tem sido levantado dentre os mortos; a morte não domina mais sobre ele." (Compare isso com Re 1:17, 18.) Por isso, quando o descreve como "Rei dos que reinam e Senhor dos que dominam", 1 Timóteo 6:15, 16 mostra que Jesus se distingue de todos esses outros reis e senhores no sentido de que é "o único que tem imortalidade". Os outros reis e senhores, por serem mortais, morrem, assim como também morriam os sumos sacerdotes de Israel. O glorificado Jesus, o Sumo Sacerdote designado por Deus segundo a ordem de Melquisedeque, contudo, tem uma "vida indestrutível". — He 7:15-17, 23-25.

A palavra "indestrutível" traduz aqui o termo grego a·ka·tá·ly·tos, que significa, literalmente, "indissolúvel". (He 7:16 n) A palavra se compõe do prefixo negativo a, junto com outras palavras que se relacionam com "soltar-se", como na declaração de Jesus a respeito da soltura ou derrubada das pedras do templo de Jerusalém (Mt 24:1, 2), bem como na referência de Paulo à soltura da "tenda" terrestre dos cristãos, isto é, a dissolução de sua vida terrestre em corpos humanos. (2Co 5:1) Assim, a vida imortal concedida a Jesus, ao ser ressuscitado, não é simplesmente infindável, mas está além de deterioração ou de dissolução, e além de destruição.

Concedida a Imortalidade aos Herdeiros do Reino. Para os cristãos ungidos que são chamados a reinar com Cristo nos céus (1Pe 1:3, 4), a promessa é de que compartilharão com Cristo a semelhança de Sua ressurreição. (Ro 6:5) Assim, como no caso de seu Senhor e Cabeça, os membros ungidos da congregação cristã que morrem fiéis recebem uma ressurreição para a vida espiritual, imortal, de modo que 'isto que é mortal se reveste de imortalidade'. (1Co 15:50-54) Como se deu com Jesus, a imortalidade no caso deles não significa simplesmente vida eterna, ou simples isenção da morte. Que também a eles se concede o "poder duma vida indestrutível", como co-herdeiros de Cristo, pode-se ver da ligação que o apóstolo Paulo faz da incorruptibilidade com a imortalidade que eles alcançam. (1Co 15:42-49) Sobre eles, "a segunda morte não tem autoridade". — Re 20:6; veja INCORRUPÇÃO.

Esta concessão da imortalidade aos herdeiros do Reino torna-se ainda mais notável em vista do fato de que se mostra que até mesmo os anjos de Deus são mortais, apesar de terem corpos espirituais, não carnais. A mortalidade angélica é evidente em vista do julgamento de morte proferido sobre o filho espiritual que se tornou o Adversário de Deus, ou Satanás, e também sobre os outros anjos que seguiram esse proceder satânico e "não conservaram a sua posição original, mas abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta". (Ju 6; Mt 25:41; Re 20:10, 14) Assim, a concessão de "vida indestrutível" (He 7:16) ou "vida indissolúvel" aos cristãos que obtêm o privilégio de reinar com o Filho de Deus no Reino celestial demonstra maravilhosamente a confiança de Deus neles. — Veja CÉU, I (O caminho para a vida celestial); VIDA.

IMPARCIALIDADE. Ausência de preconceitos ou de favoritismo; justeza. A imparcialidade é uma questão de não se permitir que a posição, a eloquência, a riqueza, o suborno, ou, por outro lado, o sentimentalismo em favor duma pessoa pobre ou de outra forma em condição desfavorável altere o julgamento ou as medidas tomadas em favor dela. A imparcialidade se certifica de que todos sejam tratados em harmonia com o que é equânime e justo, segundo o que cada um merece e necessita. — Pr 3:27.

A expressão hebraica na·sá' pa·ním, traduzida "tratar com parcialidade", literalmente significa "erguer a face". (Le 19:15) Uma das maneiras orientais de cumprimentar era curvar-se humildemente e baixar bem o rosto. Em sinal de aceitação e de reconhecimento, a pessoa saudada erguia, ou levantava, a face daquele que se encurvara. (Veja Gên 32:20, onde "dê uma acolhida benévola" traduz a frase hebraica que literalmente significa "erguer a face".) Esta expressão veio a ser usada de maneira depreciativa quando se referia a corrupto tratamento preferencial. A frase hebraica na·khár pa·ním (traduzida "ser parcial", mas que literalmente significa "reconhecer a face") era usada de modo similar. (De 1:17; 16:19) A expressão grega lam·bá·no pró·so·pon ('mostrar parcialidade'; literalmente, "tomar ou aceitar a face") é modelada segundo o hebraico. (Lu 20:21; compare isso com Int.) Formas compostas dessas duas palavras são traduzidas por "parcialidade; favoritismo" (Ro 2:11; Tg 2:1), 'mostrar favoritismo' (Tg 2:9), e "parcial" (At 10:34). — Veja Int.

Jeová É Imparcial. Jeová diz que ele "não trata a ninguém com parcialidade, nem aceita suborno". (De 10:17; 2Cr 19:7) O apóstolo Pedro disse, quando Deus o enviou a declarar as boas novas ao gentio incircunciso Cornélio: "Certamente percebo que Deus não é parcial, mas, em cada nação, o homem que o teme e que faz a justiça lhe é aceitável." — At 10:34, 35; Ro 2:10, 11.

Jeová, o Criador e o Supremo, não pode ser desafiado em suas decisões e ações. Ele pode fazer o que lhe apraz com aquilo que criou, e não deve nada a ninguém. (Ro 9:20-24; 11:33-36; Jó 40:2) Lida com indivíduos ou com grupos, até mesmo com nações, segundo o Seu propósito e Seu próprio tempo designado. (At 17:26, 31) Entretanto, Deus é imparcial. Ele recompensa a cada pessoa, não segundo a sua aparência ou os bens que ela possui, mas segundo o que ela é e o que faz. (1Sa 16:7; Sal 62:12; Pr 24:12) Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, segue o mesmo proceder imparcial. — Mt 16:27.

Não foi parcial para com Israel. Alguns sustentam que Jeová lidou de forma parcial com Israel por usá-lo e favorecê-lo como Seu povo, nos tempos antigos. No entanto, uma avaliação honesta de seus tratos com Israel revelará que tal acusação é errônea. Jeová escolheu e lidou com Israel, não por causa da grandeza e da numerosidade de Israel, mas sim por causa de Seu amor e apreço pela fé e lealdade de Seu amigo, Abraão, o antepassado deles. (Tg 2:23) Também, mostrou-se longânime para com eles, porque tinha colocado Seu nome sobre eles. (De 7:7-11; Ez 36:22; De 29:13; Sal 105:8-10) Enquanto obediente, Israel foi mais abençoado do que as nações que não tinham a Lei. Quando Israel desobedecia, Deus era paciente e misericordioso, punindo-o, porém. E, embora a posição dos israelitas fosse favorecida, estavam sob maior responsabilidade perante Deus, por levarem o nome dele, e por estarem sob a Lei. Pois a Lei trazia maldições sobre quem a violasse. Está escrito: "Maldito aquele que não puser em vigor as palavras desta lei por cumpri-las." (De 27:26) Os judeus, por violarem a Lei, ficaram sob tal maldição, a qual se somava à sua condenação quais descendentes do pecaminoso Adão. (Ro 5:12) Por conseguinte, para redimir os judeus desta desvantagem especial, Cristo precisava, não só morrer, mas morrer numa estaca de tortura, como o apóstolo Paulo argumenta em Gálatas 3:10-13.

Assim, Deus não demonstrava nenhuma parcialidade por Israel. Ele usava Israel visando abençoar todas as nações. (Gál 3:14) Por tal meio, Deus realmente trabalhava em favor das pessoas de todas as nações, em Seu devido tempo. Em harmonia com isso, o apóstolo comenta: "É ele somente o Deus dos judeus? Não o é também de pessoas das nações? Sim, também de pessoas das nações, se Deus verdadeiramente é um só, o qual declarará justos os circuncisos em resultado da fé e os incircuncisos por meio de sua fé." (Ro 3:29, 30) Ademais, na antiga comunidade judaica, homens de outras nações podiam vir a ficar sob o favor e a bênção divina por adorarem a Jeová, o Deus de Israel, e guardarem a Sua lei, como fizeram os gibeonitas, os netineus (que significa "os dados"), e muitos residentes forasteiros. — Jos 9:3, 27; 1Rs 8:41-43; Esd 8:20; Núm 9:14.

Embora fosse paciente e misericordioso, repetidas vezes acolhendo os israelitas de volta quando se arrependiam, Jeová por fim os rejeitou como povo que levava Seu nome. (Lu 13:35; Ro 11:20-22) Aplica-se aqui a declaração do apóstolo: "Ele dará a cada um segundo as suas obras: . . . furor e ira, tribulação e aflição sobre a alma de cada homem que fizer o que é prejudicial, primeiro do judeu, e também do grego; mas glória, e honra, e paz para todo aquele que fizer o que é bom, primeiro para o judeu, e também para o grego. Pois, com Deus não há parcialidade." — Ro 2:6-11.

Assim, ao passo que um conceito superficial e míope dos tratos de Deus poderia parecer revelar parcialidade, o conceito mais profundo, de longo alcance, elucida sua maravilhosa imparcialidade e justiça, além de qualquer coisa que o homem pudesse conceber. Quão admiravelmente ele fez com que os assuntos se desenrolassem de modo que toda a humanidade tivesse a oportunidade de obter Seu favor e a vida! — Is 55:8-11; Ro 11:33.

Não foi parcial para com Davi. Como Jeová disse a Moisés, ele é um Deus que de forma alguma isentará de punição o erro. (Êx 34:6, 7; Col 3:25) Mesmo no caso de seu amado servo Davi, com quem Jeová fizera um pacto para o reino, Deus não fez exceção. Ele puniu severamente a Davi pelos seus pecados. Depois que Davi pecou contra Deus no caso envolvendo Bate-Seba e seu esposo Urias, Jeová lhe disse: "Eis que suscito contra ti uma calamidade provinda da tua própria casa; e hei de tomar as tuas esposas debaixo dos teus próprios olhos e dá-las ao teu próximo, e ele se há de deitar com as tuas esposas sob os olhares deste sol. Ao passo que tu mesmo agiste às escondidas, eu, da minha parte, farei esta coisa perante todo o Israel e diante do sol." — 2Sa 12:11, 12.

O relato bíblico revela que Davi deveras sofreu grandes dificuldades da parte de sua própria família. (2Sa caps. 13-18; 1Rs cap. 1) Ao passo que Deus não o matou, por respeito ao pacto do reino que fizera com Davi (2Sa 7:11-16), Davi deveras sofreu pesares bem grandes. Como dissera um anterior servo de Deus, Eliú: "Há Um que não tem mostrado parcialidade para com príncipes." (Jó 34:19) No entanto, com base no vindouro sacrifício de Jesus Cristo, Deus podia perdoar o arrependido Davi e, ainda assim, conservar Sua própria justiça e retidão. (Ro 3:25, 26) Mediante o sacrifício de seu Filho, Deus dispõe de uma base justa e imparcial para desfazer a morte de Urias e de outros, de modo que, em última análise, ninguém sofrerá injustamente. — At 17:31.

Conselho a Juízes. Jeová deu forte conselho aos juízes em Israel sobre imparcialidade. Os juízes estavam sob a estrita ordem: "Não deveis ser parciais no julgamento." (De 1:17; 16:19; Pr 18:5; 24:23) Não deviam mostrar parcialidade para com um pobre meramente por causa de sua pobreza, à base de sentimentalismo, ou até mesmo de preconceito para com os ricos. Tampouco deviam favorecer um rico por causa de sua riqueza, talvez bajulando-o em busca de favor, de suborno, ou por temer o poder ou a influência dele. (Le 19:15) Deus por fim condenou o infiel sacerdócio levítico em Israel por ter violado a Sua lei e, como indicou especificamente, por mostrarem parcialidade, visto que atuavam como juízes no país. — Mal 2:8, 9.

Na Congregação Cristã. Na congregação cristã, a imparcialidade é lei; mostrar favoritismo é pecado. (Tg 2:9) Os culpados de atos de favoritismo se tornam 'juízes que fazem decisões iníquas'. (Tg 2:1-4) Tais pessoas não têm a sabedoria de cima, que é isenta de distinções parciais. (Tg 3:17) Os que ocupam cargos de responsabilidade na congregação estão sob a grave obrigação de que o apóstolo Paulo incumbiu a Timóteo, um superintendente: "Eu te mando solenemente, perante Deus, e Cristo Jesus, e os anjos escolhidos, que guardes estas coisas sem preconceito, não fazendo nada por parcialidade." Isto se aplicaria, em especial, na realização de audiências judicativas na congregação. — 1Ti 5:19-21.

'Admiram personalidades em proveito próprio.' A violação do princípio da imparcialidade pode resultar na mais severa condenação. Judas, meio-irmão de Jesus, descreve homens "resmungadores, queixosos de sua sorte na vida, procedendo segundo os seus próprios desejos, e [cujas] bocas falam coisas bombásticas, ao passo que admiram personalidades para o seu próprio proveito". (Ju 16) Tais homens são chamados de "os que fazem separações, homens animalescos, sem espiritualidade”. (Ju 19) Eles podem influenciar outros por meio de suas palavras bombásticas e de sua admiração de personalidades, como as que Paulo descreve, que “se introduzem ardilosamente nas famílias e levam cativas mulheres fracas, sobrecarregadas de pecados, levadas por vários desejos”. (2Ti 3:6) A destruição os aguarda. — Ju 12, 13.

“Dignos de dupla honra” — Como? Em vista disso, como podem os da congregação cristã considerar os anciãos que presidem de modo excelente como sendo “dignos de dupla honra, especialmente os que trabalham arduamente no falar e no ensinar”? (1Ti 5:17) Isto não se dá por causa da personalidade ou da habilidade desses homens, mas sim por causa de sua diligência e de seu trabalho árduo nas responsabilidades extras que lhes são atribuídas. Os arranjos e as designações de Deus devem ser respeitados. Tais homens devem receber especial cooperação e apoio para realizar a obra da congregação de Deus. (He 13:7, 17) Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, indica que os instrutores na congregação têm uma pesada responsabilidade perante Deus, recebendo um julgamento mais pesado. (Tg 3:1) Por conseguinte, merecem ser ouvidos, obedecidos e honrados. Por motivo similar, a esposa deve honrar e respeitar seu marido, a quem Deus incumbiu da responsabilidade da família, e que é julgado por Ele de acordo com isso. (Ef 5:21-24, 33) Tal respeito pelos homens colocados em posições de responsabilidade no arranjo de Deus não é parcialidade.

Respeito pelos governantes. Ordena-se também aos cristãos que respeitem os governantes dos governos humanos. Isto é assim não devido às qualidades pessoais desses homens, alguns dos quais talvez sejam corruptos, tampouco é porque talvez tenham condições de conceder favores especiais. Os cristãos respeitam os governantes porque Deus assim o ordena; também, devido à posição de responsabilidade que tal cargo representa. O apóstolo diz: “Toda alma esteja sujeita às autoridades superiores, pois não há autoridade exceto por Deus; as autoridades existentes acham-se colocadas por Deus nas suas posições relativas. Portanto, quem se opõe à autoridade, tem tomado posição contra o arranjo de Deus.” (Ro 13:1, 2) Estes homens, se usarem mal a sua autoridade, terão de prestar contas a Deus. A honra, ou respeito, devido ao cargo é prestado pelo cristão àquele que ocupa tal cargo segundo a regra: “Rendei a todos o que lhes é devido, a quem exigir imposto, o imposto; a quem exigir tributo, o tributo; a quem exigir temor, tal temor; a quem exigir honra, tal honra.” (Ro 13:7) A honra que o cristão rende neste aspecto específico, acima da que é conferida a cidadãos comuns, não é mostrar parcialidade.

IMPLEMENTOS AGRÍCOLAS. Embora a Bíblia mencione várias atividades agrícolas, os implementos utilizados para cultivar a terra não são descritos em pormenores. No entanto, as gravuras de implementos agrícolas em monumentos egípcios, bem como os próprios exemplares, encontrados no Egito e na Palestina, suplementam de certo modo o registro bíblico. Ademais, há grande similaridade entre os instrumentos agrícolas simples ainda usados em partes do Egito e da Palestina.

O arado simples de madeira, ainda empregado em algumas partes das terras bíblicas, pouco mudou no decorrer dos séculos, como mostra claramente uma comparação de representações de arados, em monumentos antigos, e até mesmo em tabuinhas de argila. O arado não tinha rodas, nem era feito para abrir sulcos; simplesmente arranhava a superfície do solo a uma profundidade de 8 a 10 cm. Excetuando-se a relha, que era de metal, o arado era de madeira. (Veja 1Sa 13:20; 1Rs 19:19, 21; Is 2:4.) Um bastão, a que se prendia a relha, constituía a parte maior do arado. As relhas (em realidade pontas afiadas) de arado, de cobre e de bronze, que têm sido encontradas em escavações feitas em Israel, em geral se apresentam bastante gastas, devido ao uso. — Veja ARAR (LAVRAR).

Empregavam-se enxadas para remover ervas daninhas do solo e, provavelmente, também para desfazer os torrões de terra. Certos trechos proféticos mencionam especificamente o uso de enxadas no vinhedo. — Is 5:5, 6; 7:23-25.

Enxadões eram provavelmente empregados para cavoucar e revolver o solo. Achavam-se entre os instrumentos que os israelitas, nos dias de Saul, tinham de levar aos filisteus, para afiá-los. (1Sa 13:20, 21) Enxadões de bronze e de ferro, um tanto semelhantes aos atuais, têm sido encontrados.

As foices eram usadas principalmente para ceifar os cereais, embora a Bíblia também fale de meter a foice para ceifar a videira. (Jl 3:13; Re 14:18) As foices encontradas em Israel são ligeiramente curvas. Alguns tipos consistem em lascas chanfradas de pederneira que eram agrupadas e fixadas com betume numa armação, quer de madeira, quer de osso. Lâminas de ferro para foices também foram encontradas, e estas eram presas a um cabo por meio de rebites, de uma espiga ou de um encaixe.

Os forcados empregados para joeirar (Is 30:24; Je 15:7), como nos tempos mais recentes, eram provavelmente de madeira, e tinham várias pontas curvas.

A grade não é mencionada na Bíblia, mas a operação agrícola de gradar é mencionada como diferente do arar. (Jó 39:10; Is 28:24; Os 10:11) Pulverizar e aplanar o solo constitui a principal função da grade moderna, embora seja também usada para cobrir as raízes das plantas com palha, cobrir as sementes e remover ervas daninhas. Antigamente, talvez uma prancha com peso sobre ela, ou um tronco áspero de árvore, fosse arrastada sobre o solo arado a fim de esterroar e nivelar o solo.

As pás de joeirar, provavelmente de madeira, eram usadas para lançar o cereal debulhado no ar, de modo que o vento carregasse a palha e as glumas. — Mt 3:12.

As podadeiras são especificamente mencionadas na Bíblia, com referência à poda da videira. (Is 18:5) Visto que as Escrituras se referem à conversão de lanças em podadeiras e, por contraste, de podadeiras em lanças, este instrumento talvez consistisse numa lâmina afiada semelhante a uma faca, presa a um cabo, e pode ter sido similar a uma foice. — Is 2:4; Jl 3:10.

O trenó debulhador visava separar os grãos das espigas do cereal. O implemento utilizado nos tempos antigos provavelmente se parecia a dois tipos ainda utilizados em algumas partes das terras bíblicas atualmente: um consiste em pranchas de madeira juntadas e curvadas para trás, na frente. A parte de baixo é dotada de pedras afiadas ou de facas. (Veja 1Cr 21:23; Jó 41:30; Is 41:15.) O operador fica em pé sobre o trenó, para fazer peso. O outro tipo tem um banco para o operador e consiste em uma estrutura de carroça baixa, de quatro cantos. Nessa armação se fixam dois ou três rolos paralelos, giratórios, dotados de tiras de ferro. — Veja Is 28:27, 28.

IMPOSIÇÃO DAS MÃOS. Veja MÃO.

IMPOSTO. Taxação (de dinheiro, de bens ou de trabalho) imposta por uma autoridade sobre pessoas ou propriedades. Formas de imposto há muito são empregadas para a manutenção dos serviços governamentais, de funcionários públicos e também de sacerdotes. As taxas antigamente cobradas incluíam o dízimo, o tributo, o pedágio, o imposto por cabeça e os impostos por itens de consumo, pelas exportações, importações e por bens transportados através dum país por mercadores.

Impostos para a Manutenção do Santuário de Jeová. Os serviços do santuário eram mantidos por meio de impostos. O dízimo obrigatório era a principal fonte para a manutenção dos sacerdotes arônicos e dos levitas, e, pelo menos numa ocasião, eles receberam uma parte dos despojos de guerra, segundo uma taxa estipulada por Jeová. (Núm 18:26-29; 31:26-47; veja DÍZIMO.) Jeová também instruiu a Moisés que, depois dum recenseamento, cada pessoa registrada pagasse meio siclo (US$ 1,10) como "contribuição pertencente a Jeová", contribuição esta em benefício da tenda de reunião. (Êx 30:12-16) Parece que se tornara costumeiro os judeus darem uma soma fixa a cada ano, embora não se fizesse anualmente um censo. Jeoás, por exemplo, invocou o "imposto sagrado ordenado . . . por Moisés". (2Cr 24:6, 9) Os judeus da época de Neemias obrigaram-se a pagar anualmente um terço dum siclo (c. 75 centavos de dólar) para o serviço do templo. — Ne 10:32.

Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, os judeus pagavam duas dracmas para o templo. Quando se perguntou a Pedro se Jesus obedecia tal tributação, ele respondeu na afirmativa. Mais tarde, ao tratar do assunto, Jesus indicou que os reis não cobram impostos de seus filhos, os filhos sendo parte da casa real, em favor da qual se coletam impostos. No entanto, embora fosse o Filho unigênito Daquele que era adorado no templo, Jesus, para evitar dar motivos para outros tropeçarem, cuidou de que o imposto fosse pago. — Mt 17:24-27.

Impostos Cobrados por Governantes. Com o estabelecimento da realeza em Israel, passaram-se a cobrar impostos, incluindo a décima parte do rebanho e dos produtos da terra, a fim de sustentar o rei, a casa deste e as várias autoridades e servos governamentais. (1Sa 8:11-17; 1Rs 4:6-19) Já no fim do reinado de Salomão, a convocação para trabalhos forçados e a manutenção governamental se tornara tão onerosa para o povo que eles solicitaram ao filho e sucessor de Salomão, Roboão, que aliviasse o 'serviço duro e o jugo pesado'. A recusa de Roboão moveu dez tribos a se revoltarem. — 1Rs 12:3-19; veja SERVIÇO COMPULSÓRIO; TRABALHOS FORÇADOS.

Ao ficarem sujeitos ao domínio estrangeiro, os israelitas tiveram de submeter-se a ainda outras formas de tributação. Por exemplo, quando o Faraó Neco fez de Jeoiaquim seu vassalo, e impôs pesada multa ou tributo a Judá, Jeoiaquim levantou os fundos necessários fazendo com que seus súditos pagassem determinada quantia "segundo o imposto individual de cada um". — 2Rs 23:31-35.

No período persa, os judeus (com exceção dos sacerdotes e de outros que serviam no santuário, e que foram isentados por Artaxerxes Longímano) tiveram de pagar imposto (aramaico, mid·dáh ou min·dáh), tributo (belóh) e pedágio (halákh). (Esd 4:13, 20; 7:24) Acredita-se que mid·dáh designa o imposto pessoal, individual; belóh, um imposto sobre itens de consumo, ou imposto de consumo; e halákh, o pedágio pago pelos viajantes em postos de estrada ou nos vaus de rio. O mid·dáh (traduzido "tributo" em Al, IBB, NM, em Ne 5:4) deve ter sido bem alto, pois muitos judeus tiveram de pedir dinheiro emprestado para pagá-lo. Além de terem de pagar os impostos cobrados pelos persas, os judeus normalmente também tinham de pagar o sustento do governador. — Ne 5:14, 15.

No primeiro século EC, os judeus se ressentiam grandemente do pagamento de impostos, não só por causa da corrupção predominante entre os cobradores de impostos, mas também porque isto os obrigava a reconhecer sua sujeição a Roma. (Veja COBRADOR DE IMPOSTOS.) Não obstante, tanto Jesus Cristo como o apóstolo Paulo mostraram ser correto pagar impostos a "César", ou às "autoridades superiores". (Mt 22:17-21; Ro 13:1, 7; veja CÉSAR [Deus e César].) Entre as várias espécies de impostos mencionados nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs acha-se o té·los (imposto, dever ou tributo indireto; Mt 17:25; Ro 13:7). Também são mencionados o kén·sos (imposto por cabeça; Mt 17:25; 22:17, 19; Mr 12:14) e o fó·ros (termo mais amplo, que se julga designar um imposto cobrado sobre casas, terrenos e pessoas; Lu 20:22; 23:2).

IMPUROS, ANIMAIS. Veja ANIMAIS.

INAUGURAÇÃO. Início de funcionamento, com cerimônias solenes, de uma instituição, de um arranjo ou de um lugar. "Inaugurar" é traduzido do verbo hebraico hha·nákh (forma substantivada, hhanuk·káh) quando o mesmo tem o significado de "iniciar, dedicar formalmente", e do verbo grego en·kai·ní·zo, que significa primariamente "tornar novo, ou inovar", como pela dedicação. A palavra hebraica né·zer, o santo sinal de dedicação, é considerada sob o assunto DEDICAÇÃO.

Quando entrou em vigor o pacto da Lei mosaica, ele foi solenemente iniciado por cerimônias apropriadas de sacrifícios animais e pela aspersão de sangue sobre o altar, sobre o livro e sobre o povo. O apóstolo Paulo referiu-se a este evento como o ato de inauguração daquele pacto. — Êx 24:4-8; He 9:18-20.

Pelas palavras de Paulo, "tampouco o pacto anterior foi inaugurado [forma do gr. en·kai·ní·zo] sem sangue" (He 9:18), ele indica que o novo pacto foi posto em vigor de modo similar — inaugurado pela morte, ressurreição e ascensão de Jesus ao céu, onde Jesus apresentou o valor de sua vida humana, e de onde depois disso derramou espírito santo sobre seus discípulos. Visto que Jesus Cristo foi ressuscitado no espírito, ele podia realmente entrar no verdadeiro "lugar santo", os céus da presença de Jeová, e, com seu sacrifício de resgate, tornar possível que seus seguidores ungidos também entrassem no céu. Assim, podia-se dizer que ele iniciou, inovou ou inaugurou o caminho para os céus, provisão esta que, depois, seria utilizada por outros. — He 10:19, 20.

Lemos também sobre as cerimônias solenes que envolviam as ofertas feitas pelos maiorais tribais na inauguração do altar do tabernáculo no ermo. (Núm 7:10, 11, 84-88) Houve uma assembleia especial para a inauguração do templo de Salomão e de seu grande altar sacrificial. — 1Rs 8:63; 2Cr 7:5, 9.

Quando o templo foi reconstruído sob Zorobabel, depois do exílio babilônico, houve cerimônias solenes de inauguração, em que se sacrificaram centenas de animais. (Esd 6:16, 17) Mais tarde, os muros em torno da Jerusalém reconstruída foram restaurados, sob a direção de Neemias, e, novamente, realizou-se uma suntuosa festa de inauguração, com a participação de dois grandes coros de agradecimento em louvar a Jeová. — Ne 12:27-43.

Além dessas impressionantes cerimônias nacionais de inauguração, lemos a respeito de um homem inaugurar, ou ocupar, a sua casa (De 20:5), e o cabeçalho do Salmo 30, atribuído a Davi, classifica-o de "Cântico de inauguração da casa".

Quando Nabucodonosor terminou a instalação da enorme estátua de ouro na Planície de Dura, ele convocou todos os sátrapas, prefeitos, governadores, conselheiros, tesoureiros, juízes, magistrados policiais e todos os administradores dos distritos jurisdicionais para as impressionantes cerimônias de inauguração. Nabucodonosor esperava assim unir todos os seus súditos em adoração. Os três jovens hebreus presentes nesse acontecimento recusaram-se a transigir na sua adoração de Jeová por participarem nessa religião nacional. — Da 3:1-30.

Até os dias de hoje, os judeus comemoram anualmente o que chamam de Hanucá, no mês de dezembro. Esta é realizada em comemoração da festividade de inauguração (hebr.: hhanuk·káh) que se seguiu à purificação do templo feita por Judas Macabeu, em 165 AEC, depois de ter sido poluído por Antíoco IV Epifânio. — Jo 10:22; veja FESTIVIDADE DA DEDICAÇÃO.

INCENSO. Composto de resinas e bálsamos aromáticos que queima lentamente, desprenden-do fragrante aroma. As palavras hebraicas qetó·reth e qetoh·ráh vêm da raiz qa·tár, que significa "fazer fumaça sacrificial". O equivalente nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs é thy·mí·a·ma.

O incenso sagrado prescrito para uso no tabernáculo do ermo era feito de materiais custosos que a congregação contribuía. (Êx 25:1, 2, 6; 35:4, 5, 8, 27-29) Ao dar a fórmula divina para essa mistura quádrupla, Jeová disse a Moisés: "Toma para ti perfumes: gotas de estoraque, e onicha, e gálbano perfumado, e olíbano puro. Deve haver a mesma porção de cada um. E tens de fazer disso um incenso, uma mistura aromática, trabalho de fabricante de unguento, salgado, puro, algo sagrado. E um pouco dele tens de reduzir a pó fino e tens de pôr um pouco dele diante do Testemunho na tenda de reunião, onde me apresentarei a ti. Deve ser santíssimo para vós." Daí, visando inculcar-lhes a exclusividade e a santidade do incenso, Jeová acrescentou: "Quem fizer um igual a este para regalar-se com o seu cheiro tem de ser decepado do seu povo." — Êx 30:34-38; 37:29.

Num período posterior, os judeus rabínicos adicionaram outros ingredientes ao incenso do templo; Josefo disse que se compunha de 13 especiarias de doce fragrância. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], V, 218 [v 5]). Segundo Maimônides, alguns destes itens extras incluíam o açafrão, o âmbar, a canela, a canela-da-china, a mirra e o nardo.

Na extremidade O do compartimento Santo do tabernáculo, junto à cortina que o dividia do Santíssimo, localizava-se "o altar do incenso". (Êx 30:1; 37:25; 40:5, 26, 27) Havia também um altar de incenso similar no templo de Salomão. (1Cr 28:18; 2Cr 2:4) Sobre estes altares, cada manhã e cada noitinha se queimava incenso sagrado. (Êx 30:7, 8; 2Cr 13:11) Uma vez por ano, no Dia da Expiação, pegavam-se brasas do altar, num incensário ou porta-lume, junto com dois punhados de incenso, levando-os para dentro do Santíssimo, onde se fazia que o incenso fumegasse diante do trono de misericórdia da arca do testemunho. — Le 16:12, 13.

O sumo sacerdote Arão inicialmente oferecia incenso sobre o altar. (Êx 30:7) No entanto, seu filho Eleazar recebeu a supervisão do incenso e de outros itens do tabernáculo. (Núm 4:16) Parece que a queima de incenso, exceto no Dia da Expiação, não se restringia ao sumo sacerdote, uma vez que se menciona o subsacerdote Zacarias (pai de João, o Batizador) como cuidando de tal serviço. (Lu 1:8-11) Logo depois de começar a funcionar o serviço do tabernáculo, os dois filhos de Arão, Nadabe e Abiú, foram mortos por Jeová por tentarem oferecer incenso com "fogo ilegítimo". (Le 10:1, 2; compare isso com Êx 30:9; veja ABIÚ.) Mais tarde, Corá e 250 outros, todos levitas, mas não da linhagem sacerdotal, rebelaram-se contra o sacerdócio arônico. Como prova, Moisés mandou que tomassem porta-lumes e queimassem incenso na entrada do tabernáculo, de modo que Jeová pudesse indicar se os aceitava ou não como sacerdotes seus. O grupo pereceu durante o ato, com os porta-lumes na mão. (Núm 16:6, 7, 16-18, 35-40) Assim, também, o Rei Uzias foi atacado de lepra quando presunçosamente tentou queimar incenso no templo. — 2Cr 26:16-21.

Com o tempo, os da nação de Israel tornaram-se tão negligentes na adoração prescrita de Jeová que fecharam o templo e queimaram incenso em outros altares. (2Cr 29:7; 30:14) Pior ainda, eles queimavam incenso a outros deuses, perante os quais se prostituíam, e de outros modos dessagravam o santo incenso, tudo isto sendo detestável aos olhos de Jeová. — Ez 8:10, 11; 16:17, 18; 23:36, 41; Is 1:13.

Significado. O pacto da Lei tinha uma sombra de vindouras coisas melhores (He 10:1), e parece que a queima de incenso sob tal arranjo representava as orações aceitáveis dos fiéis servos de Deus. O salmista declarou: "Seja minha oração preparada como incenso diante de ti [Jeová]." (Sal 141:2) Igualmente, o altamente simbólico livro de Revelação descreve os que estão ao redor do trono celestial de Deus como tendo "tigelas de ouro cheias de incenso, e o incenso significa as orações dos santos". "E foi-lhe dada [a um anjo] uma grande quantidade de incenso para oferecer, junto com as orações de todos os santos, no altar de ouro que estava diante do trono." (Re 5:8; 8:3, 4) Em vários aspectos, a queima de incenso servia como símbolo adequado para as orações dos santos que são 'oferecidas' (He 5:7) noite e dia (1Te 3:10), e são agradáveis a Jeová. — Pr 15:8.

O incenso, naturalmente, não podia tornar aceitáveis a Deus as orações dos adoradores falsos. (Pr 28:9; Mr 12:40) Por outro lado, as orações dum justo são eficazes. (Tg 5:16) Assim, também, quando irrompeu uma praga da parte de Deus, Arão rapidamente "pôs . . . o incenso e começou a fazer expiação pelo povo". — Núm 16:46-48.

Os Cristãos não o Queimavam. Embora se queime incenso hoje em certas religiões da cristandade, bem como em templos budistas, não encontramos base nas Escrituras para tal prática entre cristãos. Não se alistam incensários entre os recipientes usados pela igreja nos primeiros quatro séculos da Era Comum, e só depois de Gregório Magno (fins do sexto século) há evidência clara do uso de incenso nos serviços religiosos. Obviamente, isto é porque, com a vinda de Cristo e terem sido o pacto da Lei e seus regulamentos pregados na estaca de tortura (Col 2:14), e especialmente depois que o templo e seu sacerdócio arônico foram completamente removidos, a queima de incenso na adoração de Deus cessou. Não se deu nenhuma autorização para que fosse usado na congregação cristã, e os primitivos cristãos, como os judeus, jamais queimavam incenso individualmente para fins religiosos.

Os primitivos cristãos também se recusaram a queimar incenso em honra do imperador, embora isto lhes custasse a vida. Como observa Daniel P. Mannix: "Pouquíssimos cristãos abjuraram, embora geralmente se mantivesse para a conveniência deles um altar com fogo na arena. Tudo o que o prisioneiro tinha de fazer era espalhar um pouquinho de incenso sobre a chama, e ele recebia uma Certidão de Sacrifício e era libertado. Explicava-se-lhe também cuidadosamente que ele não estava adorando o imperador; reconhecia apenas o caráter divino do imperador como chefe do estado romano. Ainda assim, quase não houve cristão que se aproveitasse da oportunidade de escapar." — Those About to Die (Os Que Vão Morrer), 1958, p. 137.

Tertuliano (segundo e terceiro séculos EC) diz que os cristãos nem mesmo se envolviam no comércio de incenso. (On Idolatry [Sobre a Idolatria], cap. XI) Isto não se dá, porém, com os mercadores de incenso que negociam com a simbólica Babilônia, a Grande. — Re 18:11, 13.

INCORRUPÇÃO. Qualidade de um corpo não sujeito à decomposição, à ruína ou à destruição.

Referências diretas à incorrupção só são encontradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Ali, tal palavra traduz o grego a·fthar·sí·a, formado do prefixo negativo a e de uma forma de fthei·ro. Esta última palavra significa "corromper" (2Co 7:2) ou "estragar" (1Co 15:33), reduzindo assim a um estado mais baixo ou inferior; também, "matar" ou "destruir". (2Pe 2:12) A forma adjetiva á·fthar·tos (incorruptível) também é usada.

Corrupção e Corruptibilidade. Ao considerar-se a incorrupção, é útil analisar primeiro o uso dos termos gregos para corrupção e corruptibilidade. Tenha em mente que há uma diferença entre algo ser corrupto e ser corrupt*ível,* isto é, passível de se corromper.

A corrupção e a corruptibilidade podem dizer respeito tanto a coisas materiais como a imateriais. A coroa que os atletas gregos almejavam era corruptível — sujeita à decomposição, deterioração ou desintegração. (1Co 9:25) Até mesmo o ouro (dissolúvel em água-régia) e a prata são corruptíveis. (1Pe 1:18; compare isso com Tg 5:3.) Barcos podem ser 'destroçados', ou, literalmente, ser "corrompidos inteiramente" (da forma intensiva di·a·fthei·ro), sofrendo o colapso de sua forma estrutural. (Re 8:9) A mesma palavra grega é usada com respeito a "arruinar" a Terra. (Re 11:18) O homem, a criatura carnal, é corruptível (Ro 1:23); em sua condição imperfeita, seu corpo está sujeito a doenças prejudiciais e, por fim, à dissolução na morte, quando então o corpo se decompõe. (At 13:36) Quanto às coisas imateriais, bons hábitos podem ser corrompidos ou estragados pelas más associações (1Co 15:33); os homens podem tornar-se mentalmente corrompidos, desviando-se da sinceridade, da castidade e da verdade (2Co 11:3; 1Ti 6:5; 2Ti 3:8), isto resultando na degeneração moral, uma corrupção da personalidade do indivíduo. — Ef 4:22; Ju 10.

Até mesmo corpos humanos perfeitos são corruptíveis, isto é, não estão além da ruína ou destruição. Por isso, o apóstolo Paulo podia dizer que o ressuscitado Jesus estava, dali em diante, "destinado a nunca mais voltar à corrupção" (At 13:34), ou seja, jamais retornaria à vida num corpo humano corruptível. Apenas a ação de Deus pôde impedir que o corpo carnal da existência terrestre de seu Filho visse a corrupção no túmulo. (At 2:31; 13:35-37) Este corpo, porém, não foi preservado para ser usado pelo ressuscitado Jesus, visto que o apóstolo Pedro diz que Jesus foi "morto na carne, mas vivificado no espírito". (1Pe 3:18) Portanto, parece evidente que Deus miraculosamente deu fim a tal corpo, não permitindo assim que se decompusesse ruinosamente. — Veja CORPO (O Corpo Carnal de Cristo).

Há indicações de que os anjos, embora sendo criaturas espirituais, têm corpos corruptíveis, uma vez que se diz que estão sujeitos à destruição. — Mt 25:41; 2Pe 2:4; compare isso com Lu 4:33, 34.

Escravização humana à corrupção. Ao passo que Adão, mesmo em sua perfeição, tinha um corpo corruptível, foi somente por causa de sua rebelião contra Deus que ele veio a estar sob a "escravização à corrupção" e transmitiu tal condição a todos os seus descendentes, a raça humana. (Ro 8:20-22) Tal escravização à corrupção resulta do pecado ou transgressão (Ro 5:12) e produz a im-perfeição física que leva à degradação, à doença, ao envelhecimento e à morte. Por esta razão, quem 'semeia visando a carne ceifa da carne corrupção', e não ganha a vida eterna prometida aos que semeiam visando o espírito. — Gál 6:8; compare isso com 2Pe 2:12, 18, 19.

Os Cristãos Alcançam a Incorrupção. Conforme observado, as Escrituras Hebraicas não fazem referência direta à incorrupção, e elas destacam regularmente a mortalidade da alma humana. Assim, referindo-se a Cristo Jesus, o apóstolo diz que ele "lançou luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas". (2Ti 1:10) Por meio de Jesus, Deus revelou o segredo sagrado de seu propósito de conceder a cristãos ungidos o privilégio de reinar com seu Filho nos céus. (Lu 12:32; Jo 14:2, 3; compare isso com Ef 1:9-11.) Por ressuscitar o Salvador deles, Jesus Cristo, Deus deu a tais cristãos a esperança viva de "uma herança incorruptível, e imaculada, e imarcescível . . . reservada nos céus". (1Pe 1:3, 4, 18, 19; compare isso com 1Co 9:25.) Tais pessoas nascem de novo enquanto ainda estão na carne, isto é, concede-se-lhes a posição de filhos espirituais de Deus, nascidos de 'semente reprodutiva incorruptível, por intermédio da palavra do Deus vivente e permanecente'. — 1Pe 1:23; compare isso com 1Jo 3:1, 9.

Embora Deus lide com eles como Seus filhos espirituais, e embora tenham a promessa duma herança incorruptível, estes cristãos chamados ao reino celestial não possuem a imortalidade ou a incorrupção enquanto ainda estão na Terra, na carne. Vê-se isto do fato de que eles estão "buscando glória, e honra e incorruptibilidade, pela perseverança na obra que é boa". (Ro 2:6, 7) A "incorruptibilidade" que se busca por certo não significa simples ausência de corrupção moral. Por seguirem o exemplo de Cristo, e por meio da fé no seu sacrifício resgatador, tais cristãos já 'escaparam da corrupção que há no mundo pela concupiscência' (2Pe 1:3, 4); estão 'amando o nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo em incorrupção' e 'mostrando no seu ensino incorrupção'. (Ef 6:24; Tit 2:7, 8) A incorruptibilidade (junto com a glória e a honra) que buscam por meio da perseverança fiel relaciona-se com a sua glorificação, por ocasião de sua ressurreição como reais filhos espirituais de Deus, e isto se evidencia da primeira carta de Paulo aos coríntios.

Ressurreição para a Imortalidade e a Incorrupção. Cristo Jesus obteve a imortalidade ao ser ressuscitado, tendo dali em diante uma "vida indestrutível". (1Ti 6:15, 16; He 7:15-17) Como "representação exata do . . . próprio ser" de seu Pai, que é o Deus incorruptível (He 1:3; 1Ti 1:17), o ressuscitado Jesus também goza de incorruptibilidade.

Unidos com Jesus na semelhança de sua ressurreição, seus co-herdeiros também são ressuscitados, não simplesmente para a vida eterna como criaturas espirituais, mas para a imortalidade e a incorrupção. Tendo vivido, servido fielmente, e morrido em corpos humanos corruptíveis, eles passam a receber corpos espirituais incorruptíveis, como Paulo mostra claramente em 1 Coríntios 15:42-54. Por conseguinte, a imortalidade evidentemente se refere à qualidade de vida que usufruem, à sua qualidade infindável e indestrutível, ao passo que a incorrupção aparentemente se relaciona com o organismo ou o corpo que Deus lhes dá, organismo este inerentemente isento de decomposição, de estrago ou destruição. Portanto, parece que Deus lhes concede o poder de autossustentação, não dependendo de fontes externas de energia, como dependem Suas outras criaturas, carnais e espirituais. Isto é uma comovente evidência da confiança que Deus deposita neles. Tal existência independente e indestrutível, porém, não os remove do controle de Deus, e eles, assim como seu Cabeça, Cristo Jesus, continuam sujeitos à vontade e às orientações de seu Pai. — 1Co 15:23-28; veja ALMA; IMORTALIDADE.

INCULPE. Uma das palavras hebraicas traduzidas por "inculpe" é tam. É usada com relação à exemplar posição moral de Jó e à impecável beleza da sulamita. (Jó 1:1, 8; Cân 5:2; 6:9) Por causa de sua vida pacífica e tranquila morando em tendas, em contraste com a vida irrequieta e aventureira de seu irmão como caçador, fala-se de Jacó como sendo inculpe. (Gên 25:27) Outra palavra hebraica às vezes vertida por "inculpe(s)" é tamím, com o sentido de "impecável; incólume; perfeito". (Pr 2:21; 11:5, 20) As palavras hebraicas tam e tamím vêm da raiz verbal ta·mám, que significa "ser completo, completado; vir à perfeição; chegar a um término". (Sal 19:13; 1Rs 6:22; Is 18:5; Je 24:10; compare isso com 1Sa 16:11, onde a frase traduzida por: "São estes todos os rapazes?" literalmente significa: "Está completo o número de rapazes?") Na Septuaginta grega, a palavra hebraica tam é, às vezes, traduzida por á·mem·ptos. (Jó 1:1, 8; 2:3; 9:20) Formas desta palavra ocorrem também nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e podem ser definidas como "inculpe; sem defeito". — Lu 1:6; Fil 3:6; He 8:7; veja PERFEIÇÃO.

Quando é usada para descrever humanos, o termo "inculpe" precisa sempre ser encarado como relativo, não absoluto. O sofredor Jó tirou conclusões equivocadas sobre Jeová, inclusive a respeito de como o Todo-Poderoso considera os inculpes. (Jó 9:20-22) Zacarias, pai de João, o Batizador, manifestou falta de fé na declaração de Jeová através do anjo Gabriel. (Lu 1:18-20) Ainda assim, Jó e Zacarias foram classificados de inculpes, pois correspondiam ao que Jeová espera de humanos que, embora fiéis, estão manchados pela imperfeição. — Jó 1:1; Lu 1:6.

Do ponto de vista de seus contemporâneos judeus, Paulo era inculpe antes de tornar-se discípulo de Jesus Cristo. Ele fazia o que a Lei ordenava, cumprindo as obrigações que lhe eram impostas e refreando-se do que era proibido. (Fil 3:6) Mas, Paulo não tinha então uma posição inculpe perante Jeová. Ele era culpado de grave pecado como perseguidor dos irmãos de Cristo e era blasfemador e homem insolente. — 1Ti 1:13, 15.

O Altíssimo se agrada daqueles cuja conduta é um reflexo de sua espiritualidade sadia, sua pureza, sua qualidade inculpe. (Pr 11:20) Portanto, é vital que os cristãos vivam duma maneira inculpe, isenta de censura justificável. — Fil 2:15; 1Te 5:23.

INDENIZAÇÃO. Veja COMPENSAÇÃO.

ÍNDIA. A área exata abrangida pelo nome bíblico "Índia" é incerta. (Est 8:9) Os eruditos geralmente sugerem que indica a área da bacia do rio Indo e seus tributários, isto é, a região de Punjab e talvez também Sind. O testemunho do historiador Heródoto (III, 88, 94; IV, 44) indica que "Índia" veio a tornar-se inicialmente parte do Império Persa durante o governo de Dario Histaspes (521-486 AEC). No tempo de Assuero (considerado ser Xerxes I, filho de Dario Histaspes), a Índia constituía o limite oriental do império. — Est 1:1.

É provável que o vale do Indo tenha sido povoado não muito depois de ser confundida a língua dos construtores de Babel. Uma comparação da antiga civilização do vale do Indo com a da Mesopotâmia revela a edificação de estruturas como as plataformas em zigurate da Mesopotâmia, esculturas de figuras humanas, com cabeças tendo aspectos faciais em forma de máscaras, típicos das antigas esculturas mesopotâmicas, e sinais pictográficos que se assemelham às primitivas formas mesopotâmicas. O assiriólogo Samuel N. Kramer sugeriu que o vale do Indo foi colonizado por um povo que fugiu da Mesopotâmia, quando os sumerianos assumiram o controle de tal área.

INFERNO. Palavra usada na versão Almeida (bem como na versão católica Matos Soares e na maioria das traduções antigas), para traduzir o termo hebraico she'óhl e o grego hai·des. Na versão Almeida (revista e corrigida), a palavra "inferno(s)" é traduzida 28 vezes de she'óhl e 7 vezes de hai·des. Esta versão não é coerente, contudo, uma vez que she'óhl também é traduzido 27 vezes por "sepultura", 5 vezes "sepulcro", 1 vez "terra", 1 vez "enterrados", 1 vez "mundo invisível", e 2 vezes é transliterado "Seol". Na versão Matos Soares, o termo she'óhl é traduzido por "inferno(s)" 34 vezes, "habitação dos mortos" 11 vezes, "sepulcro" 11 vezes, "sepultura" 4 vezes, "abismo" 1 vez, "terra" 1 vez, "[perigos] exiciais" 1 vez, "morte" 1 vez, e é transliterado "cheol" 2 vezes.

Em 1885, com a publicação da completa English Revised Version (Versão Revisada Inglesa), a palavra original she'óhl foi, em muitos lugares, transliterada para o texto inglês das Escrituras Hebraicas, embora, na maioria das suas ocorrências, se usasse "sepultura" e "cova", e "inferno" ocorre cerca de 14 vezes. Este foi um ponto em que a comissão americana discordou dos revisores ingleses, e, assim, ao produzirem a American Standard Version (Versão Padrão Americana, 1901), eles transliteraram she'óhl em todas as suas 65 ocorrências. Ambas as versões transliteraram hai·des nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs em todas as suas dez ocorrências, embora a palavra grega Gé·en·na (português: "Geena") seja traduzida por "inferno" em todas as ocorrências, como acontece em muitas outras traduções modernas.

A respeito do uso de "inferno" para traduzir estas palavras originais do hebraico e do grego, Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine, 1981, Vol. 2, p. 187) diz: "HADES . . . Corresponde a 'Seol' no A.T. [Antigo Testamento]. Na V.A. [Versão Autorizada] do A.T. [Antigo Testamento] e do N.T. [Novo Testamento], foi vertido de modo infeliz por 'Inferno'."

A Collier's Encyclopedia (Enciclopédia da Collier, 1986, Vol. 12, p. 28) diz a respeito de "Inferno": "Primeiro representa o hebraico Seol do Antigo Testamento, e o grego Hades, da Septuaginta e do Novo Testamento. Visto que Seol, nos tempos do Antigo Testamento, se referia simplesmente à habitação dos mortos e não sugeria distinções morais, a palavra 'inferno', conforme entendida atualmente, não é uma tradução feliz."

É, de fato, devido ao modo como a palavra "inferno" é entendida atualmente que ela constitui uma maneira tão 'infeliz' de verter estas palavras bíblicas originais. O Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Terceiro Novo Dicionário Internacional de Webster), exaustivo, diz sob "Inferno":

"de . . . helan, esconder". A palavra "inferno" não transmitia assim, originalmente, nenhuma ideia de calor ou de tormento, mas simplesmente de um 'lugar coberto ou oculto'. No antigo dialeto inglês, a expressão "helling potatoes" ("infernizar batatas") significava, não assá-las no fogo, mas simplesmente colocar as batatas no solo, ou num porão.

O significado atribuído à palavra "inferno" atualmente é o representado na Divina Comédia de Dante, e no Paraíso Perdido de Milton, significado este completamente alheio à definição original da palavra. A ideia dum "inferno" de tormento ardente, porém, remonta a uma época muito anterior a Dante ou a Milton. A Grolier Universal Encyclopedia (Enciclopédia Universal Grolier, 1971, Vol. 9, p. 205), sob "Inferno", diz: "Os hindus e os budistas consideram o inferno como lugar de purificação espiritual e de restauração final. A tradição islâmica o reputa um lugar de castigo eterno." O conceito de sofrimento após a morte é encontrado entre os ensinos religiosos pagãos dos povos antigos da Babilônia e do Egito. As crenças dos babilônios e dos assírios retratavam o "mundo inferior . . . como lugar cheio de horrores, . . . presidido por deuses e demônios de grande força e ferocidade". Embora os antigos textos religiosos egípcios não ensinem que a queima de qualquer vítima individual prosseguiria eternamente, eles deveras retratam o "Outro Mundo" como tendo "covas de fogo" para "os condenados". — The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria (A Religião de Babilônia e Assíria), de Morris Jastrow Jr., 1898, p. 581; The Book of the Dead (O Livro dos Mortos), com apresentação de E. Wallis Budge, 1960, pp. 135, 144, 149, 151, 153, 161, 200.

O "inferno de fogo" tem sido um ensino básico da cristandade por muitos séculos. Assim, é compreensível o que diz a The Encyclopedia Americana (Enciclopédia Americana, 1956, Vol. XIV, p. 81): "Muita confusão e muitos mal-entendidos foram causados pelo fato de os primitivos tradutores da Bíblia terem traduzido persistentemente o hebraico Seol e o grego Hades e Geena pela palavra inferno. A simples transliteração destas palavras por parte dos tradutores das edições revistas da Bíblia não bastou para eliminar apreciavelmente esta confusão e equívoco." Não obstante, tal transliteração e tradução coerente deveras habilita o estudante da Bíblia a fazer uma comparação cuidadosa dos textos em que aparecem estas palavras originais e, com mente aberta, a chegar ao entendimento correto de seu verdadeiro significado. — Veja GEENA; HADES; SEOL; SEPULTURA, SEPULCRO; TÁRTARO.

INIMIGO. O termo hebraico 'oh·yév e o grego ekh·thrós referem-se a alguém hostil ou que odeia. (Êx 23:22; Mt 5:43) O primeiro registro de inimizade no Universo é a ação da "serpente", mais tarde identificada na Bíblia como Satanás, o Diabo (Re 12:9), quando abordou Eva com um desafio quanto à veracidade de Deus. (Gên 3:4, 5) Jesus Cristo descreveu essa criatura espiritual como homicida, também como "mentiroso e o pai da mentira". — Jo 8:44; veja SATANÁS.

Inimigos de Deus. Desde aquele tempo Satanás tem sido o principal inimigo de Deus. (Mt 13:25, 39) Tem exercido influência sobre a humanidade, e esta tem cedido a essa influência, de modo que "o mundo inteiro jaz no poder do iníquo". (1Jo 5:19) Este mundo é, portanto, inimigo de Deus. (Tg 4:4) Todavia, Deus tem sido longânime com seus inimigos e misericordioso com os dentre eles que desejam servi-lo. Providenciou um meio de reconciliação para tais por meio do sacrifício de Jesus Cristo. (Ro 5:10; Col 1:21, 22) Os que estão em união com Cristo ele constituiu "embaixadores" a um mundo hostil, com o ministério da reconciliação. — 2Co 5:18-21.

Por outro lado, há muitos que se tornam inimigos empedernidos de Deus, incluindo Satanás e os demônios iníquos, que juntam as nações em oposição a Deus (Re 16:13-16); o apóstata "homem que é contra a lei", que se coloca em oposição a Deus (2Te 2:3, 4); "Babilônia, a Grande", cujos "pecados . . . acumularam-se até o céu" (Re 17:5; 18:5); "a fera" que saiu do mar, que obtém seu poder e autoridade de Satanás, o dragão (Re 13:1, 2, 6); a "fera" de dois chifres, que promove a adoração dessa "fera" do mar (Re 13:11, 12); a "fera cor de escarlate", "cheia de nomes blasfemos" (Re 17:3); e os que persistem em apoiá-los (Re 19:17-21). A estes, Deus destruirá. — De 32:41; Is 59:18; Re 20:10.

Inimigos de Cristo. Os inimigos de Deus são também os inimigos de Cristo. (Jo 8:42-47; Mt 10:40) Quando esteve na terra, Jesus Cristo sofreu muito às mãos dos inimigos de Deus. Não obstante, ele não revidou na mesma moeda; não procurou causar-lhes danos. (1Pe 2:21-23) Até mesmo curou um homem na multidão que veio com bastões e espadas para prendê-lo. — Lu 22:49-51; Jo 18:10, 11.

No entanto, após a sua ressurreição, ele "se assentou à direita de Deus, daí em diante esperando até que os seus inimigos sejam postos por escabelo dos seus pés". (He 10:12, 13; Lu 20:41-43) Esta profecia foi registrada no Salmo 110, declarando a ordem de Jeová a seu Filho: "Subjuga no meio dos teus inimigos." (Sal 110:2) Revela-se que estes inimigos de Jeová e de seu "ungido" se compõem de "nações", "grupos nacionais", "reis da terra" e "dignitários". (Sal 2:1-9) Em Revelação 19:11-21, o personagem chamado "Fiel e Verdadeiro", "A Palavra de Deus" e "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores" é descrito como conduzindo os exércitos dos céus contra seus inimigos. Seus inimigos são aqui descritos como "a fera e os reis da terra, e os seus exércitos" e o "falso profeta", a todos os quais Cristo aniquila.

Inimigos da Humanidade. Os que são inimigos de Deus são, ao mesmo tempo, inimigos da humanidade porque eles lutam contra a reconciliação do homem com Deus e contra os propósitos de Deus para com a família humana. Eles opõem-se à proclamação da verdade e estão, por conseguinte, contra os interesses de todos os homens, assim como estavam aqueles que perseguiram os primitivos cristãos. — 1Te 2:15.

Adicionalmente, por causa da entrada do pecado no mundo, por meio de Adão, a morte se espalhou a todos os homens, e tem sido, como a Bíblia a chama, o "inimigo" da humanidade. (1Co 15:26; Ro 5:12) A morte não pode ser vencida por meio de esforços humanos. (Sal 89:48) Apenas Jeová Deus, por meio de Jesus Cristo, eliminará esse inimigo do homem. — 1Co 15:24-26; Is 25:8.

A Luta do Cristão. O apóstolo Paulo descreveu a guerra do cristão, dizendo: "Temos uma pugna, não contra sangue e carne, mas contra os governos, contra as autoridades, contra os governantes mundiais desta escuridão, contra as forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais." (Ef 6:12; compare isso com 2Co 10:4.) Por conseguinte, a luta do cristão não é contra homens. É contra espíritos iníquos que tentam desviá-los de Deus. Em contrapartida, Jesus Cristo explicou a seus seguidores que o mundo os odiaria e até mesmo os mataria (Mt 10:22; 24:9; Jo 16:2) e que em alguns casos os inimigos do homem seriam os de sua própria família. — Mt 10:36.

Qual deve ser a atitude do cristão para com o seu próximo que se constituir em seu inimigo? Jesus aconselhou: "Continuai a amar os vossos inimigos, a fazer o bem aos que vos odeiam." (Lu 6:27, 28) Ele explicou: "Ouvistes que se disse [não na Bíblia, mas na tradição]: 'Tens de amar o teu próximo e odiar o teu inimigo.' No entanto, eu vos digo: Continuai a amar os vossos inimigos e a orar pelos que vos perseguem." (Mt 5:43, 44) E, sem dúvida referindo-se a Provérbios 25:21, o apóstolo Paulo admoesta: "Se o teu inimigo tiver fome, alimenta-o." (Ro 12:20) Este princípio fora enunciado pela Lei, que dizia: "Se encontrares o touro do teu inimigo ou seu jumento andando perdido, sem falta lho deves restituir. Se vires o jumento de alguém que te odeia deitado sob a sua carga, então tens de refrear-te de abandoná-lo. Sem falta deves conseguir soltá-lo junto com ele." — Êx 23:4, 5.

Visto que os servos de Jeová aplicam esses excelentes princípios, o resultado tem sido que muitos ex-inimigos têm abrandado seu coração para com eles e também para com o próprio Deus. Isto se harmoniza com Provérbios 16:7: "Quando Jeová tem prazer nos caminhos de um homem, faz que até os seus próprios inimigos estejam em paz com ele." (Compare isso com Ro 12:17, 18, 21; 1Pe 2:19, 20; 3:9.) Um notável exemplo de misericórdia para com um inimigo é o tratamento dispensado por Jesus Cristo a Saulo de Tarso (que se tornou o apóstolo Paulo). — At 9:1-16; 1Ti 1:13; compare isso com Col 1:21, 22.

Jeová Deus diz: "Minha é a vingança e a retribuição." (De 32:35; Ro 12:19; He 10:30) Portanto, o servo de Deus não procura a vingança com as suas próprias mãos; tampouco deseja ele que se abata a calamidade sobre seus inimigos para satisfação pessoal, lembrando-se do sábio conselho: "Quando teu inimigo cai, não te alegres; e quando se faz que tropece, não jubile teu coração." (Pr 24:17) Sob a Lei, nos casos em que pudesse haver dúvida quanto a se um homicídio era intencional ou acidental, qualquer prévia inimizade, ódio, ou ter golpeado um homem com inimizade, era um fator que pesava muito contra o acusado. — Núm 35:20-25.

Há muitos "inimigos" a serem vencidos pelo cristão durante a sua vida, à parte de oposição pessoal literal. Há grave perigo em capitular diante desses "inimigos", pois, se a pessoa se submeter a eles, eles levarão a pessoa à condição de inimiga de Deus. Diz o apóstolo: "A mentalidade segundo a carne significa inimizade com Deus, visto que não está em sujeição à lei de Deus, de fato, nem pode estar." (Ro 8:7; Gál 5:17) As Escrituras descrevem um conflito que ocorre no íntimo do cristão por causa de duas forças inimigas: (1) "a lei de Deus", a qual Paulo se refere como sendo a lei que agora governa a sua mente, e também como "a lei desse espírito que dá vida em união com Cristo Jesus" e (2) a "lei do pecado que está nos . . . membros [da pessoa]" ou a "lei do pecado e da morte". (Ro 7:22-25; 8:2) O apóstolo Pedro, de maneira similar, admoesta os cristãos a 'se absterem dos desejos carnais, que são os que travam um combate contra a alma'. (1Pe 2:11) Tiago, meio irmão de Jesus, reforça isso, falando de "desejos ardentes de prazer sensual, que travam um combate nos vossos membros". (Tg 4:1) A pessoa tem de reconhecer tais coisas como inimigos a fim de manter-se firme contra eles.

INIQUIDADE. Aquilo que não se ajusta ao padrão de excelência moral de Deus é iníquo, mau, ruim ou imprestável. Semelhante à palavra grega po·ne·rí·a (Mt 22:18; Mr 7:22; Lu 11:39; At 3:26; Ro 1:29; 1Co 5:8; Ef 6:12), o verbo hebraico ra·shá' e formas aparentadas designam aquilo que é iníquo. (Gên 18:23; 2Sa 22:22; 2Cr 20:35; Jó 34:8; Sal 37:10; Is 26:10) Po·ne·rós (aparentado com po·ne·rí·a) não raro significa o que é mau ou iníquo em sentido moral (Lu 6:45) e pode aplicar-se a algo ruim ou imprestável em sentido físico, como quando Jesus Cristo falou do "fruto imprestável". (Mt 7:17, 18) Esta palavra pode também descrever algo que é prejudicial e, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 16:2, tem sido vertido por "dolorosas" (BLH) e "maligna(s)". — Al; NM; NTP.

Por que Deus tem permitido a iniquidade?

Satanás, o Diabo, que fez com que o primeiro homem e a primeira mulher, Adão e Eva, se rebelassem contra Deus, opõe-se ao padrão justo de Deus, sendo apropriadamente chamado de "o iníquo". (Mt 6:13; 13:19, 38; 1Jo 2:13, 14; 5:19) A rebelião iniciada por Satanás questionava a justeza e a justiça da soberania de Deus, isto é, se a regência de Deus sobre suas criaturas é exercida de forma justa e nos melhores interesses delas. Terem Adão e Eva se rebelado suscitou também outra questão: Revelar-se-iam infiéis e desleais a Deus todas as outras criaturas inteligentes, quando a obediência não parecesse trazer benefícios materiais? A alegação de Satanás a respeito do fiel Jó subentendia que o fariam. Satanás disse: "Pele por pele, e tudo o que o homem tem dará pela sua alma. Ao invés disso, estende agora tua mão, por favor, e toca-lhe até o osso e a carne, e vê se não te amaldiçoará na própria face." — Jó 2:4, 5; veja SOBERANIA.

Precisava-se de tempo para resolver as questões que haviam sido levantadas. Por isso, Jeová Deus, ao permitir que pessoas iníquas continuassem vivendo, possibilitou que outros tivessem parte em provar falsa a afirmação de Satanás, por servirem fielmente a Deus sob circunstâncias desfavoráveis e atribuladas. Permitir Deus a iniquidade também deu uma oportunidade para que as pessoas abandonassem o proceder errado e se sujeitassem voluntariamente às leis justas de Deus. (Is 55:7; Ez 33:11) Assim, restringir-se Deus, por algum tempo, de destruir os iníquos, serve para poupar as pessoas de disposição justa, por lhes conceder tempo para provarem seu amor e sua devoção a Jeová. — Ro 9:17-26.

Além disso, Jeová Deus manobra as circunstâncias de tal modo que os próprios iníquos, sem o perceberem, servem ao Seu propósito. Embora se oponham a Deus, Ele pode restringi-los ao ponto necessário para preservar Seus servos no proceder de integridade, e fazer com que as ações dos próprios iníquos realcem a Sua justiça. (Ro 3:3-5, 23-26; 8:35-39; Sal 76:10) Esta ideia é expressa em Provérbios 16:4: "Tudo Jeová fez para seu propósito, sim, mesmo o iníquo para o dia mau."

Um caso em pauta é o do Faraó, a quem Jeová, por meio de Moisés e Arão, avisou para que libertasse os israelitas escravizados. Não foi Deus quem fez este governante egípcio ser iníquo, mas Ele permitiu que Faraó continuasse vivendo e também criou circunstâncias que o moveram a manifestar-se como iníquo e merecedor da morte. O propósito de Jeová em fazer isso é revelado em Êxodo 9:16: "Por esta razão te deixei em existência: para mostrar-te meu poder e para que meu nome seja declarado em toda a terra."

As Dez Pragas lançadas sobre o Egito, culminando com a destruição do Faraó e de suas forças militares no Mar Vermelho, foram uma impressionante demonstração do poder de Jeová. (Êx 7:14-12:30; Sal 78:43-51; 136:15) Por anos depois disso, as nações ao redor ainda falavam no assunto, e o nome de Deus estava, assim, sendo declarado em toda a Terra. (Jos 2:10, 11; 1Sa 4:8) Caso Jeová tivesse matado imediatamente a Faraó, esta grande demonstração do Seu poder, para Sua glória e para a libertação de Seu povo, não teria sido possível.

As Escrituras asseguram-nos de que virá o tempo em que não mais existirá a iniquidade, uma vez que todos os que se colocam em oposição ao Criador serão destruídos, quando a Sua permissão da existência da iniquidade tiver cumprido seu objetivo. — 2Pe 3:9-13; Re 18:20-24; 19:11-20:3; 20:7-10.

INJÚRIA. Sujeitar uma pessoa à linguagem insultante, cobrindo-a de ultrajes.

Para os israelitas, injuriar ou invocar o mal sobre os pais era uma ofensa punível com a morte. (Êx 21:17; Mt 15:4; Mr 7:10) Como os abusos verbais, os abusos físicos contra os pais originavam-se da mesma disposição perversa e, por conseguinte, incorriam na mesma pena. (Êx 21:15) Visto que os pais eram os representantes de Jeová perante seus filhos, o filho que injuriasse seus pais, estaria efetivamente injuriando a Deus. — Veja Êx 20:12.

Devia-se mostrar também o devido respeito para com aqueles que eram governantes em Israel. É por isso que o apóstolo Paulo, embora tratado injustamente, pediu desculpas por ter, inadvertidamente, se dirigido ao sumo sacerdote com palavras que outros consideravam injuriosas. — Êx 22:28; At 23:1-5.

Entre os cristãos do primeiro século não havia lugar para a injúria deliberada. (1Co 6:9, 10; 1Pe 3:8, 9) Alguém culpado de vituperar habitual e intencionalmente a outros devia ser expulso da congregação. — 1Co 5:11-13.

Os seguidores de Jesus Cristo, sendo aparentemente insignificantes e impopulares no mundo, por causa de sua atividade e de sua mensagem, eram muitas vezes objeto de injúria. (Veja Jo 9:28, 29; 17:14; 1Co 1:18; 4:11-13.) Mas, não deviam retaliar por injuriar os opositores. Neste sentido, Cristo Jesus dera-lhes o exemplo. (1Pe 2:21, 23) Acusado de ser um homem dado ao vinho, glutão, agente do Diabo, violador do sábado e blasfemador contra Deus, Cristo Jesus não retaliou por injuriar seus acusadores. (Mt 11:19; 26:65; Lu 11:15; Jo 9:16) Quando foram lançadas acusações falsas contra ele na presença de Pilatos, Jesus manteve-se calado. (Mt 27:12-14) Imitar o cristão o exemplo de Jesus pode ter um bom efeito sobre alguns opositores, fazendo-os reconhecer que suas palavras injuriosas não têm base. Compreenderem isto pode até mesmo levá-los a se tornarem glorificadores de Deus. — Veja Ro 12:17-21; 1Pe 2:12.

Os cristãos tinham de exercer cuidado para se portarem de modo excelente, a fim de não fornecerem motivos desnecessários para que os oponentes os injuriassem. Este é o ponto frisado pelo apóstolo Paulo com relação a viúvas jovens da congregação. Visto que estavam inclinadas a tagarelar e a meter-se na vida dos outros, ele as incentivou a se casarem e ficarem ocupadas em criar filhos e cuidar duma casa. Sendo esposas atarefadas, não dariam motivos para que qualquer opositor injuriasse os cristãos de serem tagarelas e intrometidos na vida alheia. — 1Ti 5:13, 14.

Alguns que não acompanharam Jesus Cristo quando ele esteve na Terra mostraram, por suas ações, que estavam do 'lado dele', e não se juntariam prontamente aos opositores em injuriá-lo. Esta era a situação de certo homem que expulsava demônios à base do nome de Jesus, evidentemente recebendo de Deus o poder para fazê-lo. João e outros deduziram que tal homem devia ser impedido de agir, pois não os estava acompanhando. Mas Jesus disse: "Não tenteis impedi-lo, porque ninguém há que faça uma obra poderosa à base do meu nome que logo possa injuriar-me [literalmente: falar mal de mim]." (Mr 9:38-40) Na ocasião em que Jesus fez esta declaração, a congregação judaica ainda gozava do reconhecimento divino, e o estabelecimento da congregação cristã ainda era algo futuro. (Compare isso com Mt 16:18; 18:15-17.) Também, Jesus não exigia que todos os crentes o acompanhassem. (Mr 5:18-20) Por conseguinte, a realização de obras poderosas por parte dum judeu, alguém que fazia parte do povo pactuado de Deus, à base do nome de Jesus, teria sido prova de que tal pessoa tinha o favor divino. Não obstante, logo que a congregação cristã foi estabelecida, as pessoas desejosas de ter o favor de Deus tinham de associar-se com ela como fiéis seguidores de Jesus Cristo. (Compare isso com At 2:40, 41.) A mera realização de obras poderosas à base do nome de Jesus não mais constituiria evidência de uma pessoa estar do lado de Jesus Cristo, nem seria garantia de que não seria culpada de injuriar o Filho de Deus. — Mt 7:21-23; veja BLASFÊMIA; LINGUAGEM ULTRAJANTE.

INLÁ [Que [Deus] Encha; ou, Que [Deus] Faça Reinar]. Pai de Micaías, profeta de Jeová contemporâneo dos reis Acabe e Jeosafá. — 1Rs 22:8, 9; 2Cr 18:7, 8.

INRA [Ele se Rebela]. Filho de Zofá; cabeça paternal e também chefe de maiorais da tribo de Aser, homem valente, poderoso. — 1Cr 7:36, 40.

INRI [Forma abreviada de Amarias, que significa "Jeová Disse"].

1. Filho de Bani, da tribo de Judá através de Peres. — 1Cr 9:4.

2. Pai do Zacur que participou da reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:2.

INSETOS. No estágio adulto, estes invertebrados se distinguem por um corpo que consiste em três segmentos, cabeça, tórax e abdômen, com seis patas, um par de antenas, e, em geral, duas ou quatro asas.

A linguagem pitoresca da Bíblia refere-se aos insetos como 'andando de quatro'. Moisés obviamente sabia que os insetos têm seis patas. Assim, tal referência é, sem dúvida, ao seu modo de andar, em vez de ao número de patas. Há insetos alados, incluindo as abelhas, as moscas e as vespas, que andam sobre suas seis patas do modo como andam os animais quadrúpedes. Outros insetos, tais como os gafanhotos, estão equipados de duas patas aptas para o salto, e, assim, literalmente usam as outras quatro patas para rastejar. — Le 11:20-23.

As mais de 800.000 variedades conhecidas de insetos apresentam um panorama contrastante.

Ao passo que alguns têm coloração sombria, outros são revestidos de tons brilhantes e de lindos padrões. Acham-se representados neles todos os matizes do arco-íris. Em tamanho, os insetos variam de besourinhos tão pequenos que podem passar pelo buraco duma agulha, até curiosos "bichos-pau" que medem mais de 30 cm de comprimento. Entre os insetos, é possível encontrar comunidades organizadas: construtores, agricultores, manufatureiros, voadores de longa distância, peritos saltadores, nadadores e cavadores. Através do estudo e da observação, o homem pode aprender muito dos insetos, sobretudo, que são criações de Deus, dotados de sabedoria instintiva, não por acaso, mas pela Fonte de toda a sabedoria, Jeová. — Jó 12:7-9.

Embora muitos se inclinem a encarar os insetos como pragas que estragam plantações e os bens do homem, além de disseminarem doenças, realmente apenas uma pequeníssima porcentagem de insetos pode ser chamada de prejudicial sob as atuais circunstâncias. A maioria pode ser classificada quer como neutra, quer como direta ou indiretamente benéfica para o homem.

Os insetos têm importante ligação natural com as plantas. Estima-se que 85 por cento das plantas floríferas dependem, quer completa, quer parcialmente, da polinização feita por insetos. Os insetos desempenham também um papel benéfico como enriquecedores do solo e eliminadores de restos. Produzem-se corantes e goma-laca de cochonilhas. No Oriente Médio, insetos, tais como gafanhotos, há séculos são usados como comestível. Se não existissem insetos, o mel e a seda não seriam conhecidos.

Os insetos deveras ocupam um lugar importante com relação ao restante da criação terrestre. Observou Carl D. Duncan, professor de entomologia e botânica: "Não é exagero dizer que os insetos determinam o caráter do mundo do homem de maneira muito mais ampla do que ele próprio o faz, e que, se eles de repente desaparecessem completamente, o mundo mudaria tanto que é extremamente duvidoso que o homem pudesse manter qualquer tipo de sociedade organizada que fosse." — Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution (Relatório Anual do Instituto Smithsonian), 1947, p. 346.

INSPEÇÃO, PORTÃO DE. Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

INSPIRAÇÃO. A qualidade ou o estado de ser movido, ou produzido, sob a direção de um espírito originário de uma fonte sobre-humana. Quando esta fonte é Jeová, o resultado são pronunciamentos ou escritos que são realmente a palavra de Deus. O apóstolo Paulo disse, em 2 Timóteo 3:16: "Toda a Escritura é inspirada por Deus." A expressão "inspirada por Deus" traduz o termo grego composto the·ó·pneu·stos, que significa, literalmente, "[por] Deus soprado" ou "soprado por Deus".

Trata-se da única ocorrência deste termo grego nas Escrituras. Seu uso ali identifica claramente a Deus como Fonte e Produtor das Escrituras Sagradas, a Bíblia. Serem elas 'por Deus sopradas' encontra certo paralelo na expressão que se acha nas Escrituras Hebraicas, no Salmo 33:6: "Pela palavra de Jeová foram feitos os próprios céus, e pelo espírito [ou sopro] de sua boca, todo o exército deles."

Resulta da Operação do Espírito de Deus. O meio ou agente para a inspiração de "toda a Escritura" foi o espírito santo ou força ativa de Deus. (Veja ESPÍRITO.) Esse espírito santo operava para com os homens, ou neles, de modo a movê-los e guiá-los a redigir a mensagem de Deus. Assim, o apóstolo Pedro diz a respeito da profecia bíblica: "Sabeis primeiramente isto, que nenhuma profecia da Escritura procede de qualquer interpretação particular. Porque a profecia nunca foi produzida pela vontade do homem, mas os homens falaram da parte de Deus conforme eram movidos por espírito santo." (2Pe 1:20, 21) A evidência mostra que o espírito de Deus operou na mente e no coração de todos os escritores bíblicos, a fim de conduzi-los ao alvo tencionado por Deus. O Rei Davi disse: "Foi o espírito de Jeová que falou por meu intermédio, e a sua palavra estava na minha língua." (2Sa 23:2) Quando Jesus citou o Salmo 110, ele disse que Davi o escrevera "por inspiração [literalmente: no espírito]". (Mt 22:43) A passagem paralela em Marcos 12:36 reza "pelo espírito santo".

Assim como o espírito de Jeová moveu, ou habilitou, homens a realizar outras tarefas divinas — a feitura das vestes sacerdotais e do equipamento para o tabernáculo (Êx 28:3; 35:30-35), assumir a carga administrativa (De 34:9), liderar as forças militares (Jz 3:9, 10; 6:33, 34) — da mesma forma também habilitou alguns homens a registrar as Escrituras. Por meio desse espírito, puderam receber sabedoria, entendimento, conhecimento, conselho e poder, além do normal, e segundo suas necessidades específicas. (Is 11:2; Miq 3:8; 1Co 12:7, 8) Diz-se que Davi recebeu o plano arquitetônico do templo "por inspiração [literalmente: pelo espírito]". (1Cr 28:12) Jesus assegurou a seus apóstolos que o espírito de Deus os ajudaria, ensinando-os, guiando-os e fazendo com que a mente deles recordasse as coisas que tinham ouvido dele, bem como lhes revelando coisas futuras. (Jo 14:26; 16:13) Isto garantiu a veracidade e a exatidão dos seus relatos evangélicos, incluindo muitas citações extensas dos discursos de Jesus, embora o relato evangélico de João, por exemplo, fosse escrito dezenas de anos depois da morte de Jesus.

Controlados pela "mão de Jeová". Os escritores da Bíblia, portanto, ficaram sob a "mão", ou poder orientador e controlador, de Jeová. (2Rs 3:15, 16; Ez 3:14, 22) Assim como a "mão" de Jeová podia mover Seus servos a falar ou a ficar calados nos momentos prescritos (Ez 3:4, 26, 27; 33:22), assim também podia estimular a escrita ou agir como força restritiva; podia mover o escritor a tratar de certos assuntos ou restringi-lo de incluir outra matéria. O produto final, em cada caso, seria o que Jeová desejara.

Como os Escritores Receberam Direção Divina. Como diz o apóstolo, Deus falou "de muitos modos" a seus servos nos tempos pré-cristãos. (He 1:1, 2) Pelo menos num caso, o dos Dez Mandamentos, ou Decálogo, as informações foram supridas divinamente em forma escrita, apenas exigindo que fossem copiadas nos rolos ou em outro material empregado por Moisés. (Êx 31:18; De 10:1-5) Em outros casos, as informações foram ditadas palavra por palavra. Ao apresentar o grande conjunto de leis e estatutos do pacto de Deus com Israel, Jeová instruiu a Moisés: "Escreve para ti estas palavras." (Êx 34:27) Aos profetas também foram dadas, com frequência, mensagens específicas a proferir, e estas foram então registradas, vindo a fazer parte das Escrituras. — 1Rs 22:14; Je 1:7; 2:1; 11:1-5; Ez 3:4; 11:5.

Entre ainda outros métodos usados para a transmissão de informações aos escritores da Bíblia achavam-se os sonhos e as visões. Sonhos, ou visões noturnas, como às vezes eram chamados, evidentemente sobrepunham um quadro da mensagem ou propósito de Deus na mente da pessoa adormecida. (Da 2:19; 7:1) Um veículo ainda mais frequente para comunicar os pensamentos de Deus à mente do escritor eram as visões dadas enquanto a pessoa estava consciente, tal revelação sendo estampada de forma pictórica na mente consciente. (Ez 1:1; Da 8:1; Re 9:17) Algumas visões foram recebidas enquanto a pessoa caíra em transe. Embora consciente, a pessoa, pelo que parece, ficava tão absorta pela visão recebida em transe a ponto de desperceber por completo tudo o mais em sua volta. — At 10:9-17; 11:5-10; 22:17-21; veja VISÃO.

Em muitas ocasiões, usaram-se mensageiros angélicos para transmitir as mensagens divinas. (He 2:2) Tais mensageiros desempenharam um papel maior na transmissão de informações do que, às vezes, transparece. Assim, ao passo que a Lei dada a Moisés é apresentada como tendo sido proferida por Deus, tanto Estêvão como Paulo mostram que Deus empregou seus anjos para transmitir aquele código legal. (At 7:53; Gál 3:19) Visto que os anjos falavam em nome de Jeová, a mensagem que apresentaram podia, portanto, apropriadamente ser chamada de a "palavra de Jeová". — Gên 22:11, 12, 15-18; Za 1:7, 9.

Independentemente de quais tenham sido os meios específicos empregados para transmitir as mensagens, todas as partes das Escrituras teriam a mesma qualidade, todas elas tendo sido inspiradas ou 'por Deus sopradas'.

É o fato de os escritores da Bíblia terem revelado um estilo próprio de expressão coerente com ser a Bíblia inspirada por Deus?

A evidência indica, contudo, que os homens usados por Deus para registrar as Escrituras não eram meros autômatos, que simplesmente registrassem a matéria que lhes fosse ditada. Lemos, a respeito do apóstolo João, que a Revelação (Apocalipse) 'por Deus soprada' foi-lhe apresentada, por meio de um anjo, "em sinais", e que João então "deu testemunho da palavra dada por Deus e do testemunho dado por Jesus Cristo, sim, de todas as coisas que viu". (Re 1:1, 2) Foi "por inspiração [literalmente: "no espírito"]" que João 'veio a estar no dia do Senhor' e lhe foi dito: "O que vês, escreve num rolo." (Re 1:10, 11) Assim, Deus, pelo que parece, achou bom permitir que os escritores da Bíblia usassem suas faculdades mentais para escolher palavras e expressões para descrever as visões que tiveram (Hab 2:2), ao passo que sempre exercia suficiente controle e orientação sobre eles, de modo que o produto final não só fosse exato e verdadeiro, mas também se adequasse ao propósito de Jeová. (Pr 30:5, 6) Que estava envolvido o esforço pessoal por parte do escritor é demonstrado pela declaração de Eclesiastes 12:9, 10, havendo ponderação, investigação e disposição em ordem, a fim de apresentar devidamente "palavras deleitosas e a escrita de palavras corretas de verdade". — Compare isso com Lu 1:1-4.

Isto, sem dúvida, explica por que existem os diferentes estilos de escrita, bem como de expressões, que aparentemente refletem a formação individual do escritor. As habilitações naturais dos escritores podem ter constituído um fator na escolha deles, por Deus, para a tarefa específica; talvez também os tenha preparado de antemão, para servirem ao Seu propósito específico.

Como evidência de estilo próprio de expressão, Mateus, que havia sido cobrador de impostos, faz numerosas referências particularmente específicas a números e valores monetários. (Mt 17:27; 26:15; 27:3) Lucas, "o médico amado" (Col 4:14), por outro lado, usa expressões distintivas que refletem sua formação médica. — Lu 4:38; 5:12; 16:20.

Mesmo quando o escritor menciona ter recebido a "palavra de Jeová", ou certa "pronúncia", pode ter acontecido que esta lhe foi transmitida, não palavra por palavra, mas por se dar ao escritor um quadro mental do propósito de Deus, quadro este que o escritor posteriormente expressaria em palavras. É possível que isto seja indicado quando o escritor fala, às vezes, de 'ver' (em vez de 'ouvir') a "pronúncia" ou "a palavra de Jeová". — Is 13:1; Miq 1:1; Hab 1:1; 2:1, 2.

Por conseguinte, os homens utilizados para escrever as Escrituras cooperaram com a operação do espírito santo de Jeová. Estavam dispostos e mostravam-se submissos à direção de Deus (Is 50:4, 5), estavam ansiosos de conhecer a Sua vontade e orientação. (Is 26:9) Em muitos casos, tinham em mente certos alvos (Lu 1:1-4) ou satisfaziam uma necessidade evidente (1Co 1:10, 11; 5:1; 7:1) e Deus os orientava, de modo que aquilo que escreviam coincidia com Seu propósito e o cumpria. (Pr 16:9) Como homens espirituais, seu coração e sua mente estavam sintonizados com a vontade de Deus, 'tinham a mente de Cristo', de modo que não redigiam mera sabedoria humana, nem "a visão do seu próprio coração", como faziam os profetas falsos. — 1Co 2:13-16; Je 23:16; Ez 13:2, 3, 17.

Pode-se ver que o espírito santo teria, deveras, "variedades de operações" para com estes escritores bíblicos, ou sobre eles. (1Co 12:6) Considerável parcela das informações era humanamente acessível a eles, às vezes já existindo em forma escrita, como no caso das genealogias e de certos relatos históricos. (Lu 1:3; 3:23-38; Núm 21:14, 15; 1Rs 14:19, 29; 2Rs 15:31; 24:5; veja LIVRO.) Neste caso, o espírito de Deus operaria de modo a impedir que a inexatidão ou o erro penetrasse no Registro Divino, e também guiaria a escolha da matéria a ser incluída. Obviamente, nem tudo que fora declarado por outras pessoas e depois incluído na Bíblia foi inspirado por Deus, mas a seleção da matéria a ser parte das Escrituras Sagradas e o registro exato dela ocorreram sob a direção do espírito santo. (Veja Gên 3:4, 5; Jó 42:3; Mt 16:21-23.) Deste modo Deus preservou na sua Palavra inspirada um registro que indica o que acontece quando as pessoas O escutam e agem em harmonia com o Seu propósito, bem como o resultado quando elas pensam, falam e agem de maneira que mostre desrespeito para com Deus ou desconhecimento de seus modos justos. Por outro lado, as informações relativas à história pré-humana da Terra (Gên 1:1-26), ou a respeito dos eventos e das atividades celestiais (Jó 1:6-12 e outros textos), e das profecias, bem como das revelações dos propósitos de Deus, e das doutrinas — estas não eram humanamente acessíveis, e precisariam ser transmitidas de modo sobrenatural pelo espírito de Deus. Quanto às declarações e conselhos sábios, mesmo que o escritor pudesse ter aprendido muito por experiência própria na vida, e até mesmo mais, através de seu próprio estudo e aplicação das partes das Escrituras já registradas, a operação do espírito de Deus ainda seria necessária para garantir que tais informações se habilitassem a ser parte da Palavra de Deus, que é "viva e exerce poder, . . . e é capaz de discernir os pensamentos e as intenções do coração". — He 4:12.

Pode-se ver isso nas expressões do apóstolo Paulo em sua primeira carta aos coríntios. Ao aconselhar sobre o casamento e o estado de solteiro, ele diz, em certo ponto: "Mas, aos outros digo eu, sim, eu, não o Senhor . . ." De novo: "Agora, concernente às virgens, não tenho mandado da parte do Senhor, mas dou a minha opinião." Por fim, a respeito duma mulher enviuvada, ele declara: "Ela será mais feliz, porém, se permanecer assim como está, segundo a minha opinião. Acho certamente ter também o espírito de Deus." (1Co 7:12, 25, 40) O significado evidente das declarações de Paulo é que ele não dispunha de nenhum ensino direto do Senhor Jesus sobre certos pontos. Por isso, Paulo deu sua opinião pessoal, como um apóstolo cheio de espírito. Seu conselho, contudo, foi 'por Deus soprado' e, assim, veio a fazer parte das Escrituras Sagradas, tendo a mesma autoridade que o restante dessas Escrituras.

Existe, claramente, uma diferença entre os escritos inspirados da Bíblia e outros escritos que, ao passo que manifestam certa medida da direção e orientação do espírito, não são de direito classificados como parte das Escrituras Sagradas. Como se tem mostrado, além dos livros canônicos das Escrituras Hebraicas, havia outros escritos, tais como os registros oficiais sobre os reis de Judá e de Israel, e estes, em muitos casos, podem ter sido redigidos por homens que demonstravam devoção a Deus. Estes registros foram até mesmo usados na pesquisa feita pelos escritores que foram inspirados a escrever partes das Escrituras Sagradas.

O mesmo, também, aconteceu nos tempos apostólicos. Além das cartas incluídas no cânon da Bíblia, houve, sem dúvida, muitas outras cartas escritas pelos apóstolos e anciãos às numerosas congregações, no decorrer dos anos. Ao passo que os escritores eram homens guiados pelo espírito, ainda assim Deus não colocou seu selo de garantia que distinguiria tais escritos adicionais como sendo parte da inerrante Palavra de Deus. Os escritos hebraicos não canônicos talvez contivessem alguns erros, e até mesmo escritos não canônicos dos apóstolos talvez refletissem, em certo grau, o entendimento incompleto existente nos primeiros anos da congregação cristã. (Compare isso com At 15:1-32; Gál 2:11-14; Ef 4:11-16.) No entanto, assim como Deus, por seu espírito ou força ativa, concedeu a certos cristãos o "discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas", Ele também podia guiar o corpo governante da congregação cristã a discernir que escritos inspirados deviam ser incluídos no cânon das Escrituras Sagradas. — 1Co 12:10; veja CÂNON.

Reconhecimento das Escrituras Como Inspiradas. É clara a evidência de que todas as Escrituras Sagradas, conforme progressivamente adicionadas ao cânon da Bíblia, foram, de forma coerente, reconhecidas pelos servos de Deus, incluindo Jesus e seus apóstolos, como inspiradas. Por "inspiração" se quer dizer, não a simples elevação do intelecto e das emoções a um grau mais alto de realização, ou de sensibilidade (como não raro se diz sobre artistas ou poetas seculares), mas a produção de escritos inerrantes e que têm a mesma autoridade como se fossem escritos pelo próprio Deus. Por este motivo, os profetas que contribuíram para a escrita das Escrituras Hebraicas incessantemente atribuíam suas mensagens a Deus, com a declaração: "Assim disse Jeová", fazendo-o mais de 300 vezes. (Is 37:33; Je 2:2; Na 1:12) Jesus e seus apóstolos citavam confiantemente as Escrituras Hebraicas como sendo a própria palavra de Deus, proferida mediante os escritores designados, portanto, como de cumprimento garantido e como a autoridade final em qualquer controvérsia. (Mt 4:4-10; 19:3-6; Lu 24:44-48; Jo 13:18; At 13:33-35; 1Co 15:3, 4; 1Pe 1:16; 2:6-9) Elas continham as "proclamações sagradas de Deus". (Ro 3:1, 2; He 5:12) Paulo, depois de explicar, em Hebreus 1:1, que Deus falou a Israel por meio dos profetas, passa a citar vários livros das Escrituras Hebraicas, apresentando os textos como se fossem falados pessoalmente pelo próprio Jeová Deus. (He 1:5-13) Compare isso com as referências similares ao espírito santo em Atos 1:16; 28:25; Hebreus 3:7; 10:15-17.

Mostrando sua plena fé na qualidade inerrante dos Escritos Sagrados, Jesus disse que "a Escritura não pode ser anulada" (Jo 10:34, 35), e que "antes passariam o céu e a terra, do que passaria uma só letra menor ou uma só partícula duma letra da Lei sem que tudo se cumprisse". (Mt 5:18) Ele disse aos saduceus que eles estavam errados a respeito da ressurreição, porque 'não conheciam nem as Escrituras, nem o poder de Deus'. (Mt 22:29-32; Mr 12:24) Estava disposto a submeter-se à prisão e à própria morte por saber que isto se dava em cumprimento da escrita Palavra de Deus, as Escrituras Sagradas. — Mt 26:54; Mr 14:27, 49.

Tais declarações, por certo, aplicam-se às Escrituras Hebraicas pré-cristãs. É igualmente claro que as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs também foram apresentadas e aceitas como inspiradas (1Co 14:37; Gál 1:8, 11, 12; 1Te 2:13), pois o apóstolo Pedro, numa certa declaração, incluiu as cartas de Paulo com o restante das Escrituras. (2Pe 3:15, 16) Assim, o inteiro corpo das Escrituras constitui a unificada e harmoniosa Palavra escrita de Deus. — Ef 6:17.

A Autoridade das Cópias e das Traduções. Deve-se, portanto, atribuir à Palavra escrita de Deus a inerrância absoluta. Isto é verdade quanto aos escritos originais, dos quais, pelo que se sabe, nenhum existe hoje. As cópias desses escritos originais, e as traduções feitas em muitas línguas, não podem afirmar ser de exatidão absoluta. Contudo, há sólida evidência e firmes razões para se crer que os manuscritos disponíveis das Escrituras Sagradas de fato fornecem cópias da Palavra escrita de Deus numa forma quase que exata, tendo os pontos questionados muito pouca influência no sentido da mensagem transmitida. O objetivo do próprio Deus em preparar as Escrituras Sagradas, e a afirmação inspirada de que "a declaração de Jeová permanece para sempre", garantem-nos que Jeová Deus preservou a integridade interna das Escrituras no decorrer dos séculos. — 1Pe 1:25.

Como se explicam as diferenças de fraseado nas citações das Escrituras Hebraicas feitas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs?

Em muitos casos, os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs evidentemente usaram a tradução grega Septuaginta ao citarem as Escrituras Hebraicas. Às vezes, a forma de traduzir da Septuaginta, segundo citada por eles, difere um tanto da leitura das Escrituras Hebraicas conforme é agora conhecida (a maioria das traduções hodiernas baseando-se no texto massorético hebraico, que data de cerca do décimo século da EC). Por exemplo, a citação do Salmo 40:6, feita por Paulo, contém a expressão "porém, preparaste-me um corpo", expressão encontrada na Septuaginta. (He 10:5, 6) Os manuscritos hebraicos disponíveis do Salmo 40:6 têm, em lugar dessa expressão, as palavras "abriste-me estes ouvidos meus". Se o texto hebraico original continha ou não a frase que se encontra na Septuaginta não se pode afirmar com certeza. Seja como for, o espírito de Deus guiou Paulo em sua citação e, por conseguinte, tais palavras gozam da autorização divina. Isto não significa que a inteira tradução Septuaginta deva ser encarada como inspirada; mas, aqueles trechos citados pelos inspirados escritores cristãos tornaram-se, deveras, parte integrante da Palavra de Deus.

Em alguns casos, as citações feitas por Paulo e outros diferem tanto do texto hebraico como do grego, conforme encontrados nos manuscritos disponíveis. As diferenças são mínimas, porém, e um exame revela que são o resultado de paráfrase, de epítome, do uso de sinônimos, ou de acréscimo de palavras ou frases explanatórias. Gênesis 2:7, por exemplo, afirma que "o homem veio a ser uma alma vivente", ao passo que Paulo, ao citar este trecho, disse: "Até mesmo está escrito assim: 'O primeiro homem, Adão, tornou-se alma vivente.'" (1Co 15:45) Seu acréscimo das palavras "primeiro" e "Adão" serviu para sublinhar o contraste que ele fazia entre Adão e Cristo. A inserção estava de pleno acordo com os fatos registrados nas Escrituras, e de forma alguma pervertia o sentido ou o conteúdo do texto citado. Aqueles a quem Paulo escrevia tinham cópias (ou traduções) das Escrituras Hebraicas mais antigas do que as que temos hoje, e podiam investigar as citações feitas por ele, dum modo similar ao feito pelo povo de Bereia. (At 17:10, 11) A inclusão destes escritos no cânon das Escrituras Sagradas por parte da congregação cristã do primeiro século fornece evidência de que esta aceitava tais citações como sendo parte da inspirada Palavra de Deus. — Compare também Za 13:7 com Mt 26:31.

"Expressões Inspiradas" — Verdadeiras e Falsas. A palavra grega pneú·ma (espírito) é usada de modo especial em alguns escritos apostólicos. Em 2 Tessalonicenses 2:2, por exemplo, o apóstolo Paulo insta com seus irmãos tessalonicenses a não ficarem provocados ou abalados em sua razão "quer por uma expressão inspirada [literalmente: "espírito"], quer por intermédio duma mensagem verbal, quer por uma carta, como se fosse da nossa parte, no sentido de que o dia de Jeová está aqui". É claro que Paulo emprega a palavra pneú·ma (espírito) em relação com os meios de comunicação, tais como a "mensagem verbal" ou a "carta". Por este motivo, o Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas), de Lange (p. 126), diz sobre este texto: "Por meio disto, o Apóstolo tenciona uma sugestão espiritual, pretensa predição, declaração dum profeta." (Traduzido e editado por P. Schaff, 1976) A obra Word Studies in the New Testament (Estudos de Palavras do Novo Testamento) de Vincent, declara: "Por espírito. Pelas declarações proféticas de indivíduos nas assembleias cristãs, que afirmassem ter a autoridade das revelações divinas." (1957, Vol. IV, p. 63) Assim, ao passo que algumas traduções simplesmente traduzem pneú·ma neste e em outros casos similares por "espírito", outras traduções rezam "palavra profética" (BJ; CT); "pretensa revelação" (CBC; MH; PIB); "profecia" (LR; Ne); "mensagem do Espírito" (AT); "inspiração" (D'Ostervald; Segond [francês]); "expressão inspirada" (NM).

As palavras de Paulo tornam claro que há "expressões inspiradas" verdadeiras e falsas. Ele se refere a ambos os tipos em 1 Timóteo 4:1, quando diz que "a pronunciação inspirada [pelo espírito santo de Jeová] diz definitivamente que nos períodos posteriores de tempo alguns se desviarão da fé, prestando atenção a desencaminhantes pronunciações inspiradas e a ensinos de demônios". Isto identifica a fonte das "pronunciações inspiradas" falsas como sendo os demônios. Isto é apoiado pela visão fornecida ao apóstolo João, em que ele viu "três impuras expressões inspiradas", semelhantes a rãs, procedentes da boca do dragão, da fera e do falso profeta, expressões estas que ele declara especificamente serem "inspiradas por demônios", servindo para ajuntar os reis da terra para a guerra no Har-Magedon. — Re 16:13-16.

Com bom motivo, então, João instou os cristãos a 'provarem as expressões inspiradas, para ver se se originam de Deus'. (1Jo 4:1-3; compare isso com Re 22:6.) Daí passou a mostrar que as verdadeiras expressões inspiradas por Deus vinham através da genuína congregação cristã, e não de fontes mundanas anticristãs. A declaração de João, naturalmente, foi inspirada por Jeová Deus, mas, além disso, a carta de João lançara um sólido alicerce para a seguinte declaração direta: "Quem obtiver conhecimento de Deus nos escuta; quem não se originar de Deus não nos escuta. É assim que reconhecemos a expressão inspirada da verdade e a expressão inspirada do erro." (1Jo 4:6) Longe de ser mero dogmatismo, João mostrou que ele e outros cristãos verdadeiros manifestavam os frutos do espírito de Deus, primariamente o amor, e provavam, pela sua conduta correta e pela sua linguagem verídica, que deveras 'andavam na luz', em união com Deus. — 1Jo 1:5-7; 2:3-6, 9-11, 15-17, 29; 3:1, 2, 6, 9-18, 23, 24; contraste isso com Tit 1:16.

INSTRUÇÃO. Orientação ou ensino que implica em acatamento. O verbo hebraico ya·ráh significa "instruir; orientar; ensinar". O termo hebraico lé·qahh (instrução, ensinamento) basicamente significa "aceitação". (De 32:2; compare isso com Je 9:20, onde o verbo aparentado ocorre na expressão "aceite vosso ouvido a palavra da sua boca".) O mesmo termo é traduzido por "persuasão" em Provérbios 16:21. O grego pai·deú·o significa "instruir; castigar; disciplinar", e o grego ka·te·khé·o significa "ensinar oralmente; instruir".

Jeová é o "Grandioso Instrutor" de seu povo. (Is 30:20), e os que recebem a sua instrução estão sob a obrigação de agir em harmonia com ela — 'andarão nas Suas veredas' e "terão de forjar das suas espadas relhas de arado, e das suas lanças, podadeiras". (Is 2:3, 4; Miq 4:2, 3) Com apreço pelo valor da instrução de Jeová e desejando aplicá-la, seus servos oram: "Instrui-me, ó Jeová, acerca do teu caminho. Andarei na tua verdade. Unifica meu coração para temer o teu nome." — Sal 86:11; 27:11; 119:33.

No antigo Israel, Jeová designou os sacerdotes como instrutores de seu povo. Frisando a importância de aplicar a instrução recebida por meio desse canal, Moisés disse: "Tens de proceder de acordo com a palavra que te transmitirão do lugar que Jeová escolher; e tens de cuidar em fazer segundo tudo o que te instruírem. Deves proceder de acordo com a lei que te indicarão e segundo a decisão judicial que te disserem. Não te deves desviar da palavra que te transmitirão, nem para a direita, nem para a esquerda." (De 17:10, 11; 24:8) Aos na congregação cristã, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Todas as coisas escritas outrora foram escritas para a nossa instrução, para que, por intermédio da nossa perseverança e por intermédio do consolo das Escrituras, tivéssemos esperança." (Ro 15:4) Portanto, faremos bem em sondar os mandamentos, atentar aos princípios subjacentes, e aprender bem as lições que são apresentadas através da Palavra inspirada de Deus e daí aplicá-los em nossa vida. — Veja INSTRUTOR PÚBLICO.

Pode-se receber instrução até mesmo de animais domésticos e da terra, como diz Jó 12:7-10. (Pr 6:6) Nestes, as pessoas sábias verão evidência da obra de Deus e do fato de que toda vida depende de Deus. Os humanos que deixam de agir em harmonia com essa evidência abundante são, como escreveu o apóstolo Paulo, "inescusáveis". — Ro 1:20.

Os que se tornaram discípulos de Jesus Cristo dirigiam-se a ele como Instrutor (ou Preceptor), reconhecendo assim a sua autoridade e a responsabilidade deles de aplicar as suas instruções. (Lu 5:5; 9:33) Um grupo de dez leprosos, que imploraram misericórdia a Jesus, também se dirigiram a ele dessa maneira. — Lu 17:13.

Embora a instrução requeira aceitação e não vise meramente divertir, ela pode ser ministrada de maneira reanimadora. Jeová ordenou a Moisés que ensinasse a Israel um cântico em que Ele disse: "Meu ensinamento gotejará como a chuva, minha declaração pingará como o orvalho, como chuvas suaves sobre a relva." (De 32:2) Ao superintendente cristão Timóteo, Paulo escreveu a respeito de 'instruir com brandura os que não estiverem favoravelmente dispostos, visto que talvez Deus lhes dê arrependimento conduzindo a um conhecimento exato da verdade'. (2Ti 2:25) A instrução pode, contudo, envolver disciplina na forma de castigo. Tal disciplina nem sempre é fácil de aceitar, mas, quando a pessoa corresponde a ela, isso produz "fruto pacífico, a saber, a justiça". — He 12:7-11.

Nem toda instrução é dada por alguém cuja motivação seja correta, tampouco é o objetivo necessariamente benéfico para quem a recebe. "Moisés foi instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios", mas, aos 40 anos, ele identificou-se abertamente com os hebreus e deixou para trás o que poderia ser sua herança na corte real do Egito. (At 7:22) Isaías falou de profetas em Israel que davam instrução falsa, e Miqueias escreveu sobre sacerdotes que instruíam "somente por um preço". (Miq 3:11; Is 9:15) Algumas pessoas recorreram tolamente a estátuas fundidas em busca de instrução. (Hab 2:18) Os soldados que haviam guardado o túmulo de Jesus dispunham-se, depois de terem sido subornados, a acatar a instrução que lhes fora dada, de mentir a respeito do que acontecera com o corpo de Jesus. — Mt 28:12-15.

INSTRUMENTO. Veja INSTRUMENTO DE CORDAS.

INSTRUMENTO DE CORDAS. Há incerteza quanto ao(s) instrumento(s) designado(s) pelas várias palavras da língua original traduzidas por "instrumento de cordas". O né·vel é, em geral, mencionado junto com o kin·nóhr (harpa), indicando que esses instrumentos são nitidamente diferentes. O né·vel, um instrumento portátil feito de madeira (1Rs 10:12), era usado para tocar tanto música sacra como profana. (2Sa 6:5; 2Cr 5:12; Ne 12:27; Is 5:12; 14:4, 11) Evidentemente usavam-se vários instrumentos de cordas, pois a Bíblia menciona min·ním ("cordas"; Sal 150:4), kelí né·vel ('instrumento do tipo dos de cordas' ou "dos de cordas"; 1Cr 16:5; Sal 71:22), né·vel 'a·sóhr ("instrumento de dez cordas", sendo que 'a·sóhr tem ligação com uma palavra que significa "dez"; Sal 33:2; 144:9), neghi·nóhth (aparentado com um verbo que significa "tocar um instrumento de cordas"; cabeçalhos de Sal 4, 6, 54, 55, 61, 67, 76), e pesan·te·rín (que se supõe ser um "instrumento de cordas" de formato triangular; Da 3:5, 7, 10, 15). — Veja HARPA; ALAÚDE.

INSTRUTOR, ENSINO. Instrutor é alguém que transmite informações ou perícia a outros por meio de palavras ou exemplo. O instrutor eficaz em geral fornece explicações ou evidência em apoio, ou emprega algum outro método que vise ajudar os ouvintes a aceitar e a lembrar-se do que ouviram.

Jeová Deus, o Criador, é o Grandioso Instrutor, ou Mestre, de seus servos. (1Rs 8:36; Sal 27:11; 86:11; 119:102; Is 30:20; 54:13) As próprias obras criativas ensinam que existe um Deus todo-sábio, e elas fornecem um campo para investigação e observação que, até os dias atuais, somente foi parcialmente explorado. (Jó 12:7-9) Ademais, por meio de revelações especiais, Jeová Deus tem ensinado aos humanos o Seu nome, seus propósitos e suas leis. (Veja Êx 4:12, 15; 24:12; 34:5-7.) Tais revelações são encontradas na Palavra de Deus, a Bíblia, e servem como base para o ensino correto a respeito de Sua vontade. (Ro 15:4; 2Ti 3:14-17) O espírito de Deus também atua como instrutor. — Jo 14:26.

Instrução Entre os Israelitas. Em Israel, Deus confiou aos pais o dever de instruir seus filhos. (De 4:9; 6:7, 20, 21; 11:19-21; Sal 78:1-4) Para a nação como um todo, os profetas, os levitas (especialmente os sacerdotes) e outros homens sábios serviam quais instrutores. — Compare isto com 2Cr 35:3; Je 18:18; veja EDUCAÇÃO.

Profetas. Os profetas ensinavam ao povo os atributos e os propósitos de Jeová, expunham o erro dos israelitas e delineavam o proceder correto que deviam tomar. Os profetas não raro transmitiam seu ensino de forma oral, mais tarde assentando-o por escrito. (Veja 1Sa 12:23-25; Is 7:3, 4; 22:15, 16; Je 2:2.) Seus métodos de ensino incluíam o emprego de perguntas (Je 18:13, 14; Am 3:3-8; Ag 2:11-14), ilustrações (2Sa 12:1-7; Is 10:15; Je 18:3-10), enigmas (Ez 17:2) e atos simbólicos (1Rs 11:30-32; Je 13:4-11; 19:1-12; 27:2; 28:10-14; Ez 4:1-5:4).

Sacerdotes e levitas. Era dever dos sacerdotes e dos levitas ensinar a Lei de Deus à nação de Israel. (Le 10:11; 14:57; 2Cr 15:3; 35:3) Isto era feito de várias maneiras. Todo ano sabático, durante a Festividade das Barracas, lia-se a Lei inteira a todo o povo — homens, mulheres, crianças e residentes forasteiros. (De 31:9-13) Às vezes, ao obterem respostas do povo, os levitas inculcavam as leis divinas em seus ouvintes. (Veja De 27:14-26.) Além de lerem a Lei, os sacerdotes e os levitas sem dúvida explicavam o seu significado. (Veja Ne 8:8.) E as decisões judiciais feitas por eles ensinavam os princípios da justiça divina. — De 17:8-13; 1Cr 26:29; 2Cr 19:8-11.

Escribas. Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, os escribas gozavam de preeminência como instrutores da Lei. No entanto, eles não vinham de encontro aos verdadeiros problemas e necessidades do povo. Como os fariseus, os escribas davam mais ênfase a regulamentos técnicos e tradições do que à misericórdia, à justiça e à fidelidade. Tornavam a Lei um fardo para o povo. (Mt 23:2-4, 23, 24; Lu 11:45, 46) Seu ensino não era tão eficaz como poderia ser, pois assumiam uma atitude de superioridade para com as pessoas comuns e não se mostravam exemplos dignos de serem imitados. — Mt 23:3, 6, 7; Jo 7:48, 49; veja ESCRIBA.

O que tornou o ensino de Jesus notavelmente eficaz?

Embora os líderes religiosos do judaísmo evidentemente não eram sinceros ao chamá-lo de "Instrutor [gr.: Di·dá·ska·los]", Jesus Cristo era reconhecido como tal, tanto por crentes como por descrentes. (Mt 8:19; 9:11; 12:38; 19:16; 22:16, 24, 36; Jo 3:2) Oficiais enviados para prendê-lo ficaram tão impressionados com o seu ensino que retornaram de mãos vazias, dizendo: "Nunca homem algum falou como este." (Jo 7:46) Jesus ensinava "como quem tinha autoridade, e não como [os] escribas". (Mt 7:29) A Fonte de seu ensino era Deus (Jo 7:16; 8:28), e Jesus transmitia informações com simplicidade, lógica irrefutável, perguntas que faziam pensar, notáveis figuras de linguagem e ilustrações significativas, extraídas de coisas que os ouvintes conheciam. (Mt 6:25-30; 7:3-5, 24-27; veja ILUSTRAÇÕES.) Jesus também empregava lições práticas, em certa ocasião lavando os pés de seus discípulos a fim de lhes ensinar que deviam servir uns aos outros. — Jo 13:2-16.

O conhecimento de Jesus foi realçado por ter ele gozado de um relacionamento íntimo com seu Pai e Deus antes de vir à Terra. Assim sendo, conhecia a Deus como nenhum outro homem o conhecia, e isto o habilitava a fornecer um ensino de peso a respeito de seu Pai. Como o próprio Jesus disse: "Ninguém conhece plenamente o Filho, exceto o Pai, tampouco há quem conheça plenamente o Pai, exceto o Filho e todo aquele a quem o Filho estiver disposto a revelá-lo." — Mt 11:27; Jo 1:18.

Jesus também estava plenamente familiarizado com a Palavra escrita de Deus. Quando lhe perguntaram que mandamento da Lei era o maior, ele, sem hesitar, resumiu toda a Lei em dois mandamentos, citando Deuteronômio (6:5) e Levítico (19:18). (Mt 22:36-40) Durante seu ministério, sabe-se que ele se referiu a, ou expressou, ideias que são paralelas a trechos de cerca da metade dos livros das Escrituras Hebraicas — Gênesis (2:24; Mt 19:5; Mr 10:7, 8), Êxodo (3:6; Mt 22:32; Lu 20:37), Levítico (14:2-32; Mt 8:4), Números (30:2; Mt 5:33), Deuteronômio (5:16; Mt 15:4; Mr 7:10), Primeiro Samuel (21:4-6; Mt 12:3, 4), Primeiro Reis (17:9; Lu 4:26), Jó (42:2; Mt 19:26), Salmos (8:2; 110:1; Mt 21:16; 22:44), Provérbios (24:12; Mt 16:27), Isaías (6:9, 10; Mt 13:14, 15; Jo 12:40), Jeremias (7:11; Mt 21:13; Mr 11:17; Lu 19:45, 46), Lamentações (2:1; Mt 5:35), Daniel (9:27; Mt 24:15), Oseias (6:6; Mt 9:13), Jonas (1:17; Mt 12:40), Miqueias (7:6; Mt 10:21, 35, 36), Zacarias (13:7; Mt 26:31) e Malaquias (3:1; Mt 11:10).

Adicionalmente, o exemplo perfeito de Jesus dava real força ao que ele ensinava. (Jo 13:15) Não era como os escribas e os fariseus, sobre quem Jesus disse: "Todas as coisas que eles vos dizem, fazei e observai, mas não façais segundo as ações deles, pois dizem, mas não realizam." — Mt 23:3.

Outros aspectos que davam autoridade ao ensino de Jesus e o tornavam eficaz eram seu entendimento sobre o homem e seu amoroso interesse nos outros. Seu vívido discernimento era realçado pelo conhecimento miraculoso da formação e do raciocínio dos outros. (Mt 12:25; Lu 6:8; Jo 1:48; 4:18; 6:61, 64; 13:11) "Ele mesmo sabia o que havia no homem." (Jo 2:25) Seu coração se compadecia das pessoas a tal ponto que sacrificava sua necessidade de repouso para instruí-las. Certa ocasião, Jesus e seus discípulos apanharam um barco e rumaram para um local isolado a fim de descansarem um pouco. "Havia, porém, quem os viu partir e muitos ficaram sabendo disso, e afluíram para lá a pé, de todas as cidades, e chegaram primeiro que eles. Ora, ao desembarcar, ele viu uma grande multidão, mas teve pena deles, porque eram como ovelhas sem pastor. E principiou a ensinar-lhes muitas coisas." — Mr 6:31-34.

Jesus tratava com compreensão os seus ouvintes. Quando seus discípulos não discerniam o ponto duma ilustração, ele pacientemente o explicava a eles. (Mt 13:10-23) Cônscio de suas limitações, Jesus não lhes dava informações demais. (Jo 16:4, 12) Quando era necessário, repetia informações praticamente idênticas. (Mr 9:35; 10:43, 44) Ao responder a perguntas, Jesus amiúde reforçava sua resposta por meio de ilustrações ou de lições práticas, desta forma causando profunda impressão na mente de seus ouvintes, e estimulando suas faculdades de raciocínio. — Mt 18:1-5, 21-35; Lu 10:29-37.

O Espírito de Deus Ensina. Durante os três anos e meio de seu ministério terrestre, Jesus treinou seus apóstolos para continuarem a obra que ele iniciara. Como humanos imperfeitos, era-lhes simplesmente impossível lembrar-se de cada pormenor do seu ensino. Mas Jesus lhes prometera: "O ajudador, o espírito santo, que o Pai enviará em meu nome, esse vos ensinará todas as coisas e vos fará lembrar todas as coisas que eu vos disse." (Jo 14:26) Isto queria dizer que o espírito de Deus lhes ensinaria tudo que precisassem saber para realizar seu ministério. Em especial, abrir-lhes-ia o entendimento quanto àquilo que tinham ouvido antes, mas não entendido. Como recordador, o espírito santo lhes faria recordar as coisas que Jesus lhes dissera enquanto ainda estava com eles. E, como instrutor, mostrar-lhes-ia a aplicação correta das palavras de Jesus. — Jo 2:19-22; veja VERDADE ("O Espírito da Verdade").

Quando conduzidos perante assembleias públicas, reis e outros homens em alta posição governamental, os discípulos de Jesus podiam estribar-se confiantemente no espírito de Deus como recordador e instrutor. Como um amigo, faria com que recordassem o que dizer e os ajudaria a fazer aplicações apropriadas. Isto resultaria em darem um bom testemunho e também silenciaria os oponentes. (Mt 10:18-20; Mr 13:11; Lu 12:11, 12; 21:13-15) É por isso que Pedro e João conseguiram falar com denodo quando foram interrogados pelo mais alto tribunal judaico, o Sinédrio, quanto a terem curado um homem coxo de nascença. Sua franqueza era algo inteiramente inesperado da parte de "homens indoutos e comuns". Isto fez com que os membros do Sinédrio ficassem perplexos. E as palavras de Pedro, junto com a presença do homem curado, deixaram tais homens instruídos 'sem ter nada a dizer em refutação'. — At 4:5-14.

Visto que toda a Palavra de Deus foi escrita sob inspiração (2Ti 3:16), somente ela contém o ensinamento do espírito. Por conseguinte, os cristãos não devem prestar atenção a ensinos que colidam com a Palavra de Deus. Conforme escreveu o apóstolo João: "Não necessitais de que alguém vos ensine; mas, como a unção da parte dele vos ensina todas as coisas, e é verdadeira e não é mentira, e assim como vos tem ensinado, permanecei em união com ele." (1Jo 2:27) Aqueles a quem João dirigiu tais palavras eram cristãos gerados pelo espírito. Tinham chegado a conhecer tanto a Jeová Deus como a seu Filho, Cristo Jesus. Conheciam bem a verdade de Deus. Assim, não necessitavam ter como instrutores pessoas que negavam o Pai e o Filho. Tais instrutores apenas os desencaminhariam daquilo que sabiam ser a verdade, conforme ensinada pelo espírito de Deus, e plenamente delineada nos Escritos Sagrados. (1Jo 2:18-26) Por este motivo, os cristãos não deviam receber em casa instrutores apóstatas, nem mesmo cumprimentá-los. — 2Jo 9-11.

Fazer Discípulos e Instruí-los. Depois de sua ressurreição, Jesus Cristo comissionou seus seguidores a fazer discípulos, batizando-os e ensinando-lhes todas as coisas que ele havia ordenado. (Mt 28:19, 20) Esta extensiva obra de instrução ou ensino iniciou-se no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, quando cerca de 3.000 judeus e prosélitos aceitaram Jesus como o Messias prometido e foram batizados. O ensino destes novos discípulos não terminou com o discurso do apóstolo Pedro, que os levou a se tornarem seguidores de Cristo Jesus. Havia muita coisa mais para eles aprenderem. Por isso, os que tinham vindo a Jerusalém de lugares distantes para estarem presentes à Festividade de Pentecostes, estenderam a sua estada, a fim de poderem devotar-se ao ensino dos apóstolos. Dia após dia, eles se reuniam na área do templo, evidentemente para escutar os apóstolos. Outros judeus e prosélitos também chegaram a ouvir as boas novas ali, e o número dos homens crentes por fim aumentou para cerca de 5.000. (At 2:14–4:4) Além de ensinarem publicamente no templo, os apóstolos também declaravam as boas novas sobre Jesus Cristo de casa em casa. — At 5:42; veja PREGADOR, PREGAÇÃO ("De Casa em Casa").

Posteriormente, a dispersão dos crentes por causa da perseguição e o início da pregação entre os não judeus estenderam a obra de fazer discípulos a lugares distantes. (At 8:4-12; 11:1-26) Como em Jerusalém, contudo, não raro a pregação e o ensino públicos eram empregados para encontrar os interessados, após o que os que se tornavam discípulos continuavam a ser ensinados. Em Éfeso, por exemplo, o apóstolo Paulo ensinava publicamente na sinagoga. Depois que surgiu a oposição, ele separou os discípulos dos judeus descrentes, proferindo-lhes discursos no auditório da escola de Tirano. (At 19:8-10) Paulo também ensinava aos discípulos nas suas casas e procurava outras pessoas interessadas ensinando de casa em casa. Conforme ele recordou aos anciãos da congregação de Éfeso: "Não me refreei de vos falar coisa alguma que fosse proveitosa, nem de vos ensinar publicamente e de casa em casa." — At 20:20, 21; verifique At 18:6, 7 a respeito da atividade de Paulo em Corinto; veja DISCÍPULO.

Instrutores na Congregação Cristã. Por meio da atividade do apóstolo Paulo e outros, estabeleceram-se congregações cristãs em muitos lugares, e estas continuaram a ter aumentos. Necessitava-se de instrutores habilitados para ajudar a todos os associados com essas congregações a 'alcançar a unidade na fé e no conhecimento exato do Filho de Deus, como homem plenamente desenvolvido, à medida da estatura que pertence à plenitude do Cristo'. (Ef 4:11-13) Isto colocava pesada responsabilidade sobre os que serviam como instrutores, responsabilidade esta que influenciava diretamente na vida dos concristãos. A posição de instrutores era de tal importância que é alistada em terceiro lugar, logo depois dos apóstolos e dos profetas, na relação de membros da congregação. (1Co 12:28) Não era uma posição ocupada pelos cristãos em geral (1Co 12:29), e jamais pelas mulheres. Escreveu o apóstolo Paulo: "Não permito que a mulher ensine ou exerça autoridade sobre o homem." (1Ti 2:12) Serviam neste cargo os superintendentes ou anciãos designados às suas posições pelo espírito santo. — At 20:17, 25-30; 1Ti 3:1, 2; 5:17.

Estes anciãos tinham de ser exemplos dignos de serem imitados, sendo exatos em seu ensino, sempre aderindo à inspirada Palavra de Deus. Quais instrutores habilitados, serviam como baluarte contra o desvio da crença verdadeira, sempre alertas para corrigir os que se tornassem vítimas do ensino errôneo e tomando medidas contra os que promovessem seitas. — 1Ti 4:6, 7, 16; 6:2b-6; 2Ti 2:2, 14-26; 3:14-17; Tit 1:10, 11; 2:1, 6, 7; 3:9-11; compare isso com Re 2:14, 15, 20-24.

Os anciãos (gr.: pre·sbý·te·roi) que trabalhavam arduamente em ensinar os concristãos eram merecedores de respeito, de consideração (veja He 13:17) e até mesmo de ajuda material voluntária. É isto o que o apóstolo Paulo quis dizer, quando escreveu: "Além disso, todo aquele a quem estiver sendo ensinada oralmente [literalmente: sendo ressoada para baixo a] a palavra, partilhe todas as boas coisas com aquele que lhe dá tal ensino oral." (Gál 6:6 n) "Os anciãos, que presidem de modo excelente, sejam contados dignos de dupla honra, especialmente os que trabalham arduamente no falar e no ensinar. Porque a escritura diz: 'Não deves açaimar o touro quando debulha o grão'; também: 'O trabalhador é digno do seu salário.'" — 1Ti 5:17, 18.

Os homens que procuravam altruistamente ser superintendentes, habilitados a ensinar a outros na congregação, estavam 'desejosos de uma obra excelente'. (1Ti 3:1) Obviamente, portanto, não foi para desanimar a tais homens de se tornarem qualificados para ensinar que o discípulo Tiago escreveu: "Não muitos de vós deviam tornar-se instrutores, meus irmãos, sabendo que havemos de receber um julgamento mais pesado." (Tg 3:1) Em vez disso, essas palavras sublinhavam a pesada responsabilidade que acompanha a posição de instrutores na congregação. Evidentemente alguns se colocaram na posição de instrutores, embora não tivessem sido designados nem se habilitassem como tais. As pessoas a quem Tiago tinha em mente eram, provavelmente, bem parecidas com aquelas sobre as quais Paulo escreveu a Timóteo: "Alguns, . . . apartaram-se para conversa vã, querendo ser instrutores de lei, mas não percebendo nem as coisas que dizem, nem as coisas a respeito das quais fazem fortes asserções." (1Ti 1:6, 7) Evidentemente tais homens desejavam o destaque advindo de serem instrutores dos concrentes. Mas Tiago colocou os assuntos na devida perspectiva, ao mostrar que se exigiria mais dos instrutores na congregação. Teriam de prestar contas com maior seriedade do que os cristãos em geral. (Veja Ro 14:12.) Todavia, como os outros, também tropeçariam em palavra. — Tg 3:2.

Em que sentido todos os cristãos devem ser instrutores. Ao passo que relativamente poucos serviam quais instrutores na própria congregação, o alvo desejável para todos os cristãos era ter a habilidade de ensinar suas crenças a outros, pelo menos em particular. Este ponto foi deixado bem claro para os cristãos hebreus: "Embora devêsseis ser instrutores, em vista do tempo, precisais novamente que alguém vos ensine desde o princípio as coisas elementares das proclamações sagradas de Deus." Visto que os judeus tinham sido os primeiros a receber as boas novas sobre o Cristo, eles realmente já deviam ser, não bebês espirituais, mas exemplos da madureza e da habilidade cristãs de ensinar a outros. (He 5:12-6:2) Assim, o escritor inspirado está falando evidentemente aqui do ensino em sentido geral, em vez de num cargo designado. Um tanto similar, portanto, é a sua referência ao judeu que, à base de seu conhecimento, torna-se alguém "que corrige os desarrazoados, instrutor de pequeninos". (Ro 2:17-20) Paulo mostra, contudo, que em tal ensino, o proceder de vida da pessoa também precisa harmonizar-se com o que é ensinado, se é que tal ensino há de trazer honra a Deus. — Ro 2:21-24.

Os cristãos também podiam aprender uns dos outros. As mulheres mais jovens, para exemplificar, podiam ser ensinadas pelas mulheres mais idosas em assuntos tais como 'amar o marido, amar os filhos, ser ajuizada, casta, operosa em casa, boa, sujeitando-se ao seu próprio marido, para que não se falasse da palavra de Deus de modo ultrajante'. Tal ensino em particular era eficaz quando apoiado por bom exemplo. — Tit 2:3-5; compare isso com 2Ti 1:5; 3:14, 15.

INSTRUTOR PÚBLICO. Pessoa instruída em determinado campo de conhecimento e que ensina outros publicamente. A expressão "instrutor público" é traduzida da palavra grega gram·ma·teús. The New English Bible (A Nova Bíblia Inglesa) traduz isso por "mestre"; Knox usa as expressões "erudito" e 'homem culto'. Uma nota de rodapé na Tradução do Novo Mundo diz: "pessoa instruída". (Mt 13:52 n; 23:34) A mesma palavra grega é, em geral, vertida por "escriba"; mas, para deixar claro que não se faz referência ao grupo religioso judaico conhecido como escribas, a Tradução do Novo Mundo usa a expressão "instrutor público" quando a passagem se refere aos discípulos de Jesus.

Quando Jesus esteve na Terra, os escribas (gram·ma·teís) eram homens versados na Lei e instrutores do povo, mas haviam-se corrompido pelas tradições de homens e doutrinas pagãs. O termo "escribas" era usado com relação a eles mais como um título, designando-os como classe, em vez de ter a ver com seus deveres originais de copistas.

Jesus veio para dar testemunho da verdade. Para que as boas novas do Reino fossem pregadas, ele preparou seus discípulos para serem instrutores, instrutores públicos, com respeito ao Reino de Deus. Ele magnificou a função deles e a importância de escutar o ensino deles ao referir-se a eles como instrutores públicos; assemelhou a cada um deles a um homem instruído, dono de um genuíno tesouro do qual pode dispor. (Mt 13:52) Ele os enviou a Israel, mas os próprios escribas de Israel não discerniram os tesouros que Deus, por meio desses homens, estava-lhes oferecendo. Ao contrário, eles opuseram-se à instrução pública e participaram em açoitar, perseguir e matar Jesus e seus instrutores públicos associados, mostrando-se assim falsos instrutores. Não obstante, muitas pessoas de Israel e das nações foram ensinadas pelos a quem Jesus instruíra, e, por sua vez, elas mesmas se tornaram instrutores públicos da Palavra de Deus. — Mt 23:34; 28:19, 20.

Sob a Lei, os levitas eram incumbidos de ver que o povo recebesse instrução pública. (Le 10:11; De 17:10, 11; 2Cr 17:7-9) Moisés, o levita, como mediador do pacto da Lei, e mais tarde, Josué, da tribo de Efraim, como líder da nação, eram instrutores públicos do povo de Deus. (De 4:1; 34:9; Jos 8:35) Igualmente, os juízes e os reis fiéis davam instrução na Lei quando ouviam e julgavam casos, e quando presidiam ocasiões relacionadas com a adoração. — 1Rs 8:1-61; 2Rs 23:2.

Um notável exemplo de instrutor público é o sacerdote Esdras, que, com o apoio de Neemias, dirigiu um programa de instrução pública para os israelitas repatriados de Babilônia. Ele leu a Lei e organizou os levitas para a realização de seus deveres de 'explicar a lei ao povo', "dando-se o sentido dela" e 'tornando a leitura compreensível', deste modo 'instruindo o povo'. — Ne 8:1-9.

INTEGRIDADE. Retidão moral e inteireza, condição de ser inculpe e sem defeito.

Os termos hebraicos relacionados com integridade (tom, tum·máh, tam, ta·mím) têm como significado de raiz aquilo que é "completo" ou "inteiro". (Veja Le 25:30; Jos 10:13; Pr 1:12.) Ta·mím é usado várias vezes para se referir à inteireza física, ou sanidade, e à ausência de defeitos, por exemplo, quanto aos animais sacrificiais. (Êx 12:5; 29:1; Le 3:6) Mais vezes, porém, estes termos denotam sanidade moral ou a qualidade de inculpe.

Quando aplicado a Deus, ta·mím pode ser apropriadamente traduzido por "perfeito", como ao se referir à atividade e às obras de Jeová, sua maneira de agir, seu conhecimento e sua lei. (De 32:4; Jó 36:4; 37:16; Sal 18:30; 19:7) Todas estas qualidades e expressões divinas manifestam uma inteireza e plenitude tão inigualáveis, são tão salutares e isentas de defeitos ou falhas, que claramente identificam sua Fonte como sendo o único Deus verdadeiro. — Ro 1:20; veja PERFEIÇÃO.

Significado da Integridade Humana. Em alguns casos, o termo hebraico tom transmite simplesmente a ideia de motivação honesta, inocência quanto à má intenção. (Veja Gên 20:5, 6; 2Sa 15:11.) Mas estes termos hebraicos aparentados denotam principalmente a inabalável devoção à justiça. O uso e os exemplos bíblicos acentuam a inquebrantável devoção a uma pessoa, Jeová Deus, e à Sua vontade e propósito expressos como sendo o proceder de vital importância.

Envolvida na questão suprema. O primeiro casal humano teve a oportunidade de mostrar integridade no Éden. A restrição com respeito à árvore do conhecimento pôs sob teste a devoção deles ao seu Criador. Sob a pressão de influência externa da parte do Adversário de Deus e de seu apelo ao egoísmo, eles cederam à desobediência. Sua vergonha, sua relutância em encarar seu Criador e sua falta de candura ao responder às Suas perguntas, evidenciaram sua falta de integridade. (Compare isso com o Sal 119:1, 80.) Obviamente, porém, eles não foram os primeiros a quebrar a integridade, visto que a criatura espiritual que os levou ao proceder rebelde já fizera isso. — Gên 3:1-19; compare o proceder dele com a endecha pronunciada contra o rei de Tiro, em Ez 28:12-15; veja SATANÁS.

A rebelião de Satanás, iniciada abertamente no Éden, gerou uma questão de importância universal — a da legitimidade da soberania de Deus sobre todas as suas criaturas, seu direito de exigir plena obediência deles. Visto que a questão não era a superioridade de poder, mas sim uma questão moral, não podia ser resolvida meramente pelo exercício do poder, como, por exemplo, Deus exterminar imediatamente a Satanás e o casal humano. Este fato ajuda a entender por que se tem permitido que a iniquidade e seu autor, Satanás, continuem por tanto tempo. (Veja INIQUIDADE.) Ter o Adversário de Deus primeiro recorrido a humanos em busca de apoio e endosso a seu proceder rebelde (a mais antiga evidência de filhos espirituais de Deus terem tomado partido com Satanás só aparece em certa época antes do Dilúvio; Gên 6:1-5; compare isso com 2Pe 2:4, 5), fez do aspecto da integridade do homem à vontade soberana de Deus uma parte essencial da questão geral (embora a soberania de Jeová não dependa da integridade de suas criaturas). Vê-se prova disso no caso de Jó.

Jó. Jó, que evidentemente viveu no período entre a morte de José e os dias de Moisés, é descrito como homem que "mostrava ser inculpe [hebr: tam] e reto, e [que] temia a Deus e desviava-se do mal". (Jó 1:1; veja JÓ.) Que a integridade humana faz parte da questão entre Jeová Deus e Satanás é óbvio do fato de Deus ter interrogado seu Adversário a respeito de Jó quando Satanás apareceu durante uma assembleia angélica nas cortes do céu. Satanás atribuiu falsa motivação à adoração de Jó a Deus, alegando que Jó não servia por pura devoção, mas sim por benefícios egoístas. Deste modo, ele pôs em questão a integridade de Jó a Deus. Com permissão de despojar Jó de seus vastos bens e até mesmo de seus filhos, Satanás fracassou em quebrar a integridade de Jó. (Jó 1:6-2:3) Ele então afirmou que Jó dispunha-se egoistamente a suportar a perda de bens e de filhos enquanto pudesse salvar a sua própria pele. (Jó 2:4, 5) Depois disso, atacado por uma dolorosa e consumidora doença, e submetido à tentativa de dissuasão por parte de sua própria esposa, bem como à desdenhosa crítica e censura de companheiros que deturpavam as normas e os propósitos de Deus (Jó 2:6-13; 22:1, 5-11), a reação de Jó foi que ele não negaria ter sido um homem de integridade. "Até eu expirar não removerei de mim a minha integridade! Agarrarei a minha justeza e não a largarei; meu coração não escarnecerá de mim por qualquer dos meus dias." (Jó 27:5, 6) Ter ele mantido a integridade demonstrou que o Adversário de Deus era mentiroso.

As desafiadoras declarações de Satanás no caso de Jó mostram que ele achava que todas as pessoas poderiam ser desviadas de estar do lado de Deus, que nenhuma delas servia com motivação puramente altruísta. Assim, os humanos, bem como os filhos espirituais de Deus, têm o notável privilégio de contribuir para a vindicação da soberania de Jeová por meio dum proceder de integridade. E por fazerem isso, também santificam o Seu nome. "Os inculpes no seu caminho são um prazer para" Jeová. — Pr 11:20; contraste isso com o falso conceito emitido por Elifaz em Jó 22:1-3.

Base para o julgamento divino. O julgamento favorável de Deus depende do proceder íntegro da criatura. (Sal 18:23-25) Conforme escreveu o Rei Davi: "O próprio Jeová sentenciará os povos. Julga-me, ó Jeová, segundo a minha justiça e segundo a minha integridade que há em mim. Por favor, tenha fim a maldade dos iníquos, e seja o justo firmado por ti." (Sal 7:8, 9; compare isso com Pr 2:21, 22.) O sofredor Jó expressou assim a sua confiança: "[Jeová] me pesará em balança exata e Deus chegará a saber a minha integridade." (Jó 31:6) Depois disso, Jó alista cerca de doze exemplos da vida real que, se acontecessem em seu caso, teriam demonstrado falta de integridade. — Jó 31:7-40.

O que está incluído em manter a integridade no caso de humanos imperfeitos?

Visto que todos os homens são imperfeitos e incapazes de corresponder plenamente às normas de Deus, é evidente que sua integridade não significa perfeição de ação ou de linguagem. Em vez disso, as Escrituras mostram que significa totalidade ou plenitude da devoção de coração. Davi, por fraqueza, cometeu vários erros graves, mas, mesmo assim, 'andava com integridade de coração' (1Rs 9:4), pois aceitava a repreensão e corrigia seus caminhos. Assim, ele provava que seu coração ainda retinha o genuíno amor a Jeová Deus. (Sal 26:1-3, 6, 8, 11) Conforme Davi disse mais tarde a Salomão, seu filho: "Conhece o Deus de teu pai e serve-o de pleno coração e de alma agradável; porque Jeová sonda todos os corações e discerne toda inclinação dos pensamentos." O coração de Salomão, porém, não "se mostrou pleno para com Jeová, seu Deus, como o coração de Davi, seu pai". — 1Cr 28:9; 1Rs 11:4; a palavra "pleno", nestes dois textos, provém de outro termo hebraico, sha·lém, como em Pr 11:1; 1Rs 15:14.

Por conseguinte, a integridade não se restringe a um único aspecto da conduta humana; não se aplica só a assuntos obviamente "religiosos". Para o servo de Deus, é um modo de vida em que a pessoa 'anda', constantemente procurando conhecer a vontade de Jeová. (Sal 119:1-3) Davi pastoreou a nação de Israel, "segundo a integridade do seu coração", tanto em assuntos diretamente relacionados com a adoração de Jeová, como na condução dos assuntos governamentais. Também desejava que aqueles que o cercavam, bem como os que atuavam como seus ministros, fossem igualmente pessoas íntegras, 'andando num caminho sem defeito'. (Sal 78:72; 101:2-7) A pessoa 'mostra-se sem defeito' perante Deus no decorrer de certo período de tempo, como fizeram Noé, Abraão e outros. — Gên 6:9; 17:1; 2Sa 22:24.

A integridade exige intransigente lealdade a Deus e apego à justiça, não apenas sob condições ou circunstâncias favoráveis, mas sob todas as condições e a toda hora. Depois de acentuar que apenas o íntegro, "que fala a verdade no seu coração", é aceitável a Jeová, o salmista diz sobre tal indivíduo: "Jurou concernente àquilo que é mau para ele próprio, e ainda assim nada modifica", isto é, mesmo que venha a ser aparentemente contra seus próprios interesses algo com que ele solenemente concordou, ainda assim se manterá fiel ao seu acordo. (Sal 15:1-5; contraste isso com Ro 1:31; 1Ti 1:10.) A integridade, portanto, torna-se bem evidente quando a devoção da pessoa é submetida à prova e ela é pressionada a abandonar seu proceder justo. Embora os opositores façam dela um motivo de riso (Jó 12:4; compare isso com Je 20:7), ou objeto de linguagem amarga (Sal 64:3, 4), de ódio e de violenta perseguição (Pr 29:10; Am 5:10), a pessoa, doente ou sofrendo aflitiva adversidade, tem de 'apegar-se à sua integridade', como fez Jó, não importa o custo. — Jó 2:3.

Tal proceder íntegro torna-se possível, não pela força moral pessoal, mas somente por meio de profunda fé e confiança em Jeová e em seu poder salvador. (Sal 25:21) A promessa de Deus é de que Ele será um "escudo" e um "baluarte", guardando o caminho dos que andam em integridade. (Pr 2:6-8; 10:29; Sal 41:12) Sua preocupação constante de granjear a aprovação de Jeová traz estabilidade à sua vida, habilitando-os a seguirem sem desvio rumo a seu objetivo. (Sal 26:1-3; Pr 11:5; 28:18) Embora, conforme Jó observou com perplexidade, o inculpe possa sofrer, devido ao domínio do iníquo, e possa morrer junto com os iníquos, Jeová assegura-nos de que está cônscio da vida do inculpe, e garante que a herança de tal pessoa perdurará, que seu futuro será pacífico e que ela entrará na posse do que é bom. (Jó 9:20-22; Sal 37:18, 19, 37; 84:11; Pr 28:10) Como no caso de Jó, o que torna alguém genuinamente valioso e merecedor de respeito é ser ele um homem íntegro, em vez de sua riqueza. (Pr 19:1; 28:6) Os filhos privilegiados em terem uma pessoa assim como pai ou mãe devem ser considerados felizes (Pr 20:7), recebendo esplêndido legado do exemplo da vida de seu pai, usufruindo um quinhão do bom nome dele e o respeito que ele granjeou.

Além dos exemplos de Jó e de Davi, as Escrituras Hebraicas estão repletas de outros exemplos de homens de integridade. Abraão mostrou inabalável lealdade a Deus em sua disposição de sacrificar seu filho Isaque. (Gên 22:1-12) Daniel e seus três companheiros forneceram notáveis exemplos de integridade sob prova, na juventude e na vida adulta. (Da 1:8-17; 3:13-23; 6:4-23) Em Hebreus, capítulo 11, o apóstolo Paulo alista uma longa sucessão de homens de tempos pré-cristãos que, através da fé, mostraram integridade sob ampla variedade de circunstâncias difíceis. — Note, em especial, os vv 33-38 .

A Integridade nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Ao passo que nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs não aparece nenhuma palavra exata para "integridade", a ideia permeia toda esta parte da Bíblia. O Filho de Deus, Jesus Cristo, deu o exemplo mais excelente de integridade e de suprema confiança na força e nos cuidados de seu Pai celestial. Desta forma, ele foi 'aperfeiçoado' para seu cargo de Sumo Sacerdote de Deus, bem como de Rei Ungido do Reino celestial, maior do que o de Davi. (He 5:7-9; 4:15; 7:26-28; At 2:34, 35) A integridade acha-se incluída no mandamento que Jesus destacou como sendo o maior de todos — o de amar a Jeová Deus de todo o coração, de toda a mente, de toda a alma e de toda a força. (Mt 22:36-38) Sua injunção: "Concordemente, tendes de ser perfeitos, assim como o vosso Pai celestial é perfeito" (Mt 5:48), também sublinhou a inteireza da devoção da pessoa à justiça. (Os termos gregos para perfeição transmitem a ideia de algo 'levado à conclusão', e, assim, têm um sentido um tanto similar ao dos termos hebraicos já considerados.)

Os ensinos de Jesus sublinhavam a pureza de coração, a singeleza de perspectiva e de intenção, a isenção de hipocrisia — todas estas sendo qualidades que caracterizam a integridade. (Mt 5:8; 6:1-6, 16-18, 22 23; Lu 11:34-36) O apóstolo Paulo mostrou a mesma preocupação que Davi e os servos anteriores de Deus haviam demonstrado com relação a ele se provar inculpe e sem defeito. Estava isento de qualquer acusação de corrupção ou de inescrupulosidade em seu ministério e em todos os seus tratos com outros. — 2Co 4:1, 2; 6:3-10; 8:20, 21; 1Te 1:3-6.

A perseverança numa comissão dada por Deus, em face de oposição, suportando privações e perseguição, e sofrendo por aderir a um proceder de devoção piedosa, também distinguiram Paulo e outros primitivos cristãos como pessoas de integridade. — At 5:27-41; 2Co 11:23-27.

INTENDENTE, OFICIAL. Possivelmente era o oficial encarregado das rações e dos suprimentos para as tropas. Uma tradução literal do hebraico sar menu·hháh é "príncipe do lugar de descanso" e talvez significasse o encarregado dos alojamentos do rei quando em campanha ou em viagem. Seraías, como oficial intendente do Rei Zedequias, de Judá, acompanhou-o na viagem para Babilônia, no quarto ano do reinado de Zedequias, levando com ele a profecia escrita de Jeremias contra Babilônia. Após lê-la em voz alta naquela cidade, Seraías a lançou, amarrada a uma pedra, no Eufrates, como símbolo da futura queda de Babilônia, para jamais subir de novo. — Je 51:59-64.

INTERPRETAÇÃO. Na Bíblia, um intérprete pode ser de dois tipos. Pode ser um tradutor, alguém que transmite o significado de palavras proferidas ou escritas em uma língua para pessoas que leem ou falam outra língua, e pode fazer isto quer oralmente, quer por escrito. Por outro lado, um intérprete pode ser alguém que explica profecias bíblicas por dar a outros o sentido, o significado e o entendimento de sonhos, visões e mensagens proféticos de origem divina.

Tradução. A confusão da língua do homem durante a construção da Torre de Babel resultou em a família humana subitamente tornar-se uma raça multilíngue. Isto, por sua vez, deu origem a uma nova profissão, a de intérprete ou tradutor. (Gên 11:1-9) Uns cinco séculos depois, a fim de ocultar sua identidade como irmão deles, José utilizou um tradutor para interpretar para ele ao falar a seus irmãos hebreus na língua egípcia. (Gên 42:23) Uma forma da palavra hebraica lits (escarnecer; zombar) é traduzida por "intérprete" neste texto. A mesma palavra é, às vezes, traduzida por 'porta-voz' ao referir-se a um enviado versado numa língua estrangeira, como eram os "porta-vozes dos príncipes de Babilônia", enviados para conversar com o Rei Ezequias, de Judá. — 2Cr 32:31.

O dom de falar línguas estrangeiras era uma das manifestações do espírito santo de Deus, derramado sobre os fiéis discípulos de Cristo em Pentecostes de 33 EC. Contudo, não se tratava de repetição do que ocorrera na planície de Sinear, 22 séculos antes. Pois, em vez de substituir sua língua original por uma nova, estes discípulos retiveram sua língua materna e, ao mesmo tempo, foram habilitados a falar na língua de diversos grupos de fala estrangeira, sobre as coisas magníficas de Deus. (At 2:1-11) Junto com tal habilidade de falar línguas diferentes, outros dons miraculosos do espírito foram concedidos aos membros da primitiva congregação cristã, incluindo o dom de traduzir de uma língua para outra. Deu-se também instrução aos cristãos sobre o uso correto deste dom. — 1Co 12:4-10, 27-30; 14:5, 13-28.

O exemplo mais notável de tradução de uma língua para outra é a tradução da Bíblia em muitíssimas línguas, tarefa monumental que tem consumido séculos. Atualmente, este Livro existe, em todo ou em parte, em bem mais de 3.000 línguas. No entanto, nenhuma de tais traduções e nenhum de seus tradutores foi inspirado. Historicamente, tal trabalho de tradução remonta ao terceiro século AEC, quando se iniciou o trabalho na Septuaginta grega, em que as inspiradas Escrituras Sagradas em hebraico e aramaico, os 39 livros como são agora reconhecidos, foram vertidos para o grego comum, ou coiné, a língua internacional daquele tempo.

Os escritores bíblicos dos 27 livros que constituem as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, livros que concluíram o cânon da Bíblia, com frequência citaram as Escrituras Hebraicas. Aparentemente, eles às vezes utilizavam a Septuaginta grega, em vez de traduzirem eles mesmos do texto hebraico das Escrituras. (Compare Sal 40:6 [39:7, LXX] com He 10:5.) Outrossim, também faziam traduções um tanto livres, como se vê pela comparação de Oseias 2:23 com Romanos 9:25. Um exemplo de paráfrase, em vez de tradução literal, pode ser observado por se comparar Deuteronômio 30:11-14 com Romanos 10:6-8.

Estes escritores bíblicos não raro traduziram o nome de pessoas, os títulos, os lugares e as expressões, para o benefício de seus leitores. Deram o significado de nomes tais como Cefas, Barnabé, Tabita, Barjesus e Melquisedeque (Jo 1:42; At 4:36; 9:36; 13:6, 8; He 7:1, 2); também o significado dos títulos Emanuel, Rabi e Messias (Mt 1:23; Jo 1:38, 41); o significado de locais como Gólgota, Siloé e Salém (Mr 15:22; Jo 9:7; He 7:2); e as traduções dos termos "Tál·i·tha cú·mi" e "É·li, É·li, lá·ma sa·bach·thá·ni?". — Mr 5:41; 15:34.

Mateus primeiro escreveu seu Evangelho em hebraico, segundo o antigo testemunho de Jerônimo, Eusébio Pânfilo, Orígenes, Irineu e Pápias. Não se sabe quem mais tarde traduziu esse Evangelho para o grego. Se o próprio Mateus o fez, como alguns pensam, neste caso é a única tradução inspirada das Escrituras de que se tem conhecimento.

No grego clássico, a palavra her·me·neú·o não raro significa "explicar, interpretar". Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, tem o sentido de "traduzir". (Jo 1:42; 9:7; He 7:2) É similar ao nome do deus grego, Hermes (Mercúrio), tido pelos antigos mitologistas não só como mensageiro, enviado e intérprete dos deuses, mas também como padroeiro dos escritores, oradores e tradutores. Os pagãos em Listra chamaram a Paulo de "Hermes, visto que ele tomava a dianteira no falar". (At 14:12) O prefixo me·tá subentende "uma mudança", e, assim, juntado a her·me·neú·o, temos o vocábulo me·ther·me·neú·o·mai, palavra que também ocorre várias vezes na Bíblia. Significa "mudar ou traduzir de uma língua para outra", e acha-se sempre na voz passiva, como em 'quando traduzido'. — Mt 1:23.

Interpretação de Profecia. Di·er·me·neú·o é uma forma reforçada e intensificada de her·me·neú·o. É em geral usada com referência à tradução de línguas (At 9:36; 1Co 12:30), mas significa também "explicar plenamente; interpretar plenamente". Portanto, di·er·me·neú·o foi a palavra que Lucas usou ao relatar como Jesus, na estrada para Emaús, junto com dois de seus discípulos, começou com os escritos de Moisés e dos profetas e "interpretou-lhes em todas as Escrituras as coisas referentes a si mesmo". Os dois discípulos mais tarde contaram aos outros essa experiência, sobre como Jesus 'abriu plenamente as Escrituras' para eles. — Lu 24:13-15, 25-32.

Dy·ser·mé·neu·tos tem um significado oposto. Foi usada por Paulo e só se encontra em Hebreus 5:11, significando "difícil de interpretar", isto é, "difícil de explicar". — Veja Int.

Outra palavra grega traduzida por "interpretação" é e·pí·ly·sis, do verbo que literalmente significa "soltar ou liberar" (assim, explicar ou solucionar).

A verdadeira profecia não tem como fonte as expressas opiniões ou interpretações de homens, mas origina-se de Deus. Por isso, Pedro escreve: "Nenhuma profecia da Escritura procede de qualquer interpretação [e·pi·lý·se·os] particular . . . mas os homens falaram da parte de Deus conforme eram movidos por espírito santo." (2Pe 1:20, 21) Assim, as profecias bíblicas jamais foram produto de deduções e predições astutas dos homens, baseadas em sua análise pessoal dos eventos ou tendências humanas.

O significado de algumas profecias era óbvio, não exigindo assim nenhuma interpretação, como no caso do profeta usado para predizer que os de Judá 'iriam para o cativeiro ao rei de Babilônia durante setenta anos', ou que Babilônia se tornaria 'um baldio desolado'. Naturalmente, o tempo do cumprimento nem sempre era conhecido, ainda que, em alguns casos, isto também fosse explicitamente declarado. Muitas profecias, ou determinados aspectos das profecias, contudo, eram apenas parcialmente entendidos na ocasião em que foram dados, o entendimento pleno ou a interpretação tendo de aguardar o devido tempo de Deus para se tornarem claras. Isto se deu com algumas das profecias de Daniel, e com respeito ao Messias e o segredo sagrado que o envolvia. — Da 12:4, 8-10; 1Pe 1:10-12.

Todos os sacerdotes-magos e sábios do Egito mostraram-se incompetentes quando se tratou de interpretar os sonhos de Faraó, de origem divina. "Não havia quem os interpretasse a Faraó." (Gên 41:1-8) Trouxe-se então à atenção de Faraó que José havia interpretado com êxito os sonhos do chefe dos copeiros e do chefe dos padeiros de Faraó. (Gên 40:5-22; 41:9-13) No entanto, neste sentido, José não assumira nenhum crédito para si mesmo, mas dirigira a atenção deles a Jeová como Intérprete de sonhos, dizendo: "Não pertencem a Deus as interpretações?" (Gên 40:8) Assim, quando convocado por Faraó para interpretar o sonho do rei, José declarou: "Eu não entro em consideração! Deus é que anunciará bem-estar a Faraó." (Gên 41:14-16) Após ouvir a interpretação, até mesmo o Faraó reconheceu José como alguém "em quem há o espírito de Deus", pois "Deus te fez saber [a José] tudo isso". — Gên 41:38, 39.

Similarmente, Deus usou Daniel para tornar conhecida a interpretação dos sonhos de Nabucodonosor. Depois de primeiramente ter orado a Deus para entender o segredo e ter obtido a resposta numa visão noturna, Daniel foi conduzido perante o rei, tanto para lembrar o sonho esquecido como para dar a interpretação dele. (Da 2:14-26) Como introdução, Daniel lembrou ao rei que todos os homens sábios, conjuradores, sacerdotes-magos e astrólogos do rei foram incapazes de interpretar o sonho dele. "No entanto", continuou Daniel, "há nos céus um Deus que é Revelador de segredos, . . . no que se refere a mim, não é por meio de qualquer sabedoria que haja em mim mais do que em quaisquer outros viventes que este segredo me foi revelado, exceto com o objetivo de que se desse a conhecer a interpretação ao próprio rei". — Da 2:27-30.

Noutra ocasião, quando todos os sacerdotes-magos, conjuradores, caldeus e astrólogos foram incapazes de interpretar o sonho do rei a respeito da grande árvore que fora cortada, Daniel foi de novo chamado, e, novamente, deu-se destaque à origem divina da profecia. Em virtual reconhecimento disso, o rei disse a Daniel: "Eu mesmo bem sei que há em ti o espírito dos deuses santos", e que "tu és competente, porque há em ti o espírito de deuses santos". — Da 4:4-18, 24.

Anos depois, na própria noite em que Babilônia caiu diante dos medos e dos persas, este idoso servo de Jeová, Daniel, foi mais uma vez chamado a interpretar uma mensagem divina para um rei. Desta feita, misteriosa mão escrevera MENE, MENE, TEQUEL, PARSIM, na parede do palácio, durante o banquete de Belsazar. Todos os sábios de Babilônia mostraram-se incapazes de interpretar essa escrita críptica. A rainha-mãe lembrou-se então de que Daniel ainda estava disponível, sendo aquele 'em quem havia o espírito dos deuses santos', além de "iluminação, e perspicácia, e sabedoria, como a sabedoria de deuses". Ao interpretar tal escrita, que realmente era em si mesma uma profecia, Daniel mais uma vez magnificou a Jeová como o Deus de profecia verdadeira. — Da 5:1, 5-28.

INTÉRPRETE. Veja INTERPRETAÇÃO.

INTESTINOS. As vísceras, ou entranhas. A palavra hebraica qé·rev é usada para descrever as "partes internas", o "íntimo" ou "intestinos" de homens e de animais. (Êx 12:9; 29:13; Sal 5:9) Denota aquilo que está "dentro" e é muitas vezes usada como preposição, com o sentido de "dentro; no meio de". — Gên 25:22; De 17:20.

Outro termo que se refere aos órgãos internos é o hebraico me·ʽéh. Ocorrendo sempre no plural (me·ʽím), é usado para "intestinos", em 2 Samuel 20:10 e em 2 Crônicas 21:15, 18, 19. A palavra pode denotar as "entranhas" de uma criatura, como no relato do grande peixe que engoliu Jonas. Ela ocorre duas vezes ali e aparece em paralelo com "ventre" do grande peixe. (Jon 1:17; 2:1, 2) O sistema reprodutivo de humanos pode também ser chamado por este termo hebraico. (Gên 15:4; Ru 1:11) Por causa da evidente ligação entre as emoções e os órgãos internos, os intestinos, ou vísceras, eram considerados a sede das mais profundas emoções. — Veja Is 63:15; Je 4:19; 31:20.

O alimento físico é assimilado pelos intestinos. Este fato foi usado metaforicamente para representar a digestão mental ou espiritual quando, em visão, ordenou-se a Ezequiel que comesse um rolo, enchendo os intestinos (hebr: me·'ím) com ele. Ezequiel deveria obter força espiritual por meditar nas palavras escritas no rolo e retê-las na memória. Desse modo, nutriu-se espiritualmente e recebeu uma mensagem para proferir. — Ez 3:1-6; compare isso com Re 10:8-10.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra splágkhna, que significa literalmente "intestinos", é usada uma vez para se referir aos intestinos literais. (At 1:18) Em outras partes, ela é usada metaforicamente para denotar "ternas afeições" e "ternas compaixões". — 2Co 6:12; Fil 1:8; 2:1; Col 3:12; 1Jo 3:17.

INVEJA. Sentimento de ressentimento e descontentamento por causa de pertences, prosperidade, vantagens, posição ou reputação de outrem. O invejoso quer o que outros têm e talvez pense que aqueles que possuem o que é cobiçado não o merecem. Ao passo que a palavra hebraica qin·'áh, dependendo do contexto, pode referir-se a zelo, ardor, insistência em devoção exclusiva, ou ciúme e inveja (2Rs 19:31; Sal 79:5; Núm 25:11; 5:14; Jó 5:2), o grego ftho·nos coerentemente tem uma conotação negativa e denota inveja. — Ro 1:29.

Uma das más inclinações do homem pecaminoso é a tendência de invejar. (Tg 4:5) É uma expressão de ódio. Por invejarem a prosperidade de Isaque, os filisteus maliciosamente obstruíram os poços dos quais ele dependia para dar água a seus rebanhos e manadas. Por fim, seu rei pediu que Isaque abandonasse a área. (Gên 26:14-16, 27) No caso de Corá, Datã e Abirão, a inveja da dignidade e da posição honrosa que tinham Moisés e Arão fez com que lançassem um violento ataque verbal. (Núm 16:1-3; Sal 106:16-18) A reação favorável do povo para com Jesus encheu de inveja os principais sacerdotes e muitos anciãos judeus. A inveja deles atingiu o clímax quando entregaram o Filho de Deus a Pilatos a fim de que fosse imposta a sentença de morte. — Mt 27:1, 2, 18; Mr 15:10.

Sustentar ensinamentos que não se harmonizam com os de Jesus Cristo produz inveja. A principal preocupação da pessoa que os ensina não é a glória de Deus, mas sim a promoção de sua própria doutrina. A resultante inveja talvez encontre expressão em empenhos de desvirtuar e difamar os cristãos verdadeiros, minando seus labores e saudável influência. (1Ti 6:3, 4) O apóstolo Paulo tinha de contender com pessoas de má motivação, que pregavam Cristo por inveja. A intenção delas era desmerecer a reputação e a autoridade apostólica de Paulo, que invejavam. Tentaram desencorajar e desalentar o encarcerado apóstolo. À custa dele, procuravam engrandecer-se a fim de promover seus anseios egoístas. — Fil 1:15-17.

Perigo de Ceder à Inveja. As pessoas que atingem seus objetivos por meio de fraude e violência talvez desfrutem por algum tempo de prosperidade, segurança e boa saúde. Até mesmo a morte de iníquos pode ser pacífica, desacompanhada de grande angústia. Quando o servo de Deus vê as suas possivelmente menos favoráveis circunstâncias, talvez permita que a inveja das circunstâncias dos iníquos corroa seu apreço pelo valor de fazer a vontade divina, como no caso do salmista Asafe. (Sal 73:2-14) É por isso que as Escrituras repetidas vezes apresentam sólidas razões para não invejar homens maus nem adotar seus costumes: os praticantes da injustiça são tão transitórios como a erva, que prontamente seca sob o forte calor do sol. (Sal 37:1, 2) Independentemente da prosperidade daqueles que atingem seus objetivos por meio de violência, eles são detestáveis a Jeová e estão sob sua maldição. (Pr 3:31-33) A vida deles não tem futuro. — Pr 23:17, 18; 24:1, 19, 20.

A sorte patética do invejoso é apresentada no provérbio inspirado: "O homem de olho invejoso [literalmente: "mau; pernicioso"] atarefa-se para obter coisas valiosas, mas não sabe que virá sobre ele a própria carência." (Pr 28:22) A pessoa de olho invejoso se encaminha realmente em direção à carência. Ao passo que luta para elevar-se ao nível daqueles a quem inveja, ela se degrada moralmente, sacrificando princípios corretos. Mesmo se for bem-sucedida em adquirir riquezas, estas são apenas temporárias e têm de ser deixadas para trás na morte. Assim, ela lutou ou 'atarefou-se' em vão. Jesus incluiu "um olho invejoso [literalmente: "iníquo"]" entre as coisas iníquas que saem de dentro de um homem e o aviltam. — Mr 7:22, 23.

A inveja é uma desprezível obra da carne que se interpõe no caminho de a pessoa herdar o Reino de Deus. (Gál 5:19-21) Todos os que persistem nela "merecem a morte". (Ro 1:29, 32) Com a ajuda do espírito de Deus, porém, é possível resistir à tendência para a inveja. — Gál 5:16-18, 25, 26; Tit 3:3-5; 1Pe 2:1.

INVESTIDURA. A iniciação do sacerdócio no cargo. A palavra hebraica para "investidura"

(mil·lu·'ím) literalmente significa "enchimento", isto é, o enchimento da mão de poder, empossar. (Êx 29:22 n; compare isso com Ez 43:26 n; veja ENCHER A MÃO DE PODER.) O mesmo termo é usado para "engastar" pedras preciosas. — 1Cr 29:2.

Arão e seus filhos foram escolhidos da família coatita da tribo de Levi a fim de servirem como sacerdócio de Israel. (Êx 6:16, 18, 20; 28:1) Sua investidura durou sete dias, ocorrendo, pelo que parece, de 1.º a 7 de nisã de 1512 AEC, enquanto Israel estava acampado ao sopé do monte Sinai, na península da Arábia. (Êx 40:2, 12, 17) A tenda de reunião acabara de ser construída e erguida, no dia primeiro daquele mês; a família sacerdotal fora escolhida por Jeová, e agora se ordenava ao irmão de Arão, Moisés, como mediador do pacto da Lei, que realizasse a cerimônia de santificação e de investidura deles. Instruções para tal procedimento são delineadas em Êxodo, capítulo 29, e o registro da realização da cerimônia, por parte de Moisés, acha-se em Levítico, capítulo 8.

Neste primeiro dia, com a presença de Jeová representada pela coluna de nuvem acima do tabernáculo (Êx 40:33-38), Moisés juntou todos os itens sacrificiais: o novilho, os dois carneiros, a cesta de pães não fermentados, o óleo de unção e as vestes sacerdotais. Conforme instruído, convocou a congregação de Israel — que provavelmente significava os anciãos quais representantes de toda a congregação — para reunir-se à entrada da tenda de reunião, fora da cortina que cercava o pátio. Visto que evidentemente puderam observar o que ocorreu no pátio, foi provavelmente removido o reposteiro da porta, que tinha 20 côvados (8,9 m) de largura. — Le 8:1-5; Êx 27:16.

Moisés lavou Arão e seus filhos, Nadabe, Abiú, Eleazar e Itamar (ou ordenou que eles próprios se lavassem) na bacia de cobre que havia no pátio e colocou sobre Arão as gloriosas vestes do sumo sacerdote. (Núm 3:2, 3) Daí, usando esses lindos trajes, Arão foi investido no cargo, as vestes representando as qualidades e as responsabilidades de seu cargo. Em seguida, Moisés ungiu o tabernáculo, todo o seu mobiliário e utensílios, e o altar da oferta queimada, bem como a bacia, e os utensílios utilizados em relação a eles. Isto os santificava, pondo-os à parte para o uso e o serviço exclusivos de Deus, para o que seriam doravante utilizados. Por fim, Moisés ungiu Arão derramando óleo sobre a cabeça dele. — Le 8:6-12; Êx 30:22-33; Sal 133:2.

O Novilho da Oferta Pelo Pecado. Em seguida, Moisés vestiu os filhos de Arão, após o que fez com que Arão e seus filhos pusessem as mãos sobre a cabeça do novilho da oferta pelo pecado, esta ação por parte deles significando seu reconhecimento da oferta como sendo para eles, a casa sacerdotal. Após matar o novilho, Moisés colocou parte do sangue sobre o altar e derramou o restante na base do altar, simbolizando assim a purificação da mácula trazida pela natureza pecaminosa dos sacerdotes que oficiariam no altar. Ser o sangue derramado sobre os chifres do altar significava, evidentemente, que o poder do arranjo sacrificial dependia do sangue derramado do sacrifício. (He 9:22) Exigia-se igualmente a aspersão do altar em conexão com outras ofertas. (Le 1:5, 11; 3:2; 4:6; 16:18) Observe, contudo, que sendo este o 'dia da ordenação' do sacerdócio, e não o dia nacional da expiação dos pecados, o sangue do novilho não foi conduzido para dentro do Santíssimo. (Veja Le 16:14.) Como no caso de outras ofertas pelo pecado, a gordura sobre os intestinos, a acrescência do fígado e os dois rins com sua gordura foram colocados sobre o altar. (Le 4:8-10, 20, 26, 31) O restante do novilho, com sua pele e excremento, foi levado para fora do acampamento para ser queimado. — Le 8:13-17.

Carneiros Sacrificiais. Daí Arão e seu filhos impuseram as mãos sobre o carneiro da oferta queimada e este foi morto, parte de seu sangue sendo aspergida sobre o altar. O carneiro foi então retalhado, lavado e queimado sobre o altar; mas isso não incluía o excremento e a pele. (Le 7:8) Assim como tal carneiro da oferta queimada foi oferecido por completo, não se retendo nada dele para consumo por parte de nenhum humano, assim também estes sacerdotes foram inteiramente santificados para o serviço santo, sacerdotal, de Jeová. — Le 8:18-21; compare isso com Le 1:3-9.

O outro carneiro, o "carneiro da investidura", foi morto, depois que os sacerdotes puseram as mãos sobre ele. Neste caso, o sangue foi usado de forma diferente. Parte dele foi colocada sobre o lóbulo da orelha direita, o polegar direito e o dedão do pé direito de Arão e de seus filhos; assim, as faculdades representadas por tais membros do corpo deviam ser usadas plenamente em relação com o aspecto sacrificial de seu ministério. O restante do sangue, Moisés aspergiu sobre o altar. — Le 8:22-24.

A gordura em torno dos órgãos do carneiro, antes de ser oferecida na forma costumeira, foi colocada, junto com um de cada um dos três tipos de pães não fermentados tirados da cesta, sobre a perna direita do cordeiro. Tudo isto foi então colocado sobre as palmas das mãos de Arão e de seus filhos, e movido por Moisés perante Jeová, sendo que, para isso, Moisés evidentemente colocou suas mãos sob as dos sacerdotes. Isto significou que as mãos deles foram 'enchidas de poder', isto é, enchidas de dons sacrificiais e plenamente equipadas e empossadas para prestar serviços ligados à oferta de sacrifícios. Mostrou-se que estavam autorizados, não só a oferecer as partes gordurosas sobre o altar, mas também para receber as dádivas providas para seu sustento, segundo o arranjo abundante de Jeová para o Seu sacerdócio. A parte movida do carneiro, a perna direita, geralmente ficava com o sacerdote oficiante, como sua porção. (Le 7:32-34; Núm 18:18) No caso em pauta, tudo foi queimado sobre o altar. Assim, tanto foi apresentada (movida) perante Jeová como realmente oferecida, reconhecendo-se tudo isso como a concessão dele para o sacerdócio. — Le 8:25-28.

Moisés, atuando na qualidade de sacerdote durante o ofício de investidura, recebeu então o peito do carneiro de investidura como sua própria porção, depois de apresentá-la como oferta movida. — Le 8:29; veja também Êx 29:26-28.

Parte do sangue do carneiro, junto com o óleo de unção (aparentemente misturados), foi aspergida sobre Arão e seus filhos, e as roupas deles, a fim de santificá-los. Isto também os identificou com o cargo sacrificial, conforme orientado pelo espírito de Deus. Não se faz menção de os filhos de Arão serem ungidos por se derramar óleo sobre a cabeça deles, como Arão o foi. — Le 8:30.

A carne do carneiro que não fora queimada sobre o altar, nem dada a Moisés, deveria então ser cozida à entrada da tenda de reunião por Arão e seus filhos. Eles a comeriam, junto com os pães que restavam na cesta, mas qualquer alimento que restasse devia ser queimado na manhã seguinte. Isto sublinhava a pureza, e também destacava a inteireza da santificação e do serviço deles (porque o que foi comido estava isento de qualquer putrefação ou ranço, e as sobras foram completamente destruídas). É também digno de nota que nos pães não havia nenhum fermento. — Le 8:31, 32; Êx 29:31-34.

Conclusão da Investidura. A investidura se prolongou por sete dias, antes do fim dos quais o sacerdócio não podia oficiar no sentido mais pleno. Em cada um dos dias, foi sacrificado um novilho como oferta pelos pecados para purificar o altar. Durante todos os sete dias, dia e noite, os sacerdotes recém-ordenados tiveram de ficar em seus postos, à entrada da tenda de reunião, mantendo a "vigilância obrigatória de Jeová", para que não morressem. — Le 8:33-36; Êx 29:35-42.

No oitavo dia, o sacerdócio, plenamente equipado e investido no cargo, oficiou (sem a ajuda de Moisés) pela primeira vez, realizando um serviço de expiação para a nação de Israel, que precisava especialmente de purificação, não só por causa de sua pecaminosidade natural, mas também devido à sua recente desobediência relacionada com o bezerro de ouro, que trouxera o desagrado de Jeová. (Le 9:1-7; Êx 32:1-10) Ao concluir-se este primeiro serviço prestado pelo sacerdócio recém-investido, Jeová manifestou sua aprovação e confirmação deles no cargo por mandar fogo miraculoso, sem dúvida oriundo da coluna de nuvem que pairava sobre o tabernáculo, devorando o que restava do sacrifício sobre o altar. — Le 9:23, 24.

A Bíblia não fornece nenhum registro de uma cerimônia de investidura para os sucessores de Arão. Evidentemente, aquele único ofício de investidura bastou para empossar a casa de Arão, e toda a sua descendência masculina, em seu cargo sacerdotal de uma vez para sempre, para continuar por tempo indefinido, até a investidura no cargo do sumo sacerdote verdadeiro e eterno, Jesus Cristo. — He 7:12, 17; 9:11, 12; veja SACERDOTE; SUMO SACERDOTE.

INVOCAÇÃO DO MAL. Literalmente, falar mal de alguém ou amaldiçoá-lo, e, portanto, o oposto de bendição, ou bênção. A palavra hebraica qela·láh refere-se basicamente a tal maldição ou invocação do mal e é regularmente contrastada com "bênção" em numerosos textos. (Gên 27:12, 13; De 11:26-29; Za 8:13) Deriva da raiz verbal qa·lál, que literalmente significa "ser leve"; mas, quando usada em sentido figurado, significa "invocar o mal sobre", "tratar com desprezo". (Êx 18:22; Le 20:9; 2Sa 19:43) Esta é a palavra que Davi usou quando disse a Mical que se faria ainda "menos estimado" do que ela o acusara de fazer-se. (2Sa 6:20-22) Jeová Deus a usou depois do Dilúvio, ao dizer que nunca mais 'invocaria o mal sobre o solo por causa do homem'. — Gên 8:21.

Propósito das Invocações do Mal por Parte de Deus. Um dos propósitos das invocações do mal por parte de Deus é tornar claro quem é, e quem não é, servo aprovado Dele, uma vez que as invocações do mal manifestam a desaprovação de Deus, assim como Suas bênçãos manifestam sua aprovação. Assim, ao prometer a Abraão sua bênção, Jeová também declarou: "Amaldiçoarei aquele que invocar o mal [forma participial de qa·lál] sobre ti." (Gên 12:3) Quando o alvo da invocação do mal é deixado anônimo, tal invocação serve também como orientação admoestadora e proteção para quem deseja granjear ou reter o favor de Deus. A Lei mosaica especificava numerosas bênçãos e invocações do mal, todas as quais resultariam da aplicação dos estatutos e regulamentos da Lei. (De 28:1, 2, 15) Antes da entrada na Terra Prometida, Moisés frisou o fato de que, aquela na-ção, a nível individual e coletivo, tinha de escolher entre a bênção e a invocação do mal, e que isto fariam, quer pela obediência, quer pela desobediência. (De 30:19, 20) Josué, em essência, repetiu esta exortação e aviso protetores na Terra Prometida. (Veja Jos 8:32-35; 24:14, 15.) Os indivíduos poderiam, assim, empenhar-se em evitar ser objeto das anunciadas invocações do mal.

A invocação do mal comprova também que não pode haver frivolidade ou desprezo para com os princípios e os propósitos anunciados de Deus. O Sumo Sacerdote Eli tornou-se objeto de uma invocação do mal específica por deixar tibiamente de censurar seus filhos, embora estivessem "invocando o mal sobre Deus". (1Sa 3:13) Jeová lhe ditou a seguinte regra: "Honrarei os que me honrarem, e os que me desprezarem serão tidos em pouca conta [da forma da raiz qa·lál]." (1Sa 2:30) A invocação do mal por Deus, assim, resulta na justa retribuição pelo erro. Esta pode ser imediata, como no caso dos delinquentes zombadores sobre os quais Eliseu invocou o mal, em nome de Jeová (2Rs 2:24), ou pode ser reservada para uma época posterior, como no caso em que Deus informou o Rei Josias sobre a calamidade que sobreviria a Judá. (2Rs 22:19, 20) Jeová avisou a nação de Israel que a violação de Suas leis traria dificuldades inescapáveis, afirmando: "Todas estas invocações do mal virão certamente sobre ti e te perseguirão, e te alcançarão, até que tenhas sido aniquilado, porque não escutaste a voz de Jeová, teu Deus, guardando os seus mandamentos e os seus estatutos que te ordenou." (De 28:45) Embora Jeová predissesse a desolação e o exílio deles nos termos mais claros possíveis, eles se recusaram a dar ouvidos e, assim, Jerusalém tornou-se "uma invocação do mal para todas as nações da terra". — Je 26:6; 24:9; De 29:27.

Anulação das Invocações do Mal. Jeová pode cancelar ou anular uma invocação do mal, mas somente quando Seus justos requisitos são devidamente satisfeitos. Este parece ter sido o caso da invocação do mal original sobre a Terra que, evidentemente, terminou com o Dilúvio que purificou o globo da iniquidade. (Gên 8:21) Não cumprir o pacto da Lei trouxe uma maldição sobre toda a nação de Israel, até mesmo sobre aqueles que, conscienciosamente (embora de modo imperfeito) tentavam cumprir os seus termos. O apóstolo Paulo mostra que foi por este motivo que Cristo Jesus morreu daquele modo: numa estaca de tortura. (Gál 3:10-13) Desta forma, Jesus, embora tivesse observado perfeitamente a Lei, assumiu sobre si a maldição resultante da invocação do mal, da Lei, que repousava sobre todos os que estavam sob tal Lei. Deuteronômio 21:23 diz: "Pois o pendurado [sobre uma estaca] é algo amaldiçoado [literalmente: uma invocação do mal] por Deus." Jesus, por ser pregado na estaca como criminoso, sendo sentenciado (embora injustamente) pelo tribunal sacerdotal judaico, tornou-se, efetivamente, "uma maldição". Depois disso, quando Jesus apresentou o valor de seu sacrifício no céu, a Lei foi cancelada por Deus. Por aceitar o sacrifício, Deus figuradamente pregou a Lei na estaca, e a maldição que acompanhava tal Lei foi legalmente removida. (Col 2:14) Visto que o corpo de Jesus era considerado uma invocação do mal, e também para cumprir a exigência da Lei, a fim de não profanar o sábado, os judeus mostraram-se ansiosos de remover das estacas, antes de findar aquele dia, os corpos de Jesus e dos malfeitores. — De 21:23; Jo 19:31.

O que determina a eficácia de uma invocação do mal?

Ao passo que indivíduos podem pronunciar invocações do mal, a sua validez depende inteiramente de Deus, de Seus princípios e propósitos. Foi em vão que Golias "invocou o mal sobre Davi por meio dos seus deuses [falsos]". (1Sa 17:43) Jeová transformou em bênção a invocação do mal que Balaão intencionava lançar. (De 23:4, 5; Jos 24:9, 10) Visto que Davi reconhecia que somente Jeová pode efetivar uma invocação do mal, ele rejeitou a solicitação irada de Abisai de ter permissão de ir 'arrancar a cabeça' de Simei, que injuriosamente invocava o mal sobre Davi. Davi disse: "Deixai-o, para que invoque o mal, pois Jeová lhe disse isso! Talvez Jeová veja com o seu olho e Jeová realmente me restitua a bondade em vez de sua invocação do mal neste dia." (2Sa 16:5-12; compare isso com Sal 109:17, 18, 28.) A Palavra de Deus condena especificamente que se invoque o mal sobre os próprios pais (Êx 21:17; Le 20:9; Pr 20:20), sobre Deus (Êx 22:28; Le 24:11, 14, 15, 23), ou sobre o rei (Ec 10:20), e expõe aqueles que abençoam com a boca, ao passo que "no íntimo estão invocando o mal". — Sal 62:4.

Cristo Jesus, como porta-voz de Deus, enquanto estava na Terra, proferiu efetivamente invocações do mal sobre os guias religiosos e os fariseus, devido à deliberada oposição deles ao propósito de Deus. (Mt 23:13-33) O apóstolo Pedro evidentemente 'invocou o mal' sobre Ananias e Safira por tentarem trapacear a Deus, o que resultou na morte imediata deles. (At 5:1-11) O apóstolo Paulo fez algo similar com o falso profeta Elimas, o feiticeiro, a quem chamou de "filho do Diabo" e "inimigo de tudo que é justo", e que, depois disso, ficou temporariamente cego. (At 13:6-12) Tais medidas tiveram um efeito salutar sobre os que as presenciaram. Contudo, estes poderes apostólicos não davam autoridade nem licença para que outros proferissem invocações do mal. Tiago avisa contra os cristãos utilizarem incorretamente a língua para amaldiçoar os homens. — Tg 3:9-12; compare Sal 109:17, 18, com Col 3:8-10.

Ao passo que a história registra que, nos tempos pós-apostólicos e no decorrer dos séculos, organizações religiosas têm publicado muitos "anátemas" e "interditos" contra indivíduos, cidades e nações, ela mostra também que o veículo usado para efetivar tais invocações do mal tem sido, invariavelmente, não o poder de Deus, mas sim o poder terreno duma igreja ou dum Estado secular. Em contraste, no Salmo 37:3-9, 22, somos aconselhados a esperar em Jeová, visto que "os abençoados por ele são os que possuirão a terra, mas aqueles sobre quem ele invoca o mal serão decepados". Tal "decepamento" acha-se incluído na invocação do mal que Jesus expressa sobre a classe amaldiçoada dos "cabritos", em sua parábola profética em Mateus 25:31-46. Relacionado com os "novos céus e uma nova terra", profetiza-se que o mal também será invocado sobre os pecadores. — Is 65:17, 20; veja MALDIÇÃO.

IÓ. Terceiro filho mencionado de Issacar. (Gên 46:13) Em Números 26:24 e 1 Crônicas 7:1, o nome aparece como Jasube.

IOBE. Veja IÓ.

IODE [י]. Décima letra do alfabeto hebraico. É a menor letra hebraica. O nome da menor letra do alfabeto grego, i·ó·ta, evidentemente é aparentada com a hebraica yohdh. Visto que a Lei de Moisés foi originalmente escrita e depois preservada em hebraico, é provável que Jesus se referisse ao hebraico yohdh quando disse que a "letra menor [gr.: i·ó·ta]" não passaria sem o devido cumprimento. (Mt 5:18) Esta letra ocorre como inicial no Tetragrama, ou sagrado nome de Jeová (lendo da direita para a esquerda: יהוה), e, como tal, foi transportada para as primitivas cópias da Septuaginta grega. Uma folha de velino do terceiro século EC (P. Oxyrhynchus vii. 1007), contendo um trecho da tradução Septuaginta de Gênesis, representou o nome divino Jeová por um yohdh duplo. — Gên 2:8, n.

Devido à similaridade entre as letras yohdh (י) e waw (ו), elas foram às vezes confundidas pelos copistas. No hebraico, no Salmo 119:73-80, cada versículo começa com a letra yohdh.

IQUES [Tortuoso]. O tecoíta cujo filho Ira era um dos poderosos do Rei Davi. — 2Sa 23:8, 26; 1Cr 11:26, 28; 27:9.

IR [Jumento Adulto]. 'Pai' dos supins e hupins (1Cr 7:12); provavelmente o mesmo que o benjamita Iri. — 1Cr 7:7.

IRA, I. Na Bíblia, usam-se várias palavras hebraicas e gregas para denotar ira. A palavra hebraica mais comum para ira é 'af, que basicamente significa "nariz; narina", mas muitas vezes é usada figurativamente para "ira", devido à respiração forte ou o bufar da pessoa irada. (Veja Sal 18:7, 8; Ez 38:18.) Aparentado com 'af existe 'a·náf, que significa "estar exasperado". A ira é também muitas vezes associada com o calor nas Escrituras Hebraicas e, assim, diz-se que ela acende. Outras palavras hebraicas são traduzidas por "raiva", "fúria" e "indignação". Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, or·gé é geralmente traduzido por "furor", ao passo que thy·mós é usualmente vertido por "ira".

A Ira de Deus. A ira pode ser justificada ou não. Da parte de Deus, a ira sempre é justificada, baseando-se nos princípios ditados pelo seu direito à devoção exclusiva e em sua constância em sustentar a verdade; é governada pelo Seu amor à justiça e aos que praticam a justiça. A ira divina não emana dum capricho momentâneo, a ser posteriormente lamentada. Jeová vê todas as questões relacionadas com determinado assunto e tem conhecimento completo e pleno da situação. (He 4:13) Ele lê o coração, observa o grau de ignorância, de negligência ou de pecado voluntário; e age com imparcialidade. — De 10:17, 18; 1Sa 16:7; At 10:34, 35.

Princípios que controlam a fúria divina. A ira de Deus está sempre sob controle e em harmonia com Seus atributos de amor, sabedoria e justiça. Graças a seu poder onipotente, é expressa no grau que ele deseja. (1Jo 4:8; Jó 12:13; 37:23) A ira de Deus não é fútil. Baseia-se plenamente num motivo suficiente, e sempre produz resultados. A ira de Jeová pode ser satisfeita, ou aplacada, apenas pela aplicação de Seus princípios. Por exemplo, em Israel, um assassino voluntário não podia ser resgatado. Apenas pelo derramamento de seu sangue podia a terra ser purificada e livrada do desagrado de Deus. (Núm 35:16-18, 30-33) Mas, fez-se um arranjo, à base de sacrifícios e dos serviços do sumo sacerdote, para satisfazer a justiça e apaziguar a ira do vingador de sangue ordenado por Deus, cujo coração talvez "ardesse". Tratava-se da provisão das cidades de refúgio. — De 19:4-7.

A ira de Jeová pode ser apaziguada ou satisfeita apenas quando a justiça é plenamente executada. A fúria de Deus é contra toda a injustiça. Ele não tolerará a injustiça nem isentará de punição quem a mereça. (Êx 34:7; Hab 1:13) Contudo, à base do sacrifício de Jesus Cristo, que levou sobre si as dores e o castigo que a humanidade com justiça merecia, a ira de Deus pode ser atenuada e desviada no caso daqueles que vêm a exercer fé. (Is 53:5) Por meio desse arranjo, Jeová Deus pode exibir a sua própria justiça, "para que [seja] justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem que tem fé em Jesus". (Ro 3:26) Deste modo, a justiça é plenamente satisfeita e, ainda assim, Deus tem uma base para estender misericórdia. Sobre todo aquele que é desobediente, o furor de Deus permanece. (Jo 3:36) Mas, quando a pessoa exerce fé, o sacrifício de Jesus Cristo salva-a do furor de Deus. — 1Te 1:10.

Meios de expressar a ira e as suas causas. A ira de Deus pode ser expressa de forma direta ou indireta. Ele pode usar suas leis que governam as coisas naturais, ou usar outras pessoas, como instrumentos, para expressar a Sua ira. Os que violam as leis morais de Deus ficam sob Seu furor e recebem em si mesmos "a plena recompensa, que se devia ao seu erro". Sofrem uma condição mental desaprovada, degradação, doenças, contendas e morte. (Ro 1:18, 24, 27-32) Quando a pessoa viola as leis do país que se harmonizam com as leis de Deus, e é punida pela autoridade governamental, isto é uma expressão indireta do furor de Deus contra ela. (Ro 13:1-4) Jesus Cristo é o executor principal da ira de Deus, e expressará por completo o furor de Deus, consumando Sua ira contra os iníquos. — Je 30:23, 24; Re 19:7-16, 19-21.

Atitudes e ações erradas para com os escolhidos de Deus provocarão a Sua ira. Os egípcios sofreram pragas por não permitirem que Israel adorasse a Jeová. (Sal 78:43-50) Miriã e Arão sentiram o calor da ira divina por causa de desrespeito pelo cargo de Moisés, designado por Deus. (Núm 12:9, 10) A ira de Jeová manifestou-se contra os juízes que oprimiam os humildes. (Is 10:1-4) Os que criam obstáculos à pregação das boas novas estão sujeitos ao furor de Deus. — 1Te 2:16.

Jeová sente-se provocado à ira pela adoração falsa, em especial quando seu povo professo se desvia para outros deuses. (Êx 32:7-10; Núm 25:3, 4; Jz 2:13, 14, 20; 1Rs 11:8, 9) Sua ira é provocada por coisas tais como imoralidade, supressão da verdade, impenitência, desobediência às boas novas, desprezo às suas palavras, zombar de seus profetas, cobiça, injúria, inveja, assassínio, rixas, fraude, disposição maldosa; também pelos que são cochichadores, maldizentes, odiadores de Deus, insolentes, soberbos, pretensiosos, inventores de coisas prejudiciais, desobedientes aos pais, pérfidos nos acordos, desapiedados, espíritas e mentirosos. Tudo isso e a prática de qualquer outra injustiça provoca a ira de Deus. — Col 3:5, 6; 2Te 1:8; Ro 1:18, 29-31; 2:5, 8; 2Cr 36:15, 16; Re 22:15.

A ira não é uma qualidade dominante. No entanto, Jeová Deus é "vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência". (Êx 34:6; Núm 14:18) Se a pessoa temer a Jeová e praticar a justiça, ela será tratada com misericórdia por Jeová, pois o Todo-Poderoso reconhece a imperfeição herdada do homem e mostra-lhe misericórdia por isso, também à base do sacrifício de Jesus. (Sal 103:13, 14; Gên 8:21; veja também Sof 2:2, 3.) Ele refreia a sua ira em favor de seu nome, e a fim de cumprir seu propósito para com o seu povo escolhido. (Is 48:9; Jl 2:13, 14) A ira de Jeová, com o tempo, se afasta daqueles que verdadeiramente o servem, que reconhecem seu pecado e se arrependem. (Is 12:1; Sal 30:5) Não é um Deus irado, mas sim um Deus feliz, não inacessível, mas sim agradável, pacífico e calmo para com os que se aproximam devidamente de sua presença. (1Ti 1:11; Sal 16:11; compare isso com Re 4:3.) Isto se contrasta com as características iradas, implacáveis e cruéis atribuídas aos deuses falsos dos pagãos, e representadas pelas imagens de tais deuses.

Que lugar tem a ira na vida de um servo de Deus?

A expressão de ira por parte do homem pode ser correta, se se basear em princípios. Alguém talvez expresse corretamente sua justa indignação. Ordena-se-nos que 'abominemos o que é iníquo'. (Ro 12:9) A Bíblia fornece numerosos exemplos de indignação justa. — Êx 11:8; 32:19; Núm 16:12-15; 1Sa 20:34; Ne 5:6; Est 7:7; veja também 2Sa 12:1-6.

No entanto, a ira do homem na maioria das vezes é injustificável, e, em muitos casos, não controlada. Não raro se baseia em motivos insuficientes e é expressa sem a devida consideração pelas consequências. Depois de Jeová ter poupado Nínive, Jonas sentiu-se desgostoso "e acendeu-se a sua ira". Ele não mostrou misericórdia e teve de ser corrigido por Jeová. (Jon 4:1-11) O Rei Uzias, de Judá, ficou enraivecido quando foi corrigido pelos sacerdotes de Jeová, e adiantou-se presunçosamente, pelo que foi punido. (2Cr 26:16-21) O orgulho impensado de Naamã provocou nele indignação e raiva, quase lhe custando a perda duma bênção por parte de Deus. — 2Rs 5:10-14.

Necessidade vital de ser controlada. A ira injustificada e descontrolada tem levado muitos a cometerem pecados maiores, até mesmo a atos de violência. "Acendeu-se muito a ira de Caim" e ele matou Abel. (Gên 4:5, 8) Esaú queria matar Jacó, que recebeu a bênção do pai deles. (Gên 27:41-45) Saul, em acessos de fúria, atirou lanças contra Davi e contra Jonatã. (1Sa 18:11; 19:10; 20:30-34) Os presentes na sinagoga em Nazaré, irritados pela pregação de Jesus, tentaram lançá-lo da beirada de um monte. (Lu 4:28, 29) Irritados líderes religiosos "arremeteram à uma contra" Estêvão, e o mataram a pedradas. — At 7:54-60.

A ira, mesmo quando justificada, se não for controlada, pode ser perigosa, produzindo maus resultados. Simeão e Levi tinham razões para se indignarem contra Siquém, por ter ele violentado a irmã deles, Diná, ainda que parte da culpa fosse dela. Mas, a indiscriminada matança dos siquemitas era uma penalidade excessiva. Assim, o pai deles, Jacó, denunciou a incontrolada ira deles, amaldiçoando-a. (Gên 34:1-31; 49:5-7) Quando estiver sob forte provocação, a pessoa deverá controlar a sua ira. As queixas e a rebeldia dos israelitas provocaram Moisés, o homem mais manso da Terra, a um incontrolável ato de ira em que deixou de santificar a Jeová, pelo que foi punido. — Núm 12:3; 20:10-12; Sal 106:32, 33.

Os acessos de ira são classificados junto com outras detestáveis obras da carne, tais como conduta desenfreada, idolatria, prática do espiritismo e bebedeiras. Tais coisas impedirão a pessoa de herdar o Reino de Deus. (Gál 5:19-21) Discussões iradas devem ser afastadas da congregação. Os homens que representam a congregação em oração devem estar isentos de sentimentos de ira e de má vontade. (1Ti 2:8) Ordena-se aos cristãos que sejam vagarosos em irar-se, sendo-lhes dito que o furor do homem não produz a justiça de Deus. (Tg 1:19, 20) São aconselhados a 'ceder lugar ao furor' e deixar a vingança a cargo de Jeová. (Ro 12:19) O homem dado à ira não pode ser usado como superintendente na congregação de Deus. — Tit 1:7.

Ao passo que a pessoa, ocasionalmente, talvez fique irada, e às vezes justificadamente, não deve deixar que isto se torne um pecado para ela por nutrir a ira ou manter-se encolerizada. Não deve deixar que o sol se ponha sobre ela em tal condição, pois, se o fizer, estará dando oportunidade a que o Diabo se aproveite dela. (Ef 4:26, 27) Especialmente se for um caso de ira entre irmãos cristãos, a pessoa deve dar os devidos passos para fazer as pazes ou resolver o assunto da maneira delineada por Deus. (Le 19:17, 18; Mt 5:23, 24; 18:15; Lu 17:3, 4) As Escrituras aconselham-nos a cuidar de nossas associações neste respeito, não tendo companheirismo com alguém dado à ira, ou a acessos de cólera, evitando assim um laço para a nossa alma. — Pr 22:24, 25.

Jesus Cristo, quando era homem na Terra, deu-nos o exemplo perfeito. Os registros de sua vida não apresentam uma ocasião sequer em que tenha tido um acesso de ira incontrolável, ou em que permitisse que o desrespeito à lei, a rebeldia e o fustigamento por parte dos inimigos de Deus transtornassem seu espírito e o fizessem refletir isso nos seus tratos com seus seguidores ou outros. Certa vez, ele ficou "profundamente contristado" diante da insensibilidade do coração dos fariseus e encarou-os com indignação. A atitude que tomou a seguir foi realizar uma cura. (Mr 3:5) Quando ele, noutra ocasião, expulsou os que maculavam o templo de Deus, bem como violavam a Lei de Moisés por transformar a casa de Jeová numa casa de comércio, isso não se deu num acesso de ira incontrolável, injustificável. Em vez disso, as Escrituras mostram que se tratava de zelo corretamente dirigido para com a casa de Jeová. — Jo 2:13-17.

Evitar os efeitos prejudiciais. A ira não só apresenta um efeito adverso sobre a nossa saúde espiritual, mas também produz efeitos profundos sobre o organismo físico. Pode provocar o aumento da pressão sanguínea, alterações arteriais, problemas respiratórios, transtornos hepáticos, mudanças na secreção da vesícula biliar e efeitos sobre o pâncreas. A ira e a raiva, como fortes emoções, têm sido alistadas pelos médicos como contribuindo, agravando ou até mesmo provocando doenças tais como asma, afecções oculares, moléstias da pele, urticária, úlceras e problemas dentários e digestivos. A raiva e o furor podem transtornar os processos de raciocínio, de modo que a pessoa não consegue tirar conclusões lógicas, nem exercer o bom juízo. O efeito posterior dum acesso de raiva é, não raro, um período de extrema depressão mental. Por conseguinte, é sábio, não só em sentido religioso, mas também em sentido físico, controlar a ira e buscar a paz e o amor. — Pr 14:29, 30; Ro 14:19; Tg 3:17; 1Pe 3:11.

Segundo as Escrituras, o tempo do fim é uma época de ira e de fúria, as nações irritando-se por Jeová assumir seu poder para reinar, e o Diabo ser lançado à Terra, "tendo grande ira, sabendo que ele tem um curto período de tempo". (Re 11:17, 18; 12:10-12) Sob tais condições estrênuas, o cristão fará bem em controlar seu espírito, evitando a destrutiva emoção da ira. — Pr 14:29; Ec 7:9.

IRA, II [Jumento Adulto].

1. Jairita alistado entre os principais funcionários do Rei Davi como "sacerdote de Davi". (2Sa 20:26) Ira talvez fosse descendente do Jair mencionado em Números 32:41, e, assim, neste caso, a designação "sacerdote" talvez signifique "principal ministro", "príncipe". Não há evidência bíblica de que os jairitas fossem levitas. Contudo, se os dizeres na Pesito siríaca forem corretos, Ira talvez tenha sido um sacerdote da cidade levita de Jatir (Jathir). — Veja 2Sa 8:18; 1Cr 6:57; 18:17.

2. Filho de Iques, o tecoíta; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 2Sa 23:24, 26; 1Cr 11:26, 28.

3. Itrita; outro dos poderosos do Rei Davi. — 2Sa 23:38; 1Cr 11:40.

IRADE. Neto de Caim; antepassado do bígamo Lameque, e de Jabal e Tubalcaim. — Gên 4:17-23.

IRÃO [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "jumento adulto"]. Um xeque ou maioral de Esaú (Edom). — Gên 36:43; 1Cr 1:54.

IRI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "jumento adulto"]. Filho de Bela; cabeça paternal e homem valente e poderoso de Benjamim. (1Cr 7:7) Iri é provavelmente o mesmo que o Ir de 1 Crônicas 7:12.

IRIJÁ [Jah Vê]. "Filho de Selemias, filho de Hananias"; o oficial encarregado do Portão de Benjamim em Jerusalém, que prendeu Jeremias sob a acusação falsa de tentar desertar para os babilônios. — Je 37:13, 14.

IRMÃ. Nas Escrituras, este termo se aplica tanto a irmãs germanas como a meias-irmãs, as que tinham o mesmo pai, mas diferente mãe (Gên 34:1, 27; 1Cr 3:1-9), ou a mesma mãe, mas diferente pai, como no caso das irmãs de Jesus. — Mt 13:55, 56; Mr 6:3.

Alguns dos filhos de Adão obviamente se casaram com suas irmãs, visto que toda a humanidade descendeu de Adão e Eva. (Gên 3:20; 5:4) Eva, esposa de Adão, como 'osso de seus ossos e carne de sua carne', era um parente ainda mais próximo que uma irmã. (Gên 2:22-24) Não havia nenhum estigma relacionado com o casamento com irmãs ou meias-irmãs. O relato mostra que mais de 2.000 anos depois, Abraão casou-se com Sara, sua meia-irmã. (Gên 20:2, 12) A Lei mosaica, uns 430 anos depois, porém, proibia tais uniões como sendo incestuosas. (Le 18:9, 11; 20:17) Sem dúvida, à medida que a raça humana se deteriorava, distanciando-se cada vez mais da perfeição original de Adão, tornou-se prejudicial que parentes próximos se casassem entre si.

"Irmã", em seu emprego mais amplo, incluía concidadãs duma mesma nação. (Núm 25:17, 18) Nações ou cidades que tinham um íntimo relacionamento ou que mantinham práticas morais similares eram assemelhadas a irmãs. — Je 3:7-10; Ez 16:46, 48, 49, 55; 23:32, 33.

A palavra hebraica para irmã ('a·hhóhth) é traduzida "o(a) outro(a)" quando descreve a colocação de objetos em relação com peças correspondentes no tabernáculo e nas visões de Ezequiel. — Êx 26:3, 5, 6, 17; Ez 1:9, 23; 3:13.

Na Congregação Cristã. Jesus ensinou que a relação espiritual tem precedência sobre o parentesco carnal. As mulheres que faziam a vontade de seu Pai eram 'irmãs' que mereciam mais consideração do que os simples parentes carnais. (Mt 12:50; Mr 3:34, 35) Alguém disposto a cortar vínculos terrenos, se necessário, pela causa do Reino, terá "cem vezes mais" "irmãs" e outros "parentes" agora, além da "vida eterna" no futuro. (Mt 19:29; Mr 10:29, 30; Lu 14:26) As mulheres na congregação cristã são chamadas de irmãs, em sentido espiritual. — Ro 16:1; 1Co 7:15; 9:5; Tg 2:15.

Uso Figurado. O apego à sabedoria é incentivado pelo sábio escritor Salomão, ao acentuar a importância dos mandamentos de Jeová. "Dize à sabedoria: 'Tu és minha irmã'; e que chames a própria compreensão de 'parenta'." — Pr 7:4.

IRMÃO. Varão que tem o mesmo genitor ou os mesmos pais que outrem; em hebraico, 'ahh, e no grego, a·del·fós. Irmãos germanos mencionados na Bíblia, com o mesmo pai e a mesma mãe, incluem Caim e Abel, filhos de Adão e Eva (Gên 4:1, 2; 1Jo 3:12); Jacó e Esaú, filhos gêmeos de Isaque e Rebeca (Gên 25:24-26); Tiago e João, filhos de Zebedeu e sua esposa (Mt 4:21; 27:56; compare isso com Jz 8:19). Moisés e Arão eram irmãos de Miriã (Núm 26:59); Lázaro era irmão de Marta e Maria. (Jo 11:1, 19) "Irmãos" designa também meios-irmãos, os que têm o mesmo pai mas diferente mãe, como no caso dos 12 filhos de Jacó com quatro mulheres diferentes (Gên 35:22-26; 37:4; 42:3, 4, 13); também, prole da mesma mãe mas de pai diferente, como no caso de Jesus e seus irmãos, e, possivelmente, no parentesco de Davi com suas irmãs. — Mt 13:55; 1Cr 2:13-16; 2Sa 17:25; veja "Irmãos de Jesus", mais adiante.

O termo "irmão", contudo, não se limitava à relação carnal imediata. Abraão e Labão se referiram a seus sobrinhos Ló e Jacó respectivamente como irmãos. (Gên 11:27; 13:8; 14:14, 16; 29:10, 12, 15; compare isso com Le 10:4.) Membros da mesma tribo em Israel mantinham uma relação fraternal (2Sa 19:12, 13; Núm 8:26), e, em sentido ainda maior, os da inteira nação de Israel eram irmãos, prole, por assim dizer, dum único pai comum, Jacó, e estavam unidos na adoração do mesmo Deus, Jeová. (Êx 2:11; De 15:12; Mt 5:47; At 3:17, 22; 7:23; Ro 9:3) Mesmo os edomitas, que descenderam de Abraão através do irmão gêmeo de Jacó, Esaú, sendo portanto aparentados com Israel, eram chamados de irmãos. (Núm 20:14) Os reinos reunificados de Judá e de Israel foram chamados de "fraternidade" (hebr.: 'a·hhawáh). — Za 11:14.

"Irmão" é também aplicado aos que estão unidos numa causa geral, com propósitos e objetivos similares. Por exemplo, o Rei Hirão, de Tiro, chamou o Rei Salomão de irmão, não simplesmente porque ele era igual em categoria e em posição mas também talvez devido a interesses mútuos em suprir madeiras e outros itens para o templo. (1Rs 9:13; 5:1-12) "Eis que quão bom e quão agradável é irmãos morarem juntos em união!", escreveu Davi, dando a entender que não são apenas relações sanguíneas que contribuem para a paz e a união entre irmãos carnais. (Sal 133:1) De fato, afeição e interesses mútuos, não vínculos familiares, levaram Davi a chamar Jonatã de seu irmão. (2Sa 1:26) Companheiros com índole e disposição semelhantes, mesmo se forem más, são corretamente chamados de irmãos. — Pr 18:9.

Na sociedade patriarcal e sob a Lei mosaica, certos privilégios e obrigações eram assumidos por irmãos carnais. Com a morte do pai, o irmão mais velho, o primogênito, recebia um quinhão duplo da herança da família e a responsabilidade de atuar como cabeça da família. O irmão carnal era o primeiro na sucessão pelo direito de recompra, de casamento levirato e de vingar o sangue. (Le 25:48, 49; De 25:5) Relações incestuosas entre irmão e irmã foram estritamente proibidas pela Lei mosaica. — Le 18:9; De 27:22.

Na congregação cristã, os membros desfrutam duma relação espiritual semelhante à de irmãos. Jesus chamou seus discípulos de irmãos. (Mt 25:40; 28:10; Jo 20:17) Ele frisou fortemente essa relação, dizendo: "Todo aquele que faz a vontade de meu Pai . . . , este é meu irmão, e minha irmã e minha mãe." (Mt 12:48-50) Assim, parentes consanguíneos devem ser amados menos do que Cristo, e deixados para trás por sua causa, se necessário. (Mt 10:37; 19:29; Lu 14:26) Deveras, irmão talvez entregue irmão à morte. (Mr 13:12) O termo "irmão" abrange mais do que os associados imediatos de Jesus, incluindo a inteira congregação de crentes (Mt 23:8; He 2:17), a "associação inteira dos irmãos" "que têm a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus". (1Pe 2:17; 5:9; Re 19:10) Tal associação de irmãos espirituais mostra "amor fraternal" na mais plena medida. — Ro 12:10; He 13:1.

Pedro, em Pentecostes, dirigiu-se àqueles de terras distantes, incluindo prosélitos, como "irmãos". (At 2:8-10, 29, 37) Às vezes, crentes cristãos, varões, eram chamados de "irmãos" e as mulheres de "irmãs" (1Co 7:14, 15), mas, em geral, "irmãos" era a saudação aceita para grupos mistos e não se restringia a varões. (At 1:15; Ro 1:13; 1Te 1:4) O termo é usado nesse sentido em todas as cartas cristãs inspiradas, com exceção de três (Tito, 2 João, Judas), e nas obras de primitivos escritores eclesiásticos. Os apóstolos advertiram contra "falsos irmãos" que se infiltraram nas congregações. — 2Co 11:26; Gál 2:4.

Irmãos de Jesus. Os quatro Evangelhos, os Atos dos Apóstolos e duas das cartas de Paulo mencionam "os irmãos do Senhor", "o irmão do Senhor", "seus irmãos", "suas irmãs", mencionando por nome quatro dos "irmãos": Tiago, José, Simão e Judas. (Mt 12:46; 13:55, 56; Mr 3:31; Lu 8:19; Jo 2:12; At 1:14; 1Co 9:5; Gál 1:19) A maioria dos peritos bíblicos aceita a evidência cumulativa de que Jesus tinha pelo menos quatro irmãos e duas irmãs, e que todos eram prole de José e Maria por meios naturais, após o milagroso nascimento de Jesus.

As arbitrárias noções de que esses irmãos de Jesus eram filhos de José de um casamento anterior, ou de um casamento levirato com a cunhada de José, têm de ser classificadas como fictícias, visto que não existe confirmação factual, nem mesmo uma insinuação, nesse sentido nas Escrituras. A afirmação de que "irmão" (a·del·fós) aqui significa "primo" (a·ne·psi·ós) é uma assertiva teorética, uma invenção creditada a Jerônimo e só remonta a 383 EC. Jerônimo não só deixa de citar qualquer apoio em favor de sua recém-descoberta hipótese, mas, em escritos posteriores, ele vacila em suas opiniões e até mesmo expressa dúvidas a respeito de sua "teoria de primo". J. B. Lightfoot diz que "São Jerônimo não pleiteou autoridade tradicional para sua teoria, e que, por conseguinte, a evidência em favor dela deve ser procurada apenas nas Escrituras. Examinei a evidência bíblica e a . . . combinação de dificuldades . . . mais do que contrabalança esses argumentos secundários em seu favor, e, de fato, deve levar à sua rejeição". — St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (Epístola de São Paulo aos Gálatas) Londres, 1874, p. 258.

Nas Escrituras Gregas, quando o relato se refere a um sobrinho ou a um primo, não se usa a·del·fós. Em vez disso, explica-se o parentesco, como "o filho da irmã de Paulo", ou, "Marcos, primo [a·ne·psi·ós] de Barnabé". (At 23:16; Col 4:10) Em Lucas 21:16 ocorrem as duas palavras gregas, syg·ge·nón (parentes, tais como primos) e a·del·fón (irmãos), mostrando que esses termos não são usados inespecífica ou indiscriminadamente nas Escrituras Gregas.

Quando se diz que, durante o ministério de Jesus, "seus irmãos, de fato, não estavam exercendo fé nele", isso certamente elimina a hipótese de serem eles seus irmãos em sentido espiritual. (Jo 7:3-5) Jesus contrastou esses irmãos carnais com seus discípulos, que criam nele e eram seus irmãos espirituais. (Mt 12:46-50; Mr 3:31-35; Lu 8:19-21) Esta falta de fé da parte de seus irmãos carnais impede que eles sejam identificados com os apóstolos que têm o mesmo nome: Tiago, Simão, Judas; eles são explicitamente distinguidos dos discípulos de Jesus. — Jo 2:12.

A relação que esses irmãos carnais de Jesus tinham com sua mãe Maria indica também que eles eram filhos dela, em vez de apenas parentes mais distantes. Eles são, em geral, mencionados junto com ela. Declarações no sentido de que Jesus era o "primogênito" de Maria (Lu 2:7), e que José "não teve relações com ela até ela ter dado à luz um filho", apoiam também o conceito de que José e Maria tiveram outros filhos. (Mt 1:25) Mesmo os vizinhos nazarenos reconheciam e identificavam Jesus como "irmão de Tiago, e José, e Judas, e Simão", acrescentando: "E não estão as suas irmãs aqui conosco?" — Mr 6:3.

À luz desses textos, faz-se a pergunta: Por que, então, devia Jesus, pouco antes de sua morte, confiar o cuidado de sua mãe Maria ao apóstolo João em vez de a seus irmãos carnais? (Jo 19:26, 27) Evidentemente porque o primo de Jesus, o apóstolo João, era um homem que provara a sua fé, ele era o discípulo a quem Jesus tanto amava, e essa relação espiritual transcendia a da carne; de fato, não há indicação de que seus irmãos carnais fossem, até então, discípulos de Jesus.

Depois da ressurreição de Jesus, seus irmãos carnais mudaram sua atitude de dúvida, pois estavam presentes com sua mãe e os apóstolos quando reunidos para oração após a ascensão de Jesus. (At 1:14) Isto sugere também que eles estavam presentes por ocasião do derramamento do espírito santo, em Pentecostes. Tiago, irmão de Jesus, mencionado com destaque entre os anciãos do corpo governante em Jerusalém, escreveu a carta que leva seu nome. (At 12:17; 15:13; 21:18; Gál 1:19; Tg 1:1) O irmão de Jesus, Judas, escreveu o livro que leva o seu nome. (Ju 1, 17) Paulo indica que pelo menos alguns dos irmãos de Jesus eram casados. — 1Co 9:5.

IR-NAÁS [Cidade de Naás]. Aparentemente, um lugar fundado, ou estabelecido, por Teína, de Judá. (1Cr 4:1, 12) A localização exata de Ir-Naás é incerta. Alguns eruditos defendem como possível identificação a Deir Nahhas, cerca de 20 km ao ONO de Hébron.

IROM. Uma das cidades fortificadas no território de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35, 38) A sua localização é incerta, mas tem sido hipoteticamente identificada com a atual Yaroun, uns 30 km ao SO de Dã, na Galileia.

IRPEEL [Que Deus Cure; Deus Curou]. Cidade de Benjamim. (Jos 18:21, 27) Alguns sugerem como possível localização Rafat, um vilarejo a uns 10 km ao NO de Jerusalém.

IR-SEMES [Cidade do Sol]. Pequena cidade na fronteira de Dã, alistada entre Estaol e Saalabim, em Josué 19:41, 42. Talvez seja a mesma que Bete-Semes de Josué 15:10. Se assim for, ela foi mais tarde ocupada pela tribo de Judá e desta tribo foi designada como uma das 48 cidades levitas. — Jos 21:16; 1Cr 6:59; Núm 35:6, 7; veja BETE-SEMES N.º 1.

IRU [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "jumento adulto"]. O primeiro filho mencionado de Calebe, o espia; da tribo de Judá. (1Cr 4:15) Alguns eruditos pensam que o nome era realmente Ir e que o "u" era apenas a conjunção hebraica e.

ISABEL. Veja ELISABETE.

ISAÍAS [Salvação de Jeová]. Profeta, filho de Amoz (não o profeta Amós). Serviu em Judá e em Jerusalém nos dias dos reis Uzias, Jotão, Acaz e Ezequias, de Judá. (Is 1:1) Os reis Peca e Oseias governavam o reino setentrional de Israel, que findou em 740 AEC, durante a época do serviço profético de Isaías. Miqueias, Oseias e Odede eram profetas contemporâneos seus. Isaías, evidentemente, começou a profetizar depois de Oseias, e antes de Miqueias. — 2Cr 28:9; Os 1:1; Miq 1:1.

Durante o serviço profético prestado por Isaías a Judá, notadamente nos dias do Rei Acaz, o reino estava numa condição moral deplorável. Estava cheio de revolta, tanto da parte de príncipes como do povo, e, aos olhos de Jeová, a nação estava doente no coração e na cabeça. Os governantes foram chamados de "ditadores de Sodoma", e o povo foi assemelhado ao "povo de Gomorra". (Is 1:2-10)

Isaías foi informado de antemão de que os ouvidos das pessoas não seriam receptivos. Jeová disse que essa situação persistiria até que a nação fosse arruinada, e que apenas "um décimo", "uma descendência santa", seria deixada, como o toco duma árvore maciça. A obra profética de Isaías deve ter confortado e fortalecido a fé daquele pequeno número, ainda que os demais da nação se recusassem a dar ouvidos. — Is 6:1-13.

Embora se concentrasse em Judá, Isaías também declarou profecias a respeito de Israel e das nações por todo o redor, uma vez que tinham que ver com a situação e a história de Judá. Ele exerceu o cargo profético por longo período, iniciando por volta de 778 AEC, na época da morte do Rei Uzias, ou possivelmente antes, e continuando até algum tempo depois do 14.º ano do reinado de Ezequias (732 AEC). — Is 36:1, 2; 37:37, 38.

Família de Isaías. Isaías era casado. Sua esposa é chamada de "profetisa" (Is 8:3), que parece significar mais do que apenas ser esposa dum profeta. Evidentemente, assim como Débora, da época dos juízes, e Hulda, no reinado de Josias, ela recebera de Jeová uma designação profética. — Jz 4:4; 2Rs 22:14.

A Bíblia cita nominalmente dois filhos de Isaías, que lhe foram dados como "sinais e como milagres em Israel". (Is 8:18) Sear-Jasube já tinha idade suficiente, nos dias de Acaz, para acompanhar seu pai quando este proferiu uma mensagem àquele rei. O nome Sear-Jasube significa "Um Mero Restante (os Remanescentes) Retornará". Este nome era profético no sentido de que, tão certamente quanto um filho nascido a Isaías recebera tal nome, o reino de Judá seria, no devido tempo, derrubado, e apenas um mero restante retornaria depois dum período de exílio. (Is 7:3; 10:20-23) Este retorno de um pequeno restante ocorreu em 537 AEC, quando o Rei Ciro, da Pérsia, expediu um decreto liberando-os de Babilônia, após um exílio de 70 anos. — 2Cr 36:22, 23; Esd 1:1; 2:1, 2.

Outro filho de Isaías recebeu nome antes de sua concepção, e esse nome foi escrito numa tábua e atestado por testemunhas fidedignas. Aparentemente, o assunto foi mantido em sigilo até depois do nascimento desse filho, quando as testemunhas podiam apresentar-se e atestar que o profeta predissera tal nascimento, desta feita provando que o assunto tinha significado profético. O nome dado ao menino, por ordem de Deus, foi Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz, que significa "Apressa-te, ó Despojo! Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem; ou: Apressando-se ao Despojo, Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem." Foi dito que, antes que este filho soubesse chamar: "Meu pai!", e "Minha mãe!", seria removida a ameaça que pairava sobre Judá, por parte da conspiração da Síria e do reino de dez tribos de Israel. — Is 8:1-4.

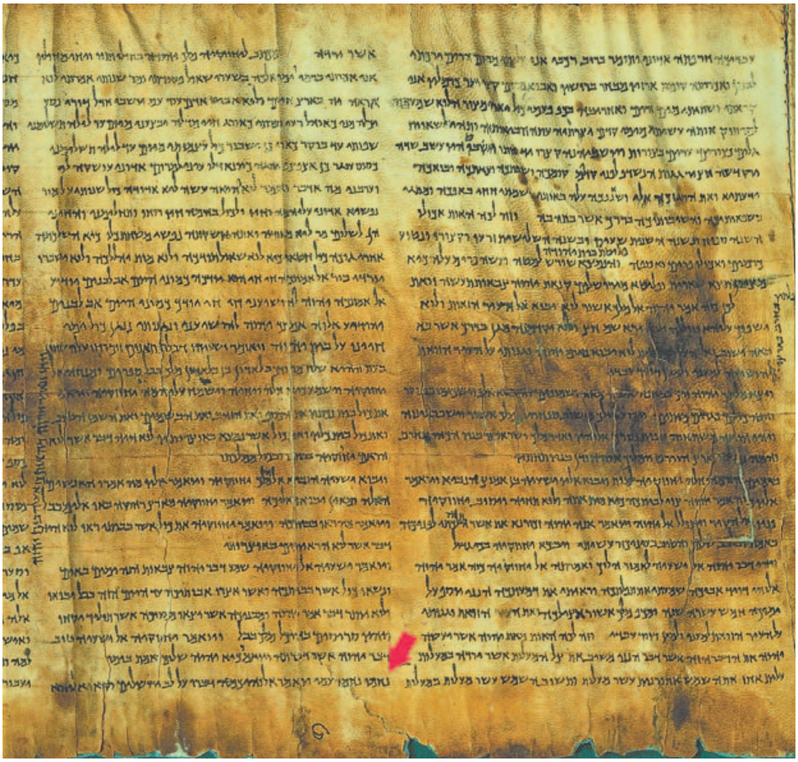
A profecia indicava que logo viria o alívio para Judá; o alívio deveras veio quando a Assíria interveio na campanha contra Judá, movida pelo Rei Rezim, da Síria, e pelo Rei Peca, de Israel. Os assírios capturaram Damasco, e, mais tarde, em 740 AEC, despojaram e destruíram o reino de Israel, cumprindo plenamente o significado profético do nome do menino. (2Rs 16:5-9; 17:1-6) No entanto, em vez de confiar em Jeová, o Rei Acaz tentou afastar a ameaça da Síria e de Israel subornando o rei da Assíria, para obter a proteção deste. Por isso, Jeová permitiu que a Assíria se tornasse uma grande ameaça para Judá e realmente a invadisse em grandes números, chegando até a própria Jerusalém, conforme Isaías avisara. — Is 7:17-20.

Isaías falou muitas vezes de "sinais" que Jeová daria, entre estes estando seus dois filhos e, num caso, o próprio Isaías. Jeová ordenou-lhe que andasse de uma parte para a outra despido e descalço por três anos, como sinal e portento contra o Egito e contra a Etiópia, significando que seriam levados cativos pelo rei da Assíria. — Is 20:1-6; compare isso com Is 7:11, 14; 19:20; 37:30; 38:7, 22; 55:13; 66:19.

Profecias sobre o Exílio e a Restauração. Isaías teve também o privilégio de predizer que a Assíria não seria a nação que destronaria os reis de Judá e destruiria Jerusalém, mas que isto seria feito por Babilônia. (Is 39:6, 7) Na ocasião em que a Assíria inundara Judá "até o pescoço", Isaías transmitiu confortadora mensagem ao Rei Ezequias, de que as forças assírias não conseguiriam penetrar na cidade. (Is 8:7, 8) Jeová manteve a Sua palavra enviando um anjo para destruir 185.000 dos poderosos homens e líderes do exército assírio, destarte livrando Jerusalém. — 2Cr 32:21.

O que, sem dúvida, proporcionou a Isaías a maior alegria foi o privilégio concedido a ele por Jeová de falar e de escrever muitas profecias de restauração de sua amada Jerusalém. Embora Jeová permitisse que o povo fosse para o exílio em Babilônia devido à sua rebelião e revolta contra Ele, Jeová, com o tempo, julgaria Babilônia, porque ela agiu de forma maldosa, e tencionava reter o povo de Deus no cativeiro para sempre. Bom número das profecias de Isaías são dedicadas ao julgamento de Deus sobre Babilônia, e à ruína desolada que ela se tornaria, para jamais ser reconstruída. — Is 45:1, 2; caps. 13, 14, 46-48.

As profecias de restauração encontradas em todo o livro de Isaías glorificam a benignidade



Isaías 37:24–40:2 conforme aparece no Rolo do Mar Morto. O que agora é numerado como capítulo 40 de Isaías é aqui indicado como começando na última linha da coluna em que termina o capítulo 39.

imerecida e a misericórdia de Jeová para com seu povo, e para com toda a humanidade. Predisseram o tempo em que Jerusalém seria elevada a uma nova posição junto a Jeová, uma glória que seria vista por todas as nações, e ela seria uma bênção para todas as nações. Jerusalém foi deveras restaurada e reconstruída, e foi abençoada com a presença do Messias, que "lançou luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas". (2Ti 1:10) A restauração de Jerusalém também teria um futuro cumprimento, maior e mais grandioso. — Ro 15:4; 1Co 10:11; Gál 4:25, 26.

Efeitos do Trabalho de Isaías. Isaías escreveu não apenas o livro bíblico que leva seu nome, mas, evidentemente, pelo menos um livro histórico, o dos assuntos do Rei Uzias, que, sem dúvida, fazia parte dos registros oficiais daquela nação. (2Cr 26:22) Ao executar fielmente o trabalho profético que Jeová lhe confiara, Isaías exerceu forte influência sobre a história daquela nação, em especial em resultado dos conselhos e da orientação que deu ao Rei Ezequias. Muitas das profecias de Isaías têm também um cumprimento maior com relação ao Messias e seu Reino. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs fazem-se muitas citações do livro de Isaías, ou alusões a ele. Não raro, os escritores cristãos aplicam as profecias de Isaías a Jesus Cristo, ou apontam para um cumprimento das profecias de Isaías nos dias deles.

ISAÍAS, LIVRO DE. O livro de Isaías exalta de forma notável a Jeová como "o Santo de Israel", aplicando esta expressão a Ele num total de 25 vezes. O livro também aponta com inequívoca clareza o Messias ou Ungido de Jeová, por meio de quem viria a libertação do povo de Deus.

Já o primeiro versículo do livro de Isaías identifica seu conteúdo como "a visão de Isaías, filho de Amoz, que ele observou referente a Judá e Jerusalém". Assim, embora o livro contenha declarações proféticas concernentes a muitas nações, elas não devem ser encaradas como coleção de pronunciamentos desconexos relacionados a essas nações. Em vez disso, constituem uma série de profecias que tiveram um efeito direto sobre Judá e Jerusalém.

Fundo Histórico. Isaías 1:1 nos informa de que Isaías visionou essas coisas nos dias de Uzias, Jotão, Acaz e Ezequias, reis de Judá. Era um período de severa tensão internacional em que as falsas atitudes religiosas causavam um profundo efeito sobre o povo de Judá. Perto do começo da carreira de Isaías, o Rei Uzias morreu leproso por causa de sua presunção em assumir deveres sacerdotais. (2Cr 26:16, 19-21) Relata-se que durante o reinado do filho de Uzias, Jotão, ao passo que o rei fazia o que era correto, "o povo ainda agia ruinosamente". — 2Cr 27:2; 2Rs 15:34.

A seguir veio o Rei Acaz, que, por 16 anos, deu mau exemplo para a nação, praticando a adoração de Baal com seus rituais de sacrifícios humanos. Havia "grande infidelidade para com Jeová". (2Cr 28:1-4, 19) Foi durante esse período que os reis aliados da Síria e de Israel sitiaram Jerusalém, de modo que Acaz, desconsiderando o conselho do profeta Isaías, recorreu a Tiglate-Pileser III, rei da Assíria, em busca de ajuda militar. (2Rs 16:5-8; Is 7:1-12) Com isso, Acaz 'fez da carne o seu braço, desviando seu coração de Jeová'. (Je 17:5) A Assíria concordou em fazer uma aliança, mas, naturalmente, interessava-se principalmente em expandir seu próprio poder. O exército assírio capturou Damasco da Síria e, aparentemente, levou ao exílio os habitantes do apóstata religioso Israel que moravam ao L do Jordão. — 1Cr 5:26.

Mais tarde, quando Samaria deixou de pagar tributo, ela também foi sitiada e seus habitantes foram deportados. (2Rs 16:9; 17:4-6; 18:9-12) Este foi o fim do reino das dez tribos e deixou Judá cercado por todos os lados de nações gentias. Mais tarde, os governantes assírios prosseguiram com operações militares no O, atacando cidades de Judá e de nações vizinhas. Senaqueribe até mesmo exigiu a capitulação da própria Jerusalém. Mas, sob o reinado de Ezequias, a situação ali havia mudado. Ezequias confiou em Jeová, e Jeová mostrou estar com ele. — 2Rs 18:5-7; Is caps. 36, 37.

Isaías assumiu o seu trabalho como profeta durante o reinado de Uzias, que começou a governar em 829 AEC, e continuou no reinado de Ezequias,

DESTAQUES DE ISAÍAS

Profecias para estimular os servos de Jeová a temer a Ele, não às nações circunvizinhas, e recorrer a ele, o verdadeiro Deus, em busca de livramento, com plena confiança nas suas promessas de salvação e restauração.

Dirigidas a Judá e a Jerusalém por Isaías durante os anos que antecederam aos fracassados esforços de Senaqueribe contra Jerusalém, em 732 AEC, e possivelmente um bom tempo depois.

A culpa de Judá e de Jerusalém; a comissão de Isaías. (1:1–6:13)

- Jeová não encara com favor os sacrifícios do povo culpado de opressão, injustiças e derramamento de sangue.
- Ao passo que será executado o julgamento contra os infiéis, com o tempo o monte da casa de Jeová será enaltecido e muitos povos voltar-se-ão para Ele.
- Devido à desobediência de Judá, Jeová removerá os essenciais para sustentar a vida (pão e água) e a base para estabilidade social.
- Mulheres arrogantes, de roupas vistosas, ver-se-ão obrigadas a usar as vestes de cativos.
- Israel, como vinhedo, falhou em produzir frutos de retidão e justiça.
- Purificados os lábios de Isaías; voluntariamente aceita a comissão de profeta, de ir a pessoas não receptíveis.

Ameaças de invasões inimigas e promessa de livramento. (7:1–12:6)

- Esforço siro-israelita para destronar Acaz falhará; é dado o sinal confirmatório do nascimento de Emanuel.
- O filho de Isaías, Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz, servirá como sinal de que Damasco e Samaria serão devastadas pela Assíria antes de o menino poder dizer "Meu pai!" e "Minha mãe!".
- Alívio duradouro a vir por meio do Príncipe da Paz.
- A Assíria, vara da ira de Jeová, será punida por insolência; Jerusalém será livrada.
- Rebento do tronco de Jessé tornar-se-á governante, terá o espírito de Deus, reinará com justiça.

Pronúncias de desolações internacionais. (13:1–23:18)

- Babilônia será desolada, seu "rei" lançado no Seol.
- O jugo da Assíria será retirado, raiz filisteia morrerá de fome, Moabe será desolado e Damasco reduzida a ruínas.
- Egípcios e etíopes serão humilhados pelos assírios e levados ao exílio.
- Elão e Média participarão em derrubar Babilônia.
- Tiro será rebaixada, esquecida por 70 anos.

Predição de salvação por Jeová. (24:1–35:10)

- Jeová dará um grande banquete para todos os povos e tragará a morte para sempre.
- A salvação por Jeová será assunto de um cântico.
- Um rei reinará em favor da justiça, e príncipes em favor da retidão; paz e segurança por tempo indefinido.
- Edom será desolado; Sião se regozijará sobre a sua própria restauração.

Jeová liberta da Assíria; predito o exílio babilônico. (36:1–39:8)

- Os assírios invadem Judá; Jeová salva Jerusalém em resposta à oração de Ezequias; 185.000 assírios são mortos.
- Ezequias mostra os tesouros à delegação babilônica; Isaías anuncia o vindouro exílio à Babilônia.

Livramento do exílio em Babilônia pelo Deus verdadeiro, restauração de Sião, Messias virá. (40:1–66:24)

- Jerusalém será restaurada pelo Todo-Sábio, Todo-Poderoso Criador.
- Restauração de seu povo vindicará Jeová como o único Deus, o único que pode predizer o futuro, para vergonha dos deuses sem vida criados pelo homem.
- A queda de Babilônia perante Ciro pavimentará o caminho para a reconstrução de Jerusalém.
- Sião devastada será feita igual ao jardim de Jeová.
- O servo de Jeová, o Messias, morrerá pelas transgressões de outros.
- A estéril Sião terá muitos filhos, e nenhuma arma será bem-sucedida contra ela.
- Jeová convida seu povo a regozijar-se na criação de novos céus e uma nova terra, mas os transgressores iníquos não terão participação.

que findou por volta de 717 AEC. Isaías, capítulo 6, versículo 1, refere-se ao "ano em que morreu o Rei Uzias" (c. 778 AEC) como o tempo em que Isaías recebeu a missão de Jeová, registrada nesse capítulo; embora talvez tenha registrado a informação precedente antes disso. Daí, no capítulo 36, versículo 1, faz-se referência ao "décimo quarto ano do Rei Ezequias" (732 AEC), quando Senaqueribe enviou um exército contra Jerusalém e foi rechaçado. Além de fornecer o relato sobre o ameaçado cerco e sobre o livramento de Jerusalém, Isaías fala da volta de Senaqueribe a Nínive e seu assassinato. (Is 37:36-38) Se esse pequeno pormenor histórico foi escrito por Isaías, não sendo uma inserção posterior feita por outra mão, isso pode indicar que Isaías profetizou por bastante tempo depois do 14.º ano de Ezequias. Os registros cronológicos assírios e babilônicos (embora a sua confiabilidade seja questionável), parecem indicar que Senaqueribe governou por cerca de 20 anos após a sua campanha contra Jerusalém. A tradição judaica, que também pode não ser confiável, diz que Isaías foi serrado em pedaços, às ordens do Rei Manassés. (Se Paulo se referia a isso, em Hebreus 11:37, como alguns creem, não foi provado.) — Is 1:1.

Há também algumas outras referências que ajudam a datar o conteúdo de trechos específicos do livro de Isaías. Por exemplo, o capítulo 7, versículo 1, diz que Peca, rei de Israel, veio para guerrear contra Jerusalém nos dias do Rei Acaz. Embora Acaz governasse de 761 a 746 AEC, o reinado de Peca findou por volta de 758 AEC; assim, o incidente deve ter ocorrido antes desse ano. Ademais, Isaías 14:28 data uma pronúncia concernente à Filístia "no ano em que morreu o Rei Acaz", que seria

Alguns dos Muitos Eventos Anteriores ao Primeiro Século EC Que Cumpriram Profecias de Isaías.

Texto de Isaías
1:26-30; 24:1-6; 39:6, 7	Jerusalém destruída; exílio a Babilônia.
43:14; 44:26-28	Livramento do exílio; Jerusalém restaurada; Ciro, instrumento usado por Jeová para realizar isso.
23:1, 8, 13, 14	Cidade de Tiro continental destruída pelos caldeus sob Nabucodonosor.

Cumprimentos Maiores Agora e no Futuro

É óbvio, da leitura da Bíblia, que muitas das profecias de Isaías têm mais de um cumprimento e que grande parte do livro está tendo e ainda terá seu cumprimento final, maior. Só no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) há muitas citações das profecias de Isaías, ou alusões a elas, algumas das quais alistamos a seguir:

Texto de Isaías		Revelação
21:9	Babilônia caiu!	18:2
40:10	Jeová vem com recompensa.	22:12
47:5, 7-9	Babilônia, meretriz e amante de reinos, sofre calamidade.	17:1, 2, 18; 18:7
48:20	Ordena-se ao povo de Deus que saia de Babilônia.	18:4
60:1, 3, 5, 11	Nova Jerusalém assemelhada à antiga Jerusalém em seu estado restaurado.	21:11, 24-26
66:22	Jeová cria novo(s) céu(s) e uma nova terra.	21:1

746 AEC. Essas referências ajudam a fixar os eventos do livro de Isaías na corrente do tempo.

Unidade de Escrita. Certos críticos bíblicos dos tempos modernos têm afirmado que o livro de Isaías não foi todo ele escrito por Isaías. Alguns alegam que os capítulos 40 a 66 foram escritos por uma pessoa não identificada que viveu por volta do fim do exílio babilônico dos judeus. Outros críticos excluem trechos adicionais do livro, teorizando que outra pessoa e não Isaías deve tê-los escrito. Mas, a própria Bíblia não concorda com tais alegações.

Os escritores inspirados das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs creditaram a "Isaías, o profeta", tanto a matéria hoje designada como capítulos 1 a 39 como também os capítulos 40 a 66. Jamais insinuaram que houvesse duas pessoas com este nome, ou que o nome do escritor de parte do livro fosse desconhecido. (Como exemplos, compare Mt 3:3 e 4:14-16 com Is 40:3 e 9:1, 2; também Jo 12:38-41 com Is 53:1 e 6:1, 10.) Além disso, há muitos outros lugares em que os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs deram o crédito específico pela matéria citada da última parte do livro de Isaías, não a um escritor não identificado, mas sim a "Isaías, o profeta". (Compare Mt 12:17-21 com Is 42:1-4; Ro 10:16 com Is 53:1.) O próprio Jesus Cristo, quando leu do "rolo do profeta Isaías", na sinagoga de Nazaré, lia Isaías 61:1, 2. — Lu 4:17-19.

Ademais, o Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías (IQIs^{a}, que se crê ter sido copiado perto do fim do segundo século AEC) contém evidência de que o copista que o escreveu nada sabia a respeito duma suposta divisão na profecia, no fim do capítulo 39. Ele começou o 40.º capítulo na última linha da coluna que contém o capítulo 39.

O inteiro livro de Isaías foi transmitido através dos séculos como uma só obra, não como duas ou mais. A continuidade do capítulo 39 para o 40 é evidente no que está registrado em Isaías 39:6, 7, que é uma transição óbvia ao que se segue.

Os que gostariam de creditar esse livro a mais de um escritor acham ser impossível que Isaías predissesse, com quase dois séculos de antecedência, que um governante de nome Ciro libertaria os judeus exilados; por conseguinte, eles especulam que isto foi escrito numa época posterior, pelo menos depois de Ciro ter iniciado as suas conquistas. (Is 44:28; 45:1) Mas, eles deixam de captar o significado de toda esta parte do livro, porque a matéria trata especificamente da presciência, a habilidade de Deus de dizer de antemão o que aconteceria com seu povo. Esta profecia registrava, com quase 200 anos de antecedência, o nome da pessoa, ainda não nascida, que conquistaria Babilônia e libertaria os judeus. Seu cumprimento mostraria definitivamente que tinha origem divina. Não se tratava de estimativa do futuro, por parte de Isaías, mas como ele próprio escreveu: "Assim disse Jeová." (Is 45:1) Atribuir a escrita desta parte de Isaías a um escritor do tempo de Ciro ainda não resolveria o problema para os críticos. Por que não? Porque esta parte do livro também predisse em pormenores os eventos da vida e do ministério terrestre do Messias, Jesus Cristo — coisas ainda mais no futuro. O cumprimento destas profecias sela a profecia de Isaías como divinamente inspirada, e não como coleção de obras de impostores.

Os que negam que Isaías escreveu os capítulos 40 a 66 usualmente negam também, por razões semelhantes, que ele tenha escrito o capítulo 13, a respeito da queda de Babilônia. Todavia, o capítulo 13 inicia com as palavras: "A pronúncia contra Babilônia, vista em visão por Isaías, filho de Amoz." Obviamente, este é o mesmo "Isaías, filho de Amoz", cujo nome aparece no versículo inicial do capítulo 1.

Inter-Relações. Os escritos de Isaías acham-se extensamente interligados com muitas outras partes da Bíblia. Um século ou mais depois dos dias de Isaías, Jeremias escreveu o registro que se acha nos livros dos Reis, e é interessante observar que aquilo que se acha registrado em 2 Reis 18:13 a 20:19 é essencialmente o mesmo que o encontrado em Isaías, capítulos 36 a 39. Não só outros profetas abrangem assuntos similares aos considerados por Isaías, mas há numerosas referências específicas aos próprios escritos de Isaías, feitas por outros escritores bíblicos.

Entre as mais notáveis e mais frequentemente citadas profecias do livro de Isaías acham-se as que predizem pormenores sobre o Messias. Como se mostra no quadro acompanhante, muitas dessas são especificamente citadas e aplicadas pelos escritores inspirados das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. É de interesse observar que Jesus Cristo e seus apóstolos citaram com muita frequência de Isaías para tornar clara a identificação do Messias.

O que se apresenta não é de forma alguma tudo o que outros inspirados escritores bíblicos citaram da profecia de Isaías, mas salienta algumas das profecias pelas quais Isaías é mais amplamente destacado. Tais profecias, junto com o restante do livro, magnificam a Jeová, o Santo de Israel, como sendo Aquele que provê esta salvação para Seu povo mediante seu Filho ungido.

ISAQUE [Riso]. O único filho de Abraão com sua esposa, Sara. Assim, um elo vital na linhagem que levava a Cristo. (1Cr 1:28, 34; Mt 1:1, 2; Lu 3:34) Isaque foi desmamado com cerca de 5 anos; quase que foi oferecido como sacrifício, quando tinha talvez 25 anos; casou-se aos 40; tornou-se pai de gêmeos aos 60 e morreu com 180 anos. — Gên 21:2-8; 22:2; 25:20, 26; 35:28.

O nascimento de Isaque ocorreu sob circunstâncias bem incomuns. Tanto o pai como a mãe dele já eram bem idosos, já tendo há muito cessado a menstruação de sua mãe. (Gên 18:11) Assim, quando Deus disse a Abraão que Sara daria à luz um filho, ele se riu dessa perspectiva, perguntando: "Nascerá um filho a um homem de cem anos de idade, e dará à luz Sara, sim, uma mulher de noventa anos de idade?" (Gên 17:17) Ao saber o que ocorreria, Sara também riu. (Veja RISO.) Daí, "no tempo designado" do ano seguinte, nasceu o menino, provando que nada é 'extraordinário demais para Jeová'. (Gên 18:9-15) Sara então exclamou: "Deus me preparou riso", acrescentando: "Todo aquele que ouvir isso há de se rir de mim." E assim, exatamente como Jeová dissera, o menino foi apropriadamente chamado de Isaque, que significa "Riso". — Gên 21:1-7; 17:19.

Pertencendo à casa de Abraão, e sendo o herdeiro das promessas, Isaque foi devidamente circuncidado, no oitavo dia. — Gên 17:9-14, 19; 21:4; At 7:8; Gál 4:28.

Com quantos anos Isaque foi desmamado?

No dia em que Isaque foi desmamado, Abraão preparou um grande banquete. Aparentemente, nessa ocasião, Sara observou que Ismael "fazia caçoada" de Isaque, seu meio-irmão mais novo. (Gên 21:8, 9) Algumas traduções (BJ; IBB) dizem que Ismael estava apenas "brincando" com Isaque, isto é, no sentido duma brincadeira de criança. No entanto, a palavra hebraica tsa·hháq também pode ter uma conotação ofensiva. Assim, quando esta mesma palavra ocorre em outros textos (Gên 19:14; 39:14, 17), estas traduções vertem-na por 'zombar', 'gracejar' e 'insultar'.

Certos Targuns, bem como a Pesito siríaca, em Gênesis 21:9, dão às observações de Ismael o sentido de "escarnecer". Sobre tsa·hháq, o Commentary (Comentário), de Cook, diz: "Provavelmente significa, neste trecho, como em geral se tem entendido, 'riso zombeteiro'. Assim como Abraão rira de alegria por causa de Isaque, e Sara rira incredulamente, Ismael agora ria em escárnio, e, provavelmente, com espírito de perseguição e de tirania." Decidindo o assunto, o inspirado apóstolo Paulo mostra claramente que o tratamento que Ismael dispensou a Isaque foi uma aflição, uma perseguição, e não uma brincadeira de criança. (Gál 4:29) Certos comentaristas, em vista da insistência de Sara, no versículo seguinte (Gên 21:10), em que 'o filho desta escrava não venha a ser herdeiro junto com o meu filho, Isaque', sugerem que Ismael (14 anos mais velho que Isaque) talvez altercasse e escarnecesse de Isaque com respeito à condição de herdeiro.

Jeová dissera a Abraão que, como residentes forasteiros, os da descendência dele seriam atribulados por 400 anos, aflição esta que findou com a libertação de Israel do Egito, em 1513 AEC. (Gên 15:13; At 7:6) Calculando 400 anos para trás, chegamos a 1913 AEC como o início dessa aflição. Por conseguinte, isto também fixa 1913 como o ano em que Isaque foi desmamado, visto que, com relação ao tempo, os dois eventos — o ser desmamado e o ser maltratado por Ismael — estão intimamente ligados no relato. Isto significa que Isaque tinha cerca de 5 anos ao ser desmamado, tendo nascido em 1918 AEC. Incidentalmente, o seu nascimento marcou o início dos 450 anos mencionados em Atos 13:17-20, período este que findou por volta de 1467 AEC, quando foi concluída a campanha de Josué em Canaã e a terra foi distribuída às várias tribos.

Atualmente, quando são tantas as mulheres no mundo ocidental que se recusam a amamentar ao peito seus bebês, ou os amamentam apenas por seis a nove meses, um período de cinco anos talvez pareça inconcebivelmente longo. Mas o Dr. D. B. Jelliffe mostra que, em muitas partes do mundo, as crianças só são desmamadas ao atingirem de um ano e meio a dois anos de idade, e que, na Arábia, é costumeiro a mãe amamentar a criança por um período que vai de 13 a 32 meses. Clinicamente falando, a amamentação ou aleitamento pode normalmente continuar até a gravidez seguinte já ter alguns meses. — Infant Nutrition in the Subtropics and Tropics (Nutrição de Bebês nos Subtrópicos e nos Trópicos), Genebra, 1968, p. 38.

Na Idade Média, na Europa, o desmame se dava quando a criança tinha, em média, dois anos, e, no tempo dos macabeus (primeiro e segundo séculos AEC), as mulheres amamentavam seus filhos homens por três anos. (2 Macabeus 7:27) Há 4.000 anos, quando as pessoas levavam uma vida sem pressa, e não havia as pressões ou as necessidades hodiernas de fazer tanta coisa num período de vida mais curto, é fácil entender por que

Sara podia ter amamentado Isaque por cinco anos. Ademais, era o único filho de Sara, depois de muitos anos de esterilidade.

Disposto a Ser Sacrificado. Depois de Isaque ter sido desmamado, nada mais se diz sobre a sua infância. A próxima menção que se faz dele é quando Deus disse ao pai dele, Abraão: "Toma, por favor, teu filho, teu único filho a quem tanto amas, Isaque, e faze uma viagem à terra de Moriá e oferece-o ali como oferta queimada." (Gên 22:1, 2) Após uma jornada de três dias, chegaram ao local escolhido por Deus. Isaque carregava a lenha; o pai dele, o fogo e o cutelo. "Mas onde está o ovídeo para a oferta queimada?", perguntou Isaque. "Deus providenciará para si o ovídeo", foi a resposta. — Gên 22:3-8, 14.

Chegando ao lugar, construíram um altar e dispuseram devidamente a lenha. Daí, Isaque foi amarrado pelas mãos e pelos pés, e colocado sobre a lenha. Quando Abraão ergueu o cutelo, o anjo de Jeová deteve a sua mão. A fé demonstrada por Abraão não fora depositada erroneamente; Jeová forneceu um carneiro, que estava preso ali, numa moita daquele monte, para que pudesse ser apresentado como oferta queimada em lugar de Isaque. (Gên 22:9-14) Abraão, portanto, reconhecendo "que Deus era capaz de levantá-lo até mesmo dentre os mortos", deveras recebeu Isaque "em sentido ilustrativo" de volta de entre os mortos. — He 11:17-19.

Este episódio dramático provava a fé e a obediência não só de Abraão, mas também de seu filho, Isaque. A tradição judaica, registrada por Josefo, diz que Isaque tinha 25 anos naquela época. Seja como for, ele tinha idade e força suficientes para carregar, montanha acima, considerável quantidade de lenha. De modo que podia ter resistido a seu pai, de 125 anos, quando chegou a hora para ser amarrado, caso tivesse preferido rebelar-se contra os mandamentos de Jeová. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 227 [xiii, 2]) Em vez disso, Isaque permitiu submissamente que seu pai passasse a oferecê-lo em sacrifício, em harmonia com a vontade de Deus. Graças a esta demonstração de fé de Abraão, Jeová repetiu e ampliou Seu pacto com Abraão, pacto este que foi transferido por Deus a Isaque, depois da morte de seu pai. — Gên 22:15-18; 26:1-5; Ro 9:7; Tg 2:21.

O mais importante é que foi encenado ali um grande quadro profético, representando como Cristo Jesus, o Isaque Maior, no devido tempo ofereceria voluntariamente sua vida humana, como Cordeiro de Deus, para a salvação da humanidade. — Jo 1:29, 36; 3:16.

Casamento e Família. Depois da morte da mãe de Isaque, seu pai concluiu que já era hora de seu filho se casar. Abraão, contudo, estava decidido a que Isaque não se casasse com uma cananeia pagã. Assim, de acordo com o sistema patriarcal, Abraão mandou seu servo de confiança aos seus parentes, na Mesopotâmia, para escolher uma jovem de origem semítica que também adorasse a Jeová, o Deus de Abraão. — Gên 24:1-9.

Esta missão tinha de ser bem-sucedida, pois, desde o princípio, tudo que envolvia a questão de escolha fora entregue às mãos de Jeová. Revelou-se que Rebeca, prima de Isaque, era a escolhida por Deus, e ela, por sua vez, deixou voluntariamente seus parentes e sua família para acompanhar a caravana que retornou à terra do Negebe, onde morava Isaque. O relato nos fala sobre o primeiro encontro dos dois, e daí diz: "Isaque levou-a depois à tenda de Sara, sua mãe. Tomou assim Rebeca e ela se tornou sua esposa; e ele se enamorou dela, e Isaque encontrou consolo depois da perda de sua mãe." (Gên 24:10-67) Tendo Isaque 40 anos, o casamento se deu em 1878 AEC. — Gên 25:20.

Pela história de Isaque, ficamos sabendo que Rebeca continuou estéril por 20 anos. Isto deu a Isaque a oportunidade de mostrar se ele também, como seu pai, tinha fé na promessa de Jeová de abençoar todas as famílias da terra através dum descendente seu que ainda não tinha nascido, e ele fez isso por suplicar continuamente um filho a Jeová. (Gên 25:19-21) Como no caso dele próprio, novamente se demonstrou que o descendente prometido não viria no curso natural dos eventos, mas somente pelo poder interventor de Jeová. (Jos 24:3, 4) Por fim, em 1858 AEC, quando Isaque tinha 60 anos, recebeu a bênção dupla de ter gêmeos, Esaú e Jacó. — Gên 25:22-26.

Devido a uma fome, Isaque mudou-se com a família para Gerar, em território filisteu, Deus lhe ordenando que não descesse ao Egito. Foi então que Jeová confirmou seu propósito de cumprir a promessa abraâmica mediante Isaque, repetindo seus termos: "Vou multiplicar a tua descendência como as estrelas dos céus e vou dar à tua descendência todas estas terras; e todas as nações da terra certamente abençoarão a si mesmas por meio de tua descendência." — Gên 26:1-6; Sal 105:8, 9.

Neste território filisteu não muito amigável, Isaque, como Abraão, seu pai, usou de estratégia afirmando que sua esposa era sua irmã. Depois de certo tempo, a bênção de Jeová sobre Isaque tornou-se uma fonte de inveja para os filisteus, sendo preciso que ele se mudasse, primeiro para o vale da torrente de Gerar, e daí para Berseba, à beira da árida região do Negebe. Enquanto ali, os filisteus, anteriormente hostis, vieram tentar obter "um juramento de obrigação", ou um tratado de paz com Isaque, pois, como reconheceram: "Tu és agora o abençoado de Jeová." Neste local, os homens de Isaque acharam água, e Isaque o chamou de Siba. "É por isso que o nome da cidade é Berseba [que significa "Poço do Juramento; ou: Poço de Sete"], até o dia de hoje." — Gên 26:7-33; veja BERSEBA.

Isaque sempre gostou muito de Esaú, porque este era do tipo que apreciava a vida ao ar livre, sendo caçador e homem do campo, e isto significava caça para a boca de Isaque. (Gên 25:28) Assim, com vista cada vez mais fraca, e sentindo que talvez não vivesse por muito mais tempo, Isaque preparou-se para dar a Esaú a bênção do primogênito. (Gên 27:1-4) Não se sabe se ele estava a par de que Esaú vendera sua primogenitura a seu irmão, Jacó, e se não lhe ocorreu o decreto divino, emitido antes do nascimento dos dois meninos, de que 'o mais velho ia servir ao mais jovem'. (Gên 25:23, 29-34) Seja como for, Jeová se lembrava disso, e também Rebeca, que rapidamente cuidou de que Jacó recebesse a bênção. Quando Isaque soube da artimanha que fora usada para conseguir isto, recusou-se a modificar o que era, inequivocamente, a vontade de Jeová sobre o assunto. Isaque também profetizou que Esaú e seus descendentes residiriam bem longe dos campos férteis, que viveriam pela espada, e que, por fim, quebrariam do seu pescoço o jugo de servidão a Jacó. — Gên 27:5-40; Ro 9:10-13; veja ESAÚ.

Em seguida, Isaque mandou Jacó a Padã-Arã, para certificar-se de que não se casasse com uma cananeia, como fizera seu irmão, Esaú, para desgosto de seus pais. Quando Jacó retornou, muitos anos depois, Isaque residia em Quiriate-Arba, isto é, Hébron, na região colinosa. Foi ali, em 1738 AEC, o ano anterior àquele em que seu neto, José, tornou-se primeiro-ministro do Egito, que Isaque morreu, com 180 anos, "idoso e saciado de dias". Isaque foi enterrado na caverna de Macpela, onde foram sepultados seus pais e sua esposa, e onde, mais tarde, seria sepultado seu filho Jacó. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:46; 28:1-5; 35:27-29; 49:29-32.

Significado de Outras Referências Feitas a Isaque. Por toda a Bíblia, Isaque é mencionado dezenas de vezes na conhecida expressão "Abraão, Isaque e Jacó". Às vezes, o ponto que se quer frisar relaciona-se com Jeová, como sendo o Deus a quem estes patriarcas adoravam e serviam. (Êx 3:6, 16; 4:5; Mt 22:32; At 3:13) Outras vezes, a referência é ao pacto que Jeová fizera com eles. (Êx 2:24; De 29:13; 2Rs 13:23) Jesus também empregou esta expressão de modo ilustrativo. (Mt 8:11) Em certo caso, Isaque, o antepassado patriarcal, é mencionado num paralelismo hebraico, junto com seus descendentes, a nação de Israel. — Am 7:9, 16.

Isaque, como o descendente de Abraão, simbolizava Cristo, por meio de quem vêm as bênçãos eternas. Como está escrito: "Ora, as promessas foram feitas a Abraão e a seu descendente. Não diz: 'E a descendentes', como no caso de muitos, mas como no caso de um só: 'E a teu descendente', que é Cristo." E, por extensão, Isaque também simbolizava aqueles que 'pertencem a Cristo', que 'são realmente o descendente de Abraão, herdeiros com referência a uma promessa'. (Gál 3:16, 29) Ademais, os dois meninos, Isaque e Ismael, junto com suas mães, "são como que um drama simbólico". Ao passo que o Israel natural (como Ismael) "nasceu realmente na maneira da carne", os que constituem o Israel espiritual 'são filhos pertencentes à promessa, assim como Isaque foi'. — Gál 4:21-31.

Isaque também está incluído entre a 'tão grande nuvem de testemunhas que nos rodeiam', pois também ele se achava entre os que 'aguardavam a cidade que tem verdadeiros alicerces, cujo construtor e fazedor é Deus'. — He 12:1; 11:9, 10, 13-16, 20.

ISBÁ [Que Ele Aquiete (Acalme)]. Descendente de Judá; pai de Estemoa. — 1Cr 4:1, 17.

ISBAQUE. O quinto alistado dos seis filhos que Quetura deu a Abraão, filhos estes que Abraão despediu com dádivas, mas sem lhes dar parte de sua herança. — Gên 25:1, 2, 5, 6; 1Cr 1:32.

ISBI-BENOBE. Um dos quatro refains (raça gigante dos cananeus) que se notabilizaram durante as últimas guerras com Israel no reinado de Davi. Isbi-Benobe portava uma lança de cobre que pesava 300 siclos (3,4 kg) e estava prestes a matar Davi quando, agindo rapidamente, Abisai matou o gigante. — 2Sa 21:15-17, 22.

IS-BOSETE [que significa "Homem de Vergonha"]. Evidentemente é o mais novo dos filhos de Saul, e seu sucessor no trono. Pelas listagens genealógicas parece que seu nome era também Esbaal, que significa "Homem de Baal". (1Cr 8:33; 9:39) No entanto, em outras partes, como em Segundo Samuel, ele é chamado de Is-Bosete, nome em que "baal" é substituído por "bosete". (2Sa 2:10) Esta palavra hebraica, bó·sheth, é encontrada em Jeremias 3:24, sendo traduzida por "coisa vergonhosa" (ALA; IBB; NM) e "vergonha" (Al, nota; BJ). Em duas outras ocorrências, bá·'al e bó·sheth são encontradas de forma paralela e oposta, em que uma explica e identifica a outra. (Je 11:13; Os 9:10) Há também outros casos em que ao nome de pessoas se acrescentou "bosete" (ou uma forma de tal expressão) em lugar de "baal", como, por exemplo, "Jerubesete", em lugar de "Jerubaal" (2Sa 11:21; Jz 6:32) e "Mefibosete", em lugar de "Meribe-Baal", este último sendo sobrinho de Is-Bosete. — 2Sa 4:4; 1Cr 8:34; 9:40.

Não se conhece o motivo destes nomes duplos ou dessas substituições. Certa teoria apresentada por certos peritos tenta explicar os nomes duplos como sendo uma alteração feita quando o substantivo comum "baal" (dono; amo) tornou-se mais exclusivamente identificado com o repugnante deus da fertilidade de Canaã, Baal. Contudo, no mesmo livro bíblico de Segundo Samuel, onde aparece o relato de Is-Bosete, informa-se que o próprio Rei Davi deu o nome de Baal-Perazim (que significa "Dono das Rupturas") a um local de batalha, em honra ao Senhor Jeová, pois, como ele disse: "Jeová irrompeu através dos meus inimigos." (2Sa 5:20) Outro conceito é que o nome Is-Bosete talvez tenha sido profético da vergonhosa morte desse indivíduo e o calamitoso fim da dinastia de Saul.

Depois da morte de Saul e de seus outros filhos no campo de batalha de Gilboa, Abner, parente de Saul e chefe de suas forças, levou Is-Bosete para Maanaim, do outro lado do Jordão, onde foi empossado como rei sobre todas as tribos, exceto a de Judá, que reconheceu a Davi como seu rei. Naquela época, Is-Bosete tinha 40 anos, e diz-se que reinou dois anos. Visto que a Bíblia não diz exatamente onde este reinado de dois anos se enquadra no período de sete anos e meio em que Davi reinou em Hébron, não existem meios de equacionar as diferenças de opinião dos peritos sobre este ponto. Não obstante, parece mais razoável concluir que Is-Bosete tornou-se rei pouco depois da morte de seu pai (em vez de cinco anos depois), caso em que haveria uma lacuna de cerca de cinco anos entre seu assassinato e a posse de Davi como rei sobre todo o Israel. — 2Sa 2:8-11; 4:7; 5:4, 5.

O curto governo de Is-Bosete foi marcado tanto por dificuldades internas como externas. A guerra entre sua casa e a de Davi foi "muito prolongada"; ele perdeu 360 homens diante de 20 perdidos por Davi, num embate. (2Sa 2:12-31; 3:1) Ao mesmo tempo, seu parente Abner continuou fortalecendo-se à custa de Is-Bosete, chegando ao ponto de ter relações sexuais com uma das concubinas de Saul, o que, segundo o costume oriental, equivalia à alta traição. Quando foi censurado por Is-Bosete por causa disso, Abner retirou dele seu apoio e fez um pacto com Davi, parte do qual estipulava a restituição da esposa de Davi, Mical, que era irmã do próprio Is-Bosete. (2Sa 3:6-21) A morte de Abner às mãos de Joabe debilitou ainda mais a posição de Is-Bosete, e, pouco depois, dois de seus próprios capitães o assassinaram, durante a sesta do meio-dia. (2Sa 3:22-27; 4:1, 2, 5-7) Entretanto, quando tais assassinos, ao procurarem uma recompensa, trouxeram a cabeça de Is-Bosete a Davi, este mandou matá-los e ordenou que a cabeça de Is-Bosete fosse enterrada no túmulo de Abner, em Hébron. — 2Sa 4:8-12.

Foi assim que a dinastia de Saul, que poderia ter durado "por tempo indefinido", chegou a seu fim abrupto e humilhante, não devido aos pecados de Is-Bosete, mas sim por causa dos pecados de seu pai. (1Sa 13:13; 15:26-29) É verdade que Is-Bosete foi um governante tíbio, que obteve e reteve o trono principalmente graças à força de Abner. No entanto, Davi chamou-o de "homem justo". — 2Sa 4:11.

ISCÁ. Filha do irmão de Abraão, Harã, e irmã de Ló. Ela nasceu antes que seu tio Abraão e sua família deixassem Ur dos Caldeus. — Gên 11:27-31.

ISCARIOTES [do hebr., possivelmente: Homem de Queriote]. Denominação do apóstolo traidor, Judas (e de seu pai, Simão), que o distingue do outro apóstolo também chamado Judas. (Mt 10:4; Lu 6:16; Jo 6:71) Se "Iscariotes" significa, como mui comumente se imagina, "Homem de Queriote", então provavelmente identifica Simão e seu filho como sendo da cidade de Queriote-Esrom, de Judá. — Jos 15:25; veja JUDAS, N.º 4.

ISI [forma abreviada de Isaías, que significa "Salvação de Jeová"].

1. Descendente de Judá; filho de Apaim e pai de Sesã. — 1Cr 2:3, 31.

2. Outro descendente de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 20.

3. Líder e cabeça familiar da meia tribo de Manassés que viveu ao L do Jordão. — 1Cr 5:23, 24.

4. Simeonita cujos quatro filhos são mencionados nas Crônicas por terem liderado 500 à vitória contra os amalequitas que viviam no monte Seir. — 1Cr 4:42, 43.

ISLIAS. Destacado benjamita que vivia em Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 18, 28.

ISMA [forma abreviada de Ismael]. Primitivo descendente de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 3.

ISMAEL [Deus Ouve (Escuta)].

1. Filho de Abraão com Agar, escrava egípcia de Sara; nascido em 1932 AEC, seu pai tendo 86 anos naquela época. — Gên 16:1-4, 11-16.

Quando foi informado de que Sara também teria um filho de quem proviriam "reis de povos", Abraão suplicou a Deus em favor de seu primogênito: "Se Ismael tão-somente vivesse diante de ti!" A resposta de Deus, depois de declarar que o futuro filho dele, Isaque, seria o herdeiro do pacto, foi: "Quanto a Ismael, eu te ouvi. Eis que vou abençoá-lo e fazê-lo fecundo, e vou multiplicá-lo muitíssimo. Ele produzirá certamente doze maiorais, e eu vou fazer dele uma grande nação." (Gên 17:16, 18-20) Ismael foi então circuncidado, aos 13 anos, junto com seu pai e os servos deste. — Gên 17:23-27.

Um ano depois, nasceu Isaque; Ismael tinha então 14 anos. (Gên 16:16; 21:5) Cinco anos depois, em 1913 AEC, no dia em que Isaque foi desmamado, Ismael foi pego 'caçoando' de seu meio-irmão mais novo. (Gên 21:8, 9) Não se tratava duma inocente brincadeira de criança por parte de Ismael. Antes, conforme subentendido pelo versículo seguinte do relato, poderia estar envolvida uma zombaria para com Isaque a respeito da condição de herdeiro. O apóstolo Paulo diz que tais eventos eram um "drama simbólico" e mostra que os maus-tratos infligidos a Isaque pelo meio egípcio Ismael eram uma perseguição. Assim sendo, isto era o começo dos preditos 400 anos da aflição de Israel, que terminaram com a sua libertação da escravidão egípcia em 1513 AEC. — Gál 4:22-31; Gên 15:13; At 7:6; veja ISAQUE.

A zombaria da parte de Ismael para com Isaque resultou em ser ele próprio e sua mãe despedidos da casa de Abraão, mas não sem provisões para a sua jornada. Abraão "tomou pão e um odre de água, e deu-o a Agar, pondo-o nos ombros dela, e o menino, e então a despediu". (Gên 21:14) Alguns têm interpretado isto como significando que Ismael, já então com 19 anos, também foi colocado sobre as costas de Agar, e, deveras, é assim que rezam algumas traduções. (BJ; LXX de Bagster) Certos peritos, porém, consideram a frase "pondo-o nos ombros dela" como sendo apenas parentética, inserida para mostrar como o pão e a água foram transportados, e, sendo assim, se esta frase for colocada entre parênteses, ou separada por vírgulas, remove-se tal dificuldade. Os professores Keil e Delitzsch asseveram que a expressão "e o menino" depende do verbo principal da sentença, "tomou", e não do verbo "deu", ou da palavra "pondo". Esta ligação de "menino" com "tomou" é feita pela conjunção "e". A ideia, portanto, é a seguinte: Abraão tomou pão e água, e deu-os a Agar (colocando-os sobre os ombros dela), e tomou o menino e também o deu a ela. — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. I, O Primeiro Livro de Moisés, pp. 244, 245.

Agar, pelo que parece, perdeu-se no ermo de Berseba, e, assim, quando a água acabou e Ismael ficou exausto, "ela lançou o menino debaixo de um dos arbustos". (Gên 21:14, 15) Esta expressão "lançou o menino" não significa que Ismael fosse um bebê de colo. A palavra hebraica yé·ledh (criança) não se refere necessariamente a uma criancinha, mas é muitas vezes aplicada a um adolescente ou rapaz. Assim, foi dito a respeito do jovem José (com 17 anos na ocasião) que ele foi vendido como escravo sob os protestos de Rubem: "Não pequeis contra o menino [vai·yé·ledh]." Lameque também falou de "um jovem [yé·ledh]" como o tendo ferido. — Gên 42:22; 4:23; veja também 2Cr 10:8.

O gesto de Agar 'lançar' o menino tampouco implica que ela o carregava nos braços ou nas costas, embora evidentemente escorasse seu filho cansado. Ela aparentemente retirou subitamente seu apoio, como fizeram aqueles que trouxeram coxos e enfermos a Jesus e "quase que os lançavam aos seus pés". — Mt 15:30.

Em harmonia com o significado do nome de Ismael, "Deus ouviu" seu clamor por ajuda, forneceu-lhe a água necessária e permitiu que vivesse e se tornasse um arqueiro. Como habitante nômade do ermo de Parã, ele cumpriu a profecia que dizia a seu respeito: "Tornar-se-á uma zebra de homem. Sua mão será contra todos e a mão de todos será contra ele; e residirá diante da face de todos os seus irmãos." (Gên 21:17-21; 16:12) Agar encontrou uma esposa egípcia para seu filho e este, com o tempo, gerou 12 filhos, maiorais e chefes de família da prometida "grande nação" de ismaelitas. Ismael também tinha, pelo menos, uma filha, Maalate, que se casou com Esaú. — Gên 17:20; 21:21; 25:13-16; 28:9; veja ISMAELITAS.

Com 89 anos, Ismael ajudou Isaque a enterrar Abraão, pai deles. Depois disso, viveu por mais 48 anos, morrendo em 1795 AEC, com 137 anos. (Gên 25:9, 10, 17) Não há registro de Ismael ter sido sepultado na caverna de Macpela, o local de sepultamento de Abraão e Isaque, junto com as esposas deles. — Gên 49:29-31.

2. Descendente de Saul através de Jonatã; filho de Azel, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:33-38, 40; 9:44.

3. Pai de Zebadias, que foi designado por Jeosafá para servir como representante real em assuntos judiciais; da tribo de Judá. — 2Cr 19:8, 11.

4. Um dos "chefes de cem" que participaram no pacto com o Sumo Sacerdote Jeoiada para a derrubada da iníqua Atalia e a entronização de Jeoás; filho de Jeoanã. — 2Cr 23:1, 12-15, 20; 24:1.

5. Cabeça dos que mataram o governador Gedalias apenas três meses depois da queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC; filho de Netanias, da linhagem real. Por ocasião da designação do governador por parte de Nabucodonosor, Ismael, filho de Netanias, achava-se no campo, como um dos chefes militares. Mais tarde, ele se dirigiu a Gedalias e, aparentemente, firmou um pacto juramentado de paz e de apoio com o governador. Secretamente, porém, Ismael conspirou com Baalis, rei dos amonitas, para matar Gedalias. Outros comandantes militares, incluindo Joanã, avisaram Gedalias sobre o complô de Ismael, mas o governador, não acreditando no informe, recusou-se a conceder permissão a Joanã para abater Ismael. — 2Rs 25:22-24; Je 40:7-16.

Em resultado disso, quando Gedalias recebia Ismael e seu grupo de dez homens para uma refeição, estes se levantaram e mataram seu anfitrião, bem como os judeus e os caldeus que estavam com ele. No dia seguinte, esses assassinos se apoderaram de 80 homens que tinham vindo de Siquém, de Silo e de Samaria, matando a todos eles, exceto 10, e lançando os corpos deles na grande cisterna construída pelo Rei Asa. Daí, Ismael e seus homens tomaram os remanescentes que moravam em Mispá como cativos, e dirigiram-se para o território amonita. A caminho, Joanã e suas forças conseguiram alcançar e reaver os cativos, mas Ismael e oito de seus homens fugiram para seu refúgio amonita. — 2Rs 25:25; Je 41:1-18.

6. Um dos sacerdotes da casa paterna de Pasur, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:22, 44.

ISMAELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Ismael]. Descendentes de Ismael, primogênito de Abraão por meio de Agar, a serva egípcia de Sara. (Gên 16:1-4, 11) Ismael, por sua vez, casou-se com uma egípcia com quem teve 12 filhos homens (Nebaiote, Quedar, Adbeel, Mibsão, Misma, Dumá, Massa, Hadade, Tema, Jetur, Nafis e Quedemá), os maiorais dos vários clãs ismaelitas. (Gên 21:21; 25:13-16) Os ismaelitas, portanto, eram de início um quarto semitas e três quartos camitas, falando-se em sentido racial.

Conforme Deus prometera, os ismaelitas vieram a tornar-se uma "grande nação", que 'não podia ser contada por causa da sua multidão'. (Gên 17:20; 16:10) Mas, em vez de se fixarem (construíram poucas cidades), preferiram a vida nômade. O próprio Ismael era "uma zebra de homem", isto é, um irrequieto peregrino que perambulava pelo ermo de Parã e vivia do arco-e-flecha. Os seus descendentes eram igualmente na maior parte beduínos habitantes de tendas, um povo que peregrinava por toda a península do Sinai, desde "defronte do Egito", isto é, ao L do Egito e em todo o N da Arábia até a Assíria. Eram famosos por serem um povo feroz e guerreiro, com quem era difícil de conviver, assim como se dissera sobre seu pai, Ismael: "Sua mão será contra todos e a mão de todos será contra ele." — Gên 16:12; 21:20, 21; 25:16, 18.

Numa descrição adicional dos ismaelitas, declara-se: "Estabeleceu-se [hebr.: na·fál] na frente de todos os seus irmãos." (Gên 25:18) Similarmente, dizia-se que os midianitas e seus aliados "achavam-se estirados [no·felím, forma participial de na·fál] na baixada", em território israelita, até que o grupo de Gideão os desarraigou à força. (Jz 7:1, 12) Assim, quando os ismaelitas 'se estabeleciam', era evidentemente com a intenção de deterem a posse da respectiva região até serem removidos à força.

Com o tempo, é bem provável que ocorressem alianças matrimoniais entre os ismaelitas e os descendentes de Abraão por meio de Quetura (Gên 25:1-4), resultando nos habitantes de seções da Arábia. Visto que Ismael e Midiã eram meios-irmãos, qualquer casamento de seus respectivos descendentes entre si, com a mistura de seu sangue, de seus hábitos, de suas características e de suas ocupações, poderia ter dado origem a um emprego intercambiável dos termos "ismaelitas" e "midianitas", conforme se observa na descrição da caravana que vendeu José para a escravidão egípcia. (Gên 37:25-28; 39:1) Nos dias de Gideão, as hostes que invadiram Israel foram descritas como sendo tanto de midianitas como de ismaelitas, um dos sinais identificadores destes últimos sendo suas argolas de ouro para as narinas. — Jz 8:24; compare isso com Jz 7:25 e 8:22, 26.

A animosidade de Ismael para com Isaque parece ter sido transmitida para seus descendentes, até ao ponto de odiarem o Deus de Isaque, pois o salmista, ao relacionar os que 'odeiam intensamente' a Jeová, inclui os ismaelitas. (Sal 83:1, 2, 5, 6) Evidentemente, porém, havia exceções. Sob o arranjo organizacional instituído por Davi, Obil, que é citado como ismaelita, tinha a supervisão dos camelos do rei. — 1Cr 27:30, 31.

Maomé (c. 570-632 EC), o fundador do islamismo, afirmava ser descendente ismaelita de Abraão.

ISMAÍAS [Que Jeová Ouça (Escute); Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)].

1. Notável guerreiro gibeonita, que juntou-se ao exército de Davi em Ziclague antes da morte de Saul. (1Cr 12:1, 4) Nesta primitiva lista dos "trinta" principais guerreiros de Davi, Ismaías é chamado de seu cabeça, mas, a ausência de seu nome em listas posteriores sugere que ele talvez tenha morrido no ínterim. — 2Sa 23:8, 18, 19; 1Cr 11:10, 11, 20, 21.

2. O príncipe da tribo de Zebulão nos dias de Davi; filho de Obadias. — 1Cr 27:19, 22.

ISMAQUIAS [Que Jeová Apoie; Jeová Apoiou]. Um dos levitas escolhidos como comissário com relação às contribuições para os serviços no templo durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:13.

ISMERAI [Que Jeová Guarde]. Cabeça entre os benjamitas que vivia em Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 18, 28.

ISODE [Homem de Dignidade]. Descendente de Manassés, cuja mãe era Hamolequete. — 1Cr 7:14, 18.

ISPA [tirado duma raiz que significa "varrer sem deixar restos"]. Cabeça do povo dentre os benjamitas que moravam em Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Berias. — 1Cr 8:1, 16, 28.

ISPÃ [possivelmente: Ele Julgou]. Filho ou descendente benjamita de Sasaque; um dos cabeças do povo que vivia em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:1, 22, 25, 28.

ISRAEL [Contendedor (Perseverador) com Deus; ou, Deus Contende].

1. Nome que Deus deu a Jacó quando este tinha cerca de 97 anos. Foi durante a noite em que cruzou o vale da torrente do Jaboque, indo ao encontro de seu irmão Esaú, que Jacó começou a lutar com o que se revelou ser um anjo. Devido à persistência de Jacó na luta, seu nome foi mudado para Israel, como sinal da bênção de Deus. Para comemorar tais eventos, Jacó chamou esse lugar de Peniel ou Penuel. (Gên 32:22-31; veja JACÓ N.º 1.) Mais tarde, em Betel, a mudança de nome foi confirmada por Deus e, dali em diante, até o fim de sua vida, Jacó era frequentemente chamado de Israel. (Gên 35:10, 15; 50:2; 1Cr 1:34) Muitas das mais de 2.500 ocorrências do nome Israel, contudo, referem-se aos descendentes de Jacó como nação. — Êx 5:1, 2.

2. Todos os descendentes de Jacó, coletivamente, em qualquer período. (Êx 9:4; Jos 3:7; Esd 2:2b; Mt 8:10) Como prole e descendência dos 12 filhos de Jacó, não raro eram chamados de "filhos de Israel"; menos frequentemente, de "casa de Israel", "povo de Israel", "homens de Israel", "estado de Israel", ou "israelitas". — Gên 32:32; Mt 10:6; At 4:10; 5:35; Ef 2:12; Ro 9:4; veja ISRAELITA.

Em 1728 AEC, uma fome fez com que a casa de Jacó viajasse para o Egito, onde, como residentes forasteiros, seus descendentes permaneceram por 215 anos. Todos os israelitas que foram reconhecidos como sendo "da casa de Jacó, que vieram ao Egito", não contando as esposas dos filhos de Jacó, eram 70. Mas, durante sua estada ali, eles vieram a tornar-se uma sociedade mui ampla de escravos, totalizando talvez uns dois ou três milhões, ou mais. — Gên 46:26, 27; Êx 1:7 veja ÊXODO.

Em seu leito de morte, Jacó abençoou seus 12 filhos na seguinte ordem: Rubem, Simeão, Levi, Judá, Zebulão, Issacar, Dã, Gade, Aser, Naftali, José e Benjamim; e, por meio destes, prosseguiu o arranjo tribal, patriarcal. (Gên 49:2-28) Não obstante, durante o período de escravidão de Israel, os egípcios estabeleceram seu próprio sistema de supervisão, independente da instituição patriarcal, designando certas pessoas dentre os israelitas como administradores. Estes mantinham o cômputo dos tijolos produzidos e ajudavam os feitores egípcios, que compeliam os israelitas a trabalhar. (Êx 5:6-19) Moisés, por sua vez, quando tornou conhecidas as instruções de Jeová para a congregação, fez isso por meio dos "anciãos de Israel", que eram os cabeças hereditários das casas paternas. Eram também os que o acompanhavam quando ele comparecia perante Faraó. — Êx 3:16, 18; 4:29, 30; 12:21.

No devido tempo, no fim do período predeterminado de 400 anos de aflição, em 1513 AEC, Jeová esmagou a potência mundial dominante do Egito, e, com grande demonstração de sua Onipotência Soberana, libertou Israel, seu povo, da escravidão. Com eles saiu "uma vasta mistura de gente" de não israelitas, que se sentiram felizes de lançar sua sorte com a do povo escolhido de Deus. — Gên 15:13; At 7:6; Êx 12:38.

Nascimento da Nação. Sob o pacto feito com Abraão, a resultante congregação de Israel foi considerada como indivíduo único, e, por conseguinte, um parente próximo poderia resgatá-los ou recomprá-los da escravidão. Jeová era tal parente próximo, através desse pacto legal, deveras, o Pai deles, e, como legítimo Resgatador, ele usou a força punitiva para matar o primogênito de Faraó, por este ter-se recusado a libertar o "primogênito" de Deus, Israel. (Êx 4:22, 23; 6:2-7) Assim, libertado legalmente do Egito, Israel tornou-se propriedade exclusiva de Jeová. "Somente a vós vos conheci dentre todas as famílias do solo", disse ele. (Am 3:2; Êx 19:5, 6 De 7:6) Deus então achou apropriado, contudo, lidar com eles, não estritamente como sociedade patriarcal, mas sim como a nação de Israel, que Ele criou, dando-lhe um governo teocrático alicerçado no pacto da Lei como constituição.

Menos de três meses depois de deixar o Egito, Israel tornou-se uma nação independente, sob o pacto da Lei, inaugurado no monte Sinai. (He 9:19, 20) As Dez Palavras, ou Dez Mandamentos, escritas "pelo dedo de Deus", constituíam a base daquele código nacional, ao qual se adicionaram cerca de 600 outras leis, estatutos, regulamentos e decisões judiciais. Isto o tornava o conjunto mais abrangente de leis possuído por qualquer nação antiga, delineando, em grandes pormenores, o relacionamento do homem com Deus, bem como entre o homem e seu próximo. — Êx 31:18; 34:27, 28.

Como teocracia pura, toda autoridade judicial, legislativa e executiva cabia a Jeová. (Is 33:22; Tg 4:12) Por sua vez, este Grande Teocrata delegou certo poder administrativo a seus representantes designados. O próprio código de leis até mesmo fazia provisão para uma posterior dinastia de reis que representariam a Jeová em assuntos civis. Esses reis, contudo, não eram monarcas absolutos, visto que o sacerdócio era separado e independente da realeza, e, na verdade, os reis sentavam-se no "trono de Jeová" como representantes dele, sujeitos às Suas diretrizes e disciplina. — De 17:14-20; 1Cr 29:23; 2Cr 26:16-21.

Sob o código constitucional, a adoração de Jeová foi colocada acima de tudo o mais e dominava todo aspecto da vida e da atividade da nação. A idolatria era classificada como consumada traição, punível com a morte. (De 4:15-19; 6:13-15; 13:1-5) O tabernáculo sagrado, e mais tarde o templo, com seus prescritos sacrifícios, era o centro físico da adoração. O sacerdócio designado por Deus tinha o Urim e o Tumim, por meio dos quais recebiam-se respostas de Jeová sobre importantes e difíceis questões de vida ou morte. (Êx 28:30) Providenciaram-se assembleias regulares de homens, mulheres e crianças (compulsórias para os homens), e estas ajudaram a manter a saúde e a união espirituais da nação. — Le 23:2; De 31:10-13.

Fizeram-se provisões para um sistema de juízes sobre "dez", "cinquenta", "cem" e "mil". Deste modo, os casos do povo podiam receber pronta atenção, e podia-se recorrer até a Moisés que, se necessário, apresentaria o assunto a Jeová para decisão final. (Êx 18:19-26; De 16:18) A organização militar, com a sua conscrição de efetivos humanos e distribuição de comando também se ajustava a um similar sistema numérico. — Núm 1:3, 4, 16; 31:3-6, 14, 48.

Os vários cargos civis, judiciais e militares eram preenchidos pelos cabeças hereditários das tribos — os anciãos experientes, sábios e discretos. (De 1:13-15) Estes anciãos posicionavam-se perante Jeová como representantes da inteira congregação de Israel, e, por meio deles, Jeová e Moisés falavam ao povo em geral. (Êx 3:15, 16) Eram homens que ouviam pacientemente os casos jurídicos, faziam vigorar as várias modalidades do pacto da Lei (De 21:18-21; 22:15-21; 25:7-10), pautavam-se pelas decisões divinas já declaradas (De 19:11, 12; 21:1-9), supriam a liderança militar (Núm 1:16), confirmavam tratados já negociados (Jos 9:15) e, como comissão, dirigida pelo sumo sacerdote, cumpriam outros deveres (Jos 22:13-16).

Este novo estado teocrático de Israel, com sua autoridade centralizada, ainda retinha o arranjo patriarcal das 12 divisões tribais. Mas, para eximir a tribo de Levi do serviço militar (para que esta pudesse devotar seu tempo exclusivamente a assuntos religiosos), e ainda assim ter 12 tribos que possuíssem 12 partes da Terra Prometida, fizeram-se ajustes genealógicos formais. (Núm 1:49, 50; 18:20-24) Havia também a questão dos direitos do primogênito. Rubem, primogênito de Jacó, tinha direito a uma porção dupla da herança (veja De 21:17), mas perdeu esse direito porque cometeu imoralidade incestuosa com a concubina de seu pai. (Gên 35:22; 49:3, 4) Tais vagas, a vaga de Levi entre as 12, bem como a ausência daquele que tinha os direitos de primogênito, tinham de ser preenchidas.

De forma relativamente simples, Jeová ajustou ambos os assuntos por meio de um único ato. Efraim e Manassés, os dois filhos de José, foram promovidos à condição plena de cabeças tribais. (Gên 48:1-6; 1Cr 5:1, 2) Novamente se podiam contar 12 tribos, excluindo-se a de Levi, e também uma porção dupla das terras fora representativamente consignada a José, pai de Efraim e de Manassés. Assim, os direitos do primogênito foram retirados de Rubem, o primogênito de Leia, e dados a José, o primogênito de Raquel. (Gên 29:31, 32; 30:22-24) Assim, com tais ajustes, os nomes das 12 tribos (não levitas) de Israel eram: Rubem, Simeão, Judá, Issacar, Zebulão, Efraim, Manassés, Benjamim, Dã, Aser, Gade e Naftali. — Núm 1:4-15.

Do Sinai à Terra da Promessa. Apenas 2 dentre os 12 espias enviados à Terra da Promessa retornaram com fé suficientemente forte para encorajar seus irmãos a invadi-la e conquistá-la.

Jeová, portanto, determinou que, devido a essa generalizada falta de fé, todos aqueles que tivessem mais de 20 anos e que tinham saído do Egito, com raras exceções, morreriam ali no ermo. (Núm 13:25-33; 14:26-34) E assim, por 40 anos, aquele vasto acampamento de Israel peregrinou pela península do Sinai. Até mesmo Moisés e Arão morreram sem pisar na Terra da Promessa. Logo depois de Israel ter saído do Egito, um censo mostrava que havia 603.550 varões vigorosos, mas, cerca de 39 anos depois, a nova geração totalizava menos 1.820, ou 601.730. — Núm 1:45, 46; 26:51.

Durante a vida nômade de Israel no ermo, Jeová era um muro protetor, um escudo contra os seus inimigos. Somente quando Israel se rebelava contra Jeová é que ele permitia que lhes sobreviesse o mal. (Núm 21:5, 6) Jeová supria-lhes também todas as suas necessidades. Deu-lhes o maná e água, um código sanitário para proteger-lhes a saúde, e até mesmo impediu que suas sandálias se gastassem. (Êx 15:23-25; 16:31, 35; De 29:5) Mas, apesar desse cuidado amoroso e miraculoso da parte de Jeová, Israel repetidas vezes murmurou e se queixou, e, periodicamente, surgiam rebeldes que desafiavam as designações teocráticas, obrigando Jeová a discipliná-los com severidade, para que os demais aprendessem a temer e a obedecer ao seu Grande Libertador. — Núm 14:2-12; 16:1-3; De 9:24; 1Co 10:10.

Os 40 anos de migração de Israel no ermo chegavam ao fim quando Jeová entregou nas mãos deles os reis dos amorreus, Síon e Ogue. Por meio dessa vitória, Israel tornou-se herdeiro de grande quantidade de território a L do Jordão, no qual se fixaram as tribos de Rubem, de Gade e metade da tribo de Manassés. — De 3:1-13; Jos 2:10.

Israel sob os Juízes. Após a morte de Moisés, Josué liderou os israelitas na travessia do Jordão, em 1473 AEC, para a entrada na terra descrita como 'manando leite e mel'. (Núm 13:27; De 27:3) Daí, numa avassaladora campanha de seis anos, conquistaram o território que era controlado por 31 reis a O do Jordão, incluindo cidades fortificadas, como Jericó e Ai. (Jos 1 a 12) As planícies costeiras e certas cidades encravadas, como a fortaleza jebusita que mais tarde se tornou a Cidade de Davi, eram exceções. (Jos 13:1-6; 2Sa 5:6-9) Estes elementos que desafiavam a Deus, a quem se permitiu que continuassem ali, atuavam como espinhos e abrolhos no lado de Israel, e as alianças matrimoniais com eles somente aumentaram a dor. Por mais de 380 anos, desde a morte de Josué até a completa subjugação deles por Davi, tais adoradores de deuses falsos atuaram como "agentes para provar a Israel, para se saber se obedeceriam aos mandamentos de Jeová". — Jz 3:4-6.

O território recém-conquistado foi dividido por sortes entre as tribos de Israel, conforme Jeová ordenara a Moisés. Seis "cidades de refúgio" foram reservadas para a segurança dos homicidas não intencionais. Estas, e 42 outras cidades, bem como as adjacentes terras agrícolas, foram consignadas à tribo de Levi. — Jos 13 a 21.

Cada cidade designava juízes e oficiais em seus portões para cuidar dos assuntos judiciais, conforme estabelecido sob o pacto da Lei (De 16:18), bem como anciãos representativos para administrar os interesses gerais da cidade. (Jz 11:5) Embora as tribos conservassem a sua identidade e as suas heranças, desaparecera grande parte do controle organizacional centralizado que fora exercido durante sua permanência no ermo. O cântico de Débora e Baraque, os eventos da guerra de Gideão e as atividades de Jefté, todos revelam os problemas resultantes da falta de ação unida que surgiram depois que Moisés e seu sucessor, Josué, saíram de cena, e o povo deixou de se voltar para seu Cabeça invisível, Jeová Deus, em busca de orientação. — Jz 5:1-31; 8:1-3; 11:1-12:7.

Com a morte de Josué e dos anciãos de sua geração, o povo começou a vacilar em sua fidelidade e obediência a Jeová, como um grande pêndulo a oscilar entre a adoração verdadeira e a falsa. (Jz 2:7, 11-13, 18, 19) Quando abandonavam a Jeová e voltavam a servir aos Baalins, ele removia sua proteção e permitia que as nações em volta viessem saquear a terra. Despertado por tal opressão para a necessidade de uma ação unida, o inconstante Israel apelava para Jeová que, por sua vez, suscitava juízes, ou salvadores, para libertar o povo. (Jz 2:10-16; 3:15) Houve toda uma série desses valentes juízes depois de Josué, incluindo Otniel, Eúde, Sangar, Baraque, Gideão, Tola, Jair, Jefté, Ibsã, Elom, Abdom e Sansão. — Jz 3 a 16.

Cada libertação alcançada teve um efeito unificador sobre a nação. Houve, também, outros incidentes unificadores. Certa vez, quando a concubina dum levita foi brutalmente violentada, 11 tribos, sentindo-se ultrajadas, agiram unidamente contra a tribo de Benjamim, refletindo certo senso de culpa e de responsabilidade nacionais. (Jz caps. 19, 20) Todas as tribos sentiam-se unidamente atraídas à Arca do Pacto, no tabernáculo em Silo. (Jos 18:1) Por conseguinte, sentiram perda em escala nacional quando a Arca foi capturada pelos filisteus, devido à devassidão e à má conduta do sacerdócio naqueles dias, especialmente por parte dos filhos do Sumo Sacerdote Eli. (1Sa 2:22-36; 4:1-22) Com a morte de Eli, e tornando-se Samuel um profeta e juiz em Israel, houve um efeito unificador sobre Israel, à medida que Samuel viajava em circuito através de Israel, para cuidar das questões e das disputas do povo. — 1Sa 7:15, 16.

O Reino Unido. Samuel ficou extremamente desgostoso quando, em 1117 AEC, Israel suplicou: "Designa-nos deveras um rei para nos julgar, igual a todas as nações." No entanto, Jeová disse a Samuel: "Escuta a voz do povo . . . pois, não é a ti que rejeitaram, mas é a mim que rejeitaram como rei sobre eles." (1Sa 8:4-9; 12:17, 18) De modo que Saul, o benjamita, foi escolhido como primeiro rei de Israel, e, embora começasse bem o seu reinado, em pouco tempo a sua presunção levou-o à desobediência, e a desobediência, por sua vez, à rebelião, e a rebelião a que por fim consultasse uma médium espírita — de modo que, depois de 40 anos, mostrou-se um completo fracasso! — 1Sa 10:1; 11:14, 15; 13:1-14; 15:22-29; 31:4.

Davi, da tribo de Judá, um 'homem agradável ao coração de Jeová' (1Sa 13:14; At 13:22), foi ungido rei no lugar de Saul, e, sob sua liderança capaz, as fronteiras da nação se ampliaram até os limites prometidos, desde "o rio do Egito até o grande rio, o rio Eufrates". — Gên 15:18; De 11:24; 2Sa 8:1-14; 1Rs 4:21.

Durante o reinado de 40 anos de Davi, foram criados vários cargos especializados, além do arranjo tribal. Havia um círculo íntimo de conselheiros que cercavam o próprio rei, além dos anciãos de influência que serviam ao governo centralizado. (1Cr 13:1; 27:32-34) Havia também a ampliada equipe governamental de príncipes tribais, chefes, oficiais da corte e servidores militares, que tinham deveres administrativos. (1Cr 28:1) Para cuidar bem de certos assuntos, Davi nomeou 6.000 levitas como juízes e oficiais. (1Cr 23:3, 4) Estabeleceram-se outros departamentos, com seus superintendentes designados, para cuidar do cultivo dos campos e dirigir coisas tais como vinhedos e indústrias vinícolas, olivais e suprimentos de azeite, rebanhos e manadas. (1Cr 27:26-31) Os interesses financeiros do rei eram similarmente cuidados por uma tesouraria central, separada daquela que supervisionava os tesouros estocados em outras partes, como nas cidades e aldeias afastadas. — 1Cr 27:25.

Salomão sucedeu a Davi, seu pai, como rei, em 1037 AEC. Ele reinou "sobre todos os reinos, desde o Rio [Eufrates] até a terra dos filisteus e até o termo do Egito", por 40 anos. Seu reinado foi notadamente marcado pela paz e prosperidade, pois as nações em sua volta continuaram 'trazendo presentes e servindo a Salomão todos os dias de sua vida'. (1Rs 4:21) A sabedoria de Salomão era proverbial, sendo o mais sábio rei dos tempos antigos, e, durante seu reinado, Israel atingiu o ápice do poder e da glória. Uma das mais grandiosas realizações de Salomão foi a construção do magnífico templo, cujos planos arquitetônicos recebera de seu pai inspirado, Davi. — 1Rs caps. 3 a 9; 1Cr 28:11-19.

Apesar de toda a sua glória, de toda a sua riqueza e de toda a sua sabedoria, Salomão acabou fracassando, pois permitiu que suas muitas esposas estrangeiras o desviassem da adoração pura de Jeová para as práticas profanas das religiões falsas. No fim, Salomão morreu desaprovado por Jeová, e Roboão, seu filho, o sucedeu. — 1Rs 11:1-13, 33, 41-43.

Roboão, não tendo sabedoria nem visão, aumentou a já pesada carga governamental sobre o povo. Isto, por sua vez, fez com que as dez tribos ao norte se separassem sob Jeroboão, conforme o profeta de Jeová havia predito. (1Rs 11:29-32; 12:12-20) Assim, aconteceu que o reino de Israel foi dividido em 997 AEC.

Para detalhes sobre o reino dividido, veja ISRAEL N.º 3.

Israel Depois do Exílio Babilônico. Durante os 390 anos que se seguiram à morte de Salomão, e à ruptura do reino unido, e até a destruição de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, o termo "Israel" usualmente só se aplicava às dez tribos, sob o domínio do reino setentrional. (2Rs 17:21-23) Mas, com a volta do exílio de um restante de todas as 12 tribos, e continuando até a segunda destruição de Jerusalém em 70 EC, o termo "Israel" mais uma vez abrangia todos os descendentes de Jacó que viviam naquele tempo. Novamente, o povo de todas as 12 tribos foi chamado de "todo o Israel". — Esd 2:70; 6:17; 10:5; Ne 12:47; At 2:22, 36.

Entre os que retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel e o sumo sacerdote Josué (Jesua), em 537 AEC, havia quase 50.000 (42.360 israelitas, além de 7.500 escravos e cantores profissionais), e estes começaram a reconstruir a casa de adoração de Jeová. (Esd 3:1, 2; 5:1, 2) Mais tarde, outros retornaram junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC (Esd 7:1-8:36), e, ainda mais tarde, em 455 AEC, sem dúvida outros acompanharam Neemias quando este veio a Jerusalém, com a designação especial de reconstruir os muros e os portões da cidade. (Ne 2:5-9) Muitos israelitas, contudo, permaneceram dispersos por todo o império, conforme se vê no livro de Ester. — Est 3:8; 8:8-14; 9:30.

Embora Israel não retornasse à sua soberania anterior como nação independente, tornou-se deveras uma comunidade hebraica que gozava de considerável liberdade sob o domínio persa. Dentre os próprios israelitas foram designados governantes e governadores prepostos (como Zorobabel e Neemias). (Ne 2:16-18; 5:14, 15; Ag 1:1) Os anciãos de Israel e os príncipes tribais continuaram a agir como conselheiros e representantes do povo. (Esd 10:8, 14) Restabeleceu-se a organização sacerdotal, à base de antigos registros genealógicos que haviam sido cuidadosamente preservados, e, com tal arranjo levítico mais uma vez em operação, foram observados os sacrifícios e outros requisitos do pacto da Lei. — Esd 2:59-63; 8:1-14; Ne 8:1-18.

Com a queda do Império Persa e a ascensão da Grécia ao domínio mundial, Israel viu-se assolado pelo conflito entre os ptolomeus do Egito e os selêucidas da Síria. Estes últimos, durante o reinado de Antíoco IV (Epifânio), determinaram erradicar a adoração e os costumes judaicos. Seu esforço atingiu um clímax em 168 AEC, quando um altar pagão foi erigido sobre o altar do templo em Jerusalém e dedicado ao deus grego, Zeus. Este incidente ultrajante, contudo, produziu um efeito contrário, pois foi a centelha que provocou a insurreição dos Macabeus. Três anos a contar daquele dia, o vitorioso líder judeu, Judas Macabeu, rededicou a Jeová o templo purificado, com uma festa que, desde então, tem sido comemorada pelos judeus como a Hanucá.

O século seguinte foi de grandes distúrbios internos, em que Israel afastou-se cada vez mais das provisões administrativas tribais do pacto da Lei. Foi durante esse período que o governo doméstico dos macabeus ou asmoneus teve sorte variável, e que se desenvolveram os partidos dos saduceus pró-asmoneanos e os fariseus antiasmoneanos. Por fim solicitou-se a Roma, já então a potência mundial, que interviesse. O general Cneu Pompeu interveio, e, depois dum cerco de três meses, tomou Jerusalém, em 63 AEC, e anexou a Judeia ao império. Herodes, o Grande, foi nomeado por Roma como rei dos judeus, por volta de 39 AEC, e, uns três anos depois, ele efetivamente esmagou a regência asmoneana. Pouco antes da morte de Herodes nasceu Jesus, em 2 AEC, como "uma glória para o teu povo Israel". — Lu 2:32.

A autoridade imperial de Roma sobre Israel durante o primeiro século EC foi distribuída entre os governantes distritais e os governadores ou procuradores. A Bíblia menciona alguns governantes distritais, como Filipe, Lisânias e Herodes Ântipas (Lu 3:1); bem como os governadores Pôncio Pilatos, Félix e Festo (At 23:26; 24:27); e os reis Agripa I e II (At 12:1; 25:13). Internamente, ainda restavam certos vestígios do arranjo genealógico tribal, conforme evidenciado quando César Augusto fez com que os israelitas se registrassem nas respectivas cidades de suas casas paternas. (Lu 2:1-5) Entre o povo, os "anciãos" e os funcionários levíticos sacerdotais ainda eram muito influentes (Mt 21:23; 26:47, 57; At 4:5, 23), embora tivessem, em grande parte, substituído os requisitos escritos do pacto da Lei pelas tradições de homens. — Mt 15:1-11.

Foi em tal atmosfera que nasceu o cristianismo. Primeiro surgiu João, o Batizador, o precursor de Jesus, que fez com que muitos israelitas retornassem a Jeová. (Lu 1:16; Jo 1:31) Daí, Jesus e seus apóstolos deram seguimento à obra de recobro, uma vez que trabalhavam entre as "ovelhas perdidas da casa de Israel", abrindo olhos cegos a enxergarem as tradições falsas dos homens e os maravilhosos benefícios da adoração pura de Deus. (Mt 15:24; 10:6) Todavia, apenas um restante aceitou Jesus como Messias, e foi salvo. (Ro 9:27; 11:7) Foram estes que alegremente o saudaram como "Rei de Israel". (Jo 1:49; 12:12, 13) A maioria, recusando-se a ter fé em Jesus (Mt 8:10; Ro 9:31, 32), apoiou seus líderes religiosos, que clamaram: "Fora com ele! Fora com ele! Para a estaca com ele!" "Não temos rei senão César." — Jo 19:15; Mr 15:11-15.

O tempo logo mostrou ser falsa esta suposta fidelidade inabalável a César. Elementos fanáticos de Israel fomentaram uma revolta após outra, e, cada vez, a província sofria duras represálias dos romanos, represálias estas que, por sua vez, aumentavam o ódio judaico pelo governo romano. A situação por fim se tornou tão explosiva que as forças romanas locais não mais puderam contê-la e Céstio Galo, governador da Síria, avançou contra Jerusalém com forças maiores, a fim de manter o controle romano.

Depois de incendiar Bezeta, ao N do templo, Galo acampou em frente ao palácio real, ao SO do templo. Nessa ocasião, diz Josefo, ele poderia ter facilmente penetrado à força na cidade; sua demora, contudo, fortaleceu os insurgentes. As unidades avançadas dos romanos fizeram então uma cobertura protetora, como a carapaça da tartaruga, pondo seus escudos sobre eles mesmos, e começaram a minar as muralhas. De novo, quando os romanos estavam prestes a ter êxito, eles se retiraram, no outono de 66 EC. Sobre esta retirada, Josefo diz: "Céstio . . . subitamente retirou seus homens, abandonou a esperança, embora não tivesse sofrido nenhum revés, e, indo contra toda lógica, retirou-se da Cidade." (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 540 [xix, 7]) Este ataque contra a cidade, seguido de súbita retirada, forneceu o sinal e a oportunidade para que os cristãos ali ‘fugissem para os montes’, conforme instruídos por Jesus. — Lu 21:20-22.

No ano seguinte (67 EC), Vespasiano empenhou-se em acabar com a insurreição judaica, mas a morte inesperada de Nero, em 68, abriu o caminho para que Vespasiano se tornasse imperador. Assim, ele voltou a Roma, em 69, e deixou que seu filho, Tito, prosseguisse em tal campanha, e, no ano seguinte, 70 EC, Jerusalém foi invadida e destruída. Três anos depois, a última fortaleza judaica em Massada caiu diante dos romanos. Josefo diz que, durante toda a campanha contra Jerusalém, 1.100.000 judeus morreram, muitos devido a pestes e à fome, e 97.000 foram feitos cativos, diz ele, sendo que muitos deles foram dispersos como escravos para todos os cantos do império. — The Jewish War, VI, 420 (ix, 3).

Quanto à identidade das “doze tribos de Israel”, mencionadas em Mateus 19:28 e Lucas 22:30, veja TRIBO (“Julgando as Doze Tribos de Israel”).

3. As tribos que, por duas vezes, formaram um reino setentrional, separado, de Israel.

A primeira divisão do governo nacional ocorreu com a morte de Saul, por volta de 1078 AEC. A tribo de Judá reconheceu a Davi como rei, mas o restante das tribos fez rei a Is-Bosete, filho de Saul; dois anos depois, Is-Bosete foi assassinado. (2Sa 2:4, 8-10; 4:5-7) Com o tempo, sanou-se a brecha e Davi tornou-se rei de todas as 12 tribos. — 2Sa 5:1-3.

Mais adiante no reinado de Davi, quando foi sufocada a revolta de seu filho, Absalão, todas as tribos mais uma vez reconheceram a Davi como rei. Todavia, ao recolocarem o rei no seu trono, surgiu uma disputa sobre protocolo, e, nesta questão, as dez tribos setentrionais, chamadas de “Israel”, discordavam dos homens de Judá. — 2Sa 19:41-43.

Todas as 12 tribos estavam unidas no apoio à realeza de Salomão, filho de Davi. Mas, quando de sua morte, por volta de 998 AEC, houve a segunda divisão do reino. Apenas as tribos de Benjamim e de Judá apoiaram o Rei Roboão, que se sentou no trono de Salomão, seu pai, em Jerusalém. Israel, que consistia nas outras dez tribos do N e do L, escolheu a Jeroboão como rei. — 1Rs 11:29-37; 12:1-14; MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 947.

De início, a capital de Israel se localizava em Siquém. Mais tarde, mudou-se para Tirza, e, daí, durante o reinado de Onri, transferiu-se para Samaria, onde permaneceu nos 200 anos seguintes. (1Rs 12:25; 15:33; 16:23, 24) Jeroboão reconhecia que a adoração unificada mantinha unido o povo, assim, para impedir que as tribos dissidentes fossem ao templo de Jerusalém para adorar a Deus, ele ergueu dois bezerros de ouro, não na capital, mas nos dois extremos do território de Israel, um em Betel, no sul, e outro em Dã, no norte. Também investiu um sacerdócio não levítico para liderar e instruir Israel na adoração dos bezerros de ouro e dos demônios caprinos. — 1Rs 12:28-33; 2Cr 11:13-15.

Aos olhos de Jeová, este era um gravíssimo pecado de Jeroboão. (2Rs 17:21, 22) Se tivesse permanecido fiel a Jeová, sem se voltar para tal crassa idolatria, Deus teria permitido que a sua dinastia continuasse, mas, do jeito como as coisas se sucederam, a sua casa perdeu o trono quando seu filho, Nadabe, foi assassinado, menos de dois anos depois da morte de Jeroboão. — 1Rs 11:38; 15:25-28.

Para onde o governante se inclinava, também se inclinava a nação de Israel. Dezenove reis, sem se contar Tibni (1Rs 16:21, 22), reinaram de 997 a 740 AEC. Apenas nove deles tiveram como sucessores os próprios filhos, e apenas um deles teve uma dinastia que se estendeu até a quarta geração. Sete dos reis de Israel governaram por dois anos, ou menos; alguns só por alguns dias. Um cometeu suicídio, quatro tiveram morte prematura e seis foram assassinados por homens ambiciosos, que em seguida ocuparam o trono de suas vítimas. Ao passo que o melhor de todos, Jeú, agradou a Jeová por remover a vil adoração de Baal que Acabe e Jezabel haviam patrocinado, ainda assim “o próprio Jeú não cuidou em andar na lei de Jeová, o Deus de Israel, de todo o seu coração”; ele permitiu que a adoração do bezerro, de Jeroboão, continuasse em todo o país. — 2Rs 10:30, 31.

Jeová, de sua parte, certamente mostrou-se longânime para com Israel. Durante sua história de 257 anos, continuou enviando Seus servos para alertar os governantes e o povo a respeito de seus modos iníquos, mas em vão. (2Rs 17:7-18) Entre estes devotados servos de Deus achavam-se os profetas Jeú (não o rei), Elias, Micaías, Eliseu, Jonas, Odede, Oseias, Amós e Miqueias. — 1Rs 13:1-3; 16:1, 12; 17:1; 22:8; 2Rs 3:11, 12; 14:25; 2Cr 28:9; Os 1:1; Am 1:1; Miq 1:1.

O problema de Israel no tocante a proteger-se contra a invasão era maior do que o de Judá, pois, embora tivesse o dobro da população, tinha também quase o triplo de área terrestre a guardar. Além de guerrear contra Judá de tempos a tempos, não raro travava guerra com a Síria nas fronteiras norte e oriental, e sofria pressão da Assíria. O sítio final a Samaria foi iniciado por Salmane-ser V, no sétimo ano do reinado de Oseias, mas levou quase três anos para que a cidade fosse tomada pelos assírios, em 740 AEC. — 2Rs 17:1-6; 18:9, 10.

A diretriz dos assírios, iniciada por Tiglate-Pileser III, predecessor de Salmaneser, era remover cativos do território conquistado e transplantar em lugar deles pessoas de outras partes do império. Assim, desencorajavam-se futuras insurreições. No caso em pauta, os outros grupos nacionais introduzidos no território de Israel por fim se misturaram tanto racial como religiosamente, e foram depois conhecidos como samaritanos. — 2Rs 17:24-33; Esd 4:1, 2, 9, 10; Lu 9:52; Jo 4:7-43.

Com a queda de Israel, as dez tribos setentrionais não ficaram inteiramente perdidas, contudo. Os assírios evidentemente deixaram no território de Israel algumas pessoas dessas tribos. Outros sem dúvida fugiram da idolatria de Israel para o território de Judá, antes de 740 AEC, e seus descendentes estariam entre os cativos levados para Babilônia em 607 AEC. (2Cr 11:13-17; 35:1, 17-19) Sem dúvida, havia também descendentes deles entre os levados cativos pelos assírios (2Rs 17:6; 18:11) que foram contados entre o restante que retornou e que constituía as 12 tribos de Israel em 537 AEC e depois disso. — 1Cr 9:2, 3; Esd 6:17; Os 1:11; compare isso com Ez 37:15-22.

4. A Terra da Promessa ou o território geográfico designado à nação de Israel (todas as 12 tribos), em contraste com o território de outras nações (1Sa 13:19; 2Rs 5:2; 6:23), e sobre o qual governavam os reis israelitas. — 1Cr 22:2; 2Cr 2:17.

Após a divisão da nação, a expressão "terra de Israel" era, às vezes, usada para referir-se ao território do reino setentrional, diferençando-o do de Judá. (2Cr 30:24, 25; 34:1, 3-7) Depois da queda do reino setentrional, o nome de Israel foi efetivamente conservado vivo por Judá, o único reino que restava dos descendentes de Israel (Jacó). Por conseguinte, é primariamente com referência à terra do reino de Judá e sua capital, Jerusalém, que a expressão "solo de Israel" é usada pelo profeta Ezequiel. (Ez 12:19, 22; 18:2; 21:2, 3) Esta era a área geográfica que ficou completamente desolada por 70 anos, a contar de 607 AEC (Ez 25:3), mas à qual um fiel restante seria reajuntado. — Ez 11:17; 20:42; 37:12.

Para uma descrição das características geográficas e climáticas de Israel, bem como de seu tamanho, localização, recursos naturais e outras características relacionadas, veja o artigo PALESTINA.

ISRAEL DE DEUS. Esta expressão, encontrada somente uma vez nas Escrituras, refere-se ao Israel espiritual, em vez de aos descendentes raciais de Jacó, cujo nome foi mudado para Israel. (Gên 32:22-28) A Bíblia fala do "Israel de modo carnal" (1Co 10:18), bem como do Israel espiritual, composto daqueles para os quais descender de Abraão não é um requisito. (Mt 3:9) O apóstolo Paulo, ao usar a expressão "o Israel de Deus", mostra que esta nada tem que ver com se a pessoa é ou não um descendente circuncidado de Abraão. — Gál 6:15, 16.

O profeta Oseias predisse que Deus, ao rejeitar a nação do Israel natural em favor desta nação espiritual, que inclui gentios, diria 'aos que não eram seu povo: "Tu és meu povo" '. (Os 2:23; Ro 9:22-25) No tempo devido, o Reino de Deus foi tirado da nação dos judeus naturais e dado a uma nação espiritual que produzia os frutos do Reino. (Mt 21:43) Não há dúvida de que o Israel espiritual inclui judeus naturais. Os apóstolos e outros que receberam espírito santo em Pentecostes de 33 EC (cerca de 120), os acrescentados naquele dia (cerca de 3.000), e os que mais tarde aumentaram esse número para 5.000 (contando apenas os homens), eram todos judeus e prosélitos. (At 1:13-15; 2:41; 4:4) Mas, mesmo assim eram, como Isaías os descreveu, "um mero restante" salvo daquela nação rejeitada. — Is 10:21, 22; Ro 9:27.

Outros textos explanam este assunto. Com a remoção de alguns "ramos naturais" da oliveira figurada, houve um enxerto de ramos 'bravos' de não israelitas, de modo que não havia nenhuma distinção racial ou classista entre os que 'são realmente descendente de Abraão, herdeiros com referência a uma promessa'. (Ro 11:17-24; Gál 3:28, 29) "Nem todos os que procedem de Israel são realmente 'Israel'." "Porque não é judeu aquele que o é por fora, nem é circuncisão aquela que a é por fora, na carne. Mas judeu é aquele que o é no íntimo, e a sua circuncisão é a do coração, por espírito." (Ro 9:6; 2:28, 29) O Israel natural deixou de produzir o número exigido, de modo que Deus "voltou a sua atenção para as nações, a fim de tirar delas um povo para o seu nome" (At 15:14), a respeito do qual se disse: "Vós, outrora, não éreis povo, mas agora sois povo de Deus." (1Pe 2:10) O apóstolo Pedro citou o que havia sido dito ao Israel natural e o aplicou a este Israel espiritual de Deus, dizendo que é, em realidade, uma "raça escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial". — Êx 19:5, 6; 1Pe 2:9.

As 12 tribos mencionadas em Revelação (Apocalipse), capítulo 7, têm de referir-se a este Israel espiritual, por vários motivos válidos. A listagem não é igual à do Israel natural, em Números, capítulo 1. Também, o templo e o sacerdócio de Jerusalém, e todos os registros tribais do Israel natural, foram destruídos de forma permanente, sendo perdidos para sempre, muito antes de João ter tido sua visão, em 96 EC. Mais importante, porém, é que João obteve sua visão tendo por fundo os acontecimentos supracitados que ocorreram a partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC. À luz de tais eventos, a visão de João sobre os que estavam em pé no Monte Sião celestial, junto com o Cordeiro (a quem o Israel natural rejeitara), revelava que o número deste Israel espiritual de Deus era de 144.000 "comprados dentre a humanidade". — Re 7:4; 14:1, 4.

ISRAELITA [De (Pertencente a) Israel]. Um descendente de Jacó, cujo nome foi mudado para Israel. (2Sa 17:25; Jo 1:47; Ro 11:1; veja ISRAEL N.º 1.) Conforme determinado pelo contexto, o termo, no plural, refere-se aos seguintes: (1) aos membros de todas as 12 tribos antes da divisão do reino (1Sa 2:14; 13:20; 29:1); (2) aos do reino setentrional de 10 tribos (1Rs 12:19; 2Rs 3:24); (3) aos judeus não levitas que voltaram do exílio babilônico (1Cr 9:1, 2); (4) aos judeus do primeiro século EC. — At 13:16; Ro 9:3, 4; 2Co 11:22.

ISSACAR [Ele é Salário [isto é, um homem de salário]].

1. O nono filho de Jacó e o quinto dos sete filhos de Leia, nascidos em Padã-Arã. Leia encarou este filho como recompensa ou salário de Jeová por ela ter permitido que uma serva tivesse filhos com seu marido durante o período em que era estéril. — Gên 29:32-30:21; 35:23, 26; 1Cr 2:1.

Issacar tinha, talvez, oito anos quando sua família se mudou para Canaã, em 1761 AEC. Depois disso, nada se sabe sobre sua vida, além dos eventos registrados em que, como um dos "filhos de Jacó", ele participou. (Gên 34:5-7, 13, 27; 37:3-27; 42:1-3; 45:15) Em 1728 AEC, quando Issacar tinha cerca de 41 anos, ele se mudou para o Egito, junto com seus filhos, Tola, Puva (Puá), Ió (Jasube) e Sinrom, como parte das "setenta almas" da casa de Jacó. — Gên 46:13, 27; Êx 1:1-3; 1Cr 7:1.

Quando Jacó se achava em seu leito de morte, Issacar foi o 6.º dos 12 filhos de Jacó a receber a bênção do pai: "Issacar é jumento de ossos fortes, deitando-se entre os dois alforjes. E ele verá que o lugar de descanso é bom e que o país é agradável; e encurvará seu ombro para levar fardos e ficará sujeito a trabalho forçado de escravo." (Gên 49:14, 15) Ao proferir esta bênção, Jacó não indicava apenas certas características individuais e certos eventos que ocorreriam na vida pessoal de Issacar; mas, como se deu no caso das bênçãos proferidas sobre os outros irmãos, Jacó predizia também as características e a conduta tribais que seriam demonstradas no futuro pelos descendentes de Issacar, "na parte final dos dias". — Gên 49:1.

2. Uma das doze tribos de Israel; os descendentes de Jacó por meio de seu filho Issacar.

Quando se fez o primeiro censo depois da saída do Egito, o número de varões vigorosos aptos para a guerra, de 20 anos ou mais, dessa tribo, era de 54.400. (Núm 1:17-19, 28, 29) Um censo similar feito uns 39 anos depois mostrava que a tribo elevara seu número de registrados para 64.300, e, nos dias de Davi, sua força combatente somava 87.000. (Núm 26:23-25; 1Cr 7:5) Houve 200 cabeças dessa tribo que se dirigiram para Hébron, em 1070 AEC, quando Davi foi coroado "rei sobre todo o Israel". — 1Cr 12:23, 32, 38.

No esquema do grande acampamento no ermo, as famílias de Issacar, junto com as da tribo de seu irmão germano, Zebulão, ficavam nos flancos de Judá, do lado L do tabernáculo (Núm 2:3-8); quando em marcha, esta divisão de três tribos foi designada para partir primeiro. (Núm 10:14-16) As bênçãos de despedida de Moisés sobre as tribos agrupavam Issacar e Zebulão (De 33:18), porém, alguns anos depois, foram separadas, quando as tribos foram divididas em dois grupos para ouvir a leitura das bênçãos e das maldições da Lei entre as montanhas de Gerizim e Ebal. — De 27:11-13; Jos 8:33-35; veja EBAL, MONTE.

Quando foi repartida a Terra Prometida, Issacar foi a quarta tribo escolhida por sorte para receber sua herança, que resultou ser mormente situada no fértil vale de Jezreel. Limitavam-se com Issacar, ao N, os territórios tribais de Zebulão e de Naftali, a L, o rio Jordão, ao S, o território de Manassés, e, ao O, parte da área consignada a Aser. O monte Tabor situava-se ao longo de sua fronteira N, com Zebulão, ao passo que a cidade de Megido situava-se perto de seus limites SO, e Bete-Seã estava na direção de seus limites SE. Neste território situavam-se várias cidades cananeias e seus povoados dependentes. (Jos 17:10; 19:17-23) Foi aqui, neste seleto vale, que a tribo de Issacar, segundo a bênção de Moisés, 'alegrou-se nas suas tendas'. — De 33:18.

Assemelhar Issacar, filho de Jacó, a um "jumento de ossos fortes" evidentemente indicava uma qualidade também refletida na tribo que dele descendia. (Gên 49:14, 15) A terra que lhes fora consignada era deveras "agradável", uma parte fértil da Palestina, boa para a agricultura. Issacar parece ter recebido de bom grado o trabalho árduo envolvido nessa tarefa. Seu 'encurvar o ombro para levar fardos' revela boa disposição. Assim, embora a tribo não se notabilizasse de forma especial, pelo que parece podia ser elogiada por assumir seu quinhão da carga de responsabilidade.

Certas cidades incluídas na possessão de Issacar foram designadas como cidades encravadas que pertenciam à tribo vizinha de Manassés, inclusive as destacadas cidades de Megido e Bete-Seã. (Jos 17:11) Várias cidades menores em seu território, junto com seus pastios circunvizinhos, também foram reservadas para a tribo de Levi. (Jos 21:6, 28, 29; 1Cr 6:62, 71-73) Mais tarde, Issacar forneceu seu quinhão (uma duodécima parte das necessidades anuais) para sustentar a corte de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:1, 7, 17.

Dentre os indivíduos preeminentes de Issacar havia Igal, o espia selecionado da tribo que juntou-se a outros em aconselhar Israel a não entrar na Terra Prometida. (Núm 13:1-3, 7, 31-33) Como maiorais da tribo, Netanel serviu depois do Êxodo (Núm 1:4, 8; 7:18; 10:15), Paltiel quando Israel entrou na Terra Prometida (Núm 34:17, 18, 26), e Onri durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 27:18, 22.

Issacar foi alistado entre os que apoiaram o juiz Baraque na derrota das forças de Jabim, sob Sísera. (Jz 4:2; 5:15) Mais tarde, por 23 anos, Tola, da tribo de Issacar, foi um dos juízes de Israel. (Jz 10:1, 2) Após a divisão do reino unido, Baasa, de Issacar, foi o terceiro governante do reino setentrional. Iníquo que era, Baasa assassinou seu predecessor para ganhar o trono, e o deteve por 24 anos. (1Rs 15:27, 28, 33, 34) Cerca de 200 anos depois, Ezequias, rei de Judá, convidou os do reino setentrional para participarem na observância da Páscoa, e muitos de Issacar, aceitando o convite, viajaram a Jerusalém para a celebração. — 2Cr 30:1, 13, 18-20.

Nos livros de Ezequiel e de Revelação (Apocalipse), Issacar é alistado com as demais tribos e, em vista da natureza profética dessas visões, a tribo obviamente tem significado simbólico. — Ez 48:25, 26, 33; Re 7:7.

3. Porteiro levita; sétimo filho do coraíta Obede-Edom. Issacar, junto com seus parentes, foi designado para montar guarda no lado S do santuário em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 26:1-5, 13, 15.

ISSIAS, I [Jeová Faz Esquecer].

1. Um dos cabeças da tribo de Issacar, cujos descendentes ajudaram a tornar essa tribo muito numerosa. — 1Cr 7:1, 3, 4.

2. Guerreiro que se juntou às forças de Davi em Ziclague; possivelmente um coraíta. — 1Cr 12:1, 6.

3. Descendente de Coate, cujos filhos levitas foram organizados durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 23:12, 20; 24:24, 25.

4. Outro levita dos dias de Davi, descendente de Moisés. — 1Cr 23:14-17; 24:21.

ISSIAS, II [Jah Faz Esquecer]. Um dos levitas que atendeu à forte recomendação de Esdras no sentido de que despedissem suas esposas e filhos estrangeiros. — Esd 10:31, 44.

ISTOBE [Homem de Tobe]. Um dos pequenos reinos que supriram guerreiros para os filhos de Amom usarem contra Davi. As forças de "Istobe" e seus aliados foram derrotadas. (2Sa 10, AT, KJ, NM, So) A maioria dos tradutores e geógrafos consideram que Istobe devia ser traduzido por "homens de Tobe", referindo-se à "terra de Tobe", onde residia Jefté. (Jz 11:3-11; veja 2Sa 10:6, 8, Al, AS, BJ, PIB.) Contudo, a forma "Istobe" tem o apoio de certas versões antigas. (LXX; Sy; Vg) A localização da antiga Istobe não é atualmente conhecida. — Veja TOBE.

ISVÁ [significa, possivelmente: "Igualado; Alisado"]. O segundo dos quatro filhos de Aser. (Gên 46:17; 1Cr 7:30) Visto que ele não é alistado nas famílias de Aser, é possível que não tivesse filho varão, ou que a sua linhagem de descendentes logo tenha acabado. — Núm 26:44.

ISVI [significa, possivelmente: "Igualado; Alisado"].

1. Terceiro dos filhos alistados de Aser e fundador da família dos isvitas nessa tribo. — Gên 46:17; Núm 26:44; 1Cr 7:30.

2. Um dos filhos do Rei Saul. — 1Sa 14:49.

ISVITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Isvi]. Uma família descendente de Isvi, filho de Aser. — Gên 46:17; Núm 26:44.

ITAI, I [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Itiel]. Filho de Ribai, de Gibeá, no território de Benjamim; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 31.

ITAI, II [Forma abreviada de Itiel].

1. Guerreiro geteu, presumivelmente da cidade filisteia de Gate, muito leal a Davi. Quando Davi e seus assistentes fugiam de Jerusalém, devido à rebelião de Absalão, 600 geteus, incluindo Itai, os acompanharam. Davi tentou dissuadir Itai de deixar a cidade, mas esse guerreiro expressou-lhe seu grande devotamento nestes termos: "Por Jeová que vive e por meu senhor, o rei, que vive, no lugar em que meu senhor, o rei, vier a estar, quer para a morte quer para a vida, lá virá a estar o teu servo!” Davi permitiu então que Itai continuasse a acompanhá-lo. — 2Sa 15:18-22.

Depois de enumerar suas forças, Davi designou este não israelita, Itai, junto com Joabe e Abisai, como chefes, cada um deles sobre um terço do exército. — 2Sa 18:2, 5, 12.

2. Um dos poderosos de Davi; benjamita e filho de Ribai, de Gibeá. — 2Sa 23:29.

ITÁLIA [possivelmente do latim vitulus, “vitelo”]. A península em forma de bota que se estende na direção sudeste desde a Europa continental, penetrando no mar Mediterrâneo. Desde os Alpes, no N, até o “dedão do pé” nos estreitos de Messina, ao S, ela se estende por cerca de 1.130 km. Varia em largura de 160 a 240 km, e é limitada pelo mar Adriático, a L, e pelo mar Tirreno, a O. Como coluna dorsal no meio dessa península, há os montes Apeninos, com vales férteis que se estendem em direção às planícies costeiras. Os principais rios são o Tibre e o Pó. A Itália tem cerca do tamanho das Filipinas.

Originalmente, segundo Antíoco de Siracusa (do quinto século AEC), o nome Italia aplicava-se apenas à província da Calábria, no S, onde viviam os itali. Este nome parece ser uma forma grecizada de Vitelia, aparentado com o latim vitulus, que significa “vitelo”, ou “bezerro”. Foi possivelmente aplicado a essa região por causa de suas terras de pastagem e seu gado, ou porque seus habitantes supunham ser descendentes de seu deus-touro. Por volta do primeiro século EC, o nome Itália já abrangia praticamente o mesmo território de hoje.

Ao longo dos séculos, pessoas de diferentes raças emigraram para esta terra muito fértil. A primitiva história da Itália inclui guerras entre os que já ali se encontravam e as levas de recém-chegados que periodicamente invadiam a terra. A península servia assim como cadinho de línguas, de sangue e de costumes, à medida que estes diferentes grupos nacionais se estabeleciam ali e casavam-se entre si.

O cristianismo foi levado bem cedo para a Itália, pois, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, prosélitos italianos, bem como judeus de Roma, testemunharam o derramamento do espírito santo e ouviram a explicação de Pedro; sem dúvida, alguns deles se achavam entre os “cerca de três mil” batizados naquela oportunidade. (At 2:1, 10, 41) Ao voltarem para a Itália, podem ter formado o núcleo da congregação cristã em Roma, à qual Paulo, alguns anos depois, dirigiu uma de suas cartas. (Ro 1:1-7) Áquila e Priscila talvez pertencessem a essa congregação da Itália quando receberam ordens do imperador Cláudio, no ano 49 ou início de 50 EC, para deixar o país. Eles chegaram a Corinto pouco antes de Paulo ter chegado ali na sua primeira visita a essa cidade em sua segunda viagem missionária. — At 18:1, 2.

Cornélio, sem dúvida italiano e oficial do exército do “destacamento italiano”, tinha uma casa em Cesareia. (At 10:1) Foi em Cesareia que Paulo, ao ser julgado diante de Festo, recorreu a César. Foi então levado de barco até Mirra, onde, junto com outros prisioneiros, foi transferido para um graneleiro de Alexandria que rumava para a Itália. (At 25:6, 11, 12; 27:1, 5, 6) Sofrendo naufrágio nessa viagem, tiveram de invernar na ilha de Malta. Daí, provavelmente na primavera de 59 EC, Paulo pisou pela primeira vez em solo italiano, em Régio, no “dedão do pé” da Itália, e, pouco depois, desembarcou em Putéoli, na baía de Pozzuoli (Nápoles). Ali, a mais de 160 km ao S de Roma, Paulo permaneceu uma semana junto com a congregação local, antes de subir até Roma pela Via Ápia, ao longo da qual, na “Feira de Ápio e as Três Tavernas”, foi recebido pelos irmãos de Roma. (At 28:11-16) Provavelmente, perto do fim do primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma, ou pouco depois de sua libertação por volta de 61 EC, ele escreveu o livro de Hebreus, enquanto ainda estava na Itália. — He 13:24.

ITAMAR [possivelmente: Pai (ou, Irmão) da Palmeira]. O quarto dos filhos alistados de Arão. (Êx 6:23; Núm 26:60; 1Cr 6:3) Itamar, depois de ter supervisionado a tomada do inventário dos materiais do tabernáculo, junto com seu pai e seus irmãos, foi investido no cargo de sacerdote, numa cerimônia pormenorizada em Êxodo 29. (Êx 28:1; 38:21; 40:12-15) Quando seus dois irmãos mais velhos, Nadabe e Abiú, foram mais tarde executados, por oferecerem “fogo ilegítimo”, Itamar e seu terceiro irmão, Eleazar, receberam ordens de não os prantear. Mais tarde, Itamar e Eleazar receberam deveres sacerdotais adicionais, à medida que Jeová progressivamente os delineou. (Le 10:1-20) Itamar foi nomeado superintendente dos vários serviços do tabernáculo, realizados pelos gersonitas e meraritas. — Núm 3:2-4; 4:28, 33; 7:8.

Os descendentes de Itamar também eram sacerdotes, e, durante os reinados de Saul, de Davi e de Salomão, membros da casa de Eli, descendente de Itamar, oficiaram temporariamente como sumo sacerdote. Quando Davi organizou o serviço do templo, 8 das 24 turmas sacerdotais eram da casa de Itamar. (1Cr 24:1-6; 1Sa 14:3; 22:9; veja SUMO SACERDOTE.) Filhos de Itamar também foram alistados entre as casas paternas de Israel, depois do exílio babilônio. — Esd 8:2.

ITIEL [provavelmente: Comigo Está Deus].

1. Um dos que ouviram o que Agur falou, conforme registrado em Provérbios, capítulo 30; possivelmente filho ou discípulo de Agur. — Pr 30:1.

2. Benjamita cujo descendente vivia em Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 11:4, 7.

ITLA [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "pendurar"]. Uma das cidades fronteiriças de Dã. (Jos 19:40, 42) Sua localização é incerta.

ITMA [duma raiz que significa "menino órfão de pai"]. Um dos diversos poderosos de Davi, alistado somente em Crônicas; moabita. — 1Cr 11:26, 46.

ITNÃ. Cidade no extremo sul de Judá (Jos 15:21, 23), cuja localização é desconhecida.

ITRA [duma raiz que significa "mais do que o suficiente; transbordamento"]. Pai de Amasa, por meio da irmã ou meia-irmã de Davi, Abigail. (2Sa 17:25) É chamado de Jeter em 1 Crônicas 2:17. — Veja JETER N.º 6.

ITRÃ [duma raiz que significa "mais do que o suficiente; transbordamento"].

1. Filho do xeque edomita Disom; descendente de Seir, o horeu. — Gên 36:20, 21, 26; 1Cr 1:38, 41.

2. Descendente de Aser por meio de Zofa. (1Cr 7:30, 36, 37) Provavelmente o mesmo que Jeter (escrito de maneira semelhante em hebraico) do versículo seguinte. — Veja JETER N.º 4.

ITREÃO [duma raiz que significa "mais do que o suficiente; transbordamento"]. Sexto filho de Davi, nascido em Hébron de sua esposa Eglá. — 2Sa 3:5; 1Cr 3:1, 3.

ITRITA [De (Pertencente a) Jeter (ou, Jetro)]. Nome de família na tribo de Judá, ligado com Quiriate-Jearim. (1Cr 2:3, 52, 53) Dois dos poderosos de Davi, Ira e Garebe, eram dessa família. — 2Sa 23:38; 1Cr 11:40.

ITUREIA. Pequeno território com limites variáveis e indefinidos, situado ao NE do mar da Galileia. Pensa-se que o nome "Itureia" derive de Jetur, filho de Ismael, cujos descendentes, que residiam a L do Jordão, foram derrotados pelos israelitas. (Gên 25:15, 16; 1Cr 1:31; 5:18-23) Perto do fim do segundo século AEC, o rei macabeu Aristóbolo I teve êxito na guerra contra a Itureia e acrescentou grande parte de seu território à Judeia. Para continuarem no país, os habitantes da Itureia tiveram de submeter-se à circuncisão e obedecer à lei judaica. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIII, 318 [xi, 3]) Mais tarde, a Itureia tornou-se um dos territórios que compunham a tetrarquia de Filipe, herdada de seu pai, Herodes, o Grande. — Lu 3:1.

IVA. Uma das cidades conquistadas pelos assírios (2Rs 18:34; 19:13; Is 37:13), provavelmente a mesma que Ava. — 2Rs 17:24.

IZAR. Dois nomes, escritos de maneira similar em hebraico, são traduzidos de maneira igual em português.

1. Yits·hár. O segundo dos quatro filhos alistados de Coate; portanto, neto de Levi. (Êx 6:16, 18; Núm 3:17, 19; 1Cr 6:2, 18) Um dos três filhos de Izar, Corá, foi executado no ermo por rebelião. — Êx 6:21; Núm 16:1, 32.

Izar fundou a família levita dos izaritas. (Núm 3:27) Sob o Rei Davi, alguns dos izaritas, cujo cabeça era Selomite, foram designados cantores, funcionários e juízes, ao passo que outros cumpriam deveres levíticos normais. — 1Cr 6:31-38; 23:12, 18; 24:20-22; 26:23, 29; veja AMINADABE N.º 2.

2. Yits·hhár (em concordância com a Vg). Descendente de Judá; filho de Assur e Hela. (1Cr 4:1, 5, 7) Na margem do texto massorético, o nome é escrito Zoar.

IZARITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Izar]. Família levita dos coatitas que descendiam de Izar. — Núm 3:19, 27; 1Cr 24:22; 26:23, 29.

IZIAS [Jah Esparge]. Um dos filhos de Parós que, acatando o conselho de Esdras, despediram suas esposas e filhos estrangeiros. — Esd 10:25, 44.

IZRAÍAS [Jah Brilha; Jah Resplandece].

1. Descendente de Issacar por meio de Tola. — 1Cr 7:1-5.

2. Superintendente dos cantores que ajudou a celebrar o término da reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém por Neemias. — Ne 12:42.

IZRAÍTA. Denominação de Samute, chefe da quinta turma de serviço de Davi que o ministravam. (1Cr 27:8) Samute era quer da cidade, quer da família de Izra.

IZRI [De (Pertencente a) Jezer]. O líder da quarta série de 12 músicos no santuário de Jeová, sob a reorganização de Davi. (1Cr 25:7, 8, 11) Sem a letra hebraica yohdh no começo, seu nome é escrito "Zeri" no versículo 3, onde ele é identificado como filho de Jedutum.

ÍNDICE DE MAPAS

Neste índice, os números das referências em negrito indicam o volume; os outros números identificam as páginas.

Os nomes entre parêntesis, neste índice, usualmente são nomes alternativos do mesmo lugar ou indicações da área em que a cidade ou a aldeia está localizada.

As distâncias em linha reta entre as localidades, conforme declaradas nos artigos, em geral são indicadas em quilômetros.

Nos mapas desta publicação, o alto da página indica o norte.

● no mapa = cidade ou aldeia que pode ser localizada com razoável certeza.

○ no mapa = cidade ou aldeia de cuja localização há uma evidência razoável, mas alguma incerteza.

JAACOBÁ [duma raiz que significa "agarrar o calcanhar; suplantar"]. Um dos maiorais de Simeão que, nos dias de Ezequias, estenderam o território deles ao fértil vale de Gedor por abaterem os seus habitantes. — 1Cr 4:24, 36-41.

JAALA [Cabra-montesa]. Fundador duma família de servos de Salomão, alguns dos quais, junto com os netineus, retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:2, 55-58; Ne 7:7, 57-60.

JAARE-OREGIM. Nome que aparece só em 2 Samuel 21:19. Acredita-se geralmente que um erro de escriba tenha dado margem para este nome e que a leitura correta seja preservada no texto paralelo em 1 Crônicas 20:5. "Jaare" é considerado ser uma alteração de "Jair", e "Oregim" ('o·reghim," "tecelões") é tido como tendo sido copiado inadvertidamente duma linha abaixo do mesmo versículo.

JAARE-OREGUIM. Veja JAARE-OREGIM.

JAARESIAS. Cabeça de família na tribo de Benjamim; filho ou descendente de Jeroão. Ele e os da sua casa moravam em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:1, 27, 28.

JAASIEL [Faça Deus; Deus Fez].

1. Um dos poderosos de Davi, alistado apenas em Crônicas; era mezobaíta. — 1Cr 11:26, 47.

2. Príncipe da tribo de Benjamim, durante o reinado de Davi. Era filho de Abner, portanto, provavelmente primo do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 27:21, 22.

JAASU [forma abreviada de Jaasiel]. Filho de Bani e um dos judeus que acatou a admoestação de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos. — Esd 10:34, 37, 44.

JAATE.

1. Descendente de Judá. Os dois filhos de Jaate fundaram as famílias dos zoratitas. — 1Cr 4:1, 2.

2. Levita descendente de Gérson (Gersom) através de Libni, e antepassado de Asafe. — Êx 6:17; 1Cr 6:1, 20, 39-43.

3. Outro levita descendente de Gérson, mas através do outro filho deste, Simei. Jaate era cabeça sobre seus irmãos, e seus filhos tornaram-se uma casa paterna. — 1Cr 23:6, 7, 10, 11.

4. Levita que viveu durante o reinado de Davi; descendente de Izar, filho de Coate, através de Selomote. — 1Cr 6:18; 24:22.

5. Merarita, um de quatro levitas designados para supervisionar o conserto do templo promovido pelo Rei Josias. — 2Cr 34:12.

JAAZ. Cidade ao L do Jordão e evidentemente situada ao N do Árnon. Provavelmente fora tomada dos moabitas pelo rei amorreu Síon. (Núm 21:23-26) Em Jaaz, os israelitas derrotaram as forças de Síon, e a própria cidade tornou-se propriedade dos rubenitas. (De 2:32, 33; Jos 13:15, 18, 23; Jz 11:20, 21) Subsequentemente, Jaaz foi designada como cidade levita para os meraritas. (Jos 21:34, 36) Mais adiante na história de Israel, a cidade passou a estar sob controle moabita. Na Pedra Moabita, o Rei Mesa gabou-se de ter tirado Jaaz do rei de Israel com 200 guerreiros. Também os profetas Isaías e Jeremias mencionam a cidade em pronunciações contra Moabe. — Is 15:1, 4; Je 48:1, 34.

Embora os peritos tenham sugerido diversos possíveis lugares para a antiga Jaaz, sua localização exata continua desconhecida.

JAAZANIAS [Jeová Deu Ouvidos]. Perto do fim do reino de Judá, parece que este era um nome bastante comum; todos os quatro homens mencionados por este nome na Bíblia viveram dentro do mesmo curto período. O nome é também encontrado nas Cartas de Laquis, e num selo encontrado em Tell en-Nasbeh aparecem as palavras "Ya'azanyahu, servo [oficial] do rei". (The Biblical Archaeologist [O Arqueólogo Bíblico], 1947, p. 71) No entanto, não há nenhuma evidência direta de que esta inscrição identifique uma das seguintes pessoas.

1. Um líder dos recabitas. O profeta Jeremias submeteu tanto a ele como aos recabitas a uma prova, às ordens de Jeová, por levá-los até um dos refeitórios do templo e lhes oferecer vinho para beber. Eles se recusaram, em obediência à ordem que lhes fora dada mais de dois séculos antes por seu antepassado, Jonadabe (Jeonadabe), filho de Recabe. Por causa disso, Jeová prometeu: "De Jonadabe, filho de Recabe, não se deceperá homem, impedindo-o de ficar de pé diante de mim para sempre." Jaazanias era filho de outro Jeremias. — Je 35:1-10, 19.

2. Filho de Safã; a única pessoa mencionada por nome na visão de Ezequiel (612 AEC) dentre os

70 homens que ofereciam incenso perante símbolos idólatras, esculpidos, no templo em Jerusalém. — Ez 8:1, 10, 11.

3. Filho de Azur; um dos 25 homens observados na visão de Ezequiel como estando em pé junto ao portão oriental do templo de Jeová. Jaazanias e seus companheiros 'maquinavam o que era prejudicial e davam mau conselho contra esta cidade', e ordenou-se a Ezequiel que profetizasse contra eles. — Ez 11:1-4.

4. Chefe militar de Judá, no curto período logo após a destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios. Jaazanias (Jezanias, como seu nome é às vezes grafado) era um dos diversos que prontamente apoiaram a designação do governador Gedalias. (2Rs 25:23; Je 40:7, 8) Presume-se que era um dentre "todos os chefes das forças militares" que avisaram Gedalias que Ismael era uma ameaça para a sua vida, e, depois de Ismael ter mesmo assassinado Gedalias, perseguiram Ismael e recuperaram os que este havia levado preso. (Je 40:13, 14; 41:11-16) Jezanias era um dos líderes que indagaram a Jeremias sobre o que deviam fazer então, mas, em vez de seguir o conselho dele, conduziram os poucos remanescentes para baixo, ao Egito. (2Rs 25:26; Je 42:1-3, 8; 43:1-5) "Azarias, filho de Osaías", é possivelmente um irmão de Jaazanias, porém o mais provável é que seja ele mesmo. — Je 43:2.

JAAZIAS. Levita merarita, de quem quatro filhos ou descendentes serviram durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 24:26, 27, 31.

JAAZIEL, I. Músico levita na segunda turma que acompanhou a Arca do Pacto quando ela foi transferida da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:18) No versículo 20 , ele é chamado Aziel. De acordo com 1 Crônicas 16:5, onde ele é chamado Jeiel (o primeiro "Jeiel" naquele versículo), ele recebeu depois deveres regulares como músico perante a Arca.

JAAZIEL, II [Que Deus Contemple; Deus Contemplou].

1. Terceiro filho alistado de Hébron, coatita da tribo de Levi. — 1Cr 23:6, 12, 19; 24:23.

2. Um dos poderosos que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:1, 4.

3. Um dos sacerdotes com trombetas postado diante da Arca do Pacto, depois de Davi a ter trazido a Jerusalém. — 1Cr 16:1, 6.

4. Levita habilitado pelo espírito de Jeová para proferir palavras de encorajamento ao Rei Jeosafá e à congregação, quando foram ameaçados por uma força superior de inimigos. "Assim [vos] disse Jeová: 'Não tenhais medo nem fiqueis aterrorizados por causa desta grande massa de gente'", declarou Jaaziel, "'pois a batalha não é vossa, mas de Deus. . . . Não tereis de lutar neste caso. Tomai a vossa posição, ficai parados e vede a salvação da parte de Jeová a vosso favor.'" (2Cr 20:14-17) Jaaziel era filho de Zacarias, descendente de Asafe, da família de Gersom (Gérson [Gên 46:11]) dos levitas, portanto, não era sacerdote. — 1Cr 6:39-43.

5. Pai de Secanias, que era um dos que retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 5.

JABAL. Descendente de Caim; filho de Lameque com sua primeira esposa, Ada. (Gên 4:17, 19, 20) Jabal é chamado de "fundador dos que moram em tendas e têm gado". Jabal não foi o primeiro pastor, porque Abel o fora antes dele; mas Jabal evidentemente começou, ou se destacou, como nômade na criação de gado, como modo de vida. Talvez inventasse as tendas, que seriam muito mais fáceis de transportar do que moradias permanentes, quando o pasto se esgotasse.

JABES.

1. [possivelmente: Lugar Ressequido]. Cidade na parte setentrional de Gileade. Também conhecida como Jabes-Gileade, é mencionada na história dos juízes e dos reis. — Jz 21:8; 1Sa 11:1; 1Cr 10:11, 12; veja JABES-GILEADE.

2. [possivelmente: Ressequido]. Pai do Rei Salum, de Israel. — 2Rs 15:10, 13, 14.

JABES-GILEADE [possivelmente: Lugar Ressequido de Gileade]. Antiga cidade no território tribal de Gade, ao L do Jordão. Não há certeza da sua localização exata, embora a maioria dos peritos acredite que se encontrava um pouco ao L do Jordão, na vizinhança do uádi Yabis (Jabes), a uns 35 km ao S do mar da Galileia.

A primeira menção de Jabes-Gileade se deu nos dias dos juízes, relacionada com a retribuição feita à tribo vizinha de Benjamim, pela sua tolerância de crassa imoralidade. (Jz 21:8) Naquela ocasião, quando os israelitas praticamente exterminaram toda a tribo de Benjamim (apenas 600 varões escaparam), verificou-se que nenhum homem de Jabes-Gileade havia participado em administrar esta punição justificada. Portanto, determinou-se que todos os homens, mulheres e crianças de Jabes-Gileade, com exceção das virgens, fossem mortos. As 400 virgens assim poupadas foram então entregues como esposas aos benjamitas fugitivos, para impedir a extinção da tribo. — Jz 20:1–21:14.

Uns três séculos mais tarde, quando todo o Israel clamava por um rei visível, tal como as outras nações possuíam, os amonitas ameaçavam furar o olho direito de todo varão que morava em Jabes-Gileade, ameaça que só foi removida quando Saul recrutou uma força de 330.000 homens e pôs os amonitas em fuga. (1Sa 11:1-15) Quarenta anos mais tarde, os filisteus derrotaram os israelitas e penduraram os cadáveres decapitados de Saul e de seus três filhos no muro da praça pública dentro de Bete-Sã. Ao saberem desta desgraça, homens valentes de Jabes-Gileade fizeram uma arriscada incursão noturna em que removeram os cadáveres, trouxeram-nos a Jabes-Gileade, queimaram-nos e deram aos ossos um sepultamento respeitoso. Então jejuaram por sete dias. — 1Sa 31:8-13; 1Cr 10:8-12.

Davi, como rei recém-empossado de Judá, enviou elogios e sua bênção aos cidadãos de Jabes-Gileade, por terem demonstrado benevolência neste sentido para com o falecido ungido de Israel. (2Sa 2:4-7) Mais tarde, Davi mandou que os ossos de Saul e de Jonatã fossem trazidos de Jabes-Gileade e enterrados na sepultura da família de Saul, em território benjamita. — 2Sa 21:12-14.

JABEZ.

1. [duma raiz que significa "dor"]. Descendente de Judá que a mãe chamou de Jabez, por causa da sua dor ao dá-lo à luz. Jabez mostrou ser mais honroso do que seus irmãos, e, em resposta à sua oração, obteve a bênção e a proteção de Jeová. — 1Cr 4:1, 9, 10.

2. Evidentemente, um lugar em Judá, talvez fundado pelo N.º 1. Jabez era onde moravam três famílias de escribas. (1Cr 2:55) Desconhece-se hoje sua localização exata.

JABIM [possivelmente: Discernidor; Entendedor; ou: Edificador]. Talvez um nome ou título dinástico dos reis cananeus de Hazor.

1. O rei de Hazor, quando Josué invadiu a Terra da Promessa. Jabim formou uma confederação com reis cananeus setentrionais, e estes ajuntaram contra Israel uma força 'tão numerosa como os grãos de areia, . . . [inclusive] muitíssimos cavalos e carros de guerra'. Seus exércitos coligados, acampados junto às águas de Merom, foram derrotados pelo ataque de surpresa de Josué e pela subsequente perseguição a eles. Jabim foi executado quando a própria Hazor, mais tarde, foi capturada e incendiada. — Jos 11:1-14; 12:7, 19.

2. Posterior rei cananeu, que governava desde a Hazor reconstruída; possivelmente um descendente do N.º 1. Ser Jabim chamado de "rei de Canaã" talvez indique sua supremacia sobre outros reis cananeus, dando-lhe excepcional poder e autoridade; parece que havia outros que estavam pelo menos aliados a ele. Por outro lado, a expressão talvez simplesmente o diferencie dos reis de outras terras. O exército de Jabim, incluindo 900 carros equipados com foices de ferro, estava sob o comando de Sísera, que obtém maior proeminência no relato do que o próprio Jabim. — Jz 4:2, 3; 5:19, 20.

Com a permissão de Jeová, Jabim oprimiu duramente o Israel apóstata durante 20 anos. Mas, quando este invocou a Jeová Deus para ser liberto, Ele suscitou Baraque e Débora para liderar Israel à vitória sobre o exército de Jabim. Sísera foi morto pela esposa de Héber, o queneu, que tinha paz com Jabim. (Jz 4:3-22) Os israelitas continuaram a guerrear contra Jabim, e, por fim, o mataram. — Jz 4:23, 24; Sal 83:9, 10.

JABNÉ [Que [Deus] Edifique; [Deus] Edificou]. Cidade filisteia, murada, que sofreu derrota às mãos do Rei Uzias, de Judá. (2Cr 26:6) Provavelmente trata-se de Jabneel. — Jos 15:11; veja JABNEEL N.º 1.

JABNEEL [Que Deus Edifique; Deus Edificou].

1. Lugar fronteiriço de Judá (Jos 15:1, 11), provavelmente a Jabné que o Rei Uzias (829-778 AEC) tomou dos filisteus. (2Cr 26:6) Jabneel é identificada com a atual Yavne. Situada a uns 6 km do mar Mediterrâneo, Yavne fica num morro arenoso, isolado, 20 km ao S de Jope.

2. Lugar fronteiriço de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 33) Embora alguns sugiram uma identificação da Jabneel talmúdica com Khirbet Yamma, a Jabneel bíblica é identificada com Tell en-Naʽam (Tel Yinʽam), perto duma fonte, a uns 8 km ao SSO de Tiberíades. O nome é preservado na atual aldeia vizinha de Yavne'el.

JABOQUE, VALE DA TORRENTE DO. Um dos principais vales de torrente ou uádis ao L do Jordão, primeiro mencionado nas Escrituras com relação à travessia por Jacó, junto com os da sua casa, do "vau de Jaboque". Também, perto deste vau, Jacó engalfinhou-se com um anjo. — Gên 32:22-30.

Embora as águas das cabeceiras do Jaboque aflorem perto de ʽAmman (a antiga Rabá), o uádi recebe água de vários riachos perenes e de numerosas correntes hibernais antes de desaguar no Jordão, a uns 39 km ao N do Mar Morto. Apenas uns 40 km separam a cabeceira do vale da torrente de seu fim, mas o curso semicircular do Jaboque cobre uns 100 km. Seu atual nome árabe, uádi Zarqa, significa literalmente "Vale da Torrente do Azul". Talvez este nome derive da cor azul-cinzenta que o Jaboque apresenta quando visto à distância. Pequenos peixes abundam em suas águas rasas, de fácil travessia.

Arbustos de oleandro e muitas espécies de árvores pequenas ladeiam o profundo vale fértil, através do qual o Jaboque flui. Este vale, com suas vertentes íngremes, servia de fronteira natural. (De 3:16) A primeira seção do vale de torrente, que se estende do S para o N, certa vez constituía uma fronteira entre os amonitas e os amorreus (Núm 21:24), ao passo que a seção que se estende do O para o L dividia Gileade em duas partes e formava os limites entre os domínios dos reis amorreus, Síon e Ogue. (De 2:37; Jos 12:2; Jz 11:13, 22) Atualmente, este mesmo vale é uma das melhores rotas para se atravessar o Jordão procedente do que antigamente se chamava Gileade.

JACÃ [por um jogo de palavras, aparentado com o nome Acor, que significa "Banimento; Dificuldade"]. Quinto dos sete filhos mencionados de Abiail; um gadita. — 1Cr 5:13, 14.

JACINTO. Pedra semipreciosa, azul-escura; em grego, hy·á·kin·thos. (Primariamente, a palavra se referia à flor deste nome, provavelmente descrevendo o íris azul-escuro.) Diz-se que a 11.ª das pedras de alicerce da Nova Jerusalém é de jacinto. — Re 21:20.

O azul jacintino é uma das cores das couraças que constam na descrição dos exércitos de cavalaria, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 9:16, 17. As couraças mencionadas provavelmente eram as usadas pelos cavaleiros. As outras duas cores das couraças são mencionadas como a cor de fogo e o amarelo sulfurino. Em vista da declaração posterior de que os cavalos exalavam fogo, fumaça e enxofre, o azul jacintino talvez represente o negrume da fumaça, a qual, junto com fogo e enxofre, pode ser destrutiva para a vida.

JACÓ [Agarrador do Calcanhar; Suplantador].

1. Filho de Isaque e Rebeca, e gêmeo mais moço de Esaú. Os pais de Jacó já estavam casados 20 anos antes de nascerem estes gêmeos, seus únicos filhos, em 1858 AEC. Isaque, nessa época, tinha 60 anos. Assim, como se deu no caso de Abraão, as orações de Isaque para ter descendentes só foram respondidas depois que sua paciência e sua fé nas promessas de Deus tinham sido plenamente testadas. — Gên 25:20, 21, 26; Ro 9:7-10.

Em sua gravidez, Rebeca sentiu-se afligida pela luta dos gêmeos no seu ventre, os quais, explicou Jeová, eram o início de duas nações oponentes. Ademais, Jeová declarou que, contrário ao costume geral, o mais velho serviria ao mais jovem. Concordemente, Jacó, que foi o segundo a nascer, segurava o calcanhar de Esaú quando nasceram; daí o nome Jacó, que significa "Agarrador do Calcanhar". (Gên 25:22-26) Jeová demonstrou assim sua capacidade de detectar a inclinação genética dos nascituros, e de exercer sua presciência e seu direito de escolher, de antemão, a quem ele prefere para seus propósitos; contudo, de forma alguma ele predetermina o destino final dos indivíduos. — Ro 9:10-12; Os 12:3.

Em contraste com Esaú, filho favorito de seu pai, que era um tipo de caçador selvagem, irrequieto e perambulante, Jacó é descrito como "homem inculpe [hebr.: tam], morando em tendas", alguém que levava uma tranquila vida pastoril e merecia confiança no trato dos assuntos domésticos, alguém especialmente amado pela mãe. (Gên 25:27, 28) Esta palavra hebraica tam é usada em outros lugares para descrever os aprovados por Deus. À guisa de exemplo, "homens sanguinários odeiam ao inculpe", todavia, Jeová assegura que "o futuro deste homem [inculpe] será pacífico". (Pr 29:10; Sal 37:37) O íntegro Jó "mostrava ser inculpe [hebr.: tam] e reto". — Jó 1:1, 8; 2:3.

Recebeu o Direito de Primogenitura e a Bênção. Abraão só morreu depois de seu neto Jacó já ter 15 anos, em 1843 AEC, e, assim, o menino teve ampla oportunidade de saber do pacto juramentado de Deus diretamente dos lábios de seu avô, bem como de seu pai. (Gên 22:15-18) Jacó compreendia o grande privilégio que seria participar no cumprimento de tais promessas divinas. Por fim, surgiu a oportunidade de comprar legalmente de seu irmão o direito de primogenitura e tudo o que ela incluía. (De 21:15-17) Esta oportunidade surgiu certo dia, quando Esaú veio exausto do campo e sentiu o cheiro do saboroso cozido que seu irmão tinha preparado. "Depressa, por favor", exclamou Esaú, "dá-me um bocado do vermelho — do vermelho aí, pois estou cansado!" A resposta de Jacó foi: "Vende-me primeiro teu direito de primogênito!" 'Esaú desprezou a primogenitura', e, assim, a venda foi feita rapidamente e selada por um juramento solene. (Gên 25:29-34; He 12:16) Era motivo suficiente para Jeová dizer: "Amei a Jacó, mas odiei a Esaú." — Ro 9:13; Mal 1:2, 3.

Era direito Jacó fingir ser Esaú?

Quando Isaque já era idoso e pensava que ia morrer em breve, mandou Esaú caçar carne de veado, dizendo: "Deixa-me comer, para que a minha alma te abençoe antes de eu morrer." Rebeca, porém, ouviu a conversa e prontamente mandou Jacó apanhar dois cabritinhos, a fim de que ela pudesse preparar um prato gostoso para Isaque, e ela disse a Jacó: "Tens de levá-lo a teu pai e ele tem de comê-lo, para que te abençoe antes da sua morte."

Ela colocou até mesmo as peles dos cabritinhos sobre as mãos e o pescoço de Jacó, para que Isaque, ao apalpar Jacó, chegasse à conclusão de que era Esaú. Quando Jacó levou o alimento a seu pai, Isaque perguntou-lhe: "Quem és, meu filho?" E Jacó respondeu: "Eu sou Esaú, teu primogênito." Conforme Jacó bem sabia, ele tinha legalmente o direito de assumir o papel de Esaú, o primogênito de Isaque. Isaque apalpou Jacó para saber se realmente era Esaú, e disse: "A voz é a voz de Jacó, mas as mãos são as mãos de Esaú." Todavia, tudo saiu bem, e, conforme diz o relato, Isaque "o abençoou". (Gên 27:1-29) Haviam Rebeca e Jacó agido direito?

Não pode haver dúvida de que Jacó tinha o direito à bênção. Antes de nascerem os gêmeos, Jeová dissera a Rebeca: "O mais velho servirá ao mais jovem." (Gên 25:23) Mais tarde, em harmonia com a inclinação que Jeová já previra e que o induzira a amar mais a Jacó do que a Esaú, Esaú vendeu seu direito de primogenitura a Jacó por apenas uma tigela de cozido. — Gên 25:29-34.

O relato bíblico não revela até que ponto Isaque sabia destas indicações quanto a quem havia de receber a bênção. Não sabemos precisamente por que Rebeca e Jacó agiram daquela maneira, exceto que ambos sabiam que a bênção pertencia a Jacó. Jacó não fingiu maliciosamente ser o outro para conseguir algo a que não tinha direito. A Bíblia não condena o que Rebeca e Jacó fizeram. O resultado foi que Jacó recebeu de direito a bênção. O próprio Isaque evidentemente viu que se fizera a vontade de Jeová. Pouco depois, quando enviou Jacó a Harã, para obter uma esposa, Isaque abençoou Jacó mais uma vez e disse especificamente: "O Deus Todo-poderoso . . . te dará a bênção de Abraão." (Gên 28:3, 4; compare isso com He 11:20.) Chegamos assim corretamente à conclusão de que o caso resultou assim como Jeová se propusera. A Bíblia especifica claramente a lição que devemos tirar deste relato, advertindo de que devemos ter cuidado "para que não haja fornicador, nem alguém que não estime as coisas sagradas, igual a Esaú, que em troca de uma só refeição renunciou aos seus direitos de primogênito". — He 12:16.

Mudança de Jacó para Padã-Arã. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 529) Jacó tinha 77 anos quando deixou Berseba para ir à terra de seus antepassados, terra em que passou os próximos 20 anos de sua vida. (Gên 28:10; 31:38) Depois de viajar para o NNE por uns 100 km, parou em Luz (Betel), nas colinas de Judá, para ali passar a noite, utilizando uma pedra qual travesseiro. Ali, em seus sonhos, viu uma escada, ou escadaria, que atingia os céus, na qual anjos subiam e desciam. No topo, Jeová aparecia em visão, e ele então confirmou a Jacó o pacto divino feito com Abraão e com Isaque. — Gên 28:11-13; 1Cr 16:16, 17.

Neste pacto, Jeová prometeu a Jacó que o guardaria e sustentaria, e que não o abandonaria, até que a terra em que estava deitado se tornasse dele, e a semente (ou descendência) dele se tivesse tornado inumerável como as partículas de pó da terra. Ademais, declarou: "Todas as famílias do solo hão de abençoar a si mesmas por meio de ti e por meio da tua descendência [semente]." (Gên 28:13-15) Quando Jacó se deu plenamente conta do sentido da experiência que teve naquela noite, exclamou: "Quão atemorizante é este lugar! Não é senão a casa de Deus." Assim, mudou o nome de Luz para Betel, que significa "Casa de Deus", e passou a erguer uma coluna e a ungi-la como testemunha destes momentosos eventos. Em grata resposta à promessa de apoio da parte de Deus, Jacó também jurou que, sem falta, daria a Jeová um décimo de tudo que recebesse. — Gên 28:16-22.

Prosseguindo viagem, Jacó finalmente conheceu sua prima, Raquel, na vizinhança de Harã, e foi convidado pelo pai dela, Labão, irmão da mãe de Jacó, a ficar com eles. Jacó apaixonou-se por Raquel e combinou trabalhar sete anos para o pai dela, se este lha desse como esposa. Os anos que passavam pareciam "como apenas alguns dias", tão profundo era o amor de Jacó por Raquel. Entretanto, por ocasião do casamento, Raquel foi aleivosamente substituída por Leia, sua irmã mais velha, explicando Labão: "Não é costumeiro . . . dar a mais jovem antes da primogênita." Depois de celebrar este casamento por uma semana, Labão então deu também Raquel a Jacó como esposa, depois dum acordo para que Jacó trabalhasse mais sete anos em pagamento dela. Labão também deu a Leia e a Raquel duas servas, Zilpa e Bila, respectivamente. — Gên 29:1-29; Os 12:12.

Jeová começou a edificar uma grande nação com base neste arranjo matrimonial. Leia deu a Jacó quatro filhos em sucessão: Rubem, Simeão, Levi e Judá. Raquel, vendo que continuava estéril, deu então a Jacó sua escrava Bila, e, por meio dela, obteve dois filhos: Dã e Naftali. Nesta época, Leia continuava estéril. Assim, ela também deu a Jacó a sua escrava, Zilpa, e desta união obteve dois filhos, a saber, Gade e Aser. Leia começou então de novo a ter filhos, dando à luz primeiro Issacar, daí Zebulão, e então uma filha, chamada Diná. Raquel, finalmente, ficou grávida e deu à luz José. Em consequência disto, no comparativamente curto período de sete anos, Jacó foi abençoado com muitos filhos. — Gên 29:30–30:24.

Jacó É Enriquecido Antes de Partir de Harã. Tendo cumprido seu contrato de trabalho de 14 anos, para a obtenção de suas esposas, Jacó mostrou-se então ansioso de retornar à sua terra. Mas Labão, vendo como Jeová o havia abençoado devido a Jacó, insistiu com Jacó para que continuasse a supervisionar os rebanhos dele; disse a Jacó que este poderia até mesmo estipular seu próprio salário. Naquela parte do mundo, as ovelhas e as cabras, em geral, são de uma única cor, as ovelhas sendo brancas, e, as cabras, negras. Jacó, portanto, pediu que apenas as ovelhas e as cabras de cor ou marcas incomuns lhe fossem dadas — todas as ovelhas de cor marrom-escura, e todas as cabras com qualquer salpicado de branco. "Ora, isto é excelente!" foi a resposta de Labão. E, a fim de manter o salário de Jacó tão baixo quanto possível, Labão, à sugestão de Jacó, retirou dos rebanhos todas as cabras listradas, salpicadas e malhadas, e todos os carneiros novos, marrom-escuros, que entregou aos cuidados de seus próprios filhos, até mesmo interpondo uma distância de três dias entre eles, para impedir qualquer cruzamento entre os dois rebanhos. Apenas os animais nascidos com cor incomum, no futuro, seriam de Jacó. — Gên 30:25-36.

Assim, Jacó começou a cuidar apenas das ovelhas de cor normal e das cabras sem sinais. No entanto, trabalhou muito e fez o que achava que iria aumentar a quantidade dos animais de cor incomum. Pegou varas frescas de estoraque, de amendoeira e de plátano, descascou-as de modo a lhes dar um aspecto listrado e malhado. A estas colocou nas calhas dos bebedouros dos animais, aparentemente pensando que, se os animais olhassem para as faixas quando no cio, haveria uma influência pré-natal, que faria com que a cria fosse de cor malhada ou incomum. Jacó também teve o cuidado de colocar as varas nos cochos apenas quando os animais mais fortes e robustos estavam em cio. — Gên 30:37-42.

Com que resultado? As crias com marcas ou de cor incomum, e que, por conseguinte, eram o salário de Jacó, mostraram ser mais numerosas do que as de cor uniforme, normal, que seriam de Labão. Visto que o resultado desejado foi conseguido, Jacó provavelmente imaginava que o responsável por isso era seu estratagema com as varas listradas. Nesse particular, ele provavelmente comungava da mesma concepção errônea, comum a muitas pessoas, a saber, que tais coisas podem influir na prole. No entanto, num sonho, seu Criador o instruiu a pensar de outra forma.

Em seu sonho, Jacó veio a saber que certos princípios genéticos, e não as varas, eram responsáveis pelo seu êxito. Ao passo que Jacó cuidava apenas dos animais de cor uniforme, a visão, todavia, lhe revelou que os cabritos eram listrados, salpicados e malhados. Como poderia isto acontecer? Pelo que parece, eram híbridos, embora tivessem cor uniforme, sendo o resultado de cruzamentos feitos no rebanho de Labão antes de Jacó começar a ser pago. Assim, determinados animais dentre estes traziam, nas suas células reprodutoras, os fatores hereditários que resultariam em futuras gerações malhadas e salpicadas, segundo as leis da hereditariedade descobertas por Gregório Mendel no século 19. — Gên 31:10-12.

Nos seis anos em que Jacó trabalhou sob este arranjo, Jeová o abençoou e o fez prosperar imensamente, aumentando não só os rebanhos dele, mas também o número de seus servos, de seus camelos e de seus jumentos, e isto apesar de Labão continuar a mudar o salário em que haviam concordado. Por fim, o "verdadeiro Deus de Betel" instruiu Jacó a retornar à Terra da Promessa. — Gên 30:43; 31:1-13, 41.

Retorno à Terra da Promessa. Temendo que Labão tentasse novamente impedir Jacó de deixar o serviço dele, Jacó tomou secretamente suas esposas e seus filhos, e tudo o que possuía, cruzou o rio Eufrates, e dirigiu-se para Canaã. Ao tencionar este passo, Jacó provavelmente estava apascentando seus rebanhos perto do Eufrates, conforme indicado em Gênesis 31:4, 21. Nessa ocasião, Labão estava ausente, tosquiando seus rebanhos, e só foi informado da partida de Jacó três dias depois. Pode ter-se passado mais tempo até terminar a tosquia e serem feitos preparativos para Labão, com suas forças, perseguir a Jacó. Ao todo, isto deve ter dado a Jacó tempo suficiente para levar seus rebanhos, que se moviam lentamente, até a região montanhosa de Gileade, antes de Labão o alcançar, a uma distância não inferior a uns 560 km de Harã, distância esta, porém, que podia ser facilmente coberta em sete dias por Labão e seus parentes montados em camelos, em acirrada perseguição. — Gên 31:14-23.

Quando Labão encontrou o objeto de sua perseguição acampado a alguns km ao N do Jaboque, exigiu que Jacó explicasse: Por que tinha partido sem permitir que Labão beijasse suas filhas e seus netos em despedida, e por que tinha roubado os deuses de Labão? (Gên 31:24-30) A resposta à primeira pergunta era um tanto óbvia — o receio de que Labão o impedisse de partir. Quanto à segunda pergunta, Jacó nada sabia sobre um furto, e uma busca não revelou que Raquel havia deveras roubado os terafins da família e os havia escondido no cesto da sela de seu camelo. — Gên 31:31-35.

Uma explicação para o modo de agir de Raquel, e a preocupação de Labão, é a seguinte: "A posse dos deuses domésticos assinalava a pessoa como sendo o herdeiro legítimo, o que explica a ansiedade de Labão, em Gên 31:26 ss., de recuperar os deuses domésticos, que estavam com Jacó." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 220, n. 51.

Uma vez resolvida pacificamente a contenda entre eles, Jacó ergueu uma coluna de pedra e então empilhou pedras, que permaneceram ali por muitos anos, como testemunho do pacto de paz que estes dois haviam concluído com uma refeição cerimonial. Os nomes dados a este montão de pedras foram Galeede ("Montão de Testemunho") e A Torre de Vigia. — Gên 31:36-55.

Jacó mostrou-se então ansioso de fazer as pazes também com seu irmão, Esaú, a quem já não via por mais de 20 anos. Para aplacar qualquer ódio latente que seu irmão pudesse ainda nutrir, Jacó mandou à sua frente custosos presentes para Esaú — centenas de cabras e ovelhas, e muitos camelos, jumentos e cabeças de gado. (Gên 32:3-21) Jacó tinha fugido de Canaã praticamente sem nada; agora, graças à bênção de Jeová, retornava um homem rico.

Por que fez o anjo com quem Jacó se engalfinhou que este mancasse?

Na noite em que a casa de Jacó atravessou o Jaboque em caminho para o S, ao encontro de Esaú, Jacó teve a experiência bem incomum de lutar com um anjo, e, devido à sua perseverança, seu nome foi mudado para Israel, que significa "Contendedor (Perseverador) com Deus; ou: Deus Contende". (Gên 32:22-28) Depois disso, ambos os nomes surgem com frequência em paralelismos poéticos, hebraicos. (Sal 14:7; 22:23; 78:5, 21, 71; 105:10, 23) Nesta contenda, o anjo tocou na concavidade da articulação da coxa de Jacó, e Jacó passou a mancar pelo resto da vida — talvez para lhe ensinar humildade; era um constante lembrete de não se exaltar demais por causa de sua prosperidade, concedida por Deus, ou por ter-se engalfinhado com um anjo. Em comemoração destes momentosos eventos, Jacó chamou aquele lugar de Peniel ou Penuel. — Gên 32:25, 30-32.

Depois de concluído o encontro amigável entre Jacó e Esaú, estes gêmeos, agora com cerca de 97 anos, seguiram cada um o seu caminho, presumivelmente não se encontrando de novo senão quando juntos sepultaram seu pai, Isaque, uns 23 anos mais tarde. Esaú dirigiu-se para o S, para Seir, com os presentes recebidos, e Jacó voltou-se para o N, atravessando de novo o Jaboque. — Gên 33:1-17; 35:29.

Os Próximos 33 Anos Como Residente Forasteiro. Depois de separar-se de Esaú, Jacó fixou-se em Sucote. Este foi o primeiro lugar em que Jacó permaneceu por um tempo mais longo, após ter voltado de Padã-Arã. Não se declara quanto tempo ficou aqui, mas pode ter sido por vários anos, pois construiu para si uma estrutura permanente para morar, e também barracas ou alguma espécie de baias cobertas, para seu gado. — Gên 33:17.

A próxima mudança de Jacó foi em direção O, cruzando o Jordão para a vizinhança de Siquém, onde comprou um lote de terreno dos filhos de Hamor por "cem peças de dinheiro [hebr.: qesi·táh]". (Gên 33:18-20; Jos 24:32) O valor daquela antiga unidade monetária, a qesi·táh, é hoje desconhecido, mas cem delas, ao todo, podem ter sido uma soma considerável de prata, quando pesada, visto não haver moedas naqueles dias.

Foi em Siquém que Diná, filha de Jacó, começou a associar-se com as mulheres cananeias, e isto, por sua vez, abriu o caminho para Siquém, filho do maioral Hamor, violentá-la. No rastro deste episódio, as coisas logo assumiram proporções além do controle de Jacó — os filhos dele mataram todos os habitantes do sexo masculino de Siquém, tomaram cativas as mulheres e as crianças, apropriaram-se de todos os bens e riquezas daquela comunidade, e fizeram que Jacó, seu pai, se tornasse mau cheiro entre os habitantes do país. — Gên 34:1-31.

Jacó foi então divinamente orientado a deixar Siquém e a descer a Betel, o que ele fez. No entanto, antes de partir, fez com que os da sua casa se purificassem, mudassem de roupa, removessem todos os seus deuses falsos (provavelmente incluindo os terafins de Labão), bem como os brincos possivelmente usados como amuletos. Jacó os enterrou fora do alcance da vista, perto de Siquém. — Gên 35:1-4.

Betel, a "Casa de Deus", tinha importância especial para Jacó, pois fora ali, talvez uns 30 anos antes, que Jeová transferira para ele o pacto abraâmico. Agora, depois de Jacó construir um altar para este grande Deus de seus antepassados, Jeová expressou novamente o pacto e também confirmou que o nome de Jacó tinha sido mudado para Israel. Jacó erigiu então uma coluna sobre a qual derramou uma oferta de bebida e de óleo, em comemoração destes momentosos eventos. Foi também enquanto permanecia ali, em Betel, que Débora, ama de sua mãe, morreu e foi sepultada. — Gên 35:5-15.

Novamente, não sabemos quanto tempo Jacó morou em Betel. Ao partir dali e se mudar para o S, e enquanto ainda se achava a alguma distância de Belém (Efrate), Raquel sentiu dores de parto, e, na luta de dar à luz seu segundo filho, Benjamim, ela faleceu. Jacó sepultou ali sua amada Raquel, e erigiu uma coluna para assinalar a sepultura dela. — Gên 35:16-20.

Este homem, Israel, agora abençoado com o pleno complemento de 12 filhos, dos quais surgiriam as 12 tribos de Israel, viajou mais para o S. Seu acampamento seguinte é descrito como estando "a certa distância além da torre de Éder", o que o coloca em algum lugar entre Belém e Hébron. Foi enquanto morava ali que seu filho mais velho, Rubem, teve relações sexuais com a concubina de seu pai, Bila, a mãe de Dã e de Naftali. Rubem talvez imaginasse que seu pai era idoso demais para fazer algo a respeito, mas Jeová desaprovou isso, e, por causa deste ato incestuoso, Rubem perdeu os direitos de primogenitura. — Gên 35:21-26; 49:3, 4; De 27:20; 1Cr 5:1.

Talvez fosse antes de seu filho, José, ser vendido à escravidão egípcia que Jacó mudou sua morada para Hébron, onde seu idoso pai, Isaque, ainda vivia, mas não se tem certeza da data desta mudança. — Gên 35:27.

Certo dia, Jacó mandou José (então com 17 anos) para ver como seus irmãos estavam passando, enquanto cuidavam dos rebanhos de seu pai. Quando José finalmente os localizou em Dotã, a uns 100 km ao N de Hébron, eles o agarraram e o venderam a uma caravana de comerciantes que ia para o Egito. Isto aconteceu em 1750 AEC. Daí, levaram seu pai a crer que José fora morto por um animal selvagem. Durante muitos dias, Jacó lamentou tal perda, recusando-se a ser consolado e dizendo: "Descerei pranteando para meu filho ao Seol!" (Gên 37:2, 3, 12-36) A morte de Isaque, seu pai, em 1738 AEC, apenas aumentou seu pesar. — Gên 35:28, 29.

A Mudança para o Egito. Cerca de dez anos depois da morte de Isaque, uma extensa fome obrigou Jacó a enviar dez de seus filhos ao Egito, para obter cereais. Benjamim permaneceu com ele. O administrador de alimentos de Faraó, José, reconheceu seus irmãos e exigiu que trouxessem seu irmão mais moço, Benjamim, ao retornarem ao Egito. (Gên 41:57; 42:1-20) No entanto, quando se mencionou esta exigência a Jacó, este, de início, se recusou a deixá-lo ir, temendo que algum dano sobreviesse a este filho querido da sua velhice; Benjamim, nessa época, tinha pelo menos 22 anos. (Gên 42:29-38) Apenas quando todo o alimento obtido no Egito já tinha sido consumido é que Jacó, por fim, consentiu com a ida de Benjamim. — Gên 43:1-14; At 7:12.

Uma vez efetuada a reconciliação de José e seus irmãos, veio o convite para que Jacó e toda a sua casa, junto com todo o seu gado e seus pertences, se mudassem para a terra fértil de Gósen, no delta do Egito, pois a grande fome devia durar mais cinco anos. Faraó até mesmo forneceu carroças e provisões alimentares para ajudá-los nisso. (Gên 45:9-24) Ao descerem para lá, Jeová assegurou a Jacó que esta mudança tinha Sua bênção e aprovação. (Gên 46:1-4) Todas as almas contadas como pertencentes à casa de Jacó, incluindo Manassés, Efraim e outros que nasceram, talvez, no Egito, antes de Jacó morrer, totalizavam 70. (Gên 46:5-27; Êx 1:5; De 10:22) Este total não incluía Leia, que morrera na Terra da Promessa (Gên 49:31), nem as filhas de Jacó, cujos nomes não são citados, nem as esposas de seus filhos. — Gên 46:26; compare isso com Gênesis 37:35.

Pouco depois de chegar ao Egito, em 1728 AEC, Jacó foi levado à corte de Faraó, e ali ele cumprimentou o rei com uma bênção. Jacó descreveu-se como residente forasteiro (igual a Abraão e Isaque, porque assim como estes, ele também não havia herdado a terra prometida por Deus). Quando se lhe perguntou a sua idade, Jacó respondeu que tinha 130 anos, mas que, comparado com os de seus antepassados, seus dias haviam sido "poucos e aflitivos". — Gên 47:7-10.

Pouco antes da sua morte, Jacó abençoou seus netos, os filhos de José, e, por orientação divina, colocou o mais jovem Efraim à frente do mais velho Manassés. Daí, Jacó declarou a José que receberia a porção dupla da herança de primogênito: "Deveras te dou uma lombada de terra mais do que a teus irmãos, tendo-a eu tomado da mão dos amorreus com a minha espada e com o meu arco." (Gên 48:1-22; 1Cr 5:1) Visto que Jacó comprara pacificamente dos filhos de Hamor o lote de terreno perto de Siquém (Gên 33:19, 20), parece que esta promessa a José era uma expressão da fé de Jacó, na qual ele falava profeticamente da futura conquista de Canaã pelos seus descendentes, como se já tivesse sido realizada pela sua própria espada e arco. (Veja AMORREU.) A porção dupla de José, daquela terra conquistada, consistia nos dois quinhões dados às tribos de Efraim e de Manassés.

Antes de falecer, Jacó reuniu forças para abençoar individualmente seus 12 filhos. (Gên 49:1-28) Mostrou ter fé na realização dos propósitos de Jeová. (He 11:21) Por causa da sua fé, e por Jeová lhe ter especificamente confirmado o pacto abraâmico de bênção, as Escrituras muitas vezes se referem a Jeová não só como Deus de Abraão e de Isaque, mas também de Jacó. — Êx 3:6; 1Cr 29:18; Mt 22:32.

Finalmente, em 1711 AEC, depois de 17 anos de residência no Egito, Jacó morreu aos 147 anos. (Gên 47:27, 28) Assim terminou o período de história desde o nascimento de Jacó até a sua morte, história que ocupa mais da metade das páginas do livro de Gênesis. (Caps 25-50) De acordo com o desejo de Jacó, de ser sepultado em Canaã, José primeiramente mandou que os médicos egípcios embalsamassem o corpo de seu pai, em preparação para tal viagem. Um grande cortejo fúnebre, condizente com o destaque de José, seu filho, partiu então do Egito. Quando chegou à região do Jordão, houve sete dias de ritos de luto, após os quais os filhos de Jacó sepultaram seu pai na caverna de Macpela, onde Abraão e Isaque tinham sido sepultados. — Gên 49:29-33; 50:1-14.

2. Os profetas frequentemente usaram o termo "Jacó" em sentido figurado, para referir-se à nação que descendeu deste patriarca. (Is 9:8; 27:9; Je 10:25; Ez 39:25; Am 6:8; Miq 1:5; Ro 11:26) Jesus, em certa ocasião, empregou o nome Jacó em sentido figurado, ao falar daqueles que estariam no "reino dos céus". — Mt 8:11.

3. Pai de José, que era o marido de Maria, mãe de Jesus. — Mt 1:15, 16.

JADA [provavelmente uma forma abreviada de Jedaías, que significa "Jah Sabe [Conhece]"]. Descendente de Judá através de Jerameel. Jada é alistado como filho de Onão, e pai de Jeter e Jonatã. — 1Cr 2:3, 25, 26, 28, 32.

JADAI.

1. Filho de Nebo; um daqueles que haviam tomado esposas não israelitas, mas que as despediram às instâncias de Esdras. (Esd 10:43, 44) Algumas traduções dizem "Ido" em vez de "Jadai". — AS, AT, Mo, Ro.

2. Pai de seis filhos alistados entre os descendentes de Calebe, bisneto de Judá. Não se indica o parentesco exato de Jadai com Calebe. — 1Cr 2:3, 42, 47.

JADE. Pedra ornamental dura, resistente, usualmente esverdeada, utilizada em joias e entalhes; em hebraico, ya·sheféh. Ocorre como dois minerais distintos, a "nefrita" e a "jadeíta". A nefrita é a variedade mais comum. Varia, em densidade, desde a forma translúcida até a opaca, e apresenta-se em cores tais como o verde-escuro, o preto, o cinza, o amarelo e o branco. A jadeíta é mais valiosa do que a nefrita, devido à sua coloração mais atraente e a sua raridade. O jade é especialmente apropriado para o entalhe, por causa da sua composição.

Uma linda pedra de jade, com o nome de uma das 12 tribos de Israel gravado nela, adornava o "peitoral do julgamento" usado pelo sumo sacerdote Arão, ocupando a terceira posição na quarta fileira de pedras. (Êx 28:2, 15, 20, 21; 39:9, 13, 14) O jade foi também incluído entre as pedras preciosas que decoravam a "cobertura" do rei de Tiro. — Ez 28:12, 13.

JADIEL [possivelmente: Que Deus Se Sinta Alegre]. Cabeça duma casa da meia-tribo de Manassés que morava ao L do Jordão; homem valente, poderoso. Os descendentes de Jadiel "começaram a agir de modo infiel" para com Jeová, o que levou por fim a serem exilados pelos assírios. — 1Cr 5:23-26.

JADO [possivelmente: Que Ele Se Sinta Alegre]. Nome que ocorre na genealogia da tribo de Gade; filho de Buz e pai de Jesisai. — 1Cr 5:11, 14.

JADOM [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Jaazanias, que significa "Jeová Deu Ouvidos"]. Meronotita que ajudou Neemias a reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. Pelo visto, Jadom era da vizinhança de Mispá. — Ne 3:7.

Josefo chama de "Jadom" o profeta cujo nome não é indicado em 1 Reis 13. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VIII, 231 (viii, 5).

JADUA [duma raiz que significa "saber; conhecer"].

1. Um dos cabeças de Israel, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, selaram a resolução de fidelidade quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 10:1, 14, 21.

2. Último na linhagem arônica de sumos sacerdotes nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Ter sido Jadua a quinta geração após Jesua permitiu-lhe ter vivido durante "o reinado de Dario, o persa". — Ne 12:10, 11, 22; veja DARIO N.º 3.

JAEL [Cabra-montesa]. Esposa de Héber, o queneu, portanto, não israelita, e que matou Sísera, chefe do exército cananeu.

Junto com seu marido, Jael morava em tendas perto de Quedes, e havia paz entre Héber e os opressores cananeus. (Jz 4:10, 11, 17, 21; veja QUEDES N.º 3.) Depois de Sísera ter sido derrotado às mãos de Israel, ele fugiu para o acampamento neutro de Héber, onde Jael o convidou a entrar na sua tenda. Ela o cobriu então com um cobertor. Quando ele lhe pediu água, ela lhe deu uma taça de banquete de coalhada para beber. Depois de novamente o cobrir, ele lhe pediu que ficasse vigiando à entrada da tenda. Imaginando-se seguro como convidado dela, o cansado e exausto Sísera logo caiu num sono profundo. Jael, que, como moradora em tenda, sem dúvida estava acostumada a usar o martelo para cravar estacas de tenda no chão, veio então quietamente a ele com um martelo e uma estaca de tenda, com a qual lhe cravou a cabeça no chão. Quando chegou o perseguidor Baraque, ela lhe mostrou o chefe do exército, morto "à mão de uma mulher", conforme Débora predissera. (Jz 4:9, 17-22) O corajoso ato de Jael contra o inimigo de Jeová é exaltado no cântico de vitória de Débora e Baraque, que também declara Jael "muitíssimo abençoada entre as mulheres". — Jz 5:6, 24-27.

JAFÉ [Que Ele Conceda Amplo Espaço]. Filho de Noé; irmão de Sem e Cã. Embora usualmente alistado por último, Jafé parece ter sido o mais velho dos três filhos, uma vez que o texto hebraico de Gênesis 10:21 se refere a "Jafé, o mais velho" (Da; KJ; Le; Yg; AS n). Alguns tradutores, porém, entendem que o texto hebraico aqui se refere, em vez disso, a Sem como "irmão mais velho de Jafé". (ALA; CBC; IBB; PIB; So) Considerar Jafé como o filho mais velho de Noé situaria o tempo do seu nascimento em 2470 AEC. — Gên 5:32.

Jafé e sua esposa achavam-se entre os oito ocupantes da arca, sobrevivendo assim ao Dilúvio. (Gên 7:13; 1Pe 3:20) Não tiveram filhos até após o Dilúvio, mas depois tiveram sete filhos: Gômer, Magogue, Madai, Javã, Tubal, Meseque e Tiras. (Gên 10:1, 2; 1Cr 1:5) Destes filhos, e também de alguns netos, provieram aqueles dos quais "se espalhou a população das ilhas das nações ["nações disseminadas pelos litorais"; PIB] pelas suas terras, cada um segundo a sua língua, segundo as suas famílias, pelas suas nações". (Gên 10:3-5; 1Cr 1:6, 7) Historicamente, Jafé foi o progenitor do ramo ariano ou indo-europeu (indo-germânico) da família humana. Os nomes de seus filhos e netos são encontrados em textos históricos antigos como referentes a povos e tribos que moravam principalmente ao N e ao O do Crescente Fértil. Parecem ter-se disseminado do Cáucaso para o L, até a Ásia Central, e para o O, através da Ásia Menor, até as ilhas e terras litorâneas da Europa, e, talvez, até a Espanha. Tradições árabes afirmam que um dos filhos de Jafé foi também o progenitor dos povos chineses. — Veja TABELA e MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 329.

Em resultado da ação respeitosa de Jafé, junto com seu irmão Sem, por ocasião da embriaguez do pai deles, Jafé tornou-se beneficiário da bênção de seu pai. (Gên 9:20-27) Nesta bênção, Noé solicitou a Deus que 'concedesse amplo espaço [hebr.: yaft]' a Jafé. Esta expressão hebraica, evidentemente, deriva da mesma raiz que o nome Jafé (hebr.: Yé·feth ou Yá·feth) e parece indicar que o significado do nome Jafé seria cumprido num sentido literal, e que seus descendentes se espalhariam por uma ampla região. Alguns julgam que 'residir ele nas tendas de Sem' indica a existência de um relacionamento pacífico entre os jafetitas e os semitas. No entanto, visto que a história na realidade não indica tal associação pacífica, essa expressão pode, em vez disso, estar ligada em sentido profético com a posterior promessa de Deus a Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, descendentes de Sem, de que mediante sua "semente", ou "descendente", seriam abençoadas todas as famílias da terra (inclusive as descendentes de Jafé). (Gên 22:15-18; 26:3, 4; 28:10, 13, 14; compare isso com At 10:34-36; Gál 3:28, 29.) 'Tornar-se Canaã escravo' dos jafetitas cumpriu-se no domínio exercido sobre a terra de Canaã durante o governo do Império Medo-Persa (uma potência jafética) e nas posteriores conquistas pelos gregos e pelos romanos, inclusive as conquistas das fortalezas cananeias de Tiro e Sídon.

JAFIA [1, 2: Reluza [Deus]; [Deus] Reluziu].

1. Rei de Laquis, que se uniu a mais quatro reis amorreus para punir Gibeão por ter feito paz com Israel. (Jos 10:3-5) O pedido de ajuda de Gibeão trouxe as forças de Josué desde Gilgal numa missão de socorro. Na resultante batalha, os israelitas encurralaram Jafia e os reis aliados com ele numa caverna em Maquedá. Mais tarde, ele e os outros foram executados e seus cadáveres pendurados em estacas até o pôr do sol, sendo depois lançados na caverna em que se haviam refugiado. — Jos 10:6-27.

2. Filho de Davi, nascido em Jerusalém. — 2Sa 5:14, 15; 1Cr 3:7; 14:6.

3. Lugar fronteiriço de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 12) É identificado com a atual Yafa (Yafia), a menos de 3 km ao SO de Nazaré.

JAFLETE [Proveja Ele Escape; Ele Proveu Escape]. Descendente de Aser através de Berias e Héber. Três "filhos de Jaflete" estão incluídos na genealogia. — 1Cr 7:30-33.

JAFLETITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jaflete]. Povo antigo, que ocupava um território na fronteira de Efraim, quando os israelitas entraram na Terra da Promessa. (Jos 16:3) Não existe nenhuma evidência histórica que relacione os jafletitas com o descendente de Aser chamado Jaflete. (1Cr 7:30, 32) A história secular não fornece nenhuma informação adicional sobre eles.

JAGUR [possivelmente aparentado com a palavra aramaica que significa "montão [de pedras]"]. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá. (Jos 15:21) Jagur possivelmente pode ser identificada com

Khirbet el Gharra (Tel ‘Ira), a uns 14 km ao L de Berseba.

JAH. Forma poética abreviada de Jeová, o nome do Deus Altíssimo. (Êx 15:1, 2) Esta forma abreviada é representada pela primeira metade do Tetragrama יהוה (YHWH [IHVH, JHVH]), isto é, as letras yohdh (י) e he' (ה), respectivamente a décima e a quinta letra do alfabeto hebraico.

Jah ocorre 50 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, 26 vezes sozinho, e 24 vezes na expressão "Aleluia", a qual é literalmente uma ordem a um grupo de pessoas: "Louvai a Jah." Todavia, a ocorrência de "Jah", no original, é completamente desconsiderada em certas versões populares. (Dy, Mo, RS) Em português, a versão Almeida (edição revista e corrigida) e a versão do Pontifício Instituto Bíblico, respectivamente, têm "JÁ" e "Jah" apenas uma vez. (Sal 68:4 [5]) Em inglês, na Versão Revisada Inglesa ocorre duas vezes no corpo do texto (Sal 68:4; 89:8), e a Versão Padrão Americana substitui a palavra em todo lugar pela forma integral, "Jehovah" (Jeová); mas, estas duas últimas versões, em praticamente todas as ocorrências da forma contrata, trazem-na à nossa atenção nas notas de rodapé. A Tradução do Novo Mundo preserva para o leitor todas as 50 ocorrências de Jah; e, em inglês, a Bíblia Enfatizada de Rotherham, 49 vezes.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, "Jah" aparece quatro vezes na expressão Aleluia. (Re 19:1, 3, 4, 6) A maioria das Bíblias simplesmente emprega este equivalente da expressão grega sem traduzir, mas a versão, em inglês, de G. W. Wade a traduz: "Louvai a Jeová", e a Tradução do Novo Mundo reza: "Louvai a Jah!"

No que se refere à situação na corrente do tempo, "Jah" não poderia ser uma forma primitiva do nome divino usada antes do próprio Tetragrama. Esta última forma plena, Jeová, ocorre 165 vezes no texto massorético no livro de Gênesis, mas a forma abreviada só apareceu no relato dos eventos ocorridos após o Êxodo do Egito. — Êx 15:2.

A única sílaba, Jah, está usualmente ligada com as emoções mais comoventes de louvor e de cântico, de oração e de súplica, e, em geral, é encontrada nos casos em que o tema do assunto se refere ao regozijo resultante da vitória e da libertação, ou nos casos em que há o reconhecimento da poderosa mão e do poderio de Deus. Sobejam os exemplos deste emprego especial. A frase: "Louvai a Jah!" (Aleluia!) aparece nos Salmos como doxologia, isto é, como expressão de louvor a Deus, ocorrendo a primeira vez no Salmo 104:35. Em outros salmos, pode aparecer apenas no início (Sal 111, 112), ocasionalmente numa parte do salmo (135:3), às vezes apenas no fim (Sal 104, 105, 115-117), porém, frequentemente, tanto no início como no fim (Sal 106, 113, 135, 146-150). No livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), personagens celestiais repetidas vezes enfatizam seu louvor a Jeová com esta expressão. — Re 19:1-6.

Os casos restantes em que "Jah" aparece também refletem a exaltação em cânticos e em petições a Jeová. Há o cântico de libertação entoado por Moisés. (Êx 15:2) Nos registrados por Isaías, consegue-se ênfase dupla por combinar os dois nomes: "Jah Jeová." (Is 12:2; 26:4) Ezequias, na sua exultação poética depois de ter sido miraculosamente curado quando estava prestes a morrer, expressou sentimentos enlevados por meio da repetição de Jah. (Is 38:9, 11) Faz-se contraste entre os mortos, que não podem louvar a Jah, e os determinados a levar uma vida de louvor a Ele. (Sal 115:17, 18; 118:17-19) Ainda outros salmos demonstram um apreço como que de oração pela libertação, proteção e correção. — Sal 94:12; 118:5, 14.

JAIR.

1. Descendente de Judá através de seu neto Esrom. Esrom casou-se com uma mulher da tribo de Manassés. (1Cr 2:21, 22) Jair é considerado descendente de Manassés em vez de o ser de Judá, provavelmente por causa das suas façanhas no território de Manassés, onde ele capturou diversas cidades de tendas e lhes deu o seu próprio nome, o qual foi mantido por muitas gerações. — Núm 32:41; De 3:14; Jos 13:30; 1Rs 4:13; veja HAVOTE-JAIR.

2. Sétimo juiz de Israel. Visto que ele era gileadita de elevada posição, e cada um dos seus 30 filhos é relacionado com uma das já mencionadas cidades de tendas de Jair, ele provavelmente era descendente do N.º 1 acima. Jair julgou Israel por 22 anos, morrendo depois e sendo enterrado em Camom. — Jz 10:3-5.

3. Pai de Mordecai; da tribo de Benjamim. — Est 2:5.

4. Pai do Elanã que matou Lami, irmão de Golias. (1Cr 20:5) A passagem correspondente em 2 Samuel 21:19 evidentemente contém um erro de copista. — Veja LAMI.

JAIRITA [De (Pertencente a) Jair]. Designação de Ira, "sacerdote de Davi". (2Sa 20:26) Ira talvez fosse descendente do manassita Jair. Mas, se a Pesito siríaca estiver correta, ele talvez fosse sacerdote da cidade levita de Jatir. — Veja IRA, II N.º 1.

JAIRO. Presidente da sinagoga (provavelmente em Cafarnaum), cuja filha única Jesus ressuscitou. — Mt 9:18; Mr 5:22; Lu 8:41, 42.

Quando, em fins de 31 ou no princípio de 32 EC, a filha de Jairo, aos 12 anos, ficou tão enferma que se esperava que ia morrer, o pai dela procurou

Jesus, lançou-se aos seus pés e suplicou-lhe que viesse e a curasse antes que fosse tarde demais. Enquanto conduzia Jesus à sua casa, Jairo certamente deve ter sido muitíssimo encorajado por presenciar a cura, feita por Jesus, de uma mulher que por 12 anos padecia dum fluxo de sangue. Mas, quão desanimador foi receber de mensageiros a notícia de que sua própria filhinha já havia morrido! Não obstante, Jesus instou com Jairo a que não temesse, mas que exercesse fé. Passando pelo meio de ruidosos lamuriadores que zombaram e escarneceram da observação de Jesus, de que a menina estava apenas dormindo, Jairo, sua esposa e três dos apóstolos acompanharam Jesus para dentro da casa, onde Jesus restaurou a vida da menina. Como seria de esperar, Jairo e sua esposa ficaram “fora de si com grande êxtase”. — Mr 5:21-43; Mt 9:18-26; Lu 8:41-56.

JALÃO. Filho de Esaú com sua esposa Oolibama. Jalão nasceu em Canaã, mas foi logo levado a Edom (Seir), onde por fim se tornou xeque. — Gên 36:5, 6, 8, 14, 18; 1Cr 1:35.

JALEEL. Terceiro filho alistado de Zebulão e fundador da família dos jaleelitas, na tribo de seu pai. — Gên 46:14; Núm 26:26.

JALEELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jaleel]. Descendentes de Jaleel, da tribo de Zebulão. — Núm 26:26.

JALOM. Descendente de Judá; um dos “filhos de Ezra”. — 1Cr 4:17.

JAMAI. Cabeça duma casa ancestral na tribo de Issacar; filho de Tola. — 1Cr 7:1, 2.

JAMBRES. Opositor de Moisés, presumivelmente um dos magos egípcios da corte de Faraó. — 2Ti 3:8; Êx 7:11; veja JANES.

JAMIM [Mão Direita].

1. Segundo filho alistado de Simeão. (Gên 46:10; Êx 6:15; 1Cr 4:24) Ele fundou a família dos jaminitas. — Núm 26:12.

2. Descendente de Judá através de Rão, neto de Esrom. — 1Cr 2:9, 25, 27.

3. Levita pós-exílico que ajudou a explicar a Lei ao povo reunido em Jerusalém. — Ne 8:7.

JAMINITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jamim]. Descendentes de Jamim, da tribo de Simeão. — Núm 26:12.

JANAI.

1. [possivelmente: Que [Deus] Responda; [Deus] Respondeu]. Gadita que morava no território de Basã. — 1Cr 5:11, 12.

2. Antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus; a quinta geração antes dela. — Lu 3:24.

JANELA. Veja CASA.

JANES. Opositor de Moisés, a quem Paulo compara os apóstatas que resistem à verdade. (2Ti 3:8, 9) Janes e Jambres, cuja ‘insensatez ficou bem clara a todos’, não são identificados nas Escrituras Hebraicas, mas concorda-se em geral que eram dois dos homens de destaque da corte de Faraó, talvez os sacerdotes-magos que se opuseram a Moisés e Arão em seus numerosos comparecimentos ali. (Êx 7:11, 12, 22; 8:17-19; 9:11) As muitas tradições que concordam com isso ultrapassam o pouco que há em contrário. Fontes não cristãs, tais como Numênio; Plínio, o Velho; Lúcio Apuleio; um escrito de Qumran; o Targum de Jonatã e vários escritos apócrifos, todos mencionam um destes homens, ou os dois.

JANIM. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 53) Janim é provisoriamente identificada com Beni Na‘im, a uns 5 km ao ESE de Hébron.

JANLEQUE [Que [Deus] Faça Reinar]. Um dos maiorais da tribo de Simeão que, nos dias do Rei Ezequias, estenderam seu território ao vale de Gedor. — 1Cr 4:24, 34, 38-41.

JANOA [duma raiz que significa “descansar; estabelecer-se”].

1. Lugar fronteiriço de Efraim, usualmente identificado com Khirbet Yanun, a uns 20 km ao SE de Samaria. — Jos 16:5-7.

2. Cidade no reino das dez tribos, tomada por Tiglate-Pileser III, durante o reinado de Peca (c. 778-759 AEC). Seus habitantes foram deportados para a Assíria. (2Rs 15:29) Não há certeza sobre a localização exata de Janoa. Embora alguns a identifiquem com Yanouh, a uns 10 km ao L de Tiro, esta localização é considerada demasiado ao O das outras cidades alistadas em 2 Reis 15:29. A maioria dos peritos favorece Tell en-Na‘meh, a uns 10 km ao NE de Quedes, na Galileia.

JAQUE. Pai de Agur, escritor do que se acha registrado em Provérbios 30. — Pr 30:1.

JAQUIM, I [forma abreviada de Jecamias, que significa “Jah Levantou”].

1. Descendente de Benjamim através de Simei, incluído na lista dos cabeças das casas paternas que moravam em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:1, 19-21, 28.

2. O sacerdote cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes para a 12.ª das 24 turmas de serviço sacerdotal no templo, durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 24:3, 5, 12.

JAQUIM, II [Que [Jeová] Estabeleça Firmemente].

1. Quarto filho alistado de Simeão. (Gên 46:10) Pelo que parece, é chamado de Jaribe em 1 Crônicas 4:24. Seus descendentes, os jaquinitas, constituíam uma das famílias simeonitas em Israel. — Êx 6:15; Núm 26:12.

2. O sacerdote cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes para cuidar da 21.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais que Davi organizou. (1Cr 24:7, 17) Um ou mais de seus descendentes (ou de outro sacerdote do mesmo nome) moravam em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:3, 10; Ne 11:10.

3. A mais meridional das duas colunas erigidas diante do templo de Salomão. — 1Rs 7:15-22; veja BOAZ, II; CAPITEL.

JAQUINITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jaquim]. Descendentes de Jaquim, filho de Simeão. — Gên 46:10; Núm 26:12.

JARA. Escravo egípcio de Sesã, descendente de Judá. Visto que Sesã não tinha filhos varões, deu a sua filha em casamento a Jara, o que habilitou Jara a gerar Atai e assim preservar por meio dele a linhagem familiar de Sesã. — 1Cr 2:34, 35.

JARÁ. Descendente de Saul através de Jonatã, e, segundo esta genealogia, pai de três filhos. (1Cr 9:39-42) Ele é chamado Jeoada em 1 Crônicas 8:36.

JARDIM. O termo hebraico gan e o termo grego ké·pos referem-se a um terreno cultivado, não raro irrigado. Os jardins, nos tempos bíblicos, costumavam ser áreas cercadas por uma sebe de espinhos ou por um muro de pedra ou de adobe, possivelmente com espinhos no alto. — Cân 4:12.

De modo geral, os jardins mencionados na Bíblia eram bastante diferentes dos costumeiros jardins no Ocidente. Muitos deles eram mais da natureza de um parque, com diversas espécies de árvores, inclusive árvores frutíferas e nogueiras (Ec 2:5; Am 9:14; Cân 6:11), bem como plantas que produzem especiarias, e flores. (Cân 6:2) Eram bem regados por riachos ou por irrigação, e não raro tinham veredas serpenteantes. Famílias individuais talvez cultivassem jardins menores. O Rei Acabe queria o vinhedo de Nabote, conforme afirmava, para fazer dele uma horta. — 1Rs 21:2.

Os acima mencionados jardins semelhantes a parques usualmente se encontravam fora da cidade, exceto no caso dos jardins de reis ou de homens muito ricos. O Jardim do Rei, perto do lugar onde Zedequias e seus homens tentaram escapar de Jerusalém durante o sítio dos caldeus, provavelmente ficava logo fora da muralha SE da cidade. (2Rs 25:4; Ne 3:15) Josefo também fala dum lugar chamado Etã, que ele situa de 13 a 16 km de Jerusalém e que descreve como "deleitoso pelos parques e riachos, em que abundava", onde, segundo afirma, Salomão costumava andar no seu carro. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], VIII, 186 [vii, 3]) O jardim em que o Rei Assuero realizou um grande banquete, de sete dias de duração, em Susã, no terceiro ano do seu reinado, deve ter sido amplo e belo. — Est 1:1-5.

Em Babilônia. Os Jardins Suspensos de Babilônia eram uma das sete maravilhas do mundo antigo. O Rei Nabucodonosor os construiu para agradar à sua esposa, uma princesa meda, que era dum país montanhoso, e que, incomodada pela planura de Babilônia, tinha saudades das montanhas da sua terra. Diz-se que Nabucodonosor construiu arcos progressivamente mais elevados, como degraus, e cobriu esta montanha de alvenaria com suficiente solo para nutrir as maiores árvores. No alto, construiu um reservatório, abastecido pelo Eufrates por meio dum elevador de água do tipo parafuso.

No Egito. Enquanto os israelitas estavam no Egito, haviam cultivado o que parece ter sido pequenas hortas de verduras. Deuteronômio 11:10 diz que as irrigavam com o pé, possivelmente por rodas de água movidas a pé, ou por irrigação mediante canais, abrindo e fechando com o pé as paredes de adobe dos canais, para irrigar as diversas partes do jardim.

Getsêmani. O jardim de Getsêmani, no monte das Oliveiras defronte de Jerusalém, do outro lado do vale do Cédron, era um dos lugares favoritos de Jesus Cristo, onde podia ficar a sós com seus discípulos. Foi para este jardim que Jesus se retirou com seus discípulos depois de comer a sua última Páscoa e instituir a Refeição Noturna do Senhor. Ali ele se afastou um pouco dos discípulos e orou fervorosamente, sendo ministrado por um anjo. O traidor Judas, sabendo do costume de Jesus, guiou uma turba ao Getsêmani, onde traiu Jesus com um beijo. — Mt 26:36, 46-49; Lu 22:39-48; Jo 18:1, 2.

Lugares de Sepultamento. Às vezes, jardins eram usados como lugares de sepultamento. Manassés e seu filho Amom foram enterrados no jardim de Uza. (2Rs 21:18, 25, 26) Foi num jardim, num novo túmulo memorial, que Jesus foi sepultado. (Jo 19:41, 42) Os israelitas caíram no mau hábito de oferecer em jardins sacrifícios a deuses pagãos, sentando-se entre as sepulturas e comendo coisas repugnantes na sua observância da religião falsa, motivo pelo qual Jeová declarou que faria um julgamento. — Is 65:2-5; 66:16, 17.

Jardim do Éden. O mais célebre jardim da história é o jardim do Éden. Parece ter sido uma área fechada, cercada, sem dúvida, por barreiras naturais. O jardim, situado "no Éden, do lado do oriente", tinha uma entrada no lado oriental. Foi ali, após o pecado de Adão, que ficaram os querubins com a espada chamejante, para impedir ao homem o acesso à árvore da vida no meio do jardim. (Gên 2:8; 3:24) O jardim era bem regado por um rio que saía dele e que se tornava a cabeceira de quatro rios grandes. Este "paraíso de delícias" (Gên 2:8, So), semelhante a um parque, continha toda árvore de aspecto desejável e boa para alimento, bem como outra vegetação, e era o habitat de animais e de aves. Adão devia cultivá-lo e tomar conta dele, e, por fim, expandi-lo pela Terra inteira, ao cumprir com a ordem de Deus, de 'sujeitá-la'. Era um santuário, um lugar em que Deus representativamente andava e se comunicava com Adão e Eva; era um lar perfeito para eles. — Gên 2:9, 10, 15-18, 21, 22; 1:28; 3:8-19; veja PARAÍSO.

Embora a Bíblia não declare quanto tempo os querubins permaneceram ali para guardar o caminho para a árvore da vida, pode ser que este arranjo tenha existido até o Dilúvio, 1.656 anos depois da criação de Adão. Sem ser cultivado por Adão, o qual junto com Eva fora expulso pela sua desobediência em comer da proibida árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau, é provável que o jardim deteriorasse. De qualquer modo, o mais tardar teria sido eliminado por meio do Dilúvio. — Veja ÉDEN N.º 1.

A beleza do jardim do Éden foi relembrada séculos depois do Dilúvio, quando Ló observou todo o Distrito do Jordão, notando "que todo ele era uma região bem regada . . . semelhante ao jardim de Jeová". (Gên 13:10) Jeová manteve sua atenção fixa na Terra da Promessa, preservando-a como herança para Israel. Moisés contrastou-a com o Egito, onde os israelitas tinham de fazer irrigação, como numa horta, descrevendo a Terra da Promessa como terra regada pela "água da chuva dos céus". — De 11:10-12.

Usos Figurados. Num aviso dado a Judá por meio de Joel, Jeová prediz um povo "numeroso e poderoso" que devastará a terra, convertendo-a da condição descrita "como o jardim do Éden" em um ermo. (Jl 2:2, 3) Em contraste, os que fazem a vontade de Jeová e gozam de seu beneplácito são assemelhados a um jardim bem regado. (Is 58:8-11) Esta seria a situação do povo pactuado de Jeová, restaurado do exílio babilônico. — Is 51:3, 11; Je 31:10-12.

Em Ezequiel 28:12-14, o "rei de Tiro" é mencionado como tendo estado no jardim do Éden e no "monte santo de Deus". Junto às encostas do monte Líbano, com seus famosos cedros, o rei, adornado de suntuosas vestes e de esplendor real, estivera como que no jardim do Éden e num monte de Deus.

O namorado pastor de O Cântico de Salomão assemelha sua jovem companheira sulamita a um jardim, com toda a sua aprazibilidade, beleza, deleite e frutos excelentes. — Cân 4:12-16.

JAREDE. Pai de Enoque e antepassado antediluviano de Jesus Cristo; a quinta geração depois de Adão. (1Cr 1:2; Lu 3:37) Jarede, filho de Malalel, viveu 962 anos (3566-2604 AEC), ultrapassado em longevidade apenas pelo seu neto, Metusalém. Ele tinha diversos filhos e filhas, tornando-se pai de Enoque à idade de 162 anos. — Gên 5:15-20.

JARIBE [Que [Deus] Contenda; [Deus] Pleiteou [Nossa] Causa Jurídica].

1. Filho de Simeão (1Cr 4:24), em outro lugar evidentemente chamado Jaquim. — Gên 46:10; veja JAQUIM, II N.º 1.

2. Um dos nove cabeças que Esdras enviou para incentivar levitas e netineus a virem ao rio Aava e se juntarem aos outros na viagem a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:15-20.

3. Um dos alistados parentes de sacerdotes que "prometeram, por aperto de mão", despedir suas esposas estrangeiras, acatando a exortação de Esdras. — Esd 10:18, 19.

JARMUTE [duma raiz que significa "ser alto (exaltado)"].

1. Uma de cinco cidades amorreias envolvidas na pretendida expedição punitiva contra os gibeonitas. Seu rei, Pirão, e os aliados dele foram derrotados por Josué. Posteriormente, esta cidade da Sefelá foi designada a Judá. (Jos 10:3-5, 23-25; 12:7, 11; 15:20, 33, 35) Após o exílio babilônico, Jarmute foi novamente ocupada pelos de Judá. (Ne 11:25, 29) Khirbet Yarmuk (Tel Yarmut), a uns 26 km ao OSO de Jerusalém, parece ser este lugar antigo. Situado no alto dum morro, dá vista sobre as planícies costeiras até Gaza, junto ao mar Mediterrâneo.

2. Cidade de Issacar designada aos gersonitas. (Jos 21:27-29) Acredita-se tratar-se de Ramote (1Cr 6:73) e Remete. — Jos 19:21; veja RAMOTE N.º 1.

JAROA. Descendente de Gade, que morava no território de Basã. — 1Cr 5:11, 14.

JARRETE, JARRETAR. Nos quadrúpedes, os jarretes são os tendões traseiros acima do curvejão das patas traseiras. Jarretar, o ato de cortar estes tendões, aleija o animal e o torna inapto para o trabalho ou para a guerra. A arbitrariedade dos filhos de Jacó, Simeão e Levi, expressou-se em jarretarem touros, provavelmente quando executaram vingança nos heveus de Siquém. (Gên 49:5, 6) Ao realizarem operações de guerra, os israelitas jarretavam os cavalos de seus inimigos; numa ocasião, Jeová mandou especificamente que Josué fizesse isso. (Jos 11:6, 9; 2Sa 8:3, 4; 1Cr 18:3, 4) Este era o método mais simples de pôr os cavalos fora de combate, e, depois de assim serem aleijados, os cavalos, sem dúvida, eram mortos, destruídos junto com os carros de guerra. Por não se apropriarem dos cavalos de seus inimigos para seu próprio uso e então empregá-los em guerra, os israelitas ficariam salvaguardados do laço de confiarem em cavalos, em vez de em Jeová, como fonte de proteção. — Veja De 17:16; Is 31:1, 3.

JARRO. Veja VASOS.

JASÃO [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "curar"]. Destacado cristão de Tessalônica que 'recebera Paulo e Silas com hospitalidade' na primeira viagem deles à Macedônia. Uma turba de judeus invejosos tentou tirar Paulo e Silas da casa de Jasão, mas, não os encontrando ali, levaram em lugar deles a Jasão, e fizeram dele o principal réu das acusações de sedição contra César. Jasão e os outros com ele foram libertos depois de pagarem "suficiente fiança". — At 17:5-10.

Na carta de Paulo aos romanos, escrita de Corinto, na sua viagem seguinte pela Macedônia e pela Grécia, Jasão é uma das pessoas cujos cumprimentos são incluídos. (Ro 16:21) Caso se trate da mesma pessoa que o Jasão de Tessalônica, ele, pelo que parece, fora a Corinto possivelmente junto com Paulo. É chamado de 'parente' de Paulo, que pode significar que era patrício, embora o significado primário da palavra grega seja "parente consanguíneo da mesma geração". Caso tenha sido um parente próximo, carnal, de Paulo, ele seria, naturalmente, aquele com quem Paulo ficaria hospedado em Tessalônica.

JASAR, LIVRO DE. Veja LIVRO.

JÁSEN [possivelmente: Dormindo; Adormecendo]. A expressão "os filhos de Jásen" é encontrada na lista dos poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:32) A lista paralela em 1 Crônicas 11:34 o chama de Hasém, o gizonita.

JASOBEÃO [possivelmente: O Povo Voltou].

1. Guerreiro coraíta que se juntou às forças de Davi em Ziclague. (1Cr 12:1, 6) É possivelmente o N.º 2.

2. Cabeça dos três poderosos mais notáveis de Davi. Jasobeão usou a sua lança para combater várias centenas de homens do inimigo e foi também um dos três que abriram caminho pelo campo filisteu para trazer a Davi água da cisterna de Belém. (1Cr 11:11, 15-19) No desenrolar dos eventos, Jasobeão foi designado cabeça da primeira turma mensal de 24.000. (1Cr 27:1, 2) Ele era filho de Zabdiel; era acmonita. Em 2 Samuel 23:8, seu nome é dado como Josebe-Bassebete. — Veja JOSEBE-BASSEBETE.

JASPE. O jaspe moderno é uma variedade opaca de quartzo, que contém óxido de ferro. Suas cores, frequentemente dispostas em veios, são o branco, o vermelho, o amarelo, o castanho ou o preto. O jaspe é mais duro que o vidro e é encontrado em rochas metamórficas, em massa ou como cristais distintos. Os jaspes de melhor qualidade são usados como pedras preciosas e podem receber grande polimento. Alguns peritos, porém, creem que, visto o jaspe (gr.: í·a·spis) mencionado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 21:11 ser chamado de pedra "mui preciosa . . . brilhando como cristal", a pedra antiga pode ter sido mais rara e valiosa do que o jaspe moderno, que é relativamente barato, e brilhantemente translúcido, em vez de opaco. Alguns peritos sugerem que o termo grego se refere, na realidade, ao diamante.

Uma pedra de jaspe (hebr.: ya·halóm), representando uma das 12 tribos de Israel, foi colocada na última posição da segunda fileira de pedras do "peitoral do julgamento" de Arão. (Êx 28:2, 15, 18, 21; 39:11) A "cobertura" de joias, usada pelo rei de Tiro, estava adornada de jaspe. (Ez 28:12, 13) Na visão do celeste trono de esplendor de Jeová, João observou que "o sentado é, em aparência, semelhante à pedra de jaspe e a uma pedra preciosa de cor vermelha". (Re 4:1-3, 10, 11) "A cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém", é descrita como tendo um resplendor semelhante a uma "pedra de jaspe, brilhando como cristal". A estrutura da muralha da cidade santa era de jaspe, como também a sua primeira pedra de alicerce. — Re 21:2, 10, 11, 18, 19.

JASUBE [provavelmente: Ele Voltou].

1. Terceiro filho alistado de Issacar e fundador da divisão jasubita da sua tribo. (1Cr 7:1; Núm 26:23, 24) É chamado Ió (Jó) em Gênesis 46:13.

2. Um "dos filhos de Bani", os quais, depois de retornarem do exílio babilônico, tomaram, mas depois despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:29, 44.

JASUBI-LEÉM. Nome que ocorre nas genealogias de Judá, possivelmente um descendente de Selá. Todavia, alguns tradutores acham que isto significa "retornaram a Leem", isto é, "a Belém". — 1Cr 4:21, 22; BJ, BV, PIB, So.

JASUBITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jasube]. Descendentes de Jasube (Ió), filho de Issacar, e uma das quatro principais divisões de família da tribo. — Núm 26:23-25; Gên 46:13.

JATIR [duma raiz que significa "mais do que suficiente; excedente"]. Cidade sacerdotal na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48; 21:9, 10, 14; 1Cr 6:54, 57) Foi a Jatir que Davi enviou uma parte dos despojos da vitória, tirados de incursores amalequitas. Talvez fizesse isso em apreço pela hospitalidade e amizade que mostraram para com ele, que fugia do Rei Saul. — 1Sa 30:17-20, 26, 27, 31.

Jatir costuma ser identificado com Khirbet ʽAttir (Horvat Yattir), a uns 21 km ao SSO de Hébron.

JATNIEL. Um dos porteiros levitas da casa de Jeová; quarto filho de Meselemias, o coraíta. — 1Cr 26:1, 2.

JAULA. Veja GAIOLA, JAULA.

JAVÃ. Quarto filho alistado de Jafé, e pai de Elisá, Társis, Quitim e Dodanim (ou Rodanim). Como descendentes pós-diluvianos de Noé, estão incluídos entre os que povoaram as "ilhas das nações", frase que também pode referir-se às terras costeiras e não simplesmente a ilhas cercadas de água. (Gên 10:2, 4, 5; 1Cr 1:5, 7) A evidência histórica aponta que os descendentes de Javã e de seus quatro filhos se fixaram nas ilhas e nas terras costeiras do mar Mediterrâneo, desde Chipre (Quitim) até o Mediterrâneo ocidental. — Veja DODANIM; ELISÁ; QUITIM; TÁRSIS N.º 1.

Javã (hebr.: Ya·wán) é identificado como o progenitor dos antigos jônios, que alguns chamam de "tribo originadora dos gregos". (Commentary on the Old Testament [Comentário sobre O Velho Testamento], de C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch, 1973, Vol. I, O Primeiro Livro de Moisés, p. 163) O nome I·á·o·nes é usado pelo poeta Homero (talvez do oitavo século AEC) como se referindo aos primitivos gregos, e, a partir de Sargão II (oitavo século AEC), o nome Jawanu começa a surgir em inscrições assírias.

No decorrer do tempo, o nome Jônia veio a restringir-se à Ática (a região em torno de Atenas), à costa ocidental da Ásia Menor (correspondendo ao litoral das posteriores províncias da Lídia e da Cária) e às ilhas vizinhas do mar Egeu. O mar situado entre o S da Grécia e o S da Itália ainda retém o nome de "Jônio", e reconhece-se que este nome é de origem antiquíssima, o que apoia o conceito de que esta forma do nome Javã certa vez se aplicava à parte continental da Grécia, bem como à posterior região menor chamada "Jônia".

Depois do relato de Gênesis, os descendentes de Javã começam a ser mencionados por volta da parte final do nono século AEC, pelo profeta Joel. O profeta condena ali os tírios, os sidônios e os filisteus por venderem os filhos de Judá e de Jerusalém no seu comércio de escravos com os "filhos dos gregos" (literalmente: "os javanitos" ou "os jônios"). (Jl 3:4-6) Isaías, no oitavo século AEC, prediz que alguns dos judeus que sobrevivessem à expressão da ira de Deus viajariam para muitas terras, inclusive para "Javã", proclamando ali a glória de Jeová. — Is 66:19.

Em fins do sétimo século e início do sexto século AEC, alistam-se escravos e artigos de cobre como itens supridos por "Javã, Tubal e Meseque [estes últimos lugares estando evidentemente situados na parte L da Ásia Menor, ou ao N dela]" ao rico centro comercial de Tiro. (Ez 27:13) O versículo 19 da mesma profecia menciona novamente Javã, mas estarem os outros locais mencionados no contexto situados na Síria, na Palestina e na Arábia, tem levado alguns a considerar que o aparecimento deste nome aqui é resultado dum erro de escriba. Em vez de rezar "e Javã de Uzal", a Septuaginta grega traduz Javã como "vinho", rezando assim: "e com vinho. De Asel [Uzal]". (LXX, Thomson) A Bíblia na Linguagem de Hoje reza: "De Uzal traziam . . . vinho." Outros, porém, sugerem que Javã pode referir-se aqui a uma colônia grega situada na Arábia, ou que talvez seja o nome duma tribo ou cidade árabe.

Na profecia de Daniel, "Javã" é geralmente vertido pelos tradutores como "Grécia", uma vez que o cumprimento histórico dos escritos de Daniel torna evidente este significado. (Da 8:21; 10:20; 11:2) Isto se dá, igualmente, com a profecia de Zacarias (520-518 AEC), que prediz a guerra bem-sucedida dos 'filhos de Sião' contra Javã (Grécia). — Za 9:13.

JAVALI [hebr.: hhazír]. Este animal é mencionado nas Escrituras no Salmo 80:13, onde se alude às incursões predatórias que faz a vinhedos desprotegidos. Crê-se que se tem presente o javali (que não deve ser confundido com o porco domesticado, do qual é parente). Este animal (Sus scrofa) ainda é encontrado nos charcos da Palestina.

Um grande javali pode pesar uns 160 kg, ter quase 1,5 m de comprimento e atingir 1 m de altura, na espádua. O focinho do javali é especialmente apropriado para fossar a terra em busca de alimento, no meio da vegetação rasteira da flores-ta. As presas, especialmente as do macho, constituem formidável arma, podendo com elas facilmente estripar um cavalo. Este animal não só é perigoso, como também é destrutivo, dizendo-se que um encame deles pode estragar todo um vinhedo em uma única noite. Sua alimentação, embora basicamente vegetariana, inclui uma grande variedade de alimentos, tais como raízes, cereais, minhocas, caracóis, animais de pequeno porte, ovos de aves, e coisas assim.

JAVÉ. Veja JEOVÁ.

JAZEEL [Deus Divide (Distribui)]. Primeiro filho alistado de Naftali e fundador da família jazeelita naquela tribo. (Gên 46:24; Núm 26:48) Seu nome consta também como Jaziel. — 1Cr 7:13.

JAZEELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jazeel]. Descendentes de Jazeel, da tribo de Naftali. — Núm 26:48.

JAZEÍAS [Que Jah Contemple; Jah Contemplou]. Um daqueles que talvez se opuseram à proposta de Esdras, para que os filhos de Israel despedissem suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos que tiveram com elas; filho de Ticvá. (Esd 10:3, 10, 11, 15) Todavia, sugeriu-se que esta oposição de Jazeías e de Jonatã não era à sugestão de Esdras, mas ao procedimento adotado para executá-la. Segundo a Septuaginta grega e a Vulgata latina, Jazeías e os outros ajudaram Esdras, em vez de se oporem a ele. Daí, uma versão alternativa de Esdras 10:15 diz que Jonatã e Jazeías "eram os que agiam de modo representativo neste respeito". — NM n; veja também Al; BJ n; Fi; So; Tr.

JÁZER [Que [Deus] Ajude]. Cidade amorreia com aldeias dependentes, situada ao L do Jordão. No tempo de Moisés, os israelitas tomaram Jázer e a região ao redor. (Núm 21:25, 32) Originalmente concedida a Gade e fortificada por esta tribo, Jázer foi depois designada aos levitas. (Núm 32:1, 3-5, 34, 35; Jos 13:24, 25; 21:34, 38, 39; 1Cr 6:77, 81) Era um dos lugares mencionados com relação à rota seguida por Joabe e os chefes das forças militares, quando fizeram o censo ordenado por Davi sem autorização divina. (2Sa 24:4, 5) Perto do fim do reinado de Davi, certos homens poderosos dos hebronitas, que moravam em Jázer, receberam tarefas administrativas no território de Israel ao L do Jordão. — 1Cr 26:31, 32.

No oitavo século AEC, Jázer estava nas mãos dos moabitas. Parece que aquela região, naquele tempo, se não já antes, era famosa por sua viticultura. Predisse-se que Jázer e outras cidades moabitas sofreriam uma futura calamidade. — Is 16:8-10; Je 48:32, 33.

Sugeriram-se diversas identificações possíveis para a antiga Jázer, mas sua localização exata continua desconhecida.

JAZERA. Sacerdote cujo descendente morava em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. (1Cr 9:12) Ele provavelmente é o Azai mencionado em Neemias 11:13.

JAZIEL [Deus Divide (Distribui)]. Grafia alternativa de Jazeel (Gên 46:24), o primeiro filho alistado de Naftali. — 1Cr 7:13.

JAZIZ. Guardião-chefe dos rebanhos do Rei Davi; era agareno. — 1Cr 27:31.

JEALELEL [possivelmente: Deus Irradiou [Luz]].

1. Pai de quatro filhos alistados nas genealogias de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 16.

2. Levita merarita, cujo filho ajudou a limpar o templo durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 2Cr 29:1, 12, 15, 16.

JEARIM [Florestas]. Monte que marcava parte do termo N de Judá e no qual, pelo visto, se encontrava a cidade de Quesalom. — Jos 15:10; veja QUESALOM.

JEATERAI. Levita; descendente de Gérson (Gersom). — 1Cr 6:1, 20, 21.

JEBEREQUIAS [que significa: "Jeová Abençoa"]. Pai do Zacarias que testificou que Isaías escreveu numa tábua o nome profético Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz, o do filho do próprio profeta. — Is 8:1, 2.

JEBUS [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "pisar; pisotear"], JEBUSEU. Jebus era uma cidade antiga dos jebuseus no lugar agora conhecido como Jerusalém.

No tempo de Abraão, antes do ano 1900 AEC, este lugar chamava-se Salém (que significa "Paz"), incluído no nome Jerusalém, e que pode ser uma contração deste. (He 7:2) Nas Tabuinhas de Amarna, encontradas no Egito, faz-se menção de Urusalim (Jerusalém). E nos livros de Josué, Juízes e Primeiro Samuel, onde se mencionam eventos anteriores à conquista da cidade por Davi, o lugar é frequentemente chamado de Jerusalém. (Jos 10:1, 3, 5, 23; 12:10; 15:8, 63; 18:28; Jz 1:7, 8, 21; 19:10; 1Sa 17:54) Apenas em duas passagens ele é mencionado como Jebus. (Jz 19:10, 11; 1Cr 11:4, 5) Em Josué 18:28, aparece Yevu·sí no hebraico, a terminação i indicando pessoas, os habitantes da cidade.

Por conseguinte, parece evidente, para a maioria dos peritos, que Jerusalém (ou, possivelmente, Salém) era o nome original da cidade, e que apenas quando ocupada pelos jebuseus é que era ocasionalmente chamada Jebus. Existe também um consenso geral a que “Jebus” não era uma contração de Jerusalém, mas, antes, uma contração de jebuseus, o nome dos ocupantes do lugar por certo tempo. Depois de Davi ter capturado esta fortaleza de Sião e ter fixado ali sua residência real, ela era às vezes mencionada como a “Cidade de Davi”. — 2Sa 5:7.

Os jebuseus que ocupavam esta cidade e a área circunvizinha eram descendentes de Cã e de Canaã. (Gên 10:15, 16, 20; 1Cr 1:13, 14) Quando mencionados junto com seus parentes (hititas, girgaseus, amorreus, cananeus, perizeus, heveus), os jebuseus são geralmente alistados em último lugar, talvez por serem menos numerosos. (De 7:1; Jz 3:5) Eram classificados como povo montanhês (Núm 13:29), e dizia-se que a terra deles era, figuradamente, ‘uma terra que manava leite e mel’. — Êx 3:8, 17.

Jeová prometeu a Abraão que daria a terra dos jebuseus a ele e à sua semente, ou descendente. (Gên 15:18-21; Ne 9:8) Ao cumprir esta promessa, Jeová Deus tirou seu povo escolhido do Egito, e, ao cruzarem o Jordão, mandou seu anjo à frente deles, ordenando que se mostrassem fortes e expulsassem todos os que resistissem a eles. (Êx 13:3-5; 23:23; 33:1, 2) Não deviam concluir nenhum pacto e nenhuma aliança matrimonial com os jebuseus e outros cananeus, mas, em vez disso, deviam devotá-los à destruição total, não deixando vivo nada que respirasse, “a fim de que não te ensinem fazer segundo todas as suas coisas detestáveis”. — Êx 34:11-16; De 20:16-18.

Ao observar os êxitos dos israelitas na tomada da terra — a captura de Jericó e de Ai, bem como a capitulação dos gibeonitas — Adoni-Zedeque, rei jebuseu, encabeçou uma confederação de cinco reis que estavam determinados a conter essa invasão. (Jos 9:1, 2; 10:1-5) Na batalha que se seguiu, em que Jeová fez com que o sol e a lua ficassem imóveis, os exércitos confederados foram derrotados, os reis foram capturados e mortos, e os cadáveres deles foram pendurados em estacas para que todos os vissem. (Jos 10:6-27; 12:7, 8, 10) Pode ter sido após esta vitória que os israelitas incendiaram Jebus, arrasando-a totalmente. — Jz 1:8.

Com o término da campanha de conquista de Josué nas partes S e central da Terra da Promessa, ele voltou sua atenção para a parte setentrional ao O do Jordão. Mais uma vez, os jebuseus se ajuntaram para resistir, desta vez sob o comando de Jabim, rei de Hazor, e Israel de novo os derrotou, com a ajuda de Jeová. (Jos 11:1-8) Não obstante, depois do incêndio de Jebus e algum tempo antes da divisão da terra, os jebuseus assumiram de novo o controle das elevações estratégicas de Jerusalém, que ocuparam por 400 anos. — Jos 15:63.

A cidade de Jebus foi consignada a Benjamim, quando a terra foi distribuída, e ficava bem nos limites dos territórios tribais de Judá e Benjamim. (Jos 15:1-8; 18:11, 15, 16, 25-28) Não obstante, os israelitas não expulsaram os jebuseus, mas, antes, permitiram que tanto seus filhos como suas filhas se casassem com eles, e até mesmo adotaram a adoração dos deuses falsos dos jebuseus. (Jz 1:21; 3:5, 6) Durante este período, Jebus continuou a ser “uma cidade de estrangeiros”, em que um levita certa vez se recusou a pernoitar. — Jz 19:10-12.

Por fim, em 1070 AEC, Davi conquistou Sião, a fortaleza dos jebuseus. (2Sa 5:6-9; 1Cr 11:4-8) Mais tarde, Davi comprou de um jebuseu chamado Araúna (Ornã) a eira que ficava mais para o N, e ali construiu um altar e ofereceu sacrifícios especiais. (2Sa 24:16-25; 1Cr 21:15, 18-28) Foi neste lugar que, anos depois, Salomão construiu o custoso templo. (2Cr 3:1) Depois disso, Salomão fez que os descendentes dos jebuseus trabalhassem quais escravos no seu grande programa de edificações. — 1Rs 9:20, 21; 2Cr 8:7, 8.

Na última referência que dispomos sobre os jebuseus, ficamos sabendo que, como grupo étnico, ainda estavam presentes para contaminar a adoração dos israelitas quando estes voltaram do exílio babilônico. — Esd 9:1, 2.

JEBUSI. Veja JEBUS, JEBUSEU.

JECABZEEL [Deus Ajuntou]. Forma alternativa do nome Cabzeel. (Ne 11:25) Esta era uma cidade na parte meridional de Judá e é provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet Hora, a uns 10 km ao ENE de Berseba. — Veja CABZEEL.

JECAMEÃO [Que o Povo se Levante]. Quarto filho de Hébron, levita coatita e fundador duma casa paterna levítica que sobreviveu pelo menos até o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 23:12, 19; 24:23, 30b, 31.

JECAMIAS [Jah Levantou].

1. Descendente de Judá e filho de Salum. — 1Cr 2:3, 41.

2. Um dos filhos nascidos ao Rei Joaquim (Jeconias) durante o seu exílio em Babilônia. — 1Cr 3:17, 18.

JECOLIA [Jeová Foi Capaz]. Mãe de Uzias (Azarias), rei de Judá, que ela deu à luz por volta de 845 AEC. Jecolia, esposa de Amazias, era de Jerusalém. — 2Rs 15:1, 2; 2Cr 26:1, 3.

JECONIAS [Jeová Estabelece Firmemente]. Rei de Judá durante apenas três meses e dez dias, antes de ser levado cativo à Babilônia, por Nabucodonosor, em 617 AEC; filho de Jeoiaquim e neto do bom Rei Josias. (1Cr 3:15-17; Est 2:6; Je 24:1) Seu nome ocasionalmente é contraído para Conias. (Je 22:24; 37:1) Na maioria das vezes, porém, seu nome ocorre como Joaquim. — 2Rs 24:6, 8-15; veja JOAQUIM.

JECUTIEL. Descendente de Judá e "pai de Zanoa". (1Cr 4:1, 18) Zanoa, nas outras ocorrências, é nome duma cidade, em vez de duma pessoa (Jos 15:56, 57), de modo que Jecutiel, como seu "pai", provavelmente era o pai dos que se estabeleceram ali, ou foi ele mesmo seu fundador e ocupante principal.

JEDAÍAS. Dois nomes hebraicos, diferentes em grafia e significado, em português são transliterados do mesmo modo.
[1, 2: hebr.: Yedha·yáh]

1. Simeonita, cujo descendente Ziza era maioral durante o governo de Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:24, 37, 38, 41.

2. Morador pós-exílico de Jerusalém, que reparou o setor da muralha da cidade defronte da sua casa; filho de Harumafe. — Ne 3:10. [3-8: hebr.: Yedha'·yáh, Jah Sabe (Conhece)]

3. Casa paterna de sacerdotes escolhidos por sortes para o 2.º dos 24 grupos sacerdotais em que Davi dividiu o sacerdócio. — 1Cr 24:1, 6, 7.

Segue-se a lista de vários sacerdotes pós-exílicos que tinham o nome Jedaías, alguns deles provavelmente sendo membros da mesma casa paterna, mas isto é difícil de determinar.

4. Sacerdote, ou possivelmente membro da acima mencionada casa paterna, que morava em Jerusalém após o retorno de Babilônia. Ser Jedaías chamado de "filho de" Joiaribe, em Neemias 11:10, pode ser um acréscimo de copista, conforme indicado pela comparação com 1 Crônicas 9:10. Jedaías e os dois outros (Joiaribe ou Jeoiaribe, e Jaquim), no começo das listas de Neemias e de Crônicas, são os mesmos nomes que os de casas paternas no tempo de Davi. (1Cr 24:6, 7, 17) De modo que pode ser que a referência seja simplesmente às casas paternas, indicando que estavam representadas, ao passo que os nomes seguintes talvez fossem de pessoas; ou pode ser que todos eram nomes de pessoas que viviam então. — 1Cr 9:10-12; Ne 11:10-13.

5. Antepassado de 973 sacerdotes que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. (Esd 2:1, 2, 36; Ne 7:39) Eram provavelmente membros da mesma casa paterna (N.º 3), a menos que, serem "da casa de Jesua", se refira a alguma conexão com a linhagem sumo sacerdotal.

6, 7. Dois sacerdotes com este nome estão incluídos na lista daqueles que retornaram com Jesua e Zorobabel em 537 AEC. (Ne 12:1, 6, 7) Durante o sacerdócio de Joiaquim, sucessor de Jesua, cada um dos dois é mencionado como casa paterna, um representado por Uzi e o outro por Netanel. (Ne 12:12, 19, 21) Não se pode determinar se qualquer um ou ambos desses Jedaías tinham ligação com a original casa paterna (N.º 3).

8. Um dos exilados que retornaram, dos quais se tirou ouro e prata e se fez uma coroa para o sumo sacerdote Josué. (Za 6:10-14) Não se especifica nenhuma conexão com os sacerdotes acima mencionados.

JEDEÍAS [possivelmente: Que Jeová Se Sinta Alegre].

1. Levita (ou sua casa paterna) descendente de Anrão, envolvido na reorganização dos levitas por Davi. — 1Cr 24:20, 31.

2. Meronotita encarregado das jumentas do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 27:30.

JEDIAEL [Deus Conhece [a Este]; Conhecido por Deus].

1. Filho de Benjamim. Os descendentes de Jediael ascenderam certa vez a 17.200 homens valentes, poderosos. (1Cr 7:6, 10, 11) Trata-se provavelmente de Asbel, filho de Benjamim. — Gên 46:21; veja ASBEL, ASBELITAS.

2. Um dos diversos guerreiros e líderes da tribo de Manassés, que se juntaram ao exército de Davi enquanto ele estava acampado em Ziclague. (1Cr 12:20, 21) Trata-se possivelmente do N.º 3.

3. Um dos poderosos de Davi; filho de Sinri. — 1Cr 11:26, 45; veja o N.º 2.

4. Porteiro da casa de Jeová, designado durante o reinado de Davi. Ele era o segundo filho do coraíta Meselemias. — 1Cr 26:1, 2.

JEDIDA [Amada]. Esposa de Amom e mãe do Rei Josias, a quem deu à luz em 667 AEC; filha de Adaías, de Boscate. — 2Rs 21:24-26; 22:1.

JEDIDIAS [Amado de Jah]. Nome dado por Natã, profeta de Jeová, ao segundo filho de Davi e Bate-Seba. (2Sa 12:24, 25) O nome refletia o amor de Jeová ao recém-nascido e sua aceitação dele, em contraste com Sua rejeição do anterior filho adulterino deles, que morreu logo após o nascimento. (2Sa 12:13-19) Quanto ao uso, o nome Jedidias, porém, não suplantou o nome Salomão. — Veja SALOMÃO.

JEDUTUM [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "elogiar; louvar"].

1. Músico levita. Pelo que parece, Jedutum era anteriormente chamado de Etã, pois, antes da chegada da Arca a Jerusalém, "Etã" é relacionado com outros músicos, Hemã e Asafe, ao passo que "Jedutum" é depois usado nessa mesma relação. (1Cr 15:17, 19; 25:1) Não se fornece nenhuma linhagem ancestral de Jedutum; fornece-se a de Etã. (1Cr 6:44-47) E não se menciona descendentes de Etã; mas menciona-se os de Jedutum. (1Cr 9:16) A mudança do nome de Etã [que significa "Perseverante; Sempre Fluindo"] para Jedutum [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "elogiar; louvar"] certamente estava em harmonia com a designação que lhe foi dada. — 1Cr 16:41; veja ETÃ N.º 3.

Jedutum e sua família de músicos participaram de várias celebrações, quando era apropriado "agradecer e louvar a Jeová" (1Cr 25:3); por exemplo, quando a Arca do Pacto foi levada a Jerusalém. (1Cr 16:1, 41, 42) Das 24 turmas em que a reorganização feita por Davi separou os músicos do santuário, a 2.ª, a 4.ª, a 8.ª, a 10.ª, a 12.ª e a 14.ª sorte saiu para os seis filhos de Jedutum, todos trabalhando sob a direção de seu pai. (1Cr 25:1, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15, 17, 19, 21) A participação de Jedutum, Asafe e Hemã nestes deveres significava que cada um dos três ramos principais de levitas (Merari, Gersom e Coate, respectivamente) estava representado entre os músicos do templo. (1Cr 6:31-47) Todos os três grupos louvaram a Jeová com música quando Salomão inaugurou o templo. (2Cr 5:12, 13) Os descendentes de Jedutum são mencionados durante o reinado de Ezequias e até mesmo entre os exilados que retornaram de Babilônia. — 2Cr 29:1, 12, 14, 15; Ne 11:17.

Três dos salmos mencionam Jedutum em seu cabeçalho. Dois deles (Sal 39, 62) rezam: "Ao regente de Jedutum" ("segundo o modo de [do coro de] Jedutum", Ro n sobre o cabeçalho do salmo 39), ao passo que o terceiro (Sal 77) reza: "Ao regente, segundo Jedutum." (NM; IBB; LEB; MC; "sobre", AT) Em cada caso, atribui-se a composição do salmo a outrem — os primeiros dois a Davi e o terceiro a Asafe; assim, não se sugere que Jedutum os compôs, embora em outras partes seja chamado de "visionário do rei" e se diga também que ele "profetizava com a harpa". (2Cr 35:15; 1Cr 25:1, 3) Por conseguinte, os cabeçalhos destes três salmos são, evidentemente, instruções para sua execução, talvez identificando um estilo ou até mesmo um instrumento musical de algum modo associado com Jedutum, ou que ele ou seus filhos talvez tenham inventado, introduzido, aperfeiçoado ou tornado comum através do uso.

2. Levita, cujo filho ou descendente, Obede-Edom, era porteiro no tempo em que Davi fez que se levasse a Arca a Jerusalém. — 1Cr 16:1, 37, 38.

JEEZQUEL [Que Deus Fortaleça; Deus Fortaleceu]. O sacerdote e cabeça da casa paterna que foi escolhido por sortes para a 20.ª das 24 turmas em que Davi dividira os serviços sacerdotais. — 1Cr 24:1, 3, 7, 16.

JEFTÉ [Que [Deus] Abra; [Deus] Abriu]. Juiz de Israel, da tribo de Manassés. (Núm 26:29; Jz 11:1) Administrou a justiça no território de Gileade durante seis anos, talvez durante o sacerdócio de Eli e nos primeiros anos de vida de Samuel. (Jz 12:7) A referência de Jefté aos "trezentos anos" de controle israelita ao L do Jordão pareceria situar o início de seu juizado de seis anos por volta de 1173 AEC. — Jz 11:26.

Jefté Era Filho Legítimo. A mãe de Jefté era "prostituta", o que não significa, porém, que Jefté nascesse como fruto da prostituição ou que fosse ilegítimo. Sua mãe tinha sido prostituta antes de casar-se com Gileade, como esposa secundária dele, assim como Raabe tinha sido prostituta, mas, depois, casou-se com Salmom. (Jz 11:1; Jos 2:1; Mt 1:5) Que Jefté não era filho ilegítimo é comprovado por ele ter sido expulso por seus meios-irmãos, filhos da esposa primária de Gileade, para que não tivesse parte na herança. (Jz 11:2) Adicionalmente, Jefté veio mais tarde a ser o líder aceito dos homens de Gileade (dentre os quais os meios-irmãos de Jefté parecem ter sido os principais). (Jz 11:11) Ademais, ele ofereceu sacrifício a Deus no tabernáculo. (Jz 11:30, 31) Nada disso teria sido possível a um filho ilegítimo, pois a Lei declarava de modo específico: "Nenhum filho ilegítimo pode entrar na congregação de Jeová. Mesmo até a décima geração não pode entrar ninguém seu na congregação de Jeová." — De 23:2.

Jefté era evidentemente o primogênito de Gileade. Por conseguinte, teria normalmente herdado duas partes da propriedade de seu pai, Gileade (que, pelo que parece, já tinha falecido quando os meios-irmãos de Jefté o expulsaram), e tornar-se-ia também o cabeça da família. Apenas por expulsá-lo ilegalmente é que os meios-irmãos de Jefté poderiam privá-lo da sua legítima herança, pois, mesmo que o primogênito fosse filho duma esposa secundária, ou de uma esposa menos estimada, ele deveria, ainda assim, gozar dos direitos de primogênito. — De 21:15-17.

"Homens Ociosos" Juntaram-se a Jefté. Quando Jefté foi expulso por seus meios-irmãos, passou a morar na terra de Tobe, região ao L de Gileade, aparentemente fora dos limites de Israel. Ali Jefté estaria junto à fronteira, exposto aos inimigos estrangeiros de Israel, em especial Amom. "Homens ociosos", isto é, homens evidentemente tornados ociosos ou desempregados por causa da hostilidade dos amonitas, e que se revoltaram contra a servidão a Amom, dirigiram-se a Jefté e se colocaram sob seu comando. (Jz 11:3) As pessoas que viviam no território ao L do rio Jordão (as tribos de Rubem, Gade e metade de Manassés) eram mormente criadores de gado, e as pilhagens efetuadas pelos incursores amonitas (que por vezes até cruzavam o Jordão), pelo que transparece, haviam tirado os bens e os meios de vida de muitos dos habitantes de Gileade. — Jz 10:6-10.

Os Amonitas Ameaçam com Guerra. Por 18 anos continuou a opressão por parte dos amonitas. Deus permitiu-a porque os israelitas se voltaram infielmente para servir os deuses das nações em volta deles. Mas, agora, os filhos de Israel caíram em si, arrependendo-se da sua tolice e invocando a ajuda de Jeová. Começaram a desfazer-se dos seus ídolos e a servir a Jeová. Neste ponto, Amom ajuntou-se em Gileade para uma guerra em ampla escala. (Jz 10:7-17; 11:4) Isto indica que era realmente o grande inimigo invisível de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, quem incitava as nações pagãs contra Israel, e que a verdadeira questão em litígio era a adoração do Deus verdadeiro. — Veja Re 12:9; Sal 96:5; 1Co 10:20.

Israel ajuntou suas forças em Mispá. Os meios-irmãos de Jefté evidentemente destacavam-se entre os anciãos de Gileade. (Jz 10:17; 11:7) Viram a necessidade de liderança e de orientação corretas. (Jz 10:18) Deram-se conta de que tinham de ter como cabeça um homem designado por Deus, se é que haviam de derrotar Amom. (Jz 11:5, 6, 10) Sem dúvida, Jefté e seus homens tinham realizado alguns feitos em Tobe, o que sugeria que ele era o escolhido por Deus. (Jz 11:1) Os homens de Gileade decidiram dirigir-se a Jefté, a quem tinham desprezado, para pedir-lhe que se tornasse seu cabeça.

Jefté Torna-se Cabeça de Gileade. Jefté concordou em liderá-los na luta contra Amom, sob uma condição: se Jeová lhe concedesse a vitória, ele continuaria como cabeça deles depois de retornarem da luta. Sua insistência nisso não era uma exigência egoísta. Ele se mostrara preocupado com a luta em favor do nome de Deus, e de Seu povo. Daí, se derrotasse Amom, isso provaria que Deus estava com ele. Jefté queria certificar-se de que o governo de Deus não seria de novo abandonado quando passasse a crise. Também, se realmente era o primogênito de Gileade, estava apenas afirmando seu direito legal como cabeça da casa de Gileade. Este pacto foi então concluído perante Jeová, em Mispá. Aqui, de novo, Jefté mostrou que se voltava para Jeová como o Deus e Rei de Israel, e seu verdadeiro Libertador. — Jz 11:8-11.

Jefté, sendo homem de ação, não perdeu tempo em exercer sua vigorosa liderança. Enviou uma mensagem ao rei de Amom, indicando que Amom era o agressor, ao invadir a terra de Israel. O rei replicou que se tratava de terras que Israel tomara de Amom. (Jz 11:12, 13) Nisso Jefté demonstrou que não era um simples guerreiro rude, sem cultura, mas um estudioso da história, e, especialmente, dos modos de Deus lidar com seu povo. Refutou o argumento amonita, demonstrando que: (1) Israel não molestou Amom, Moabe ou Edom (Jz 11:14-18; De 2:9, 19, 37; 2Cr 20:10, 11); (2) Amom não possuía a terra disputada na época da conquista israelita, porque se achava nas mãos dos amorreus cananeus, e Deus entregara o rei deles, Síon, junto com sua terra, nas mãos de Israel; (3) Amom não havia questionado a ocupação de Israel nos últimos 300 anos; por conseguinte, em que base válida podia fazê-lo agora? — Jz 11:19-27.

Jefté atingiu o âmago da questão ao mostrar que o assunto girava em torno da questão da adoração. Declarou que Jeová Deus dera essa terra a Israel e que, por este motivo, eles não cederiam dela um milímetro sequer aos adoradores dum deus falso. Classificou Quemós como deus de Amom. Alguns têm achado isto um erro. Mas, embora Amom tivesse por deus a Milcom, e embora Quemós fosse o deus de Moabe, estas nações aparentadas adoravam muitos deuses. Salomão até mesmo introduziu erradamente a adoração de Quemós em Israel, por causa das suas esposas estrangeiras. (Jz 11:24; 1Rs 11:1, 7, 8, 33; 2Rs 23:13) Além disso, "Quemós" talvez signifique "Subjugador, Conquistador", segundo alguns peritos. (Veja Gesenius's Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon [Léxico Hebraico e Caldeu de Gesenius], traduzido para o inglês por S. Tregelles, 1901, p. 401.) Jefté talvez chamasse atenção para este deus porque os amonitas lhe davam crédito por 'subjugar' e 'conquistar' outros e dar-lhes a terra.

O Voto de Jefté. Jefté discerniu então que um combate com Amom era da vontade de Deus. Com o espírito de Deus energizando-o, ele conduziu seu exército ao combate. Similar ao que Jacó fizera cerca de 600 anos antes, Jefté fez um voto, demonstrando seu profundo desejo de coração, de obter a orientação de Jeová e de atribuir a Jeová qualquer êxito que tivesse. (Jz 11:30, 31; Gên 28:20-22) Jeová ouviu com favor o voto dele, e os amonitas foram subjugados. — Jz 11:32, 33.

Pensava Jefté num sacrifício humano, quando votou apresentar como oferta queimada o primeiro que saísse da sua casa?

Alguns críticos e peritos condenam Jefté por seu voto, nutrindo o conceito de que Jefté seguiu o costume das outras nações, oferecendo sua filha no fogo, como um holocausto humano. Mas não se tratava disso. Teria sido um insulto para Jeová, uma coisa repugnante, em violação da Sua lei, oferecer um literal sacrifício humano. Ele ordenara estritamente a Israel: "Não deves aprender a fazer conforme as coisas detestáveis dessas nações. Não se deve achar em ti alguém que faça seu filho ou sua filha passar pelo fogo . . . Pois, todo aquele que faz tais coisas é algo detestável para Jeová, e é por causa destas coisas detestáveis que Jeová, teu Deus, as expulsa de diante de ti." (De 18:9-12) Jeová amaldiçoaria, e não abençoaria, uma pessoa assim. Os próprios que Jefté combatia, os amonitas, ofereciam sacrifícios humanos a seu deus, Moloque. — Veja 2Rs 17:17; 21:6; 23:10; Je 7:31, 32; 19:5, 6.

Quando Jefté disse: "Terá de dar-se que aquele que sair, quem sair da porta da minha casa ao meu encontro . . . terá de tornar-se então de Jeová", ele se referia a uma pessoa, e não a um animal, visto que não era provável que os animais apropriados para sacrifício fossem mantidos dentro das casas dos israelitas, para ali ficar à vontade. Ademais, a oferta de um animal não mostraria devoção extraordinária a Deus. Jefté bem sabia que poderia ser sua filha quem sairia ao seu encontro. Deve-se ter presente que o espírito de Jeová estava sobre Jefté naquela ocasião; isto impediria qualquer voto precipitado da parte de Jefté. Como, então, 'tornar-se-ia de Jeová' a pessoa que saísse ao encontro de Jefté para congratulá-lo por sua vitória, e seria oferecida como "oferta queimada"? — Jz 11:31.

Era possível devotar pessoas ao serviço exclusivo de Jeová relacionado com o santuário. Era um direito que os pais podiam exercer. Samuel foi uma de tais pessoas, prometido ao serviço no tabernáculo por um voto de Ana, sua mãe, antes de ele nascer. Este voto foi aprovado pelo marido dela, Elcana. Logo que Samuel foi desmamado, Ana o ofereceu no santuário. Junto com ele, Ana trouxe um sacrifício animal. (1Sa 1:11, 22-28; 2:11) Sansão foi outro filho especialmente devotado ao serviço de Deus como nazireu. — Jz 13:2-5, 11-14; compare isso com a autoridade do pai sobre a filha, conforme esboçada em Núm 30:3-5, 16.

Assim, quando Jefté levou sua filha ao santuário, que naquela época se achava em Silo, sem dúvida, acompanhou esta apresentação dela com a oferta queimada dum animal. Segundo a Lei, uma oferta queimada era morta, esfolada e cortada em pedaços; os intestinos e as pernas eram lavados; e o corpo, com cabeça e tudo, era queimado sobre o altar. (Le 1:3-9) A inteireza de tal oferta representava a dedicação plena, sem reservas, de todo coração, a Jeová, e, quando acompanhada por outra oferta (como, por exemplo, quando a oferta pelo pecado, no Dia da Expiação, era seguida pela oferta queimada), isto constituía um apelo a Jeová para que aceitasse aquela primeira oferta. — Le 16:3, 5, 6, 11, 15, 24.

Era um verdadeiro sacrifício da parte tanto de Jefté como da sua filha, pois ele não possuía outros filhos. (Jz 11:34) Assim, não haveria descendente para perpetuar seu nome e sua herança em Israel. A filha de Jefté era sua única esperança neste sentido. Ela chorou, não porque tivesse de morrer, mas pela sua "virgindade", pois todo homem e toda mulher israelita desejava ter filhos e manter vivos o nome e a herança da família. (Jz 11:37, 38) A esterilidade era uma calamidade. Mas a filha de Jefté "nunca teve relações sexuais com qualquer homem". Se estas palavras se aplicassem apenas à época anterior ao cumprimento do voto, teriam sido supérfluas, pois se diz especificamente que ela era virgem. Que a declaração se refere ao cumprimento do voto é indicado por vir depois da expressão: "Ele cumpriu seu voto que fizera referente a ela." Na realidade, o registro indica que também depois de o voto ser cumprido, ela manteve sua virgindade. — Jz 11:39; veja as traduções de Al; ALA; BV; NM.

Ademais, a filha de Jefté recebia visitas "de ano em ano" de suas companheiras, para 'elogiá-la'. (Jz 11:40) A palavra hebraica, ta·náh, usada aqui, ocorre também em Juízes 5:11, e naquele texto ela é traduzida, de forma variável, "narrar" (NM), "contar" (BV; Fi; So), "celebrar" (BJ; CBC; PIB), "repetir" (RS). O Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon (Léxico Hebraico e Caldeu; editado por B. Davies, 1957, p. 693) define essa palavra como "repetir, recitar". Em Juízes 11:40, a King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) verte o termo como "lamentar", mas a leitura marginal reza "falar com". Ao passo que a filha de Jefté servia no santuário, sem dúvida como outros netineus ("os dados", devotados ao serviço do santuário), havia muita coisa que ela podia fazer. Tais pessoas serviam em ajuntar lenha, em tirar água, em consertos, e, sem dúvida, em muitas outras tarefas, como ajudantes dos sacerdotes e dos levitas ali. — Jos 9:21, 23, 27; Esd 7:24; 8:20; Ne 3:26.

Efraimitas Resistem a Jefté. Os efraimitas, que se consideravam a tribo dominante do N de Israel (incluindo Gileade), recusaram-se orgulhosamente a reconhecer Jefté e procuraram justificar-se. Assim, inventaram uma acusação falsa como desculpa por ficarem ofendidos com ele. Anos antes, haviam demonstrado atitude semelhante, no tempo do juiz Gideão. (Jz 8:1) Afirmaram que Jefté deixara de convocá-los para a luta contra Amom, e ameaçaram queimar a casa de Jefté sobre ele. — Jz 12:1.

Jefté respondeu que ele os havia convocado, mas que eles se recusaram a vir. Argumentou: "Jeová . . . deu [a Amom] na [minha] mão. Portanto, por que viestes neste dia contra mim para lutar contra mim?" (Jz 12:2, 3) Os efraimitas contenderam sobre as forças de Jefté: "Fugitivos de Efraim é o que sois, ó Gileade, dentro de Efraim, dentro de Manassés." (Jz 12:4) Com isso, talvez estivessem fazendo pouco de Jefté por se referirem à sua anterior expulsão e por ter consigo "homens ociosos", desempregados, como "fugitivos". — Jz 11:3.

Na luta que se seguiu, os de Efraim foram derrotados e desbaratados. Os homens de Jefté os barraram nos vaus do Jordão. Quando os efraimitas fugitivos tentaram ocultar sua identidade, sua pronúncia os traiu. Ao serem testados por se lhes pedir que proferissem a palavra "Xibolete", não conseguiam pronunciar o "x[i]" ("sh" hebraico), mas só podiam dizer "Sibolete". Por terem agido com rebeldia para com aquele que Jeová designara para sua salvação, 42.000 efraimitas perderam a vida. — Jz 12:5, 6.

Aprovado por Deus. Em 1 Samuel 12:11, Jefté é mencionado como tendo sido enviado por Jeová qual libertador, e, em Hebreus 11:32, ele é alistado entre a fiel "nuvem de testemunhas". — He 12:1.

JEFUNÉ.

1. Pai do espia Calebe, de Judá, e provavelmente pai de Quenaz. (Núm 13:2, 3, 6; 1Cr 4:15; Jz 1:13) Jefuné era um quenizeu associado com a tribo de Judá. — Jos 14:6, 14.

2. Destacado membro da tribo de Aser. — 1Cr 7:38, 40.

JEGAR-SAADUTA [aramaico, significando: "Montão de Testemunho"]. É a expressão aramaica (síria) usada por Labão para dar nome ao montão de pedras sobre o qual ele e Jacó tomaram uma refeição relacionada com um pacto. Este montão de pedras, chamado Jegar-Saaduta, devia servir de "testemunha" de que nenhum deles o ultrapassaria para prejudicar o outro. Jacó chamou-o pelo equivalente hebraico, "Galeede". — Gên 31:25, 46-53; veja GALEEDE.

JEÍAS [Que Ele Viva, ó Jah!]. Levita que atuou como porteiro para a Arca na época da sua transferência para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:24, 25.

JEIEL, I.

1. Descendente de Rubem, filho de Jacó. — 1Cr 5:1, 7.

2. Benjamita que, junto com sua família (a esposa Maacá e dez filhos), morava em Gibeão; antepassado do Rei Saul. (1Cr 8:29; 9:35-39) Parece tratar-se de Abiel. — 1Sa 9:1; veja ABIEL N.º 1.

3. Um dos poderosos de Davi; filho de Hotão, o aroerita. — 1Cr 11:26, 44.

4. Levita, tanto porteiro como músico, que participou na celebração musical na ocasião em que a Arca foi pela primeira vez levada a Jerusalém, e daí em diante tocava diante da tenda que a continha. — 1Cr 15:17, 18, 21, 28; 16:1, 4, 5 (a terceira ocorrência do nome no v 5 tem a mesma grafia no hebraico).

5. Outro músico levita, que realizava os mesmos serviços que o N.º 4 (1Cr 16:5, a primeira ocorrência do nome neste versículo.) É chamado de Jaaziel em 1 Crônicas 15:18, e de Aziel em 15:20.

6. Descendente levita de Asafe e antepassado do levita que exortou o Rei Jeosafá, e os habitantes de Judá e de Jerusalém, a não temerem os inimigos, porque Jeová estaria com o Seu povo. — 2Cr 20:14-17.

7. Secretário que registrou e recenseou o exército do Rei Uzias. — 2Cr 26:11.

8. Um dos chefes dos levitas que fizeram uma contribuição muito grande de animais para a grande celebração de Páscoa realizada pelo Rei Josias. — 2Cr 35:1, 9.

9. Descendente de Adonicão, que acompanhou Esdras na viagem de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 13.

10. Um dos filhos de Nebo, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:43, 44.

JEIEL, II [Que Ele Viva, ó Deus!].

1. Levita da segunda turma de músicos que acompanharam a Arca do Pacto da casa de Obede-Edom a Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:17, 18, 20, 25, 28) Depois, Jeiel e outros foram designados para tocar diante da tenda em que repousava a Arca. — 1Cr 16:1, 4-6.

2. Descendente levita de Gérson através de Ladã; era "cabeça". (1Cr 23:6-8) Perto do fim do reinado de Davi, Jeiel(i) e seus filhos (ou a casa paterna chamada por este nome) cuidavam do tesouro pertencente à casa de adoração de Jeová. — 1Cr 26:21, 22; 29:8.

3. Tutor, talvez instrutor, dos filhos de Davi; filho ou descendente de Acmoni. — 1Cr 27:32.

4. Filho do Rei Jeosafá. Jeiel e seus irmãos haviam recebido do pai presentes em riquezas e cidades, mas o reinado devia caber ao irmão mais velho deles, Jeorão. Todavia, após a morte de Jeosafá, todos estes irmãos foram mortos por Jeorão. — 2Cr 21:1-4, 12, 13.

5. Levita que ajudou a eliminar os objetos impuros que o Rei Ezequias removera do templo; descendente de Hemã. (2Cr 29:12, 14-19) Trata-se, provavelmente, do N.º 6.

6. Comissário levita, designado para ajudar a cuidar das abundantes contribuições trazidas pelo povo ao templo durante o reinado de Ezequias. (2Cr 31:12, 13) Trata-se, provavelmente, do N.º 5.

7. Um dos três "líderes da casa do verdadeiro Deus", que fizeram contribuições generosas de vítimas animais para a grande celebração da Páscoa realizada pelo Rei Josias. — 2Cr 35:8.

8. Membro da casa paterna de Joabe, cujo filho Obadias retornou com Esdras a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:1, 9.

9. Homem cujo filho reconheceu perante Esdras o grande erro do povo em tomar esposas estrangeiras; descendente de Elão. (Esd 10:2) É possível que seja o Jeiel de Esdras 10:26, incluído na lista daqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos (Esd 10:44), ou pelo menos outro descendente de Elão.

10. Um dos sacerdotes que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram. — Esd 10:21, 44.

JEIELI [De (Pertencente a) Jeiel]. Levita gersonita que evidentemente serviu como encarregado do tesouro do santuário. (1Cr 26:20-22) Em outros lugares é chamado "Jeiel". — 1Cr 23:6-8; 29:8; veja JEIEL, II N.º 2.

JEIRA. Conforme usado nas Escrituras, entende-se que o termo "jeira" denota a terra que uma junta de touros pode lavrar em um dia; jugada. A palavra hebraica assim traduzida (tsé·medh) significa literalmente "junta" (1Sa 14:14, n; 1Rs 19:19) e é também vertida "parelha(s)" (Jz 19:3; 2Rs 9:25) e "par" (1Sa 11:7, Al). É provável que esta medida agrária era de menos de 0,4 ha. A palavra iugerum, encontrada na Vulgata latina, refere-se a uma área de 0,25 ha.

JEISQUIAS [que significa "Que Jeová Me Fortaleça; Jeová Me Fortaleceu"]. Destacado efraimita que se opôs a que Israel fizesse cativos os seus irmãos do reino meridional, quando os israelitas sob o Rei Peca derrotaram Judá, e que também deu ajuda material aos cativos. Jeisquias era filho de Salum. — 2Cr 28:6, 8, 12-15.

JEIZQUIAS. Veja JEISQUIAS.

JEJUM. Abstinência de toda alimentação por um período limitado. Jejuns corretamente motivados visavam mostrar tristeza e arrependimento piedosos para com pecados anteriores. (1Sa 7:6; Jl 2:12-15; Jon 3:5) Eram também apropriados diante de grande perigo, quando em premente necessidade de orientação divina, ao suportar testes e enfrentar tentações, ou ao estudar, ao meditar ou ao concentrar-se nos propósitos divinos. (2Cr 20:3; Esd 8:21; Est 4:3, 16; Mt 4:1, 2) O jejum não era uma forma de punição imposta a si mesmo, mas significava humilhar-se diante de Jeová. (Esd 8:21; 9:5; compare isso com 1Rs 21:27-29.) Jesus jejuou 40 dias, como fizeram Moisés e Elias, os quais apareceram em forma de visão com Jesus na transfiguração dele. — Mt 17:1-9; Êx 34:28; De 9:9; 1Rs 19:7, 8.

A Lei mosaica não emprega o termo "jejum", mas, em relação com o Dia da Expiação, ela ordena: "Deveis atribular as vossas almas." (Le 16:29-31; 23:27; Núm 29:7) Entende-se geralmente que isto significa jejuar, e este conceito é apoiado por Isaías 58:3, 5 e Salmo 35:13.

O capítulo 58 de Isaías trata duma época em que os pecados dos judeus eram pesados; contudo, eles não se arrependeram sinceramente, embora fingissem adorar a Jeová, prestando-lhe serviço pró-forma e realizando atos ou práticas apenas ostensivos. O jejum era uma de tais práticas, e eles pensavam que este lhes granjearia a atenção e o favor de Deus. Quando isto fracassou, perguntaram em aparente perplexidade: "Por que razão jejuamos e tu não o viste, e atribulamos a nossa alma e tu não o notavas?" Jeová lhes disse o motivo. Mesmo durante o jejum, enquanto pediam Seus julgamentos justos e agiam como se aplicassem a própria justiça, entregavam-se aos seus próprios prazeres e negócios, empenhavam-se em lutas, opressão e violência; não mostravam nenhuma tristeza piedosa e arrependimento associados com jejuns sinceros. O jejum deles não era do tipo para fazer sua voz ser ouvida no céu, embora seus lamentos ostentosos fossem deveras barulhentos. Jeová denunciou o ato hipócrita que eles encenavam: "Acaso deve o jejum que eu escolho tornar-se assim, como um dia em que o homem terreno atribula a sua alma? Por encurvar a sua cabeça como o junco e para que estenda apenas serapilheira e cinzas como o seu leito? É isto o que chamais de jejum e de dia aceitável para Jeová?" — Is 58:1-5.

Para ser aceitável, o jejum tem de ser acompanhado da correção dos pecados anteriores. Mediante seu profeta Isaías, Jeová revelou o que considerava ser o verdadeiro jejum, dizendo: "Não é este o jejum que escolhi? Soltar os grilhões da iniquidade, desatar as brochas da canga e deixar ir livres os esmagados, e que rompais toda canga? Não é partilhares o teu pão ao faminto e introduzires na tua casa pessoas atribuladas, sem lar? Que, caso vejas alguém nu, tu o tenhas de cobrir, e que não te ocultes da tua própria carne?" — Is 58:6, 7.

Quatro Jejuns Anuais dos Judeus. Os judeus estabeleceram muitos jejuns, e, em certa época, tinham quatro jejuns anuais, evidentemente para assinalar os eventos calamitosos associados com o sítio e a desolação de Jerusalém no sétimo século AEC. (Za 8:19) Os quatro jejuns anuais eram: (1) "O jejum do quarto mês" comemorava, pelo que parece, a brecha nos muros de Jerusalém aberta pelos babilônios, em 9 de tamuz de 607 AEC. (2Rs 25:2-4; Je 52:5-7) (2) Foi no quinto mês judaico, ab, que o templo foi destruído, e, evidentemente, "o jejum do quinto mês" era celebrado como lembrete deste evento. (2Rs 25:8, 9; Je 52:12, 13) (3) "O jejum do sétimo mês", pelo que parece, era celebrado como triste recordação da morte de Gedalias, ou da completa desolação da terra, que se seguiu ao assassínio de Gedalias, quando os judeus remanescentes, com medo dos babilônios, desceram ao Egito. (2Rs 25:22-26) (4) "O jejum do décimo mês" pode ter estado ligado aos judeus exilados já em Babilônia, ao receberem a triste notícia de que Jerusalém tinha caído (veja Ez 33:21), ou pode ter comemorado o início do sítio bem-sucedido contra Jerusalém, por Nabucodonosor, no décimo dia daquele mês, em 609 AEC. — 2Rs 25:1; Je 39:1; 52:4.

Quando certos judeus perguntaram por meio de Zacarias: "Chorarei no quinto mês, observando abstinência, assim como fiz, oh! por tantos anos?" Jeová respondeu: "Quando jejuastes . . . por setenta anos, jejuastes realmente para mim, sim, para mim?" Deus mostrou que o verdadeiro jejum para ele teria sido acompanhado pela obediência, e que aquilo que ele requeria era veracidade, julgamento, paz e um coração sincero. Assim, em vez de um lamentoso jejum e de olharem para trás, para o passado, eles poderiam exultar e alegrar-se nas épocas festivas com as bênçãos do restabelecimento da adoração verdadeira e o ajuntamento de outros ao serviço de Jeová. — Za 7:3-7; 8:16, 19, 23.

Conselho Cristão sobre o Jejum. Quando Jesus estava na terra, deu a seguinte instrução aos seus discípulos: "Quando jejuardes, parai de ficar com o rosto triste, como os hipócritas, pois desfiguram os seus rostos para que pareça aos homens que estão jejuando. Deveras, eu vos digo: Eles já têm plenamente a sua recompensa. Mas tu, quando jejuares, unta a tua cabeça e lava o rosto, para que não pareça aos homens que estás jejuando, mas ao teu Pai, que está em secreto; então o teu Pai, que olha em secreto, te recompensará." (Mt 6:16-18) Jesus fazia aqui alusão ao jejum insincero dos fariseus, que mencionou numa ilustração em outra oportunidade. (Lu 18:9-14) Era costumeiro para os fariseus jejuar duas vezes por semana, no segundo e no quinto dia da semana. — Lu 18:12.

Abster-se alguém de alimento meramente de modo formal é descrito por Paulo como sujeitar-se a decretos: "Não manuseies, nem proves, nem toques", e ele diz que "estas mesmas coisas, deveras, têm aparência de sabedoria numa forma de adoração imposta a si próprio e em humildade fingida, no tratamento severo do corpo; mas, não são de valor algum em combater a satisfação da carne". — Col 2:20-23.

Algumas seitas religiosas da cristandade têm imposto jejuns aos seus membros, mas a própria Bíblia não ordena aos cristãos jejuar. Quando Jesus falou aos seus discípulos sobre o jejum, como acima mencionado (Mt 6:16-18), ele e seus discípulos ainda estavam sob a Lei mosaica, e observavam o Dia da Expiação e seu jejum.

O texto em Mateus 17:21, sobre o jejum, que aparece na versão Almeida, não consta em alguns dos mais importantes manuscritos antigos. Igualmente, embora a King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) mencione um jejum em Marcos 9:29 (também, Al), em Atos 10:30 e 1 Coríntios 7:5, de acordo com esses manuscritos, tais textos não contêm nenhuma referência a jejuns.

Alguns têm considerado Mateus 9:15 como uma ordem para os cristãos jejuarem. Na realidade, Jesus estava simplesmente fazendo uma declaração do que iria acontecer quando ele morresse. Enquanto Jesus estava com seus discípulos na terra, não era apropriado que jejuassem. Quando ele morreu, deveras prantearam e jejuaram. Mas não tinham nenhum motivo para jejuar lamuriosamente depois da ressurreição dele, e especialmente não depois do maravilhoso derramamento do espírito santo. (Mr 2:18-20; Lu 5:33-35) Por certo, os cristãos não estavam obrigados a jejuar no aniversário da morte do Senhor, pois o apóstolo Paulo, corrigindo abusos relacionados com tomar uma ceia no lugar de reunião da congregação antes da Refeição Noturna do Senhor, disse: "Não é que certamente tendes casas para comer e beber? . . . Consequentemente, meus irmãos, quando vos reunirdes para o comer [i.e., a Refeição Noturna do Senhor], esperai uns pelos outros. Se alguém tiver fome, coma em casa, para que não vos reunais para julgamento." — 1Co 11:22, 33, 34.

Ao passo que não jejuavam como questão dum requisito religioso, os primitivos cristãos deveras jejuavam em ocasiões especiais. Quando Barnabé e Paulo foram enviados numa designação especial para a Ásia Menor, houve tanto jejuns como orações. Também, faziam-se orações "com jejuns" quando anciãos eram designados numa nova congregação. (At 13:2, 3; 14:23) Assim, os cristãos não estão sob uma ordem para jejuar, nem estão proibidos de fazê-lo. — Ro 14:5, 6.

JEMIMA. A primeira das três filhas de Jó nascidas após a sua grande prova. Jemima e suas irmãs, as mais belas mulheres do país, receberam uma herança entre os seus sete irmãos. — Jó 42:13-15.

JEMUEL [possivelmente: Dia de Deus]. Primeiro filho mencionado de Simeão, e um dos "setenta" contados entre os da casa de Jacó "que vieram ao Egito". (Gên 46:10, 27; Êx 6:15) Em outros relatos, ele é chamado de Nemuel. — Núm 26:12; 1Cr 4:24.

JEOACAZ [Que Jeová Segure; Jeová Segurou].

1. Grafia alternativa do nome de Acazias, que sucedeu a Jeorão, seu pai, como rei de Judá, em fins do décimo século AEC. (2Cr 21:16, 17; 22:1) Esta grafia alternativa, também encontrada no texto massorético em 2 Crônicas 25:23, simplesmente transpõe o nome divino para servir como prefixo em vez de sufixo. Este rei de Judá é chamado uma vez de Azarias. — 2Cr 22:6b; veja ACAZIAS N.º 2.

2. Filho e sucessor do Rei Jeú como rei de Israel. Jeoacaz reinou durante 17 anos, de 876 a cerca de 860 AEC. (2Rs 10:35; 13:1) Quando sucedeu ao pai no trono, grande parte do domínio era controlado pelo rei sírio Hazael, de Damasco, que tirara de Jeú todo o território de Israel ao L do rio Jordão. (2Rs 10:32-34) E, visto que Jeoacaz fazia o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová, Deus permitiu que Hazael continuasse a oprimir Israel em todos os dias de Jeoacaz, reduzindo a força combatente dele a meros 50 cavaleiros, 10 carros e 10.000 soldados de infantaria. Por fim, Jeoacaz procurou o favor de Jeová, e por causa do pacto com Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, Jeová não permitiu que a Síria arruinasse Israel completamente. (2Rs 13:2-7, 22, 23) Quando Jeoacaz morreu, ele foi enterrado em Samaria e foi sucedido no trono por seu filho Jeoás. — 2Rs 13:8, 9; 2Cr 25:17.

Certas traduções, bem como o texto massorético, grafam o nome como Joacaz em 2 Reis 14:1. — Veja JOACAZ N.º 1.

3. Filho e sucessor de Josias como rei de Judá. O nome de sua mãe era Hamutal. (2Rs 23:31) Esdras e Jeremias, segundo certos manuscritos, chamam-no de Salum, que alguns sugerem talvez ter sido seu nome antes da sua ascensão ao trono. (1Cr 3:15; Je 22:11) Depois da morte de seu pai às mãos do Faraó Neco, do Egito, Jeoacaz (embora não fosse o filho mais velho vivo de Josias) era evidentemente a escolha do povo como sucessor no trono. (2Rs 23:29, 30) Em 2 Crônicas 36:2, onde se menciona este mesmo evento, certas traduções (Al; BJ; CBC; MC) apresentam a forma abreviada de Joacaz em lugar de Jeoacaz. — Veja JOACAZ N.º 3.

Jeoacaz tinha 23 anos quando foi feito rei, e governou mal por três meses, na primeira parte do ano 628 AEC, até ser preso em Ribla por Faraó. Mais tarde, foi levado ao Egito, onde morreu no cativeiro, assim como o profeta Jeremias predissera. — 2Rs 23:31-34; Je 22:10-12.

JEOADA [possivelmente: Jeová Se Ataviou]. Benjamita descendente de Saul através de Jonatã e Meribe-Baal (Mefibosete). Três filhos de Jeoada estão incluídos na genealogia. (1Cr 8:33-36; 2Sa 9:6, 12) Ele é chamado Jará em 1 Crônicas 9:42.

JEOADÃ. Veja JEOADIM.

JEOADIM [Jeová É Prazer]. Mãe do Rei Amazias, de Judá; esposa de Jeoás. (2Rs 14:1, 2) No texto hebraico, o nome é escrito "Jeoadim", com uma nota marginal que diz que deve ser lido "Jeoadã", como em 2 Crônicas 25:1.

JEOANÃ [Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente].

1. Porteiro coraíta durante o reinado de Davi; sexto filho de Meselemias. — 1Cr 26:1-3.

2. Chefe de exército debaixo do Rei Jeosafá, no comando direto de 280.000 homens de Judá. (2Cr 17:12, 14-16) Possivelmente é o N.º 3.

3. Pai do Ismael que se levantou junto com Jeoiada e outros chefes para depor Atalia e colocar Jeoás no trono de Israel. (2Cr 23:1-3) Possivelmente é o N.º 2.

4. Efraimita, cujo filho Azarias era líder naquela tribo por volta de 760 AEC, quando governavam o Rei Acaz, de Judá, e Peca, de Israel. — 2Cr 28:1, 6, 12.

5. Cabeça da casa paterna sacerdotal de Amarias nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor do sumo sacerdote Jesua. — Ne 12:10, 12, 13.

6. Filho de Eliasibe. Esdras retirou-se para o refeitório de Jeoanã no templo para prantear a infidelidade do povo. — Esd 10:6.

7. Um dos quatro filhos de Bebai, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:28, 44.

8. Filho de Tobias, o amonita, antagonista de Neemias. Jeoanã casou-se com uma moça israelita. — Ne 6:17-19.

9. Sacerdote posicionado junto ao templo durante a inauguração da muralha reconstruída de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:40-42.

JEOÁS.

1. Rei de Judá durante 40 anos, de 898 a 859 AEC. Era o filho mais jovem do Rei Acazias, de Judá; sua mãe era Zibiá, de Berseba. (2Rs 12:1; 1Cr 3:11) No texto massorético, seu nome é muitas vezes abreviado para Joás.

A morte de Acazias propiciou a Atalia, a iníqua avó de Jeoás, uma desculpa para fazer-se rainha. Mas para impedir que alguém, no futuro, questionasse sua usurpação do trono, ela matou todos os filhos de Acazias, com exceção do jovem Jeoás, que naquela época era um bebezinho de menos de um ano. Ele escapou do massacre porque sua tia, Jeoseba, esposa do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada, o tomou, junto com sua ama, e secretamente os ocultou no templo, durante seis anos. — 2Rs 11:1-3; 2Cr 22:10-12.

Quando o menino atingiu os sete anos, Jeoiada apresentou confidencialmente a cinco maiorais, pela primeira vez, o herdeiro legal ao trono. Jeoiada armou então os 500 homens sob o comando destes maiorais, com escudos e armas retirados do templo, e os instruiu que montassem guarda em torno de Jeoás, na cerimônia de coroação no pátio do templo. Qualquer pessoa que tentasse interferir deveria ser morta. (2Rs 11:4-12, 21; 2Cr 23:1-11) Ao ouvir o povo gritar, Atalia veio correndo, ao mesmo tempo bradando: "Conspiração! Conspiração!" Ela foi rapidamente conduzida para fora, sendo morta à entrada do portão dos cavalos. Jeoiada firmou então um pacto de fidelidade entre Jeová, o rei recém-empossado e o povo, após o que eles derrubaram a casa de Baal e destruíram os altares e as imagens dele, e mataram até mesmo a Matã, o sacerdote de Baal. — 2Rs 11:13-20; 2Cr 23:12-21.

Depois disso, enquanto o sumo sacerdote Jeoiada vivia e agia como pai e conselheiro de Jeoás, o jovem monarca prosperou. Já estando casado aos 21 anos, ele possuía duas esposas, uma das quais se chamava Jeoadã, e, por meio delas, Jeoás tornou-se pai de filhos e de filhas. Desta forma, a linhagem de Davi que conduzia ao Messias, e que quase chegara ao ponto de ser completamente interrompida, tornou-se novamente forte. — 2Rs 12:1-3; 2Cr 24:1-3; 25:1.

A casa de Jeová precisava urgentemente de reparos, não apenas por causa da sua idade (nessa época tendo não mais de 150 anos), mas também devido à negligência e ao saque sofridos no reinado de Atalia. Em consequência disso, Jeoás instou com os levitas a que levantassem o dinheiro para tal restauração por irem de cidade em cidade, por toda a Judá, mas a reação dos levitas não foi de todo o coração, e o serviço não estava sendo executado. (2Rs 12:4-8; 2Cr 24:4-7) Com o tempo, mudaram-se os arranjos para conseguir e administrar tais fundos. O povo mostrou bom acatamento, e os reparos continuaram até o término das obras. — 2Rs 12:9-16; 2Cr 24:8-14.

Após a morte do fiel sumo sacerdote Jeoiada, à idade de 130 anos, os príncipes do reino gradualmente fizeram com que o Rei Jeoás e o povo se desviassem de Jeová para a adoração de ídolos pagãos e dos "postes sagrados" fálicos. E, quando Jeová suscitava profetas para avisá-los, recusavam-se a ouvi-los. (2Cr 24:15-19) Jeoás chegou ao ponto de matar Zacarias, o próprio filho de Jeoiada, porque, mediante ele, Deus tinha indagado de forma reprovadora: "Por que infringis os mandamentos de Jeová?" As palavras de Zacarias, ao morrer, foram: "Que Jeová o veja e o exija de volta." — 2Cr 24:20-22.

A retribuição veio logo. Removida a proteção de Jeová, uma pequena força militar síria, chefiada por Hazael, conseguiu invadir o território de Judá, obrigando Jeoás a entregar o ouro e os tesouros do santuário, bem como seus próprios bens, deixando-o um homem arrasado e doente. (2Rs 12:17, 18; 2Cr 24:23-25) Não demorou muito até que dois dos seus servos formaram uma conspiração e mataram a Jeoás, à idade comparativamente jovem de 47 anos. Sepultaram-no na Cidade de Davi, junto com seus antepassados, e seu filho, Amazias, reinou em seu lugar. — 2Rs 12:19-21; 2Cr 24:25-27.

2. Rei de Israel; filho de Jeoacaz e neto de Jeú. A forma abreviada de seu nome, Joás, aparece também no texto massorético. (Os 1:1; Am 1:1) Ele governou por 16 anos, nos meados do nono século AEC. Durante a primeira parte do reinado deste Jeoás (filho de Jeoacaz) sobre o reino setentrional de Israel, o filho de Acazias, Jeoás, era rei sobre o reino meridional de Judá. — 2Rs 13:10.

Jeoás, em geral, fez o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová, e permitiu que a adoração do bezerro continuasse por todo o país. Sem embargo, quando o profeta Eliseu estava doente e prestes a morrer, Jeoás foi até ele e chorou por causa dele, dizendo: "Meu pai, meu pai, o carro de guerra de Israel e seus cavaleiros!" (2Rs 13:11, 14) Atendendo a solicitação do profeta, Jeoás atirou uma flecha pela janela, em direção à Síria, e então golpeou o solo com suas flechas. No entanto, só o golpeou três vezes. Eliseu ficou indignado com isto, pois, caso Jeoás tivesse golpeado o solo cinco ou seis vezes, disse Eliseu, então Jeoás teria obtido vitória completa sobre os sírios; mas agora, declarou o profeta, ele somente obteria três vitórias parciais. (2Rs 13:15-19) Nas três campanhas de Jeoás contra os sírios, ele deveras obteve certo grau de êxito, recuperando diversas cidades israelitas que Hazael, pai de Ben-Hadade, tomara do reino setentrional. — 2Rs 13:24, 25.

Jeoás também alugou cem mil dos seus soldados ao rei de Judá, para lutarem contra os edomitas. No entanto, seguindo os conselhos dum "homem do verdadeiro Deus", eles foram dispensados, e, embora lhes fosse pago antecipadamente cem talentos de prata (US$ 660.600), ficaram irados por terem sido mandados para casa, provavelmente por perderem o esperado quinhão do despojo. Assim, depois de voltarem para o N, saquearam pequenas cidades do reino meridional, desde Samaria (talvez sua base de operações) até Bete-Horom. — 2Cr 25:6-10, 13.

Foi provavelmente em retaliação a isto que o rei de Judá desafiou Jeoás para um combate. Na batalha que se seguiu, o Rei Amazias, de Judá, foi capturado em Bete-Semes, e, na sequência da luta, as forças de Jeoás brecharam os muros de Jerusalém, saqueando o ouro e a prata do templo e da casa do rei, e levando reféns para Samaria. (2Rs 14:8-14; 2Cr 25:17-24) Por fim, Jeoás morreu e foi sepultado em Samaria, e seu filho Jeroboão II governou em seu lugar. — 2Rs 13:12, 13; 14:15, 16.

JEOIADA [Que Jeová Saiba].

1. Pai do Benaia que quase sempre é identificado como "Benaia, filho de Jeoiada", e que era um dos poderosos de Davi e também chefe do exército de Salomão. (2Sa 23:8, 20, 22, 23; 1Rs 2:35) O próprio Jeoiada é vinculado com o sacerdócio, sendo chamado de "sacerdote principal". Ele é mencionado como "o líder dos filhos de Arão" e estava entre os que afluíram a Davi quando ele se tornou rei sobre todo o Israel, em Hébron. — 1Cr 27:5; 12:27, 38.

2. Conselheiro do Rei Davi; evidentemente neto do N.º 1. — 1Cr 27:33, 34.

3. Sumo sacerdote no tempo de Jeorão, Acazias, Atalia e Jeoás. Jeoiada era casado com a filha do Rei Jeorão, Jeoseba, também chamada Jeosabeate (o único caso registrado de um sumo sacerdote que se casou com alguém da família real). Jeoiada ficou especialmente conhecido por derrubar Atalia e elevar a verdadeira adoração em Judá. Depois de ter sido morto o governante Acazias, o filho de Atalia, ela passou a matar todos os descendentes reais e a colocar-se no trono. No entanto, Jeoseba, irmã de Acazias, embora não necessariamente filha de Atalia, levou o bebezinho Jeoás, filho de Acazias, e o manteve escondido durante seis anos. No sétimo ano, Jeoiada conseguiu o apoio dos levitas, dos chefes da guarda cariana e dos batedores, bem como dos chefes das casas paternas de Israel. Apresentou então Jeoás, a quem proclamaram rei. Em seguida, Jeoiada ordenou que Atalia fosse removida do local do templo e morta. — 2Rs 11:1-16; 2Cr 22:10–23:15.

Depois disso, Jeoiada não perdeu tempo em promover a adoração de Jeová. Renovou a relação pactuada de Israel com Jeová, e em consequência disso, o povo derrubou a casa de Baal e removeu seus altares, suas imagens e seu sacerdócio. Jeoiada restaurou então os ofícios plenos do templo. Ele exerceu forte influência para o bem na vida de Jeoás. Jeoiada e o rei restauraram o templo e fizeram vários utensílios para a casa de Jeová. Quando, aos 130 anos, Jeoiada finalmente morreu, foi-lhe concedida a honra excepcional de ser sepultado com os reis, "porque fizera o bem em Israel, e com o verdadeiro Deus e Sua casa". Infelizmente, sua boa influência morreu junto com ele, pois Jeoás então deu ouvidos aos príncipes de Judá e desviou-se de Jeová, chegando ao ponto de ordenar a morte do filho de Jeoiada, Zacarias, que proferira uma censura ao povo infiel. — 2Rs 11:17–12:16; 2Cr 23:16–24:22.

4. Sacerdote que foi substituído por Sofonias, filho de Maaseias, no tempo de Jeremias. — Je 29:24-27.

JEOIAQUIM [possivelmente: Jeová Levanta]. Um dos últimos reis de Judá, filho de Josias e Zebida, e originalmente chamado Eliaquim. (2Rs 23:34, 36; 1Cr 3:15) Os cerca de 11 anos de governo ruim de Jeoiaquim (628-618 AEC) foram assinalados por injustiças, opressões e assassinatos. (2Cr 36:5; Je 22:17; 52:2) Também, durante seu governo, Judá sofreu muita hostilização por parte de bandos de incursores caldeus, sírios, moabitas e amonitas. — 2Rs 24:2.

Após a morte do Rei Josias, o povo de Judá, por alguma razão, constituiu rei a Jeoacaz, irmão mais moço de Eliaquim. Cerca de três meses depois, o Faraó Neco levou cativo o Rei Jeoacaz, e elevou como rei a Eliaquim, de 25 anos, mudando o nome do novo governante para Jeoiaquim. Neco também impôs uma pesada multa ao reino de Judá. O Rei Jeoiaquim demandou de seus súditos, por tributação, a prata e o ouro para pagar esta multa. (2Rs 23:34-36; 2Cr 36:3-5) Apesar da carga financeira que já pesava sobre o povo, Jeoiaquim fez planos para a construção de um palácio novo e luxuoso. É provável que, para reduzir os custos, ele opressivamente reteve o salário dos operários. Por conseguinte, Jeová, mediante Jeremias, declarou o ai sobre este governante iníquo, indicando que ele teria o enterro dum jumento. — Je 22:13-19.

No início do reinado de Jeoiaquim, Jeremias avisou que, a menos que o povo se arrependesse, Jerusalém e seu templo seriam destruídos. Depois disso, o profeta foi ameaçado de morte. No entanto, Aicão, homem de destaque, pôs-se a defender Jeremias e protegeu o profeta. Anteriormente, uma profecia similar feita por Urijá tinha enraivecido tanto a Jeoiaquim, que ele determinou matá-lo. Embora o temeroso Urijá fugisse para o Egito, não conseguiu escapar do furor do rei. Jeoiaquim mandou buscar a Urijá e então o matou à espada. — Je 26:1-24.

No quarto ano do reinado de Jeoiaquim (625 AEC) ocorreu a derrota imposta por Nabucodonosor ao Faraó Neco numa batalha pelo domínio da Síria-Palestina. A batalha se realizou em Carquemis, junto ao Eufrates, mais de 600 km ao N de Jerusalém. (Je 46:1, 2) Nesse mesmo ano, Jeremias começou a ditar a seu secretário, Baruque, as palavras de Jeová dirigidas contra Israel, Judá e todas as nações, registrando mensagens que tinham começado a ser proferidas a partir do 13.º ano do reinado de Josias (época em que Jeoiaquim tinha cerca de seis anos). Quase um ano depois, no nono mês lunar (quisleu, novembro/dezembro), o rolo que continha a mensagem ditada foi lido perante o Rei Jeoiaquim. Assim que Jeudi leu três ou quatro páginas-colunas, essa seção foi cortada e lançada no fogo que ardia no braseiro da casa de inverno do rei. Desta forma, o rolo inteiro, seção por seção, foi entregue às chamas. Jeoiaquim não fez caso dos apelos de três de seus príncipes para não queimar o rolo. Ele objetou especialmente às palavras proféticas que indicavam a desolação que Judá sofreria às mãos do rei de Babilônia. Isto sugere que Nabucodonosor ainda não tinha subido contra Jerusalém e tornado Jeoiaquim seu vassalo. — Je 36:1-4, 21-29.

Segundo Reis 24:1 mostra que Nabucodonosor pressionava o rei de Judá, "e Jeoiaquim tornou-se assim seu servo [ou vassalo] por três anos. No entanto, [Jeoiaquim] recuou e se rebelou contra ele [Nabucodonosor]". Evidentemente, é a este terceiro ano de Jeoiaquim como rei vassalo de Babilônia que Daniel se refere em Daniel 1:1. Não podia ser o terceiro ano do reinado de 11 anos de Jeoiaquim sobre Judá, pois, naquele tempo, Jeoiaquim não era vassalo de Babilônia, mas sim do Faraó Neco, do Egito. Foi somente no quarto ano do governo de Jeoiaquim sobre Judá que Nabucodonosor derrubou o domínio egípcio sobre a Síria-Palestina com sua vitória em Carquemis (625 AEC [evidentemente depois de nisã]). (Je 46:2) Visto que a revolta de Jeoiaquim contra Babilônia levou à sua queda, depois de cerca de 11 anos no trono, o início da sua vassalagem de três anos a Babilônia deve ter começado perto do fim de seu oitavo ano de governo, ou no início de 620 AEC.

O relato de Daniel (1:1, 2) declara que Nabucodonosor subiu contra Jerusalém e a sitiou, e que Jeoiaquim, junto com alguns dos utensílios do templo, foram entregues nas mãos do rei babilônio. Entretanto, o relato em 2 Reis 24:10-15 descreve o sítio de Jerusalém pelos babilônios e mostra que o filho de Jeoiaquim, Joaquim, cujo reinado durou apenas três meses e dez dias, foi quem, por fim, capitulou e se entregou aos babilônios. Por conseguinte, parece que Jeoiaquim morreu durante o sítio da cidade, talvez no começo dele. A profecia de Jeová mediante Jeremias (22:18, 19; 36:30) indicava que Jeoiaquim não iria receber um enterro decente; seu cadáver iria jazer descuidado fora das portas de Jerusalém, exposto ao calor do sol, de dia, e à geada, de noite. Não se revela exatamente de que forma Jeoiaquim foi 'entregue na mão de Nabucodonosor'. (Da 1:2) Talvez fosse no sentido de morrer sob sítio, e de seu filho, depois, ter de sair para o cativeiro, de modo que a linhagem de Jeoiaquim sofreu a perda do reinado às mãos de Nabucodonosor. Não existem meios de se confirmar a tradição judaica (registrada por Josefo) de que Nabucodonosor matou Jeoiaquim e ordenou que seu cadáver fosse lançado fora dos muros de Jerusalém. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], X, 97 [vi, 3]) Seja qual for o meio pelo qual ocorreu a morte de Jeoiaquim, parece que os grilhões de cobre que Nabucodonosor trouxera para acorrentar Jeoiaquim não foram usados conforme planejado. — 2Cr 36:6.

Depois do sítio de Jerusalém, durante o "terceiro ano" de Jeoiaquim (como rei vassalo), Daniel e outros de Judá, inclusive nobres e membros da família real, foram levados como exilados para Babilônia. Não existindo registro de anterior exílio babilônico, isto parece situar este evento no curto reinado de Joaquim, sucessor de Jeoiaquim. — 2Rs 24:12-16; Je 52:28.

Depois de Joaquim, filho de Jeoiaquim, ter-se rendido, Nabucodonosor elevou a Zedequias, tio de Joaquim, ao trono de Judá. (2Cr 36:9, 10) Isto cumpriu a profecia de Jeremias de que Jeoiaquim não teria alguém seu sentado no trono de Davi. (Je 36:30) Joaquim, filho de Jeoiaquim, governou apenas três meses e dez dias.

JEOIARIBE [Que Jeová Contenda; Jeová Pleiteou [Nossa] Causa]. Sacerdote cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes como primeira das 24 turmas sacerdotais organizadas durante o governo de Davi. (1Cr 24:1-3, 5-7) Alguns dos descendentes pós-exílicos desta casa paterna, ou outro sacerdote com o mesmo nome, moravam em Jerusalém. (1Cr 9:3, 10) Na lista paralela em Neemias 11:10, o nome é grafado Joiaribe.

JEONADABE [Jeová Está Disposto; Jeová É Nobre], JONADABE [forma abreviada de Jeonadabe]. No texto hebraico e em muitas traduções usam-se

1. Sobrinho de Davi; filho de seu irmão Simeá. Jonadabe ("Jeonadabe") era "um homem muito sábio", mas astuto e ardiloso. Depois de induzir Amnom, filho de Davi, a revelar-lhe sua paixão pela meia-irmã Tamar, Jonadabe propôs a trama pela qual Amnom chegou a violentá-la. Depois de o irmão germano dela, Absalão, ter morto Amnom em vingança, relatou-se a Davi que Absalão matara todos os filhos do rei, mas Jonadabe estava presente para assegurar que só Amnom estava morto. (2Sa 13:3-5, 14, 22, 28-33) É possível que ele seja o "Jonatã" de 2 Samuel 21:21 e 1 Crônicas 20:7.

2. Filho de Recabe; companheiro do Rei Jeú. Seu encontro com Jeú não foi acidental, porque Jonadabe "chegou a encontrar-se com" ele por iniciativa própria, e, por sua vez, recebeu a bênção de Jeú. Os eventos subsequentes mostraram que Jonadabe estava de pleno acordo com a determinação de Jeú, de eliminar de Israel a adoração de Baal. A cada proposta feita por Jeú, Jonadabe prontamente respondeu na afirmativa. "É teu coração reto para comigo?" perguntou Jeú. Ele respondeu: "É." "Dá-me deveras a tua mão", disse Jeú; e Jonadabe lhe deu a mão. Então, no carro de Jeú, Jonadabe foi informado: "Vem deveras comigo e vê como não tolero rivalidade para com Jeová", e ele de novo mostrou que estava disposto a isso. Por fim, quando chegaram a Samaria e todos os adoradores de Baal haviam sido reunidos, Jonadabe não recuou, mas acompanhou Jeú para dentro da casa de Baal e permaneceu ao seu lado durante a matança que se seguiu. Ao mesmo tempo, Jeú demonstrou sua plena confiança e fé em Jonadabe. — 2Rs 10:15-28.

Quase 300 anos mais tarde, descendentes de Jonadabe, os recabitas, foram usados por Jeremias sob a direção de Jeová como exemplo de fidelidade às ordens de seu antepassado, em contraste com a desobediência a Deus do povo de Judá e de Jerusalém. Jonadabe mandara os recabitas morar em tendas, não fazer sementeira, nem plantar vinhedos e nem tomar vinho. Quando Jeremias lhes ofereceu vinho, eles o recusaram, citando o mandamento do seu antepassado Jonadabe. Em vista de tal fidelidade, Jeová prometeu: "De Jonadabe, filho de Recabe, não se decepará homem, impedindo-o de ficar de pé diante de mim para sempre." — Je 35:1-19.

JEONATÃ [Jeová Deu]. Na língua hebraica, este nome frequentemente é usado de modo intercambiável com Jonatã. Alistam-se abaixo apenas as ocorrências em que é vertido Jeonatã. Quanto às ocorrências da forma abreviada, veja JONATÃ.

1. Um dos levitas enviados por Jeosafá, no terceiro ano do seu reinado, para ensinar a lei de Jeová ao povo de Judá. — 2Cr 17:5, 7-9.

2. Secretário, cuja casa foi convertida em prisão, onde Jeremias foi mantido em detenção. (Je 37:15, 20; 38:26) A casa provavelmente tinha no porão um lugar adequado para encarceramento.

3. Cabeça pós-exílico duma casa paterna de sacerdotes, nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor de Jesua. — Ne 12:10, 12, 18.

JEORÃO [Jeová É Alto (Enaltecido)]. Uma forma abreviada do nome é Jorão.

1. Um dos dois sacerdotes escolhidos por Jeosafá, em 934 AEC, no terceiro ano do seu reinado, junto com destacados príncipes e levitas, para serem instrutores viajantes ensinando "o livro da lei de Jeová". — 2Cr 17:7-9.

2. Filho de Acabe e Jezabel, que sucedeu a seu irmão mais velho, Acazias, como o décimo rei do reino setentrional de Israel por volta de 917 AEC. Ele reinou 12 anos. (2Rs 1:17, 18; 3:1; 9:22) Este rei de Israel não deve ser confundido com o rei de Judá do mesmo nome, que era seu cunhado. (Veja o N.º 3.) Embora Jeorão removesse a coluna sagrada de Baal, erigida por seu pai, ele continuou a fazer "o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová", apegando-se à adoração do bezerro, instituída por Jeroboão. — 1Rs 12:26-29; 16:33; 2Rs 3:2, 3.

O Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, e o rei de Edom juntaram-se a Jeorão num ataque contra Moabe, o qual foi bem sucedido, porque Jeová enganou o inimigo por meio duma ilusão de óptica. Eliseu, profeta de Deus, instruiu os do acampamento de Israel a cavar valas, nas quais pudessem captar água mui necessária e divinamente provida. Na manhã seguinte, o reflexo da luz solar sobre esta água fez com que os moabitas imaginassem que a água era sangue. Pensando que no acampamento confederado dos três reis havia ocorrido uma matança mútua, os moabitas avançaram para tomar despojo, apenas para ser massacrados em grande número. — 2Rs 3:4-27.

Naamã, o chefe do exército da Síria, veio a Jeorão para ser curado de lepra, trazendo do rei da Síria uma carta neste sentido. Jeorão, pensando que o governante sírio estava provocando briga, exclamou: 'Acaso sou Deus, para entregar à morte e preservar vivo, e curar a lepra?' Eliseu, porém, solicitou que Jeorão lhe enviasse Naamã, para que o chefe do exército sírio soubesse que o Deus verdadeiro deveras possuía um profeta no país, alguém capaz de realizar tais curas. — 2Rs 5:1-8.

De antemão, Eliseu, profeta de Jeová, também informava a Jeorão sobre as manobras militares sírias. (2Rs 6:8-12) Certos ataques sírios contra Israel foram divinamente frustrados durante o reinado de Jeorão. — 2Rs 6:13–7:20.

Mas, apesar de tais manifestações da benevolência de Deus, Jeorão, até o dia da sua morte, não se arrependeu, nem se voltou de todo o coração para Jeová. A morte lhe sobreveio repentinamente e de forma inesperada. Jeorão estava em Jezreel, recuperando-se dos ferimentos recebidos em batalha contra os sírios. Com o tempo, foi ao encontro de Jeú, perguntando: "Há paz, Jeú?" A resposta negativa fez com que Jeorão se virasse para fugir, mas Jeú atirou uma flecha que lhe atravessou o coração. Assim, "este filho dum assassino" (2Rs 6:32) foi executado, seu cadáver sendo lançado no campo de Nabote. — 2Rs 9:14-26.

3. Primogênito de Jeosafá que, aos 32 anos de idade, tornou-se rei de Judá. (2Cr 21:1-3, 5, 20) Parece que, durante vários anos, Jeorão estava de alguma forma associado com seu pai no reinado. (2Rs 1:17; 8:16) Os oito anos de governo creditados a Jeorão contam a partir de 913 AEC. (2Rs 8:17) Assim, durante estes anos, tanto o reino setentrional como o meridional tiveram governantes com o mesmo nome. Eram também cunhados, porque Jeorão, de Judá, se casou com Atalia, filha de Acabe e de Jezabel, e irmã do Jeorão de Israel. — 2Rs 8:18, 25, 26; veja o N.º 2 acima.

Pelo menos em parte devido à má influência da sua esposa, Atalia, Jeorão não trilhou os caminhos justos de seu pai, Jeosafá. (2Rs 8:18) Jeorão não só assassinou seus seis irmãos e alguns dos príncipes de Judá, mas também desviou seus súditos de Jeová para deuses falsos. (2Cr 21:1-6, 11-14) Todo o seu reinado foi assolado tanto por dificuldades internas como lutas externas. Primeiro, Edom se rebelou; daí, Libna se revoltou contra Judá. (2Rs 8:20-22) Numa carta dirigida a Jeorão, o profeta Elias avisou: "Eis que Jeová dá um grande golpe ao teu povo, aos teus filhos, e às tuas esposas, e a todos os teus bens." Ademais, ó Rei Jeorão, "terás muitas doenças, uma enfermidade dos teus intestinos, até que os teus intestinos saiam por causa da doença, dia após dia". — 2Cr 21:12-15.

Tudo aconteceu exatamente assim. Jeová permitiu que árabes e filisteus invadissem o país e levassem cativos as esposas e os filhos de Jeorão. Deus permitiu que somente escapasse o filho mais moço de Jeorão, Jeoacaz (também chamado Acazias), concessão esta, porém, feita apenas por causa do pacto do Reino celebrado com Davi. "Depois de tudo isso, Jeová o feriu [a Jeorão] nos intestinos com uma doença para a qual não havia cura." Dois anos depois, "lhe saíram os intestinos" e ele gradualmente morreu. Assim findou a vida deste homem iníquo, que "se foi sem ser desejado". Foi sepultado na Cidade de Davi, "mas não nas sepulturas dos reis". Acazias, seu filho, tornou-se rei em seu lugar. — 2Cr 21:7, 16-20; 22:1; 1Cr 3:10, 11.

JEOSABEATE [Jeová É Abundância]. Filha do Rei Jeorão e esposa do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada. Ela é também chamada Jeoseba. — 2Cr 22:10-12; 2Rs 11:1-3; veja JEOSEBA.

JEOSAFÁ [Jeová É Juiz].

1. Filho de Ailude, que serviu como cronista durante os reinados de Davi e de Salomão. — 2Sa 8:16; 20:24; 1Rs 4:3; 1Cr 18:15.

2. Um dos 12 prepostos do Rei Salomão. Durante um mês por ano, este "filho de Parua" supria o rei e os da sua casa de alimentos do território de Issacar. — 1Rs 4:7, 17.

3. Filho do Rei Asa, de Judá, e de Azuba, filha de Sili. Aos 35 anos, Jeosafá sucedeu seu pai no trono, e governou por 25 anos, a partir de 936 AEC. (1Rs 22:42; 2Cr 20:31) Seu reinado era contemporâneo daquele dos reis Acabe, Acazias e Jeorão, de Israel. (1Rs 22:41, 51; 2Rs 3:1, 2; 2Cr 17:3, 4) Foi marcado pela estabilidade, prosperidade, glória e relativa paz com as terras vizinhas. Jeosafá recebia presentes de seus súditos, e tributos dos filisteus e dos árabes. — 2Cr 17:5, 10, 11.

Realizações. Jeosafá fortaleceu sua posição por colocar forças militares nas cidades fortificadas de Judá, e guarnições tanto na terra de Judá como no território israelita capturado por seu pai, Asa. Em Jerusalém, um grande corpo de guerreiros valentes servia aos interesses régios; e, em Judá, Jeosafá construiu lugares fortificados e cidades-armazéns. — 2Cr 17:1, 2, 12-19.

Jeosafá, diferente dos reis do reino setentrional de Israel, manifestou grande preocupação com a adoração verdadeira. (2Cr 17:4) Comissionou certos príncipes, levitas e sacerdotes para ensinarem a lei de Jeová nas cidades de Judá. (2Cr 17:7-9) Jeosafá também santificou ofertas sagradas (2Rs 12:18), e pessoalmente percorreu seu domínio, orientando seus súditos para voltarem a Jeová em fidelidade. (2Cr 19:4) Corajosamente, Jeosafá continuou a campanha contra a idolatria, iniciada por Asa. (1Rs 22:46; 2Cr 17:6) Mas a adoração incorreta nos altos estava tão arraigada entre os israelitas, que os esforços de Jeosafá não a erradicaram de forma permanente. — 1Rs 22:43; 2Cr 20:33.

No reinado de Jeosafá também ocorreu a instituição dum sistema judicial melhor. O próprio rei inculcou nos juízes a importância de serem imparciais e isentos de suborno, visto que não julgavam em nome do homem, mas em nome de Jeová. — 2Cr 19:5-11.

Jeosafá mostrou ser um rei que confiava plenamente em Jeová. Quando Judá se viu ameaçado pelas forças coligadas de Amom, de Moabe e da região montanhosa de Seir, ele humildemente reconheceu a debilidade de sua nação em face deste perigo, e orou a Jeová pedindo ajuda. Depois disso, Jeová lutou a favor de Judá por espalhar a confusão nas fileiras inimigas, de modo que mataram uns aos outros. Por conseguinte, as nações circunvizinhas ficaram temerosas, e Judá continuou a usufruir paz. — 2Cr 20:1-30.

Relações com o Reino de Dez Tribos. Jeosafá conservou a paz com o reino setentrional, e imprudentemente formou uma aliança matrimonial com Acabe. (1Rs 22:44; 2Cr 18:1) Por este motivo, em várias ocasiões, foi levado a fazer outras alianças com o reino de Israel.

Numa visita ao reino setentrional, algum tempo depois do casamento da filha de Acabe, Atalia, com seu primogênito Jeorão, Jeosafá concordou em acompanhar o Rei Acabe num empreendimento militar, para recuperar Ramote-Gileade das mãos dos sírios. Entretanto, antes de realmente partir, Jeosafá solicitou a Acabe que indagasse de Jeová. Quatrocentos profetas garantiram o sucesso a Acabe. Mas Micaías, verdadeiro profeta de Jeová, odiado por Acabe, mas chamado por insistência de Jeosafá, predisse a derrota certa. Apesar disso, Jeosafá, talvez para não voltar atrás em sua promessa original de acompanhar Acabe, foi à batalha trajado das vestes reais. Visto que Acabe tomara a precaução de se disfarçar, os sírios erroneamente concluíram que Jeosafá era o rei de Israel e, assim, submeteram-no ao mais pesado ataque. Jeosafá mal conseguiu escapar com vida, e Acabe, apesar do disfarce, foi mortalmente ferido. (1Rs 22:2-37; 2Cr 18) Ao retornar a Jerusalém, Jeosafá foi censurado por aliar-se insensatamente com o iníquo Acabe, o visionário Jeú lhe dizendo: "É ao iníquo que se deve dar ajuda e é aos que odeiam a Jeová que deves amar? E por isso há indignação contra ti da parte da pessoa de Jeová." — 2Cr 19:2.

Mais tarde, Jeosafá tornou-se sócio do Rei Acazias, sucessor de Acabe, numa empresa de construção de navios em Eziom-Géber, no golfo de ʽAqaba. Mas Jeová desaprovou esta aliança marítima com o iníquo Acazias. Por isso, em cumprimento de profecia, os navios sofreram naufrágio. — 1Rs 22:48, 49; 2Cr 20:35-37; veja ACAZIAS N.º 1.

Passado algum tempo, Jeosafá juntou-se a Jeorão, sucessor de Acazias no trono, e ao rei de Edom, numa ofensiva militar para sufocar a revolta do Rei Mesa, moabita, contra o reino de dez tribos. Os exércitos desta aliança, porém, ficaram enredados num ermo desprovido de água. Jeosafá, assim, mandou chamar um profeta de Jeová. Somente por consideração para com Jeosafá é que o profeta Eliseu buscou a inspiração divina, e seu conselho subsequente salvou os três reis e seus exércitos do desastre. — 2Rs 3:4-25.

Jeorão Torna-se Rei. Enquanto Jeosafá ainda vivia, ele passou o reino para Jeorão, seu primogênito, mas a seus outros filhos ele deu preciosos presentes e cidades fortificadas em Judá. (2Rs 8:16; 2Cr 21:3) Especialmente depois da morte de Jeosafá, e de seu sepultamento na Cidade de Davi, foi que a aliança matrimonial com a casa de Acabe mostrou-se desastrosa para o reino de Judá. Sob a influência de Atalia, Jeorão reavivou as práticas idólatras. — 1Rs 22:50; 2Cr 21:1-7, 11.

4. Pai do Rei Jeú, de Israel. — 2Rs 9:2, 14.

JEOSAFÁ, BAIXADA DE. Trata-se, evidentemente, dum lugar simbólico, também chamado de "baixada da decisão". (Jl 3:2, 14) Visto que se relaciona com a execução de julgamento por parte de Deus, é apropriadamente chamada de "baixada de Jeosafá", pois o nome "Jeosafá" significa "Jeová É Juiz". Também, durante o reinado de Jeosafá, Jeová livrou Judá e Jerusalém das forças coligadas de Amom, de Moabe e da região montanhosa de Seir, fazendo com que as forças inimigas caíssem em confusão e se matassem umas às outras. — 2Cr 20:1-29.

Na simbólica "baixada de Jeosafá", Jeová julga as nações como merecendo a execução, por causa dos maus tratos infligidos ao Seu povo. A própria baixada serve como enorme lagar simbólico para esmagar as nações como se fossem cachos de uva. Dificilmente é plausível associar literalmente a "baixada de Jeosafá" com o vale do Cédron, o vale de Hinom ou o vale de Jezreel, como alguns têm feito. Nenhum desses vales seria suficientemente grande para comportar "todas" as nações. — Jl 3:1-3, 12-14; compare isso com Re 14:18-20.

JEOSEBA [Jeová É Abundância]. Esposa do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada; filha do Rei Jeorão, de Judá, embora não necessariamente com sua esposa, Atalia. O nome dela também é grafado "Jeosabeate". (2Cr 22:11) Após a morte de seu irmão (ou meio-irmão), o Rei Acazias, Jeoseba tomou o filho dele, o bebezinho Jeoás, e o ocultou, a fim de que escapasse da matança dos descendentes reais causada por Atalia. Jeoiada e Jeoseba mantiveram seu sobrinho escondido nos seus aposentos no templo durante seis anos, até que Jeoiada o fez vir a público para ser proclamado rei. (2Rs 11:1-3; 2Cr 22:10-12) A medida tomada por Jeoseba, junto com a de seu marido, preservaram providencialmente a linhagem real de Davi até o Messias.

JEOSUÉ [Jeová É Salvação]. Filho de Num; efraimita, que sucedeu a Moisés e levou os israelitas à Terra da Promessa. Seu nome original era Oseias, mas Moisés chamou-o de Jeosué, ou Josué (forma abreviada de Jeosué). — Núm 13:8, 16; De 34:9; Jos 1:1, 2; veja JOSUÉ N.º 1.

JEOVÁ [forma causativa, no imperfeito, do verbo hebr. ha·wáh (vir a ser; tornar-se); significando: "Ele Causa que Venha a Ser"]. O nome pessoal de Deus. (Is 42:8; 54:5) Embora as Escrituras o designem por títulos descritivos, tais como "Deus", "Soberano Senhor", "Criador", "Pai", "o Todo-Poderoso" e "o Altíssimo", a sua personalidade e os seus atributos — quem e o que Ele é — são plenamente resumidos e expressos apenas por este nome pessoal. — Sal 83:18.

A Pronúncia Correta do Nome Divino. "Jeová" é a pronúncia mais conhecida do nome divino, em português, embora a maioria dos hebraístas seja a favor de "Javé" (ou "Iahweh"). Os manuscritos hebraicos mais antigos apresentam este nome na forma de quatro consoantes, comumente chamadas de Tetragrama (do grego te·tra-, que significa "quatro", e grám·ma, "letra"). Estas quatro letras (escritas da direita para a esquerda) são יהוה e podem ser transliteradas em português como YHWH (IHVH, ou JHVH).

As consoantes hebraicas do nome, portanto, são conhecidas. A questão é: Quais são as vogais que devem ser combinadas com as consoantes? Sinais vocálicos só vieram a ser utilizados no hebraico na segunda metade do primeiro milênio EC. (Veja HEBRAICO [Alfabeto e Escrita Hebraicos].) Além disso, devido a uma superstição religiosa que teve início séculos antes, os sinais vocálicos encontrados em manuscritos hebraicos não nos fornecem a chave para determinar que vogais devem aparecer no nome divino.

Superstição oculta o nome. Em determinado período, surgiu entre os judeus uma ideia supersticiosa, de que era errado até mesmo pronunciar o nome divino (representado pelo Tetragrama). Não se sabe exatamente em que se baseou originalmente a descontinuidade do uso deste nome. Alguns sustentam que o nome era considerado sagrado demais para ser proferido por lábios imperfeitos. Todavia, as próprias Escrituras Hebraicas não apresentam nenhuma evidência de que quaisquer dos verdadeiros servos de Deus alguma vez hesitassem em proferir o nome Dele. Documentos hebraicos não bíblicos, tais como as chamadas Cartas de Laquis, mostram que o nome era usado na correspondência comum na Palestina na última parte do sétimo século AEC.

Peça de prata em que consta o nome divino; foi encontrada em Jerusalém e data evidentemente do sétimo ou do sexto século AEC.

Outro conceito sustenta que se pretendia impedir que povos não judaicos conhecessem o nome e possivelmente o usassem mal. Todavia, o próprio Jeová disse que faria com que 'seu nome fosse declarado em toda a terra' (Êx 9:16; compare isso com 1Cr 16:23, 24; Sal 113:3; Mal 1:11, 14), para ser conhecido até mesmo aos seus adversários. (Is 64:2) De fato, o nome era conhecido e usado por nações pagãs tanto antes da Era Comum como nos primeiros séculos dela. (The Jewish Encyclopedia [A Enciclopédia Judaica], 1976, Vol. XII, p. 119) Outra alegação é que o objetivo era proteger o nome contra o uso em ritos mágicos. Neste caso, trata-se de raciocínio fraco, pois é óbvio que, quanto mais misterioso se tornasse o nome por falta de uso, tanto mais serviria para os objetivos dos praticantes da magia.

Quando se arraigou essa superstição? Assim como não se tem certeza do motivo ou motivos originalmente apresentados para se descontinuar a usar o nome divino, assim também há muita incerteza quanto à época em que tal conceito supersticioso realmente se arraigou. Alguns afirmam que começou após o exílio babilônico (607-537 AEC). Esta teoria, porém, baseia-se numa suposta redução do uso do nome por parte de escritores posteriores das Escrituras Hebraicas, conceito este que um exame mais detido mostra inválido. Malaquias, por exemplo, foi evidentemente um dos últimos livros das Escrituras Hebraicas a ser escrito (na última metade do quinto século AEC), e dá grande destaque ao nome divino.

Muitas obras de referência sugerem que o nome deixou de ser usado por volta de 300 AEC. Evidência para esta data foi supostamente encontrada na ausência do Tetragrama (ou de uma transliteração dele) na tradução Septuaginta grega das Escrituras Hebraicas, iniciada por volta de 280 AEC. É verdade que as cópias mais completas dos manuscritos da Septuaginta agora conhecidas seguem uniformemente o costume de substituir o Tetragrama pelas palavras gregas Ký·rios (Senhor) ou The·ós (Deus). Estes manuscritos principais, porém, remontam apenas ao quarto e ao quinto séculos EC. Descobriram-se recentemente cópias mais antigas, embora em forma fragmentária, que provam que as cópias mais antigas da Septuaginta continham deveras o nome divino.

Uma delas são os restos fragmentários dum rolo de papiro duma parte de Deuteronômio, alistado como P. Fouad Inventário N.º 266. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 326) Apresenta regularmente o Tetragrama, escrito em caracteres hebraicos quadrados, em cada ocorrência no texto hebraico traduzido. Os peritos datam este papiro como do primeiro século AEC, e neste caso foi escrito quatro ou cinco séculos antes dos manuscritos já mencionados. — Veja o apêndice da NM, pp. 1502-1504.

Quando foi que os judeus, em geral, realmente pararam de pronunciar o nome pessoal de Deus?

Assim, pelo menos em forma escrita, não existe evidência sólida de qualquer desaparecimento ou desuso do nome divino no período AEC. No primeiro século EC, surge pela primeira vez alguma evidência duma atitude supersticiosa para com esse nome. Josefo, historiador judeu que descendia duma família sacerdotal, ao narrar a revelação que Deus forneceu a Moisés no local do espinheiro ardente, diz: "Então, Deus lhe revelou Seu nome, que antes disso não tinha chegado aos ouvidos dos homens, e sobre o qual estou proibido de falar." (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], II, 276 [xii, 4]) No entanto, a declaração de Josefo, além de ser inexata quanto a se conhecer o nome divino antes de Moisés, é vaga e não revela de forma clara exatamente qual era a atitude geral prevalecente no primeiro século quanto a se pronunciar ou empregar o nome divino.

A Míxena judaica, uma coleção de ensinos e de tradições rabínicos, é um tanto mais explícita. Credita-se sua compilação ao rabino Judá, o Príncipe, que viveu no segundo e no terceiro séculos EC. Parte da matéria da Míxena relaciona-se claramente às circunstâncias anteriores à destruição de Jerusalém e do seu templo, em 70 EC. No entanto, certo perito diz a respeito da Míxena: "É extremamente difícil decidir que valor histórico devemos atribuir a qualquer tradição registrada na Míxena. O espaço de tempo, que talvez tenha contribuído para obscurecer ou distorcer as lembranças de épocas tão diferentes; as sublevações políticas, as mudanças e as confusões resultantes de duas rebeliões e de duas conquistas romanas; os padrões prezados pelo partido dos fariseus (cujas opiniões a Míxena registra), que não eram os do partido dos saduceus . . . — estes são fatores a que se deve dar o devido peso na avaliação do caráter das declarações da Míxena. Além disso, há muita coisa no conteúdo da Míxena que se encontra num ambiente de discussão acadêmica travada só pela discussão, (conforme parece) com pouca pretensão de registrar usos históricos." (The Mishnah [A Míxena], traduzida para o inglês por H. Danby, Londres, 1954, pp. xiv, xv) Algumas das tradições da Míxena referentes à pronúncia do nome divino são como segue:

Relacionado com o anual Dia da Expiação, a tradução da Míxena por Danby declara: "E quando os sacerdotes e o povo, que estavam de pé no Pátio do Templo, ouviam o Nome Expresso sair da boca do Sumo Sacerdote, costumavam ajoelhar-se, e curvar-se, e prostrar-se, e dizer: 'Bendito seja o nome da glória do seu reino para todo o sempre!' " (Yoma 6:2) A respeito das bênçãos sacerdotais diárias, Sotah 7:6, diz: "No Templo, eles pronunciavam o Nome assim como estava escrito, mas, nas províncias, usavam uma palavra substituta." Sanhedrin 7:5, declara que o blasfemador não era culpado 'a menos que tivesse pronunciado o Nome', e que, num julgamento que envolvesse uma acusação de blasfêmia, usava-se um nome substituto até que toda a evidência tivesse sido ouvida; daí, pedia-se em particular à testemunha principal que 'dissesse expressamente o que ouvira', presumivelmente usando o nome divino. Sanhedrin 10:1, ao alistar aqueles "que não têm parte no mundo vindouro", declara: "Abba Saul diz: Também aquele que pronunciar o Nome com as suas letras corretas." Todavia, apesar destes conceitos negativos, encontramos também, na primeira seção da Míxena, a injunção positiva de que "o homem deve cumprimentar seu próximo com [o emprego de] o Nome [de Deus]", citando-se então o exemplo de Boaz (Ru 2:4). — Berakhot, 9:5.

Estes conceitos tradicionais, encarados pelo que possam valer, talvez revelem uma tendência supersticiosa de evitar o uso do nome divino algum tempo antes de o templo de Jerusalém ser destruído em 70 EC. Mesmo então, diz-se explicitamente que eram primariamente os sacerdotes que usavam um nome substituto para o nome divino, e isso apenas nas províncias. Adicionalmente, o valor histórico das tradições da Míxena é questionável, conforme vimos.

Trechos dos Salmos, do Rolo do Mar Morto. O Tetragrama aparece repetidas vezes nos distintivos antigos caracteres hebraicos.

Não existe, portanto, nenhuma base genuína para se atribuir a qualquer época anterior ao primeiro e ao segundo séculos EC o desenvolvimento do conceito supersticioso que exigia a descontinuação do uso do nome divino. Chegou deveras a época, contudo, em que, ao fazer a leitura das Escrituras Hebraicas na língua original, o leitor judeu, em vez de pronunciar o nome divino, representado pelo Tetragrama, o substituía por 'Adho·nai (Soberano Senhor) ou por 'Elo·hím (Deus). Nota-se isto no fato de que, quando os sinais vocálicos passaram a ser empregados, na segunda metade do primeiro milênio EC, os copistas judeus inseriram no Tetragrama os sinais vocálicos quer de 'Adho·nai, quer de 'Elo·hím, evidentemente para alertar o leitor a proferir essas palavras, em lugar de pronunciar o nome divino. Caso ele estivesse usando a tradução Septuaginta grega das Escrituras Hebraicas em cópias posteriores, o leitor, naturalmente, encontraria o Tetragrama já inteiramente substituído por Ký·rios e The·ós. — Veja SENHOR.

Traduções para outras línguas, tais como a Vulgata latina, seguiram o exemplo destas cópias posteriores da Septuaginta grega. A versão católica de Antônio Pereira de Figueiredo (originalmente de 1778-1790), baseada na Vulgata latina, por isso, não traz o nome divino no texto principal, ao passo que a Trinitariana e a versão Matos Soares empregam Senhor ou Deus (às vezes todo em maiúsculas) para representar o Tetragrama nas Escrituras Hebraicas.

Qual é a pronúncia correta do nome de Deus?

Na segunda metade do primeiro milênio EC, peritos judeus introduziram um sistema de sinais para representar as vogais ausentes no texto consonantal hebraico. Com referência ao nome de Deus, em vez de inserir os sinais vocálicos corretos dele, colocaram outros sinais vocálicos para lembrar ao leitor que ele devia dizer 'Adho·nai (que significa "Soberano Senhor") ou 'Elo·hím (que significa "Deus").

O Códice Leningrado B 19A, do século 11 EC, tem no Tetragrama os sinais vocálicos para rezar Yehwáh, Yehwíh e Yeho·wáh. A edição de Ginsburg do texto massorético tem no nome divino sinais vocálicos para que reze Yeho·wáh. (Gên 3:14, n) Os hebraístas em geral são a favor de "Yahweh" (Iahweh, ou Javé, em Bíblias católicas) como a pronúncia mais provável. Salientam que a forma abreviada do nome é Yah (Jah, na forma latinizada), como no Salmo 89:8 e na expressão Halelu-Yáh (que significa "Louvai a Jah!"). (Sal 104:35; 150:1, 6) Também as formas Yehóh, Yoh, Yah e Yáhu, encontradas na grafia hebraica dos nomes Jeosafá, Josafá, Sefatias e outros, podem todas ser derivadas de Yahweh. As transliterações gregas feitas pelos primitivos escritores cristãos indicam uma direção algo similar por usar grafias tais como I·a·bé e I·a·ou·é, as quais, conforme pronunciadas em grego, se assemelham a Yahweh (Iahweh). Ainda assim, de modo algum há unanimidade sobre o assunto entre os peritos, sendo alguns a favor de ainda outras pronúncias, tais como "Yahuwa", "Yahuah" ou "Yehuah".

Visto que, atualmente, não se pode ter certeza absoluta da pronúncia, parece não haver nenhum motivo para abandonar, em português, a forma bem conhecida, "Jeová", em favor de outra pronúncia sugerida. Se tal mudança fosse feita, então, a bem da coerência, deviam ser feitas alterações na grafia e na pronúncia de uma infinidade de outros nomes encontrados nas Escrituras: Jeremias seria mudado para Yir·meyáh, Isaías se tornaria Yesha'·yá·hu, e Jesus seria ou Yehoh·shú·a' (como no hebraico), ou I·e·soús (como no grego). O objetivo das palavras é transmitir ideias; em português, o nome Jeová identifica o verdadeiro Deus, transmitindo esta ideia mais satisfatoriamente, hoje em dia, do que qualquer dos substitutos sugeridos.

Importância do Nome. Muitos peritos e tradutores atuais da Bíblia advogam que se siga a tradição de eliminar o nome distintivo de Deus. Não só alegam que a incerteza a respeito da pronúncia do nome justifica tal proceder, mas também sustentam que a supremacia e a existência ímpar do verdadeiro Deus tornam desnecessário que Ele tenha um nome específico. Tal conceito não encontra respaldo nas Escrituras inspiradas, quer nas dos tempos pré-cristãos, quer nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs.

O Tetragrama ocorre 6.828 vezes no texto hebraico da Biblia Hebraica e da Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a Tradução do Novo Mundo contém o nome divino 6.979 vezes, porque os tradutores, entre outras coisas, levaram em conta que, em alguns lugares, os escribas haviam substituído o nome divino com 'Adho·nai ou 'Elo·hím. (Veja o apêndice na NM, pp. 1501, 1502.) A própria frequência do aparecimento do nome atesta sua importância para o Autor da Bíblia, que leva este nome. Seu uso em todas as Escrituras ultrapassa em muito o de quaisquer títulos, tais como "Soberano Senhor" ou "Deus", aplicados a Ele.

Digno de nota, também, é a importância atribuída aos próprios nomes nas Escrituras Hebraicas e entre os povos semíticos. O professor G. T. Manley indica: "Um estudo da palavra 'nome' no V[elho] T[estamento] revela o quanto esta palavra significa em hebraico. O nome não é simples rótulo, mas é representativo da verdadeira personalidade daquele a quem pertence. . . . Quando uma pessoa coloca seu 'nome' numa coisa ou em outra pessoa, esta passa a ficar sob sua influência e proteção." — New Bible Dictionary (Novo Dicionário da Bíblia), editado por J. D. Douglas, 1985, p. 430; compare isso com Everyman's Talmud (O Talmude de Todos), de A. Cohen, 1949, p. 24; Gên 27:36; 1Sa 25:25; Sal 20:1; Pr 22:1; veja NOME.

"Deus" e "Pai" não são distintivos. O título "Deus" não é nem pessoal, nem distintivo (alguém pode até mesmo fazer de seu ventre um deus; Fil 3:19). Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a mesma palavra ('Elo·hím) é aplicada a Jeová, o verdadeiro Deus, e também a deuses falsos, tais como Dagom, o deus filisteu (Jz 16:23, 24; 1Sa 5:7) e Nisroque, deus assírio. (2Rs 19:37) Caso um hebreu dissesse a um filisteu ou a um assírio que ele adorava a "Deus ['Elo·hím]" isso obviamente não bastaria para identificar a Pessoa à qual se dirigia sua adoração.

Nos artigos sobre Jeová, The Imperial Bible-Dictionary (O Dicionário Bíblico Imperial) ilustra belamente a diferença entre 'Elo·hím (Deus) e Jeová. A respeito do nome Jeová, diz: "É, em toda a parte, um nome próprio, indicando o Deus pessoal, e somente ele; ao passo que Elohim assume mais o caráter de um substantivo comum, indicando, em geral, deveras, o Supremo, mas não necessária ou uniformemente. . . . O hebreu talvez diga o Elohim, o verdadeiro Deus, contrapondo-o a todos os deuses falsos; mas ele jamais diz o Jeová, pois Jeová é unicamente o nome do verdadeiro Deus. Ele diz, vez após vez, meu Deus . . . ; mas jamais meu Jeová, pois quando ele diz meu Deus, quer dizer Jeová. Ele fala do Deus de Israel, mas jamais do Jeová de Israel, pois não existe nenhum outro Jeová. Ele fala do Deus vivo, mais jamais do Jeová vivo, pois só pode conceber Jeová como estando vivo." — Editado por P. Fairbairn, Londres, 1874, Vol. I, p. 856.

O mesmo se aplica ao termo grego para Deus, The·ós. Era aplicado tanto ao verdadeiro Deus como a deuses pagãos tais como Zeus e Hermes (os romanos Júpiter e Mercúrio). (Veja At 14:11-15.) A situação real é enfocada pelas palavras de Paulo em 1 Coríntios 8:4-6: "Pois, embora haja os que se chamem 'deuses', quer no céu, quer na terra, assim como há muitos 'deuses' e muitos 'senhores', para nós há realmente um só Deus, o Pai, de quem procedem todas as coisas, e nós para ele." A crença em numerosos deuses, que torna essencial que o verdadeiro Deus seja diferençado de tais, continua até este século 21.

A referência de Paulo a "Deus, o Pai", não significa que o nome do verdadeiro Deus seja "Pai", pois a designação "pai" se aplica também a todo genitor varão humano e descreve homens em outros relacionamentos. (Ro 4:11, 16; 1Co 4:15) Ao Messias se dá o título de "Pai Eterno". (Is 9:6) Jesus chamou a Satanás de "pai" de certos opositores assassinos. (Jo 8:44) O termo também era aplicado aos deuses das nações, representando-se o deus grego, Zeus, como o grande deus-pai na poesia homérica. Que "Deus, o Pai", possui um nome, um que é diferente do nome do seu Filho, é indicado em numerosos textos. (Mt 28:19; Re 3:12; 14:1) Paulo conhecia o nome pessoal de Deus, Jeová, conforme encontrado no relato da criação, em Gênesis, que Paulo citou em seus escritos. Este nome, Jeová, distingue "Deus, o Pai" (veja Is 64:8), bloqueando assim qualquer tentativa de fundir ou misturar Sua identidade e pessoa com a de qualquer outro a quem o título "deus" ou "pai" possa ser aplicado.

Não um deus tribal. Jeová é chamado de o "Deus de Israel" e 'o Deus de seus antepassados'. (1Cr 17:24; Êx 3:16) Todavia, esta associação íntima com os hebreus e com a nação israelita não dá motivos para se limitar tal nome ao de um deus tribal, como alguns têm feito. O apóstolo cristão, Paulo, escreveu: "É ele somente o Deus dos judeus? Não o é também de pessoas das nações? Sim, também de pessoas das nações." (Ro 3:29) Jeová não é somente o "Deus de toda a terra" (Is 54:5), mas também é o Deus do Universo, "Aquele que fez o céu e a terra". (Sal 124:8) O pacto feito por Jeová com Abraão, cerca de 2.000 anos antes dos dias de Paulo, prometera bênçãos a pessoas de todas as nações, mostrando o interesse de Deus em toda a humanidade. — Gên 12:1-3; compare isso com At 10:34, 35; 11:18.

Jeová Deus, por fim, rejeitou a infiel nação do Israel carnal. Mas Seu nome havia de continuar entre a nova nação do Israel espiritual, a congregação cristã, mesmo quando essa nova nação começasse a abranger pessoas não judias entre seus membros. Presidindo a uma assembleia cristã em Jerusalém, o discípulo Tiago falou, portanto, sobre Deus como tendo 'voltado sua atenção para as nações [não judias], a fim de tirar delas um povo para o seu nome'. Como prova de que isto fora predito, Tiago citou então uma profecia do livro de Amós, na qual o nome de Jeová aparece. — At 15:2, 12-14; Am 9:11, 12.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Em vista desta evidência, parece bem incomum verificar que os exemplares existentes de manuscritos do texto original das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs não contenham o nome divino na sua forma plena. Por isso, o nome não consta também na maioria das traduções do chamado Novo Testamento. Todavia, este nome aparece nessas fontes na sua forma abreviada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 19:1, 3, 4, 6, na expressão "Aleluia" (Al, BJ, CBC, MC, PIB, So). A convocação registrada ali, como feita por filhos espirituais de Deus: "Louvai a Jah!" (NM) torna clara que o nome divino não era obsoleto; era tão vital e pertinente como no período pré-cristão. Então, por que a ausência da sua forma plena nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs?

Por que não consta o nome divino, na sua forma plena, em nenhum manuscrito antigo disponível das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs?

O argumento apresentado por longo tempo era o de que os escritores inspirados das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs citaram as Escrituras Hebraicas à base da Septuaginta, e que, visto que esta versão substituíra o Tetragrama por Ký·ri·os ou The·ós, esses escritores não empregaram o nome Jeová. Como se tem demonstrado, este argumento já não é mais válido. Comentando que os fragmentos mais antigos da Septuaginta grega deveras contêm o nome divino em sua forma hebraica, o Dr. P. Kahle diz: "Sabemos agora que o texto grego da Bíblia [a Septuaginta], no que tange a ter sido escrito por judeus para judeus, não traduziu o nome divino por kyrios, mas o Tetragrama escrito com letras hebraicas ou gregas foi retido em tais MSS [manuscritos]. Foram os cristãos que substituíram o Tetragrama por kyrios, quando o nome divino em letras hebraicas não era mais entendido." (The Cairo Geniza [A Genizá do Cairo], Oxford, 1959, p. 222) Quando é que ocorreu esta mudança nas traduções gregas das Escrituras Hebraicas?

Evidentemente ocorreu nos séculos que se seguiram à morte de Jesus e de seus apóstolos. Na versão grega de Áquila, que data do segundo século EC, o Tetragrama ainda aparecia em caracteres hebraicos. Por volta de 245 EC, o famoso perito Orígenes produziu sua Hexapla, uma reprodução em seis colunas das inspiradas Escrituras Hebraicas: (1) no hebraico e aramaico original, acompanhado por (2) uma transliteração para o grego, e pelas versões gregas (3) de Áquila, (4) de Símaco, (5) da Septuaginta e (6) de Teodócio. À base da evidência das cópias fragmentárias agora conhecidas, o professor W. G. Waddell diz: "Na Hexapla de Orígenes . . . as versões gregas de Áquila, de Símaco, da LXX [Septuaginta], todas representaram JHVH [IHVH] por ΠΙΠΙ; na segunda coluna da Hexapla, o Tetragrama foi escrito em caracteres hebraicos." (The Journal of Theological Studies [A Revista de Estudos Teológicos], Oxford, Vol. XLV, 1944, pp. 158, 159) Outros creem que o texto original da Hexapla de Orígenes usava caracteres hebraicos para o Tetragrama em todas as suas colunas. O próprio Orígenes, nos seus comentários sobre o Salmo 2:2, declarou que "nos manuscritos mais fiéis, O NOME está escrito em caracteres hebraicos, contudo, não nos [caracteres] hebraicos atuais, mas nos mais antigos". — Patrologia Graeca [Patrologia Grega], Paris, 1862, Vol. XII, col. 1104.

Ainda no quarto século EC, Jerônimo, o tradutor da Vulgata latina, diz no seu prólogo dos livros de Samuel e de Reis: "E encontramos o nome de Deus, o Tetragrama [i.e., יהוה], em certos volumes gregos mesmo hoje, expresso em letras antigas." Numa carta escrita em Roma, em 384 EC, Jerônimo declara: "O nono [nome de Deus] é o Tetragrama, que eles consideravam [a·nek·fó·ne·ton], isto é, inefável, e se encontra escrito nestas letras: Iode, Hê, Vau, Hê. Certos ignorantes, devido à similaridade dos caracteres quando as encontravam nos livros gregos, estavam acostumados a ler ΠΙΠΙ [letras gregas que correspondiam às romanas PIPI]." — Papyrus Grecs Bibliques (Papiros Bíblicos Gregos), de F. Dunand, Cairo, 1966, p. 47, n. 4.

Portanto, os chamados "cristãos" que "substituíram o Tetragrama por kyrios" nas cópias da Septuaginta não foram os primitivos discípulos de Jesus. Foram pessoas de séculos posteriores, quando a predita apostasia já estava bem desenvolvida e havia corrompido a pureza dos ensinos cristãos. — 2Te 2:3; 1Ti 4:1.

Usado por Jesus e seus discípulos. Assim, nos dias de Jesus e de seus discípulos, o nome divino, definitivamente, aparecia em cópias das Escrituras, tanto em manuscritos hebraicos como em manuscritos gregos. Será que Jesus e seus discípulos empregavam o nome divino ao falarem ou escreverem? Em vista da condenação, por parte de Jesus, das tradições dos fariseus (Mt 15:1-9), seria muitíssimo desarrazoado concluir que Jesus e seus discípulos permitissem que as ideias farisaicas (tais como as registradas na Míxena) os governassem neste assunto. O próprio nome de Jesus significa "Jeová É Salvação". Ele declarou: "Vim em nome de meu Pai" (Jo 5:43); ensinou seus seguidores a orar: "Nosso Pai nos céus, santificado seja o teu nome" (Mt 6:9); suas obras, disse ele, eram feitas "em nome de meu Pai" (Jo 10:25); e, em oração, na noite anterior à sua morte, disse que tinha tornado manifesto o nome de seu Pai a seus discípulos, e pediu: "Santo Pai, vigia sobre eles por causa do teu próprio nome" (Jo 17:6, 11, 12, 26). Em vista de tudo isto, quando Jesus citava as Escrituras Hebraicas, ou as lia, certamente empregava o nome divino, Jeová. (Compare Mt 4:4, 7, 10, com De 8:3; 6:16; 6:13; também Mt 22:37 com De 6:5; e Mt 22:44 com Sal 110:1; bem como Lu 4:16-21 com Is 61:1, 2.) Logicamente, os discípulos de Jesus, incluindo os escritores inspirados das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, seguiriam o exemplo dele nisto.

Por que, então, não consta o nome nos manuscritos agora existentes das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs ou do chamado Novo Testamento? Evidentemente, porque na época em que essas cópias agora existentes foram feitas (a partir do terceiro século EC), o texto original dos escritos dos apóstolos e discípulos já havia sido alterado. De modo que copistas posteriores, sem dúvida, substituíram o nome divino na forma do Tetragrama por Ký·ri·os e The·ós. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 324) Isto é precisamente o que os fatos mostram ter sido feito em cópias posteriores da tradução Septuaginta das Escrituras Hebraicas.

Restauração do nome divino em traduções. Reconhecendo que deve ter acontecido assim, alguns tradutores têm incluído o nome Jeová em sua versão das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. The Emphatic Diaglott (A Diaglott Enfática), uma tradução do século 19, feita por Benjamin Wilson, contém diversas vezes o nome Jeová, especialmente quando os escritores cristãos citavam as Escrituras Hebraicas. Mas bem antes disso, em 1533, numa tradução de Anton Margaritha, o Tetragrama já tinha começado a aparecer em traduções das Escrituras Cristãs para o hebraico. Depois disso, em várias outras traduções para o hebraico, os tradutores usaram o Tetragrama nos lugares em que o escritor bíblico citava uma passagem das Escrituras Hebraicas que tinha o nome de Deus.

Quanto à correção deste proceder, observe a seguinte declaração feita por R. B. Girdlestone, ex-diretor de Wycliffe Hall, Oxford. Esta declaração foi feita antes de vir a lume a evidência de manuscritos de que a Septuaginta grega originalmente continha o nome Jeová. Disse ele: "Se esta versão [Septuaginta] retivesse a palavra [Jeová], ou mesmo tivesse usado uma palavra grega para Jeová e outra para Adonai, tal emprego, sem dúvida, teria sido retido nos discursos e nos argumentos do N. T. Assim, nosso Senhor, ao citar o Salmo 110, em vez de dizer: 'Disse o Senhor ao meu Senhor', poderia ter dito: 'Jeová disse a Adoni.'"

Prosseguindo nessa mesma base (que a evidência demonstra agora tratar-se de fato real), ele acrescenta: "Supondo que um perito cristão estivesse empenhado em traduzir o Testamento Grego para o hebraico, ele teria de considerar, cada vez que a palavra Κύριος ocorresse, se havia algo no contexto que indicasse o verdadeiro equivalente hebraico; e esta é a dificuldade que surgiria ao se traduzir o N. T. para todas as línguas, caso se permitisse a permanência do título Jeová [na tradução Septuaginta] no V. T. As Escrituras Hebraicas seriam um guia em muitos trechos: assim, sempre que ocorre a expressão 'o anjo do Senhor', sabemos que a palavra Senhor representa Jeová; chegaríamos a uma conclusão similar sobre a expressão 'a palavra do Senhor', se o precedente estabelecido no V. T. fosse seguido; o mesmo se daria também no caso do título 'o Senhor dos Exércitos'. Inversamente, sempre que ocorre a expressão 'Meu Senhor' ou 'Nosso Senhor', devíamos saber que a palavra Jeová seria inadmissível, e teriam de ser usadas Adonai ou Adoni." (Synonyms of the Old Testament [Sinônimos do Velho Testamento], 1897, p. 43) É nessa base que traduções das Escrituras Gregas (mencionadas antes) contêm o nome Jeová.

Notável, porém, neste respeito, é a Tradução do Novo Mundo, usada em toda esta obra, em que o nome divino, na forma de "Jeová", aparece 237 vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Conforme se tem mostrado, existe base sólida para isto.

Algumas das muitas traduções das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs que incluíram o nome divino.

Emprego Inicial do Nome e Seu Significado. Êxodo 3:13-16 e 6:3 são frequentemente mal aplicados como significando que o nome de Jeová foi revelado pela primeira vez a Moisés, algum tempo antes do Êxodo do Egito. Na verdade, Moisés suscitou a pergunta: "Suponhamos que eu vá ter com os filhos de Israel e deveras lhes diga: 'O Deus de vossos antepassados enviou-me a vós', e eles deveras me digam: 'Qual é o seu nome?' O que hei de dizer-lhes?" Isto, porém, não significa que ele ou os israelitas não conhecessem o nome de Jeová. O próprio nome da mãe de Moisés, Joquebede, significa "Jeová É Glória". (Êx 6:20) A pergunta de Moisés provavelmente se relacionava com as circunstâncias em que se encontravam os filhos de Israel. Por muitas décadas, estiveram sujeitos à dura escravidão, sem nenhum sinal de qualquer alívio. A dúvida, o desânimo e a fraqueza na fé quanto ao poder e ao propósito de Deus de libertá-los, mui provavelmente se haviam infiltrado em suas fileiras. (Observe também Ez 20:7, 8.) Portanto, se Moisés dissesse que viera simplesmente em nome de "Deus" ('Elo·hím) ou do "Soberano Senhor" ('Adho·naí), isto talvez não significasse muito para os israelitas sofredores. Sabiam que os egípcios possuíam seus próprios deuses e senhores, e, sem dúvida, ouviam zombarias por parte dos egípcios, de que os deuses deles eram superiores ao Deus dos israelitas.

Ademais, devemos ter presente que os nomes naquele tempo possuíam verdadeiro significado, e não eram apenas "rótulos" para identificar a pessoa, como o são atualmente. Moisés sabia que o nome de Abrão (que significa "Pai É Enaltecido (Exaltado)") foi mudado para Abraão (que significa "Pai Duma Multidão"), fazendo-se esta mudança devido ao propósito de Deus para com Abraão. Assim, também, o nome de Sarai foi mudado para Sara, e o de Jacó para Israel; em cada caso, a mudança revelava algo fundamental e profético a respeito do propósito de Deus para com eles. Moisés talvez se perguntasse se Jeová se revelaria então sob algum novo nome, de modo a lançar luz sobre o Seu propósito para com Israel. Dirigir-se Moisés aos israelitas em "nome" Daquele que o enviou significava que era o representante Dele, e a enorme autoridade com que Moisés falaria seria determinada por esse nome e seria proporcional a ele, ou com o que representava. (Veja Êx 23:20, 21; 1Sa 17:45.) Assim, a pergunta de Moisés era significativa.

A resposta de Deus, em hebraico, foi: 'Eh·yéh 'Ashér 'Eh·yéh. Algumas traduções vertem isto como "EU SOU O QUE SOU". Todavia, deve-se notar que o verbo hebraico ha·yáh, do qual deriva a palavra 'Eh·yéh, não significa simplesmente "ser". Antes, significa "vir a ser; tornar-se", ou "mostrar ser". Não se faz aqui referência à autoexistência de Deus, mas ao que ele pretende tornar-se para com outros. Portanto, a Tradução do Novo Mundo verte corretamente a expressão hebraica acima como "MOSTRAREI SER O QUE EU MOSTRAR SER." Depois disso, Jeová acrescentou: "Isto é o que deves dizer aos filhos de Israel: 'MOSTRAREI SER enviou-me a vós.' " — Êx 3:14, n.

Que isto não significava nenhuma mudança no nome de Deus, mas apenas um vislumbre adicional da personalidade de Deus, é depreendido de suas palavras adicionais: "Isto é o que deves dizer aos filhos de Israel: 'Jeová, o Deus de vossos antepassados, o Deus de Abraão, o Deus de Isaque e o Deus de Jacó enviou-me a vós.' Este é o meu nome por tempo indefinido e esta é a recordação de mim por geração após geração." (Êx 3:15; compare isso com Sal 135:13; Os 12:5.) O nome Jeová vem de um verbo hebraico que significa "vir a ser; tornar-se". Muitos eruditos acreditam que esse nome significa "Ele Causa que Venha a Ser". Essa definição reflete bem o papel de Jeová como o Criador de todas as coisas e o Cumpridor do seu propósito. Apenas o Deus verdadeiro poderia de direito e de modo legítimo levar esse nome.

Isto nos ajuda a entender o sentido da declaração posterior de Jeová a Moisés: "Eu sou Jeová. E eu costumava aparecer a Abraão, a Isaque e a Jacó como Deus Todo-Poderoso, mas com respeito ao meu nome Jeová não me dei a conhecer a eles." (Êx 6:2, 3) Uma vez que o nome Jeová foi usado muitas vezes por esses antepassados patriarcais de Moisés, é evidente que Deus queria dizer que Ele se manifestara a eles na qualidade de Jeová apenas de forma limitada. Para ilustrar isto, dificilmente se poderia dizer que aqueles que conheciam o homem Abrão realmente o conheciam como Abraão (que significa "Pai Duma Multidão") enquanto ele só tinha um filho, Ismael. Quando nasceram Isaque e outros filhos, e eles começaram a ter descendentes, o nome Abraão assumiu maior significado ou importância. Assim, também, o nome Jeová assumiria então um significado ampliado para os israelitas.

"Conhecer", portanto, não significa necessariamente apenas estar a par ou saber de algo ou de alguém. O tolo Nabal conhecia o nome de Davi, mas, ainda assim, indagou: "Quem é Davi?", no sentido de perguntar: "Que importância tem ele?" (1Sa 25:9-11; compare isso com 2Sa 8:13.) Assim, também, Faraó dissera a Moisés: "Quem é Jeová, que eu deva obedecer à sua voz para mandar Israel embora? Não conheço Jeová, e ainda mais, não vou mandar Israel embora." (Êx 5:1, 2) Com isso, Faraó evidentemente queria dizer que não conhecia a Jeová como o verdadeiro Deus, ou como tendo qualquer autoridade sobre o rei do Egito e seus assuntos, nem como tendo qualquer poder para efetivar Sua vontade, conforme anunciada por Moisés e Arão. Contudo, então, Faraó e todo o Egito, junto com os israelitas, viriam a conhecer o verdadeiro significado deste nome, da pessoa que ele representava. Conforme Jeová mostrou a Moisés, isto seria o resultado de Deus executar Seu propósito para com os israelitas, libertando-os, dando-lhes a Terra da Promessa, e assim cumprindo Seu pacto com os antepassados deles. Desta forma, como Deus disse: "Sabereis certamente que eu sou Jeová, vosso Deus." — Êx 6:4-8; veja TODO-PODEROSO.

O professor de Hebraico, D. H. Weir, disse portanto corretamente que aqueles que afirmam que Êxodo 6:2, 3, assinala a primeira vez que se revelou o nome Jeová, "não estudaram [estes versículos] à luz de outros textos; senão, teriam percebido que com nome deve-se querer dizer aqui não as duas sílabas, que compõem a palavra Jeová, mas a ideia que esta expressa. Quando lemos em Isaías, cap. lii. 6: 'Portanto, meu povo conhecerá o meu nome'; ou em Jeremias, cap. xvi. 21: 'Saberão que meu nome é Jeová'; ou nos Salmos, Sal. ix. [10, 16]: 'Os que conhecem o teu nome confiarão em ti'; vemos imediatamente que conhecer o nome de Jeová é algo bem diferente de se conhecer as quatro letras que o compõem. É saber por experiência que Jeová realmente é aquilo que seu nome declara que é. (Veja também Is. xix. 20, 21; Ez. xx. 5, 9; xxxix. 6, 7; Sal. lxxxiii. [18]; lxxxix. [16]; 2 Cr. vi. 33.)" — The Imperial Bible-Dictionary, Vol. I, pp. 856, 857.

Conhecido ao primeiro casal humano. O nome Jeová não foi pela primeira vez revelado a Moisés, porque certamente o primeiro homem o conhecia. O nome aparece inicialmente no Registro divino em Gênesis 2:4, após o relato sobre as obras criativas de Deus, e ali identifica o Criador dos céus e da Terra como "Jeová Deus". É razoável crer que Jeová Deus tenha informado Adão deste relato da criação. O registro de Gênesis não menciona Ele fazer isso, mas tampouco diz explicitamente que Jeová revelou a origem de Eva a Adão quando este despertou. No entanto, as palavras de Adão, ao receber Eva, mostram que ele tinha sido informado sobre o modo de Deus tê-la produzido do corpo do próprio Adão. (Gên 2:21-23) Sem dúvida, houve muita comunicação entre Jeová e seu filho terrestre que não se encontra incluída no relato breve de Gênesis.

Eva é a primeira pessoa humana de que se relata especificamente ter usado o nome divino. (Gên 4:1) Ela obviamente aprendeu esse nome de seu marido e cabeça, Adão, de quem também ficou sabendo da ordem de Deus a respeito da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau (embora, novamente, o registro não diz diretamente que Adão transmitiu esta informação a ela). — Gên 2:16, 17; 3:2, 3.

Conforme se mostra no artigo ENOS, o princípio de se "invocar o nome de Jeová" nos dias de Enos, neto de Adão, evidentemente não era em fé, nem da maneira aprovada por Deus. Pois, relata-se que entre Abel e Noé apenas o filho de Jarede, Enoque (não Enos) "andou com o verdadeiro Deus" em fé. (Gên 4:26; 5:18, 22-24; He 11:4-7) Por meio de Noé e sua família, o conhecimento sobre o nome divino sobreviveu para o período pós-diluviano, para além do tempo da dispersão dos povos na Torre de Babel, e foi transmitido ao patriarca Abraão e seus descendentes. — Gên 9:26; 12:7, 8.

A Pessoa Identificada pelo Nome. Jeová é o Criador de todas as coisas, a grande Causa Primária; destarte, ele é incriado, não teve início. (Re 4:11) "Em número, os seus anos estão além de esquadrinhamento." (Jó 36:26) É impossível estabelecer uma idade para Ele, pois não existe ponto inicial a partir do qual se possa fazer a medição. Embora sem idade, é corretamente chamado de "o Antigo de Dias", uma vez que sua existência se estende infindavelmente pelo passado. (Da 7:9, 13) Ele também não tem fim futuro (Re 10:6), sendo incorruptível, imorredouro. Por conseguinte, é chamado de "Rei da eternidade" (1Ti 1:17), para quem mil anos são como uma vigília noturna de poucas horas. — Sal 90:2, 4; Je 10:10; Hab 1:12; Re 15:3.

Apesar de o tempo não contar em seu caso, Jeová é destacadamente um Deus histórico, identificando-se com épocas, lugares, pessoas e eventos específicos. Em seus modos de lidar com a humanidade, ele atua segundo um cronograma exato. (Gên 15:13, 16; 17:21; Êx 12:6-12; Gál 4:4) Por sua existência eterna ser inegável e o fato mais fundamental no Universo, Ele tem jurado por ela, dizendo: "Assim como vivo", garantindo desta forma a certeza absoluta de suas promessas e profecias. (Je 22:24; Sof 2:9; Núm 14:21, 28; Is 49:18) Homens também fizeram juramentos, jurando pela existência de Jeová. (Jz 8:19; Ru 3:13) Apenas os insensatos dizem: "Não há Jeová." — Sal 14:1; 10:4.

Descrições da sua presença. Uma vez que ele é um Espírito além do poder de visão dos humanos (Jo 4:24), qualquer descrição da Sua aparência em termos humanos só pode dar uma ideia da sua glória incomparável. (Is 40:25, 26) Embora não vissem realmente seu Criador (Jo 1:18), certos servos dele receberam visões inspiradas das Suas cortes celestiais. A descrição que apresentaram da Sua presença retrata não só grande dignidade e assombrosa majestade, mas também serenidade, ordem, beleza e agradabilidade. — Êx 24:9-11; Is 6:1; Ez 1:26-28; Da 7:9; Re 4:1-3; veja também Sal 96:4-6.

Como se pode observar, essas descrições usam metáforas e analogias, assemelhando a aparência de Jeová a coisas conhecidas pelos humanos — pedras preciosas, fogo, arco-íris. Ele é até mesmo descrito como possuindo certas características humanas. Embora alguns peritos questionem consideravelmente o que chamam de expressões antropomorfológicas encontradas na Bíblia — como as referências aos "olhos", "ouvidos" e "rosto" (1Pe 3:12), o "braço" (Ez 20:33), a mão "direita" (Êx 15:6) de Deus, e assim por diante — é óbvio que tais expressões se fazem necessárias para que a descrição seja compreensível aos humanos. Fornecer-nos Jeová Deus uma descrição de si mesmo em termos espirituais seria como dar equações de álgebra superior a pessoas que só têm o conhecimento bem elementar de matemática, ou como tentar explicar as cores a uma pessoa que nasceu cega. — Jó 37:23, 24.

Os chamados antropomorfismos, por conseguinte, jamais devem ser considerados de forma literal, assim como tampouco se tomariam literalmente outras referências metafóricas a Deus como "sol", "escudo", ou "Rocha". (Sal 84:11; De 32:4, 31) A visão de Jeová (Gên 16:13), dessemelhante da dos humanos, não depende de raios de luz, e atos praticados em completa escuridão podem ser vistos por Ele. (Sal 139:1, 7-12; He 4:13) Sua visão pode abranger a Terra toda (Pr 15:3), e Ele não precisa de nenhum equipamento especial para ver o embrião em desenvolvimento no útero humano. (Sal 139:15, 16) Nem depende sua audição de ondas sonoras numa atmosfera, pois Ele consegue "ouvir" expressões ainda que proferidas silenciosamente no coração. (Sal 19:14) O homem não consegue medir com êxito nem mesmo o vasto Universo físico; todavia, os céus físicos não abrangem ou contêm o lugar da residência de Deus, e muito menos poderiam contê-lo uma casa ou um templo terrestre. (1Rs 8:27; Sal 148:13) Mediante Moisés, Jeová avisou especificamente a nação de Israel para que não fizesse nenhuma imagem Dele em forma de varão ou de qualquer espécie de coisa criada. (De 4:15-18) Assim, ao passo que o relato de Lucas registra a referência de Jesus a expulsar demônios "por meio do dedo de Deus", o relato de Mateus mostra que Jesus referia-se com isso ao "espírito de Deus", ou Sua força ativa. — Lu 11:20; Mt 12:28; compare Je 27:5 com Gên 1:2.

Qualidades pessoais reveladas na criação. Certas facetas da personalidade de Jeová são reveladas por meio das suas obras criativas, mesmo as realizadas antes de ter criado o homem. (Ro 1:20) O próprio ato criador revela seu amor. Isto se dá porque Jeová é autossuficiente, não lhe faltando nada. Por isso, embora criasse centenas de milhões de filhos espirituais, nenhum deles podia acrescentar algo ao Seu conhecimento, nem contribuir com alguma qualidade desejável de emoção ou de personalidade que Ele já não possuísse em grau superior. — Da 7:9, 10; He 12:22; Is 40:13, 14; Ro 11:33, 34.

Isto, naturalmente, não significa que Jeová não derive prazer de Suas criaturas. Visto que o homem foi feito "à imagem de Deus" (Gên 1:27), segue-se que a alegria que um pai humano encontra no filho, especialmente naquele que lhe mostra amor filial e que age com sabedoria, reflete a alegria que Jeová deriva de suas criaturas inteligentes que o amam e sabiamente o servem. (Pr 27:11; Mt 3:17; 12:18) Esse prazer não emana de qualquer lucro material ou físico, mas de ele ver suas criaturas se apegarem voluntariamente às suas normas justas, e demonstrarem altruísmo e generosidade. (1Cr 29:14-17; Sal 50:7-15; 147:10, 11; He 13:16) Inversamente, aqueles que adotam um proceder errado e mostram desconsideração para com o amor de Jeová, que trazem vitupério ao Seu nome e sofrimento cruel a outros, fazem com que Jeová 'se sinta magoado no coração'. — Gên 6:5-8; Sal 78:36-41; He 10:38.

Jeová também deriva prazer no exercício de seus poderes, quer na criação, quer de outra forma, tendo as suas obras sempre verdadeiro objetivo e um bom motivo. (Sal 135:3-6; Is 46:10, 11; 55:10, 11) Como Dador generoso de "toda boa dádiva e todo presente perfeito", ele se deleita em recompensar seus filhos e filhas fiéis com bênçãos. (Tg 1:5, 17; Sal 35:27; 84:11, 12; 149:4) Todavia, embora seja um Deus caloroso e sensível, sua felicidade evidentemente não depende de Suas criaturas, tampouco sacrifica Ele os princípios justos por causa de sentimentalismo.

Jeová também mostrou amor ao conceder ao seu primeiro criado Filho espiritual o privilégio de participar com Ele em todas as demais obras criativas, tanto espirituais como materiais, fazendo generosamente com que este fato se tornasse conhecido, com a honra resultante para seu Filho. (Gên 1:26; Col 1:15-17) Assim, não receou tibiamente a possibilidade duma competição, mas, antes, demonstrou inteira confiança em sua própria

Soberania legítima (Êx 15:11), bem como na lealdade e devoção de seu Filho. Ele permite que seus filhos espirituais gozem de liberdade relativa ao se desincumbirem de seus deveres, vez por outra até mesmo permitindo que deem suas opiniões sobre de que modo poderiam cumprir determinadas tarefas. — 1Rs 22:19-22.

Conforme indicado pelo apóstolo Paulo, as qualidades invisíveis de Jeová são também reveladas na sua criação material. (Ro 1:19, 20) Seu vasto poder está assombrosamente além da imaginação, enormes galáxias de bilhões de estrelas sendo apenas 'o trabalho de seus dedos' (Sal 8:1, 3, 4; 19:1), e a riqueza da Sua sabedoria é tamanha, que mesmo depois de milhares de anos de pesquisas e de estudos, o entendimento que os homens possuem da criação física é apenas um "sussurro" comparado com o poderoso trovão. (Jó 26:14; Sal 92:5; Ec 3:11) A atividade criativa de Jeová em relação ao planeta Terra foi assinalada pela ordem lógica, seguindo um programa definido (Gên 1:2-31), tornando a Terra — como astronautas no século 20 a chamaram — uma joia no espaço.

Conforme revelado ao homem no Éden. Como que espécie de pessoa revelou-se Jeová aos primeiros filhos humanos? Certamente, Adão, na sua perfeição, teria de concordar com as palavras posteriores do salmista: "Elogiar-te-ei porque fui feito maravilhosamente, dum modo atemorizante. Teus trabalhos são maravilhosos, de que minha alma está bem apercebida." (Sal 139:14) À base do seu próprio corpo — notavelmente versátil entre as criaturas terrestres — e das coisas que via em volta dele, o homem tinha todos os motivos para sentir reverência pelo seu Criador. Toda nova ave, animal e peixe; toda planta, flor e árvore diferente; e todo campo, floresta, morro, vale e rio, que o homem visse, incutiriam nele a profundeza e a amplitude da sabedoria e da riqueza da personalidade de Jeová, conforme refletida na grande variedade das suas obras criativas. (Gên 2:7-9; compare isso com Sal 104:8-24.) Todos os sentidos do homem — a visão, a audição, o paladar, o olfato e o tato — comunicariam à sua mente receptiva a evidência de haver um Criador muito generoso e atencioso.

Tampouco foram esquecidas as necessidades intelectuais de Adão, sua necessidade de conversação e companheirismo, pois o seu Pai forneceu-lhe um par feminino inteligente. (Gên 2:18-23) Ambos poderiam ter cantado a Jeová assim como fez o salmista: "Alegria até a fartura está com a tua face; na tua direita há o agradável, para sempre." (Sal 16:8, 11) Tendo sido o alvo de tanto amor, Adão e Eva certamente deviam ter sabido que "Deus é amor", a fonte e o supremo exemplo de amor. — 1Jo 4:16, 19.

O que era mais importante, Jeová Deus satisfez as necessidades espirituais do homem. O Pai de Adão revelou-se a este primeiro filho humano, comunicando-se com ele, dando-lhe tarefas a fazer, cujo desempenho obediente constituiria uma parte importante da adoração prestada pelo homem. — Gên 1:27-30; 2:15-17; compare isso com Am 4:13.

Deus de normas de moral. O homem chegou logo cedo a conhecer a Jeová não apenas como Provisor sábio e generoso, mas também como Deus de boa moral, que se apega a normas específicas do que é certo e do que é errado em conduta e prática. Se Adão, conforme indicado, conhecia o relato da criação, então ele sabia também que Jeová tinha normas divinas, porque o relato diz a respeito das Suas obras criativas que Jeová viu que 'tudo era muito bom', portanto, satisfazia a sua norma perfeita. — Gên 1:3, 4, 12, 25, 31; compare isso com De 32:3, 4.

Sem normas, não haveria maneira de determinar ou julgar o que é bom e o que é mau, ou de medir ou reconhecer graus de precisão e de excelência. Neste respeito, são esclarecedoras as seguintes observações da Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; 1959, Vol. 21, pp. 306, 307):

"As realizações do homem [em estabelecer normas, ou padrões] . . . são insignificantes em comparação com as normas existentes na natureza. As constelações, as órbitas dos planetas, as imutáveis propriedades normais de condutividade, ductilidade, elasticidade, resistência, permeabilidade, refratividade, força ou viscosidade dos materiais da natureza, . . . ou a estrutura das células, são uns poucos exemplos da espantosa padronização na natureza."

Mostrando a importância de tal padronização na criação material, a mesma obra diz: "Somente pela padronização encontrada na natureza é possível reconhecer e classificar . . . as muitas espécies de plantas, peixes, aves ou animais. Dentro destas espécies, os indivíduos se parecem nos mínimos detalhes de estrutura, função e hábitos peculiares a cada uma. [Veja Gên 1:11, 12, 21, 24, 25.] Se não houvesse tal padronização no corpo humano, os médicos não saberiam se determinada pessoa possuía certos órgãos, onde procurá-los . . . De fato, sem os padrões da natureza não haveria sociedade organizada, nem educação, nem médicos; cada uma destas coisas depende das similaridades básicas e comparáveis."

Adão viu grande estabilidade nas obras criativas de Jeová, o ciclo regular de dia e noite, o fluxo descendente constante da água no rio do Éden, em função da força da gravidade, e inúmeras outras coisas que forneciam prova de que o Criador da Terra não é Deus de confusão, mas de ordem. (Gên 1:16-18; 2:10; Ec 1:5-7; Je 31:35, 36; 1Co 14:33) O homem certamente achou isso útil para cumprir com seu trabalho e atividades designados (Gên 1:28; 2:15), podendo planejar e trabalhar com confiança, livre de incerteza apreensiva.

Em vista de tudo isto, não deveria parecer estranho ao homem inteligente que Jeová estabelecesse normas que governassem a conduta do homem e suas relações com o seu Criador. As próprias esplêndidas habilidades de Jeová davam a Adão o exemplo para cultivar e cuidar do Éden. (Gên 2:15; 1:31) Adão aprendeu também qual era a norma de Deus para o casamento, a monogamia, e para o relacionamento familiar. (Gên 2:24) Destacava-se especialmente como essencial para a própria vida a norma de obediência às instruções de Deus. Visto que Adão era humanamente perfeito, a obediência perfeita era a norma que Jeová estabeleceu para ele. Jeová deu ao seu filho terrestre a oportunidade de demonstrar amor e devoção pela obediência à Sua ordem de abster-se de comer de uma das muitas árvores frutíferas no Éden. (Gên 2:16, 17) Era algo simples. Mas a situação de Adão naquela época era simples, livre das complexidades e da confusão que se desenvolveram desde então. A sabedoria de Jeová nesta prova simples foi salientada pelas palavras de Jesus Cristo, cerca de 4.000 anos depois: "Quem é fiel no mínimo, é também fiel no muito, e quem é injusto no mínimo, é também injusto no muito." — Lu 16:10.

Manter essa ordem e as normas estabelecidas não reduziriam o usufruto da vida pelo homem, mas contribuiriam para ele. Conforme observa sobre a criação material o já mencionado artigo de enciclopédia sobre padrões, ou normas: "Apesar desta sobrepujante evidência de padrões, ninguém acusa a natureza de monotonia. Embora uma faixa estreita de comprimentos de ondas espectrais constitua o alicerce, as variações e as combinações de cores para deleitar os olhos do observador virtualmente não têm limites. De modo similar, toda arte da música chega aos ouvidos por meio de outro pequeno grupo de frequências." (Vol. 21, p. 307) Semelhantemente, os requisitos de Deus para o casal humano concediam a este toda a liberdade que o coração justo poderia desejar. Não havia necessidade de cercá-los com uma infinidade de leis e regulamentos. O exemplo amoroso dado a eles pelo seu Criador, e seu respeito e seu amor por Ele, os protegeriam para que não ultrapassassem os limites justos da sua liberdade. — Veja 1Ti 1:9, 10; Ro 6:15-18; 13:8-10; 2Co 3:17.

Portanto, Jeová Deus, pela sua própria Pessoa, por seus modos de agir e por suas palavras, era, e ainda é, a Suprema Norma para todo o Universo, sendo a definição e a essência de toda a bondade. Por este motivo, seu Filho, quando na Terra, podia dizer a certo homem: "Por que me chamas de bom? Ninguém é bom, exceto um só, Deus." — Mr 10:17, 18; também Mt 19:17; 5:48.

Soberania Será Defendida e Nome Será Santificado. Todas as coisas relacionadas com a pessoa de Deus são santas; seu nome pessoal, Jeová, é santo, e, por isso, deve ser santificado. (Le 22:32) Santificar significa "tornar santo, pôr à parte ou ter como sagrado", e, portanto, não deve ser usado como algo comum ou ordinário. (Is 6:1-3; Lu 1:49; Re 4:8; veja SANTIFICAÇÃO.) Por causa da Pessoa que representa, o nome de Jeová é "grande e atemorizante" (Sal 99:3, 5), "majestoso" e "inalcançavelmente elevado" (Sal 8:1; 148:13), digno de ser considerado com espanto reverente (Is 29:23).

Profanação do nome. As evidências indicam que o nome divino era considerado assim até que os eventos no jardim do Éden resultaram na sua profanação. A rebelião de Satanás pôs em dúvida a reputação de Deus. A Eva, ele alegou falar por Deus ao dizer-lhe o que "Deus sabe", ao mesmo tempo lançando dúvida sobre a ordem de Deus, expressa a Adão, a respeito da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau. (Gên 3:1-5) Por ter sido divinamente comissionado e por ser o cabeça terrestre por meio de quem Deus comunicava instruções para a família humana, Adão era o representante de Jeová na Terra. (Gên 1:26, 28; 2:15-17; 1Co 11:3) Diz-se daqueles que servem nesta qualidade que 'ministram em nome de Jeová' e 'falam em seu nome'. (De 18:5, 18, 19; Tg 5:10) Assim, embora sua esposa Eva já tivesse profanado o nome de Jeová pela sua desobediência, Adão fazer isso era um ato especialmente repreensível de desrespeito para com o nome que ele representava. — Veja 1Sa 15:22, 23.

A questão suprema é de moral. É evidente que o filho espiritual que se tornou Satanás conhecia a Jeová como Deus de normas de moral, não como pessoa inconstante, errática. Se tivesse conhecido Jeová como Deus de acessos incontroláveis e violentos, ele só poderia ter esperado o extermínio imediato, na hora, pelo proceder que adotou. A questão suscitada por Satanás no Éden, portanto, não era uma simples prova da capacidade ou do poder de Jeová de destruir. Antes, era uma questão de moral: a do direito moral de Deus exercer a soberania universal, e de exigir implícita obediência e devoção de todas as Suas criaturas, em todos os lugares. A maneira de Satanás abordar Eva revela isso. (Gên 3:1-6) Do mesmo modo, o livro de Jó relata como Jeová revelou, perante todos os seus filhos angélicos reunidos, o alcance da atitude adotada por seu Adversário. Satanás alegou que a lealdade de Jó (e, por extensão, de qualquer das criaturas inteligentes de Deus) a Jeová não era de todo o coração, que não se baseava em verdadeira devoção e genuíno amor. — Jó 1:6-22; 2:1-8.

Assim, a questão da integridade por parte das criaturas inteligentes de Deus era secundária, ou subsidiária, surgindo da questão primária do direito de Deus à soberania universal. Estas questões levariam tempo para que se pudesse demonstrar a veracidade ou falsidade das acusações, provar a atitude de coração das criaturas de Deus, e, portanto, resolver esta questão além de qualquer dúvida. (Veja Jó 23:10; 31:5, 6; Ec 8:11-13; He 5:7-9; verifique INIQUIDADE; INTEGRIDADE.) De modo que Jeová não executou imediatamente o rebelde casal humano, nem o filho espiritual que levantou a questão, e assim viriam à existência os dois preditos 'descendentes [lit.: sementes]', representando lados opostos da questão. — Gên 3:15.

Que esta questão ainda estava acesa quando Jesus Cristo estava na Terra se vê do seu confronto com Satanás no ermo, após os 40 dias de jejum de Jesus. As táticas astuciosas empregadas pelo Adversário de Jeová no seu empenho de tentar o Filho de Deus seguiram o modelo visto no Éden, uns 4.000 anos antes, e a oferta de Satanás, do domínio sobre os reinos terrestres, tornava claro que a questão da soberania universal não havia mudado. (Mt 4:1-10) O livro de Revelação mostra a continuidade desta questão até o tempo em que Jeová Deus declarar o caso encerrado (veja Sal 74:10, 22, 23) e executar o julgamento justo em todos os opositores. Isso acontecerá quando seu Reino justo defender de uma vez por todas a soberania de Jeová, santificando assim o Seu santo nome. — Re 11:17, 18; 12:17; 14:6, 7; 15:3, 4; 19:1-3, 11-21; 20:1-10, 14.

Por que é a santificação do nome de Deus de importância primária?

O inteiro relato bíblico gira em torno de se defender a soberania de Jeová, e isso deixa claro o objetivo principal de Jeová Deus: a santificação do seu próprio nome. Essa santificação exige limpar o nome de Deus de todas as acusações falsas. No entanto, muito mais do que isso, exige que o nome seja honrado como sagrado por todas as criaturas inteligentes no céu e na Terra. Isso, por sua vez, significa reconhecerem e respeitarem a posição de Jeová como soberano, de modo voluntário, com o desejo de servi-lo, deleitando-se em fazer a vontade divina por amor a Ele. A oração de Davi a Jeová, no Salmo 40:5-10, expressa bem esta atitude e a verdadeira santificação do nome de Jeová. (Note a aplicação a Cristo Jesus que o apóstolo faz de trechos deste salmo em He 10:5-10.)

Portanto, da santificação do nome de Jeová dependem a boa ordem, a paz e o bem-estar de todo o Universo e seus habitantes. O Filho de Deus mostrou isto, ao mesmo tempo indicando o meio de Jeová realizar seu propósito, quando ensinou a seus discípulos que orassem a Deus: "Santificado seja o teu nome. Venha o teu reino. Realize-se a tua vontade, como no céu, assim também na terra." (Mt 6:9, 10) Este propósito primário de Jeová fornece a chave para se entender o motivo por trás das ações de Deus e seus tratos com Suas criaturas, conforme delineados na Bíblia inteira.

Assim, verificamos que a nação de Israel, cuja história constitui grande parte do registro da Bíblia, foi escolhida para ser um 'povo para o nome' de Jeová. (De 28:9, 10; 2Cr 7:14; Is 43:1, 3, 6, 7) O pacto da Lei de Jeová, feito com eles, atribuía importância primária a que dessem devoção exclusiva a Jeová como Deus, e não tomassem seu Nome de modo fútil, "pois Jeová não deixará impune aquele que tomar seu nome dum modo fútil". (Êx 20:1-7; compare isso com Le 19:12; 24:10-23.) Pela demonstração de seu poder de salvar, e de seu poder de destruir, ao libertar Israel do Egito, o nome de Jeová foi "declarado em toda a terra", a sua fama precedendo Israel em sua marcha para a Terra da Promessa. (Êx 9:15, 16; 15:1-3, 11-17; 2Sa 7:23; Je 32:20, 21) Como o expressou o profeta Isaías: "Assim conduziste o teu povo, a fim de fazer para ti mesmo um belo nome." (Is 63:11-14) Quando Israel mostrou uma atitude rebelde no ermo, Jeová lidou misericordiosamente com ele e não o abandonou. Outrossim, Ele revelou seu motivo básico, ao dizer: "Eu prossegui, agindo em prol do meu próprio nome, para que não fosse profanado perante os olhos das nações." — Ez 20:8-10.

Em toda a história daquela nação, Jeová a manteve cônscia da importância do Seu nome sagrado. A capital, Jerusalém, com seu monte Sião, era o lugar que Jeová escolheu "para nele colocar seu nome, para fazê-lo residir ali". (De 12:5, 11; 14:24, 25; Is 18:7; Je 3:17) O templo construído naquela cidade era a 'casa para o nome de Jeová'. (1Cr 29:13-16; 1Rs 8:15-21, 41-43) O que era feito naquele templo, ou naquela cidade, para o bem ou para o mal, inevitavelmente refletia no nome de Jeová, e merecia a Sua atenção. (1Rs 8:29; 9:3; 2Rs 21:4-7) A profanação do nome de Jeová ali resultaria na destruição certa da cidade e levaria à rejeição do próprio templo. (1Rs 9:6-8; Je 25:29; 7:8-15; compare isso com as ações e as palavras de Jesus em Mt 21:12, 13; 23:38.) Devido a estes fatos, as petições suplicantes de Jeremias e de Daniel, a favor do povo e da cidade deles, imploravam a Jeová que concedesse misericórdia e ajuda 'por causa do Seu próprio nome'. — Je 14:9; Da 9:15-19.

Ao predizer a restauração dos do povo que levava Seu nome a Judá, e a purificação deles, Jeová de novo lhes tornou claro qual era Sua principal preocupação, afirmando: "E eu me compadecerei do meu santo nome." " 'Não é por vós que faço isso, ó casa de Israel, mas por meu santo nome que tendes profanado entre as nações nas quais entrastes.' 'E hei de santificar meu grande nome que tem sido profanado . . . ; e as nações terão de saber que eu sou Jeová', é a pronunciação do Soberano Senhor Jeová, 'quando eu for santificado entre vós diante dos seus olhos'." — Ez 36:20-27, 32.

Estes e outros textos mostram que Jeová não exagera a importância da humanidade. Sendo todos os homens pecadores, eles são, com justiça, dignos de morte, e é somente pela benignidade imerecida e pela misericórdia de Deus que alguns ganharão a vida. (Ro 5:12, 21; 1Jo 4:9, 10) Jeová nada deve à humanidade, e a vida eterna para os que a obtiverem será uma dádiva, e não algo que mereçam ganhar. (Ro 5:15; 6:23; Tit 3:4, 5) Na verdade, Ele tem demonstrado inigualável amor para com o gênero humano. (Jo 3:16; Ro 5:7, 8) Mas, é contrário aos fatos bíblicos e coloca os assuntos na perspectiva errada considerar a salvação humana como a questão mais importante ou o critério por meio do qual se possa medir a justiça, a retidão e a santidade de Deus. O salmista expressou a verdadeira perspectiva dos assuntos quando, de forma humilde e com admiração, exclamou: "Ó Jeová, nosso Senhor, quão majestoso é o teu nome em toda a terra, tu, cuja dignidade é narrada acima dos céus! . . . Quando vejo os teus céus, trabalhos dos teus dedos, a lua e as estrelas que preparaste, que é o homem mortal para que te lembres dele, e o filho do homem terreno para que tomes conta dele?" (Sal 8:1, 3, 4; 144:3; compare isso com Is 45:9; 64:8.) A santificação do nome de Jeová Deus significa corretamente mais do que a vida de toda a humanidade. Assim, como mostrou o Filho de Deus, o homem deve amar seu semelhante como a si próprio, mas tem de amar a Deus de todo o coração, mente, alma e força. (Mr 12:29-31) Isto significa amar a Jeová Deus mais do que a parentes, amigos ou a própria vida. — De 13:6-10; Re 12:11; compare isso com a atitude dos três hebreus, em Da 3:16-18; veja CIUMENTO, CIÚME.

Este conceito bíblico dos assuntos não deve afugentar as pessoas, mas, antes, deve fazer com que apreciem ainda mais o verdadeiro Deus. Visto que Jeová poderia, com plena justiça, acabar com toda a humanidade pecadora, isto exalta ainda mais a grandeza de Sua misericórdia e benignidade imerecida em salvar alguns dentre a humanidade para a vida. (Jo 3:36) Ele não tem nenhum prazer na morte dos iníquos (Ez 18:23, 32; 33:11); todavia, tampouco permite que os iníquos escapem da execução de Seu julgamento. (Am 9:2-4; Ro 2:2-9) Ele é paciente e longânime, visando a salvação dos obedientes (2Pe 3:8-10), todavia, não tolerará para sempre uma situação que traz vitupério ao seu sublime nome. (Sal 74:10, 22, 23; Is 65:6, 7; 2Pe 2:3) Ele mostra compaixão e compreensão para com as fraquezas humanas, perdoando "amplamente" os arrependidos (Sal 103:10-14; 130:3, 4; Is 55:6, 7), mas não exime as pessoas das responsabilidades que legitimamente levam por causa das suas ações, e dos efeitos que tais ações exercem sobre elas mesmas e sua família. Ceifam aquilo que semeiam. (De 30:19, 20; Gál 6:5, 7, 8) Assim, Jeová demonstra um belo e perfeito equilíbrio entre a justiça e a misericórdia. Os que têm a perspectiva correta dos assuntos, segundo revelada na Sua Palavra (Is 55:8, 9; Ez 18:25, 29-31), não cometerão o grave erro de considerar frivolamente a Sua benignidade imerecida, ou de 'desacertar Seu propósito'. — 2Co 6:1; He 10:26-31; 12:29.

Imutável em Qualidades e Normas. Conforme Jeová disse ao povo de Israel: "Eu sou Jeová; não mudei." (Mal 3:6) Isto aconteceu cerca de 3.500 anos depois de Deus ter criado a humanidade, e uns 1.500 anos desde que Deus celebrara o pacto abraâmico. Ao passo que alguns alegam que o Deus revelado nas Escrituras Hebraicas difere do Deus revelado por Jesus Cristo e pelos escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, um exame revela que esta alegação carece totalmente de base. Sobre Deus, o discípulo Tiago disse corretamente: "Com [ele] não há variação da virada da sombra." (Tg 1:17) Não houve nenhum 'abrandamento' da personalidade de Jeová Deus com o passar dos séculos, pois não era necessário tal abrandamento. Sua severidade, conforme revelada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, não é menor, nem é seu amor maior, do que o eram no início dos seus tratos com a humanidade no Éden.

As aparentes diferenças de personalidade são, em realidade, simples aspectos diferentes da mesma personalidade imutável. Resultam das diferentes circunstâncias e pessoas com que ele lidava, o que exigia diferentes atitudes ou relacionamentos. (Veja Is 59:1-4.) Não foi Jeová quem mudou, e sim Adão e Eva; eles se colocaram numa posição em que os justos padrões imutáveis de Jeová não mais permitiram lidar com eles como membros de Sua amada família universal. Sendo perfeitos, eram plenamente responsáveis por seu erro deliberado (Ro 5:14), e, assim sendo, estavam além dos limites da misericórdia divina, embora Jeová lhes mostrasse benignidade imerecida ao provê-los inicialmente de roupas e ao lhes permitir viver por séculos fora do santuário do Éden e ter descendentes, antes de finalmente morrerem devido aos efeitos de seu próprio proceder pecaminoso. (Gên 3:8-24) Depois de serem expulsos do Éden, pelo que parece, cessou toda comunicação divina com Adão e sua esposa.

Por que ele pode lidar com humanos imperfeitos. As normas justas de Jeová lhe permitiam lidar com a descendência de Adão e Eva duma forma diferente daquela com que lidou com estes pais dela. Por quê? Pelo motivo de que os descendentes de Adão herdaram o pecado, e, assim, iniciaram involuntariamente a vida como criaturas imperfeitas, com uma inerente inclinação para o erro. (Sal 51:5; Ro 5:12) Assim, havia base para que se tivesse misericórdia com eles. A primeira profecia de Jeová (Gên 3:15), feita na ocasião em que expressou o julgamento no Éden, mostrou que a rebelião de seus primeiros filhos humanos (bem como a de um de seus filhos espirituais) não amargurara a Jeová, nem fizera cessar seu amor. Esta profecia indicava, em termos simbólicos, o endireitamento da situação produzida pela rebelião, e uma restauração das condições à sua perfeição original, revelando-se seu pleno significado milênios depois. — Veja os simbolismos de "serpente", "mulher", e "descendente" ou "semente", em Re 12:9, 17; Gál 3:16, 29; 4:26, 27.

Os descendentes de Adão têm tido permissão de continuar na Terra por milhares de anos, embora imperfeitos e moribundos, jamais conseguindo libertar-se das garras mortíferas do pecado. O apóstolo cristão Paulo explicou o motivo de Jeová permitir isto, dizendo: "Porque a criação estava sujeita à futilidade, não de sua própria vontade, mas por intermédio daquele que a sujeitou [isto é, Jeová Deus], à base da esperança de que a própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus. Pois sabemos que toda a criação junta persiste em gemer e junta está em dores até agora." (Ro 8:20-22) Conforme mostrado no artigo PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO, nada indica que Jeová tenha preferido utilizar seus poderes de discernimento para prever o desvio do casal original. No entanto, uma vez ocorrido, Jeová predeterminou os meios para corrigir esta situação errada. (Ef 1:9-11) Este segredo sagrado, originalmente encerrado na profecia simbólica no Éden, foi, por fim, plenamente revelado no Filho unigênito de Jeová, enviado à Terra para que pudesse "dar testemunho da verdade", e para que, "pela benignidade imerecida de Deus, provasse a morte por todo homem". — Jo 18:37; He 2:9; veja RESGATE.

Por conseguinte, lidar Deus com certos descendentes do pecador Adão e abençoá-los não indicava nenhuma mudança nas normas de perfeita justiça de Jeová. Ele não estava com isso aprovando o estado pecaminoso deles. Uma vez que seus propósitos têm cumprimento absolutamente certo, Jeová "chama as coisas que não são como se fossem" (como chamar Abrão de "Abraão", que significa "Pai Duma Multidão", enquanto ele e Sara ainda não tinham filhos). (Ro 4:17) Sabendo que, no seu devido tempo (Gál 4:4), ele proveria um resgate, o meio legal para perdoar o pecado e remover a imperfeição (Is 53:11, 12; Mt 20:28; 1Pe 2:24), Jeová podia, de forma coerente, lidar com homens imperfeitos, herdeiros do pecado, e usá-los no Seu serviço. Isto se dava porque Ele possuía uma base justa para 'contá-los', ou considerá-los, como pessoas justas, devido à sua fé nas promessas de Jeová, e, por fim, no cumprimento destas promessas em Cristo Jesus como o perfeito sacrifício pelos pecados. (Tg 2:23; Ro 4:20-25) Assim, a provisão, feita por Jeová, do arranjo do resgate e de seus benefícios, fornece notável testemunho, não só do amor e da misericórdia de Jeová, mas também da sua fidelidade a suas elevadas normas de justiça, pois, por meio do arranjo do resgate, ele demonstra "sua própria justiça nesta época atual, para que fosse justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem [embora imperfeito] que tem fé em Jesus". — Ro 3:21-26; compare isso com Is 42:21; veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

Por que o 'Deus de paz' luta. A declaração de Jeová, no Éden, de que poria inimizade entre o descendente (ou semente) de seu Adversário e o descendente (ou semente) da "mulher" não fez com que deixasse de ser o 'Deus de paz'. (Gên 3:15; Ro 16:20; 1Co 14:33) A situação, naquela época, era a mesma que nos dias da vida terrestre do seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, que disse: "Não penseis que vim estabelecer paz na terra; vim estabelecer, não a paz, mas a espada." (Mt 10:32-40) O ministério de Jesus trouxe divisões, até mesmo no seio das famílias (Lu 12:51-53), mas isto se dava por causa da sua aderência aos justos padrões e à verdade de Deus, bem como sua proclamação deles. As divisões resultaram porque muitos endureceram o coração contra essas verdades, ao passo que outros as aceitaram. (Jo 8:40, 44-47; 15:22-25; 17:14) Isto era inevitável, se os princípios divinos haviam de ser sustentados; mas a culpa recaía sobre os que rejeitavam o que era correto.

Assim, também, predisse-se que surgiria inimizade, porque as normas perfeitas de Deus não permitiriam nenhuma tolerância do proceder rebelde do "descendente [ou: semente]" de Satanás. A desaprovação de tais rebeldes, por parte de Deus, e Sua bênção sobre aqueles que se apegassem a um proceder justo, teria um efeito divisório (Jo 15:18-21; Tg 4:4), assim como se deu no caso de Caim e Abel. — Gên 4:2-8; He 11:4; 1Jo 3:12; Ju 10, 11; veja CAIM, I.

O proceder rebelde escolhido por homens e por anjos iníquos constituía um desafio à legítima soberania de Jeová e à boa ordem de todo o Universo. Aceitar tal desafio exigiu que Jeová se tornasse "pessoa varonil de guerra" (Êx 15:3-7), defendendo seu próprio bom nome e suas normas justas, lutando em favor daqueles que o amam e servem e executando o julgamento naqueles que merecem a destruição. (1Sa 17:45; 2Cr 14:11; Is 30:27-31; 42:13) Ele não hesita em usar sua onipotência, às vezes de forma devastadora, como no Dilúvio, na destruição de Sodoma e Gomorra, e na libertação de Israel do Egito. (De 7:9, 10) E ele não receia tornar conhecidos quaisquer pormenores da sua guerra justa; não oferece desculpas, pois não tem nada de que se envergonhar. (Jó 34:10-15; 36:22-24; 37:23, 24; 40:1-8; Ro 3:4) O respeito que tem por seu próprio nome, e pela justiça que este representa, bem como seu amor por aqueles que o amam, compelem-no a agir. — Is 48:11; 57:21; 59:15-19; Re 16:5-7.

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs apresentam o mesmo quadro. O apóstolo Paulo incentivou os concristãos, dizendo: "O Deus que dá paz . . . esmagará em breve a Satanás debaixo dos vossos pés." (Ro 16:20; compare isso com Gên 3:15.) Ele também mostrou a justeza de Deus retribuir com tribulação aos que causam tribulação aos seus servos, trazendo a destruição eterna de tais opositores. (2Te 1:6-9) Isto estava em harmonia com os ensinos do Filho de Deus, que não deixou nenhuma margem de dúvida quanto à determinação intransigente de seu Pai de forçosamente acabar com toda a iniquidade e com os que a praticam. (Mt 13:30, 38-42; 21:42-44; 23:33; Lu 17:26-30; 19:27) O livro de Revelação está repleto de descrições de divinamente autorizadas ações de guerra. Tudo isto, porém, pela sabedoria de Jeová, em última análise, produz o estabelecimento de uma paz duradoura e universal, solidamente alicerçada na retidão e na justiça. — Is 9:6, 7; 2Pe 3:13.

Os tratos com o Israel carnal e o espiritual. De modo similar, grande parte das diferenças no conteúdo entre as Escrituras Hebraicas e as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs ocorre porque as primeiras lidam principalmente com os tratos de Jeová com o Israel carnal, ao passo que as últimas, em grande parte, levam à sua maneira de lidar com o Israel espiritual, a congregação cristã, e a retratam. Assim, por um lado, temos uma nação cujos milhões de membros o são exclusivamente em virtude da ascendência carnal, um conglomerado de bons e de maus. Por outro lado, temos uma nação espiritual constituída por pessoas atraídas a Deus por meio de Jesus Cristo, pessoas que mostram amor à verdade e ao que é direito, e que pessoal e voluntariamente se dedicam a fazer a vontade de Jeová. É lógico que os tratos e as relações de Deus com estes dois grupos difeririam e que o primeiro grupo provocaria mais expressões da ira e da severidade de Jeová do que o segundo grupo.

No entanto, seria um grave erro não notar a edificante e confortadora percepção da personalidade de Deus provida pelos Seus tratos com o Israel carnal. Estes oferecem primorosos exemplos que provam que Jeová é o tipo de Pessoa que ele mesmo descreveu a Moisés: "Jeová, Jeová, Deus misericordioso e clemente, vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência e em verdade, preservando a benevolência para com milhares, perdoando o erro, e a transgressão, e o pecado, mas de modo algum isentará da punição, trazendo punição pelo erro dos pais sobre os filhos e sobre os netos, sobre a terceira geração e sobre a quarta geração." — Êx 34:4-7; compare isso com Êx 20:5.

Embora equilibradas pela justiça, as facetas notáveis da personalidade de Jeová são na realidade seu amor, sua paciência e sua longanimidade, conforme reveladas na história de Israel, povo altamente favorecido o qual, na maioria, mostrou ser notavelmente "de dura cerviz" e de "coração duro" para com o Criador. (Êx 34:8, 9; Ne 9:16, 17; Je 7:21-26; Ez 3:7) As repetidas fortes denúncias e condenações de Israel por parte de Jeová, por meio dos seus profetas, só serviram para enfatizar a grandiosidade da Sua misericórdia e da espantosa amplidão da Sua longanimidade. Depois de suportá-los por mais de 1.500 anos, e mesmo depois de Seu próprio Filho ter sido morto às instigações dos líderes religiosos da nação, Jeová continuou a favorecê-los por mais três anos e meio, misericordiosamente providenciando que a pregação das boas novas se restringisse a eles, dando-lhes assim uma oportunidade adicional de obter o privilégio de reinar com Seu Filho — oportunidade aceita por milhares de arrependidos. — At 2:1-5, 14-41; 10:24-28, 34-48; veja SETENTA SEMANAS.

Jesus Cristo evidentemente se referiu à já citada declaração de Jeová, de 'trazer punição aos des-cendentes posteriores dos ofensores', quando disse aos escribas e fariseus hipócritas: "Dizeis: 'Se nós estivéssemos nos dias de nossos antepassados, não seríamos parceiros deles no sangue dos profetas.' Portanto dais testemunho contra vós mesmos de que sois filhos daqueles que assassinaram os profetas. Pois bem, enchei a medida de vossos antepassados." (Mt 23:29-32) Apesar de suas pretensões, tais pessoas demonstravam pelo seu proceder que aprovavam as ações erradas de seus antepassados, e provavam que elas mesmas continuavam entre 'os que odiavam a Jeová'. (Êx 20:5; Mt 23:33-36; Jo 15:23, 24) Assim, diferente dos judeus que se arrependeram e acataram as palavras do Filho de Deus, elas sofreram o efeito cumulativo do julgamento de Deus, anos depois, quando Jerusalém foi cercada e destruída, e a maior parte da sua população morreu. Poderiam ter escapado, mas preferiram não se valer da misericórdia de Jeová. — Lu 21:20-24; compare isso com Da 9:10, 13-15.

Sua personalidade é refletida no seu Filho. Em todos os sentidos, Jesus Cristo era um reflexo fiel da belíssima personalidade de seu Pai, Jeová Deus, em nome de quem ele veio. (Jo 1:18; Mt 21:9; Jo 12:12, 13; compare isso com Sal 118:26.) Jesus disse: "O Filho não pode fazer nem uma única coisa de sua própria iniciativa, mas somente o que ele observa o Pai fazer. Porque as coisas que Este faz, estas o Filho faz também da mesma maneira." (Jo 5:19) Segue-se, portanto, que a benignidade e a compaixão, a brandura e a cordialidade, bem como o forte amor à justiça e o ódio à iniquidade que Jesus demonstrava (He 1:8, 9), são todas qualidades que o Filho observara no seu Pai, Jeová Deus. — Compare Mt 9:35, 36, com Sal 23:1-6 e Is 40:10, 11; Mt 11:27-30 com Is 40:28-31 e 57:15, 16; Lu 15:11-24 com Sal 103:8-14; Lu 19:41-44 com Ez 18:31, 32; 33:11.

Todo aquele que ama a justiça e que lê as Escrituras inspiradas, e que verdadeiramente chega a "conhecer" com entendimento o pleno significado do nome de Jeová (Sal 9:9, 10; 91:14; Je 16:21), tem todo motivo, portanto, para amar e bendizer este nome (Sal 72:18-20; 119:132; He 6:10), para louvá-lo e exaltá-lo (Sal 7:17; Is 25:1; He 13:15), para temê-lo e santificá-lo (Ne 1:11; Mal 2:4-6; 3:16-18; Mt 6:9), para confiar nele (Sal 33:21; Pr 18:10), dizendo, junto com o salmista: "Vou cantar a Jeová durante a minha vida; vou entoar melodias ao meu Deus enquanto eu existir. Seja prazenteira a minha reflexão sobre ele. Eu, da minha parte, me alegrarei em Jeová. Dar-se-á cabo dos pecadores de cima da terra; e quanto aos iníquos, não mais existirão. Bendize a Jeová, ó minha alma. Louvai a Jah!" — Sal 104:33-35.

JEOVÁ, DIA DE. Veja DIA DE JEOVÁ.

JEOVÁ, O PRÓPRIO, ESTÁ ALI. Esta expressão traduz Yehwáh Shám·mah, aplicada à cidade observada pelo profeta Ezequiel na sua visão registrada nos capítulos 40 a 48. (Ez 48:35) A cidade da visão é retratada como quadrangular (cada lado de 4.500 côvados longos [2.331 m]) e com 12 portões, cada um com o nome de uma das tribos de Israel. (Ez 48:15, 16, 31-34) A cidade da visão na profecia de Ezequiel há de pertencer a "toda a casa de Israel". (Ez 45:6) O nome Jeová-Samá, ou "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali", indicaria uma presença representativa de Deus, como aquela expressa em outros textos, tais como Salmo 46:5; 132:13, 14; Isaías 24:23; Joel 3:21; e Zacarias 2:10, 11, onde Jeová, a quem nem 'o céu dos céus pode conter', é mencionado como que residindo numa cidade ou lugar terrestre. — 1Rs 8:27; veja também MAIORAL.

JEOVÁ DOS EXÉRCITOS. Esta expressão, encontrada com variações mais de 285 vezes nas Escrituras, traduz a hebraica Yeho·wáh tseva·'óhth. Os livros proféticos, especialmente Isaías, Jeremias e Zacarias, contêm a grande maioria destas ocorrências. Paulo e Tiago, citando essas profecias ou aludindo a elas, usaram o equivalente a essa expressão (transliterada para o grego) nos seus escritos. — Ro 9:29; Tg 5:4; compare isso com Is 1:9.

A palavra hebraica tsa·vá' (singular; plural: tseva·'óhth) significa basicamente um exército literal de soldados, ou de forças combatentes, como em Gênesis 21:22; Deuteronômio 20:9, e em muitos outros textos. Todavia, o termo é também usado em sentido figurado, como em "os céus, e a terra, e todo o seu exército", ou "o sol, e a lua, e as estrelas, todo o exército dos céus". (Gên 2:1; De 4:19) A forma plural (tseva·'óhth) é diversas vezes aplicada às forças israelitas, como em Êxodo 6:26; 7:4; Números 33:1; Salmos 44:9; 60:10. Alguns peritos acreditam que "exércitos", na expressão "Jeová dos exércitos", não só inclui as forças angélicas, mas também o exército israelita e os inanimados corpos celestes. Todavia, parece que os "exércitos" mencionados se referem primária, se não exclusivamente, às forças angélicas.

Quando Josué viu um visitante angélico perto de Jericó e lhe perguntou se estava a favor de Israel ou do lado inimigo, a resposta foi: "Não, mas eu — eu vim agora como príncipe do exército de Jeová." (Jos 5:13-15) O profeta Micaías disse aos reis Acabe e Jeosafá: "Deveras vejo a Jeová sentado no seu trono e todo o exército dos céus em pé junto a ele, à sua direita e à sua esquerda", referindo-se claramente aos filhos espirituais de Jeová. (1Rs 22:19-21) O uso do plural em "Jeová dos exércitos" é apropriado, visto que as forças angélicas não são descritas apenas em divisões de querubins, serafins e anjos (Is 6:2, 3; Gên 3:24; Re 5:11), mas também como constituindo grupos organizados, de modo que Jesus Cristo podia falar de ter "mais de doze legiões de anjos" à sua disposição. (Mt 26:53) Na súplica por ajuda dirigida a Jeová por Ezequias, este o chamou de "Jeová dos exércitos, Deus de Israel, sentado sobre os querubins", evidentemente aludindo à Arca do Pacto e às figuras de querubins na sua tampa, que simbolizavam o trono celestial de Jeová. (Is 37:16; compare isso com 1Sa 4:4; 2Sa 6:2.) O temeroso servo de Eliseu foi reconfortado por uma visão miraculosa, na qual ele viu os montes ao redor da cidade sitiada, em que Eliseu morava, 'cheios de cavalos e de carros de guerra, de fogo', como parte das hostes angélicas de Jeová. — 2Rs 6:15-17.

A expressão "Jeová dos exércitos" transmite assim o sentido de poder, do poder do Governante Soberano do Universo, que tem às suas ordens vastas forças de criaturas espirituais. (Sal 103:20, 21; 148:1, 2; Is 1:24; Je 32:17, 18) Inspira assim profundo respeito e espanto reverente, sendo ao mesmo tempo motivo de consolo e de encorajamento para os servos de Jeová. Davi, sozinho e sem a ajuda de alguma força militar terrestre, desafiou o gigantesco filisteu Golias em "nome de Jeová dos exércitos, o Deus das fileiras combatentes de Israel". (1Sa 17:45) Não somente em ocasiões de batalhas literais, mas também em outras situações provadoras ou ocasiões importantes, o povo de Deus como um todo e como indivíduos podia derivar coragem e esperança do reconhecimento da majestade da posição soberana de Jeová, refletida no seu controle sobre poderosas forças que servem desde as Suas cortes celestiais. (1Sa 1:9-11; 2Sa 6:18; 7:25-29) O uso da expressão "Jeová dos exércitos" pelos profetas dava ainda um motivo adicional aos que ouviam as profecias para ter certeza do cumprimento delas.

JEOVÁ É NOSSA JUSTIÇA. Esta expressão traduz as duas palavras Yehwáh Tsidh·qé·nu, encontradas em Jeremias 23:6 e 33:16.

Jeremias 23:5, 6, é uma profecia messiânica, descrevendo o futuro rei como brotando da linhagem de Davi para "executar o juízo e a justiça na terra". Visto que ele governa como representante de Deus (assim como Davi, e outros, sentado "no trono de Jeová", como rei ungido de Deus; 1Cr 29:23), a profecia diz: "Este é o nome pelo qual será chamado: Jeová É Nossa Justiça." Não há base para se afirmar, como alguns fizeram, que isto significa que Jesus, o Messias, e Jeová sejam uma só pessoa, constituindo um só Deus. Isto se pode ver no fato de que a profecia messiânica similar, em Jeremias 33:14-16, aplica a mesmíssima expressão a Jerusalém, dizendo: "E isto é o que ela será chamada: Jeová É Nossa Justiça." Em ambos os casos, a expressão mostra que o nome de Deus, Jeová, colocado tanto sobre o seu prometido rei como sobre a sua capital escolhida, é uma garantia da justiça destes. Além disso, o juízo e a justiça emanantes destas fontes, ou expressos por elas, são o produto da plena devoção a Jeová e à Sua vontade divina, resultando na bênção e na direção de Jeová.

JEOVÁ-JIRÉ [Jeová Cuidará [Disso]; Jeová Providenciará]. Lugar num dos montes da terra de Moriá, onde Abraão encontrou um carneiro preso numa moita e subsequentemente o ofereceu em lugar de Isaque. Abraão encarou este carneiro como provisão de Jeová e por isso chamou o lugar de Jeová-Jiré. A tradição antiga relaciona este sítio com o lugar do templo de Salomão. — Gên 22:2, 13, 14; veja MORIÁ.

JEOVÁ-NISSI. Nome do altar comemorativo erguido por Moisés depois da batalha bem-sucedida de Israel contra os amalequitas em Refidim. — Êx 17:8, 13-16.

O nome significa "Jeová É Meu Poste de Sinal", derivando nis·sí de nes (poste, ou haste, de sinal). Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega entenderam que nis·sí derivava de nus (fugir para ter refúgio), dando ao nome o significado "Jeová É Meu Refúgio". Já na Vulgata latina foi considerado como derivado de na·sás (içar; erguer), dando assim ao nome o significado "Jeová É Minha Exaltação". — Êx 17:15 n.

JEOVÁ-SALOM [Jeová É Paz]. Nome dado ao altar que Gideão construiu em Ofra, ao O do Jordão. Depois de ter visto o anjo de Jeová, Gideão temia que ia morrer. Mas, assegurou-se-lhe: "Paz seja contigo. Não temas. Não morrerás." Em gratidão, Gideão construiu o altar, evidentemente não para sacrifícios, mas como memorial para Jeová. — Jz 6:22-24.

JEOZABADE [provavelmente: Jeová Dotou].

1. Segundo dos oito filhos de Obede-Edom, incluído entre os porteiros do santuário. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 5, 13, 15.

2. Oficial benjamita encarregado de 180.000 homens do exército de Jeosafá. — 2Cr 17:17, 18.

3. Cúmplice na morte do Rei Jeoás de Judá. Jeozabade e Jozacar, servos de Jeoás, mataram o rei por ele ter assassinado Zacarias, o filho de Jeoiada. Eles mesmos foram mortos pelo filho e sucessor de Jeoás, Amazias. Jeozabade era filho de Somer e de uma moabita chamada Sinrite. — 2Rs 12:20, 21; 2Cr 24:20-22, 25-27; 25:1, 3.

JEOZADAQUE [provavelmente: Jeová Declara Justo], JOZADAQUE [forma abreviada de Jeozadaque]. A forma abreviada é usada em Neemias, a mais longa, em outros textos.

Pai do sumo sacerdote Jesua (ou Josué). (Esd 3:2; Ag 1:12; Za 6:11) Jeozadaque foi levado ao exílio depois de Nabucodonosor ter matado o pai dele, Seraías, o sacerdote principal, e assim se preservou a linhagem sumo sacerdotal por meio dele. — 1Cr 6:14, 15; 2Rs 25:18-21; Ne 12:26.

JERÁ [Mês Lunar]. "Filho" de Joctã, cujos descendentes talvez se fixassem em algum lugar no S da Arábia. — Gên 10:26-29; 1Cr 1:20; veja JOCTÃ.

JERAMEEL [Que Deus Tenha Misericórdia; Deus Teve Misericórdia].

1. Primogênito de Esrom, neto de Judá. A linhagem real e messiânica passava pelo irmão de Jerameel, Rão (evidentemente também chamado Arni). Fornece-se uma extensa genealogia referente aos descendentes de Jerameel, alguns dos quais moravam na parte meridional de Judá. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9-15, 25-42; 1Sa 27:10; Lu 3:33.

2. Filho ou descendente dum levita merarita chamado Quis. — 1Cr 24:26, 29; 23:21.

3. Um dos três homens enviados pelo Rei Jeoiaquim, no seu quinto ano, para prender Jeremias e Baruque. No entanto, eles voltaram de mãos vazias, porque Jeová mantivera seus servos fiéis escondidos. — Je 36:9, 26.

Visto que Joaquim, sucessor e presumível primogênito de Jeoiaquim, tinha apenas uns 12 anos de idade no quinto ano do governo do seu pai, outros filhos de Jeoiaquim provavelmente eram ainda mais jovens, novos demais para serem enviados numa missão tal como a de Jerameel. (2Rs 23:36; 24:6, 8) Portanto, ser Jerameel chamado de "filho do rei" talvez signifique, não que fosse descendente do rei, mas que era membro da casa real ou oficial de ascendência real.

Interessante é a descoberta da impressão de um selo, supostamente do sétimo século AEC, que reza: "Pertencente a Jerameel, o filho do rei." — Israel Exploration Journal (Revista de Explorações de Israel), Jerusalém, 1978, Vol. 28, p. 53.

JERAMEELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jerameel]. Os descendentes de Judá através de Jerameel, filho de Esrom. (1Cr 2:4, 9, 25-27, 33, 42) Os jerameelitas moravam na parte meridional de Judá, evidentemente na mesma região geral que os amalequitas, gesuritas e girzitas, contra os quais Davi fez incursões enquanto morava entre os filisteus como fugitivo diante do Rei Saul. Ao retornar de tais incursões, Davi costumava relatar ambiguamente que elas tinham sido feitas "no sul de Judá e no sul dos jerameelitas, e no sul dos queneus". Aquis, rei filisteu, portanto, presumia que Davi havia atacado os israelitas, tornando-se assim mau cheiro para os patrícios dele e aumentando seu valor para Aquis. (1Sa 27:7-12) Na realidade, Davi, mais tarde, compartilhou os despojos de guerra com os anciãos "nas cidades dos jerameelitas". — 1Sa 30:26, 29.

JEREDE. Descendente de Judá e pai de Gedor ou dos que estabeleceram a cidade de Gedor. — 1Cr 4:1, 18; veja ATROTE-BETE-JOABE.

JEREMAI [forma abreviada de Jeremote ou de Jeremias]. Israelita pós-exílico, um dos sete filhos ou descendentes de Hasum, que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas as despediram. — Esd 10:25, 33, 44.

JEREMIAS [possivelmente: Jeová Exalta; ou: Jeová Solta [provavelmente da madre]].

1. Benjamita que se juntou a Davi quando este se encontrava em Ziclague. Era um dos poderosos de Davi. — 1Cr 12:1-4.

2. Um dos filhos de Gade que se ajuntaram a Davi "no lugar de difícil acesso, no ermo", quando Davi era refugiado diante de Saul. Ele era o quinto dentre estes "homens poderosos, valentes . . . cujas faces eram faces de leões, e eles eram iguais às gazelas nos montes em velocidade". Dizia-se a respeito destes cabeças gaditas do exército de Davi: "O mínimo era igual a cem e o maior igual a mil." Eles "atravessaram o Jordão no primeiro mês quando transbordava por todas as suas ribanceiras, e então puseram em fuga todos os das baixadas ao leste e ao oeste". — 1Cr 12:8-15.

3. Décimo dos cabeças gaditas no exército de Davi, conforme descritos no N.° 2. — 1Cr 12:13, 14.

5. Homem da cidade de Libna, uma cidade sacerdotal. Era pai de Hamutal, esposa do Rei Josias, a qual era mãe dos reis Jeoacaz e Zedequias (Matanias). — 2Rs 23:30, 31; 24:18; Je 52:1; Jos 21:13; 1Cr 6:57.

6. Profeta, filho de Hilquias, sacerdote de Anatote, cidade de sacerdotes situada no território de Benjamim a menos de 5 km ao NNE do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. (Je 1:1; Jos 21:13, 17, 18) O pai de Jeremias, Hilquias, não era o sumo sacerdote que levava este nome, da linhagem de Eleazar. O pai de Jeremias provavelmente era da linhagem de Itamar e possivelmente descendeu de Abiatar, o sacerdote que o Rei Salomão despediu do serviço sacerdotal. — 1Rs 2:26, 27.

Comissionado Como Profeta. Jeremias foi chamado para ser profeta quando era rapaz, em 647 AEC, no 13.º ano do reinado do Rei Josias, de Judá (659-629 AEC). Jeová lhe disse: "Antes de formar-te no ventre, eu te conheci, e antes de saíres da madre, eu te santifiquei. Eu te constituí profeta para as nações." (Je 1:2-5) Assim sendo, era um dos poucos homens por cujo nascimento Jeová assumiu a responsabilidade — intervindo por meio dum milagre ou por uma providência orientadora — para que fossem seus servos especiais. Entre tais homens acham-se Isaque, Sansão, Samuel, João, o Batizador, e Jesus. — Veja PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO.

Quando Jeová lhe falou, Jeremias mostrou acanhamento. Replicou a Deus: "Ai! Soberano Senhor Jeová! Eis que realmente nem sei falar, pois sou apenas rapaz." (Je 1:6) Pode-se depreender, à base desta observação dele, e por se compará-la com a intrepidez e a firmeza dele durante seu ministério profético, que tal vigor incomum não era algo inerente a Jeremias, mas deveras provinha de ele se estribar plenamente em Jeová. Deveras, Jeová estava com ele, "como um poderoso terrível", e foi Jeová quem fez de Jeremias "uma cidade fortificada, e uma coluna de ferro, e muralhas de cobre contra toda a terra". (Je 20:11; 1:18, 19) A reputação de coragem e intrepidez de Jeremias era tamanha que, durante o ministério terrestre de Jesus, alguns julgavam ser ele o Jeremias redivivo. — Mt 16:13, 14.

Escritos. Jeremias era pesquisador e historiador, além de profeta. Escreveu o livro que leva seu nome e também se credita a ele, em geral, a escrita dos livros de Primeiro e Segundo Reis, abrangendo a história de ambos os reinos (Judá e Israel) desde o ponto em que os livros de Samuel a deixaram (isto é, na última parte do reinado de Davi sobre todo o Israel), até o fim de ambos os reinos. Sua cronologia do período dos reis, pelo método de comparação ou de confronto dos reinados dos reis de Israel e de Judá, ajuda-nos a estabelecer com exatidão as datas de certos eventos. Após a queda de Jerusalém, Jeremias escreveu o livro de Lamentações.

Forte Mensagem Denunciativa. Jeremias não era queixoso crônico. Antes, mostrava ser amoroso, atencioso e compassivo. Exercia um excelente domínio e uma maravilhosa perseverança, e ficou muito triste com a conduta do seu povo e com os julgamentos que este sofreu. — Je 8:21.

Na realidade, era Jeová quem se queixava de Judá, e justificadamente, e Jeremias tinha a obrigação de declarar isto de forma incessante, o que ele fez. Também, deve-se ter presente que Israel era a nação de Deus, vinculada a Ele por meio dum pacto e sujeita à sua Lei, o que eles violavam crassamente. Como base e sólido fundamento para as denúncias de Jeremias, Jeová repetidas vezes apontava para a Lei, trazendo à atenção a responsabilidade dos príncipes e do povo, e relembrando em que haviam violado a Lei. Vez após vez, Jeová trouxe à atenção as coisas que Ele, por meio de Moisés, seu profeta, avisara que lhes sobreviriam se recusassem escutar Suas palavras e violassem Seu pacto. — Le 26; De 28.

Coragem, Perseverança, Amor. A coragem e a perseverança de Jeremias eram igualadas pelo amor que ele sentia por seu povo. Cabia-lhe proclamar pungentes denúncias e temíveis julgamentos, em especial aos sacerdotes, aos profetas e aos governantes, e àqueles que seguiam o "proceder popular" e tinham cultivado "infidelidade duradoura". (Je 8:5, 6) Todavia, ele reconhecia que sua comissão era também de 'construir e plantar'. (Je 1:10) Chorou diante da calamidade que sobreviria a Jerusalém. (Je 8:21, 22; 9:1) O livro de Lamentações constitui evidência do seu amor e da sua preocupação com o nome e o povo de Jeová. Apesar das traiçoeiras medidas tomadas pelo covarde e vacilante Rei Zedequias para com ele, Jeremias suplicou-lhe que obedecesse à voz de Jeová e continuasse a viver. (Je 38:4, 5, 19-23) Ademais, Jeremias não se julgava justo aos seus próprios olhos, mas incluía a si mesmo ao admitir a iniquidade daquela nação. (Je 14:20, 21) Depois de liberto por Nebuzaradã, hesitou em abandonar aqueles que estavam sendo levados para o exílio babilônico, talvez achando que devia compartilhar a sorte deles, ou desejando continuar servindo aos interesses espirituais deles. — Je 40:5.

Por vezes, em sua longa carreira, Jeremias ficou desanimado e necessitou a confirmação do apoio de Jeová, mas, mesmo em adversidade, não deixou de invocar a Jeová, pedindo-lhe ajuda. — Je 20.

Associações. Em todos os seus mais de 40 anos de serviço profético, Jeremias não foi aban-donado. Jeová estava com ele para livrá-lo dos seus inimigos. (Je 1:19) Jeremias deleitava-se com a palavra de Jeová. (Je 15:16) Evitava associar-se com aqueles que não tinham nenhuma consideração para com Deus. (Je 15:17) Encontrou bons companheiros, a saber, os recabitas, Ebede-Meleque e Baruque, entre os quais pôde fazer a obra de 'edificar'. (Je 1:10) Por meio destes amigos, foi ajudado e livrado da morte, e mais de uma vez se manifestou o poder de Jeová em protegê-lo. — Je 26:7-24; 35:1-19; 36:19-26; 38:7-13; 39:11-14; 40:1-5.

Ilustrações Dramáticas. Jeremias encenou para Jerusalém vários pequenos dramas como símbolos da condição dela e da calamidade que lhe sobreviria. Houve a visita à casa do oleiro (Je 18:1-11) e o incidente com o cinto estragado. (Je 13:1-11) Ordenou-se a Jeremias que não se casasse; isto servia de aviso das "mortes por enfermidades", das crianças que nascessem naqueles últimos dias de Jerusalém. (Je 16:1-4) Ele quebrou uma botija diante dos anciãos de Jerusalém, qual símbolo do impendente destroçamento da cidade. (Je 19:1, 2, 10, 11) Comprou de volta um campo de Hanamel, filho de seu tio paterno, como figura da restauração que viria depois do exílio de 70 anos, quando se comprariam novamente campos em Judá. (Je 32:8-15, 44) Lá em Tafnes, no Egito, ele ocultou grandes pedras no terraço de tijolos da casa de Faraó, profetizando que Nabucodonosor fixaria seu trono sobre aquele exato ponto. — Je 43:8-10.

Verdadeiro Profeta. Jeremias foi reconhecido por Daniel como verdadeiro profeta de Deus, sendo que Daniel, pelo estudo das palavras de Jeremias a respeito do exílio de 70 anos, pôde fortalecer e encorajar os judeus a respeito da proximidade da sua libertação. (Da 9:1, 2; Je 29:10) Esdras trouxe à atenção o cumprimento das palavras dele. (Esd 1:1; veja também 2 Cr 36:20, 21.) O apóstolo Mateus apontou para o cumprimento de uma das profecias de Jeremias nos dias em que Jesus era criancinha. (Mt 2:17, 18; Je 31:15) O apóstolo Paulo mencionou os profetas, entre os quais se achava Jeremias, cujos escritos citou, em Hebreus 8:8-12. (Je 31:31-34) A respeito destes homens, o mesmo escritor disse que "o mundo não era digno deles", e que 'receberam testemunho por intermédio de sua fé'. — He 11:32, 38, 39.

7. Filho de Habazinias e pai de Jaazanias; este último sendo um líder dos recabitas. O profeta Jeremias ofereceu vinho para testar a integridade dos recabitas, mas eles se recusaram a beber.— Je 35:1-10, 19.

8. Sacerdote (ou representante da casa sacerdotal deste nome) que em 537 AEC retornou do exílio babilônico junto com o governador Zorobabel e o sumo sacerdote Jesua. — Ne 12:1.

9. Sacerdote (ou representante da casa sacerdotal deste nome) dentre os que atestaram com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado perante Jeová por Neemias e os príncipes, sacerdotes e levitas, de andar na lei de Deus. Se o nome representar antes uma casa do que uma pessoa, pode tratar-se do N.º 8. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 2, 29.

10. Aquele que foi designado por Neemias para caminhar em cortejo sobre a reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém em sua inauguração. (Talvez este seja o mesmo sacerdote mencionado em Neemias 10:2.) Eles seguiram o coro que passou à direita pelo Portão dos Montes de Cinzas em direção ao Portão das Águas, encontrando-se por fim com o outro coro no templo. (Ne 12:31-37) Nos dias de Joiaquim, o cabeça da casa paterna de Jeremias era Hananias. (Ne 12:12) Se o nome Jeremias representar aqui uma casa e não uma pessoa, talvez se trate do N.º 8.

JEREMIAS, LIVRO DE. Profecias e registro histórico escritos por Jeremias às ordens de Jeová. Jeremias foi comissionado como profeta no 13.º ano do Rei Josias (647 AEC), para avisar o reino meridional de Judá da sua impendente destruição. Isto se deu menos de um século depois da atividade do profeta Isaías, e da queda de Israel, o reino setentrional, diante dos assírios.

Disposição. O livro não é disposto em ordem cronológica, mas, antes, segundo assuntos. Quando necessário, apresentam-se informações que indicam datas, mas a maioria das profecias é aplicável à nação de Judá durante todo o período geral dos reinados de Josias, Jeoacaz, Jeoiaquim, Joaquim e Zedequias. Deus disse repetidas vezes a Jeremias que aquela nação era incorrigivelmente iníqua, irreformável. Todavia, as pessoas de coração reto tiveram plena oportunidade de transformar-se e de obter libertação. Quanto a ser profético para os nossos dias, a disposição seguida não influi no entendimento e na aplicação dos escritos de Jeremias.

Quando Foi Escrito. Na maior parte, o livro de Jeremias não foi escrito na ocasião em que ele declarou as profecias. Antes, Jeremias evidentemente só assentou por escrito as suas proclamações quando recebeu ordens de Jeová, no quarto ano do Rei Jeoiaquim (625 AEC), para ditar todas as palavras que lhe haviam sido dadas por Jeová até aquela data. Estas incluíam não só as palavras proferidas sobre Judá, no tempo de Josias, mas também proclamações de julgamento sobre todas as nações. (Je 36:1, 2) O rolo resultante foi queimado por Jeoiaquim quando Jeudi o leu para ele. Mas Jeremias recebeu ordens de escrevê-lo de novo, o que fez mediante seu secretário, Baruque, com muitas palavras adicionais. — 36:21-23, 28, 32.

O restante do livro foi, evidentemente, acrescentado mais tarde, inclusive a introdução, que menciona o 11.º ano de Zedequias (Je 1:3), outras profecias que Jeremias assentou por escrito na ocasião em que deveria proferi-las (30:2; 51:60), e a carta aos exilados em Babilônia (29:1). Adicionalmente, as proclamações proferidas no reinado de Zedequias e os relatos dos eventos depois da queda de Jerusalém, até cerca de 580 AEC, foram acrescentados mais tarde. Talvez tenha acontecido que, embora o rolo escrito por Baruque fosse a base de grande parte do livro, Jeremias, depois disso, o editou e rearranjou ao adicionar seções posteriores.

Autenticidade. A autenticidade de Jeremias é geralmente aceita. Apenas alguns críticos a têm questionado, à base das diferenças entre o texto massorético hebraico e a Septuaginta grega, conforme consta no Manuscrito Alexandrino. Há mais variações entre os textos hebraico e grego do livro de Jeremias do que em qualquer outro livro das Escrituras Hebraicas. Diz-se que a Septuaginta grega tem cerca de 2.700 palavras, ou um oitavo do livro, menos do que o texto hebraico. A maioria dos peritos concorda que a tradução grega deste livro é deficiente, mas isto não reduz a fidedignidade do texto hebraico. Tem-se sugerido que o tradutor talvez usasse um manuscrito hebraico de "família" diferente, uma recensão especial, mas o estudo crítico revela que, pelo que parece, não foi assim.

O cumprimento das profecias registradas por Jeremias, junto com seu conteúdo, atestam fortemente a autenticidade do livro. Entre as numerosas profecias de Jeremias estão as alistadas na tabela na página 59.

Princípios e Qualidades de Deus. Além dos cumprimentos que alistamos, o livro delineia muitos princípios que deviam orientar-nos. Destaca que o formalismo não tem valor algum aos olhos de Deus, mas que Ele deseja adoração e obediência de coração. Diz-se aos habitantes de Judá que não confiem no templo e nos prédios que o cercam, e eles são admoestados: "Fazei-vos circuncidar para Jeová e tirai os prepúcios de vossos corações." — Je 4:4; 7:3-7; 9:25, 26.

DESTAQUES DE JEREMIAS

Registro das proclamações de julgamento por Jeová feitas mediante Jeremias, bem como um relato do que o próprio profeta passou e da destruição de Jerusalém por Babilônia.

A escrita foi iniciada uns 18 anos antes da queda de Jerusalém, e foi completada cerca de 27 anos depois deste evento.

O jovem Jeremias é comissionado como profeta.

Ele tanto terá de 'derrubar', como de 'construir' e 'plantar'.

Jeová o fortalecerá para a comissão. (1:1-19)

Jeremias cumpre a sua comissão de 'derrubar'.

Ele expõe a iniquidade de Judá e proclama a certeza da destruição de Jerusalém; a presença do templo não salvará a nação infiel; o povo de Deus será exilado por 70 anos em Babilônia. (2:1–3:13; 3:19–16:13; 17:1–19:15; 24:1–25:38; 29:1-32; 34:1-22)

Anunciam-se julgamentos contra Zedequias e Jeoiaquim, bem como contra os falsos profetas, os pastores infiéis e os sacerdotes sem fé. (21:1–23:2; 23:9-40; 27:1–28:17)

Jeová prediz derrotas humilhantes de muitas nações, inclusive dos babilônios. (46:1–51:64)

Jeremias cumpre sua tarefa de 'construir' e de 'plantar'.

Ele indica o restabelecimento dum restante israelita e que será suscitado um "renovo justo". (3:14-18; 16:14-21; 23:3-8; 30:1–31:26; 33:1-26)

Anuncia também que Jeová concluirá um novo pacto com o seu povo. (31:27-40)

Às ordens de Jeová, Jeremias compra um campo, a fim de ilustrar a certeza de que Israel retornará do exílio. (32:1-44)

Assegura aos recabitas que eles sobreviverão por terem obedecido ao seu antepassado Jonadabe; a obediência deles expõe a desobediência de Israel a Jeová. (35:1-19)

Repreende a Baruque e o fortalece com a certeza de sua sobrevivência à vindoura calamidade. (45:1-5)

Jeremias sofre por profetizar destemidamente.

É golpeado e posto no tronco onde passa a noite. (20:1-18)

Arma-se uma trama para matá-lo por ter proclamado a destruição de Jerusalém, mas os príncipes o libertam. (26:1-24)

O rei queima o rolo de Jeremias; Jeremias é falsamente acusado de desertar para os babilônios, e é preso e encarcerado. (36:1–37:21)

Por fim, ele é posto numa cisterna lamacenta para ali morrer; Ebede-Meleque o resgata e recebe a promessa de proteção durante a vindoura destruição de Jerusalém. (38:1-28; 39:15-18)

Os eventos desde a queda de Jerusalém até a fuga para o Egito.

Jerusalém cai; o Rei Zedequias é capturado, seus filhos são mortos, e ele é cegado e levado a Babilônia. (52:1-11)

O templo e as casas grandes de Jerusalém são incendiados, e a maioria do povo é levada ao exílio. (39:1-14; 52:12-34)

Gedalias é designado governador sobre os poucos israelitas remanescentes, mas é assassinado. (40:1–41:9)

O povo, temeroso, foge para o Egito; Jeremias adverte que o próprio Egito cairá e lhes sobrevirá a calamidade naquele país. (41:10–44:30)

PROFECIAS REGISTRADAS POR JEREMIAS

As Que Ele Viu Cumprir-se

O cativeiro de Zedequias e a destruição de Jerusalém por Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia. (Je 20:3-6; 21:3-10; 39:6-9)

O destronamento e a morte no cativeiro do Rei Salum (Jeoacaz). (Je 22:11, 12; 2Rs 23:30-34; 2Cr 36:1-4)

O Rei Conias (Joaquim) levado cativo a Babilônia. (Je 22:24-27; 2Rs 24:15, 16)

A morte, dentro de um ano, do falso profeta Hananias. (Je 28:16, 17)

Alguns dos recabitas e Ebede-Meleque, o etíope, sobreviverem à destruição de Jerusalém. (Je 35:19; 39:15-18)

Outras Cujo Cumprimento a História Registra

O Egito invadido, conquistado por Nabucodorosor (Nabucodonosor). (Je 43:8-13; 46:13-26)

O retorno dos judeus e a reconstrução do templo e da cidade depois de 70 anos de desolação. (Je 24:1-7; 25:11, 12; 29:10; 30:11, 18, 19; compare isso com 2Cr 36:20, 21; Esd 1:1; Da 9:2.)

Amom devastado. (Je 49:2)

Edom decepado como nação. (Je 49:17, 18) (Com a morte dos Herodes, Edom ficou extinta como nação.)

Babilônia tornar-se uma desolação permanente. (Je 25:12-14; 50:35, 38-40)

As Que Têm Significativo Cumprimento Espiritual, Como Indicado nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs

Feito um novo pacto com a casa de Israel e a casa de Judá. (Je 31:31-34; He 8:8-13)

Não faltará à casa de Davi um homem no trono do reino para sempre. (Je 33:17-21; Lu 1:32, 33)

A queda de Babilônia, a Grande, é uma ampliação e uma aplicação simbólica das palavras de Jeremias contra a antiga Babilônia, conforme mostram as seguintes comparações: Je 50:2 — Re 14:8; Je 50:8; 51:6, 45 — Re 18:4; Je 50:15, 29 — Re 18:6, 7; Je 50:23 — Re 18:8, 15-17; Je 50:38 — Re 16:12; Je 50:39, 40; 51:37 — Re 18:2; Je 51:8 — Re 18:8-10, 15, 19; Je 51:9, 49, 56 — Re 18:5; Je 51:12 — Re 17:16, 17; Je 51:13 — Re 17:1, 15; Je 51:48 — Re 18:20; Je 51:55 — Re 18:22, 23; Je 51:63, 64 — Re 18:21.

O livro fornece muitas ilustrações que revelam as qualidades de Deus e seus tratos com o seu povo. A grande benevolência e misericórdia de Jeová são exemplificadas na libertação de um restante do seu povo e em finalmente restaurá-lo a Jerusalém, segundo profetizado por Jeremias. O apreço e a consideração de Deus com aqueles que mostram benignidade para com seus servos, e ser Ele o Recompensador daqueles que o buscam e lhe mostram obediência, são destacados em Seu cuidado para com os recabitas, para com Ebede-Meleque e para com Baruque. — Je 35:18, 19; 39:16-18; 45:1-5.

Jeová é brilhantemente representado como o Criador de todas as coisas, o Rei por tempo indefinido, o único Deus verdadeiro. Ele é o único a ser temido, Aquele que corrige e dirige os que invocam o Seu nome, e aquele cuja denúncia nenhuma nação pode aguentar. Ele é o grande Oleiro, em cuja mão as pessoas e as nações são como barro de oleiro, para serem trabalhadas ou destruídas a seu bel-prazer. — Je 10; 18:1-10; Ro 9:19-24.

O livro de Jeremias revela que Deus espera que o povo que leva Seu nome seja uma glória e um louvor para Ele, e que Ele o considera achegado a si. (Je 13:11) Os que profetizam falsamente em Seu nome, dizendo "paz" àqueles com quem Deus não está em paz, têm de prestar contas a Deus por suas palavras, e tropeçarão e cairão. (Je 6:13-15; 8:10-12; 23:16-20) Os que estão diante do povo como sacerdotes e profetas têm grande responsabilidade perante Deus, pois, conforme ele disse aos em Judá: "Não enviei os profetas, no entanto, eles mesmos correram. Não falei com eles, no entanto, eles mesmos profetizaram. Mas, se tivessem estado de pé no meu grupo íntimo, então teriam feito meu povo ouvir as minhas próprias palavras, e teriam feito que recuassem do seu mau caminho e da ruindade das suas ações." — 23:21, 22.

Como em outros livros da Bíblia, a relação da nação santa de Deus com Ele é considerada como a de esposa, e a infidelidade a Ele é "prostituição". (Je 3:1-3, 6-10; compare isso com Tg 4:4.) A lealdade do próprio Jeová a seus pactos, porém, é inquebrantável. — Je 31:37; 33:20-22, 25, 26.

Muitos são os excelentes princípios e ilustrações do livro, aos quais os outros escritores da Bíblia recorreram como referência. E muitos outros padrões pictóricos e proféticos são encontrados, que têm aplicação e significado vital para o cristão hodierno e seu ministério.

JEREMOTE [duma raiz que significa "ser alto (exaltado)"].

1. Descendente de Benjamim através de seu filho Bequer. — 1Cr 7:6, 8.

2. Cabeça de família benjamita que morava em Jerusalém; um dos "filhos" de Berias. — 1Cr 8:14-16, 28.

3. Filho de Musi e neto de Merari, na tribo de Levi. A casa paterna fundada por esta pessoa, cujo nome também é grafado "Jerimote", foi incluída no novo arranjo da organização levítica de serviço feito por Davi. — 1Cr 23:21, 23; 24:30, 31.

4. Filho de Hemã, no ramo levítico dos coatitas. Durante o reinado de Davi, Jeremote (Jerimote) foi escolhido por sortes para encabeçar a 15.ª das 24 turmas de músicos do santuário. — 1Cr 6:33; 25:1, 4, 8, 9, 22.

5, 6, 7. Três israelitas, respectivamente filhos de Elão, de Zatu e de Bani, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e seus filhos, nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25-27, 29, 44.

JERIAS [Que Jeová Veja; Jeová Viu]. Filho ou descendente de Hébron, filho de Coate. (1Cr 23:12, 19) Jerias, ou sua casa paterna, é mencionado em relação com a organização dos levitas por Davi (1Cr 24:23, 30, 31), e, na qualidade de designado sobre o território ao L do Jordão, é chamado de cabeça dos hebronitas. Neste caso, seu nome é grafado "Jerijá". — 1Cr 26:31, 32.

JERIBAI [Que Ele Contenda; Ele Pleiteou [Nossa] Causa]. Um dos poderosos de Davi; filho de Elnaão. — 1Cr 11:26, 46.

JERICÓ [possivelmente: Cidade da Lua]. A primeira cidade cananeia ao O do Jordão a ser conquistada pelos israelitas. (Núm 22:1; Jos 6:1, 24, 25) É identificada com Tell es-Sultan (Tel Yeriho) a uns 22 km ao ENE de Jerusalém. A vizinha Tulul Abu el-ʽAlayiq é considerada o lugar da Jericó do primeiro século. Situada a uns 250 m abaixo do nível do mar, no vale do Jordão, Jericó tem clima subtropical. Atualmente, cultivam-se nesta região laranja, banana e figo, e, como antigamente, ainda vicejam ali palmeiras.

Primícias da Conquista de Israel. No fim da sua peregrinação de 40 anos pelo ermo, os israelitas chegaram às planícies de Moabe. Ali, defronte de Jericó, Moisés subiu ao monte Nebo e contemplou a Terra da Promessa, inclusive Jericó, "a cidade das palmeiras", e sua planície. — Núm 36:13; De 32:49; 34:1-3.

Após a morte de Moisés, Josué enviou dois espias a Jericó. Ocultados por Raabe, evitaram ser descobertos, e, depois, escaparam da cidade por meio duma corda através da janela da casa dela, situada no alto da muralha de Jericó. Por três dias, os dois homens se esconderam na região montanhosa vizinha, após o que atravessaram a vau o Jordão e voltaram ao acampamento israelita. — Jos 2:1-23.

Grande deve ter sido o temor sentido pelo rei de Jericó e pelos habitantes dela, ao ouvirem falar, ou presenciarem, o miraculoso represamento do Jordão em enchente, habilitando os israelitas a atravessar o rio a pé enxuto. Depois disso, embora os varões israelitas fossem circuncidados e tivessem de se recuperar dos efeitos disto antes de ficarem em boas condições para se defenderem, ninguém ousou atacá-los em Gilgal. Sem serem perturbados, os israelitas também observaram a Páscoa na planície desértica de Jericó. — Jos 5:1-10.

Mais tarde, perto de Jericó, apareceu a Josué um príncipe angélico e esboçou a tática que deviam empregar para tomar a cidade, que estava então rigorosamente fechada por causa dos israelitas. Obedientemente, uma vez por dia, durante seis dias, a força militar israelita saiu, seguida por sete sacerdotes que tocavam continuamente suas buzinas, atrás dos quais seguiam os sacerdotes que transportavam a Arca, e, por fim, a retaguarda — todos marchando ao redor de Jericó. Mas, no sétimo dia, marcharam sete vezes em volta da cidade. Ao serem tocadas as buzinas, na marcha final em torno de Jericó, o povo soltou um grande grito de guerra, e os muros da cidade passaram a cair rente ao solo. — Jos 5:13–6:20.

Os israelitas invadiram então Jericó, devotando à destruição os habitantes e todos os animais domésticos. Mas, por causa da bondade demonstrada por Raabe ao ocultar os espias, ela e seus parentes, seguros na casa dela, no alto da parte da muralha que não caíra, foram preservados vivos. A cidade toda foi incendiada, mas o ouro e a prata foram entregues ao santuário de Jeová. (Jos 6:20-25) No entanto, um israelita, Acã, roubou uma barra de ouro, alguma prata e um manto de excelente qualidade, e então ocultou esses objetos sob a sua tenda. Com isso trouxe a morte sobre si e sobre toda a sua família. — Jos 7:20-26.

Referências Históricas Posteriores. A cidade destruída de Jericó subsequentemente tornou-se parte do território de Benjamim, fronteiriço ao de Efraim e de Manassés. (Jos 16:1, 7; 18:12, 21) Não muito depois disso, pelo que parece, surgiu ali algum tipo de povoado. Este foi capturado pelo Rei Eglom, de Moabe, e permaneceu sob seu controle durante 18 anos. (Jz 3:12-30) Na época do Rei Davi, ainda existia um povoado em Jericó. (2Sa 10:5; 1Cr 19:5) Mas foi só no reinado de Acabe que Hiel, o betelita, realmente reconstruiu Jericó. A maldição profética proferida por Josué, mais de 500 anos antes, foi então cumprida, perdendo Hiel seu primogênito, Abirão, quando lançou o alicerce, e Segube, seu filho mais moço, quando colocou as portas. — Jos 6:26; 1Rs 16:34.

No decorrer deste mesmo período geral, alguns dos "filhos dos profetas" moravam em Jericó. (2Rs 2:4, 5) Depois que Jeová levou num vendaval o profeta Elias, Eliseu permaneceu em Jericó por algum tempo e curou o suprimento de água dessa cidade. (2Rs 2:11-15, 19-22) A água de ʽAin es-Sultan (tradicionalmente a fonte que Eliseu curou) tem sido descrita como doce e agradável, e irriga os jardins da atual Jericó.

No tempo do iníquo Rei Acaz, de Judá, Jeová permitiu que os exércitos israelitas, sob o Rei Peca, infligissem uma humilhante derrota à infiel Judá, matando 120.000 e levando 200.000 cativos. Mas Odede, profeta de Jeová, foi ao encontro dos vencedores e advertiu-os de não escravizarem os cativos. Por conseguinte, os cativos, depois de vestidos e alimentados, foram levados a Jericó e libertados. — 2Cr 28:6-15.

Após a queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, o Rei Zedequias fugiu na direção de Jericó, mas foi alcançado e capturado pelos babilônios nas planícies desérticas de Jericó. (2Rs 25:5; Je 39:5; 52:8) Após a libertação do exílio babilônico, 345 "filhos de Jericó" achavam-se entre os que voltaram com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, e, pelo que parece, fixaram-se em Jericó. (Esd 2:1, 2, 34; Ne 7:36) Mais tarde, alguns dos homens de Jericó ajudaram a reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:2.

No ano 33 EC, Jericó figurou no ministério de Jesus quando ele estava a caminho de Jerusalém para a Páscoa. Perto desta cidade, Jesus Cristo curou a vista do cego Bartimeu e de seu companheiro. (Mr 10:46; Mt 20:29; Lu 18:35; veja BARTIMEU.) Em Jericó, Jesus também conheceu Zaqueu, e, depois, foi convidado à casa dele. (Lu 19:1-7) Anteriormente, na Judeia, quando apresentou sua ilustração sobre o prestimoso samaritano, Jesus fez alusão à estrada que ia de Jerusalém a Jericó. (Lu 10:30) Esta estrada, segundo antigo testemunho histórico, era frequentada por assaltantes.

Escavação de muralhas da antiga Jericó.

Encontraram os arqueólogos evidência da destruição de Jericó nos dias de Josué?

O Professor John Garstang, chefe duma expedição inglesa em Tell es-Sultan, entre 1929 e 1936, constatou que o que ele considerava ser uma das cidades construídas nesse lugar fora submetida a intensos incêndios e que suas muralhas tinham caído. Ele identificou esta cidade com a Jericó dos tempos de Josué e fixou a data da sua destruição em cerca de 1400 AEC. Embora alguns peritos ainda hoje endossem as conclusões de Garstang, outros interpretam a evidência de modo diferente. O arqueólogo G. Ernest Wright escreve: "Descobriu-se que as duas muralhas que cercavam a parte alta da antiga cidade, que Garstang . . . acreditava terem sido destruídas por terremoto e fogo, no tempo de Josué, datam do 3.º milênio e representam apenas duas de umas quatorze diferentes muralhas, ou componentes de muralhas, construídas sucessivamente durante aquela era." (Biblical Archaeology [Arqueologia Bíblica], 1962, pp. 79, 80) Muitos acham que praticamente nada resta da Jericó dos tempos de Josué, tendo as escavações anteriores neste lugar removido o que talvez tivesse sobrevivido desde o tempo da sua destruição. Conforme o Professor Jack Finegan observa: "Portanto, não existe agora neste lugar virtualmente nenhuma evidência pela qual se possa tentar determinar em que data Josué possa ter tomado Jericó." — Light From the Ancient Past (Luz do Passado Remoto), 1959, p. 159.

Por este motivo, muitos peritos datam a queda de Jericó baseados em evidência circunstancial, e as datas sugeridas abrangem um período de uns 200 anos. Em vista de tal incerteza, o Professor Merrill F. Unger observa apropriadamente: "Os estudiosos também precisam ser extremamente cautelosos para não atribuir autoridade indevida aos cálculos de datas feitos pelos arqueólogos, e suas respectivas interpretações. Que a fixação de datas e as conclusões tiradas das descobertas arqueológicas muitas vezes dependem de fatores subjetivos é amplamente demonstrado pelas amplas divergências entre competentes autoridades nessas matérias." — Arqueologia do Velho Testamento, 1985, p. 84, Imprensa Batista Regular.

Portanto, o fato de que as interpretações dos arqueólogos não concordam com a cronologia bíblica para indicar 1473 AEC como a data da destruição de Jericó não é motivo de preocupação. A diferença nos pontos de vista de Garstang e de outros arqueólogos sobre Jericó ilustra a necessidade de cautela em se aceitar testemunho arqueológico não importa se parece confirmar ou contradizer o registro bíblico e sua cronologia.

JERIEL [Que Deus Veja; Deus Viu]. Filho de Tola, e cabeça duma casa paterna na tribo de Issacar. — 1Cr 7:1, 2.

JERIJÁ. Veja JERIAS.

JERIMOTE [duma raiz que significa "ser alto (exaltado)"].

1. Filho ou descendente de Bela, primogênito de Benjamim, e homem poderoso, valente. — 1Cr 7:6, 7.

2. Guerreiro benjamita que apoiou Davi enquanto este estava em Ziclague, proscrito pelo Rei Saul. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 5.

3. Levita merarita. — 1Cr 24:26, 30; veja JEREMOTE N.º 3.

4. Levita coatita. — 1Cr 6:33; 25:4; veja JEREMOTE N.º 4.

5. Príncipe sobre a tribo de Naftali durante o governo de Davi; filho ou descendente de Azriel. — 1Cr 27:19, 22.

6. Filho de Davi, cuja filha se casou com o Rei Roboão. (2Cr 11:18) Visto que Jerimote não está incluído nas listas dos filhos de Davi com as esposas mencionadas por nome, ele talvez tenha sido filho duma concubina, ou duma esposa não mencionada por nome. (2Sa 5:13) Parece que Jerimote era casado com sua prima Abiail, filha de Eliabe, irmão mais velho de Davi. — 2Cr 11:18; 1Sa 17:13.

7. Um dos comissários levitas encarregados da generosa contribuição, dos dízimos e das coisas sagradas entregues durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:12, 13.

JERIOTE [dum verbo radical que significa "tremer"]. Jeriote provavelmente era concubina ou criada de Calebe, dando à luz alguns dos filhos dele atribuídos a "Azuba, sua esposa". Primeiro Crônicas 2:18 reza: "Calebe . . . tornou-se . . . pai de filhos por Azuba, sua esposa, e por Jeriote; e estes foram os seus filhos."

JEROÃO [Que se Tenha Misericórdia com Ele].

1. Pai de Elcana e avô de Samuel; descendente do levita Coate. — 1Sa 1:1, 19, 20; 1Cr 6:22, 27, 34, 38.

2. Benjamita de Gedor, cujos dois "filhos" foram mencionados entre "os ajudantes na guerra", de Davi, enquanto este estava em Ziclague, sob as restrições de Saul. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 7.

3. Pai de Azarel, o príncipe da tribo de Dã, sob o Rei Davi. — 1Cr 27:1, 22.

4. Pai de Azarias, um dos chefes do exército que ajudaram Jeoiada a empossar Jeoás como rei. — 2Cr 23:1, 11.

5. Descendente de Benjamim, cujos seis "filhos" mencionados por nome tornaram-se cabeças de família em Jerusalém. (1Cr 8:1, 26-28) Possivelmente, trata-se do N.º 6.

6. Antepassado benjamita de Ibneia, que morava em Jerusalém após o exílio. (1Cr 9:7, 8) Possivelmente, trata-se do N.º 5.

7. Pai ou antepassado de Adaías, sacerdote que morava em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:3, 10, 12; Ne 11:4, 12.

JEROBOÃO. Dois reis de Israel com reinados separados um do outro uns 130 anos.

1. Primeiro rei do reino das dez tribos de Israel; filho de Nebate, um dos oficiais de Salomão no povoado de Zereda; da tribo de Efraim. Pelo visto, Jeroboão perdeu o pai em tenra idade, sendo criado por Zerua, sua mãe enviuvada. — 1Rs 11:26.

Quando Salomão observou que Jeroboão não era somente um homem valente e poderoso, mas era também um trabalhador árduo, ele o colocou como encarregado da força de serviço compulsório da casa de José. (1Rs 11:28) Subsequentemente, Aijá, profeta de Deus, chegou-se a Jeroboão com notícias surpreendentes. Depois de rasgar sua própria roupa nova em 12 pedaços, o profeta disse a Jeroboão que tomasse dez deles em símbolo de como Jeová rasgaria em duas partes o reino de Salomão e faria Jeroboão rei sobre dez das tribos. Esta, porém, seria apenas uma divisão governamental e não também um afastamento da adoração verdadeira, centralizada no templo em Jerusalém, capital do reino meridional. Assim, Jeová assegurou a Jeroboão que Ele abençoaria e prosperaria o reinado dele, e lhe edificaria uma casa duradoura de sucessores, desde que guardasse as leis e os mandamentos de Deus. — 1Rs 11:29-38.

Foi possivelmente ao tomar conhecimento destes eventos que Salomão procurou matar Jeroboão. No entanto, Jeroboão fugiu para o Egito, e ali, sob a proteção do Faraó Sisaque, permaneceu até a morte de Salomão. — 1Rs 11:40.

As notícias da morte de Salomão, por volta de 998 AEC, fizeram Jeroboão retornar prontamente à sua terra natal, onde se juntou ao seu povo em exigir que Roboão, filho de Salomão, lhes aliviasse as cargas, se quisesse ter o apoio deles para sua nova realeza. Roboão, porém, rejeitou as boas recomendações dos conselheiros mais velhos em favor das oferecidas pelos companheiros mais jovens, da sua própria idade, que lhe disseram que devia aumentar a carga de trabalho do povo. As dez tribos responderam a esta dureza por fazerem Jeroboão rei delas. Na realidade, este "desenvolvimento se deu da parte de Jeová, a fim de que pudesse deveras executar a sua palavra, que Jeová falara por intermédio de Aijá". — 1Rs 12:1-20; 2Cr 10:1-19.

O Rei Jeroboão, recém-empossado, imediatamente passou a edificar Siquém como sua capital real, e, ao L de Siquém, do outro lado do Jordão, fortificou o povoado de Penuel (Peniel), local em que Jacó havia lutado com um anjo. (1Rs 12:25; Gên 32:30, 31) Ao ver seus súditos afluir ao templo de Jerusalém, para adoração, Jeroboão imaginou que, com o tempo, talvez transferissem sua lealdade a Roboão, e que então o matariam. Assim, decidiu pôr um fim a isto por estabelecer uma religião que girava em torno de dois bezerros de ouro, colocando um em Betel, ao S, e o outro em Dã, ao N. Também estabeleceu seu próprio sacerdócio não arônico, composto daqueles que, dentre o povo em geral, dispunham-se a alcançar este cargo por oferecer um touro e sete carneiros. Estes então serviam "para os altos, e para os demônios caprinos, e para os bezerros que tinha feito". Jeroboão também inventou 'dias santos' especiais, e, pessoalmente, liderou o povo em sacrificar a seus deuses recém-criados. — 1Rs 12:26-33; 2Rs 23:15; 2Cr 11:13-17; 13:9.

Em uma de tais ocasiões, quando Jeroboão estava prestes a oferecer fumaça sacrificial no seu altar em Betel, o espírito de Jeová fez com que certo homem de Deus censurasse o rei por sua detestável idolatria, e, quando o rei ordenou que agarrassem a este servo de Deus, o altar se fendeu, espalhando as cinzas, e a mão do rei se secou. Só depois de o homem de Deus aplacar a ira de Jeová é que a mão do rei foi restabelecida, porém, mesmo assim, Jeroboão continuou no seu desafio blasfemo a Jeová. (1Rs 13:1-6, 33, 34) A introdução da adoração do bezerro, por ele promovida, constituía os "pecados de Jeroboão", pecados dos quais outros reis israelitas se tornaram também culpados, por perpetuarem esta adoração apóstata. — 1Rs 14:16; 15:30, 34; 16:2, 19, 26, 31; 22:52; 2Rs 3:3; 10:29, 31; 13:2, 6, 11; 14:24; 15:9, 18, 24, 28; 17:21-23.

No 18.º ano do reinado de Jeroboão, morreu Roboão, mas as guerras que tinham começado entre essas duas nações prosseguiram durante o reinado de três anos do filho de Roboão, Abijão (Abias), que o sucedeu. (1Rs 15:1, 2, 6; 2Cr 12:15) Numa ocasião, Abias reuniu 400.000 homens para batalhar contra as forças de Jeroboão, que tinham o dobro do seu tamanho. Apesar das forças superiores de Jeroboão, e de sua astuta estratégia de emboscadas, este foi fragorosamente derrotado. Perdeu 500.000 homens e muitas das suas cidades efraimitas, e foi grandemente humilhado. A vitória de Judá se deu porque Abias e seus homens confiaram em Jeová e clamaram a Ele por ajuda. — 2Cr 13:3-20.

Aumentando a calamidade de Jeroboão, seu filho, também chamado Abias, ficou mortalmente enfermo, no que o rei mandou que sua esposa se disfarçasse, e daí a enviou com um presente ao idoso profeta Aijá, então cego, para indagar se seu filho se recuperaria. A resposta foi: 'Não.' Adicionalmente, fez-se a predição de que todo herdeiro varão de Jeroboão seria extirpado, e, excetuando-se este filho, em quem Jeová achou algo de bom, nenhum dos descendentes de Jeroboão teria um enterro decente, mas, seus cadáveres seriam comidos, quer por cães, quer por aves. — 1Rs 14:1-18.

Pouco depois, por volta de 977 AEC, "Jeová deu [em Jeroboão] um golpe, de modo que morreu", pondo fim ao seu reinado de 22 anos. (2Cr 13:20; 1Rs 14:20) Seu filho, Nadabe, o sucedeu no trono por dois anos antes de ser morto por Baasa, que também extirpou tudo que respirava na casa de Jeroboão. Desta forma, a dinastia dele foi abruptamente encerrada, "segundo a palavra de Jeová", e "por causa dos pecados de Jeroboão". — 1Rs 15:25-30.

2. Rei de Israel; filho e sucessor de Jeoás, e bisneto de Jeú. Como o 14.º governante do reino setentrional, Jeroboão II reinou por 41 anos, a partir de c. 844 AEC. (2Rs 14:16, 23) Igual a tantos predecessores, fez o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová por perpetuar a adoração do bezerro, de Jeroboão I. — 2Rs 14:24.

Nota-se um registro genealógico especial, evidentemente feito no reinado de Jeroboão II. (1Cr 5:17) Todavia, a destacada consecução de seu reinado foi a recuperação das terras anteriormente perdidas por este reino. Em cumprimento da profecia de Jonas, Jeroboão "restaurou o termo de Israel desde a entrada de Hamate até o mar do Arabá [Mar Morto]". Credita-se-lhe também a restauração de "Damasco e Hamate a Judá, em Israel". (2Rs 14:25-28) Isto pode significar que Jeroboão tornou tributários os reinos de Damasco e de Hamate, como já haviam sido de Judá durante o reinado de Salomão. — Veja 1Rs 4:21; 2Cr 8:4.

No rastro destes êxitos, sem dúvida, veio uma onda de prosperidade material para o reino setentrional. Ao mesmo tempo, porém, aquela nação continuou em seu declínio espiritual. Os profetas Oseias e Amós fizeram duras críticas ao rebelde Jeroboão e seus apoiadores, por sua crassa apostasia, bem como por sua conduta imoral — fraude, furtos, fornicação, assassínio, opressão, idolatria e outras práticas que desonram a Deus. (Os 1:2, 4; 4:1, 2, 12-17; 5:1-7; 6:10; Am 2:6-8; 3:9, 12-15; 4:1) Especialmente pertinente foi o aviso dado por Jeová pela boca do profeta Amós: "Levantar-me-ei contra a casa de Jeroboão com uma espada." — Am 7:9.

Depois da morte de Jeroboão, ascendeu ao trono seu filho Zacarias. (2Rs 14:29) No entanto, houve um intervalo de 11 anos entre a morte de Jeroboão e o governo de seis meses atribuído a Zacarias, o último da dinastia de Jeú. Possivelmente, por Zacarias ser muito jovem, ou por outro motivo, seu reinado só foi plenamente estabelecido ou confirmado por volta de 792 AEC.

JERUBAAL [Pleiteie (Contenda) Baal em Defesa]. Nome dado a Gideão, filho de Joás, o abiezrita, depois de ter derrubado o altar de Baal, pertencente a seu pai, e o poste sagrado de madeira junto ao altar; daí, Gideão sacrificou um touro pertencente ao seu pai sobre o altar construído para Jeová, usando os pedaços do poste sagrado como lenha. — Jz 6:11, 25-27.

Logo cedo, na manhã seguinte, os homens de Ofra, quando descobriram o que tinha acontecido, ficaram muito irados. Fizeram assim indagações, e, ao descobrirem que Gideão fizera aquilo, exigiram que ele fosse morto. Joás, pai de Gideão, tomou o lado de Gideão, dizendo: "Sereis vós os que pleiteareis em defesa de Baal, para ver se vós mesmos o podeis salvar? Quem pleitear em defesa dele devia ser morto ainda esta manhã. Se ele é Deus, que pleiteie em defesa de si mesmo, visto que alguém demoliu o seu altar." O relato bíblico prossegue: "E naquele dia começou a chamá-lo de Jerubaal, dizendo: 'Pleiteie Baal em sua própria defesa, visto que alguém demoliu o seu altar.' " — Jz 6:28-32.

Gideão é chamado Jerubesete em 2 Samuel 11:21. — Veja GIDEÃO.

JERUBESETE [Pleiteie (Contenda) a Coisa Vergonhosa em Defesa]. Nome do juiz Gideão encontrado em 2 Samuel 11:21. Trata-se evidentemente duma forma de Jerubaal, nome dado a Gideão por seu pai Joás, quando Gideão demoliu o altar de Baal. (Jz 6:30-32) Alguns peritos acreditam que o escritor de Segundo Samuel substituiu bá·ʽal pela palavra hebraica para "vergonha" (bó·sheth), a fim de não usar o nome do deus falso, Baal, como parte dum nome próprio. — Veja GIDEÃO.

JERUEL [possivelmente: Fundado (Erigido) por Deus]. Ermo que evidentemente ficava em algum ponto entre as cidades de Tecoa e En-Gedi. Desconhece-se hoje sua localização exata e sua extensão. — 2Cr 20:2, 16, 20.

JERUSA(Á) [Ele Tomou Posse]. Mãe do Rei Jotão; esposa de Uzias; filha de Zadoque. — 2Rs 15:32, 33; 2Cr 27:1, 2.

JERUSALÉM [Posse (Alicerce) da Paz Dupla]. Capital da antiga nação de Israel, a partir do ano 1070 AEC. Após a divisão da nação em dois reinos (997 AEC), Jerusalém continuou como capital do reino meridional de Judá. Nas Escrituras, há mais de 800 referências a Jerusalém.

Nome. O mais antigo nome registrado da cidade é "Salém". (Gên 14:18) Ao passo que alguns tentam associar o significado do nome Jerusalém com o de um deus semítico ocidental chamado Salém, o apóstolo Paulo mostra que "paz" é o verdadeiro significado da parte final do nome. (He 7:2) A grafia hebraica desta parte final sugere uma forma dual, daí "Paz Dupla". Em textos acadianos (assírio-babilônicos), a cidade era chamada de Urusalim (ou Ur-sa-li-im-mu). Nesta base, alguns peritos dão o significado do nome como "Cidade de Paz". Mas a forma hebraica, que logicamente deve prevalecer, aparentemente significa "Posse (Alicerce) da Paz Dupla".

Muitas outras expressões e títulos foram usados nas Escrituras para se referir à cidade. O salmista, em certo caso, emprega o nome anterior, "Salém". (Sal 76:2) Outros títulos eram: "cidade de Jeová" (Is 60:14); "vila do grandioso Rei" (Sal 48:2; compare isso com Mt 5:35); "Cidade de Justiça" e "Vila Fiel" (Is 1:26); "Sião" (Is 33:20), e "cidade santa" (Ne 11:1; Is 48:2; 52:1; Mt 4:5). O nome "el Quds", que significa "a [Cidade] Santa", ainda é o nome popular dela em árabe. O nome indicado em mapas atuais de Israel é Yerushalayim.

Localização. Situada comparativamente longe das principais rotas internacionais de comércio, Jerusalém ficava na beira dum ermo árido (o ermo de Judá), com limitadas reservas de água. Todavia, duas rotas internas de comércio cruzavam perto da cidade. Uma ia na direção N-S, ao longo do alto do planalto que formava a "espinha dorsal" da antiga Palestina, e esta rota ligava cidades tais como Dotã, Siquém, Betel, Belém, Hébron e Berseba. A segunda rota percorria uma direção E-O, desde Rabá (a atual ʽAmman), atravessava vales de torrente até a bacia do rio Jordão, subia pelas íngremes encostas de Judá, e então descia, serpenteando, as encostas ocidentais até a costa do Mediterrâneo e a cidade portuária de Jope. Além disso, Jerusalém estava localizada no centro da área global da Terra da Promessa, sendo assim apropriada como centro da administração estatal.

Jerusalém, situada a uns 55 km do mar Mediterrâneo, e a uns 24 km ao O do extremo N do Mar Morto, fica entre as colinas da cordilheira central. (Veja Sal 125:2.) Sua altitude de cerca de 750 m acima do nível do mar a tornava uma das capitais mais elevadas do mundo daquele tempo. Sua "elevação" é mencionada nas Escrituras, e os viajantes tinham de 'subir' das planícies costeiras para chegar à cidade. (Sal 48:2; 122:3, 4) O clima é agradável, com noites frescas, uma temperatura média anual de 17°C, e uma precipitação pluviométrica anual de cerca de 630 ml, chovendo principalmente entre novembro e abril.

Apesar de sua altitude, Jerusalém não sobressai às terras circundantes. O viajante só consegue divisar plenamente a cidade quando já está bem perto dela. Ao L de Jerusalém, o monte das Oliveiras ergue-se por uns 800 m. Ao N dele, o monte Scopus atinge cerca de 820 m, e as colinas circundantes, ao S e ao O, ascendem até 835 m. Estas elevações dão uma ideia da situação em relação ao monte do Templo (c. 740 m).

Em épocas de guerra, esta situação pareceria constituir uma séria desvantagem. No entanto, esta era compensada por estar a cidade cercada, em três lados, por vales ladeados por íngremes paredões: o vale da torrente do Cédron, ao leste, e o vale de Hinom, ao sul e ao oeste. Um vale central, pelo que parece mencionado por Josefo como vale de Tiropeom (ou "dos Fabricantes de Queijo"), cortava a área da cidade em colinas ou contrafortes oriental e ocidental. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], V, 136, 140 [iv, 1]) Este vale central ficou consideravelmente aterrado no decorrer dos séculos, mas o visitante ainda precisa empreender uma descida bastante inclinada até uma cavidade central e então subir o outro lado, ao atravessar a cidade. Há evidência de que, além do vale central N-S, mais dois vales ou depressões menores na direção E-O dividiam ainda mais as colinas, um deles cortando a colina oriental e o outro, a ocidental.

As ladeiras íngremes dos vales parecem ter sido incorporadas no sistema de muralhas defensivas da cidade em todas as épocas. O único lado da cidade que não dispunha duma defesa natural era o do N, e ali as muralhas eram especialmente fortes. Quando o general Tito atacou a cidade em 70 EC, segundo Josefo, viu-se confrontado com três muralhas sucessivas daquele lado.

Suprimento de Água. Os habitantes de Jerusalém sofriam de séria escassez de víveres quando sitiados, mas, evidentemente, não tinham muitos problemas quanto à água. Pois, apesar de ficar próxima ao árido ermo de Judá, a cidade tinha acesso a um suprimento constante de água potável e dispunha de reservatórios adequados dentro das muralhas da cidade.

Duas fontes, En-Rogel e Giom, ficavam perto da cidade. A primeira estava situada um pouco ao S da junção dos vales do Cédron e de Hinom. Embora constituísse uma valiosa fonte de água, sua posição a tornava inacessível em tempos de ataque ou de sítio. A fonte de Giom achava-se no lado O do vale do Cédron, junto ao que veio a ser chamado de Cidade de Davi. Embora estivesse fora dos muros da cidade, ficava suficientemente perto para se poder escavar um túnel que dava para um poço vertical, possibilitando aos habitantes da cidade tirar água dela sem sair para fora das muralhas protetoras. Isto foi feito nos primórdios da história da cidade, segundo a evidência arqueológica. Em 1961 e 1962, as escavações revelaram haver um maciço muro anterior, situado abaixo da extremidade superior ou da entrada do túnel, assim cercando-o. Pensa-se tratar-se da muralha da antiga cidade jebuseia.

Com o passar dos anos, formaram-se túneis e canais adicionais para canalizar as águas do Giom. Um dos canais descia da boca da caverna da fonte de Giom até o vale, contornando a ponta da colina SE até um tanque situado na junção do vale de Hinom com o vale de Tiropeom, ou central. De acordo com o que se achou, tinha a forma de trincheira, coberta de lajes de pedra, e em certos pontos, atravessava a encosta da colina em túnel. Aberturas a certos intervalos permitiam que se tirasse água para a irrigação dos socalcos do vale embaixo. O gradiente do canal, de cerca de 4 ou 5 mm por metro, produzia um lento fluxo brando, relembrando as "águas de Siloé, que correm suavemente". (Is 8:6) Sugere-se que este canal, desprotegido e vulnerável, foi construído durante o reinado de Salomão, quando prevaleciam a paz e a segurança.

As casas e os prédios em Jerusalém, evidentemente, possuíam cisternas subterrâneas, suplementando a água procedente das fontes. A água da chuva, coletada dos telhados, era armazenada nelas, sendo assim mantida limpa e fresca. Parece que a área do templo possuía cisternas especialmente grandes, os arqueólogos afirmando ter localizado ali 37 cisternas com uma capacidade total de uns 38.000.000 de litros, calculando-se que uma única cisterna era capaz de conter 7.600.000 litros.

No decorrer dos séculos, construíram-se diversos aquedutos, ou canalizações, a fim de prover Jerusalém de água. A tradição atribui a Salomão a construção duma canalização desde os "Reservatórios de Água de Salomão" (três reservatórios a SO de Belém) até o recinto do templo em Jerusalém. Salomão diz, em Eclesiastes 2:6: "Fiz para mim reservatórios de água para irrigar com eles a floresta." Um empreendimento tão grande como a construção de reservatórios talvez incluísse a construção de canalizações para o suprimento maior de água necessitada em Jerusalém após a instituição dos serviços no templo. No entanto, não há nenhuma evidência, à parte das tradições, para apoiar a origem salomônica duma canalização desde os Reservatórios de Água de Salomão até Jerusalém. Ainda se pode verificar a existência de diversos aquedutos. Uma canalização construída para levar água das fontes no uádi el-ʽArrub, 20 km ao SSO de Jerusalém, até os Reservatórios de Água de Salomão possivelmente é a aludida por Josefo, que diz que foi construída por Pôncio Pilatos, com fundos do tesouro do templo. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XVIII, 60 [iii, 2]; The Jewish War, II, 175 [ix, 4]) Dos dois aquedutos que vão dos Reservatórios de Água de Salomão até Jerusalém, o inferior é o mais antigo, possivelmente datando do tempo de Herodes, ou dos asmoneus. Este aqueduto passava abaixo da aldeia de Belém e seguia até o monte do Templo pelo "Arco de Wilson".

Pesquisas Arqueológicas. Embora se tenham feito muitas pesquisas e escavações, descobriram-se poucos fatos concretos a respeito da cidade dos tempos bíblicos. Diversos fatores têm restringido as investigações ou limitado seu valor. Jerusalém esteve quase que continuamente habitada na Era Comum, reduzindo assim em muito a área disponível para escavações. Por outro lado, também, a cidade foi destruída diversas vezes, construindo-se novas cidades por cima das ruínas, muitas vezes, em parte, com o material dessas ruínas. O acúmulo de escombros e entulhos, em alguns lugares atingindo a profundidade de uns 30 m, tem obscurecido os primitivos contornos deste lugar e tornado a interpretação da evidência escavada uma tarefa precária. Desenterraram-se algumas seções da muralha, de reservatórios, túneis de água e sepulcros antigos, mas muito poucos escritos. As principais descobertas arqueológicas procederam do morro que fica ao SE, agora fora das muralhas da cidade.

A principal fonte de informações a respeito da cidade antiga, portanto, continua sendo a Bíblia e a descrição da cidade do primeiro século fornecida pelo historiador judeu Josefo.

História dos Seus Primórdios. A primeira menção histórica da cidade ocorre na década entre 1943 e 1933 AEC, quando se deu o encontro de Abraão com Melquisedeque. Melquisedeque era "rei de Salém" e "sacerdote do Deus Altíssimo". (Gên 14:17-20) No entanto, a origem da cidade e da população que a compunha está tão envolta em obscuridade quanto a origem de seu rei-sacerdote, Melquisedeque. — Veja He 7:1-3.

Pelo que parece, outro evento na vida de Abraão envolvia as cercanias de Jerusalém. Ordenou-se a Abraão que sacrificasse Isaque, seu filho, "num dos montes" na "terra de Moriá". O templo construído por Salomão foi erguido no "monte Moriá", num local que anteriormente tinha sido uma eira. (Gên 22:2; 2Cr 3:1) Assim, a Bíblia aparentemente associa o local da tentativa de sacrifício por Abraão com a região montanhosa em volta de Jerusalém. (Veja MORIÁ.) Não se revela se Melquisedeque ainda vivia naquela época; mas Salém, provavelmente, continuava sendo um território amistoso para Abraão.

As Tabuinhas de Amarna, escritas por governantes cananeus ao seu suserano egípcio, incluem sete cartas do rei ou governador de Jerusalém (Urusalim). Estas cartas foram escritas antes de os israelitas conquistarem Canaã. Assim, Jerusalém, no período de aproximadamente 465 anos entre o encontro de Abraão e Melquisedeque e a conquista israelita, tinha-se tornado possessão de cananeus camitas, pagãos, e estava sob domínio do Império Egípcio, camita.

O relato da avassaladora conquista de Canaã por Josué alista Adoni-Zedeque, rei de Jerusalém, entre os reis confederados que atacaram Gibeão. Seu nome (que significa "(Meu) Senhor É Justiça") equivale de perto ao do anterior Rei Melquisedeque ("Rei da Justiça"), de Jerusalém, mas Adoni-Zedeque não era adorador do Deus Altíssimo, Jeová. — Jos 10:1-5, 23, 26; 12:7, 8, 10.

Na distribuição dos territórios tribais, Jerusalém ficava nos limites entre Judá e Benjamim, a fronteira específica seguindo o vale de Hinom. Isso colocaria pelo menos o que abrangia a posterior "Cidade de Davi", situada no espinhaço entre os vales do Cédron e de Tiropeom, dentro do território de Benjamim. Pelo que parece, porém, a cidade cananeia possuía povoados ou "subúrbios" adicionais, e parte da área povoada talvez se estendesse ao território de Judá, ao O e ao S do vale de Hinom. Atribui-se a Judá a captura inicial de Jerusalém, em Juízes 1:8, mas, depois de as forças invasoras avançarem, os habitantes jebuseus aparentemente permaneceram (ou retornaram) em força suficiente para formar um posterior bolsão de resistência, que nem Judá nem Benjamim conseguiram romper. Assim, diz-se tanto sobre Judá como sobre Benjamim, que os 'jebuseus continuaram morando com eles em Jerusalém'. (Jos 15:63; Jz 1:21) Esta situação perdurou por cerca de quatro séculos, e a cidade foi, às vezes, mencionada como "Jebus", "uma cidade de estrangeiros". — Jz 19:10-12; 1Cr 11:4, 5.

Durante o Reino Unido. A sede de governo do Rei Saul ficava em Gibeá, no território de Benjamim. A capital do Rei Davi era primeiro Hébron, em Judá, a uns 30 km ao SSO de Jerusalém. Depois de governar ali por sete anos e meio (2Sa 5:5), ele decidiu transferir a capital para Jerusalém. Isto se deu por orientação divina (2Cr 6:4-6), Jeová tendo mencionado, séculos antes, o 'lugar que Ele escolheria para nele colocar seu nome'. — De 12:5; 26:2; compare isso com 2Cr 7:12.

Parece que a cidade dos jebuseus, naquele tempo, estava situada na extremidade S da cumeeira oriental. Eles confiavam em que sua cidade-fortaleza fosse inexpugnável, com suas defesas naturais de vertentes íngremes de vales em três lados, e, provavelmente, de fortificações especiais ao norte. Era conhecida como o "lugar de difícil acesso" (1Cr 11:7), e os jebuseus zombaram de Davi, dizendo que até os 'cegos e os coxos da cidade' poderiam rechaçar seus ataques. Mas Davi conquistou a cidade, sendo o ataque liderado por Joabe, que evidentemente conseguiu penetrar na cidade através do "túnel de água". (2Sa 5:6-9; 1Cr 11:4-8) Os peritos não têm certeza absoluta do significado do termo hebraico aqui traduzido "túnel de água", mas, em geral, aceitam este e outros termos similares ("galeria", BMD, BV, So; "canal (subterrâneo)", Al, ALA, CBC) como o significado mais provável. O breve relato não declara exatamente como se romperam as defesas da cidade. Desde a descoberta do túnel e do poço que conduzem à fonte de Giom, o conceito popular é que Joabe levou seus homens subindo por este poço vertical, através do túnel inclinado, e penetrou na cidade num ataque de surpresa. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 951) Qualquer que tenha sido o modo, a cidade foi tomada e Davi mudou sua capital para lá (1070 AEC). A fortaleza jebuseia passou então a ser conhecida como a "Cidade de Davi", também chamada "Sião". — 2Sa 5:7.

Davi iniciou um programa de construções dentro daquela área, pelo que parece também melhorando as defesas da cidade. (2Sa 5:9-11; 1Cr 11:8) "O Aterro" (hebr.: ham·Mil·lóh') mencionado aqui (2Sa 5:9), e em relatos posteriores (1Rs 9:15, 24; 11:27), era alguma particularidade geográfica ou estrutural da cidade, naquele tempo bem conhecida, mas impossível de identificar hoje em dia. Quando Davi transferiu mais tarde a sagrada "arca de Jeová" da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém, a cidade se tornou tanto o centro religioso, como o administrativo, da nação. — 2Sa 6:11, 12, 17; Veja ATERRO; DAVI, CIDADE DE; ENTERRO, LUGARES DE SEPULTAMENTO.

Não há registro de Jerusalém ter sido atacada por forças inimigas durante o reinado de Davi, quando ele batalhava com os adversários. (Veja 2Sa 5:17-25; 8:1-14; 11:1.) Em certa ocasião, porém, Davi achou por bem abandonar a cidade diante do avanço de forças rebeldes chefiadas pelo seu próprio filho, Absalão. A retirada do rei talvez fosse para evitar que se derramasse sangue numa guerra civil neste lugar, em que repousava o nome de Jeová. (2Sa 15:13-17) Qualquer que fosse o motivo da retirada, resultou no cumprimento da profecia inspirada falada por Natã. (2Sa 12:11; 16:15-23) Davi não permitiu que a Arca do Pacto fosse evacuada com ele, mas ordenou aos sacerdotes fiéis que a devolvessem à cidade, o lugar escolhido por Deus. (2Sa 15:23-29) A descrição da parte inicial da fuga de Davi, conforme registrada no capítulo 15 de 2 Samuel, delineia bem os aspectos geográficos da região ao L da cidade.

Perto do fim do seu governo, Davi começou a preparar os materiais de construção para o templo. (1Cr 22:1, 2; compare isso com 1Rs 6:7.) As pedras lavradas que foram preparadas talvez tivessem sido extraídas duma pedreira daquela área, pois da base rochosa da própria Jerusalém se extraem facilmente pedras, cortadas e lapidadas no tamanho e no formato desejados, as quais, ao ficarem expostas às intempéries, endurecem e se tornam pedras duráveis e atraentes para construção. Existe evidência duma antiga pedreira próxima da atual Porta de Damasco, da qual, com o passar do tempo, se extraíram grandes quantidades de rocha.

Um aspecto adicional da configuração do terreno em torno de Jerusalém, esta vez ao L e ao S, é fornecido no relato da unção de Salomão por ordem do idoso Rei Davi. Outro filho, Adonias, encontrava-se junto à fonte de En-Rogel, tramando apoderar-se do reinado, quando Salomão foi ungido junto à fonte de Giom. A distância entre os dois pontos era suficientemente curta (c. 700 m) para Adonias e seus coconspiradores ouvirem o ruído da buzina e das celebrações em Giom. — 1Rs 1:5-9, 32-41.

O reinado de Salomão presenciou consideráveis construções (e talvez reconstruções) no interior da cidade, e a expansão de seus limites. (1Rs 3:1; 9:15-19, 24; 11:27; compare isso com Ec 2:3-6, 9.) O templo, sua mais notável obra de construção, junto com seus pátios adjacentes, foi construído no monte Moriá, na crista oriental, mas ao N da "Cidade de Davi", evidentemente na área do atual Domo do Rochedo. (2Cr 3:1; 1Rs 6:37, 38; 7:12) Outros prédios principais próximos eram a casa ou palácio do próprio Salomão, a Casa da Floresta do Líbano, feita de cedro, o Pórtico das Colunas, e o judicial Pórtico do Trono. (1Rs 7:1-8) Este conjunto de prédios, pelo que parece, estava situado ao S do templo, no declive gradual que descia até a "Cidade de Davi". — MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 752; ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 1, p. 748.

O Reino Dividido (997-607 AEC). A rebelião de Jeroboão dividiu a nação em dois reinos, e Jerusalém continuou a ser a capital de duas tribos, Benjamim e Judá, sob Roboão, filho de Salomão. Os levitas e os sacerdotes também se mudaram para a cidade em que repousava o nome de Jeová, desta forma fortalecendo o reinado de Roboão. (2Cr 11:1-17) Jerusalém não se achava mais, então, no centro geográfico do reino, estando a apenas alguns quilômetros da fronteira do hostil reino setentrional de dez tribos. Numa questão de cinco anos após a morte de Salomão, a cidade sofreu a primeira de uma série de invasões. O Rei Sisaque, do Egito, atacou o reino de Judá, sem dúvida, considerando-o vulnerável no seu estado reduzido. Por causa da infidelidade nacional, teve êxito em entrar em Jerusalém, levando tesouros do templo e outros objetos de valor. Foi apenas devido ao arrependimento que se concedeu à cidade certa medida de proteção, impedindo a sua completa ruína. — 1Rs 14:25, 26; 2Cr 12:2-12.

Durante o reinado do fiel Rei Asa, o Rei Baasa, do reino setentrional, fez uma tentativa fracassada de fortalecer sua posição na fronteira setentrional de Judá, visando vedá-la e impedir as comunicações com Jerusalém (e, possivelmente, expressões de lealdade ao reino de Judá por parte de quaisquer de seus súditos). (1Rs 15:17-22) A continuidade da adoração pura, sob o governo de Jeosafá, filho de Asa, trouxe a proteção divina e grandes benefícios para a cidade, inclusive medidas aprimoradas para se cuidar de processos jurídicos. — 2Cr 19:8-11; 20:1, 22, 23, 27-30.

Este padrão perdurou por todo o restante da história de Jerusalém como capital do reino de Judá. A adoração verdadeira lhe trazia a bênção e a proteção de Jeová; a apostasia gerava graves problemas e a tornava vulnerável a ataques. No reinado do infiel Jeorão (913-c. 907 AEC), filho de Jeosafá, ocorreu uma segunda invasão e saque da cidade, por uma coligação árabe-filisteia, apesar das fortes muralhas defensivas. (2Cr 21:12-17) No século seguinte, o desvio do Rei Jeoás do proceder correto resultou em forças sírias 'começarem a invadir Judá e Jerusalém', o contexto dando a entender que tiveram êxito em penetrar na cidade. (2Cr 24:20-25) Durante a apostasia de Amazias, o reino setentrional de Israel invadiu Judá e derrubou cerca de 178 m do vital muro setentrional, entre o Portão da Esquina (no canto NO) e o Portão de Efraim (ao L do Portão da Esquina). (2Cr 25:22-24) É possível que, em algum tempo anterior, a cidade se tenha expandido através do vale central até a cumeeira ocidental.

O Rei Uzias (829-778 AEC) fez notáveis adições às defesas da cidade, fortificando com torres o Portão da Esquina (ao NO) e o Portão do Vale (no ângulo SO), bem como por erguer uma torre no "Contraforte" ("Esquina", BJ; "Ângulo", BMD), que era, pelo que parece, alguma parte da muralha oriental, não muito distante dos prédios reais, quer os de Davi, quer os de Salomão. (2Cr 26:9; Ne 3:24, 25) Uzias também equipou as torres e esquinas com "máquinas de guerra", talvez catapultas mecânicas para atirar flechas e grandes pedras. (2Cr 26:14, 15) Seu filho Jotão prosseguiu com o programa de construções. — 2Cr 27:3, 4.

O fiel Rei Ezequias, que governou depois de seu pai, o apóstata Acaz, fez obras de limpeza e de restauração na área do templo, e organizou uma grande celebração da Páscoa, que atraiu adoradores a Jerusalém de todo o país, inclusive do reino setentrional. (2Cr 29:1-5, 18, 19; 30:1, 10-26) Este estímulo em favor da adoração verdadeira, porém, foi logo seguido por um ataque de fontes pagãs, de zombadores do Deus verdadeiro, cujo nome repousava sobre Jerusalém. Em 732 AEC, oito anos após a conquista do reino setentrional de Israel pela Assíria, o Rei Senaqueribe, assírio, passou como foice pela Palestina, destacando parte das tropas para ameaçar Jerusalém. (2Cr 32:1, 9) Ezequias havia preparado a cidade para um sítio. Ele tapou as fontes de água fora da cidade, a fim de ocultá-las e tornar as coisas mais difíceis para o inimigo, reforçando a muralha e fortificando-a. (2Cr 32:2-5, 27-30) Parece que o "aqueduto" para trazer água da fonte de Giom para dentro da cidade já tinha sido construído nessa época, sendo possivelmente um projeto de tempo de paz. (2Rs 20:20; 2Cr 32:30) Se, como se crê, era o aqueduto que inclui o túnel que passava pela vertente do vale do Cédron, terminando no reservatório de Siloé, no vale de Tiropeom, então não se tratava dum projeto pequeno, a ser concluído em poucos dias. (Veja ARQUEOLOGIA [Palestina e Síria]; GIOM N.º 2.) De qualquer modo, a força da cidade não residia em seus sistemas e suprimentos defensivos, mas no poder protetor de Jeová Deus, que disse: "E eu certamente defenderei esta cidade para a salvar por minha própria causa e por causa de Davi, meu servo." (2Rs 19:32-34) A destruição miraculosa de 185.000 soldados assírios fez com que Senaqueribe retornasse apressadamente à Assíria. (2Rs 19:35, 36) Quando o relato da campanha foi registrado nos anais assírios, alardeava-se que Senaqueribe havia enclausurado Ezequias em Jerusalém como um 'pássaro numa gaiola', mas não se afirmava ter ele capturado a cidade. — Veja SENAQUERIBE.

O reinado de Manassés (716-662 AEC) resultou na construção duma muralha adicional ao longo do vale do Cédron. Também viu a nação desviar-se ainda mais da adoração verdadeira. (2Cr 33:1-9, 14) O neto dele, Josias, inverteu temporariamente este declínio e, durante seu governo, o vale de Hinom, usado pelos idólatras para cerimônias vis, foi 'tornado impróprio para adoração', sendo provavelmente dessagrado por ser feito depósito de lixo da cidade. (2Rs 23:10; 2Cr 33:6) O "Portão dos Montes de Cinzas" aparentemente dava para este vale. (Ne 3:13, 14; veja GEENA; HINOM, VALE DE.) No tempo de Josias, o "segundo bairro" da cidade (a "cidade nova", BJ) é mencionado pela primeira vez. (2Rs 22:14; 2Cr 34:22) Este "segundo bairro", conforme geralmente se entende, era a parte da cidade situada ao O ou NO da área do templo. — Sof 1:10.

Após a morte de Josias, a situação deteriorou rapidamente para Jerusalém, à medida que quatro reis infiéis se seguiram. No oitavo ano do Rei Jeoiaquim, Judá se tornou vassalo de Babilônia. A revolta de Jeoiaquim, três anos depois, provocou um cerco bem-sucedido de Jerusalém pelos babilônios, que saquearam os tesouros da cidade e deportaram o então rei, Joaquim, e outros cidadãos. (2Rs 24:1-16; 2Cr 36:5-10) O nomeado por Babilônia, o Rei Zedequias, tentou livrar-se do jugo babilônico, e, em seu nono ano (609 AEC), Jerusalém foi de novo sitiada. (2Rs 24:17-20; 25:1; 2Cr 36:11-14) Uma força militar egípcia, enviada para socorrer Jerusalém, conseguiu afastar os sitiantes apenas temporariamente. (Je 37:5-10) Fiel à profecia de Jeová, mediante Jeremias, os babilônios voltaram e renovaram o cerco. (Je 34:1, 21, 22; 52:5-11) Jeremias passou a última parte do sítio preso no "Pátio da Guarda" (Je 32:2; 38:28), ligado à "Casa do Rei". (Ne 3:25) Por fim, 18 meses a contar do início do sítio, com a acompanhante fome, doença e morte, foi aberta uma brecha nas muralhas de Jerusalém, no 11.º ano de Zedequias, e a cidade foi tomada. — 2Rs 25:2-4; Je 39:1-3.

Desolação e Restauração. As muralhas da cidade foram brechadas em 9 de tamuz de 607 AEC. Um mês depois, em 10 de ab, o agente de Nabucodonosor, Nebuzaradã, penetrou na cidade conquistada e começou os trabalhos de demolição, incendiando o templo e outros prédios, e passando a derrubar as muralhas da cidade. O rei de Jerusalém e a maior parte do seu povo foram exilados para Babilônia, e os tesouros dela foram levados como despojo. — 2Rs 25:7-17; 2Cr 36:17-20; Je 52:12-20; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 326.

A declaração do arqueólogo Conder, de que "a história da cidade destruída permanece uma incógnita até Ciro", é verídica, não apenas quanto a Jerusalém, mas também quanto a todo o domínio do reino de Judá. Diferente dos assírios, o rei babilônio não levou povos substitutos para a região conquistada. Seguiu-se um período de 70 anos de desolação, conforme profetizado. — Je 25:11; 2Cr 36:21.

No "primeiro ano" de Ciro, o Persa (evidentemente como governante de Babilônia; 538 AEC), expediu-se o decreto real que liberava os judeus exilados para 'subirem a Jerusalém, que está em Judá, e reconstruírem a casa de Jeová, o Deus de Israel'. (Esd 1:1-4) Aqueles que fizeram a longa viagem a Jerusalém levando consigo os tesouros do templo incluíam 42.360 israelitas, além de escravos e cantores profissionais. Chegaram em tempo para celebrar a Festividade das Barracas, em tisri (setembro-outubro) de 537 AEC. (Esd 2:64, 65; 3:1-4) A reconstrução do templo começou sob a direção do governador Zorobabel, e, depois de séria interferência e da infiltração de certo grau de apatia entre os judeus retornados, ela foi por fim concluída por volta de março de 515 AEC. Mais exilados voltaram com o sacerdote e escriba Esdras, em 468 AEC, trazendo objetos adicionais "para embelezar a casa de Jeová, que está em Jerusalém" (Esd 7:27), isto com a autorização do Rei Artaxerxes (Longímano). Os tesouros que trouxeram consigo evidentemente valiam mais de US$ 43.000.000. — Esd 8:25-27.

Cerca de um século e meio depois da conquista efetuada por Nabucodonosor, as muralhas e os portões da cidade ainda continuavam derrubados. Neemias obteve de Artaxerxes permissão para ir a Jerusalém e remediar tal situação. (Ne 2:1-8) O relato que segue, da inspeção noturna feita por Neemias e de sua subdivisão da obra de construção entre diferentes grupos familiares, constitui uma das principais fontes de informações sobre a planta da cidade naquela época, especialmente de seus portões. (Ne 2:11-15; 3:1-32; veja PORTA, PORTÃO.) Essa reconstrução se deu em cumprimento da profecia de Daniel e determinara o ano que marcava o início das 70 "semanas" proféticas, envolvendo a vinda do Messias. (Da 9:24-27) Apesar de hostilizações, no curto espaço de 52 dias, no ano 455 AEC, eles cercaram Jerusalém duma muralha e de portões. — Ne 4:1-23; 6:15; 7:1; veja SETENTA SEMANAS ("A Saída da Palavra").

Jerusalém era então "larga e grande, [mas] havia poucas pessoas dentro dela". (Ne 7:4) Depois da leitura pública das Escrituras e de celebrações na "praça pública que havia diante do Portão das Águas", do lado L da cidade (Ne 3:26; 8:1-18), foram feitos arranjos para aumentar a população da cidade por trazer um israelita em cada dez para morar ali. Isto foi feito pelo lançamento de sortes, mas, além disso, houve evidentemente voluntários. (Ne 11:1, 2) Fez-se uma purificação espiritual, a fim de colocar a população da cidade numa base sólida com respeito à adoração verdadeira. (Ne 12:47–13:3) A governança de Neemias durou 12 anos, ou mais, e incluiu uma viagem à corte do rei persa. Ao retornar a Jerusalém, verificou ser necessária uma purificação adicional. (Ne 13:4-31) Com o vigoroso desarraigamento da apostasia, por ele efetuado, encerra-se o registro das Escrituras Hebraicas, algum tempo depois do ano 443 AEC.

Controle Helênico e Macabeu. A passagem do controle medo-persa para o grego se deu em 332 AEC, quando Alexandre, o Grande (Magno) invadiu Judá. Os historiadores gregos não fazem nenhuma menção da entrada de Alexandre em Jerusalém. Todavia, a cidade veio deveras a ficar sob domínio grego, e é razoável presumir que não tenha sido inteiramente passada ao largo por Alexandre. Josefo, no primeiro século EC, registra a tradição judaica de que, quando Alexandre se aproximava de Jerusalém, o sumo sacerdote judeu foi ao encontro dele e mostrou-lhe as profecias divinamente inspiradas, registradas por Daniel, que prediziam as conquistas-relâmpago a serem feitas pela Grécia. (Jewish Antiquities, XI, 326-338 [viii, 4, 5]; Da 8:5-7, 20, 21) Seja qual for o caso, Jerusalém parece ter sobrevivido à mudança de controle sem sofrer quaisquer danos.

Após a morte de Alexandre, Jerusalém e a Judeia passaram para o controle dos Ptolomeus, que governaram com base no Egito. Em 198 AEC, Antíoco, o Grande, governando na Síria, depois de tomar a cidade fortificada de Sídon, capturou Jerusalém, e a Judeia tornou-se um domínio do Império Selêucida. (Veja Da 11:16.) Jerusalém ficou sob domínio selêucida durante 30 anos. Daí, no ano de 168 AEC, o rei sírio Antíoco IV (Epifânio), na sua tentativa de helenizar por completo os judeus, dedicou o templo de Jerusalém a Zeus (Júpiter) e profanou o altar por meio dum sacrifício impuro. (1 Macabeus 1:57, 62; 2 Macabeus 6:1, 2, 5; FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 335) Isto levou à revolta dos Macabeus (ou Asmoneus). Depois de três anos de luta, Judas Macabeu obteve o controle da cidade e do templo, e rededicou o altar de Jeová à adoração verdadeira, no aniversário de sua profanação, em 25 de quisleu de 165 AEC. — 1 Macabeus 4:52-54; 2 Macabeus 10:5; compare isso com Jo 10:22.

A guerra contra os governantes selêucidas não tinha terminado. Os judeus apelaram para Roma em busca de ajuda, e, assim, uma nova potência surgiu no cenário de Jerusalém por volta de 160 AEC. (1 Macabeus 8:17, 18) Jerusalém passou então a ficar sob a influência do Império Romano em expansão. Por volta de 142 AEC, Simão Macabeu conseguiu fazer de Jerusalém a capital de uma região ostensivamente livre de subserviência a nações gentias, ou de tributação por parte delas. Aristóbulo I, sumo sacerdote de Jerusalém, até assumiu o título de rei, em 104 AEC. Todavia, ele não era da linhagem davídica.

Durante este período, Jerusalém não era 'cidade de paz'. Disputas internas, atiçadas por ambições egoístas e agravadas por facções religiosas rivais — saduceus, fariseus, zelotes e outros — debilitaram grandemente a cidade. Uma violenta disputa entre Aristóbulo II e seu irmão, Hircano, resultou em convocar-se Roma para arbitrar esta disputa. Sob o general Pompeu, as forças romanas sitiaram Jerusalém em 63 AEC, durante três meses, a fim de entrar na cidade e resolver a disputa. Morreram, alegadamente, 12.000 judeus, muitos às mãos de coisraelitas.

É no relato de Josefo sobre a conquista efetuada por Pompeu que se menciona pela primeira vez o viaduto sobre o vale de Tiropeom. Servia de elo entre as metades oriental e ocidental da cidade, e permitia aos que estavam na metade ocidental o acesso direto à área do templo.

O idumeu Antípater (II) foi então empossado como governador romano da Judeia, sendo deixado um macabeu como sumo sacerdote e etnarca local em Jerusalém. Mais tarde, o filho de Antípater, Herodes (o Grande), foi designado por Roma como "rei" da Judeia. Ele só conseguiu obter o controle sobre Jerusalém em 37 ou 36 AEC, data a partir da qual se iniciou efetivamente seu governo.

Sob Herodes, o Grande. O governo de Herodes foi assinalado por um ambicioso programa de edificações, e a cidade usufruiu considerável prosperidade. Adicionaram-se-lhe um teatro, um ginásio e um hipódromo (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 535), bem como outros edifícios públicos. Herodes construiu também um palácio real bem fortificado (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 538), evidentemente no lado O da cidade, ao S do atual Portão de Jafa, onde os arqueólogos creem ter achado o alicerce de uma das torres. Outra fortaleza, a Torre de Antônia, ficava perto do templo e estava ligada a ele por uma passagem. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 535; Jewish Antiquities, XV, 424 [xi, 7]) A guarnição romana podia assim ter rápido acesso à área do templo, como provavelmente ocorreu quando os soldados livraram Paulo de uma turba ali amotinada. — At 21:31, 32.

A maior obra de Herodes, porém, foi a reconstrução do templo e do seu conjunto de prédios. Obra iniciada no seu 18.º ano (Jewish Antiquities, XV, 380 [xi, 1]), a própria casa santa foi concluída em um ano e meio, mas as obras dos prédios e pátios adjacentes prosseguiram por muito tempo após a sua morte. (Jo 2:20) A área total abrangida era de cerca de o dobro da anterior área do templo. Parte do muro do pátio do templo, pelo que parece, ainda está de pé, sendo hoje conhecida como Muro Ocidental, ou Muro das Lamentações. Os arqueólogos datam as carreiras inferiores de enormes blocos de 90 cm de altura como sendo da construção de Herodes.

De 2 AEC a 70 EC. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs prosseguem então com a descrição dos acontecimentos que envolveram Jerusalém. O nascimento de Jesus não ocorreu em Jerusalém, mas na vizinha Belém, a "cidade de Davi". (Lu 2:10, 11) Não obstante, o relato posterior dos astrólogos sobre o nascimento do "rei dos judeus" fez com que Herodes e, "junto com ele, toda Jerusalém", ficassem agitados. (Mt 2:1-3) Pouco depois de emitir seu infame decreto, ordenando a matança dos bebês de Belém, Herodes faleceu, evidentemente no ano 1 AEC. (Veja HERODES N.º 1.) Arquelau, seu filho, herdou o domínio sobre Jerusalém e a Judeia, bem como sobre outras regiões. Posteriormente, Roma removeu Arquelau por contravenções; depois disso, regiam governadores nomeados diretamente por Roma, como Pôncio Pilatos, durante o ministério de Jesus. — Lu 3:1.

Jesus foi levado à Jerusalém 40 dias depois de nascer, e foi apresentado no templo como primogênito de Maria. Os idosos Simeão e Ana se regozijaram em ver o prometido Messias, e Ana falou a respeito dele "a todos os que aguardavam o livramento de Jerusalém". (Lu 2:21-38; compare isso com Le 12:2-4.) Não se declara quantas outras vezes Jesus foi levado a Jerusalém durante sua infância, só tendo sido registrada especificamente uma visita, feita quando ele tinha 12 anos. Nesta ocasião, ele palestrou com os instrutores na área do templo, estando assim ocupado com a 'casa de seu Pai', na cidade escolhida de seu Pai. — Lu 2:41-49.

Depois de seu batismo e durante seu ministério de três anos e meio, Jesus visitou periodicamente Jerusalém, com certeza estando ali para as três festividades anuais, uma vez que todos os varões judeus tinham a obrigação de comparecer a elas. (Êx 23:14-17) Grande parte do seu tempo, porém, foi passado fora da capital, à medida que ele pregava e ensinava na Galileia e em outras regiões do país.

Além da área do templo, onde Jesus ensinava com frequência, são mencionados poucos outros locais específicos da cidade em relação com seu ministério. O reservatório de água de Betsata, com suas cinco colunatas (Jo 5:2) é, segundo se julga, aquele que foi escavado logo ao N da área do templo. (Veja BETSATA.) O reservatório de água de Siloé do primeiro século pode ser um reservatório encontrado recentemente na parte mais baixa do Vale de Tiropeom, que obtém sua água da fonte de Giom por meio de um canal. (Jo 9:11; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 949) É com respeito à visita final de Jesus a Jerusalém que se fornece um quadro mais pormenorizado. — MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 742; ILUSTRAÇÕES, Vol. 2, p. 743.

Seis dias antes da festividade da Páscoa de 33 EC, Jesus chegou a Betânia, na encosta oriental do monte das Oliveiras. No dia seguinte, 9 de nisã, como Rei ungido de Jeová, aproximou-se da capital, montado no filhote duma jumenta, em cumprimento da profecia de Zacarias 9:9. (Mt 21:1-9) Descendo o monte das Oliveiras, parou para contemplar a cidade, e chorou por causa dela, predizendo vividamente o sítio e a desolação que ela sofreria. (Lu 19:37-44) Ao entrar na cidade, provavelmente através dum portão na muralha oriental, toda a cidade "ficou em comoção", pois a notícia se espalhou depressa por toda esta relativamente pequena área. — Mt 21:10.

No tempo remanescente, em que passou os dias em Jerusalém e as noites em Betânia (Lu 21:37, 38), Jesus purificou a área do templo dos comerciantes gananciosos (Mt 21:12, 13), como fizera cerca de três anos antes. (Jo 2:13-16) Em 11 de nisã, estava com quatro de seus discípulos no monte das Oliveiras, de onde se podia avistar a cidade e seu templo, quando fez a sua grande profecia a respeito da vindoura destruição de Jerusalém e da "terminação do sistema de coisas", bem como da sua presença. (Mt 24; Mr 13; Lu 21) Em 13 de nisã, Pedro e João fizeram arranjos para a refeição da Páscoa numa sala de andar superior em Jerusalém, onde, naquela mesma noite (o início de 14 de nisã), Jesus celebrou essa refeição com seus apóstolos. Depois de palestrar com eles, deixaram a cidade, cruzaram a "torrente hibernal do Cédron", e subiram a encosta do monte das Oliveiras até um horto chamado Getsêmani. (Mt 26:36; Lu 22:39; Jo 18:1, 2) Getsêmani significa "Lagar de Azeite", e ainda se encontram nesta encosta oliveiras de muita idade. Mas o lugar exato do horto é hoje mera conjectura. — Veja GETSÊMANI.

Preso naquela noite, Jesus foi levado de volta a Jerusalém, aos sacerdotes Anás e Caifás, e à sala do Sinédrio, a fim de ser julgado. (Mt 26:57–27:1; Jo 18:13-27) Dali, ao amanhecer, foi levado a Pilatos, "ao palácio do governador" (Mt 27:2; Mr 15:1, 16), e então a Herodes Ântipas, que na ocasião também estava em Jerusalém. (Lu 23:6, 7) Por fim, foi reconduzido a Pilatos, para o julgamento final, no "Pavimento de Pedra", chamado "Gáb·batha" em hebraico. — Lu 23:11; Jo 19:13; veja PAVIMENTO DE PEDRA.

Gólgota, que significa "[Lugar da] Caveira", era o local onde Jesus foi pregado na estaca. (Mt 27:33-35; Lu 23:33) Embora estivesse obviamente situado fora dos muros da cidade, provavelmente para o N, não se pode hoje identificar com certeza o local. (Veja GÓLGOTA.) O mesmo se pode dizer do local do sepultamento de Jesus. — FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 948.

"O campo do oleiro, para enterrar os estranhos", comprado com o dinheiro do suborno, que Judas devolveu, atirando-o diante dos sacerdotes (Mt 27:5-7), é identificado tradicionalmente com um lugar no lado S do vale de Hinom, perto da sua junção com o Cédron. Nessa área são encontrados muitos túmulos. — Veja ACÉLDAMA.

Durante o período apostólico. Depois de sua ressurreição, Jesus deu ordens a seus discípulos que não deixassem Jerusalém naquela ocasião. (Lu 24:49; At 1:4) Este deveria ser o ponto de partida para se pregar o arrependimento para o perdão de pecados à base do nome de Cristo. (Lu 24:46-48) Dez dias depois da sua ascensão ao céu, os discípulos, reunidos numa sala de andar superior, receberam a unção pelo espírito santo. (At 1:13, 14; 2:1-4) Jerusalém estava apinhada de judeus e de prosélitos de todas as partes do Império Romano, os quais compareceram à Festividade de Pentecostes. O testemunho dado pelos cristãos cheios de espírito resultou em milhares de pessoas se tornarem discípulos batizados. Com esses milhares de pessoas dando testemunho da sua fé, não é de admirar que os irados líderes religiosos bradassem: "Eis que enchestes Jerusalém com o vosso ensino." (At 5:28) Os milagres realizados deram força ao testemunho, como, por exemplo, a cura do mendigo coxo junto à "porta do templo, chamada Bela", provavelmente a porta L do Pátio das Mulheres. — At 3:2, 6, 7.

Mesmo depois que o testemunho começou a disseminar-se de Jerusalém para "Samaria, e até à parte mais distante da terra" (At 1:8), Jerusalém continuou a ser o local do corpo governante da congregação cristã. A perseguição logo fizera com que 'todos, exceto os apóstolos, fossem espalhados através das regiões da Judeia e de Samaria'. (At 8:1; compare isso com Gál 1:17-19; 2:1-9.) De Jerusalém, certos apóstolos e discípulos foram enviados para ajudar novos grupos de crentes, como em Samaria. (At 8:14; 11:19-22, 27) Saulo de Tarso (Paulo) logo achou aconselhável abreviar sua primeira visita a Jerusalém como cristão, por causa de tentativas de assassiná-lo. (At 9:26-30) Mas houve períodos de calma. (At 9:31) Foi ali que Pedro fez seu relatório à assembleia cristã a respeito da aceitação de crentes gentios por parte de Deus, e foi ali, também, que se resolveu a questão da circuncisão e assuntos correlatos. — At 11:1-4, 18; 15:1, 2, 22-29; Gál 2:1, 2.

Jesus chamara Jerusalém de "matadora dos profetas e apedrejadora dos que lhe são enviados". (Mt 23:37; compare isso com os vv 34-36 .) Embora muitos dos cidadãos dela mostrassem fé no Filho de Deus, a cidade como um todo continuou a seguir o padrão do passado. Por causa disso, 'sua casa lhe ficou abandonada'. (Mt 23:38) Em 66 EC, uma revolta judaica trouxe à cidade as forças romanas sob Céstio Galo, que a cercaram e fizeram uma investida até contra os próprios muros do templo. Subitamente, Céstio Galo se retirou, sem nenhum motivo aparente. Isto permitiu que os cristãos acatassem as instruções de Jesus: "Então, comecem a fugir para os montes os que estiverem na Judeia, e retirem-se os que estiverem no meio [de Jerusalém], e não entrem nela os que estiverem nos campos." (Lu 21:20-22) Eusébio, em sua Ecclesiastical History (História Eclesiástica; III, v, 3), declara que os cristãos fugiram de Jerusalém e de toda a terra da Judeia para uma cidade da Pereia chamada Pela.

O alívio sentido por Jerusalém, em resultado da retirada dos romanos, foi de curta duração, como tinha sido quando os babilônios se retiraram temporariamente, para enfrentar os egípcios, perto do fim do reinado do Rei Zedequias. Sob o general Tito, as forças romanas voltaram em 70 EC em maior número e sitiaram a cidade, agora apinhada de celebrantes da Páscoa. Os romanos ergueram barreiras de sítio e uma muralha ou barricada contínua em torno da cidade, para impedir que alguém fugisse dela, de dia ou de noite. Isto, também, cumpria a profecia de Jesus. (Lu 19:43) Na cidade, facções rivais altercavam e lutavam entre si, grande quantidade das reservas alimentares foi destruída, e os que eram apanhados na tentativa de deixar a cidade eram mortos como traidores. Josefo, a fonte dessas informações, relata que, com o tempo, a fome se tornou tão séria, que as pessoas se viam obrigadas a comer punhados de feno e pedaços de couro, e até mesmo seus próprios filhos. (Veja La 2:11, 12, 19, 20; De 28:56, 57.) As propostas de paz feitas por Tito foram persistentemente rejeitadas pelos teimosos líderes da cidade.

Por fim, as muralhas da cidade foram sistematicamente brechadas pelos romanos, e as tropas deles a invadiram. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 752) Apesar de ordens contrárias, o templo foi incendiado e devastado. Segundo Josefo, isto ocorreu no aniversário da destruição do primeiro templo, séculos antes, por Nabucodonosor. Seu relato também declara que foi incendiado o depósito dos arquivos, que abrigava os registros genealógicos das linhagens tribais e familiares, e os dos direitos de herança. (The Jewish War, VI, 250, 251 [iv, 5]; II, 426-428 [xvii, 6]; VI, 354 [vi, 3]) Assim, pôs-se um fim aos meios legais de se determinar a linhagem dos membros da tribo messiânica de Judá, e da tribo sacerdotal de Levi.

Em apenas 4 meses e 25 dias, de 3 de abril a 30 de agosto de 70 EC, efetuara-se a conquista. Assim, a tribulação, embora intensa, foi notavelmente curta. A atitude e as ações desarrazoadas dos judeus dentro da cidade, sem dúvida, contribuíram para esta brevidade. Embora Josefo apresente o total de mortos como 1.100.000, houve sobreviventes. Fizeram-se 97.000 cativos, muitos dos quais foram enviados como escravos ao Egito, ou foram mortos à espada ou por animais nos teatros das províncias romanas. Isto, também, cumpriu a profecia divina. — De 28:68.

A cidade inteira foi demolida, restando em pé apenas as torres do palácio de Herodes e uma parte do muro ocidental, como evidência para gerações posteriores da força defensiva que de nada valera. Josefo observa que, além destes remanescentes, "o restante da muralha que cercava a cidade foi tão completamente nivelado, que nada restou que fizesse que visitantes futuros acreditassem que já tivesse sido alguma vez habitada". [The Jewish War, VII, 3 [i, 1]) Um relevo no Arco de Tito, em Roma, apresenta os soldados romanos carregando com vasos sagrados do templo destruído. — Veja Mt 24:2; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 752.

Períodos Posteriores. Jerusalém permaneceu virtualmente desolada até por volta de 130 EC, quando o Imperador Adriano ordenou a construção duma nova cidade, chamada de Aelia Capitolina. Isto provocou uma revolta judaica por Bar-Kokhba (132-135 EC), a qual por um tempo foi bem-sucedida, mas depois foi esmagada. Por quase dois séculos, não se permitiu aos judeus entrarem na cidade construída pelos romanos. No quarto século, Helena, mãe de Constantino, o Grande, visitou Jerusalém e começou a identificação de muitos dos chamados lugares sagrados e santuários. Mais tarde, a cidade foi capturada pelos muçulmanos. Hoje, há duas edificações islâmicas no monte do Templo. Em fins do sétimo século, o Califa ʽAbd al-Malik ibn Marwan construiu o Domo do Rochedo no local do templo ou perto dele. Embora seja também chamado de mesquita, é na realidade um santuário. Ao sul do Domo do Rochedo encontra-se a mesquita el-Aqsa, construída pela primeira vez no oitavo século, porém grande parte reconstruída no século XI.

Importância da Cidade. Jerusalém era muito mais do que apenas a capital duma nação terrestre. Foi a única cidade em toda a terra em que Jeová Deus colocara seu nome. (1Rs 11:36) Depois que a Arca do Pacto, associada com a presença de Deus, foi transferida para lá, e, ainda mais, quando o santuário do templo, ou casa de Deus, foi ali construído, Jerusalém tornou-se figuradamente a 'residência' de Jeová, seu "lugar de descanso". (Sal 78:68, 69; 132:13, 14; 135:21; compare isso com 2Sa 7:1-7, 12, 13.) Visto que os reis da linhagem davídica eram os ungidos de Deus, sentando-se no "trono de Jeová" (1Cr 29:23; Sal 122:3-5), a própria Jerusalém também era chamada de "trono de Jeová"; e as tribos ou nações que se voltavam para ela em reconhecimento da soberania de Deus, na realidade, estavam sendo congregadas para o nome de Jeová. (Je 3:17; Sal 122:1-4; Is 27:13) Os que eram hostis a Jerusalém, ou aqueles que a combatiam, estavam na realidade opondo-se à expressão da soberania de Deus. Era certo que isto aconteceria, em vista da declaração profética em Gênesis 3:15.

Por conseguinte, Jerusalém representava a sede do governo ou reino típico de Deus, divinamente constituído. Dela procedia a lei de Deus, sua palavra e sua bênção. (Miq 4:2; Sal 128:5) Os que trabalhassem em prol da paz de Jerusalém, e para o seu bem, portanto, estariam trabalhando pelo êxito do propósito justo de Deus, para que Sua vontade prosperasse. (Sal 122:6-9) Embora Jerusalém estivesse situada entre as montanhas de Judá, e, sem dúvida, tivesse uma impressionante aparência, sua verdadeira eminência e beleza provinham do modo como Jeová Deus a honrava e glorificava, para que servisse como "coroa de beleza" para Ele. — Sal 48:1-3, 11-14; 50:2; Is 62:1-7.

Visto que o louvor de Jeová, e Sua vontade, são primariamente executados por suas criaturas inteligentes, não eram os prédios que constituíam a cidade que determinavam se Ele continuaria a usar a cidade, mas eram as pessoas nela, os governantes e os governados, os sacerdotes e o povo. (Sal 102:18-22; Is 26:1, 2) Enquanto estes eram fiéis, honrando o nome de Jeová por meio de suas palavras e pelo seu proceder na vida, Ele abençoava e defendia Jerusalém. (Sal 125:1, 2; Is 31:4, 5) O desfavor de Jeová logo sobreveio ao povo e aos seus reis devido ao proceder apóstata da maioria. Por este motivo, Jeová declarou seu propósito de rejeitar a cidade que levara Seu nome. (2Rs 21:12-15; 23:27) Ele removeria da cidade "o sustento e o apoio", resultando em ela se tornar cheia de tirania, de delinquência juvenil, de desrespeito pelos homens em posições honrosas; Jerusalém sofreria rebaixamento e grave humilhação. (Is 3:1-8, 16-26) Embora Jeová Deus restaurasse a cidade 70 anos depois de permitir a sua destruição por parte de Babilônia, tornando-a novamente linda como o alegre centro da adoração verdadeira na terra (Is 52:1-9; 65:17-19), o povo e seus líderes voltaram mais uma vez para seu proceder apóstata.

Jeová preservara a cidade até o tempo em que enviou seu Filho à terra. Ela tinha de estar ali para se cumprirem as profecias messiânicas. (Is 28:16; 52:7; Za 9:9) O proceder apóstata de Israel atingiu o clímax quando o Messias, Jesus Cristo, foi pregado numa estaca. (Veja Mt 21:33-41.) Tendo isto ocorrido em Jerusalém, instigado pelos líderes daquela nação, com apoio popular, tornou-se certa a rejeição completa e irreversível da cidade, por parte de Deus, como representando a Ele e levando Seu Nome. (Veja Mt 16:21; Lu 13:33-35.) Nem Jesus nem seus apóstolos predisseram qualquer restauração vindoura da Jerusalém terrestre e seu templo, por Deus, a acontecer depois da divinamente decretada destruição dela, que ocorreu em 70 EC.

Todavia, o nome Jerusalém continuou a ser usado como símbolo de algo maior do que a cidade terrena. O apóstolo Paulo, por inspiração divina, revelou haver uma "Jerusalém de cima", que ele chamou de "mãe" dos cristãos ungidos. (Gál 4:25, 26) Isto coloca a "Jerusalém de cima" na posição de esposa de Jeová Deus, o grande Pai e Dador da vida. Quando a Jerusalém terrestre era usada como a principal cidade da nação escolhida de Deus, ela também era mencionada como mulher, casada com Deus, ligada a ele pelos sagrados vínculos duma relação pactuada. (Is 51:17, 21, 22; 54:1, 5; 60:1, 14) Ela retratava ou representava assim a inteira congregação dos servos humanos de Deus. Por conseguinte, a "Jerusalém de cima" deve representar a inteira congregação de leais servos espirituais de Jeová.

Nova Jerusalém. Na Revelação (Apocalipse) inspirada, o apóstolo João registra informações sobre a "nova Jerusalém". (Re 3:12) Em visão, João vê esta "cidade santa" como que "descendo do céu, da parte de Deus, e preparada como noiva adornada para seu marido". Isto se relaciona com a visão que ele tem de "um novo céu e uma nova terra". Diz-se que esta "noiva" é "a esposa do Cordeiro". (Re 21:1-3, 9-27) Outros escritos apostólicos aplicam a mesma figura à congregação cristã dos ungidos. (2Co 11:2; Ef 5:21-32) Em Revelação, capítulo 14, "o Cordeiro", Cristo Jesus, é representado como estando em pé, no monte Sião, nome também associado com Jerusalém (veja 1Pe 2:6), e, junto com ele, há 144.000 que têm seu nome e o nome de seu Pai escrito na testa. — Re 14:1-5; veja NOVA JERUSALÉM.

A Jerusalém infiel. Visto que muita coisa dita sobre Jerusalém, nas Escrituras, é no sentido de condená-la, torna-se claro que apenas quando fiel é que Jerusalém simbolizava a parte celestial da organização de Jeová, e, às vezes, a verdadeira congregação cristã, "o Israel de Deus". (Gál 6:16) Quando infiel, era representada como prostituta e adúltera; tornava-se como os amorreus e como os hititas pagãos, que certa vez controlavam a cidade. (Ez 16:3, 15, 30-42) Como tal, só podia representar os apóstatas, aqueles que seguem um proceder de 'prostituta', de infidelidade ao Deus cujo nome afirmam levar. — Tg 4:4.

Assim se pode ver que o termo "Jerusalém" é empregado em sentido múltiplo, e em cada caso é preciso tomar em consideração o contexto para se obter o entendimento correto. — Veja TEMPOS DESIGNADOS DAS NAÇÕES.

JESAÍAS [Salvação de Jeová].

1. Descendente levítico de Moisés através de Eliézer, e antepassado de Selomote, designado por Davi como um dos seus tesoureiros. — 1Cr 23:15; 26:24-26.

2. Músico levita dos "filhos de Jedutum", escolhido por sortes para encabeçar o 8.º dos 24 grupos musicais de Davi. — 1Cr 25:1, 3, 15.

3. Benjamita, cujo descendente distante morava em Jerusalém quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 11:4, 7.

4. Cabeça da casa paterna de Elão, em cujo grupo havia 70 varões que acompanharam Esdras no retorno a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:1, 7.

5. Levita merarita que também retornou de Babilônia junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:1, 19.

6. Descendente do Rei Davi; neto do governador Zorobabel. — 1Cr 3:1, 19, 21.

JESANA [[Cidade] Velha]. Lugar mencionado junto com Mispá como indicação da localização da pedra erigida por Samuel e chamada "Ebenezer". (1Sa 7:12) Jesana era uma das cidades arrebatadas de Jeroboão, rei de Israel, pelo Rei Abias, de Judá (980-978 AEC). (2Cr 13:19) É considerada ser a Isana mencionada por Josefo como lugar da grande vitória de Herodes, o Grande, sobre o General Papos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIV, 458 [xv, 12]) O nome Isana parece ser preservado em Burj el-Isaneh, a uns 8 km ao NNE de Betel. Por causa disso, este lugar tem sido sugerido como possível identificação da antiga Jesana.

JESARELA. 'Filho de Asafe' alistado entre os músicos e cantores no tempo de Davi. (1Cr 25:1, 9, 14) Trata-se provavelmente de Asarelá. — 1Cr 25:2.

JESEBEABE [Que o Pai Continue a Morar; ou, possivelmente: Jeová Trouxe o Pai de Volta]. O sacerdote cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes para a 14.ª turma quando Davi repartiu os serviços sacerdotais. — 1Cr 24:6, 13.

JESER [Retidão]. Filho de Calebe, filho de Esrom; da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3-5, 18.

JESIMIEL [Que Deus Estabeleça (Designe); Deus Estabeleceu (Designou)]. Um dos maiorais simeonitas que, nos dias do Rei Ezequias, estenderam seu território ao L do vale de Gedor. — 1Cr 4:24, 34-41.

JESIMOM [Deserto].

1. Região desértica, erma, aparentemente existente na extremidade NE do Mar Morto, região em que talvez ficasse Bete-Jesimote. Pelo visto, o Pisga e o Peor dominavam o Jesimom. — Núm 21:20; 23:28; Jos 12:1-3.

2. Região perto de Zife, situada ao N do ermo de Maom. Parece que o Jesimom incluía parte do ermo de Judá e ficava a poucos quilômetros ao SE de Hébron. Nesta região de morros calvos, gredosos, Davi e seus homens esconderam-se do Rei Saul. — 1Sa 23:19, 24; 26:1, 3; veja JUDÁ, ERMO DE.

JESISAI [duma raiz que significa "idoso"]. Descendente de Gade. — 1Cr 5:11, 14.

JESOAÍAS. Maioral simeonita, sendo um daqueles que expandiram seu território às custas dos camitas, nos dias do Rei Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:24, 34-41.

JESSÉ [forma abreviada de Issias, significando "Jeová Faz Esquecer"; ou, possivelmente, forma abreviada de Abisai]. Pai do Rei Davi, da tribo de Judá; neto de Rute e Boaz, e elo na linhagem genealógica de Abraão até Jesus. (Ru 4:17, 22; Mt 1:5, 6; Lu 3:31, 32) Jessé tornou-se pai de oito filhos, um dos quais, pelo que parece, morreu antes de gerar quaisquer filhos, o que pode explicar a omissão de seu nome nas genealogias de Crônicas. (1Sa 16:10, 11; 17:12; 1Cr 2:12-15) As duas irmãs de Davi, Abigail e Zeruia, não são em parte alguma chamadas de filhas de Jessé, mas uma delas é chamada de "filha de Naás". (1Cr 2:16, 17; 2Sa 17:25) Pode ser que Naás tenha sido o anterior marido da esposa de Jessé, tornando as suas filhas meias-irmãs dos filhos de Jessé, a menos que Naás seja outro nome de Jessé, ou até mesmo o nome de sua esposa, como alguns têm sugerido.

Jessé era dono de ovelhas, que vivia em Belém. Depois que o Rei Saul se desviou da adoração verdadeira, Jeová enviou Samuel à casa de Jessé, a fim de ungir um dos filhos dele como rei. Jessé apresentou os seus sete filhos mais velhos, mas, quando Jeová não escolheu a nenhum destes, Jessé se viu obrigado a chamar o filho mais jovem, Davi, que pastoreava as ovelhas; este filho era o escolhido de Jeová. — 1Sa 16:1-13.

Quando Saul convocou Davi para tocar para ele a tranquilizadora harpa, o idoso Jessé mandou por meio dele uma generosa dádiva, e, mais tarde, deu permissão para que Davi permanecesse por algum tempo a serviço da corte de Saul. (1Sa 16:17-23; 17:12) Posteriormente, quando parece que Davi estava de novo cuidando das ovelhas, Jessé mandou-o levar algumas provisões para os três filhos mais velhos, que estavam no exército de Saul. (1Sa 17:13, 15, 17, 18, 20) Durante o tempo em que Davi estava proscrito por Saul, Jessé e sua esposa obtiveram asilo em Moabe. — 1Sa 22:3, 4.

Davi é muitas vezes chamado de "filho de Jessé", de modo zombeteiro por pessoas como Saul, Doegue, Nabal e Seba (1Sa 20:27, 30, 31; 22:7-9, 13; 25:10; 2Sa 20:1; 1Rs 12:16; 2Cr 10:16); porém, de forma mais respeitosa em outros casos, por exemplo, pelo próprio Davi, por Esdras e por Jeová Deus. — 1Sa 16:18; 17:58; 2Sa 23:1; 1Cr 10:14; 12:18; 29:26; Sal 72:20; Lu 3:32; At 13:22.

A promessa profética, de que "a raiz de Jessé" ficaria "posta de pé qual sinal de aviso para os povos" e julgaria em justiça, cumpre-se em Cristo Jesus, aquele que, por ser imortal, mantém viva a linhagem genealógica de Jessé. — Is 11:1-5, 10; Ro 15:8, 12.

JESUA [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Jeosué, que significa "Jeová É Salvação"].

1. Sacerdote arônico no tempo de Davi. A 9.ª das 24 turmas do sacerdócio arônico, conforme organizadas por Davi, foi designada à casa de Jesua. É provável que a mesma casa esteja alistada entre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — 1Cr 24:1, 11, 31; Esd 2:1, 36; Ne 7:39.

2. Um dos levitas designados para distribuir os dízimos e as contribuições nas cidades sacerdotais durante o reinado do Rei Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:15.

3. Israelita da família de Paate-Moabe, da qual alguns descendentes retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 6; Ne 7:11.

4. Sumo sacerdote (chamado Josué, em Ageu e Zacarias), filho de Jeozadaque e neto de Seraías.

(Esd 3:8; Ne 12:26; 1Cr 6:14) Era da casa de Eleazar. — Veja Esd 7:1-5 para ver a genealogia de Eleazar até Seraías.

Quando Nabucodonosor destruiu Jerusalém, matou Seraías, que era o sumo sacerdote na ocasião, e levou Jeozadaque cativo para Babilônia. (2Rs 25:18-21; 1Cr 6:14, 15) Jesua voltou de Babilônia em 537 AEC, junto com Zorobabel, e serviu como sumo sacerdote para o restante judeu restaurado. (Esd 2:2; 5:2; Ne 7:7; Ag 1:1) Assim, a linhagem do sumo sacerdote foi preservada por Jeová, de modo que Israel dispunha dos serviços de sumos sacerdotes desde a restauração até a vinda do Messias. Jesua tomou a dianteira, junto com Zorobabel, em erguer o altar, e então em reedificar o templo, incentivado pelos profetas Ageu e Zacarias. (Esd 3:2; 5:1, 2) Apoiou Zorobabel, em oposição aos que eram contra a reconstrução do templo. — Esd 4:1-3.

Alguns dos mais idosos dentre os israelitas que voltaram tinham visto a glória do templo de Salomão e tendiam a encarar o templo reconstruído como não sendo nada, em comparação. Ageu, o profeta, foi enviado para falar a Zorobabel e Josué (Jesua), dizendo-lhes que a glória dessa última casa se tornaria maior do que a da anterior. Jeová faria isso por trazer "as coisas desejáveis de todas as nações". — Ag 2:1-4, 7, 9.

O profeta Zacarias recebeu uma visão em que ele contemplou Josué (Jesua), o sumo sacerdote, em pé diante do anjo de Jeová, e Satanás à sua direita, para se lhe opor. Mudaram-se as roupas de "Josué", de roupas imundas para vestes majestosas, e um turbante limpo. Daí, falou-se a "Josué" sobre o servo de Deus, o Renovo. — Za 3:1-8.

Em outra ocasião, Jeová disse a Zacarias que pusesse uma coroa na cabeça de Josué (Jesua) e lhe dissesse: "Aqui está o homem cujo nome é Renovo. . . . E ele mesmo construirá o templo de Jeová, . . . e terá de tornar-se sacerdote sobre o seu trono." Esta profecia certamente se aplicava a alguém no futuro, pois, sob a Lei, o sacerdócio e o reinado eram estritamente separados, e o sumo sacerdote Josué nunca governou como rei sobre Israel. — Za 6:11-13.

5. Cabeça duma casa levítica, da qual alguns retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:40; Ne 7:43) Se não tiver sido outra pessoa do mesmo nome, então um representante da casa de Jesua assinou o "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado pelos sacerdotes, pelos príncipes e pelo povo, de andar na lei de Deus. Ele era filho de Azanias (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9) e provavelmente era o Jesua mencionado em Neemias 12:8, 24.

"Jozabade, filho de Jesua", um dos levitas a quem Esdras entregou a prata, o ouro e os utensílios para a casa de Deus, provavelmente era membro da casa deste Jesua. — Esd 8:33.

Ezer, filho de Jesua, príncipe de Mispá, que trabalhou sob as ordens de Neemias no conserto da muralha de Jerusalém, talvez fosse da mesma família. — Ne 3:19.

6. Um dos supervisores levitas da reconstrução do templo. — Esd 3:9.

7. Um dos levitas que liam e explicavam a Lei ao povo e tomavam a dianteira na adoração, sob a direção de Esdras. Talvez fosse da mesma casa que o N.º 5. — Ne 8:7; 9:4, 5.

8. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá, onde alguns do repatriado restante de judeus moravam. Seu lugar é identificado por alguns peritos como Tell es-Saʽweh (Tel Yeshuʽa), a uns 15 km ao ENE de Berseba. (Ne 11:25, 26) Talvez se trate da Sema de Josué 15:26, e possivelmente da Seba de Josué 19:2.

JESURUM [O Reto]. Título honorífico de Israel. Na Septuaginta grega, "Jesurum" torna-se um termo afetuoso, sendo traduzido "amado". O designativo "Jesurum" devia lembrar Israel da sua chamada como povo pactuado de Jeová, e, assim, da sua obrigação de permanecer reto. (De 33:5, 26; Is 44:2) Em Deuteronômio 32:15, o nome Jesurum é usado de forma irônica. Em vez de viver em conformidade com o seu nome Jesurum, Israel se tornou insubordinado, abandonou Aquele que o fez e desprezou seu Salvador.

JESUS [forma lat. da gr. I·e·soús, que corresponde à hebr. Ye·shú·aʽ ou Yehoh·shú·aʽ, e significa "Jeová É Salvação"]. O historiador judeu Josefo, do primeiro século EC, menciona umas 12 pessoas, fora daquelas no registro bíblico, que tinham este nome. Ele aparece também em escritos apócrifos dos séculos finais do período AEC. Portanto, parece que não era um nome incomum durante aquele período.

1. O nome I·e·soús aparece no texto grego de Atos 7:45 e de Hebreus 4:8, e se aplica a Josué, o líder de Israel depois da morte de Moisés. — Veja JOSUÉ N.º 1.

2. Antepassado de Jesus Cristo, evidentemente da linhagem materna. (Lu 3:29) Alguns manuscritos antigos rezam neste ponto "José(s)". — Veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.

3. Jesus Cristo. — Veja JESUS CRISTO.

4. Cristão, evidentemente judeu, e colaborador de Paulo. Era também chamado Justo. — Col 4:11.

JESUS CRISTO. Nome e título do Filho de Deus, desde o tempo de sua unção, enquanto estava na Terra.

O nome Jesus (gr.: I·e·soús) corresponde ao nome hebraico Jesua (ou, na forma mais plena, Jeosué), que significa "Jeová É Salvação". Este nome, em si, não era incomum, muitos homens tendo sido assim chamados naquele período. Por este motivo, as pessoas muitas vezes acrescentavam uma identificação adicional, dizendo: "Jesus, o nazareno." (Mr 10:47; At 2:22) Cristo deriva do termo grego Khri·stós, o equivalente do hebraico Ma·shi·ahh (Messias), e significa "Ungido". Ao passo que a expressão "ungido" foi corretamente aplicada a outros antes de Jesus, tais como Moisés, Arão e Davi (He 11:24-26; Le 4:3; 8:12; 2Sa 22:51), a posição, o cargo ou o serviço para o qual tais pessoas foram ungidas apenas prefiguravam a posição, o cargo e o serviço superiores de Jesus Cristo. Por conseguinte, Jesus é, de modo destacado e ímpar, "o Cristo, o Filho do Deus vivente". — Mt 16:16; veja CRISTO; MESSIAS.

Existência Pré-Humana. A vida da pessoa que se tornou conhecida como Jesus Cristo não começou aqui na Terra. Ele mesmo falou da sua vida celeste pré-humana. (Jo 3:13; 6:38, 62; 8:23, 42, 58) João 1:1, 2, fornece o nome celeste daquele que se tornou Jesus, dizendo: "No princípio era a Palavra ["Verbo", Al; CBC; gr.: Lógos], e a Palavra estava com o Deus, e a Palavra era um deus ["era divina", AT; Mo; ou "de natureza divina", Böhmer; Stage (ambas em alemão)]. Este estava no princípio com o Deus." Visto que Jeová é eterno e não teve princípio (Sal 90:2; Re 15:3), estar a Palavra com Deus desde o "princípio" neste caso deve referir-se ao início das obras criativas de Jeová. Isto é confirmado por outros textos que identificam Jesus como "o primogênito de toda a criação", "o princípio da criação de Deus". (Col 1:15; Re 1:1; 3:14) Assim, as Escrituras identificam a Palavra (Jesus, em sua existência pré-humana), como a primeira criação de Deus, seu Filho primogênito.

Que Jeová era realmente o Pai ou Dador de vida deste Filho primogênito, e, portanto, que este Filho era mesmo uma criatura de Deus, é evidente das declarações do próprio Jesus. Ele indicou Deus como a Fonte da sua vida, dizendo: "Eu vivo por causa do Pai." De acordo com o contexto, isto significava que sua vida resultara do Pai ou que fora causada por seu Pai, assim como a obtenção de vida, por homens morredouros, resultaria de terem fé no sacrifício resgatador de Jesus. — Jo 6:56, 57.

Se os cálculos feitos pelos cientistas modernos sobre a idade do Universo físico forem ao menos aproximadamente corretos, a existência de Jesus como criatura espiritual começou bilhões de anos antes da criação do primeiro humano. (Veja Miq 5:2.) Este Filho espiritual, primogênito, foi usado pelo Pai na criação de todas as outras coisas. (Jo 1:3; Col 1:16, 17) Isto incluiria os milhões de outros filhos espirituais da família celestial de Jeová Deus (Da 7:9, 10; Re 5:11), bem como o Universo físico e as criaturas originalmente produzidas nele. Logicamente, foi a este Filho primogênito que Jeová disse: "Façamos o homem à nossa imagem, segundo a nossa semelhança." (Gên 1:26) Todas estas outras coisas criadas não somente foram criadas "por intermédio dele", mas também "para ele", como o Primogênito de Deus e o "herdeiro de todas as coisas". — Col 1:16; He 1:2.

Não Concriador. A participação do Filho nas obras de criação, porém, não o tornara Concriador de seu Pai. O poder de criação procedia de Deus por meio do seu espírito santo, ou força ativa. (Gên 1:2; Sal 33:6) E visto que Jeová é a Fonte de toda a vida, toda a criação animada, visível e invisível, deve sua vida a ele. (Sal 36:9) Então, o Filho, em vez de ser Concriador, era o agente ou instrumento por meio de quem Jeová, o Criador, operava. O próprio Jesus atribuiu a criação a Deus, assim como fazem também todas as Escrituras. — Mt 19:4-6; veja CRIAÇÃO.

Sabedoria personificada. O que se encontra registrado nas Escrituras a respeito da Palavra ajusta-se notavelmente à descrição fornecida em Provérbios 8:22-31. Ali, a sabedoria é personificada, apresentada como sendo capaz de falar e agir. (Pr 8:1) Muitos dos escritores dos primeiros séculos da Era Comum, que professavam ser cristãos, entenderam que esta parte se referia simbolicamente ao Filho de Deus na sua condição pré-humana. Em vista dos textos já considerados, não se pode negar que este Filho foi 'produzido' por Jeová "como princípio do seu caminho, a mais antiga das suas realizações de há muito", nem que o Filho estivera 'ao lado de Jeová como mestre de obras' durante a criação da Terra, conforme descrita nestes versículos de Provérbios. É verdade que em hebraico, em que os substantivos têm gênero (assim como em português e em outras línguas), a palavra "sabedoria" é sempre feminina. Continuaria assim mesmo que a sabedoria fosse personificada, e isso não impediria que a sabedoria fosse usada figurativamente para representar o Filho primogênito de Deus. A palavra grega para "amor", na expressão "Deus é amor" (1Jo 4:8), também é feminina, mas isto não torna Deus feminino. Salomão, o principal escritor de Provérbios (Pr 1:1), aplicou a si mesmo o título qo·hé·leth (congregante; Ec 1:1), e esta palavra também é feminina.

A sabedoria se manifesta apenas quando de algum modo é expressa. A sabedoria do próprio Deus foi expressa na criação (Pr 3:19, 20), mas por meio do Filho dele. (Veja 1Co 8:6.) Assim, também, o propósito sábio de Deus com relação à humanidade é manifestado mediante Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, ou resumido nele. De modo que o apóstolo podia dizer que Cristo representa "o poder de Deus e a sabedoria de Deus", e que Cristo Jesus "se tornou para nós sabedoria de Deus, também justiça e santificação, e livramento por meio de resgate". — 1Co 1:24, 30; compare isso com 1Co 2:7, 8; Pr 8:1, 10, 18-21.

Em que sentido ele é o "Filho unigênito". Ser Jesus chamado de "Filho unigênito" (Jo 1:14; 3:16, 18; 1Jo 4:9) não significa que as outras criaturas espirituais produzidas não eram filhos de Deus, pois também são chamados filhos. (Gên 6:2, 4; Jó 1:6; 2:1; 38:4-7) No entanto, por ele ser a única criação direta de seu Pai, o Filho primogênito era ímpar, diferente de todos os outros filhos de Deus, os quais foram criados ou gerados por Jeová por meio daquele Filho primogênito. De modo que "a Palavra" era o "Filho unigênito" de Jeová num sentido especial, assim como Isaque era o "unigênito" de Abraão num sentido especial (seu pai já tendo outro filho, mas não por meio da sua esposa, Sara). — He 11:17; Gên 16:15.

Por que é chamado "a Palavra". O nome (ou talvez o título) "a Palavra" (Jo 1:1) aparentemente identifica a função que o Filho primogênito de Deus desempenhava depois de outras criaturas inteligentes terem sido formadas. Em Êxodo 4:16 encontra-se uma expressão similar, Jeová ali dizendo a Moisés sobre seu irmão Arão: "E ele tem de falar por ti ao povo; e tem de dar-se que ele te servirá de boca e tu lhe servirás de Deus." Como porta-voz do principal representante de Deus na Terra, Arão servia de "boca" para Moisés. O mesmo se dá com a Palavra, ou Logos, que se tornou Jesus Cristo. Jeová evidentemente usou seu Filho para transmitir informações e instruções a outros da sua família de filhos espirituais, assim como usou este Filho para transmitir Sua mensagem aos humanos na Terra. Mostrando que era a Palavra ou Porta-Voz de Deus, Jesus disse aos seus ouvintes judeus: "O que eu ensino não é meu, mas pertence àquele que me enviou. Se alguém desejar fazer a Sua vontade, saberá a respeito do ensino se é de Deus ou se falo de minha própria iniciativa." — Jo 7:16, 17; compare isso com 12:50; e 18:37.

Sem dúvida, em muitas ocasiões durante a sua existência pré-humana como a Palavra, Jesus atuou como Porta-Voz de Jeová para pessoas na Terra. Embora certos textos mencionem Jeová como que falando diretamente a humanos, outros textos tornam claro que ele fazia isso por meio dum representante angélico. (Compare Êx 3:2-4 com At 7:30, 35; veja também Gên 16:7-11, 13; 22:1, 11, 12, 15-18.) É razoável que, na maioria desses casos, Deus tenha falado por meio da Palavra. Fez isso provavelmente no Éden, pois em duas das três ocasiões em que se menciona Deus falando ali, o registro mostra especificamente que alguém estava com Ele, sem dúvida, seu Filho. (Gên 1:26-30; 2:16, 17; 3:8-19, 22) O anjo que guiou Israel através do ermo e a cuja voz os israelitas deviam obedecer estritamente, porque 'o nome de Jeová estava nele', portanto, pode ter sido o Filho de Deus, a Palavra. — Êx 23:20-23; compare isso com Jos 5:13-15.

Isto não significa que a Palavra tenha sido o único representante angélico por meio de quem Jeová falou. As declarações inspiradas em Atos 7:53, Gálatas 3:19 e Hebreus 2:2, 3, tornam claro que o pacto da Lei foi transmitido a Moisés por outros filhos angélicos de Deus, não por seu Primogênito.

Jesus continua a levar o nome de "A Palavra de Deus" desde o seu retorno à glória celestial. — Re 19:13, 16.

Por que se referem algumas traduções da Bíblia a Jesus como "Deus", ao passo que outras dizem que ele era "um deus"?

Algumas traduções vertem João 1:1 como dizendo: "No princípio era o Verbo [a Palavra], e o Verbo estava com Deus, e o Verbo era Deus." O texto grego reza literalmente: "No princípio era a palavra, e a palavra estava para com o deus, e deus era a palavra." O tradutor tem de suprir as maiúsculas conforme necessário no idioma para o qual traduz o texto. É evidentemente próprio escrever "Deus" com inicial maiúscula ao traduzir a frase "o deus", visto que deve identificar o Deus Todo-Poderoso com quem a Palavra estava. Mas, dar inicial maiúscula à palavra "deus" no segundo caso não tem a mesma justificativa.

A Tradução do Novo Mundo verte este texto: "No princípio era a Palavra, e a Palavra estava com o Deus, e a Palavra era [um] deus." É verdade que no texto original grego não há ali um artigo indefinido (correspondente a "um"). Mas isto não significa que não deva ser usado na tradução, porque o grego coiné, ou comum, não possuía artigo indefinido. Por isso, em todas as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, os tradutores são obrigados a usar, ou não usar, o artigo indefinido segundo o seu entendimento do sentido do texto. Todas as traduções dessas Escrituras usam o artigo indefinido centenas de vezes; no entanto, a maioria não o usa em João 1:1. Não obstante, seu uso na tradução deste texto tem base sólida.

Primeiro, deve ser notado que o próprio texto mostra que a Palavra (ou o Verbo) estava "com o Deus", portanto, não podia ser o Deus, isto é, o Deus Todo-Poderoso. (Note também o v 2, que seria desnecessário se o v 1 realmente mostrasse que a Palavra era Deus.) Além disso, a palavra para "deus" (gr.: the·ós), na segunda ocorrência no versículo, está significativamente sem o artigo definido "o" (gr.: ho). Sobre este fato declara Ernst Haenchen, num comentário sobre o Evangelho de João (capítulos 1-6): "[the·ós] e [ho the·ós] ('deus, divino' e 'o Deus') não eram a mesma coisa, neste período. . . . Na realidade, para o . . . Evangelista, apenas o Pai era 'Deus' ([ho the·ós]; cf. 17:3); 'o Filho' estava subordinado a ele (cf. 14:28). Mas, isto é apenas aludido nesta passagem, porque aqui se dá ênfase à proximidade entre eles. . . . Era bem possível, no monoteísmo judaico e cristão, falar de seres divinos que existiam ao lado de Deus e abaixo dele, mas não eram idênticos a ele. Fil. 2:6-10 prova isso. Nesta passagem, Paulo retrata exatamente tal ser divino, que mais tarde se tornou homem em Jesus Cristo . . . Assim, tanto em Filipenses como em João 1:1, a questão não é uma de relação dialética entre dois-em-um, mas de uma união pessoal de duas entidades." — John 1 (João 1), traduzido para o inglês por R. W. Funk, 1984, pp. 109, 110.

Depois de apresentar a tradução de João 1:1c como "e divina (da categoria de divindade) era a Palavra", Haenchen prossegue: "Neste caso, o verbo 'era' ([en]) simplesmente expressa o predicado. E, concordemente, é preciso observar mais de perto o substantivo usado como predicativo: [the·ós] não é o mesmo que [ho the·ós] ('divino' não é o mesmo que 'Deus')." (pp. 110, 111) Desenvolvendo ainda mais este ponto, Philip B. Harner salientou que a construção gramatical de João 1:1 envolve um predicativo anartro, isto é, um substantivo predicativo sem o artigo definido "o", precedendo ao verbo, construção que primariamente é qualificativa em sentido e indica que "o logos tem a natureza de theos". Ele declarou adicionalmente: "Em João 1:1, acho que a força qualificativa do predicativo se destaca tanto, que o substantivo [the·ós] não pode ser considerado como determinativo." (Journal of Biblical Literature [Revista de Literatura Bíblica], 1973, pp. 85, 87) Outros tradutores, também reconhecendo que o termo grego tem força qualificativa e descreve a natureza da Palavra, portanto, vertem a frase: "a Palavra era divina". — AT; Sd; compare isso com Mo; veja apêndice da NM, p. 1519.

As Escrituras Hebraicas deixam claro, de forma coerente, que só existe um único Deus Todo-Poderoso, o Criador de todas as coisas e o Altíssimo, cujo nome é Jeová. (Gên 17:1; Is 45:18; Sal 83:18) Por esse motivo, Moisés podia dizer à nação de Israel: "Jeová, nosso Deus, é um só Jeová. E tens de amar a Jeová, teu Deus, de todo o teu coração, e de toda a tua alma, e de toda a tua força vital." (De 6:4, 5) As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs não contradizem este ensino, que tinha sido aceito e era crido pelos servos de Deus durante milhares de anos, mas, antes, o apoiam. (Mr 12:29; Ro 3:29, 30; 1Co 8:6; Ef 4:4-6; 1Ti 2:5) O próprio Jesus Cristo disse: "O Pai é maior do que eu", e referiu-se ao Pai como seu Deus, "o único Deus verdadeiro". (Jo 14:28; 17:3; 20:17; Mr 15:34; Re 1:1; 3:12) Em numerosas ocasiões, Jesus expressou sua inferioridade e subordinação ao Pai. (Mt 4:9, 10; 20:23; Lu 22:41, 42; Jo 5:19; 8:42; 13:16) Mesmo após a ascensão de Jesus ao céu, seus apóstolos continuaram a apresentar o mesmo quadro. — 1Co 11:3; 15:20, 24-28; 1Pe 1:3; 1Jo 2:1; 4:9, 10.

Estes fatos fornecem sólido apoio para a tradução "a Palavra era um deus", em João 1:1. A posição proeminente da Palavra como Primogênito entre as criaturas de Deus, como aquele por meio de quem Deus criou todas as coisas e como Porta-Voz de Deus, oferece uma base real para ele ser classificado como "um deus" ou poderoso. A profecia messiânica em Isaías 9:6 predisse que ele seria chamado de "Deus Poderoso", embora não o Todo-Poderoso, e que ele seria o "Pai Eterno" de todos os privilegiados a viver como seus súditos. O zelo de seu próprio Pai, "Jeová dos exércitos", faria isso. (Is 9:7) Certamente, se o Adversário de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, é chamado de "deus" (2Co 4:4), por causa do seu predomínio sobre homens e demônios (1Jo 5:19; Lu 11:14-18), então, com motivo e propriedade muito maior é o Filho primogênito de Deus chamado de "um deus", "o deus unigênito", como o chamam os manuscritos mais fidedignos de João 1:18.

Quando opositores o acusaram de 'fazer-se um deus', a resposta de Jesus foi a seguinte: "Não está escrito na vossa Lei: 'Eu disse: "Vós sois deuses"'? Se ele chamou 'deuses' aos contra quem se dirigia a palavra de Deus, e, contudo, a Escritura não pode ser anulada, dizeis a mim, a quem o Pai santificou e mandou ao mundo: 'Blasfemas', porque eu disse: Sou Filho de Deus?" (Jo 10:31-37) Jesus citava ali o Salmo 82, em que juízes humanos, que Deus condenou por não executarem a justiça, eram chamados de "deuses". (Sal 82:1, 2, 6, 7) Assim, Jesus mostrava a falta de razoabilidade de o acusarem de blasfêmia por ter declarado que era, não Deus, mas o Filho de Deus.

Tal acusação de blasfêmia surgiu por Jesus ter dito: "Eu e o Pai somos um." (Jo 10:30) Que isto não significava que Jesus pretendia ser o Pai, ou ser Deus, é evidente da sua própria réplica, já considerada em parte. A unidade a que Jesus se referia deve ser entendida em harmonia com o contexto da sua declaração. Ele falava de suas obras, e do seu cuidado pelas "ovelhas" que o seguiriam. Suas obras, bem como suas palavras, demonstravam que havia união, e não desunião e desarmonia, entre ele e seu Pai, ponto este que sua resposta passou a enfatizar. (Jo 10:25, 26, 37, 38; compare isso com 4:34; e 5:30; 6:38-40; 8:16-18.) Com respeito às suas "ovelhas", ele e seu Pai estavam igualmente unidos em proteger tais pessoas semelhantes a ovelhas e em guiá-las para a vida eterna. (Jo 10:27-29; compare isso com Ez 34:23, 24.) A oração de Jesus em favor da união de todos os seus discípulos, inclusive os futuros, demonstra que a unicidade ou união entre Jesus e seu Pai não se referia à identidade de pessoa, mas ao propósito e à ação. Deste modo, os discípulos de Jesus podiam 'todos ser um', assim como ele e seu Pai são um. — Jo 17:20-23.

Em harmonia com isto, Jesus, ao responder a uma pergunta de Tomé, disse: "Se vós me tivésseis conhecido, teríeis também conhecido meu Pai; deste momento em diante vós o conheceis e o tendes visto", e, em resposta a uma pergunta de Filipe, Jesus acrescentou: "Quem me tem visto, tem visto também o Pai." (Jo 14:5-9) De novo, a explicação seguinte de Jesus mostra que isto se dava porque ele, Jesus, representava fielmente o Pai, falava as palavras do Pai e fazia as obras do Pai. (Jo 14:10, 11; compare isso com Jo 12:28, 44-49.) Foi nesta ocasião, na noite anterior à sua morte, que Jesus disse a estes mesmos discípulos: "O Pai é maior do que eu." — Jo 14:28.

À luz de outros exemplos bíblicos pode-se também entender como os discípulos podiam 'ver' o Pai em Jesus. Jacó, por exemplo, disse a Esaú: "Vi a tua face como se visse a face de Deus, visto que me recebeste com prazer." Ele disse isto porque a reação de Esaú se harmonizava com a oração que Jacó fizera a Deus. (Gên 33:9-11; 32:9-12) Depois de a interrogação de Jó por Deus, de dentro dum vendaval, ter esclarecido o entendimento deste homem, Jó disse: "Em rumores ouvi a teu respeito, mas agora é o meu próprio olho que te vê." (Jó 38:1; 42:5; veja também Jz 13:21, 22.) Os 'olhos de seu coração' tinham sido iluminados. (Veja Ef 1:18.) Que a declaração de Jesus sobre ver o Pai devia ser entendida figurativamente, e não de forma literal, evidencia-se na sua própria declaração em João 6:45, bem como no fato de que João, muito depois da morte de Jesus, escreveu: "Nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus; o deus unigênito, que está na posição junto ao seio do Pai, é quem o tem explicado." — Jo 1:18; 1Jo 4:12.

Que queria Tomé dizer ao se dirigir a Jesus com: "Meu Senhor e meu Deus"?

Na ocasião em que Jesus apareceu a Tomé e aos outros apóstolos, removendo as dúvidas de Tomé sobre a ressurreição de Jesus, Tomé, então já convencido disto, exclamou a Jesus: "Meu Senhor e meu Deus! [literalmente: "O Senhor de mim e o Deus (ho The·ós) de mim!"]." (Jo 20:24-29) Alguns peritos têm encarado esta expressão como uma exclamação de espanto falada a Jesus, mas realmente dirigida a Deus, seu Pai. Todavia, outros afirmam que o grego original exige que as palavras sejam consideradas como dirigidas a Jesus. Mesmo assim, a expressão "Meu Senhor e meu Deus!" ainda teria de se harmonizar com o restante das Escrituras inspiradas. Visto que o registro mostra que Jesus enviara anteriormente a seus discípulos a mensagem: "Eu ascendo para junto de meu Pai e vosso Pai, e para meu Deus e vosso Deus", não existe motivo para se crer que Tomé imaginasse que Jesus fosse o Deus Todo-Poderoso. (Jo 20:17) O próprio João, ao narrar o encontro de Tomé com o ressuscitado Jesus, diz o seguinte sobre este e outros relatos similares: "Mas, estes foram escritos para que creiais que Jesus é o Cristo, o Filho de Deus, e que, por crerdes, tenhais vida por meio do seu nome." — Jo 20:30, 31.

Portanto, Tomé pode ter-se dirigido a Jesus como "meu Deus" no sentido de Jesus ser "um deus", embora não o Deus Todo-Poderoso, não "o único Deus verdadeiro", a quem Tomé tinha muitas vezes ouvido Jesus orar. (Jo 17:1-3) Ou, talvez se tivesse dirigido a Jesus como "meu Deus" dum modo similar às expressões feitas por seus antepassados, registradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas, com as quais Tomé estava familiarizado. Em várias ocasiões, quando um mensageiro angélico de Jeová visitava certas pessoas ou se dirigia a elas, tais pessoas, ou às vezes o escritor bíblico que registrava tal acontecimento, respondiam ao mensageiro angélico, ou falavam dele, como se fosse Jeová Deus. (Veja Gên 16:7-11, 13; 18:1-5, 22-33; 32:24-30; Jz 6:11-15; 13:20-22.) Isto se dava porque o mensageiro angélico atuava por Jeová, como Seu representante, falando em Seu nome, talvez usando o pronome pessoal na primeira pessoa do singular e chegando mesmo a dizer: "Eu sou o verdadeiro Deus." (Gên 31:11-13; Jz 2:1-5) Tomé, portanto, talvez se tenha referido a Jesus como "meu Deus" neste sentido, reconhecendo ou confessando que Jesus era o representante e porta-voz do verdadeiro Deus. Seja qual for o caso, é certo que as palavras de Tomé não contradizem a declaração expressa de Jesus, que ele mesmo tinha ouvido, a saber, de que "o Pai é maior do que eu". — Jo 14:28.

Seu Nascimento na Terra. Antes do nascimento de Jesus na Terra, anjos tinham aparecido neste planeta em forma humana, pelo que parece materializando corpos apropriados para a ocasião, daí desmaterializando-os depois de terem concluído tais tarefas. (Gên 19:1-3; Jz 6:20-22; 13:15-20) Continuaram assim a ser criaturas espirituais, apenas utilizando temporariamente um corpo físico. Isto, porém, não se deu com a vinda do Filho de Deus à Terra para se tornar o homem Jesus. João 1:14 diz que "a Palavra se tornou carne e residiu entre nós". Por este motivo, ele podia chamar-se de "o Filho do homem". (Jo 1:51; 3:14, 15) Alguns chamam a atenção para a expressão "residiu [literalmente: "habitou em tenda"] entre nós", e afirmam que isto mostra que Jesus não era humano genuíno, mas sim uma encarnação. No entanto, o apóstolo Pedro usa uma expressão similar a respeito de si mesmo, e Pedro, obviamente, não era uma encarnação. — 2Pe 1:13, 14.

O Registro inspirado diz: "Mas, o nascimento de Jesus Cristo deu-se da seguinte maneira: Durante o tempo em que sua mãe Maria estava prometida em casamento a José, ela foi achada grávida por espírito santo, antes de se unirem." (Mt 1:18) Anteriormente, o mensageiro angélico de Jeová informara a jovem virgem, Maria, de que ela 'conceberia em sua madre' em resultado de o espírito santo de Deus descer sobre ela e o Seu poder a encobrir. (Lu 1:30, 31, 34, 35) A criança que, com o tempo, nasceria, continuaria sendo a mesma pessoa que tinha morado no céu como a Palavra. Mas essa criança seria de fato filho de Maria, e, portanto, um descendente genuíno dos antepassados dela, Abraão, Isaque, Jacó, Judá e o Rei Davi, e o herdeiro legítimo das promessas divinas feitas a eles. (Gên 22:15-18; 26:24; 28:10-14; 49:10; 2Sa 7:8, 11-16; Lu 3:23-34; veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.) É provável, portanto, que a criança nascida se parecesse com sua mãe judia em certas características físicas.

Maria era descendente do pecador Adão, por isso, era imperfeita e pecaminosa. Por conseguinte, suscita-se a questão de como Jesus, "primogênito" de Maria (Lu 2:7), podia ser perfeito e isento de pecado no seu organismo físico. Embora os atuais geneticistas tenham aprendido muito sobre as leis da hereditariedade, e sobre características dominantes e recessivas, não têm tido nenhuma experiência para saber o resultado da unificação da perfeição com a imperfeição, como no caso da concepção de Jesus. Qualquer que fosse o caso, a operação do espírito santo de Deus naquela ocasião garantiu o êxito do propósito de Deus. Conforme o anjo Gabriel explicou a Maria, o "poder do Altíssimo" a encobriu, de modo que aquele que nasceu dela era santo, o Filho de Deus. O espírito santo de Deus formou, por assim dizer, um muro protetor, de modo que nenhuma imperfeição ou força nociva pudesse prejudicar ou causar defeitos no embrião em desenvolvimento, desde a concepção. — Lu 1:35.

Visto que foi o espírito santo de Deus que tornou possível tal nascimento, Jesus devia sua vida humana a seu Pai celestial, e não a qualquer homem, tal como seu pai adotivo, José. (Mt 2:13-15; Lu 3:23) Como Hebreus 10:5 declara, Jeová Deus 'preparou-lhe um corpo', e Jesus, desde a concepção, era realmente "imaculado, separado dos pecadores". — He 7:26; compare isso com Jo 8:46; 1Pe 2:21, 22.

A profecia messiânica em Isaías 52:14, que fala da "desfiguração quanto à sua aparência", portanto, tem de aplicar-se apenas em sentido figurado a Jesus, o Messias. (Veja o v 7 do mesmo capítulo.) Embora perfeito em forma física, a mensagem da verdade e da justiça que Jesus Cristo intrepidamente proclamava tornava-o repulsivo aos olhos dos opositores hipócritas, que afirmavam ver nele um agente de Belzebu, um homem possesso de demônio, uma fraude blasfema. (Mt 12:24; 27:39-43; Jo 8:48; 15:17-25) De modo similar, a mensagem proclamada pelos discípulos de Jesus fez posteriormente que se tornassem "cheiro fragrante" de vida para as pessoas receptivas, mas um cheiro de morte para aqueles que rejeitavam a sua mensagem. — 2Co 2:14-16.

Tempo do Nascimento, Duração do Ministério. Jesus nasceu, evidentemente, no mês de etanim (setembro-outubro) do ano 2 AEC, foi batizado por volta da mesma época do ano, em 29 EC, e morreu cerca das 15 horas de sexta-feira, dia 14, do mês primaveril de nisã (março-abril) de 33 EC. A base destas datas é a seguinte:

Jesus nasceu aproximadamente seis meses depois do nascimento de seu parente, João (o Batizador), durante o governo do imperador romano César Augusto (31 AEC–14 EC) e a governança da Síria por Quirino (veja REGISTRO para obter as datas prováveis da administração de Quirino), e perto do fim do reinado de Herodes, o Grande, sobre a Judeia. — Mt 2:1, 13, 20-22; Lu 1:24-31, 36; 2:1, 2, 7.

Seu nascimento em relação com a morte de Herodes. Embora a data da morte de Herodes esteja sujeita a debates, existe considerável evidência que aponta para o ano 1 AEC. (Veja HERODES N.º 1 [Data da Sua Morte]; CRONOLOGIA [Eclipses lunares].) Vários eventos ocorreram entre a época do nascimento de Jesus e a morte de Herodes. Estes incluíam a circuncisão de Jesus no oitavo dia (Lu 2:21); ser ele levado ao templo em Jerusalém, 40 dias após o seu nascimento (Lu 2:22, 23; Le 12:1-4, 8); a viagem dos astrólogos "das regiões orientais" a Belém (onde Jesus não mais estava numa manjedoura, mas numa casa — Mt 2:1-11; compare isso com Lu 2:7, 15, 16); a fuga de José e Maria para o Egito, com a criancinha (Mt 2:13-15); seguido por Herodes dar-se conta de que os astrólogos não haviam cumprido suas instruções, e a subsequente matança de todos os meninos com menos de dois anos em Belém e seus distritos (o que indicava que Jesus nessa ocasião não era mais um bebê recém-nascido). (Mt 2:16-18) Ter o nascimento de Jesus ocorrido no outono de 2 AEC dava tempo para estes eventos entre o seu nascimento e a morte de Herodes, provavelmente em 1 AEC. Existem, porém, motivos adicionais para se situar o nascimento de Jesus em 2 AEC.

Relação com o ministério de João. Em Lucas 3:1-3 encontra-se base adicional para as datas fornecidas no início desta seção, mostrando que João, o Batizador, começou a pregar e a batizar no "décimo quinto ano do reinado de Tibério César". Este 15.º ano decorreu da última metade de 28 EC até agosto ou setembro de 29 EC. (Veja TIBÉRIO.) Em algum ponto do ministério de João, Jesus se dirigiu a ele e foi batizado. Quando Jesus, depois, começou o seu próprio ministério, ele tinha "cerca de trinta anos de idade". (Lu 3:21-23) Aos 30 anos, idade em que Davi se tornou rei, Jesus não mais estaria sujeito a seus pais carnais. — 2Sa 5:4, 5; compare isso com Lu 2:51.

De acordo com Números 4:1-3, 22, 23, 29, 30, aqueles que entravam no serviço do santuário, sob o pacto da Lei, tinham 'trinta anos ou mais'. É razoável que João, o Batizador, que era levita e filho dum sacerdote, iniciasse seu ministério nessa mesma idade, não no templo, naturalmente, mas na designação especial que Jeová delineou para ele. (Lu 1:1-17, 67, 76-79) A menção específica (duas vezes) da diferença de idade entre João e Jesus, e a correlação entre os aparecimentos e as mensagens do anjo de Jeová, ao anunciar os nascimentos dos dois filhos (Lu 1), fornecem ampla base para se crer que seus ministérios seguiram um cronograma similar, isto é, que o início do ministério de João (como precursor de Jesus) foi seguido uns seis meses depois pelo início do ministério de Jesus.

Nesta base, o nascimento de João ocorreu 30 anos antes de ele iniciar seu ministério, no 15.º ano de Tibério, e, por isso, em algum ponto entre a última metade de 3 AEC e agosto ou setembro de 2 AEC, seguindo-se o nascimento de Jesus cerca de seis meses depois.

Evidência a favor dum ministério de três anos e meio. Por causa da remanescente evidência cronológica, pode-se chegar a uma conclusão ainda mais definitiva. Esta evidência diz respeito à duração do ministério de Jesus e ao tempo da sua morte. A profecia em Daniel 9:24-27 (considerada plenamente no artigo SETENTA SEMANAS) indica o aparecimento do Messias no começo da 70.ª "semana" de anos (Da 9:25), e sua morte sacrificial no meio ou "na metade" da última semana, desta forma pondo fim à validez dos sacrifícios e das ofertas sob o pacto da Lei. (Da 9:26, 27; compare isso com He 9:9-14; 10:1-10.) Isto significaria um ministério de três anos e meio (a metade duma "semana" de sete anos) para Jesus Cristo.

Para que o ministério de Jesus pudesse ter durado três anos e meio, terminando com a sua morte na época da Páscoa judaica, seria preciso que este período incluísse ao todo quatro Páscoas. A evidência em favor destas quatro Páscoas se encontra em João 2:13; 5:1; 6:4 e 13:1. João 5:1 não menciona especificamente a Páscoa, referindo-se apenas a "uma ["a", segundo certos manuscritos antigos] festividade dos judeus". Há, porém, bons motivos para se crer que esta se refira à Páscoa, em vez de a qualquer outra das festividades anuais.

Antes disso, em João 4:35, menciona-se que Jesus disse que havia 'ainda quatro meses até chegar a colheita'. A época da colheita, especialmente a colheita da cevada, começava por volta da época da Páscoa (14 de nisã). Assim sendo, a declaração de Jesus foi feita quatro meses antes dela, ou por volta do mês de quisleu (novembro-dezembro). A pós-exílica Festividade da Dedicação ocorria durante quisleu, mas não era uma das grandes festividades, às quais o comparecimento a Jerusalém era mandatório. (Êx 23:14-17; Le 23:4-44) Tal celebração era realizada em todo o país, nas muitas sinagogas, segundo a tradição judaica. (Veja FESTIVIDADE DA DEDICAÇÃO.) Mais tarde, em João 10:22, Jesus é mencionado especificamente como comparecendo a uma Festividade da Dedicação em Jerusalém; no entanto, parece que ele já estava nesta região desde a anterior Festividade das Barracas, assim, não havia ido até lá especialmente para este fim. Diferente disto, João 5:1 dá a entender claramente que foi esta específica "festividade dos judeus" que motivara Jesus a ir da Galileia (Jo 4:54) a Jerusalém.

A única outra festividade entre quisleu e a época da Páscoa judaica era a de Purim, realizada em adar (fevereiro-março), cerca de um mês antes da Páscoa. Mas a Festividade de Purim, pós-exílica, era igualmente celebrada em todo o país, nas casas e nas sinagogas. (Veja PURIM.) Assim, a Páscoa parece ser a mais provável "festividade dos judeus" mencionada em João 5:1, harmonizando-se a presença de Jesus então em Jerusalém com a Lei de Deus dada a Israel. É verdade que João, depois, só registra uns poucos eventos antes da próxima menção da Páscoa (Jo 6:4), mas, uma consideração da tabela dos Principais Eventos da Vida Terrestre de Jesus mostrará que a cobertura do ministério inicial de Jesus, feita por João, foi muitíssimo abreviada, sendo passados por alto muitos eventos já considerados pelos outros três evangelistas. Na realidade, a grande atividade de Jesus, conforme registrada por estes outros evangelistas (Mateus, Marcos e Lucas) reforça a conclusão de que deveras ocorreu uma Páscoa anual entre as registradas em João 2:13 e 6:4.

Tempo da sua morte. A morte de Jesus Cristo ocorreu na primavera (setentrional), no dia da Páscoa, 14 de nisã (ou abibe), segundo o calendário judaico. (Mt 26:2; Jo 13:1-3; Êx 12:1-6; 13:4) Naquele ano, a Páscoa ocorreu no sexto dia da semana (contado pelos judeus a partir do pôr do sol de quinta-feira até o pôr do sol de sexta-feira). Isto é evidente em João 19:31, que mostra que o dia seguinte era um "grande" sábado. O dia após a Páscoa era sempre um sábado, não importando em que dia da semana caísse. (Le 23:5-7) Mas, quando este sábado especial coincidia com o sábado normal (o sétimo dia da semana), tornava-se um "grande" sábado. Assim, a morte de Jesus ocorreu na sexta-feira, 14 de nisã, por volta das 15 horas. — Lu 23:44-46.

Resumo da evidência. Resumindo, então, visto que a morte de Jesus ocorreu no mês primaveril de nisã, seu ministério, que começou três anos e meio antes, segundo Daniel 9:24-27, deve ter tido início no outono, por volta do mês de etanim (setembro-outubro). Portanto, o ministério de João (iniciado no 15.º ano de Tibério) deve ter começado na primavera do ano 29 EC. Por conseguinte, o nascimento de João é situado na primavera do ano 2 AEC, o nascimento de Jesus ocorreu seis meses depois, no outono de 2 AEC, seu ministério começou cerca de 30 anos depois, no outono de 29 EC, e sua morte se deu no ano 33 EC (em 14 de nisã, na primavera, conforme declarado).

Não há base para a data de nascimento no inverno. A data popular de 25 de dezembro como o dia do nascimento de Jesus, portanto, não tem nenhuma base nas Escrituras. Conforme mostram muitas obras de referência, essa data deriva dum feriado pagão. O erudito jesuíta Urbanus Holzmeister escreveu a respeito da origem da celebração do dia de 25 de dezembro:

"Hoje se costuma admitir que o acontecimento celebrado no dia 25 de dezembro era a festividade que os pagãos celebravam neste dia. Petávio [erudito jesuíta francês, 1583-1652] já observou corretamente que se celebrava em 25 de dezembro 'o nascimento do sol invicto'.

"Testemunhas desta festividade são: (a) O Calendário de Fúrio Dionísio Filocalo, composto no ano 354 [EC], no qual se anotou: '25 de dezembro, o N(atalício) do (Sol) invicto.' (b) O calendário do astrólogo Antíoco (composto por volta de 200 [EC]): 'Mês de dezembro . . . 25 . . . O natalício do Sol; a duração da luz do dia aumenta.' (c) César Juliano [Juliano, o Apóstata, imperador romano de 361-363 EC] recomendou os jogos celebrados no fim do ano em homenagem ao Sol, que era chamado de 'o sol invicto'." — Chronologia vitae Christi (Cronologia da Vida de Cristo), Pontifício Instituto Bíblico, Roma, 1933, p. 46.

Talvez a evidência mais óbvia de que a data 25 de dezembro não é correta seja o fato bíblico de que havia pastores no campo, cuidando de seus rebanhos, na noite em que Jesus nasceu. (Lu 2:8, 12) Já no mês outonal de bul (outubro-novembro), começava a estação chuvosa (De 11:14), e os rebanhos eram trazidos para abrigos protegidos à noite. O mês seguinte, quisleu (o nono mês do calendário judaico, novembro-dezembro), era um mês frio e chuvoso (Je 36:22; Esd 10:9, 13), e tebete (dezembro-janeiro) tinha as temperaturas mais baixas do ano, com ocasional neve nos altiplanos. A presença dos pastores nos campos, à noite, por conseguinte, harmoniza-se com a evidência que aponta para o mês etanim no início do outono como o tempo do nascimento de Jesus. — Veja BUL; QUISLEU.

O que também pesa contra uma data de dezembro é que seria muitíssimo improvável que o imperador romano escolhesse tal mês hibernal e chuvoso como a ocasião para seus súditos judeus (amiúde rebeldes), viajarem 'cada um para a sua própria cidade', a fim de se registrarem. — Lu 2:1-3; compare isso com Mt 24:20; veja TEBETE.

Primeiros Anos de Vida. O registro dos primeiros anos de vida de Jesus é brevíssimo. Nascido em Belém da Judeia, cidade natal do Rei Davi, ele foi levado para Nazaré, na Galileia, depois que sua família retornou do Egito — tudo isto em cumprimento de profecias divinas. (Mt 2:4-6, 14, 15, 19-23; Miq 5:2; Os 11:1; Is 11:1; Je 23:5) O pai adotivo de Jesus, José, era carpinteiro (Mt 13:55), e, evidentemente, dispunha de poucos recursos. (Compare Lu 2:22-24 com Le 12:8.) Assim, Jesus, que no primeiro dia de vida como humano dormira num estábulo, evidentemente passou a infância sob circunstâncias bem humildes. Nazaré não tinha destaque histórico, embora ficasse perto de duas importantes rotas comerciais. Talvez fosse olhada com desprezo por muitos judeus. — Compare isso com Jo 1:46; veja FOTOS, Vol. 2, pp. 537, 539; NAZARÉ.

Nada se sabe sobre os primeiros anos de vida de Jesus, exceto que "o menino continuava a crescer e a ficar forte, estando cheio de sabedoria, e o favor de Deus continuava com ele". (Lu 2:40) No decorrer do tempo, a família aumentou, à medida que José e Maria tiveram quatro filhos e também filhas. (Mt 13:54-56) Assim, o "primogênito" de Maria (Lu 2:7) não cresceu como filho único. Isto, sem dúvida, explica por que seus pais iniciaram uma viagem de volta de Jerusalém sem se darem conta, por algum tempo, de que Jesus, seu filho mais velho, não estava no grupo. Esta ocasião, da visita que Jesus (aos 12 anos) fez ao templo, quando teve uma palestra com os instrutores judeus, que os deixou pasmados, é o único incidente da parte inicial da sua vida que é relatado com alguns pormenores. (ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 2, p. 538) A resposta de Jesus a seus pais preocupados, quando conseguiram localizá-lo ali, mostra que Jesus sabia da natureza miraculosa do seu nascimento, e compreendia seu futuro messiânico. (Lu 2:41-52) Razoavelmente, sua mãe e seu pai adotivo lhe haviam transmitido as informações obtidas por meio das visitas angélicas, bem como pelas profecias de Simeão e de Ana, proferidas quando fizeram a primeira viagem a Jerusalém, 40 dias depois do nascimento de Jesus. — Mt 1:20-25; 2:13, 14, 19-21; Lu 1:26-38; 2:8-38.

Não existe nada que indique que Jesus tivesse, ou que exercesse, quaisquer poderes miraculosos durante os anos de sua infância, como afirmam histórias fantasiosas, registradas em certas obras apócrifas, tais como o chamado Evangelho da Infância Segundo Tomé. A transformação da água em vinho, em Caná, realizada durante seu ministério, foi o "princípio dos seus sinais". (Jo 2:1-11) De modo semelhante, enquanto estava com a família em Nazaré, Jesus evidentemente não fez nenhuma exibição ostentosa da sua sabedoria e da sua superioridade como humano perfeito, como talvez indique o fato de que seus meios-irmãos não exerceram fé nele durante o ministério dele qual humano, bem como a descrença que a maioria da população de Nazaré mostrou para com ele. — Jo 7:1-5; Mr 6:1, 4-6.

Todavia, Jesus, evidentemente, era alguém bem conhecido pelo povo de Nazaré (Mt 13:54-56; Lu 4:22); suas qualidades e sua personalidade esplêndidas certamente devem ter sido notadas, pelo menos por parte dos que apreciavam a justiça e a bondade. (Veja Mt 3:13, 14.) Ele frequentava os serviços na sinagoga todo sábado. Era instruído, conforme demonstrado por sua habilidade de encontrar e ler trechos dos Escritos Sagrados, mas não cursou escolas rabínicas de "estudos superiores". — Lu 4:16; Jo 7:14-16.

A brevidade do registro a respeito destes primeiros anos de sua vida se deve a que Jesus ainda não tinha sido ungido por Jeová como "o Cristo" (Mt 16:16) e não havia começado a cumprir a designação divina que o aguardava. Sua infância e seu desenvolvimento, assim como seu nascimento, eram necessários, embora incidentais, para atingir um objetivo. Conforme Jesus declarou mais tarde ao governador romano, Pilatos: "Para isso nasci e para isso vim ao mundo, a fim de dar testemunho da verdade." — Jo 18:37.

Seu Batismo. O derramamento do espírito santo na ocasião do batismo de Jesus assinalou o momento em que ele realmente se tornou o Messias, ou Cristo, o Ungido de Deus (sendo evidentemente profético o uso deste título pelos anjos, ao anunciarem seu nascimento; Lu 2:9-11; observe também os vv 25, 26). Durante seis meses, João vinha 'preparando o caminho' para o "meio salvador de Deus". (Lu 3:1-6) Jesus, então com "cerca de trinta anos", foi batizado apesar das objeções iniciais de João, expressas porque João até então só tinha batizado pecadores arrependidos. (Mt 3:1, 6, 13-17; Lu 3:21-23) Jesus, porém, não tinha pecados; por isso, o seu batismo testificava, em vez disso, a apresentação de si mesmo para fazer a vontade de seu Pai. (Veja He 10:5-9.) Depois que Jesus tinha 'saído da água', e enquanto estava orando, 'viu os céus se partirem', o espírito de Deus desceu sobre Jesus na forma corpórea de uma pomba e a voz de Jeová foi ouvida desde os céus, dizendo: "Tu és meu Filho, o amado; eu te tenho aprovado." — Mt 3:16, 17; Mr 1:9-11; Lu 3:21, 22.

O espírito de Deus, derramado sobre Jesus, sem dúvida iluminou-lhe a mente sobre muitos pontos. As suas próprias expressões posteriores, e especialmente a oração íntima feita a seu Pai na noite da Páscoa de 33 EC, mostram que Jesus se lembrava da sua existência pré-humana e das coisas que tinha ouvido de seu Pai e que o tinha visto fazer, bem como da glória que ele mesmo usufruíra nos céus. (Jo 6:46; 7:28, 29; 8:26, 28, 38; 14:2; 17:5) Pode bem ter acontecido que a recordação destas coisas lhe fosse restaurada por ocasião de seu batismo e unção.

A unção de Jesus com espírito santo o designava e comissionava para cumprir seu ministério de pregação e ensino (Lu 4:16-21), e para servir também como Profeta de Deus. (At 3:22-26) Mas, além disso, designava e comissionava-o como o Rei prometido de Jeová, o herdeiro do trono de Davi (Lu 1:32, 33, 69; He 1:8, 9), e para um reino eterno. Por esse motivo, ele podia dizer mais tarde aos fariseus: "O reino de Deus está no vosso meio." (Lu 17:20, 21) Similarmente, Jesus foi ungido para atuar como Sumo Sacerdote de Deus, não como descendente de Arão, mas à semelhança do Rei-Sacerdote Melquisedeque. — He 5:1, 4-10; 7:11-17.

Jesus Cristo já era Filho de Deus desde que nasceu, assim como o perfeito Adão tinha sido "filho de Deus". (Lu 3:38; 1:35) O anjo Gabriel tinha identificado Jesus como Filho de Deus antes do nascimento de Jesus. Assim, quando, após o batismo de Jesus, se ouviu a voz de seu Pai dizer: "Tu és meu Filho, o amado; eu te tenho aprovado" (Mr 1:11), parece razoável que esta declaração, que acompanhou o fluxo de unção do espírito de Deus, fosse mais do que apenas um reconhecimento da identidade de Jesus. A evidência indica que Jesus fora então gerado ou produzido por Deus como seu Filho, "nascido de novo", por assim dizer, com a perspectiva de receber novamente a vida como Filho espiritual de Deus, nos céus. — Compare isso com Jo 3:3-6; 6:51; 10:17, 18; veja BATISMO; UNIGÊNITO.

Seu Lugar Vital no Propósito de Deus. Jeová Deus achou apropriado fazer deste Filho primogênito a figura-chave, ou central, na realização de todos os Seus propósitos (Jo 1:14-18; Col 1:18-20; 2:8, 9), o ponto focal em que se concentraria a luz de todas as profecias e do qual irradiaria a luz delas (1Pe 1:10-12; Re 19:10; Jo 1:3-9), a solução de todos os problemas suscitados pela rebelião de Satanás (He 2:5-9, 14, 15; 1Jo 3:8), e o alicerce sobre o qual Deus edificaria todos os arranjos futuros para o bem eterno da Sua família universal no céu e na Terra. (Ef 1:8-10; 2:20; 1Pe 2:4-8) Por causa do papel vital que Jesus assim desempenha no propósito de Deus, ele podia dizer, de forma correta e sem nenhum exagero: "Eu sou o caminho, e a verdade, e a vida. Ninguém vem ao Pai senão por mim." — Jo 14:6.

O "segredo sagrado". O propósito de Deus, conforme revelado em Jesus Cristo, continuou sendo um 'segredo sagrado [ou mistério] por tempos de longa duração guardado em silêncio'. (Ro 16:25-27) Por mais de 4.000 anos, desde a rebelião no Éden, homens de fé tinham aguardado o cumprimento da promessa de Deus, de um "descendente [lit.: semente]" que machucaria a cabeça do Adversário serpentino e assim traria alívio ao gênero humano. (Gên 3:15) Por quase 2.000 anos, nutriram esperança no pacto feito por Jeová com Abraão para uma "semente" que 'tomaria posse do portão dos seus inimigos' e por meio da qual todas as nações da terra se abençoariam. — Gên 22:15-18.

Por fim, quando "chegou o pleno limite do tempo, Deus enviou seu Filho", e, por meio dele, revelou o significado do "segredo sagrado", forneceu a resposta definitiva à questão suscitada pelo Adversário de Deus (veja JEOVÁ [A questão suprema é de moral]), e supriu os meios para redimir a humanidade obediente do pecado e da morte, por meio do sacrifício resgatador de seu Filho. (Gál 4:4; 1Ti 3:16; Jo 14:30; 16:33; Mt 20:28) Desta forma, Jeová Deus eliminou da mente de seus servos qualquer incerteza ou ambiguidade a respeito de Seus propósitos. Por este motivo, o apóstolo diz que "não importa quantas sejam as promessas de Deus, elas se tornaram Sim por meio [de Jesus Cristo]". — 2Co 1:19-22.

O "segredo sagrado" não envolvia simplesmente a identificação do Filho de Deus como tal. Antes, envolvia o papel que lhe foi atribuído na estrutura do propósito predeterminado de Deus, e a revelação e a execução deste propósito mediante Jesus Cristo. Este propósito, que por muito tempo constituía um segredo, era que houvesse "uma administração no pleno limite dos tempos designados, a saber, ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra". — Ef 1:9, 10.

O "segredo sagrado" encerrado em Cristo Jesus tem como um de seus aspectos encabeçar ele um novo governo celestial; seu rol de membros deverá ser constituído de pessoas (judeus e não judeus) tiradas dentre a população da Terra, e seu domínio deverá abranger tanto o céu como a Terra. Assim, na visão de Daniel 7:13, 14, alguém "semelhante a um filho de homem" (título mais tarde frequentemente aplicado a Cristo — Mt 12:40; 24:30; Lu 17:26; compare isso com Re 14:14) aparece nas cortes celestes de Jeová e lhe é 'dado domínio, e dignidade, e um reino, para que todos os povos, grupos nacionais e línguas o sirvam'. A mesma visão, porém, mostra que "os santos do Supremo" também hão de partilhar com este "filho de homem" no seu Reino, governo e grandiosidade. (Da 7:27) Jesus, enquanto na Terra, escolheu dentre seus discípulos os primeiros membros prospectivos do seu governo do Reino, e, depois de eles terem 'ficado com ele em suas provações', fez um pacto com eles para um Reino, orando a seu Pai em favor da santificação deles (ou de serem tornados "santos") e solicitando que "onde eu estiver, eles também estejam comigo, a fim de que observem a minha glória que me tens dado". (Lu 22:28, 29; Jo 17:5, 17, 24) Por estar a congregação cristã assim unida com Cristo, ela desempenha também um papel no "segredo sagrado", conforme o inspirado apóstolo expressa posteriormente. — Ef 3:1-11; 5:32; Col 1:26, 27; veja SEGREDO SAGRADO.

"Agente Principal da vida." Cristo Jesus depôs a sua perfeita vida humana em sacrifício, em expressão da benignidade imerecida de seu Pai. Isto tornou possível a união dos seguidores escolhidos de Cristo com ele no seu reinado celestial e tornou também possível o arranjo de haver súditos terrestres do governo do seu Reino. (Mt 6:10; Jo 3:16; Ef 1:7; He 2:5; veja RESGATE.) Ele se tornou assim "o Agente Principal ["Príncipe", Al; CBC] da vida" para toda a humanidade. (At 3:15) O termo grego usado aqui significa, basicamente, "líder principal", aplicando-se uma palavra aparentada a Moisés (At 7:27, 35) como "governante" em Israel.

Portanto, como "líder principal" ou "pioneiro da Vida" (Mo), Jesus Cristo introduziu um elemento novo e essencial para se ganhar a vida eterna, no sentido de ser intermediário ou elo de ligação, mas ele o é também em sentido administrativo. Ele é o Sumo Sacerdote de Deus, que pode realizar plenamente a purificação de pecado e a libertação dos efeitos mortíferos do pecado (He 3:1, 2; 4:14; 7:23-25; 8:1-3); ele é o Juiz designado, a cujas mãos se confiaram todos os julgamentos, de modo que ele administra criteriosamente os benefícios do seu resgate para as pessoas dentre a humanidade, segundo o merecimento delas, de viver sob o seu reinado (Jo 5:22-27; At 10:42, 43); por meio dele realiza-se também a ressurreição dos mortos. (Jo 5:28, 29; 6:39, 40) Visto que Jeová Deus determinou usar seu Filho assim, "não há salvação em nenhum outro, pois não há outro nome debaixo do céu, que tenha sido dado entre os homens, pelo qual tenhamos de ser salvos". — At 4:12; compare isso com 1Jo 5:11-13.

Uma vez que este aspecto da autoridade de Jesus também é abrangido pelo seu "nome", seus discípulos, como representantes do Agente Principal da vida, com o uso deste nome, puderam curar pessoas das enfermidades resultantes do pecado herdado, e puderam até mesmo ressuscitar mortos. — At 3:6, 15, 16; 4:7-11; 9:36-41; 20:7-12.

O pleno significado do seu "nome". Pode-se ver que, embora a morte de Jesus numa estaca de tortura desempenhe um papel vital na salvação humana, o reconhecimento disso, de forma alguma, é tudo que está envolvido em se 'depositar fé no nome de Jesus'. (At 10:43) Depois da sua ressurreição, Jesus informou a seus discípulos: "Foi-me dada toda a autoridade no céu e na terra", mostrando assim que ele encabeça um governo de expressão universal. (Mt 28:18) O apóstolo Paulo tornou claro que o Pai de Jesus 'não deixou nada que não ficasse sujeito [a Jesus]', com a evidente exceção 'daquele que lhe sujeitou todas as coisas', isto é, Jeová, o Deus Soberano. (1Co 15:27; He 1:1-14; 2:8) O "nome" de Jesus Cristo, portanto, é mais excelente do que o dos anjos de Deus, no sentido de que seu nome abrange ou representa a ampla autoridade executiva que Jeová lhe concedeu. (He 1:3, 4) Apenas aqueles que voluntariamente reconhecem este "nome" e se curvam diante dele, sujeitando-se à autoridade que ele representa, obterão a vida eterna. (At 4:12; Ef 1:19-23; Fil 2:9-11) Precisam, com sinceridade e sem hipocrisia, harmonizar-se com as normas que Jesus exemplificou, e, com fé, obedecer às ordens que ele deu. — Mt 7:21-23; Ro 1:5; 1Jo 3:23.

Qual é o "nome" de Jesus, que é motivo de os cristãos serem odiados por todas as nações?

Outro aspecto do "nome" de Jesus é ilustrado pelo seu aviso profético, de que seus seguidores seriam 'odiados por todas as nações, por causa do seu nome'. (Mt 24:9; também Mt 10:22; Jo 15:20, 21; At 9:15, 16.) É evidente que isto não se daria porque seu nome representa o de um Resgatador ou Redentor, mas porque representa o Governante designado por Deus, o Reis dos reis, diante de quem todas as nações deviam curvar-se em submissão, ou então sofrer a destruição. — Re 19:11-16; compare isso com Sal 2:7-12.

Assim, também, é certo que, quando demônios cederam diante da ordem de Jesus, de sair de pessoas possessas, eles o fizeram, não à base de Jesus ser o sacrificial Cordeiro de Deus, mas por causa da autoridade que Seu nome representava como o ungido representante do Reino, aquele que tinha autoridade de convocar, não somente uma legião, mas doze legiões de anjos, capazes de expulsar quaisquer demônios que resistissem teimosamente à ordem dele de saírem. (Mr 5:1-13; 9:25-29; Mt 12:28, 29; 26:53; compare isso com Da 10:5, 6, 12, 13.) Os apóstolos fiéis de Jesus foram autorizados a empregar o nome dele para expulsar demônios, tanto antes como depois da morte dele. (Lu 9:1; 10:17; At 16:16-18) Mas, quando os filhos do sacerdote judeu Ceva tentaram usar o nome de Jesus desta forma, o espírito iníquo questionou o direito deles de apelar para a autoridade que o nome de Jesus representava, e fez com que o homem possesso os atacasse e espancasse. — At 19:13-17.

Quando os seguidores de Jesus se referiam ao "nome" dele, frequentemente usavam a expressão "Senhor Jesus" ou "nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo". (At 8:16; 15:26; 19:5, 13, 17; 1Co 1:2, 10; Ef 5:20; Col

3:17) Reconheciam-no como seu Senhor, não só por ele ser seu divinamente designado Resgatador e Dono, em virtude do seu sacrifício resgatador (1Co 6:20; 7:22, 23; 1Pe 1:18, 19; Ju 4), mas também por causa da posição e da autoridade régias dele. Era com base na plena autoridade régia, bem como sacerdotal, representada pelo nome de Jesus, que os seus seguidores pregavam (At 5:29-32, 40-42), batizavam discípulos (Mt 28:18-20; At 2:38; compare isso com 1Co 1:13-15), desassociavam pessoas imorais (1Co 5:4, 5), e exortavam e instruíam as congregações cristãs que pastoreavam (1Co 1:10; 2Te 3:6). Segue-se, assim, que os aprovados para a vida, por Jesus, jamais podiam depositar fé nem render lealdade a outro "nome" como representando a autoridade de Deus para governar, mas tinham de demonstrar inquebrantável lealdade ao "nome" deste Rei divinamente comissionado, o Senhor Jesus Cristo. — Mt 12:18, 21; Re 2:13; 3:8; veja APROXIMAÇÃO A DEUS.

"Dar Testemunho da Verdade." À pergunta de Pilatos: "Pois bem, és tu rei?" Jesus replicou: "Tu mesmo estás dizendo que eu sou rei. Para isso nasci e para isso vim ao mundo, a fim de dar testemunho da verdade. Todo aquele que está do lado da verdade escuta a minha voz." (Jo 18:37; veja CAUSA JURÍDICA [Julgamento de Jesus].) Conforme mostram as Escrituras, a verdade a respeito da qual ele deu testemunho não era apenas uma verdade em geral. Era a importantíssima verdade de quais eram e são os propósitos de Deus, verdade baseada no fato fundamental da vontade soberana de Deus e da Sua capacidade de cumprir esta vontade. Jesus, por meio do seu ministério, revelou esta verdade, contida no "segredo sagrado", como o Reino de Deus com Jesus Cristo, o "filho de Davi", servindo qual Rei-Sacerdote no trono. Esta era também a essência da mensagem proclamada pelos anjos antes e por ocasião do nascimento dele em Belém da Judeia, a cidade de Davi. — Lu 1:32, 33; 2:10-14; 3:31.

A realização deste ministério, de dar testemunho da verdade, exigia de Jesus mais do que apenas falar, pregar e ensinar. Além de se despir da sua glória celestial para nascer como humano, ele tinha de cumprir todas as coisas profetizadas a seu respeito, inclusive as sombras, ou modelos, contidos no pacto da Lei. (Col 2:16, 17; He 10:1) Para defender a verdade das palavras e promessas proféticas de seu Pai, Jesus tinha de viver de modo a tornar esta verdade realidade, cumprindo-a pelo que dizia e fazia, pelo modo de viver e de morrer. Assim ele tinha de ser a verdade, na realidade, a personificação da verdade, como ele mesmo disse que era. — Jo 14:6.

Por este motivo, o apóstolo João podia escrever que Jesus estava "cheio de benignidade imerecida e de verdade", e que, embora 'a Lei fosse dada por intermédio de Moisés, a benignidade imerecida e a verdade vieram à existência por intermédio de Jesus Cristo'. (Jo 1:14, 17) Por meio de seu nascimento humano, de ele se apresentar a Deus pelo batismo em água, de seus três anos e meio de serviço público em favor do Reino de Deus, de sua morte em fidelidade a Deus, de sua ressurreição para o céu — mediante todos estes eventos históricos — chegou ou 'veio à existência' a verdade de Deus, isto é, veio a tornar-se realidade. (Veja Jo 1:18; Col 2:17.) A carreira inteira de Jesus Cristo, portanto, foi "dar testemunho da verdade", das coisas que Deus havia jurado. Jesus não era, assim, uma sombra do Messias ou Cristo. Ele era o verdadeiro prometido. Ele não era uma sombra de Rei-Sacerdote. Ele era, em substância e de fato, o verdadeiro que fora prefigurado. — Ro 15:8-12; compare isso com Sal 18:49; 117:1; De 32:43; Is 11:10.

Esta verdade era a verdade que 'libertaria os homens', caso se mostrassem estar "do lado da verdade" por aceitarem o papel desempenhado por Jesus no propósito de Deus. (Jo 8:32-36; 18:37) Desconsiderar o propósito de Deus com relação a seu Filho, desenvolver esperanças sobre qualquer outra base, tirar conclusões a respeito do proceder de vida da pessoa com base em qualquer outro fundamento, seria crer numa mentira, ser iludido, seguir a orientação do pai das mentiras, o Adversário de Deus. (Mt 7:24-27; Jo 8:42-47) Significaria 'morrer em seus pecados'. (Jo 8:23, 24) Por este motivo, Jesus não se refreou de declarar a sua posição no propósito de Deus.

É verdade que ele instruiu seus discípulos, mesmo com firmeza, a não alardear sua condição de Messias perante o público (Mt 16:20; Mr 8:29, 30), e, raramente se referiu a si mesmo, de modo direto, como o Cristo, exceto quando estava a sós com eles. (Mr 9:33, 38, 41; Lu 9:20, 21; Jo 17:3) Mas, com denodo e regularidade, trazia à atenção a evidência, constante nas profecias e nas suas obras, que provava que ele era o Cristo. (Mt 22:41-46; Jo 5:31-39, 45-47; 7:25-31) Na ocasião em que falou com uma mulher samaritana junto a um poço, Jesus, "cansado da jornada", identificou-se a ela, talvez de modo a suscitar a curiosidade entre as pessoas da cidade e fazer com que viessem da cidade até ele, o que realmente aconteceu. (Jo 4:6, 25-30) A simples afirmação de ele ser o Messias nada significaria se não fosse acompanhada de evidência, e, em última análise, exigia-se que os que viam e ouviam exercessem fé, se haviam de aceitar a conclusão apontada infalivelmente por tal evidência. — Lu 22:66-71; Jo 4:39-42; 10:24-27; 12:34-36.

Testado e Aperfeiçoado. Jeová Deus demonstrou suprema confiança em seu Filho ao incumbi-lo da missão de ir à Terra e servir como o prometido Messias. O propósito de Deus, de que houvesse um "descendente [lit.: semente]" (Gên 3:15), o Messias, que servisse de sacrificial Cordeiro de Deus, já era conhecido previamente por Ele "antes da fundação do mundo" (1Pe 1:19, 20), expressão esta que é considerada sob o verbete PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO (Predeterminação do Messias). O registro da Bíblia, porém, não declara em que ponto Jeová designou ou informou a pessoa específica escolhida para esse papel, quer na ocasião da rebelião do Éden, quer em algum tempo posterior. Os requisitos, especialmente os do sacrifício de resgate, tornavam inviável o emprego de qualquer humano imperfeito, mas não o de um filho espiritual perfeito. Dentre todos os seus milhões de filhos espirituais, Jeová escolheu um para cumprir esta tarefa: seu Primogênito, a Palavra. — Veja He 1:5, 6.

O Filho de Deus aceitou de bom grado esta tarefa. Isto é evidente em Filipenses 2:5-8; ele "se esvaziou" da sua glória celestial e da sua natureza espiritual, e "assumiu a forma de escravo", submetendo-se à transferência da sua vida para o plano terrestre, material e humano. A tarefa que tinha diante de si representava uma tremenda responsabilidade; havia tanta coisa envolvida. Por permanecer fiel, provaria mentirosa a alegação de Satanás, registrada no caso de Jó, de que os servos de Deus o negariam quando sob privações, sofrimentos e provas. (Jó 1:6-12; 2:2-6) Jesus, como Filho primogênito, dentre todas as criaturas de Deus, podia dar a resposta mais conclusiva a tal acusação e fornecer a melhor evidência a favor do lado de seu Pai na questão maior da legitimidade da soberania universal de Jeová. Desta forma, provaria ser o "Amém, a testemunha fiel e verdadeira". (Re 3:14) Se falhasse, vituperaria o nome de seu Pai como nenhum outro poderia fazê-lo.

Ao escolher seu Filho unigênito, naturalmente, Jeová não 'impôs as mãos apressadamente sobre ele', correndo o risco de se tornar 'partícipe de possíveis pecados', pois Jesus não era neófito, que talvez tendesse a 'enfunar-se de orgulho e cair no julgamento aplicado ao Diabo'. (Veja 1Ti 5:22; 3:6.) Jeová 'conhecia plenamente' seu Filho em vista da íntima associação com ele durante incontáveis eras passadas (Mt 11:27; compare isso com Gên 22:12; Ne 9:7, 8), e podia, assim, designá-lo a cumprir as inerrantes profecias da Sua Palavra. (Is 46:10, 11) Deste modo, Deus não estava garantindo arbitrária ou automaticamente o "êxito certo" de seu Filho por simplesmente colocá-lo no papel do Messias profetizado (Is 55:11), dum modo alegado pela teoria da predestinação.

Embora o Filho jamais tivesse passado por uma prova semelhante à que tinha agora diante de si, ele havia demonstrado sua fidelidade e devoção de outros modos. Já tivera grandes responsabilidades como o Porta-Voz de Deus, a Palavra. Todavia, jamais usara mal sua posição e sua autoridade, como fizera o porta-voz terrestre de Deus, Moisés, em certa ocasião. (Núm 20:9-13; De 32:48-51; Ju 9) Sendo Aquele por meio de quem todas as coisas foram feitas, o Filho era um deus, "o deus unigênito" (Jo 1:18), por isso, detinha uma posição de glória e destaque entre todos os outros filhos espirituais de Deus. Todavia, não se tornara orgulhoso. (Contraste isso com Ez 28:14-17.) Portanto, não se podia dizer que o Filho, em muitos sentidos, ainda não havia provado sua lealdade, humildade e devoção.

Como ilustração, considere a prova a que foi submetido o primeiro filho humano de Deus, Adão. Esta prova não envolvia suportar perseguição ou sofrimento, mas apenas manter respeito obediente pela vontade de Deus referente à árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau. (Gên 2:16, 17; veja ÁRVORES.) A rebelião e a tentação de Satanás não faziam parte da prova dada originalmente por Deus, mas surgiram como particularidade adicional, duma fonte alheia a Deus. Tampouco exigia a prova, quando dada, uma tentação humana, como resultou para Adão pelo desvio de Eva. (Gên 3:6, 12) Em vista disso, a prova a que Adão foi submetido podia ser realizada sem qualquer tentação ou influência externa para haver transgressão, dependendo o assunto inteiro do coração de Adão — seu amor a Deus e sua isenção de egoísmo. (Pr 4:23) Se se mostrasse fiel, Adão teria tido o privilégio de tomar do fruto 'da árvore da vida, e comer, e viver por tempo indefinido' como filho humano de Deus, testado e aprovado (Gên 3:22), tudo sem ter sido submetido a uma influência má e a tentação, perseguição ou sofrimento.

Pode-se notar também que o filho espiritual que se tornou Satanás, por desertar do serviço de Deus, não o fez porque alguém o perseguisse ou o tentasse a praticar o mal. Certamente, Deus não fez isso, pois 'Ele não tenta a ninguém com coisas más'. Todavia, este filho espiritual não manteve sua lealdade, permitiu que fosse "provocado e engodado pelo seu próprio desejo", e pecou, tornando-se rebelde. (Tg 1:13-15) Fracassou na prova de amor.

No entanto, a questão suscitada pelo Adversário de Deus exigia que o Filho, como o prometido Messias e futuro Rei do Reino de Deus, passasse então por uma prova de integridade sob novas circunstâncias. Esta prova e os sofrimentos que envolvia também eram necessários a fim de que fosse "aperfeiçoado" para sua posição de Sumo Sacerdote de Deus da humanidade. (He 5:9, 10) Para satisfazer os requisitos da plena investidura como o Agente Principal da salvação, o Filho de Deus foi "obrigado a tornar-se igual aos seus 'irmãos' [aqueles que se tornaram seus seguidores ungidos] em todos os sentidos, para se tornar sumo sacerdote misericordioso e fiel". Teve de suportar dificuldades e sofrimentos, para que pudesse "vir em auxílio daqueles que estão sendo postos à prova", capaz de compadecer-se das suas fraquezas como alguém que "foi provado em todos os sentidos como nós mesmos, porém, sem pecado". Embora fosse perfeito e sem pecados, ainda assim poderia "lidar moderadamente com os ignorantes e com os que erram". Somente por meio de tal Sumo Sacerdote é que os humanos imperfeitos poderiam 'aproximar-se, com franqueza no falar, do trono de benignidade imerecida, para obterem misericórdia e acharem benignidade imerecida para ajuda no tempo certo'. — He 2:10-18; 4:15–5:2; compare isso com Lu 9:22.

Ainda tinha livre-arbítrio. O próprio Jesus disse que todas as profecias a respeito do Messias tinham cumprimento assegurado, 'tinham de se cumprir'. (Lu 24:44-47; Mt 16:21; compare isso com Mt 5:17.) Todavia, isto certamente não aliviou o Filho de Deus de responsabilidade, nem eliminou sua liberdade de escolha — de ser fiel ou de ser infiel. A questão não era unilateral, dependendo inteiramente do Deus Todo-Poderoso, Jeová. Seu Filho tinha de fazer a sua parte para que as profecias se cumprissem. Deus garantiu a certeza do cumprimento das profecias por meio da sua escolha sábia daquele que cumpriria tal designação, o "Filho do seu amor". (Col 1:13) É evidente que seu Filho ainda retinha e exercia seu próprio livre-arbítrio enquanto era humano na Terra. Jesus mencionou a sua própria vontade, mostrando que se estava submetendo voluntariamente à vontade de seu Pai (Mt 16:21-23; Jo 4:34; 5:30; 6:38), e trabalhou conscienciosamente a favor do cumprimento da sua designação, conforme delineada na Palavra de seu Pai. (Mt 3:15; 5:17, 18; 13:10-17, 34, 35; 26:52-54; Mr 1:14, 15; Lu 4:21) O cumprimento de outras modalidades proféticas, naturalmente, não estava sob o controle de Jesus, pois algumas ocorreram após a sua morte. (Mt 12:40; 26:55, 56; Jo 18:31, 32; 19:23, 24, 36, 37) O registro sobre a noite anterior à sua morte revela notavelmente o intenso esforço pessoal que exigiu da parte dele para submeter a sua própria vontade à vontade superior Daquele que era mais sábio do que ele, seu Pai. (Mt 26:36-44; Lu 22:42-44) Revela também que, embora perfeito, ele reconhecia vividamente sua dependência humana de seu Pai, Jeová Deus, para obter forças em ocasiões de necessidade. — Jo 12:23, 27, 28; He 5:7.

Por conseguinte, Jesus tinha muita coisa em que meditar, e para se fortalecer, durante os 40 dias que passou jejuando (assim como Moisés) no ermo, depois do seu batismo e da sua unção. (Êx 34:28; Lu 4:1, 2) Ali, teve um encontro direto com o Adversário serpentino de seu Pai. Satanás, o Diabo, empregando táticas similares às usadas no Éden, tentou induzir Jesus a demonstrar egoísmo, a exaltar-se e a negar a posição soberana de seu Pai. Diferente de Adão, Jesus (o "último Adão") manteve sua integridade, e, por coerentemente citar a vontade expressa de seu Pai, fez com que Satanás se afastasse, "até outra ocasião conveniente". — Lu 4:1-13; 1Co 15:45.

Suas Obras e Suas Qualidades Pessoais. Visto que tanto "a benignidade imerecida [como] a verdade" viriam a existir por meio de Jesus Cristo, ele tinha de estar entre as pessoas, permitir que o ouvissem e que vissem suas obras e suas qualidades. Assim, poderiam reconhecê-lo como o Messias e exercer fé em seu sacrifício, quando morresse por elas como o "Cordeiro de Deus". (Jo 1:17, 29) Ele visitou pessoalmente as muitas regiões da Palestina, andando centenas de quilômetros a pé. Conversou com as pessoas à beira de lagos, nas encostas das colinas, bem como nas cidades e nas aldeias, nas sinagogas e no templo, em mercados, nas ruas e nas casas (Mt 5:1, 2; 26:55; Mr 6:53-56; Lu 4:16; 5:1-3; 13:22, 26; 19:5, 6), falando a grandes multidões e a pessoas individuais, homens e mulheres, idosos e jovens, ricos e pobres. — Mr 3:7, 8; 4:1; Jo 3:1-3; Mt 14:21; 19:21, 22; 11:4, 5.

A tabela acompanhante apresenta uma forma sugerida em que os quatro relatos da vida terrestre de Jesus podem ser coordenados cronologicamente. Também fornece entendimento das várias "campanhas" ou viagens que ele empreendeu durante seu ministério de três anos e meio.

Jesus deu aos seus discípulos um exemplo por trabalhar arduamente, levantar-se cedo e continuar a servir noite adentro. (Lu 21:37, 38; Mr 11:20; 1:32-34; Jo 3:2; 5:17) Mais de uma vez passou a noite em oração, como fez na noite antes de proferir o Sermão do Monte. (Mt 14:23-25; Lu 6:12–7:10) Em outra oportunidade, depois de servir durante a noite, levantou-se enquanto ainda estava escuro e dirigiu-se para um lugar solitário para orar. (Mr 1:32, 35) As multidões frequentemente invadiam sua privacidade, mas ele, mesmo assim, 'as recebia benevolamente, e começava a falar-lhes do reino de Deus'. (Lu 9:10, 11; Mr 6:31-34; 7:24-30) Ele sentia cansaço, sede e fome, às vezes deixando de alimentar-se por causa da obra a ser feita. — Mt 21:18; Jo 4:6, 7, 31-34; compare isso com Mt 4:2-4; 8:24, 25.

Conceito equilibrado das coisas materiais. No entanto, ele não era asceta, praticando a abnegação em grau extremo, sem levar em conta as circunstâncias do momento. (Lu 7:33, 34) Aceitou muitos convites para refeições e até mesmo para banquetes, visitando as casas de pessoas de certa opulência. (Lu 5:29; 7:36; 14:1; 19:1-6) Contribuiu para o regozijo em um casamento por transformar água em vinho de excelente qualidade. (Jo 2:1-10) E apreciava as coisas boas que lhe eram feitas. Quando Judas expressou indignação de a irmã de Lázaro, Maria, usar quase meio quilo de um óleo perfumado caro (valendo mais de US$220, ou cerca de o salário de um ano dum trabalhador) para ungir os pés de Jesus, e professou preocupar-se com os pobres, que se teriam beneficiado com a venda do óleo, Jesus disse: "Deixai-a, para que ela mantenha esta observância, em vista do dia do meu enterro. Pois vós tendes sempre convosco os pobres, mas a mim nem sempre tereis." (Jo 12:2-8; Mr 14:6-9) A roupa interior que ele trajava, quando preso, "tecida desde a parte de cima, por todo o seu comprimento", era, evidentemente, uma roupa de primeira qualidade. (Jo 19:23, 24) Todavia, Jesus sempre atribuía o primeiro lugar às coisas espirituais e nunca se preocupava demais com as coisas materiais, assim como aconselhava outros. — Mt 6:24-34; 8:20; Lu 10:38-42; compare isso com Fil 4:10-12.

Corajoso Libertador. Durante todo o seu ministério, Jesus evidenciou grande coragem, varonilidade e força. (Mt 3:11; Lu 4:28-30; 9:51; Jo 2:13-17; 10:31-39; 18:3-11) Igual a Josué, o Rei Davi e outros, Jesus era um lutador em prol da causa de Deus e a favor dos amantes da justiça. Como a 'semente' prometida, ele teve de enfrentar a inimizade da 'semente da serpente', batalhando com este. (Gên 3:15; 22:17) Travou guerra ofensiva contra os demônios e a influência deles sobre a mente e o coração dos homens. (Mr 5:1-13; Lu 4:32-36; 11:19-26; compare isso com 2Co 4:3, 4; Ef 6:10-12.) Os líderes religiosos hipócritas mostravam que se opunham realmente à soberania e à vontade de Deus. (Mt 23:13, 27, 28; Lu 11:53, 54; Jo 19:12-16) Jesus os derrotou cabalmente numa série de debates verbais. Brandiu a "espada do espírito", a Palavra de Deus, com força, perfeito controle e estratégia — demolindo os argumentos sutis e as perguntas capciosas que seus opositores apresentavam, colocando-os 'num beco sem saída' ou num 'dilema'. (Mt 21:23-27; 22:15-46) Ele destemidamente expôs o que eles realmente eram: instrutores de tradições e formalismos humanos, guias cegos, uma geração de víboras, e filhos do Adversário de Deus, o príncipe dos demônios e mentiroso assassino. — Mt 15:12-14; 21:33-41, 45, 46; 23:33-35; Mr 7:1-13; Jo 8:40-45.

Em tudo isto, Jesus nunca se mostrou temerário, nem procurou dificuldades, e evitava o perigo desnecessário. (Mt 12:14, 15; Mr 3:6, 7; Jo 7:1, 10; 11:53, 54; compare isso com Mt 10:16, 17, 28-31.) Sua coragem se baseava em fé. (Mr 4:37-40) Ele não perdia o controle de si, mas conservava-se calmo quando vilipendiado e maltratado, 'encomendando-se àquele que julga justamente'. — 1Pe 2:23.

Por sua luta corajosa em prol da verdade, e por esclarecer o povo a respeito do propósito de Deus, Jesus, como alguém maior do que Moisés, cumpriu o papel profético de Libertador. Proclamou a liberdade aos cativos. (Is 42:1, 6, 7; Je 30:8-10; Is 61:1) Embora muitos se refreassem, por motivos egoístas e por terem medo dos elementos em poder (Jo 7:11-13; 9:22; 12:42, 43), outros criaram coragem para romper os grilhões de ignorância e de subserviência servil a falsos líderes e a falsas esperanças. (Jo 9:24-39; compare isso com Gál 5:1.) Assim como os reis fiéis de Judá tinham travado campanhas para eliminar a adoração falsa do seu domínio (2Cr 15:8; 17:1, 4-6; 2Rs 18:1, 3-6), assim também o ministério de Jesus, o Rei messiânico de Deus, teve um efeito devastador sobre a religião falsa dos seus dias. — Jo 11:47, 48.

Profundidade de sentimento e calor humano. Mas Jesus era também um homem dotado de grandes sentimentos, um requisito para servir como Sumo Sacerdote de Deus. Sua perfeição não o tornara supercrítico, nem arrogante e altivo (como eram os fariseus) para com as pessoas imperfeitas, cheias de pecados, entre as quais ele vivia e trabalhava. (Mt 9:10-13; 21:31, 32; Lu 7:36-48; 15:1-32; 18:9-14) Até mesmo as crianças podiam sentir-se à vontade com ele, e, quando usou uma criança qual exemplo, ele não simplesmente pôs esta criança diante de seus discípulos, mas também 'pôs os braços em volta dela'. (Mr 9:36; 10:13-16) Mostrou-se verdadeiro amigo e companheiro afetuoso de seus seguidores, 'amando-os até o fim'. (Jo 13:1; 15:11-15) Não usou sua autoridade para ser exigente e para aumentar as cargas do povo, mas, ao invés, disse: "Vinde a mim, todos os que estais labutando . . . e eu vos reanimarei." Seus discípulos achavam-no "de temperamento brando e humilde de coração", sendo o jugo dele benévolo e sua carga leve. — Mt 11:28-30.

Os deveres sacerdotais incluíam cuidar da saúde física e espiritual do povo. (Le 13-15) A piedade e a compaixão moveram Jesus a ajudar as pessoas que padeciam de doenças, cegueira e outras aflições. (Mt 9:36; 14:14; 20:34; Lu 7:11-15; compare isso com Is 61:1.) A morte de seu amigo Lázaro, e o resultante pesar para as irmãs de Lázaro, moveram Jesus a 'gemer e verter lágrimas'. (Jo 11:32-36) Assim, de forma antecipada, Jesus, o Messias, 'carregou as doenças e levou as dores' dos outros, fazendo isso ao custo de poder despendido por ele. (Is 53:4; Lu 8:43-48) Fez isso, não só em cumprimento de profecias, mas porque 'queria' fazê-lo. (Mt 8:2-4, 16, 17) Mais importante, ele lhes trouxe saúde espiritual e o perdão de pecados, estando autorizado a fazê-lo porque, como o Cristo, foi predeterminado que fornecesse o sacrifício de resgate, na realidade, já sendo submetido ao batismo de morte que terminaria na estaca de tortura. — Is 53:4-8, 11, 12; compare isso com Mt 9:2-8; 20:28; Mr 10:38, 39; Lu 12:50.

"Maravilhoso Conselheiro." O sacerdote era responsável pela instrução do povo na lei e na vontade de Deus. (Mal 2:7) Também, como o Messias régio, o predito 'renovo saído do toco de Jessé [pai de Davi]', Jesus precisava manifestar o 'espírito de Jeová em sabedoria, conselho, potência, conhecimento, junto com o temor de Jeová'. Ele mostraria a alegria, ou o 'deleite', que resulta do temor de Jeová. (Is 11:1-3) A incomparável sabedoria encontrada nos ensinos de Jesus, que era "maior do que Salomão" (Mt 12:42), é uma das mais poderosas evidências de que ele era deveras o Filho de Deus, e que os relatos evangélicos jamais podiam ser mero produto da mente ou da imaginação de homens imperfeitos.

Jesus mostrou ser o "Maravilhoso Conselheiro" prometido (Is 9:6), pelo seu conhecimento da Palavra e da vontade de Deus, pelo seu entendimento da natureza humana, por sua habilidade de chegar ao âmago das questões e das controvérsias, e por mostrar soluções para os problemas da vida diária. O bem-conhecido Sermão do Monte é um exemplo destacado disto. (Mt 5-7) Nele, seu conselho mostrou como alcançar a verdadeira felicidade, como resolver disputas, como evitar a imoralidade, como lidar com aqueles que demonstram inimizade, a maneira de praticar a justiça livre de hipocrisia, a atitude correta para com as coisas materiais da vida, confiança na generosidade de Deus, a regra de ouro para manter relações corretas com outros, os meios de detectar fraudes religiosas, e como construir um futuro seguro. As multidões ficaram "assombradas com o seu modo de ensinar; pois ele as ensinava como quem tinha autoridade, e não como seus escribas". (Mt 7:28, 29) Após a sua ressurreição, ele continuou a ser a figura-chave no canal de comunicação de Jeová com a humanidade. — Re 1:1.

Magistral Instrutor. Sua maneira de ensinar era notavelmente eficaz. (Jo 7:45, 46) Ele apresentava com simplicidade, brevidade e clareza assuntos de grande peso e profundidade. Ilustrava os pontos com coisas bem conhecidas dos seus ouvintes (Mt 13:34, 35) — pescadores (Mt 13:47, 48), pastores (Jo 10:1-17), lavradores (Mt 13:3-9), construtores (Mt 7:24-27; Lu 14:28-30), comerciantes (Mt 13:45, 46), escravos ou amos (Lu 16:1-9), donas de casa (Mt 13:33; Lu 15:8), ou quaisquer outros (Mt 6:26-30). Coisas simples como pão, água, sal, odres de vinho, roupas velhas, foram empregadas quais símbolos de coisas de suma importância, assim como haviam sido usadas nas Escrituras Hebraicas. (Jo 6:31-35, 51; 4:13, 14; Mt 5:13; Lu 5:36-39) Sua lógica, frequentemente expressa por meio de analogias, eliminava as objeções mal direcionadas e restabelecia as coisas na sua perspectiva correta. (Mt 16:1-3; Lu 11:11-22; 14:1-6) Visava com a sua mensagem primariamente o coração dos homens, usando perguntas penetrantes para fazê-los pensar, chegar às suas próprias conclusões, examinar sua própria motivação e fazer decisões. (Mt 16:5-16; 17:24-27; 26:52-54; Mr 3:1-5; Lu 10:25-37; Jo 18:11) Ele não se esforçava a granjear o favor das massas, mas a despertar o coração dos que sinceramente tinham fome da verdade e da justiça. — Mt 5:3, 6; 13:10-15.

Embora mostrasse consideração para com o entendimento limitado da sua assistência, e até mesmo dos seus discípulos (Mr 4:33), e embora usasse discernimento a respeito de quantas informações lhes devia dar (Jo 16:4, 12), jamais 'amainou' a mensagem de Deus no empenho de obter popularidade ou granjear favores. Sua linguagem era franca, às vezes até brusca. (Mt 5:37; Lu 11:37-52; Jo 7:19; 8:46, 47) O tema da sua mensagem era: "Arrependei-vos, pois o reino dos céus se tem aproximado." (Mt 4:17) Assim como o fizeram os profetas de Jeová de tempos anteriores, ele informou claramente o povo sobre 'a revolta deste, e a casa de Jacó sobre os pecados dela' (Is 58:1; Mt 21:28-32; Jo 8:24), apontando-lhes a 'porta estreita e a estrada apertada' que os conduziriam de volta ao favor de Deus e à vida. — Mt 7:13, 14.

"Líder e Comandante." Jesus demonstrou suas habilitações como "líder e comandante", bem como "testemunha para os grupos nacionais". (Is 55:3, 4; Mt 23:10; Jo 14:10, 14; compare isso com 1Ti 6:13, 14.) Quando chegou a ocasião para isso, alguns meses depois de iniciar seu ministério, ele se dirigiu a certas pessoas que já conhecia e lhes fez o convite: "Sê meu seguidor." Homens abandonaram o negócio de pesca e o emprego de coletor de impostos para aceitar seu convite, sem hesitação. (Mt 4:18-22; Lu 5:27, 28; compare isso com Sal 110:3.) Mulheres contribuíam tempo, esforços e bens materiais para suprir as necessidades de Jesus e de seus seguidores. — Mr 15:40, 41; Lu 8:1-3.

Este pequeno grupo constituía o núcleo daquilo que viria a ser uma nova "nação", o Israel espiritual. (1Pe 2:7-10) Jesus passou uma noite inteira orando, pedindo a orientação de seu Pai, antes de escolher 12 apóstolos, os quais, se fiéis, tornar-se-iam colunas desta nova nação, como os 12 filhos de Jacó tinham sido no Israel carnal. (Lu 6:12-16; Ef 2:20; Re 21:14) Assim como Moisés tinha 70 homens associados consigo, como representantes daquela nação, Jesus, mais tarde, designou outros 70 discípulos para o ministério. (Núm 11:16, 17; Lu 10:1) Depois disso, na sua obra de ensino e de instrução, Jesus fixou atenção especial nestes discípulos, sendo até mesmo o Sermão do Monte proferido principalmente para eles, como revela o seu conteúdo. — Mt 5:1, 2, 13-16; 13:10, 11; Mr 4:34; 7:17.

Ele aceitou plenamente as responsabilidades de sua chefia, assumiu a liderança em todos os sentidos (Mt 23:10; Mr 10:32), deu aos discípulos responsabilidades e tarefas em adição à obra de pregação deles (Lu 9:52; 19:29-35; Jo 4:1-8; 12:4-6; 13:29; Mr 3:9; 14:12-16), encorajou-os e repreendeu-os (Jo 16:27; Lu 10:17-24; Mt 16:22, 23). Ele era comandante, e a principal das suas ordens era que se 'amassem uns aos outros, assim como ele os amara'. (Jo 15:10-14) Conseguia controlar as multidões que, às vezes, atingiam milhares de pessoas. (Mr 6:39-46) O treinamento contínuo e prestimoso que deu aos seus discípulos, que, na maior parte, eram homens de posição humilde e de pouca instrução, foi extremamente eficaz. (Mt 10:1–11:1; Mr 6:7-13; Lu 8:1) Mais tarde, homens de alta posição e grande erudição ficaram admirados diante da linguagem vigorosa e confiante dos apóstolos; e estes, como "pescadores de homens", tiveram espantosos resultados — milhares de pessoas acatavam a pregação deles. (Mt 4:19; At 2:37, 41; 4:4, 13; 6:7) Seu domínio dos princípios bíblicos, cuidadosamente implantados por Jesus no coração deles, habilitou-os a ser verdadeiros pastores do rebanho em anos posteriores. (1Pe 5:1-4) Assim, Jesus, no curto espaço de três anos e meio, lançou o sólido alicerce duma congregação internacional unificada, composta de milhares de membros provenientes de muitas raças.

Provisor capaz e Juiz justo. A sua capacidade de dirigir as operações de pesca de seus discípulos, com surpreendente êxito, era evidência de que seu governo traria prosperidade superior à que o de Salomão trouxe. (Lu 5:4-9; compare isso com Jo 21:4-11.) Alimentar este homem, nascido em Belém (que significa "Casa de Pão"), milhares de pessoas e transformar ele água em vinho de excelente qualidade era um antegosto do futuro banquete que o Reino messiânico de Deus ofereceria "para todos os povos". (Is 25:6; compare isso com Lu 14:15.) Seu governo não só poria fim à pobreza e à fome, mas até mesmo resultaria em 'tragar a morte'. — Is 25:7, 8.

Havia também todo motivo para se confiar na justiça e no julgamento justo que seu governo trará, em harmonia com as profecias messiânicas. (Is 11:3-5; 32:1, 2; 42:1) Ele mostrava o máximo respeito pela lei, especialmente a de seu Deus e Pai, mas também pela lei das "autoridades superiores" permitidas a operar na Terra, na forma dos governos seculares. (Ro 13:1; Mt 5:17-19; 22:17-21; Jo 18:36) Rejeitou os esforços de projetá-lo no cenário político da época por 'fazê-lo rei' por aclamação pública. (Jo 6:15; compare isso com Lu 19:11, 12; At 1:6-9.) Não ultrapassou os limites da sua autoridade. (Lu 12:13, 14) Ninguém podia 'declará-lo culpado de pecado', não só porque tinha nascido perfeito, mas porque exercia constante cuidado de observar a Palavra de Deus. (Jo 8:46, 55) A justiça e a fidelidade o cingiam como um cinto. (Is 11:5) Seu amor pela justiça era conjugado com o ódio à iniquidade, à hipocrisia e à fraude, e com a indignação àqueles que eram gananciosos e insensíveis para com os sofrimentos alheios. (Mt 7:21-27; 23:1-8, 25-28; Mr 3:1-5; 12:38-40; compare isso com os vv 41-44.) Os mansos e humildes podiam animar-se, porque Seu governo eliminaria a injustiça e a opressão. — Is 11:4; Mt 5:5.

Ele mostrava vivo discernimento dos princípios, do verdadeiro significado e propósito das leis de Deus, enfatizando os "assuntos mais importantes" delas, "a justiça, a misericórdia e a fidelidade". (Mt 12:1-8; 23:23, 24) Era imparcial, não demonstrando favoritismo, muito embora sentisse especial afeição por um dos seus discípulos. (Mt 18:1-4; Mr 10:35-44; Jo 13:23; compare isso com 1Pe 1:17.) Embora um dos seus últimos atos, quando morria na estaca de tortura, fosse demonstrar consideração para com sua mãe humana, os vínculos familiares carnais nunca tiveram prioridade sobre suas relações espirituais. (Mt 12:46-50; Lu 11:27, 28; Jo 19:26, 27) Conforme predito, o modo como lidava com os problemas jamais era superficial, baseado no 'que meramente parecia aos seus olhos, nem sua repreensão simplesmente segundo a coisa ouvida pelos seus ouvidos'. (Is 11:3; compare isso com Jo 7:24.) Ele podia ver o que havia no coração dos homens, discernir seus pensamentos, raciocínios e motivações. (Mt 9:4; Mr 2:6-8; Jo 2:23-25) E conservava seus ouvidos sintonizados com a Palavra de Deus, procurando fazer, não a sua própria vontade, mas a de seu Pai; isto garantia que, como Juiz designado por Deus, suas decisões sempre seriam corretas e justas. — Is 11:4; Jo 5:30.

Notável Profeta. Jesus cumpriu os requisitos de profeta semelhante a Moisés, porém maior do que este. (De 18:15, 18, 19; Mt 21:11; Lu 24:19; At 3:19-23; compare isso com Jo 7:40.) Ele predisse os seus próprios sofrimentos e a maneira da sua morte, a dispersão dos seus discípulos, o sítio de Jerusalém, e a completa destruição desta cidade e do seu templo. (Mt 20:17-19; 24:1–25:46; 26:31-34; Lu 19:41-44; 21:20-24; Jo 13:18-27, 38) Relacionado com estes eventos mencionados por último, ele incluiu profecias a serem cumpridas na época da sua presença, quando seu Reino já estaria em operação ativa. E, como os anteriores profetas, realizou sinais e milagres como evidência da parte de Deus, de que fora divinamente enviado. Suas credenciais ultrapassavam as de Moisés — ele acalmou o mar tempestuoso da Galileia; andou sobre suas águas (Mt 8:23-27; 14:23-34); curou cegos, surdos e coxos, bem como os afligidos por doenças tão graves como a lepra; e até mesmo ressuscitou pessoas mortas. — Lu 7:18-23; 8:41-56; Jo 11:1-46.

Magnífico exemplo de amor. Em todos estes aspectos da personalidade de Jesus, a qualidade predominante é o amor — acima de tudo o amor de Jesus a seu Pai e também às suas concriaturas. (Mt 22:37-39) Por conseguinte, o amor devia ser o sinal distintivo que identificaria seus discípulos. (Jo 13:34, 35; compare isso com 1Jo 3:14.) Seu amor não era sentimentalismo. Embora expressasse fortes sentimentos, Jesus era sempre guiado por princípios (He 1:9); a vontade de seu Pai era sua suprema preocupação. (Veja Mt 16:21-23.) Ele provou seu amor a Deus por observar os mandamentos Dele (Jo 14:30, 31; compare isso com 1Jo 5:3), e por sempre procurar glorificar seu Pai. (Jo 17:1-4) Na sua última noite com seus discípulos, falou quase trinta vezes sobre o amor e o amar, repetindo três vezes a ordem de que 'se amassem uns aos outros'. (Jo 13:34; 15:12, 17) Disse-lhes: "Ninguém tem maior amor do que este, que alguém entregue a sua alma a favor de seus amigos. Vós sois meus amigos, se fizerdes o que vos mando." — Jo 15:13, 14; compare isso com Jo 10:11-15.

Em prova de seu amor a Deus e à humanidade imperfeita, ele então permitiu que fosse "trazido qual ovídeo ao abate", submetendo-se a julgamentos, sendo esbofeteado, esmurrado, cuspido, flagelado com um chicote, e, por fim, pregado numa estaca entre criminosos. (Is 53:7; Mt 26:67, 68; 27:26-38; Mr 14:65; 15:15-20; Jo 19:1) Pela sua morte sacrificial exemplificou e expressou o amor de Deus para com os homens (Ro 5:8-10; Ef 2:4, 5), e habilitou homens a ter a convicção absoluta de seu inquebrantável amor por seus discípulos fiéis. — Ro 8:35-39; 1Jo 3:16-18.

Visto ser grandioso o perfil do Filho de Deus, que se consegue ter do registro escrito, admitidamente breve (Jo 21:25), muito mais grandiosa deve ter sido a realidade. Seu acalentador exemplo de humildade e bondade, aliado à sua força em favor da justiça e retidão, dá-nos a certeza de que seu governo do Reino será tudo o que os homens de fé, através dos séculos, têm almejado, e que, na realidade, ultrapassará as maiores expectativas. (Ro 8:18-22) Em todos os sentidos, ele exemplificou o padrão perfeito para seus discípulos, um padrão bem diferente daquele dos governantes do mundo. (Mt 20:25-28; 1Co 11:1; 1Pe 2:21) Ele, seu Senhor, lavou-lhes os pés. Assim, estabeleceu o padrão de solicitude, de consideração e de humildade que deve caracterizar a sua congregação de seguidores ungidos, não apenas na Terra, mas também no céu. (Jo 13:3-15) Embora enaltecidos aos céus em seus tronos e compartilhando com Jesus 'toda a autoridade no céu e na terra' durante o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, eles têm de humildemente zelar e amorosamente servir as necessidades dos súditos dele na Terra. — Mt 28:18; Ro 8:17; 1Pe 2:9; Re 1:5, 6; 20:6; 21:2-4.

Declarado Justo e Digno. Por meio de toda a sua vida de integridade para com Deus, inclusive seu sacrifício, Jesus Cristo realizou o "um só ato de justificação" que mostrou que ele estava habilitado para servir como o Rei-Sacerdote ungido de Deus, no céu. (Ro 5:17, 18) Pela sua ressurreição dentre os mortos para a vida como Filho celestial de Deus, ele foi "declarado justo em espírito". (1Ti 3:16) As criaturas celestiais o proclamaram "digno de receber o poder, e as riquezas, e a sabedoria, e a força, e a honra, e a glória, e a bênção", como aquele que tanto era leonino a favor da justiça e do julgamento, como era semelhante a um cordeiro em sacrificar a si mesmo a favor da salvação de outros. (Re 5:5-13) Realizou seu propósito primário de santificar o nome de seu Pai. (Mt 6:9; 22:36-38) Fez isto, não apenas por usar este nome, mas por revelar a Pessoa que representa, demonstrando as esplêndidas qualidades do seu Pai — seu amor, sua sabedoria, sua justiça e seu poder — habilitando as pessoas a conhecer ou a sentir o que o nome de Deus representa. (Mt 11:27; Jo 1:14, 18; 17:6-12) E, acima de tudo, fez isto por apoiar a soberania universal de Jeová, mostrando que seu próprio governo do Reino estaria solidamente alicerçado naquela Suprema Fonte de autoridade. Por conseguinte, podia-se dizer dele: "Deus é o teu trono para todo o sempre." — He 1:8.

O Senhor Jesus Cristo é assim o "Agente Principal e Aperfeiçoador da nossa fé". Por ele cumprir profecias e revelar os propósitos futuros de Deus, bem como por aquilo que disse, que fez e que era, forneceu o sólido alicerce em que se deve basear a verdadeira fé. — He 12:2; 11:1.

JETER [duma raiz que significa "mais que suficiente; excedente"].

1. Jetro, sogro de Moisés, é chamado Jeter no texto massorético, em Êxodo 4:18. — Veja JETRO.

2. Descendente de Judá através de Peres. Jeter morreu sem deixar filhos varões. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 25, 26, 28, 32.

3. Primeiro filho mencionado de Ezra; descendente de Judá. — 1Cr 4:17.

4. Descendente de Aser. (1Cr 7:30, 38) Provavelmente trata-se do Itrã do versículo 37; os nomes são bastante similares no hebraico.

5. Primogênito de Gideão. Pelo visto, Jeter acompanhou seu pai na perseguição e captura dos reis midianitas Zeba e Zalmuna, mas, quando se lhe ordenou que os matasse, o jovem Jeter teve medo de puxar da espada. (Jz 8:20) Após a morte de Gideão, Jeter foi morto pelo seu meio-irmão Abimeleque. — Jz 9:5, 18.

6. Pai de Amasa, ex-chefe do exército de Davi. (1Rs 2:5, 32) O texto massorético, em 2 Samuel 17:25, chama-o de Itra, e diz que ele era israelita, mas 1 Crônicas 2:17 chama-o de ismaelita, possivelmente porque morou por um tempo entre os ismaelitas.

JETETE. Xeque de Edom, descendente de Esaú. — Gên 36:40-43; 1Cr 1:51; veja TIMNA N.º 3.

JETRO [duma raiz que significa "mais que suficiente; excedente"]. Sogro de Moisés, queneu. (Êx 3:1; Jz 1:16) Jetro também é chamado de Reuel. (Núm 10:29) Jetro pode ter sido um título, ao passo que Reuel era um nome pessoal. Todavia, não era incomum que um chefe árabe tivesse dois nomes, ou até mais, conforme muitas inscrições atestam. Jetro é grafado "Jeter" no texto massorético, em Êxodo 4:18.

Jetro era "sacerdote de Midiã". Sendo cabeça duma grande família de pelo menos sete filhas e de um filho cujo nome é citado (Êx 2:15, 16; Núm 10:29), e tendo a responsabilidade não só de fazer provisões materiais para sua família, mas também de liderá-la na adoração, ele é apropriadamente chamado de "sacerdote [ou maioral] de Midiã". Isto, em si, não indica necessariamente que se tratava da adoração de Jeová Deus; mas é possível que a adoração verdadeira tivesse sido inculcada nos antepassados de Jetro, e parte disso tivesse perdurado na família. A conduta dele sugere, pelo menos, profundo respeito pelo Deus de Moisés e de Israel. — Êx 18:10-12.

A associação de Jetro com seu futuro genro se iniciou pouco depois de Moisés ter fugido do Egito, em 1553 AEC. Moisés ajudou as filhas de Jetro a dar água aos rebanhos do seu pai, e elas contaram isso ao pai, o qual, por sua vez, demonstrou hospitalidade para com Moisés. Moisés passou então a morar na casa de Jetro, e, com o tempo, casou-se com Zípora, filha deste. Depois de cuidar dos rebanhos de Jetro por cerca de 40 anos, na vizinhança do monte Horebe (Sinai), Moisés foi convocado por Jeová a retornar para o Egito, e ele foi com os melhores votos de seu sogro. — Êx 2:15-22; 3:1; 4:18; At 7:29, 30.

Mais tarde, Jetro recebeu notícias da grande vitória de Jeová sobre os egípcios, e dirigiu-se imediatamente a Moisés em Horebe, levando consigo Zípora e os dois filhos de Moisés; foi deveras um reencontro bem caloroso. A reação de Jetro à recapitulação, feita por Moisés, dos poderosos atos salvadores de Jeová, foi bendizer a Deus e confessar: "Agora sei deveras que Jeová é maior do que todos os demais deuses." Ele então ofereceu sacrifícios ao verdadeiro Deus. (Êx 18:1-12) No dia seguinte, Jetro observou Moisés escutar os problemas dos israelitas "desde a manhã até à noite". Percebendo quão extenuante isso era, tanto para Moisés como para o povo, Jetro sugeriu um sistema de delegação de autoridade. 'Treina outros homens capazes e dignos como chefes de dez, de cinquenta, de cem, e de mil para decidirem os casos, de modo que só ouças aquilo que não puderem cuidar.' Moisés concordou e mais tarde Jetro voltou para sua própria terra. — Êx 18:13-27.

Moisés solicitou que Hobabe, filho de Jetro, servisse de guia. Pelo que parece, depois de alguma persuasão, ele aceitou isto e alguns dos seus entraram na Terra da Promessa junto com Israel. (Núm 10:29-33) Juízes 4:11 chama Hobabe de sogro de Moisés, em vez de seu cunhado, e isto tem causado dificuldades no entendimento. No entanto, a expressão hebraica normalmente traduzida "sogro" pode, num sentido mais amplo, indicar qualquer parente por afinidade do sexo masculino, e assim poderia também ser entendida como

"cunhado". Dizer que Hobabe, em vez de Jetro, era o sogro de Moisés discordaria de outros textos. Se, como alguns sugerem, Hobabe era outro nome de Jetro, isso também significaria que os dois homens, pai e filho, tinham o nome Hobabe. Por outro lado, Hobabe, como membro destacado da geração seguinte dos queneus, poderia ser usado neste texto como representativo de seu pai. — Veja HOBABE.

JETUR. Filho de Ismael (Gên 25:13-15; 1Cr 1:31) e antepassado dum povo contra o qual os israelitas guerrearam. (1Cr 5:18, 19) É possível que os descendentes de Jetur fossem os itureus. — Lu 3:1; veja ITUREIA.

JEÚ [possivelmente: Jeová É Ele].

1. Benjamita da cidade de Anatote, que se tornou voluntário para servir com Davi. Davi encontrava-se então em Ziclague, como fugitivo do Rei Saul. Jeú estava entre os poderosos, "armados de arco, usando a direita ou a esquerda com pedras ou com flechas no arco". — 1Cr 12:1-3.

2. Profeta, filho de Hanani. Ele predisse a destruição da casa de Baasa, rei de Israel. (1Rs 16:1-4, 7, 12) Mais de 33 anos depois, um profeta do mesmo nome (e, portanto, talvez a mesma pessoa) repreendeu o Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, por sua amizade com o iníquo Rei Acabe, de Israel, e por tê-lo ajudado. (2Cr 19:1-3) Em 2 Crônicas 20:34, diz-se que a história de Jeosafá estava escrita "entre as palavras de Jeú, filho de Hanani, que foram incluídas no Livro dos Reis de Israel".

3. Filho de Jeosafá (não do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá), e neto de Ninsi. (2Rs 9:14) Jeú governou qual rei de Israel de cerca de 904 a 877 AEC. Durante o reinado do Rei Acabe, de Israel, o profeta Elias fugira para o monte Horebe, a fim de escapar da morte às mãos de Jezabel, esposa de Acabe. Deus ordenou que Elias retornasse e ungisse três homens: Eliseu, como sucessor de Elias; Hazael, como rei da Síria; e Jeú, como rei de Israel. (1Rs 19:15, 16) Elias ungiu Eliseu (ou, designou-o; veja UNGIDO, UNÇÃO). No entanto, a unção de Jeú realmente ficou para ser feita pelo sucessor de Elias, Eliseu.

Será que foi por procrastinação da parte de Elias que a unção de Jeú ficou para ser feita por Eliseu? Não. Depois de dar tal ordem a Elias, Jeová lhe disse que a calamidade sobre a casa de Acabe (a ser executada por Jeú) não ocorreria nos dias de Acabe, mas nos dias do filho de Acabe. (1Rs 21:27-29) Assim, torna-se evidente que essa delonga se deu por orientação de Jeová, e não por negligência da parte de Elias. Jeová, porém, cronometrou com perfeita exatidão tal unção, quando a ocasião era oportuna para Jeú agir imediatamente em conformidade com a unção. E, em harmonia com a personalidade decidida e dinâmica de Jeú, ele não perdeu um instante sequer, mas agiu imediatamente.

Chegou o tempo devido. Era uma época de guerra. Acabe estava morto, e seu filho, Jeorão, governava. O exército de Israel estava ajuntado em Ramote-Gileade, em guarda contra as forças de Hazael, rei da Síria. Jeú estava ali como um dos comandantes militares. (2Rs 8:28; 9:14) Ele e seu ajudante de ordens, Bidcar, como soldados do exército de Acabe, estiveram presentes quando Elias denunciara Acabe, profetizando que Jeová 'retribuiria a Acabe no lote de terreno que pertencera a Nabote'. Este terreno tinha sido tomado por Acabe, depois que Jezabel, esposa dele, provocara o assassínio de Nabote. — 1Rs 21:11-19; 2Rs 9:24-26.

Enquanto a força militar de Israel mantinha guarda em Ramote-Gileade, o Rei Jeorão, de Israel, se recuperava em Jezreel das feridas recebidas às mãos dos sírios em Ramá (Ramote-Gileade). O rei de Judá, Acazias, também estava ali. Ele era sobrinho de Jeorão, de Israel, pois a mãe dele era Atalia, irmã de Jeorão, de Israel, e filha de Acabe e Jezabel. O Rei Acazias tinha vindo a Jezreel fazer uma visita a seu tio enfermo, Jeorão. — 2Rs 8:25, 26, 28, 29.

A Unção de Jeú. Eliseu chamou um dos filhos dos profetas, seu ajudante, mandando que apanhasse um frasco de óleo, fosse ao acampamento israelita em Ramote-Gileade, ungisse ali Jeú e fugisse. O ajudante de Eliseu obedeceu, chamando à parte Jeú, que estava com outros oficiais, para entrarem numa casa, onde ele o ungiu e declarou a comissão de Jeú, de destruir toda a casa de Acabe. Daí, o ajudante fugiu, conforme Eliseu o havia orientado. — 2Rs 9:1-10.

Ao sair dessa casa, Jeú tentou dar a entender que este assunto era de somenos importância, como se o profeta não tivesse dito nada de importante. Mas os homens observaram, pela aparência dele e pelo modo como agia, que ocorrera algo expressivo. Pressionado, Jeú revelou que tinha sido ungido como rei de Israel; ao ouvir isso, o exército imediatamente proclamou-o rei. — 2Rs 9:11-14.

Destruição da Casa de Acabe. Ordenando que este assunto fosse mantido em segredo para Jezreel, Jeú andou furiosamente de carro em direção a esta cidade. (2Rs 9:15, 16) Mensageiros enviados de Jezreel por Jeorão, para indagar: "Há paz?" foram colocados na retaguarda dos homens de Jeú. À medida que a "massa movimentada" dos cavaleiros e dos carros de Jeú chegava mais perto, a maneira de Jeú guiar seu carro "com loucura" o identificou ao vigia na torre. Jeorão, rei de Israel e filho de Acabe, ficou suspeitoso e foi-lhe ao encontro no seu carro de guerra, chegando a Jeú no lote de terreno de Nabote. Jeú o abateu com uma flecha, e, lembrando a profecia de Elias, mandou que Bidcar, seu ajudante, lançasse o corpo de Jeorão no campo de Nabote. Daí, Jeú seguiu para a cidade de Jezreel. Pelo que parece, Acazias, neto de Acabe, que tinha saído da cidade junto com Jeorão, tentou retornar para sua própria capital, Jerusalém, mas só conseguiu chegar a Samaria, e escondeu-se ali. Ele foi capturado mais tarde e levado até Jeú, perto da cidade de Ibleão, não muito longe de Jezreel. Jeú ordenou que seus homens o matassem no seu próprio carro de guerra. Eles o feriram mortalmente, a caminho de Gur, perto de Ibleão, mas ele escapou e fugiu para Megido, onde morreu. Daí, foi levado para Jerusalém e sepultado ali. — 2Rs 9:17-28; 2Cr 22:6-9.

Quando Jeú chegou a Jezreel, a viúva de Acabe, Jezabel, clamou: "Foi tudo bem com Zinri, matador de seu senhor?" (Veja 1Rs 16:8-20.) Mas Jeú, sem se deixar abalar por esta ameaça velada, ordenou aos oficiais da corte que a lançassem para baixo. Eles obedeceram. O sangue dela respingou no muro e Jeú a pisoteou com seus cavalos. O que possivelmente elucida ainda mais o caráter de Jeú é a declaração sucinta, constante no relato: "Depois entrou, e comeu e bebeu", ordenando depois o sepultamento dela. No ínterim, Jezabel já tinha sido comida pelos cães, circunstância esta que fez Jeú lembrar-se da expressão profética de Elias sobre a morte dela. — 2Rs 9:30-37; 1Rs 21:23.

Jeú não perdeu tempo em cumprir plenamente sua missão. Desafiou os homens de Samaria a colocar um dos 70 filhos de Acabe no trono e a lutar. Mas, cheios de medo, expressaram lealdade a Jeú. Sua lealdade foi intrepidamente testada por Jeú, por ele dizer: "Se fordes meus . . . tomai as cabeças dos homens que são filhos de vosso senhor e vinde a mim amanhã, nesta hora, a Jezreel." No dia seguinte, apareceram mensageiros, trazendo em cestos as 70 cabeças, que Jeú mandou colocar em duas pilhas junto ao portão de Jezreel até a manhã. Depois disso, Jeú matou todos os homens distintos de Acabe, seus conhecidos, e seus sacerdotes. Daí abateu mais 42 homens, os irmãos do neto de Acabe, o Rei Acazias, de Judá. Assim, destruiu também os filhos de Jeorão, de Judá, marido de Atalia, filha da iníqua Jezabel. — 2Rs 10:1-14.

Mesmo depois de serem tomadas grandes medidas para livrar Israel da adoração de Baal, Jeú ainda tinha muito a fazer, e ele passou a fazê-lo com sua característica prontidão e zelo. Na sua ida a Samaria, encontrou-se com Jonadabe, um recabita. Deve ser lembrado que os descendentes deste homem, mais tarde, foram elogiados por Jeová, mediante o profeta Jeremias, pela fidelidade deles. (Je 35:1-16) Jonadabe expressou-se como estando do lado de Jeú na sua luta contra o baalismo e o acompanhou, ajudando Jeú. Todos os que restaram dos aparentados ou relacionados com Acabe, em Samaria, foram destruídos. — 2Rs 10:15-17.

Aniquilados os Adoradores de Baal. Em seguida, sob o pretexto de convocar um grande ajuntamento para a adoração de Baal, Jeú conseguiu que todos os adoradores de Baal em Israel se reunissem na casa de Baal. Depois de se assegurar de que não havia ali nenhum adorador de Jeová, Jeú ordenou a seus homens que matassem todos naquela casa. Depois disso, destruíram as colunas sagradas de Baal e derrubaram a casa, fazendo dela latrinas, sendo o lugar usado assim até os dias de Jeremias, escritor do relato do livro de Reis. O registro reza: "Assim aniquilou Jeú a Baal em Israel." (2Rs 10:18-28) No entanto, mais tarde, a adoração de Baal de novo causou dificuldades tanto em Israel como em Judá. — 2Rs 17:16; 2Cr 28:2; Je 32:29.

Provavelmente para manter o reino de dez tribos, de Israel, distinto do reino de Judá, que tinha o templo de Jeová em Jerusalém, o Rei Jeú deixou que a adoração do bezerro continuasse em Israel, tendo seus centros em Dã e em Betel. "E o próprio Jeú não cuidou em andar na lei de Jeová, o Deus de Israel, de todo o seu coração. Não se desviou dos pecados de Jeroboão, com os quais fez Israel pecar." — 2Rs 10:29, 31.

Todavia, por causa da obra zelosa e cabal de Jeú em erradicar o baalismo e em executar os julgamentos de Jeová na casa de Acabe, Jeová recompensou Jeú com a promessa de que quatro gerações de filhos dele se sentariam no trono de Israel. Isto se cumpriu nos descendentes de Jeú: Jeoacaz, Jeoás, Jeroboão II e Zacarias, cujo governo findou com seu assassínio, por volta de 791 AEC. A dinastia de Jeú, portanto, reinou sobre Israel por cerca de 114 anos. — 2Rs 10:30; 13:1, 10; 14:23; 15:8-12.

Por que foi a casa de Jeú considerada por Jeová Deus responsável pelo derramamento de sangue, quando fora Ele quem comissionara Jeú como executor da parte Dele?

No entanto, depois dos dias de Jeú, Jeová disse por meio do profeta Oseias: "Pois ainda um pouco e terei de ajustar contas pelos atos de derramamento de sangue de Jezreel, contra a casa de Jeú, e terei de fazer cessar o domínio real da casa de Israel." (Os 1:4) Esta culpa de sangue sobre a casa de Jeú não poderia ser por ter ele cumprido a comissão de destruir a casa de Acabe, pois Deus o elogiara por isso. Nem poderia ser por ter destruído Acazias, de Judá, e seus irmãos. Por meio de suas relações familiares, a saber, pelo casamento de Jeorão, de Judá, filho do Rei Jeosafá, com Atalia, filha de Acabe e Jezabel, a linhagem real de Judá fora contaminada com a infiltração da iníqua casa de Onri.

Antes, a chave para o entendimento deste assunto parece ser a declaração de que Jeú permitiu que continuasse em Israel a adoração do bezerro, e que ele não andou na lei de Jeová de todo o seu coração. É provável que Jeú chegasse a acreditar que continuarem independentes de Judá só podia ser conseguido pela separação religiosa. Igual a outros reis de Israel, ele procurou assegurar sua posição por perpetuar a adoração do bezerro. Isto realmente era uma expressão de falta de fé em Jeová, o qual tornara possível que Jeú fosse rei. Portanto, pode ser que, à parte da execução correta do julgamento de Jeová contra a casa de Acabe, as motivações erradas que induziram Jeú a deixar permanecer a adoração do bezerro também o fizeram derramar sangue.

O verdadeiro poder do reino de Israel foi despedaçado com a queda da casa de Jeú, durando este reino apenas mais uns 50 anos. Somente Menaém, que abateu Salum, o assassino de Zacarias, teve um filho que o sucedeu no trono. Este filho, Pecaías, foi assassinado, assim como o foi seu assassino e sucessor, Peca. Oseias, último rei de Israel, foi levado ao cativeiro pelo rei da Assíria. — 2Rs 15:10, 13-30; 17:4.

O pecado fundamental de Israel, durante todo esse tempo, era sua prática da adoração do bezerro. Isto fez com que aquela nação se afastasse de Jeová, com a consequente deterioração. Assim, a culpa pelo "derramamento de sangue de Jezreel" foi uma das coisas, junto com assassínio, roubo, adultério e outros crimes, que realmente tinham suas raízes na adoração falsa, que os governantes permitiram que o povo praticasse. Por fim, Deus teve de "fazer cessar o domínio real da casa de Israel". — Os 1:4; 4:2.

Síria e Assíria Hostilizam Israel. Por não se voltar plenamente para Jeová e andar nos Seus caminhos, Jeú teve de enfrentar dificuldades da parte de Hazael, rei da Síria, durante todos os dias do seu governo. Hazael tomou territórios do domínio de Israel, pedaço por pedaço, no outro lado do Jordão. (2Rs 10:32, 33; Am 1:3, 4) Ao mesmo tempo, ia crescendo a ameaça assíria à existência de Israel.

Inscrições Assírias Mencionam o Nome de Jeú. Em inscrições de Salmaneser III, rei da Assíria, ele afirma ter recebido tributo de Jeú. A inscrição reza: "O tributo de Jeú (Ia-ú-a), filho de Onri (Hu-um-ri); dele recebi prata, ouro, uma tigela-saplu de ouro, um vaso de ouro com fundo pontiagudo, taças sem pé, de ouro, baldes de ouro, estanho, um bastão para o rei, (e) puruhtu [não se conhecendo o significado dessa última palavra] de madeira." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 281) (Na realidade, Jeú não era filho de Onri. Mas, desde os tempos de Onri, tal expressão era às vezes empregada para designar os reis de Israel, sem dúvida, por causa da bravura de Onri, e de ter ele construído Samaria, que continuou como capital de Israel até a queda daquele reino de dez tribos diante da Assíria.)

Junto com esta mesma inscrição, no que é conhecido como o Obelisco Negro, há uma representação pictórica, talvez de um emissário de Jeú, curvando-se perante Salmaneser e oferecendo-lhe tributo. Alguns comentadores observam que se trata da primeira representação pictórica dos israelitas, pelo que se saiba. Não obstante, não podemos ter certeza absoluta da veracidade da afirmação de Salmaneser. Também, não se pode confiar na aparência da figura na escultura como semelhança exata dum israelita, porque essas nações talvez retratassem seus inimigos com aparência indesejável, da mesma forma que pinturas ou gravuras hoje em dia retratam as pessoas duma nação inimiga como fracas, grotescas e odiosas.

4. Filho de Obede, da família de Jerameel, descendente de Esrom, filho de Peres, que Tamar deu à luz para Judá. A linhagem deste Jeú passava por Jara, um escravo egípcio. Sesã, descendente de Jerameel, não tinha filhos, de modo que deu sua filha a Jara como esposa. O filho que lhes nasceu foi Atai, antepassado de Jeú. — 1Cr 2:3-5, 25, 34-38.

5. Simeonita, filho de Josibias. Nos dias do Rei Ezequias, de Judá, ele estava entre os maiorais das famílias simeonitas que abateram os camitas e os meunins que moravam na vizinhança de Gedor, ocupando depois, junto com seus rebanhos, o lugar deste povo. — 1Cr 4:24, 35, 38-41.

JEUBÁ. Membro destacado da tribo de Aser. — 1Cr 7:34, 40.

JEUCAL [Jeová É Capaz; Jeová Prevalece], JUCAL [forma abreviada de Jeucal]. Príncipe enviado pelo Rei Zedequias para pedir a Jeremias que orasse por Judá. (Je 37:3) Este filho de Selemias e mais três príncipes influentes mandaram que Jeremias fosse lançado numa cisterna lamacenta, porque a sua pregação, como diziam, 'enfraquecia as mãos dos homens de guerra', bem como as mãos do povo em geral. — Je 38:1-6.

JEÚDE. Lugar no território de Dã (Jos 19:40, 45), usualmente identificado com el-Yehudiyeh (Yehud), a uns 13 km ao L de Tel Aviv-Yafo. A Septuaginta grega (MS Vaticano N.º 1209), porém, usa "Azor" em lugar de "Jeúde". (Jos 19:45) Por isso, alguns peritos relacionam Jeúde com um Tel perto de Yazur (Azor), a uns 6 km ao ESE de Tel Aviv-Yafo. Acredita-se que este seja o lugar chamado Azuru nos anais de Senaqueribe.

JEUDI [Judeu; de (Pertencente a) Judá]. Oficial do Rei Jeoiaquim, enviado pelos príncipes de Judá para lhes trazer Baruque com o rolo de Jeremias. Mais tarde, quando Jeudi leu este rolo para Jeoiaquim, o rei o rasgou e o queimou, pedaço por pedaço, até destruir o rolo inteiro. — Je 36:14, 21-23, 27, 32.

Jeudi era bisneto de Cusi. (Je 36:14) Alguns acham que o nome dele e o de seu antepassado denotam que ele não era judeu de nascença, mas prosélito, e que o nome de seu bisavô sugere que esta família era de Cus, ou Etiópia. Todavia, os dois que eram das gerações intermediárias têm nomes tipicamente judaicos (Netanias, seu pai, e Selemias, seu avô), e até mesmo o nome Cusi é encontrado em outro lugar como nome próprio dum judeu natural. (Sof 1:1) De modo que Jeudi mui provavelmente era apenas um nome próprio dado por ocasião do seu nascimento e não um nome obtido mais tarde como prosélito.

JEUEL.

1. Levita que ajudou na limpeza do templo durante o reinado de Ezequias; descendente de Elizafã. — 2Cr 29:13, 15, 16.

2. Habitante pós-exílico de Jerusalém; cabeça da casa paterna de Zerá, de Judá. — 1Cr 9:3-6, 9; Gên 46:12.

JEÚS [possivelmente: Que Ele Preste Auxílio].

1. Filho de Esaú com sua esposa heveia, Oolibama. Jeús nasceu em Canaã, mas a família se mudou mais tarde para Edom. — Gên 36:2, 5-8, 14, 18; 1Cr 1:35.

2. Descendente de Benjamim; guerreiro e fundador duma família tribal. — 1Cr 7:6, 10.

3. Levita gersonita; filho de Simei. Visto que tanto ele como seu irmão Berias tiveram poucos filhos, seus descendentes, no tempo de Davi, juntaram-se para formar uma só casa paterna. — 1Cr 23:7, 10, 11.

4. Primeiro filho mencionado do Rei Roboão, presumivelmente com sua esposa Maalate. Visto que Roboão amava mais outra esposa, Jeús foi relegado na sucessão real. — 2Cr 11:18-23.

5. Benjamita; um dos descendentes do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 8:33, 39.

JEUZ [Ele Aconselhou]. Cabeça de família na tribo de Benjamim; filho de Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. — 1Cr 8:1, 8-10.

JEZABEL [do fenício, possivelmente significando: "Onde Está o Enaltecido [isto é, o príncipe]?"].

1. Esposa de Acabe, rei de Israel na metade final do décimo século AEC. Ela era uma rainha dominadora, que mostrou ser forte promotora do baalismo à custa da adoração de Jeová. Nisto, ela era como seu pai, Etbaal, rei de Sídon, que evidentemente era o identificado pelo antigo historiador Menandro (segundo a obra Against Apion [Contra Apião], I, 116, 123 [18], de Josefo) como sacerdote de Astarte (Astorete), que subira ao trono por assassinar seu próprio rei. — 1Rs 16:30, 31.

É bem provável que o casamento de Acabe com esta princesa pagã, Jezabel, tenha sido por motivos políticos, sem levar em consideração as desastrosas consequências religiosas. E depois de ele ter feito tal aliança, o próximo passo lógico para agradar sua esposa devotada à adoração de Baal era construir um templo e um altar para Baal, erigir um "poste sagrado", fálico, e então juntar-se a ela nesta adoração idólatra. Em tudo isso, Acabe fez mais para ofender Jeová do que todos os reis de Israel que o precederam. — 1Rs 16:32, 33.

Jezabel, não satisfeita em conseguir que o trono real aprovasse oficialmente a adoração de Baal, empenhou-se em exterminar a adoração de Jeová do país. Para isso, ordenou que todos os profetas de Jeová Deus fossem mortos, mas Este avisou Elias para que escapasse, cruzando o Jordão, e Obadias, o mordomo do palácio, ocultou cem outros em cavernas. (1Rs 17:1-3; 18:4, 13) Tempos depois, Elias fugiu de novo para salvar a vida, quando Jezabel, por meio dum mensageiro pessoal, jurou matá-lo. — 1Rs 19:1-4, 14.

Chegaram a existir 450 profetas de Baal e 400 profetas do poste sagrado, sendo que Jezabel cuidava de todos eles e os alimentava da sua própria mesa real, a expensas do Estado. (1Rs 18:19) Mas, apesar de seus esforços fanáticos de obliterar a adoração de Jeová, Jeová revelou que, no fim das contas, "todos os joelhos que não se dobraram diante de Baal e toda boca que não o beijou", somavam 7.000 pessoas. — 1Rs 19:18.

O modo como Jezabel tratou Nabote nos fornece outro enfoque do caráter iníquo desta mulher, um caráter extremamente egoísta, inescrupuloso, arrogante e cruel. Quando Acabe começou a ficar mal-humorado e amuado porque Nabote se recusou a vender-lhe seu vinhedo hereditário, esta mulher inescrupulosa desavergonhadamente passou por cima da posição de cabeça de seu marido e, de modo arrogante, declarou: "Eu mesma te darei o vinhedo de Nabote." (1Rs 21:1-7) Nisso, ela escreveu cartas, assinou-as e selou-as em nome de Acabe, ordenando aos anciãos e aos nobres da cidade de Nabote que arranjassem indivíduos imprestáveis que acusassem falsamente Nabote de ter amaldiçoado a Deus e ao rei, e, daí, levassem Nabote e o apedrejassem até ele morrer. Desta forma, Nabote foi morto por se perverter a justiça. Acabe apoderou-se então do vinhedo e preparou-se para transformá-lo numa horta. — 1Rs 21:8-16.

Por tal brutal desrespeito pela justiça, Jeová decretou que Acabe e sua descendência seriam removidos de um só golpe destrutivo. "Sem exceção, ninguém se mostrou igual a Acabe, que se vendeu para fazer o que é mau aos olhos de Jeová, instigando-o Jezabel, sua esposa." Daí, o julgamento de Jeová contra Jezabel: "Os próprios cães devorarão Jezabel." — 1Rs 21:17-26.

Com o tempo, Acabe morreu e foi sucedido primeiro por Acazias, filho de Jezabel, que governou por dois anos, daí, por outro filho dela, Jeorão, que governou pelos próximos 12 anos, antes de a dinastia de Acabe finalmente terminar. (1Rs 22:40, 51-53; 2Rs 1:17; 3:1) Durante os reinados desses filhos, Jezabel, então no papel de rainha-mãe, continuou a influenciar a terra com suas fornicações e feitiçarias. (2Rs 9:22) A influência dela chegou até mesmo a ser sentida em Judá, ao S, onde Atalia, sua filha iníqua, que se tinha casado com o rei de Judá, perpetuou o espírito de Jezabel naquele reino meridional por outros seis anos após a morte da sua mãe. — 2Rs 8:16-18, 25-27; 2Cr 22:2, 3; 24:7.

Quando Jezabel soube que Jeú tinha matado Jeorão, o filho reinante dela, e que ele estava a caminho de Jezreel, ela jeitosamente pintou os olhos, adornou os cabelos e se postou numa janela superior que dava para a praça do palácio. Ali, ela saudou o conquistador em sua entrada triunfal, dizendo: "Foi tudo bem com Zinri, matador de seu senhor?" Esta saudação sarcástica constituía, provavelmente, uma ameaça velada, pois Zinri, depois de ter matado seu rei e usurpado o trono dele, cometeu suicídio sete dias depois, quando sua vida foi ameaçada. — 2Rs 9:30, 31; 1Rs 16:10, 15, 18.

A resposta de Jeú a esta recepção hostil foi: "Quem é comigo? Quem?" Quando dois ou três oficiais da corte olharam para fora, ele ordenou: "Deixai-a cair!" Na violência da queda, o sangue dela aspergiu o muro e os cavalos, e ela foi pisoteada, presumivelmente pelos cavalos. Pouco depois, quando homens vieram sepultar esta "filha de rei", ora, verificaram que cães necrófagos praticamente já a tinham consumido, assim como predissera "a palavra de Jeová, que ele falou por intermédio do seu servo Elias", deixando apenas o crânio, os pés, e as palmas das mãos como evidência de que tudo o que Jeová diz se cumpre. — 2Rs 9:32-37.

2. Aquela "mulher", na congregação de Tiatira, que se chamava profetisa. Esta "mulher", sem dúvida, recebeu o nome de Jezabel porque sua conduta iníqua se assemelhava à da esposa de Acabe. Esta "mulher" não somente ensinava a religião falsa, e levava muitos a cometer fornicação e idolatria, mas ela também, empedernidamente, recusava arrepender-se. Por este motivo, "o Filho de Deus" declarou que ela seria lançada num leito de doença e os filhos dela seriam mortos, para mostrar que cada um é recompensado segundo suas ações. — Re 2:18-23.

JEZANIAS [provavelmente forma abreviada de Jaazanias, significando "Jeová Deu Ouvidos"]. Um chefe da força militar de Judá, daqueles que se sujeitaram à breve administração de Gedalias, em 607 AEC. (Je 40:8, 9; 42:1) Jezanias é também chamado Azarias (Je 43:2) e Jaazanias. — 2Rs 25:23.

JÉZER [Ele Formou]. Terceiro filho alistado de Naftali; fundador da família dos jezeritas. — Gên 46:24; Núm 26:48, 49; 1Cr 7:13.

JEZERITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Jézer]. Família de Naftali que descendia de Jézer. — Núm 26:48, 49.

JEZIEL. Benjamita, filho de Asmavete, que se juntou a Davi quando este se achava proscrito por Saul. — 1Cr 12:1-3.

JEZREEL [Deus Semeará], JEZREELITA.

1. Descendente de Judá; possivelmente antepassado dos habitantes de Jezreel (N.º 3) ou seu principal habitante. — 1Cr 4:1, 3.

2. Filho do profeta Oseias com sua esposa Gômer (Os 1:3, 4); quanto ao significado profético de "Jezreel", veja o N.º 4.

3. Cidade não identificada na região montanhosa de Judá, talvez fundada pelo N.º 1. (Jos 15:20, 48, 56) Esta Jezreel, sem dúvida, era o domicílio de Ainoã, esposa de Davi. — 1Sa 25:43; 27:3.

4. Cidade na fronteira do território de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 18) Atualmente, Jezreel é identificada com Zerʽin (Tel Yizreʽel), situada a uns 11 km ao NNE de Jenin (En-gannim). Um pouco ao SE fica uma serra de morros calcários, em forma de crescente, tradicionalmente identificada com o monte Gilboa.

Durante a última metade do décimo século AEC, Jezreel serviu como residência real para o

Rei Acabe, de Israel, e para seu sucessor, Jeorão, embora Samaria fosse a verdadeira capital do reino setentrional. (1Rs 18:45, 46; 21:1; 2Rs 8:29) No vinhedo de Nabote, perto do palácio em Jezreel, o profeta Elias proferiu o julgamento de Jeová contra a casa de Acabe. (1Rs 21:17-29) A profecia cumpriu-se. Jeú matou o filho de Acabe, o Rei Jeorão, e depois mandou que o cadáver dele fosse lançado no pedaço de campo de Nabote. Jezabel, esposa de Acabe, tornou-se alimento para os cães necrófagos de Jezreel, quando foi lançada duma janela às ordens de Jeú. As cabeças de 70 filhos de Acabe, executados por seus tutores em Samaria, foram empilhadas em dois montes junto ao portão de Jezreel. Não escapou nenhum dos homens de destaque, dos conhecidos e dos sacerdotes de Acabe em Jezreel. — 2Rs 9:22-37; 10:5-11.

Profecia de Oseias. As palavras de Jeová a Oseias (1:4) a respeito dos "atos de derramamento de sangue de Jezreel", não devem ser entendidas como se referindo a Jeú destruir a casa ímpia de Acabe. Jeú foi usado como instrumento de Jeová na execução do julgamento divino. Todavia, pode ser que as motivações erradas que induziram Jeú a deixar permanecer a adoração do bezerro também o tornaram culpado de derramamento de sangue. — 2Rs 10:30, 31.

O nome profético Jezreel, que Jeová mandou que Oseias desse ao filho que teve com Gômer, apontava para um futuro ajuste de contas com a casa de Jeú. Deus 'semearia' no sentido de causar o espalhamento dela. Este ajuste de contas com a casa de Jeú ocorreu quando o trineto de Jeú, Zacarias, depois de governar por seis meses, foi assassinado e o assassino Salum se apoderou do trono. (2Rs 15:8-10) Assim terminou a dinastia de Jeú. Cerca de 50 anos mais tarde, em 740 AEC, quando o reino setentrional caiu diante da Assíria e seus habitantes foram exilados, o domínio real da casa de Israel cessou completamente. Naquele tempo, "o arco de Israel", isto é, sua força militar, foi definitivamente quebrado. A profecia havia indicado que isto ocorreria na baixada de Jezreel, talvez porque os assírios obtiveram ali uma vitória decisiva. — Os 1:4, 5.

Todavia, Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Oseias, também indicou um sentido favorável de Jezreel. Por reunir os remanescentes de Israel e de Judá, e depois trazer os do seu povo de volta à terra deles, Jeová semearia, fazendo-os aumentar em número ali. — Os 1:11; 2:21-23; compare isso com Za 10:8-10.

5. Região geográfica abrangida pela Planície de Jezreel. Esta designação muitas vezes fica restrita à baixada que se estende da cidade de Jezreel, em Issacar, para o SE, em direção a Bete-Seã, na beira ocidental do vale do Jordão. Mas a designação "vale de Jezreel" também tem sido usada para incluir a baixada ao O de Jezreel, o vale de Esdrelom (forma grega da hebraica Jezreel). Portanto, em sentido amplo, o "vale de Jezreel" inclui toda a planície que se estende desde a serra do Carmelo até o rio Jordão.

A cidade de Jezreel (Zerʽin), situada à beira dum declive rochoso, sobreleva toda a parte oriental do vale de Jezreel, que se estende quase 19 km para o SE e tem a largura de uns 3 km. No tempo de Josué, esta região era controlada por cananeus, que tinham uma poderosa força de carros de guerra, bem equipada. (Jos 17:16) Foi também no vale de Jezreel que Gideão e seus 300 homens presenciaram como a mão salvadora de Jeová fez com que as forças inimigas constituídas por midianitas, amalequitas e orientais se virassem em confusão umas contra as outras. (Jz 6:33; 7:12-22) Mais tarde, o exército israelita do Rei Saul, confrontado por filisteus inimigos, acampou perto da fonte em Jezreel (talvez ʽAin Jalud, no contraforte NO do monte Gilboa, ou ʽAin el-Meiyiteh, abaixo da cidade de Zerʽin). Depois, recebeu-se de Jezreel a notícia da morte de Saul e de seu filho Jonatã. (1Sa 29:1, 11; 2Sa 4:4) Jezreel e seus arredores tornaram-se então parte do território governado por Is-Bosete, filho de Saul. (2Sa 2:8, 9) E, enquanto Salomão reinava, as designações do preposto Baana incluíam a fértil baixada de Jezreel. — 1Rs 4:7, 12.

JIDLAFE. Sétimo na lista dos oito filhos nascidos a Naor e sua esposa Milca. Jidlafe, portanto, era sobrinho de Abraão e tio de Rebeca, esposa de Isaque. — Gên 22:20-23; 24:67.

JÓ [Objeto de Hostilidade]. Homem que morava na terra de Uz, no que é agora a Arábia. (Jó 1:1) Deus disse a respeito de Jó: "Não há ninguém igual a ele na terra, homem inculpe e reto, temendo a Deus e desviando-se do mal." (Jó 1:8) Isto indica que Jó morava em Uz por volta da mesma época em que seus primos distantes, as 12 tribos de Israel, estavam em escravidão lá na terra do Egito. Já então, José, filho de Jacó (Israel), havia morrido (1657 AEC), depois de ter suportado muitos sofrimentos injustos, mas de ter-se mantido inculpe para com Jeová Deus. Moisés não tinha ainda surgido como profeta de Jeová, para conduzir as 12 tribos de Israel para fora da escravidão no Egito. Entre a morte de José e o tempo em que Moisés, pela sua conduta, se mostrou inculpe e reto, não havia nenhum humano com integridade igual à de Jó. Foi provavelmente neste período que ocorreram as palestras entre Jeová e Satanás, envolvendo Jó. — Jó 1:6-12; 2:1-7.

Atribui-se, em geral, a Moisés a escrita do relato das experiências de Jó. Ele pode ter sabido a respeito de Jó quando passou 40 anos em Midiã, e talvez tenha ouvido falar do resultado final feliz para Jó e da sua morte quando Israel estava perto de Uz, próximo do fim de sua jornada no ermo. Se Moisés completou o livro de Jó por volta da época da entrada de Israel na Terra da Promessa, em 1473 AEC (provavelmente não muito depois da morte de Jó), isto situaria a época da provação de Jó por volta de 1613 AEC, porque Jó ainda viveu 140 anos depois de sua provação. — Jó 42:16, 17.

Jó era parente de Abraão, sendo ambos descendentes de Sem. Embora não fosse israelita, Jó era adorador de Jeová. Era "o maior de todos os orientais", possuindo grande riqueza. Sua família consistia em sua esposa, sete filhos e três filhas. (Jó 1:1-3) Ele realizava conscienciosamente os deveres de sacerdote em benefício da sua família, oferecendo sacrifícios a Deus em favor deles. — Jó 1:4, 5.

Jó era figura de destaque no portão da cidade, respeitado até mesmo pelos homens idosos e pelos príncipes. (Jó 29:5-11) Ele atuava como juiz imparcial, executando a justiça como defensor das viúvas, e era como que um pai para os meninos órfãos de pai, para os aflitos e para aqueles que não tinham ajudador. (Jó 29:12-17) Ele se mantinha livre da imoralidade, do ganancioso materialismo e da idolatria, e era generoso para com os pobres e os necessitados. — Jó 31:9-28.

Integridade de Jó. A integridade de Jó para com Jeová foi desafiada por Satanás. Então Jeová, com confiança nesta integridade e conhecendo Sua própria capacidade de recuperar e recompensar Jó, permitiu que Satanás testasse a integridade de Jó até o limite, mas não permitiu que Satanás matasse Jó. Embora Satanás, por vários meios, tirasse primeiro o gado e os servos de Jó, e depois os filhos dele (Jó 1:13-19), Jó nunca acusou Deus de insensatez ou de proceder errado. Nem se desviou de Deus, mesmo quando pressionado por sua própria esposa e por outros. (Jó 1:20-22; 2:9, 10) Falou a verdade sobre Deus. (Jó 42:8) Aceitou a repreensão por estar ansioso demais de se declarar justo e por deixar de vindicar a Deus (Jó 32:2), e admitiu seus pecados perante Deus. — Jó 42:1-6.

Jeová amava Jó. No fim de seu proceder fiel sob provação, Deus constituiu Jó em sacerdote para seus três companheiros, que haviam discutido com ele, e Deus restabeleceu Jó na sua condição anterior. Ele de novo veio a ter uma família excelente (evidentemente com a mesma esposa) e o dobro das riquezas que antes possuíra. Todos os seus parentes e antigos associados vieram novamente apresentar-lhe seus respeitos, e trazer-lhe presentes. (Jó 42:7-15) Ele viveu para ver quatro gerações de filhos e netos. — Jó 42:16.

Por meio do profeta Ezequiel, Deus apontou Jó como um exemplo de justiça. (Ez 14:14, 20) Ter ele suportado pacientemente o sofrimento é apresentado como exemplo para os cristãos, e seu feliz resultado é indicado como algo que magnifica a afeição e a misericórdia de Jeová. (Tg 5:11) O relato de sua experiência provadora é de grande conforto e revigoramento para os cristãos, e muitos princípios bíblicos são destacados e esclarecidos pelo livro que leva o seu nome.

JÓ, LIVRO DE. Escrito por Moisés, segundo peritos tanto dos judeus como dos primitivos cristãos. Sua poesia, sua linguagem e seu estilo indicam que foi escrito originalmente em hebraico. As muitas similaridades com o Pentateuco, nas partes em prosa do livro, tendem a indicar Moisés como o escritor. Durante sua estada de 40 anos em Midiã, Moisés pode ter tido acesso aos fatos sobre a provação de Jó, e ele provavelmente soube do resultado da vida de Jó quando Israel chegou perto de Uz, a caminho para a Terra da Promessa, em 1473 AEC.

Arranjo. O livro de Jó é ímpar no sentido de que consiste principalmente em um debate entre um verdadeiro servo de Jeová Deus e três outros que afirmavam servir a Deus, mas que cometeram erros doutrinais na sua tentativa de corrigir Jó. Eles erroneamente pensavam que Jó estava sendo punido por Deus por algum grave pecado oculto. Assim, argumentando nesta base, eles realmente tornaram-se perseguidores de Jó. (Jó 19:1-5, 22) O debate consiste numa série de três fases de discursos, em que todos os quatro oradores participam, exceto que Zofar não fala na última fase, por ter sido silenciado pelo argumento de Jó. Depois disso, todos são corrigidos pelo porta-voz de Jeová, Eliú, e, finalmente, pelo próprio Deus.

É claro, portanto, que é preciso ter presente, ao se ler ou citar este livro, que os argumentos apresentados por Elifaz, Bildade e Zofar são errôneos. Às vezes, estes três companheiros de Jó declaram fatos verídicos, mas num contexto e com uma aplicação errados. Satanás usou esta tática contra Jesus Cristo quando o levou "à cidade santa e o postou sobre o parapeito do templo, e disse-lhe: 'Se tu és filho de Deus, lança-te para baixo; pois está escrito: "Dará aos seus anjos encargo concernente a ti, e eles te carregarão nas mãos, para que nunca batas com o pé contra uma pedra."' Jesus disse-lhe: 'Novamente está escrito: "Não deves pôr Jeová, teu Deus, à prova."'" — Mt 4:5-7.

Os companheiros de Jó disseram que Deus pune os iníquos. Isto é verdade. (2Pe 2:9) Mas eles concluíram que todo sofrimento por que se passa é resultado de pecados de tal pessoa — que Deus administra assim o castigo. O sofrimento, disseram, é evidência de que a pessoa pecou de modo específico. Falaram de forma inverídica sobre Deus. (Jó 42:7) Caluniaram-no. Segundo apresentaram Deus, faltava-lhe misericórdia. Sua afirmação era de que Deus não se deleita no homem que mantém integridade, e que Ele não confia em Seus servos, nem mesmo nos anjos. Isto nega as muitas declarações bíblicas que revelam o amor de Jeová por seus servos inteligentes. Um exemplo da confiança e crédito de Deus em Seus adoradores fiéis é visto nas suas conversas com Satanás, em que Ele lhe trouxe Jó à atenção e expressou a máxima confiança na lealdade de Jó, quando permitiu que o Diabo provasse a Jó. Observe, porém, que ele protegeu a vida de Jó. (Jó 2:6) Tiago, escritor cristão, diz a respeito dos tratos de Deus com Jó: "Jeová é mui terno em afeição e é misericordioso." — Tg 5:11.

Importância. O livro de Jó é essencial, em conjunto com Gênesis 3:1-6 e outros textos, para revelar a grande questão da justiça de Deus no exercício da Sua soberania, bem como no modo em que a integridade dos servos terrestres de Deus está envolvida nesta questão. Jó não entendia esta questão, mas, apesar disso, não permitiu que seus três companheiros o fizessem duvidar de que ele tinha sido homem de integridade. (Jó 27:5) Ele não compreendia por que lhe

DESTAQUES DE JÓ

Relato do que se deu com Jó quando Satanás desafiou sua integridade perante Jeová.

Provavelmente registrado por Moisés durante a peregrinação de Israel pelo ermo, embora a provação de Jó deva ter acontecido anos antes do nascimento de Moisés.

A prosperidade e o bem-estar de Jó terminam quando Jeová permite que Satanás teste a Jó. (1:1–2:10)

Satanás afirma que a retidão de Jó é motivada só por interesses pessoais.

Jó perde gado, rebanhos e seus dez filhos, tudo num só dia, mas mantém sua integridade.

Passa então a padecer duma doença repugnante, dolorosa, mas se recusa a amaldiçoar a Deus; assim, Jó permanece fiel.

Elifaz, Bildade e Zofar, três companheiros de Jó, reúnem-se por combinação para 'compadecer-se' dele. (2:11–3:26)

Ficam em silêncio sentados em volta dele por sete dias.

Jó rompe o silêncio, amaldiçoando o dia em que nasceu.

Pergunta-se por que Deus permite que continue vivendo.

Os três pretensos consoladores debatem extensivamente com Jó. (4:1–31:40)

Afirmam que ele sofre por causa dos seus pecados, argumentando que Jó deve ter procedido mal, visto que Deus o trata como inimigo.

Tentam convencer disso a Jó por recorrerem a raciocínios falsos e a calúnias, e por apelarem para tradições e para visões que afirmam ter recebido.

Os três companheiros instam com Jó para que confesse suas transgressões e mude de proceder; então, dizem eles, ele recuperará sua prosperidade anterior.

Jó insiste em que ele é reto; não entende por que Jeová permite que sofra, mas silencia o conselho falso dos seus três companheiros.

Nas suas palavras finais, Jó contrasta seus dias anteriores como ancião respeitado com o seu atual período de aflição e humilhação; salienta quanto cuidado teve em evitar o pecado.

Eliú, espectador jovem, corrige Jó e os companheiros dele. (32:1–37:24)

Ele mostra que Jó estava errado ao se justificar, em vez de justificar a Deus, e censura os três companheiros de Jó por não responderem corretamente a Jó.

Eliú defende a justiça, a imparcialidade, a glória e a onipotência de Jeová.

O próprio Jeová fala então de dentro dum vendaval. (38:1–42:6)

Jeová pergunta onde Jó estava quando se criou a Terra, e se ele entende os modos maravilhosos das coisas selváticas, demonstrando com isso a pequenez do homem em comparação com a grandeza de Deus.

Pergunta então a Jó se este devia achar falta Nele.

Jó admite ter falado sem o devido entendimento; arrepende-se "em pó e cinzas".

A provação de Jó termina, e sua integridade é recompensada. (42:7-17)

Jeová expressa desagrado para com Elifaz, Bildade e Zofar, por não terem falado a verdade; manda que ofereçam sacrifícios e que peçam a Jó que ore por eles.

Jó é curado quando ora por seus companheiros.

Ele passa a ser abençoado com duas vezes mais do que antes com rebanhos e manadas, bem como com mais sete filhos e três filhas.

sobreviera a calamidade, visto que não era praticante do pecado. Ficou desequilibrado na questão da autojustificação, sem dúvida sendo empurrado ainda mais nesta direção pelas constantes acusações de seus três companheiros. Também estava errado em insistir em receber resposta de Deus quanto a por que sofria, quando devia ter compreendido que ninguém pode, de direito, dizer a Jeová: "Por que me fizeste deste modo?" (Ro 9:20) Todavia, Jeová misericordiosamente respondeu a Jó, tanto por intermédio de seu servo, Eliú, como por falar com Jó do meio dum vendaval. Por conseguinte, este livro inculca fortemente o erro de alguém tentar justificar-se perante Deus. — Jó 40:8.

Autenticidade e Valor. Ezequiel refere-se a Jó, e Tiago o menciona. (Ez 14:14, 20; Tg 5:11) Argumentando poderosamente a favor da canonicidade deste livro há o fato de que os judeus o aceitavam como tendo autoridade igual à dos demais livros inspirados das Escrituras Hebraicas, muito embora Jó não fosse israelita.

Talvez a evidência mais forte da genuinidade do livro consista em sua harmonia com o restante da Bíblia. Também revela muito sobre as crenças e os costumes da sociedade patriarcal. Mais do que isso, ajuda grandemente o estudante da Bíblia a obter melhor entendimento dos propósitos de Jeová, mediante uma comparação com outras declarações bíblicas. Há um notável número de pontos com ideias paralelas a outros trechos bíblicos, e alguns destes são alistados na tabela acompanhante.

JOA [forma abreviada de Jeoanã, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente"].

1. Um dos poderosos de Davi; tizita. — 1Cr 11:26, 45.

2. Cabeça duma família benjamita em Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Berias. — 1Cr 8:1, 16, 28.

JOÁ [Jeová É Irmão (Companheiro)].

1. Um dos porteiros levitas designados nos dias de Davi para guardar as casas de armazenagem; terceiro filho de Obede-Edom. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 12-15.

2. Levita descendente de Gersom (Gérson); filho de Zima. (1Cr 6:1, 19b-21) Talvez seja o mesmo Joá que, junto com seu filho, ajudou a eliminar os objetos impuros que Ezequias havia removido do templo no começo do seu reinado. — 2Cr 29:1, 3, 12, 16.

3. Um da comissão de três enviados pelo Rei Ezequias para ouvir o que o mensageiro assírio, Rabsaqué, iria dizer, mas que não deviam responder às acusações e jactâncias dele. Joá e seus dois companheiros, porém, pediram que Rabsaqué lhes falasse na língua síria, que eles entendiam, em vez de na língua judaica, aos ouvidos de outros no alto do muro. Com as roupas rasgadas, foram relatar as ameaças dele a Ezequias. (2Rs 18:18, 26, 36, 37; Is 36:3, 11, 21, 22) O fraseado do texto, "Joá, filho de Asafe, o cronista", permite que "o cronista" seja quer Joá, quer Asafe, mas é mais provável que o próprio Joá ocupasse este cargo, assim como os dois que estavam com ele também são descritos pelos seus cargos.

4. O cronista por meio de quem o Rei Josias enviou dinheiro aos trabalhadores para consertar o templo; filho de Joacaz. — 2Cr 34:8-11.

JOABE [Jeová É Pai].

1. Filho de Seraías, descendente de Quenaz, da tribo de Judá. Joabe era "pai de Ge-Harasim" (que significa "Vale dos Artesãos"), "pois", diz o relato bíblico, "tornaram-se artífices". Evidentemente, Joabe era "pai" ou fundador da comunidade de artífices que moravam neste vale. — 1Cr 4:1, 13, 14; veja GE-HARASIM.

2. Segundo dos três filhos da irmã ou meia-irmã de Davi, Zeruia (possivelmente filha da mãe de Davi, de um casamento anterior com Naás; 2Sa 17:25). Joabe era, portanto, sobrinho de Davi. Seus irmãos eram Abisai e Asael. (2Sa 8:16; 1Cr 2:13-16) Ao identificar estes três homens, registra-se o nome da mãe deles, em vez de o do pai, porque ela era irmã de Davi; assim, torna-se claro o parentesco de Davi com esses três homens.

Características. Joabe era general capaz, homem dotado de capacidade de organização, engenhoso e decidido. Por outro lado, era ambicioso oportunista, vingativo, astucioso, e, às vezes, inescrupuloso.

Joabe estava à testa dos homens de Davi na ocasião em que Is-Bosete, filho de Saul, governava todo o Israel, com exceção da tribo de Judá, que se apegara a Davi. (2Sa 2:10) Os servos de Is-Bosete e os de Davi estavam em formação uns contra os outros junto ao reservatório de água de Gibeão, as forças de Is-Bosete estando sob o comando do tio de Saul, Abner, responsável por colocar Is-Bosete no trono. Enquanto os homens estavam sentados, uns encarando os outros, Abner sugeriu um combate entre 12 homens de cada lado. Quando se agarraram uns aos outros pela cabeça, cada um deles atravessou seu oponente com a espada, todos caindo mortos juntos. (2Sa 2:12-16) Não tendo a questão sido resolvida por este combate, houve uma batalha em plena escala. Uma contagem posterior revelou que as forças de Is-Bosete perderam 360 homens, e as forças de Davi, apenas 20. — 2Sa 2:30, 31.

Na luta, quando Abner fugiu, Asael, o irmão ligeiro de Joabe, perseguiu Abner. Apesar das advertências e avisos de Abner, Asael persistiu, até que, por fim, Abner deu um golpe para trás, com o conto de sua lança, atravessando-o de lado a lado. (2Sa 2:18-23) Alcançando a colina de Amá, Abner e seus homens reuniram-se no topo, de onde Abner fez um apelo para que cessasse a luta, a fim de evitar a amargura e a matança interminável. Joabe, neste caso, demonstrou sabedoria prática por acatar o apelo e voltar para Davi em Hébron. — 2Sa 2:24-28, 32.

Mata Abner em vingança. O espírito de vingança de Joabe, porém, fervia nele, e ele aguardava a oportunidade de extravasá-lo. No ínterim, travou uma prolongada guerra com a casa de Saul, que continuamente declinava, ao passo que Davi se tornava cada vez mais forte. Por fim, Abner, ofendido com Is-Bosete por causa dum assunto pessoal, fez um pacto com Davi, prometendo trazer todo o Israel para o lado de Davi. (2Sa 3:6-21) Joabe discordava fortemente desta transação, acusando Abner de ser espião. Mas, fingindo-se amigo de Abner, Joabe pegou Abner desprevenido e o matou em vingança pela morte de seu irmão Asael. Também, talvez achasse que, ao mesmo tempo, eliminava um possível rival para o posto de comandante do exército de Davi. — 2Sa 3:22-27.

Quando Davi soube do assassínio, negou qualquer culpa da sua própria casa perante todo o Israel e disse: "Recaia ela sobre a cabeça de Joabe e sobre a casa inteira de seu pai, e não seja decepado da casa de Joabe homem que tenha um fluxo, ou leproso [doente], ou homem que agarre o fuso giratório [talvez um aleijado], ou alguém que caia à espada, ou alguém que careça de pão!" Davi não agiu, nesta ocasião, contra Joabe e Abisai, que foi conivente com Joabe no assassínio, porque, como ele disse: "Hoje sou fraco, embora ungido rei, e estes homens, os filhos de Zeruia, são severos demais para mim. Retribua Jeová ao que fez o mal, segundo a sua própria maldade." — 2Sa 3:28-30, 35-39.

Comandante dos Exércitos de Israel. Depois que Davi foi ungido como rei de todo o Israel, ele subiu contra Jerusalém (Jebus). Os jebuseus zombaram de Davi, achando que a posição deles era inexpugnável. Mas Davi observou que a cidade era vulnerável por meio de seu túnel de água. Por isso, ofereceu a posição de "cabeça e príncipe" a qualquer que subisse pelo túnel e fosse o primeiro a golpear os jebuseus. Joabe subiu, a cidade caiu diante de Davi, e Joabe foi recompensado com a elevada posição de comandante dos exércitos de Israel. (2Sa 5:6-8; 8:16; 20:23; 1Cr 11:4-8) Como comandante, Joabe tinha um grupo de dez ajudantes que carregavam suas armas, entre eles o poderoso Naarai, o berotita. — 2Sa 18:15; 1Cr 11:39.

Depois de Davi ter conquistado Edom, Joabe permaneceu ali por seis meses, no empenho de destruir todo varão dentre eles. (2Sa 8:13, 14; 1Rs 11:14-17) Mais tarde, Joabe manifestou liderança militar na luta contra os amonitas e os sírios, encarregando seu irmão Abisai de uma divisão, para derrotar um movimento de pinça das forças inimigas. (2Sa 10:8-14; 1Cr 19:6-16) Sem dúvida, ele desempenhou um amplo papel nas outras batalhas travadas por Davi contra os filisteus, contra os moabitas e contra outros.

Apoia o reinado de Davi. No sítio contra Rabá de Amom, Joabe parecia demonstrar lealdade para com Davi como o rei ungido de Jeová. Ele tomou "a cidade das águas", possivelmente significando aquela parte da cidade que continha as reservas de água, ou o forte que protegia tais reservas. Uma vez tomada esta parte vital da cidade, aquela capital não poderia resistir por muito tempo e a rendição seria inevitável. Em vez de ele mesmo apertar o cerco da cidade até um clímax bem-sucedido, Joabe (quer realmente por respeito ao rei, quer para o bem de Israel ou para a sua própria promoção pessoal) parecia ter a devida consideração para com seu soberano terrestre. Ele disse que preferia que o rei ungido de Jeová concluísse a captura da cidade real do inimigo e granjeasse a fama de tal proeza, embora ele, Joabe, tivesse feito o trabalho preliminar vital. — 2Sa 12:26-31; 1Cr 20:1-3.

Coopera para a morte de Urias. Foi durante o sítio de Rabá que Davi enviou uma carta, pela mão de Urias, dizendo a Joabe que colocasse Urias na parte mais intensa da batalha, para que fosse morto. Joabe deu plena cooperação a tal arranjo, mas, no seu relatório ao rei sobre o resultado da batalha, ele astutamente usou este fato para impedir que Davi o repreendesse por ter perdido homens valentes nessa batalha, por mandá-los aproximar-se demais da muralha da cidade. No seu relatório, Joabe disse: "Morreram alguns dos servos do rei; e também morreu teu servo Urias, o hitita." Conforme Joabe calculara, a resposta de Davi não continha nenhum indício de desagrado, mas sim de encorajamento para Joabe. — 2Sa 11:14-25; veja DAVI.

Ajuda Absalão, daí opõe-se a ele. Depois de Absalão ter estado banido por três anos por ter matado seu meio-irmão, Amnom, foi Joabe quem enviou a Davi uma mulher de Tecoa, colocando-lhe na boca o que ela devia dizer para apelar em favor da volta de Absalão. Este apelo foi bem-sucedido e Joabe trouxe Absalão de volta a Jerusalém, embora Davi não quisesse ver Absalão. Dois anos depois, Absalão solicitou repetidas vezes a Joabe que viesse e se dirigisse ao rei em seu favor, mas Joabe não quis fazer isso. Por fim, Absalão recorreu ao artifício de incendiar o campo de cevada de Joabe, provocando uma resposta rápida e irada deste. Absalão pôde então apresentar o motivo do seu ato, e induziu Joabe a ir ver o rei para tentar conseguir a restauração de Absalão ao favor de Davi. — 2Sa 13:38; 14:1-33.

Embora Joabe apoiasse a causa de Absalão em conseguir seu retorno, quando Absalão se rebelou, Joabe apoiou Davi. Davi encarregou Joabe de um terço de seus homens, dando ordens estritas para que tratassem suavemente a Absalão. Mas, durante a luta, Joabe desobedeceu à ordem de Davi e matou Absalão. (2Sa 18:1-17) Neste, como em alguns outros casos, ele colocou seu próprio critério acima das ordens teocráticas, dadas através do rei ungido de Deus. Mas, depois disso, teve coragem para falar de modo intrépido e direto com Davi, quando o pranto de Davi por Absalão punha em perigo a unidade do reino. — 2Sa 19:1-8.

Removido, Depois Reempossado, Como Chefe do Exército. Evidentemente por causa da desobediência de Joabe em ter matado Absalão, Davi removeu Joabe de chefe do exército, nomeando Amasa. (2Sa 19:13) Amasa, porém, não mostrou ser um general do calibre de Joabe. Quando Davi lhe ordenou que convocasse os homens de Judá para lutarem contra o rebelde Seba, filho de Bicri, Amasa convocou Judá, mas veio depois do prazo estipulado por Davi. Visto que se tratava duma questão urgente, Davi comissionou Abisai a ir atrás de Seba, dizendo: "A fim de que não ache para si cidades fortificadas e escape diante dos nossos olhos." Na luta que se seguiu, parece que Joabe assumiu a liderança, conforme tinha feito quando era chefe do exército. No sítio de Abel de Bete-Maacá, que se seguiu, os cidadãos daquela pequena cidade atiraram a cabeça de Seba por cima do muro, às instâncias de Joabe, e Joabe poupou a cidade, retirando-se e retornando a Jerusalém. — 2Sa 20:1-7, 14-22.

Assassina Amasa. Durante a perseguição movida a Seba, Joabe cometeu um grave crime. Quando Amasa (que era seu primo; 2Sa 17:25; 1Cr 2:16, 17) veio ao seu encontro, perto de Gibeão, Joabe deixou sua espada cair da bainha. Apanhando-a, ele a segurou convenientemente na mão esquerda, ao agarrar a barba de Amasa com a direita, como se fosse beijá-lo. Visto que Amasa estava desprevenido, Joabe pôde matá-lo com um só golpe de espada. É verdade que Joabe talvez nutrisse certa desconfiança de Amasa, por este ter encabeçado o exército rebelde de Absalão; mas, seja como for, Joabe, o oportunista, aproveitou-se desta época de emergência e de luta para promover sua própria carreira pessoal por assassinar seu rival. Davi talvez adiasse as medidas disciplinares contra Joabe por causa da recente ligação de Amasa com Absalão, e por ter Joabe combatido tão recentemente as forças rebeldes de Absalão, sob a liderança de Amasa. De acordo com os desejos ambiciosos de Joabe, ele foi de novo colocado como chefe do exército. — 2Sa 20:8-13, 23.

Por que deixou Davi de executar Joabe quando ele assassinou Abner, e por que nomeou de novo Joabe como general do exército, depois de Joabe ter também assassinado Amasa, que fora designado general para substituir Joabe? A Bíblia não explica. Se foi por fraqueza em fazer vigorar a lei de Deus, pode ter sido causada pela força e pela influência de Joabe, e da sua família, no exército. Ou, talvez houvesse outras circunstâncias que a Bíblia não relata. De qualquer modo, é preciso lembrar que Davi, embora por algum motivo, quer bom, quer mau, não executasse Joabe, ele não o perdoou, mas incumbiu seu filho e sucessor, Salomão, de certificar-se de que Joabe pagasse por sua maldade.

Realiza um censo incompleto. Em outra ocasião, Davi foi incitado por Satanás a realizar um recenseamento ilegal do povo. Joabe protestou junto a Davi, mas isto de nada valeu. Ele, porém, não completou esse serviço, deixando de incluir as tribos de Levi e de Benjamim, "porque a palavra do rei tinha sido detestável para Joabe". — 1Cr 21:1-6; 2Sa 24:1-9; veja REGISTRO.

Adere à tentativa de Adonias de apoderar-se do trono. Apesar dos serviços anteriores sob Davi, quando Davi ficou idoso e doente, Joabe abandonou Davi e aderiu à conspiração de Adonias, filho de Davi. (1Rs 1:18, 19) Talvez tenha feito isso por achar que, sendo Adonias rei, ele seria o poder por detrás do trono, ou talvez se sentisse mais seguro da sua posição com Adonias do que com Salomão. Quando soube que Davi constituíra rei a Salomão, abandonou Adonias. (1Rs 1:49) Mais tarde, quando Adonias foi morto, Joabe correu para a tenda de Jeová e agarrou os chifres do altar. (1Rs 2:28) Isto não lhe serviu de refúgio, pois era um assassino deliberado; por conseguinte, Salomão mandou que Benaia o executasse ali mesmo. Assim Salomão cumpriu os conselhos de Davi, dados no seu leito de morte, de não deixar que os cabelos grisalhos de Joabe descessem em paz ao Seol, por causa da culpa de sangue de Joabe pelo assassinato de Abner e de Amasa, "dois homens mais justos e melhores do que ele". Joabe foi sepultado na sua própria casa no ermo. Depois disso, Benaia foi nomeado chefe do exército. — 1Rs 2:5, 6, 29-35; 11:21.

O Salmo 60, um salmo de Davi, em seus versículos finais (8-12), é devotado à vitória de Joabe sobre os edomitas. — Veja o cabeçalho deste salmo.

3. Cabeça duma família de "filhos de Paate-Moabe", alguns dos quais retornaram em 537 AEC do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 6; Ne 7:6, 7, 11.

4. Em Esdras 8:1, 9, alistam-se "filhos de Joabe" entre os que retornaram junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC. Naquele tempo, Obadias, filho de Jeiel, era cabeça de família. Neste texto, eles não estão relacionados com a casa de Paate-Moabe, mas é possível que fossem da mesma família ou aparentados com o N.º 3.

JOACAZ [forma abreviada de Jeoacaz, que significa "Que Jeová Segure; Jeová Segurou"].

1. Variante ortográfica do nome Jeoacaz, rei de Israel, conforme encontrada em certas traduções (Al, BJ, BMD, BV, CBC, MC, PIB) de 2 Reis 14:1. Ali, o texto massorético reza Yoh·'a·hház, mas, à base da autoridade de manuscritos hebraicos que rezam Yehoh·'a·hház, outras traduções (ALA, BLH, IBB, NM) vertem o nome por Jeoacaz. — Veja JEOACAZ N.º 2.

2. Pai de Joá, cronista do Rei Josias. — 2Cr 34:1, 8.

3. Em 2 Crônicas 36:2, variante ortográfica do nome Jeoacaz, filho e sucessor de Josias, rei de Judá. Neste texto, certas traduções (Al, BJ, BLH, BMD, BV, CBC, MC, PIB) seguem o texto massorético e rezam Joacaz, ao passo que outras (ALA, IBB, NM) rezam Jeoacaz. — Veja JEOACAZ N.º 3.

JOANA [forma feminina abreviada de Jeoanã, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente"]. Uma das diversas mulheres que Jesus

Cristo curou de enfermidades e que se tornaram suas seguidoras, ministrando a ele e a seus apóstolos de seus próprios bens. (Lu 8:1-3) Aparentemente, Joana estava com as mulheres presentes na ocasião em que Jesus foi pregado na estaca. Depois de terem preparado aromas e óleo para levar ao túmulo dele, estas mulheres estavam entre as primeiras pessoas a descobrir que ele tinha sido ressuscitado. Os 11 apóstolos, porém, acharam difícil de acreditar no relato delas. (Lu 23:49, 55, 56; 24:1-11) Cuza, marido de Joana, era encarregado de Herodes Ântipas. — Lu 8:3.

JOANÃ [forma abreviada de Jeoanã, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente"]. O nome João deriva deste nome hebraico.

1. Poderoso benjamita ambidestro, um dos guerreiros hábeis que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:1-4.

2. Oficial gadita, um dos 11 extraordinários combatentes que se bandearam para Davi no ermo. — 1Cr 12:8, 12-15.

3. Sumo sacerdote. Provavelmente seu filho, Azarias, era sumo sacerdote quando o Rei Uzias agiu presunçosamente. — 1Cr 6:9, 10; 2Cr 26:19, 20.

4. Primogênito do Rei Josias. (1Cr 3:15) Visto que em parte alguma ele é mencionado em relação à sucessão ao trono de Judá, assim como são seus três irmãos mais jovens, ele deve ter falecido antes da morte de seu pai. — 2Rs 23:30, 34; 24:17; Je 22:11; veja JOSIAS N.º 1.

5. Um dos chefes das forças militares que remanesceram em Judá depois da deportação geral para Babilônia, no verão setentrional de 607 AEC. Este filho de Careá prontamente apoiou a designação de Gedalias, e, ao saber da trama de Ismael, de assassinar o governador, pediu a Gedalias permissão para matar secretamente a Ismael, o que lhe foi negado. (Je 40:7, 8, 13-16) Gedalias foi assassinado, Joanã liderou as forças para vingá-lo e as pessoas levadas cativas por Ismael foram recuperadas; mas o próprio assassino escapou para Amom. (Je 41:11-16) Temendo represálias dos babilônios, Joanã e os outros perguntaram ao profeta Jeremias o que deviam fazer, mas, em vez de seguir o conselho de Jeová, de permanecer no país, fugiram para o Egito, levando consigo Jeremias. — Je 42:1–43:7; 2Rs 25:23-26.

6. Filho de Hacatã e cabeça dos 110 varões da casa paterna de Asgade que retornaram com ele a Jerusalém, acompanhando Esdras em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 12.

7. Neto de Eliasibe, sumo sacerdote contemporâneo de Neemias. Ser ele chamado Jonatã em Neemias 12:11 se deve provavelmente a um erro de escriba, visto que os nomes "Joanã" e "Jonatã" são bem similares em hebraico. Joanã é mencionado em Neemias 12:22, 23, e numa carta encontrada entre os Papiros de Elefantina, em que é chamado de sumo sacerdote. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), de F. Josefo, XI, 297 (vii, 1).

8. Filho de Elioenai; Joanã consta numa lista da casa de Davi, que inclui Zorobabel e seus descendentes. — 1Cr 3:1, 10, 19, 24.

9. Antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus; pelo visto, é alistado como neto de Zorobabel. — Lu 3:23, 27.

JOÃO [equivalente português de Jeoanã, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente"].

1. João, o Batizador, filho de Zacarias e de Elisabete; precursor de Jesus. Ambos os genitores de João eram da casa sacerdotal de Arão. Zacarias era sacerdote da divisão, ou turma, de Abias. — Lu 1:5, 6.

Nascimento Miraculoso. No ano 3 AEC, durante o designado período de serviço da divisão de Abias, chegou a vez de Zacarias usufruir o raro privilégio de oferecer incenso no santuário. Enquanto estava em pé diante do altar do incenso, apareceu-lhe o anjo Gabriel com o anúncio de que ele teria um filho, que devia ser chamado João. Este filho seria um nazireu vitalício, como fora Sansão. Seria grande diante de Jeová, iria diante Dele, "a fim de aprontar para Jeová um povo preparado". O nascimento de João seria um milagre de Deus, uma vez que tanto Zacarias como Elisabete eram de idade avançada. — Lu 1:7-17.

Quando Elisabete já estava grávida de seis meses, ela recebeu a visita de sua parenta, Maria, então grávida por espírito santo. Assim que Elisabete ouviu a saudação de sua parenta, seu filho por nascer pulou na sua madre, e, cheia de espírito santo, ela reconheceu que a criança que nasceria de Maria seria seu "Senhor". — Lu 1:26, 36, 39-45.

Por ocasião do nascimento do filho de Elisabete, os vizinhos e os parentes queriam dar-lhe o nome do pai, mas Elisabete disse: "De modo nenhum! Mas ele se chamará João." Daí, perguntou-se ao pai como ele queria que seu filho se chamasse. Conforme o anjo lhe dissera, Zacarias perdera a fala desde o momento do anúncio de Gabriel a ele, de modo que escreveu numa tabuinha: "João é o nome dele." Daí se abriu a boca de Zacarias, de modo que começou a falar. Nisso, todos reconheceram que a mão de Jeová estava com a criança. — Lu 1:18-20, 57-66.

Início de Seu Ministério. João passou os primeiros anos de sua vida na região colinosa da Judeia, onde moravam seus pais. Ele "crescia e se tornava forte em espírito, e continuava nos desertos, até o dia em que se mostrou abertamente a Israel". (Lu 1:39, 80) De acordo com Lucas, João iniciou seu ministério no 15.º ano do reinado de Tibério César. João teria então uns 30 anos. Embora não haja registro de que João se empenhasse em serviços sacerdotais no templo, esta era a idade em que os sacerdotes iniciavam seus plenos deveres. (Núm 4:2, 3) Augusto faleceu em 17 de agosto de 14 EC, e Tibério foi nomeado imperador pelo Senado romano em 15 de setembro; de modo que seu 15.º ano decorreria desde fins de 28 EC a agosto ou setembro de 29 EC. Visto que Jesus (também com cerca de 30 anos) se apresentou para o batismo no outono, João, seis meses mais velho do que ele, deve ter iniciado seu ministério na primavera de 29 EC. — Lu 3:1-3, 23.

João iniciou sua pregação no ermo da Judeia, dizendo: "Arrependei-vos, pois o reino dos céus se tem aproximado." (Mt 3:1, 2) Ele trajava roupas feitas de pelo de camelo, e um cinto de couro ao redor dos lombos, similar à vestimenta do profeta Elias. O alimento de João consistia em gafanhotos e mel silvestre. (2Rs 1:8; Mt 3:4; Mr 1:6) Ele era instrutor, e, concordemente, era chamado de "Rabi" pelos seus discípulos. — Jo 3:26.

Objetivo da Sua Obra. João pregava o batismo para o perdão de pecados dos arrependidos, limitando seu batismo a judeus e a prosélitos da religião judaica. (Mr 1:1-5; At 13:24) O envio de João era uma manifestação da benevolência de Deus para com os judeus. Eles estavam numa relação pactuada com Jeová, mas eram culpados de pecados cometidos contra o pacto da Lei. João trazia à atenção deles que haviam violado o pacto, e instava com os sinceros a se arrepender. Seu batismo em água simbolizava tal arrependimento. Assim estavam em condições de reconhecer o Messias. (At 19:4) Pessoas de toda sorte se dirigiram a João para ser batizadas, inclusive meretrizes e cobradores de impostos. (Mt 21:32) Vieram também ao batismo fariseus e saduceus, contra os quais João dirigiu pungente mensagem de denúncia e aos quais falou do julgamento que estava às portas. Ele não os poupou, chamando-os de "descendência de víboras" e indicando que nada valia confiarem em sua ascendência carnal de Abraão. — Mt 3:7-12.

João ensinava aos que se dirigiam a ele que deviam compartilhar as coisas e não fazer extorsões, que deviam ficar satisfeitos com as suas provisões e não hostilizar a ninguém. (Lu 3:10-14) Ensinava também aos seus seguidores batizados como orar a Deus. (Lu 11:1) Naquele tempo, "o povo estava em expectativa e todos raciocinavam nos seus corações a respeito de João: 'Será este o Cristo?'" João negou que fosse ele e declarou que Aquele que vinha após ele seria muito maior. (Lu 3:15-17) Quando sacerdotes e levitas se chegaram a ele em Betânia, do outro lado do Jordão, perguntaram se ele era Elias ou se era "O Profeta", e ele confessou que não era. — Jo 1:19-28.

João não realizou milagres, como fizera Elias (Jo 10:40-42), todavia, veio com o espírito e o poder de Elias. Realizou uma poderosa obra ao fazer "retornar os corações dos pais aos filhos e os desobedientes à sabedoria prática dos justos". Cumpriu o objetivo para o qual fora enviado, "de aprontar para Jeová um povo preparado". Deveras, 'fez retornar muitos dos filhos de Israel a Jeová, seu Deus'. (Lu 1:16, 17) Ele veio à frente do representante de Jeová, Jesus Cristo.

João Apresenta "o Cordeiro de Deus". No outono de 29 EC, Jesus se dirigiu a João para ser batizado. João, de início, objetou a isso, conhecendo sua própria pecaminosidade e a condição justa de Jesus. Mas Jesus insistiu. Deus prometera a João um sinal, para que pudesse identificar o Filho de Deus. (Mt 3:13; Mr 1:9; Lu 3:21; Jo 1:33) Quando Jesus foi batizado, cumpriu-se o sinal: João viu o espírito de Deus descer sobre Jesus e ouviu a voz do próprio Deus declarar que Jesus era Seu Filho. Evidentemente, não havia outros presentes ao batismo de Jesus. — Mt 3:16, 17; Mr 1:9-11; Jo 1:32-34; 5:31, 37.

Por cerca de 40 dias depois de seu batismo, Jesus esteve no ermo. Ao voltar, João apontou Jesus a seus discípulos como "o Cordeiro de Deus, que tira o pecado do mundo". (Jo 1:29) No dia seguinte, André e outro discípulo, provavelmente João, filho de Zebedeu, foram apresentados ao Filho de Deus. (Jo 1:35-40) Assim, João, o Batizador, como "porteiro" fiel do aprisco israelita, começou a passar seus discípulos para o "pastor excelente". — Jo 10:1-3, 11.

Enquanto os discípulos de Jesus estavam batizando na região da Judeia, João também batizava em Enom, perto de Salim. (Jo 3:22-24) Quando chegou a João a notícia de que Jesus estava fazendo muitos discípulos, João não ficou com ciúmes, mas replicou: "Esta alegria minha . . . ficou completa. Este tem de estar aumentando, mas eu tenho de estar diminuindo." — Jo 3:26-30.

Dias Finais do Seu Ministério. Esta declaração de João mostrou-se verídica. Depois de um ano ou mais de ministério ativo, João foi retirado à força do campo. Foi lançado na prisão por Herodes Ântipas, porque João tinha repreendido Ântipas por seu casamento adúltero com Herodias, a quem tinha tirado de seu irmão, Filipe. Ântipas, nominalmente prosélito judeu responsável perante a Lei, tinha medo de João, sabendo que era um homem justo. — Mr 6:17-20; Lu 3:19, 20.

Quando João estava na prisão, pelo visto em Tiberíades, ele soube das obras poderosas realizadas por Jesus, inclusive a ressurreição do filho da viúva de Naim. Desejando a comprovação disso do próprio Jesus, mandou dois de seus discípulos perguntar a Jesus: "És tu Aquele Que Vem, ou devemos esperar alguém diferente?" Jesus não respondeu de forma direta; mas, perante os discípulos de João, curou muitas pessoas, até mesmo expulsando demônios. Daí, disse aos discípulos de João que lhe relatassem que os cegos, os surdos e os coxos estavam sendo curados, e que as boas novas estavam sendo pregadas. Assim, não por meras palavras, mas pelo testemunho das obras de Jesus, João foi consolado e teve a garantia de que Jesus era verdadeiramente o Messias (Cristo). (Mt 11:2-6; Lu 7:18-23) Depois que os mensageiros de João partiram, Jesus revelou às multidões que João era mais do que um profeta, que ele era, na realidade, aquele a respeito de quem escrevera Malaquias, profeta de Jeová. Também aplicou a profecia de Isaías 40:3 a João, como já o fizera Zacarias, pai de João. — Mal 3:1; Mt 11:7-10; Lu 1:67, 76; 7:24-27.

Jesus Cristo também explicou aos seus discípulos que a vinda de João se dera em cumprimento da profecia de Malaquias 4:5, 6, de que Deus enviaria Elias, o profeta, antes da vinda do grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová. Todavia, embora João fosse grande ("Entre os nascidos de mulheres não se levantou ninguém maior do que João Batista"), ele não seria membro da classe da "noiva", que compartilhará com Cristo no seu Reinado celestial (Re 21:9-11; 22:3-5), pois, conforme Jesus disse, "aquele que é menor no reino dos céus é maior do que ele". (Mt 11:11-15; 17:10-13; Lu 7:28-30) Jesus também, de forma indireta, defendeu João da acusação de que tinha demônio. — Mt 11:16-19; Lu 7:31-35.

Algum tempo depois dessa ocasião, Herodias deu vazão ao seu rancor contra João. Na celebração do aniversário natalício de Herodes, a filha de Herodias agradou a Herodes com sua dança, no que Herodes jurou que lhe daria o que quer que ela pedisse. Influenciada pela mãe, ela pediu a cabeça de João. Herodes, em consideração a seu juramento e às pessoas presentes, concedeu-lhe este pedido. João foi decapitado na prisão e a cabeça dele foi entregue numa travessa à moça, que a levou à sua mãe. Os discípulos de João, mais tarde, vieram e removeram o corpo de João e o sepultaram, relatando este assunto a Jesus. — Mt 14:1-12; Mr 6:21-29.

Após a morte de João, Herodes ouviu notícias sobre o ministério de pregação, de curas e de expulsão de demônios, realizado por Jesus. Ficou atemorizado, receando que Jesus fosse realmente João, que teria ressuscitado dentre os mortos. Depois disso, ele desejava muitíssimo ver Jesus, não para ouvir a pregação dele, mas porque não estava seguro desta sua conclusão. — Mt 14:1, 2; Mr 6:14-16; Lu 9:7-9.

Termina o Batismo de João. O batismo de João continuou até o dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, quando foi derramado o espírito santo. Daquele tempo em diante, pregava-se o batismo "em o nome do Pai, e do Filho, e do espírito santo". (Mt 28:19; At 2:21, 38) Aqueles que depois foram batizados no batismo de João tiveram de ser rebatizados no nome do Senhor Jesus, a fim de receberem o espírito santo. — At 19:1-7.

2. Pai do apóstolo Simão Pedro. Em João 1:42 e 21:15-17, ele é chamado de João, segundo o Manuscrito Sinaítico e as versões em "Latim Antigo". Alguns manuscritos e versões chamam-no de Jona. Jesus chama-o de Jonas, em Mateus 16:17.

3. O apóstolo João, filho de Zebedeu e, aparentemente, de Salomé (veja Mt 27:55, 56; Mr 15:40), e irmão do apóstolo Tiago — provavelmente o irmão mais moço de Tiago, visto que Tiago geralmente é mencionado primeiro quando os dois são citados. (Mt 10:2; Mr 1:19, 29; 3:17; 10:35, 41; Lu 6:14; 8:51; 9:28; At 1:13) Zebedeu casou-se com Salomé, da casa de Davi, possivelmente uma irmã carnal de Maria, mãe de Jesus.

Formação. A família de João parecia ter uma situação financeira relativamente boa. O negócio de pesca que eles tinham era grande o suficiente para ter sócios e empregados. (Mr 1:19, 20; Lu 5:9, 10) A esposa de Zebedeu, Salomé, achava-se entre as mulheres que acompanhavam e ministravam a Jesus, quando ele estava na Galileia (veja Mt 27:55, 56; Mr 15:40, 41), e ela tomou parte em trazer aromas, a fim de preparar o corpo de Jesus para o enterro. (Mr 16:1) João, evidentemente, tinha sua própria casa. — Jo 19:26, 27.

Zebedeu e Salomé eram hebreus fiéis, e a evidência mostra que criaram João no ensino das Escrituras. Entende-se geralmente que ele tenha sido o discípulo de João, o Batizador, que estava com André quando João lhes anunciou: "Eis o Cordeiro de Deus!" Sua pronta aceitação de Jesus como o Cristo revela que tinha conhecimento das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Jo 1:35, 36, 40-42) Embora nunca se declare que Zebedeu se tornou discípulo, quer de João, o Batizador, quer de Cristo, parece que ele não fez nenhuma objeção a que seus dois filhos se tornassem pregadores de tempo integral com Jesus.

Quando João, junto com Pedro, foi conduzido perante os governantes judeus, eles foram considerados "indoutos e comuns". Isto não significava, porém, que não tivessem nenhuma instrução, nem que não soubessem ler e escrever, mas significava que não tinham recebido sua formação nas escolas rabínicas. Declara-se, ao invés, que "começaram a reconhecer a respeito deles que costumavam estar com Jesus". — At 4:13.

Torna-se Discípulo de Cristo. Depois de ser apresentado a Jesus, o Cristo, no outono de 29 EC, João, sem dúvida, seguiu Jesus à Galileia e foi testemunha ocular do primeiro milagre dele em Caná. (Jo 2:1-11) Talvez acompanhasse Jesus da Galileia até Jerusalém, e, de novo, no seu retorno à Galileia através de Samaria; pois a qualidade vívida do seu relato parece marcá-lo como testemunha ocular dos eventos descritos. No entanto, o registro não declara isto. (Jo 2-5) No entanto, João permaneceu no seu negócio por mais algum tempo. No ano seguinte, quando Jesus andava à beira do mar da Galileia, Tiago e João estavam no barco com seu pai, Zebedeu, consertando suas redes. Ele os convocou para a obra de tempo integral de "pescadores de homens", e o relato de Lucas nos informa: "Trouxeram assim os barcos de volta à terra, abandonaram tudo e o seguiram." (Mt 4:18-22; Lu 5:10, 11; Mr 1:19, 20) Mais tarde, foram escolhidos para ser apóstolos do Senhor Jesus Cristo. — Mt 10:2-4.

João era um dos três mais intimamente associados com Jesus. Pedro, Tiago e João foram levados ao monte da transfiguração. (Mt 17:1, 2; Mr 9:2; Lu 9:28, 29) Somente eles, dentre os apóstolos, tiveram permissão de entrar com Jesus na casa de Jairo. (Mr 5:37; Lu 8:51) Tiveram o privilégio de serem levados mais adiante do que os outros, no jardim de Getsêmani, na noite em que foi traído, embora, na ocasião, até mesmo eles não compreendessem o pleno significado do momento, adormecendo três vezes e sendo despertados por Jesus. (Mt 26:37, 40-45; Mr 14:33, 37-41) João ocupava a posição junto a Jesus na última Páscoa deste e na instituição da Refeição Noturna do Senhor. (Jo 13:23) Foi o discípulo que, por ocasião da morte de Jesus, recebeu a honra insigne de lhe ser confiada a mãe de Jesus, para que cuidasse dela. — Jo 21:7, 20; 19:26, 27.

Identificação de João no Seu Evangelho. No Evangelho de João, ele jamais se refere a si mesmo nominalmente. Ele é mencionado, ou como um dos filhos de Zebedeu, ou como o discípulo a quem Jesus amava. Quando fala de João, o Batizador, diferente dos outros escritores dos Evangelhos, ele chama o Batizador apenas de "João". Isto seria mais natural de ser feito por alguém do mesmo nome, visto que ninguém entenderia errado de quem estava falando. Outros teriam de usar um sobrenome ou título, ou outros termos descritivos, para identificar de quem estavam falando, como o próprio João faz quando fala de uma das Marias. — Jo 11:1, 2; 19:25; 20:1.

Encarar o escrito de João sob tal prisma torna evidente que ele mesmo era o companheiro, cujo nome não é mencionado, de André, a quem João, o Batizador, apresentou Jesus Cristo. (Jo 1:35-40) Depois da ressurreição de Jesus, João ultrapassou Pedro ao correrem para o túmulo, a fim de investigar o relato de que Jesus tinha ressuscitado. (Jo 20:2-8) Teve o privilégio de ver o ressuscitado Jesus naquela mesma noite (Jo 20:19; Lu 24:36), e, de novo, na semana seguinte. (Jo 20:26) Era um dos sete que retornaram à pesca, e aos quais Jesus apareceu. (Jo 21:1-14) João também estava presente no monte da Galileia, depois que Jesus ressuscitou dentre os mortos, e ouviu pessoalmente a ordem: "Fazei discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações." — Mt 28:16-20.

História Posterior de João. Depois da ascensão de Jesus, João estava em Jerusalém, na assembleia de cerca de 120 discípulos, quando Matias foi escolhido por sortes e contado com os outros 11 apóstolos. (At 1:12-26) Estava presente ao derramamento do espírito no dia de Pentecostes, e viu 3.000 pessoas serem acrescentadas à congregação naquele dia. (At 2:1-13, 41) Ele, junto com Pedro, declararam perante os governantes judeus o princípio seguido pela congregação do povo de Deus: "Se é justo, à vista de Deus, escutar antes a vós do que a Deus, julgai-o vós mesmos. Mas, quanto a nós, não podemos parar de falar das coisas que vimos e ouvimos." (At 4:19, 20) De novo, juntou-se aos demais apóstolos em dizer ao Sinédrio: "Temos de obedecer a Deus como governante antes que aos homens." — At 5:27-32.

Depois da morte de Estêvão às mãos de judeus enfurecidos, surgiu grande perseguição contra a congregação em Jerusalém, e os discípulos foram espalhados. Mas João, junto com os demais apóstolos, permaneceu em Jerusalém. Quando a pregação de Filipe, o evangelista, induziu muitos em Samaria a aceitar a palavra de Deus, o corpo governante enviou Pedro e João para auxiliar esses novos discípulos a receber o espírito santo. (At 8:1-5, 14-17) Paulo disse mais tarde que João era um daqueles, em Jerusalém, "que pareciam ser colunas" da congregação. João, como membro do corpo governante, deu a Paulo e Barnabé a "mão direita da parceria", ao serem enviados na sua missão de pregar às nações (aos gentios). (Gál 2:9) Por volta de 49 EC, João estava presente à conferência do corpo governante quanto à questão da circuncisão para os conversos gentios. — At 15:5, 6, 28, 29.

Enquanto Jesus Cristo ainda estava na terra, ele indicara que João sobreviveria aos demais apóstolos. (Jo 21:20-22) João deveras serviu fielmente a Jeová por uns 70 anos. Perto do fim da sua vida, João ficou exilado na ilha de Patmos, onde veio a estar "por ter falado a respeito de Deus e ter dado testemunho de Jesus". (Re 1:9) Isto prova que ele estava intensamente ativo na pregação das boas novas, mesmo numa idade bem avançada (por volta de 96 EC).

Enquanto em Patmos, João foi favorecido com a maravilhosa visão de Revelação (Apocalipse), que fielmente assentou por escrito. (Re 1:1, 2) Crê-se, em geral, que foi exilado pelo imperador Domiciano, e que foi liberto pelo sucessor de Domiciano, o imperador Nerva (96-98 EC). Segundo a tradição, ele foi para Éfeso, onde escreveu seu Evangelho e suas três cartas, intituladas Primeira, Segunda e Terceira de João, por volta de 98 EC. Tradicionalmente, crê-se que morreu em Éfeso, por volta de 100 EC, durante o reinado do imperador Trajano.

Personalidade. Os peritos concluem, em geral, que João era uma pessoa passiva, sentimental e introspectiva. Conforme expressou certo comentador: "João, com sua mente contemplativa, imponente, ideal, percorreu a vida como um anjo." (Commentary on the Holy Scriptures [Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas], de Lange, traduzido para o inglês e editado por P. Schaff, 1976, Vol. 9, p. 6) Tais pessoas baseiam sua avaliação da personalidade de João em ele falar muito sobre o amor, e porque não parece tão destacado nos Atos dos Apóstolos como Pedro e Paulo. Também, observam que ele parece ter deixado Pedro assumir a dianteira em falar, quando juntos.

É verdade que, quando Pedro e João estavam juntos, Pedro é sempre destacado como o porta-voz. Mas os relatos não dizem que João ficava calado. Antes, quando estiveram perante os governantes e os anciãos, tanto Pedro como João falaram com destemor. (At 4:13, 19) Semelhantemente, João falou perante o Sinédrio de modo intrépido, assim como os demais apóstolos, embora Pedro seja especificamente mencionado por nome. (At 5:29) E, quanto a ser um tipo enérgico, ativo, não ultrapassou ele ansiosamente a Pedro na corrida para chegarem ao túmulo de Jesus? — Jo 20:2-8.

No começo do ministério deles como apóstolos, Jesus deu o sobrenome de Boanerges (que significa "Filhos do Trovão") a João e a seu irmão Tiago. (Mr 3:17) Este título, por certo, não indica nenhum sentimentalismo indulgente, nem falta de vigor, mas, antes, personalidade dinâmica. Quando uma aldeia samaritana recusou-se a receber Jesus, estes "Filhos do Trovão" estavam prontos para invocar fogo do céu para aniquilar os habitantes dela. Anteriormente, João tentara impedir que certo homem expulsasse demônios em nome de Jesus. Em cada caso, Jesus deu repreensão e correção. — Lu 9:49-56.

Os dois irmãos, nessas ocasiões, mostraram entendimento errado, e, em grande medida, faltava-lhes o equilíbrio, e o espírito amoroso e misericordioso que mais tarde desenvolveram. Todavia, nessas duas ocasiões, esses irmãos manifestaram um espírito de lealdade e uma personalidade decidida, vigorosa, a qual, uma vez canalizada na direção certa, os tornou testemunhas fortes, enérgicas e fiéis. Tiago sofreu a morte de mártir às mãos de Herodes Agripa I (At 12:1, 2), e João perseverou como coluna, "na tribulação, e no reino, e na perseverança em companhia de Jesus", como o último apóstolo vivo. — Re 1:9.

Quando Tiago e João, pelo que parece, conseguiram que sua mãe solicitasse que eles se sentassem junto a Cristo no Reino dele, demonstraram um espírito ambicioso, que deixou indignados os demais apóstolos. Mas isto deu a Jesus uma excelente oportunidade para explicar que o grande entre eles seria aquele que servisse a outros. Daí, apontou que mesmo Ele veio para ministrar e dar sua vida como resgate por muitos. (Mt 20:20-28; Mr 10:35-45) Não importa quão egoísta fosse o desejo deles, o incidente revela sua fé na realidade do Reino.

Por certo, se a personalidade de João tivesse sido conforme retratada pelos comentadores religiosos — fraca, pouco prática, sem energia, introvertida — Jesus Cristo provavelmente não o teria usado para escrever o estimulante e vigoroso livro de Revelação, em que Cristo repetidas vezes incentiva os cristãos a serem vencedores do mundo, fala das boas novas a serem pregadas em todo o mundo e proclama os julgamentos trovejantes de Deus.

É verdade que João fala do amor mais do que os outros escritores dos Evangelhos. Isto não evidencia nenhum sentimentalismo indulgente. Pelo contrário, o amor é uma qualidade forte. A inteira Lei e os Profetas baseavam-se no amor. (Mt 22:36-40) "O amor nunca falha." (1Co 13:8) O amor "é o perfeito vínculo de união". (Col 3:14) O amor da espécie que João advoga se apega aos princípios e é capaz de forte repreensão, correção e disciplina, bem como de bondade e misericórdia.

Onde quer que ele apareça nos três relatos evangélicos sinópticos, bem como em todos os seus próprios escritos, João sempre manifesta o mesmo forte amor e lealdade para com Jesus Cristo e seu Pai, Jeová. A lealdade, bem como o ódio ao que é mau, são manifestos nas observações dele sobre as más motivações ou características nas ações de outros. Somente ele nos conta que foi Judas quem resmungou contra o uso, por Maria, de um óleo caro para ungir os pés de Jesus, e que a razão da queixa de Judas era que ele cuidava da caixa de dinheiro e era ladrão. (Jo 12:4-6) Ele indica que Nicodemos veio a Jesus 'de noite'. (Jo 3:2) Observa a grave falha de José de Arimateia, de ser "discípulo de Jesus, mas em secreto, por temor dos judeus". (Jo 19:38) João não admitia que alguém professasse ser discípulo de seu Mestre e, ainda assim, se envergonhasse disso.

João já tinha desenvolvido os frutos do espírito em um grau muito maior quando escreveu seu Evangelho e suas cartas, do que quando era um jovem recém-associado com Jesus. Certamente não demonstrava a mesma característica manifestada quando havia solicitado um lugar especial no Reino. E, nos seus escritos, podemos encontrar a expressão da sua madureza e de seus bons conselhos para nos ajudar a imitar seu proceder fiel, leal e enérgico.

4. João Marcos. Um dos discípulos de Jesus e escritor das Boas Novas Segundo Marcos. Muitas vezes ele é chamado de Marcos, o Evangelista. Marcos era seu sobrenome. O lar da sua mãe, Maria, em Jerusalém, era um local de reunião dos discípulos. (At 12:12) Acompanhou Paulo e Barnabé na primeira viagem missionária de Paulo (At 12:25; 13:5), mas abandonou-os em Perge, na Panfília, e retornou a Jerusalém. (At 13:13) Por causa disso, Paulo, mais tarde, negou-se a levar Marcos junto na sua próxima viagem, de modo que Barnabé foi em outra direção, levando Marcos consigo. (At 15:36-41) No entanto, Marcos evidentemente provou mais tarde ser trabalhador de confiança e diligente, pois Paulo escreveu a Timóteo, de Roma, onde estava preso: "Toma a Marcos e traze-o contigo, porque ele me é útil para ministrar." — 2Ti 4:11; veja MARCOS.

5. Governante judeu (possivelmente parente do sacerdote principal Anás) que participou com Anás e Caifás em fazer com que os apóstolos Pedro e João fossem presos e trazidos perante eles. Embora tivessem provas do milagre de Pedro, de curar um homem coxo, ordenaram que Pedro e João parassem de pregar e os ameaçaram ainda mais. Mas, não tendo base para agir contra os apóstolos, e tendo medo do povo, soltaram-nos. — At 3:1-8; 4:5-22.

JOÃO, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO. Relato da vida e ministério terrestres de Jesus Cristo, o último dos quatro a ser escrito.

Escritor. Embora o livro não mencione seu escritor, tem sido quase universalmente reconhecido que foi escrito pela mão do apóstolo João. Desde o começo, nunca foi questionado que ele fosse o escritor, exceto por um pequeno grupo no segundo século, que objetou à base de que considerava os ensinos do livro antiortodoxos, mas não por qualquer evidência relacionada com quem o escreveu. Ser João o escritor só tem sido questionado novamente desde o advento da moderna escola "crítica".

A evidência interna, de que o apóstolo João, filho de Zebedeu, foi de fato o escritor, consiste em tal abundância de provas, de diversos ângulos, que sobrepuja qualquer argumento em contrário. Mencionam-se aqui apenas uns poucos pontos, mas o leitor atento, com estes em mente, achará muitíssimos outros. Seguem-se alguns:

(1) O escritor do livro era evidentemente judeu, conforme indicado por sua familiaridade com as opiniões dos judeus. — Jo 1:21; 6:14; 7:40; 12:34.

(2) Era habitante nativo da terra da Palestina, conforme indicado por seu conhecimento cabal do país. Os pormenores mencionados a respeito dos lugares citados indicam conhecimento pessoal deles. Ele referiu-se a "Betânia, do outro lado do Jordão" (Jo 1:28) e a 'Betânia, perto de Jerusalém'. (11:18) Escreveu que havia um jardim no lugar onde Cristo foi pregado na estaca, e que nele havia um túmulo memorial novo (19:41), que Jesus falou "na tesouraria, ao estar ensinando no templo" (8:20), e que "era inverno, e Jesus estava andando no templo, na colunata de Salomão" (10:22, 23).

(3) O próprio testemunho do escritor, e a evidência factual mostram que se tratava duma testemunha ocular. Cita o nome das pessoas que disseram ou fizeram certas coisas (Jo 1:40; 6:5, 7; 12:21; 14:5, 8, 22; 18:10); entra em pormenores quanto à hora em que sucederam os eventos (4:6, 52; 6:16; 13:30; 18:28; 19:14; 20:1; 21:4); designa, de modo factual, os números envolvidos em suas descrições, fazendo isso sem ostentação. — 1:35; 2:6; 4:18; 5:5; 6:9, 19; 19:23; 21:8, 11.

(4) O escritor era apóstolo. Ninguém, a não ser um apóstolo, podia ter sido testemunha ocular de tantos eventos ligados ao ministério de Jesus; também, seu conhecimento íntimo da mentalidade, dos sentimentos e das motivações pelos quais Jesus disse ou fez certas coisas, revela que ele era um do grupo dos 12 que acompanhou Jesus em todo o seu ministério. Por exemplo, ele nos conta que Jesus fez a Filipe uma pergunta para prová-lo, "pois ele mesmo sabia o que ia fazer". (Jo 6:5, 6) Jesus sabia "em si mesmo que seus discípulos estavam resmungando". (6:61) Ele sabia de 'todas as coisas que lhe sobreviriam'. (18:4) "Gemeu no espírito e ficou aflito." (11:33; compare isso com 13:21; 2:24; 4:1, 2; 6:15; 7:1.) O escritor também estava familiarizado com as ideias e as impressões dos apóstolos, algumas das quais eram erradas e foram corrigidas posteriormente. — 2:21, 22; 11:13; 12:16; 13:28; 20:9; 21:4.

(5) Além disso, o escritor é mencionado como "o discípulo a quem Jesus havia amado". (Jo 21:20, 24) Ele era, evidentemente, um dos três apóstolos mais íntimos que Jesus mantinha perto de si em várias ocasiões, tais como na transfiguração (Mr 9:2), e na ocasião de sua angústia, no jardim de Getsêmani. (Mt 26:36, 37) Destes três apóstolos,

DESTAQUES DE JOÃO

Relato da vida de Jesus, pelo apóstolo João, destacando o tema de que Jesus é o Cristo, o Filho de Deus, por meio de quem é possível ter vida eterna.

Escrito por volta de 98 EC, mais de 30 anos depois do último dos outros três Evangelhos e 65 anos depois da morte de Jesus.

A Palavra torna-se carne e é identificado como o Cordeiro de Deus, o Filho de Deus e o Cristo. (1:1-51)

A Palavra, que no princípio estava com o Deus, reside entre os homens, mas é rejeitado pelo seu povo; aqueles que o aceitam recebem autoridade para se tornar filhos de Deus.

João, o Batizador, testifica que Jesus é o Filho de Deus e o Cordeiro de Deus, que tira o pecado do mundo.

André, e depois outros, convencem-se de que Jesus é o Cristo.

Os milagres e a pregação de Jesus demonstram que ele é o Cristo, por meio de quem se pode obter a vida eterna. (2:1–6:71)

Em Caná, Jesus transforma água em vinho.

Ele diz a Nicodemos que Deus enviou Seu Filho unigênito, a fim de que os fiéis possam ter vida eterna.

Fala com uma mulher samaritana sobre a água espiritual que dá vida eterna, e identifica-se como o Cristo.

Jesus realiza milagres de cura; os judeus objetam quando a cura é realizada no sábado, e querem matá-lo.

Proclamando que aqueles que creem nele têm vida eterna, Jesus prediz a ressurreição de todos os nos túmulos memoriais.

Alimenta milagrosamente 5.000 homens; quando a multidão quer fazê-lo rei, ele se retira; quando as pessoas continuam a segui-lo, ele se identifica como o pão que desceu do céu e diz-lhes que terão de comer sua carne e beber seu sangue se quiserem ter vida eterna.

Intensifica-se a hostilidade ao Filho de Deus. (7:1–12:50)

Jesus prega destemidamente na área do templo, embora os principais sacerdotes e os fariseus procurem pegá-lo.

Jesus anuncia que ele é a luz do mundo e que a verdade pode libertar seus ouvintes, mas estes tentam apedrejá-lo.

No sábado, Jesus cura um homem cego de nascença; os fariseus ficam furiosos.

Jesus identifica-se como o pastor excelente, explicando que suas ovelhas escutam a sua voz; os judeus de novo tentam apedrejá-lo.

A ressurreição de Lázaro enche os líderes religiosos judaicos de temor; decidem que tanto Jesus como Lázaro têm de morrer.

Jesus entra montado em Jerusalém e é aclamado como Rei pela multidão, mas não pelos fariseus.

Na última Páscoa, Jesus dá conselhos de despedida aos seus seguidores. (13:1–17:26)

Lava os pés deles para ensinar humildade e dá "um novo mandamento", que se amem uns aos outros assim como ele os amou.

Identifica-se como o caminho, a verdade e a vida; promete enviar o espírito santo aos seus discípulos depois da partida dele.

Para darem frutos, seus seguidores têm de permanecer em união com ele, a verdadeira videira; mas, serão perseguidos.

Jesus ora a favor de seus seguidores e relata ao seu Pai que terminara a obra que se lhe dera para fazer, tornando manifesto o nome Dele.

Jesus é preso, rejeitado pela nação judaica e pregado numa estaca. (18:1–19:42)

Em Getsêmani, Jesus é preso; é levado perante Anás, Caifás e depois a Pilatos.

Ele diz a Pilatos que Seu reino não faz parte deste mundo.

Quando os esforços de Pilatos, de livrá-lo, são frustrados, Jesus é pregado numa estaca e morre.

José de Arimateia e Nicodemos cuidam do sepultamento dele.

A evidência da ressurreição de Jesus conclui a prova dada por João, de que esse realmente é o Cristo. (20:1–21:25)

Jesus é visto por Maria Madalena, depois pelos demais discípulos, inclusive por Tomé.

Na Galileia, ele realiza um último milagre, provendo uma pesca milagrosa, e depois dá a comissão: "Apascenta as minhas ovelhinhas."

elimina-se Tiago por ter sido morto por volta de 44 EC, por Herodes Agripa I. Não existe nenhuma evidência de uma data tão cedo assim da escrita deste Evangelho. Pedro é excluído por ter o seu nome mencionado junto com "o discípulo a quem Jesus havia amado". — Jo 21:20, 21.

Autenticidade. O Evangelho de João foi aceito como canônico pela primitiva congregação cristã. Aparece em quase todos os catálogos antigos, sendo neles aceito sem questão como autêntico. As epístolas de Inácio de Antioquia (c. 110 EC) contêm claros sinais de que ele usou o Evangelho de João, como também acontece com os escritos de Justino, o Mártir, uma geração depois. É encontrado em todos os códices mais importantes das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs — Sinaítico, Vaticano, Alexandrino, Ephraemi, Bezae, Washington I e Koridethi — bem como em todas as versões primitivas. Um fragmento deste Evangelho, contendo parte do capítulo 18 de João, encontra-se no papiro John Rylands 457 (P^{52}), da primeira metade do segundo século. Também, partes dos capítulos 10 e 11 são encontrados no Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 1 (P^{45}), e uma grande parte do livro inteiro se encontra no Papiro Bodmer N.º 2 (P^{66}) do início do terceiro século.

Quando e Onde Foi Escrito. Em geral, crê-se que João já tinha sido solto do exílio na ilha de Patmos e se achava em Éfeso, ou perto dali, a cerca de 100 km de Patmos, na ocasião em que escreveu seu Evangelho, por volta de 98 EC. O imperador romano Nerva (96-98 EC) fez retornar a muitos que tinham sido exilados no fim do reinado de seu predecessor, Domiciano. João talvez estivesse entre esses. Na Revelação (Apocalipse) que João recebeu em Patmos, Éfeso era uma das congregações às quais recebeu ordens de escrever.

João atingira uma idade bem avançada, tendo provavelmente cerca de 90 ou 100 anos quando escreveu seu Evangelho. Sem dúvida, estava a par dos outros três relatos da vida e do ministério terrestres de Jesus, também dos Atos dos Apóstolos e das cartas escritas por Paulo, Pedro, Tiago e Judas. Tivera oportunidade de ver a doutrina cristã plenamente revelada e vira os efeitos da pregação desta doutrina a todas as nações. Vira também surgir o "homem que é contra a lei". (2Te 2:3) Tinha testemunhado o cumprimento de muitas das profecias de Jesus, notadamente a destruição de Jerusalém e o fim daquele sistema judaico de coisas.

Objetivo do Evangelho de João. João, inspirado por espírito santo, foi seletivo quanto aos eventos que escolheu registrar, pois, como diz: "De certo, Jesus efetuou muitos outros sinais, também diante dos discípulos, os quais não estão escritos neste rolo", e: "Há, de fato, também muitas outras coisas que Jesus fez, as quais, se alguma vez fossem escritas em todos os pormenores, suponho que o próprio mundo não poderia conter os rolos escritos." — Jo 20:30; 21:25.

Tendo presente estas coisas, João declara seu objetivo em escrever o relato que foi movido por inspiração a escrever, e no qual repetiu pouco daquilo que já tinha sido escrito antes: "Mas, estes foram escritos para que creiais que Jesus é o Cristo, o Filho de Deus, e que, por crerdes, tenhais vida por meio do seu nome." — Jo 20:31.

João destacou que aquilo que escrevera era real e verdadeiro, e que havia realmente ocorrido. (Jo 1:14; 21:24) Seu Evangelho é uma valiosa adição ao cânon da Bíblia, como evidência real duma testemunha ocular por parte do último apóstolo vivo de Jesus Cristo.

Amplamente Divulgado. As Boas Novas Segundo João têm sido a mais amplamente divulgada parte da Bíblia. Milhares de exemplares do Evangelho de João, em separado, foram impressos e distribuídos além de ele ser incluído nos exemplares da Bíblia inteira.

Valor. Em harmonia com a Revelação, em que Jesus Cristo declara que ele é "o princípio da criação de Deus" (Re 3:14), João indica que Este estava com Deus "no princípio", e que "todas as coisas vieram à existência por intermédio dele". (Jo 1:1-3) Em todo o Evangelho, ele destaca a intimidade deste Filho unigênito de Deus com o seu Pai, e cita muitas das declarações de Jesus que revelam tal intimidade. Em todo o livro, deixa-senos cônscios da relação entre Pai e Filho, a sujeição do Filho e a adoração de Jeová como Deus, pelo seu Filho. (Jo 20:17) Tal intimidade habilitou o Filho a revelar o Pai como ninguém mais poderia fazê-lo, e como os servos de Deus, dos tempos passados, jamais imaginaram. E João destaca o amor afetuoso do Pai pelo Filho, e por aqueles que se tornam filhos de Deus por exercerem fé no Filho.

Jesus Cristo é apresentado como o canal de Deus para a bênção da humanidade e como a única via de aproximação a Deus. Revela-se Jesus como o Único por meio de quem vêm a benignidade imerecida e a verdade (Jo 1:17), também como "o Cordeiro de Deus" (1:29), o "Filho unigênito de Deus" (3:18), o "noivo" (3:29), "o verdadeiro pão do céu" (6:32), "o pão de Deus" (6:33), "o pão da vida" (6:35), "o pão vivo" (6:51), "a luz do mundo" (8:12), o "Filho do homem" (9:35), "a porta" do aprisco (10:9), "o pastor excelente" (10:11), "a ressurreição e a vida" (11:25), "o caminho, e a verdade, e a vida" (14:6), e "a verdadeira videira" (15:1).

Enfatiza-se a posição de Jesus Cristo como Rei (Jo 1:49; 12:13; 18:33), também sua autoridade como Juiz (5:27), e o poder de ressurreição que lhe foi concedido pelo Pai. (5:28, 29; 11:25) João revela o papel de Cristo em enviar o espírito santo como "ajudador", para atuar como recordador ou lembrador, como testemunha em favor de Jesus e como instrutor. (14:26; 15:26; 16:14, 15) Mas João não permite que o leitor perca de vista que se trata realmente do espírito de Deus, que emana de Deus e que é enviado por Sua autoridade. Jesus deixou claro que o espírito santo não poderia vir em tal qualidade a menos que Jesus fosse para o Pai, que é maior do que ele. (16:7; 14:28) Daí, seus discípulos fariam obras ainda maiores, pois Cristo estaria de novo com o seu Pai e responderia aos pedidos feitos em seu próprio nome, tudo com a finalidade de glorificar o Pai. — 14:12-14.

João também revela Jesus Cristo como o resgate sacrificial pela humanidade. (Jo 3:16; 15:13) Seu título, "Filho do homem", nos faz lembrar que está mui intimamente vinculado ao homem por se ter tornado carne, sendo parente do homem, e, por tal motivo, conforme prefigurado na Lei, é o resgatador e o vingador de sangue. (Le 25:25; Núm 35:19) Cristo disse a seus discípulos que o governante deste mundo não tinha nenhum poder sobre ele, mas que havia vencido o mundo, e, em resultado disso, o mundo fora julgado e seu governante seria lançado fora. (Jo 12:31; 14:30) Encoraja-se os seguidores de Jesus a vencer o mundo por se manterem leais e íntegros a Deus, assim como Jesus. (Jo 16:33) Isto se harmoniza com a Revelação que João recebeu, em que Cristo repete a necessidade de ser vencedor, e promete ricas recompensas celestiais junto com ele aos que estiverem em união com ele. — Re 2:7, 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21.

A Passagem Espúria de João 7:53–8:11. Estes 12 versículos foram obviamente acrescentados ao texto original do Evangelho de João. Não se encontram no MS Sinaítico, nem no MS Vaticano N.º 1209, embora apareçam no Códice Bezae do quinto século, e em manuscritos gregos posteriores. São omitidos, contudo, pela maioria das versões antigas. É evidente que não constituem parte do Evangelho de João. Certo grupo de manuscritos gregos situa esta passagem no fim do Evangelho de João; outro grupo o coloca depois de Lucas 21:38, apoiando a conclusão de que é um texto espúrio e não inspirado.

JOÃO, AS CARTAS DE. Estas cartas estavam entre as últimas partes das Escrituras inspiradas a serem escritas. Embora o nome do apóstolo João não apareça em parte alguma destas cartas, os peritos geralmente concordam com o conceito tradicional de que o escritor de As Boas Novas Segundo João e das três cartas intituladas A Primeira, A Segunda e A Terceira de João procedem da mesma pena. Há muitas similaridades entre elas e o quarto Evangelho.

É bem estabelecida a autenticidade destas cartas. A evidência interna testifica a sua harmonia com o restante das Escrituras. Também, muitos escritores primitivos dão testemunho da sua genuinidade. Policarpo parece citar 1 João 4:3; Eusébio disse que Pápias atestou a primeira carta, como também fizeram Tertuliano e Cipriano; e ela consta na Pesito siríaca. Clemente de Alexandria, pelo que parece, indica ter tido conhecimento das outras duas cartas; Irineu aparentemente cita 2 João 10, 11; Dionísio de Alexandria, segundo Eusébio, faz alusão a elas. Estes escritores mencionados por último também atestam a autenticidade de Primeira João.

Bem provavelmente, João escreveu as cartas em Éfeso, por volta de 98 EC, próximo do tempo em que escreveu o relato do Evangelho. A expressão frequente "filhinhos", ou "criancinhas", parece indicar que foram escritas na sua velhice.

Primeira João. Esta carta é escrita mais no estilo de um tratado, visto não conter nem saudação, nem conclusão. João, no segundo capítulo, dirige-se a pais, a criancinhas e a moços, indicando que não se tratava duma carta pessoal a determinado indivíduo. Visava, mui provavelmente, uma congregação ou várias congregações, e, na realidade, aplica-se à inteira associação dos que estão em união com Cristo. — 1Jo 2:13, 14.

João era o último apóstolo vivo. Haviam-se passado mais de 30 anos desde que se escrevera a última das outras cartas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Dentro em pouco, todos os apóstolos teriam desaparecido do cenário. Anos antes, Paulo escrevera a Timóteo que não continuaria mais por muito tempo com ele. (2Ti 4:6) Instou com Timóteo a que continuasse a apegar-se ao padrão de palavras salutares e a encarregar homens fiéis das palavras que ouvira de Paulo, para que estes homens, por sua vez, pudessem ensinar outros. — 2Ti 1:13; 2:2.

O apóstolo Pedro avisara sobre os falsos instrutores que surgiriam dentro da congregação, introduzindo seitas destrutivas. (2Pe 2:1-3) Além disso, Paulo dissera aos superintendentes da congregação de Éfeso (onde as cartas de João foram posteriormente escritas) que entrariam "lobos opressivos", não tratando o rebanho com ternura. (At 20:29, 30) Predisse a grande apostasia, com seu "homem que é contra a lei". (2Te 2:3-12) Portanto, foi em 98 EC que aconteceu conforme João disse: "Criancinhas, é a última hora, e, assim como ou-

DESTAQUES DE PRIMEIRA JOÃO

Tratado vigoroso, destinado a proteger os cristãos contra influências apóstatas.

Carta escrita pelo apóstolo João por volta de 98 EC, após a Revelação e pouco antes da morte de João.

Acautele-se das falsidades divulgadas a respeito de Jesus.

Ter Jesus vindo na carne é confirmado por ele ter sido ouvido, visto e apalpado. (1:1-4)

Quem nega que Jesus é o Cristo é mentiroso, anticristo; os cristãos ungidos sabem a verdade e não precisam dar atenção a um ensino diferente. (2:18-29)

Qualquer expressão inspirada que nega que Jesus Cristo veio na carne não se origina de Deus; muitos falsos profetas têm saído. (4:1-6)

Quem nega que Jesus é o Filho de Deus rejeita o testemunho do próprio Pai a respeito do seu Filho. (5:5-12)

Os cristãos não levam uma vida pecaminosa.

Se evitarmos a escuridão e andarmos na luz, o sangue de Jesus nos purificará do pecado. (1:5-7)

Se realmente cometermos um pecado, devemos confessar nosso erro, e seremos purificados à base do sacrifício de Jesus. (1:8–2:2)

Os cristãos não praticam o pecado; os praticantes do pecado originam-se do Diabo; os filhos de Deus buscam a justiça e evitam o pecado. (3:1-12; 5:18, 19)

Os cristãos são incentivados a orar pelo seu irmão, se ele cair num pecado — enquanto não for um pecado "que incorre em morte". (5:16, 17)

O amor a Deus e a concristãos nos resguardará.

Quem ama seu irmão anda na luz e não tropeçará. (2:9-11)

Para ter o amor do Pai, o cristão tem de fazer a vontade Dele e evitar amar o mundo e suas atrações. (2:15-17)

O amor genuíno aos irmãos mostra que passamos da morte para a vida; se não tivermos amor aos nossos irmãos por ajudá-los quando estão padecendo necessidades, não há amor de Deus em nós. (3:13-24)

Os cristãos devem amar uns aos outros porque Deus é amor; nós O amamos porque ele nos amou primeiro; se um cristão afirmar amar a Deus, mas odiar seu irmão, é mentiroso. (4:7–5:2) vistes que vem o anticristo, já está havendo agora muitos anticristos; sendo que deste fato obtemos o conhecimento de que é a última hora." (1Jo 2:18) Por conseguinte, a carta era muitíssimo oportuna e de vital importância para o fortalecimento dos cristãos fiéis, como baluarte contra a apostasia.

Objetivo. No entanto, João não escreveu apenas para refutar ensinos falsos. Antes, seu objetivo principal era fortalecer a fé dos cristãos primitivos nas verdades que tinham recebido; ele frequentemente contrastou estas verdades com os ensinos falsos. É possível que Primeira João tenha sido enviada como carta circular a todas as congregações da região. Este ponto de vista é apoiado pelo uso frequente, por parte do escritor, da forma plural grega que equivale a "vós".

Seu argumento é metódico e vigoroso, conforme mostrará a seguir a consideração desta carta. A carta tem forte apelo emocional, e é claro que João a escreveu motivado por seu grande amor à verdade e por sua repugnância ao erro — seu amor à luz e seu ódio às trevas.

Três temas fundamentais. João trata extensamente de três temas, em especial, na sua primeira carta: o anticristo, o pecado e o amor.

Ele falou de modo bem claro a respeito do anticristo. Disse: "Estas coisas eu vos escrevo a respeito dos que estão tentando desencaminhar-vos." (1Jo 2:26) Tais homens negavam que Jesus Cristo era o Filho de Deus que tinha vindo na carne. Ele explicou que esses homens haviam antes estado associados com a congregação, mas que tinham saído dela, a fim de que se mostrasse que não eram "dos nossos". (2:19) Não eram da espécie dos leais e amorosos, que "têm fé para preservar viva a alma", mas da espécie "dos que retrocedem para a destruição". — He 10:39.

Quanto ao pecado, alguns dos pontos destacados são: (1) Todos nós pecamos, e aqueles que dizem que não pecam não têm a verdade, e fazem Deus parecer mentiroso (1Jo 1:8-10); (2) todos devemos empenhar-nos na luta contra o pecado (2:1); (3) Deus proveu um sacrifício propiciatório pelos pecados, por meio de Jesus Cristo, a quem temos como ajudador junto ao Pai (2:1; 4:10); (4) aqueles que são cristãos verdadeiros não fazem do pecado uma prática — não continuam pecando, embora, às vezes, possam cometer um ato de pecado (2:1; 3:4-10; 5:18); (5) existem duas espécies de pecado, a espécie que pode ser perdoada, e a espécie propositada e deliberada, que não é perdoável (5:16, 17).

Sobre o assunto do amor, João escreve mais livremente. Declara: (1) Deus é amor (1Jo 4:8, 16); (2) Deus mostrou seu amor por deixar que seu Filho morresse como sacrifício propiciatório pelos nossos pecados; também, por fazer provisões, por meio de Cristo, para que seus ungidos se tornem filhos de Deus (3:1; 4:10); (3) o amor de Deus e de Cristo nos coloca sob a obrigação de mostrar amor

DESTAQUES DE SEGUNDA JOÃO

Carta dirigida "à senhora escolhida" — talvez uma pessoa ou possivelmente uma congregação.

Escrita pelo apóstolo João por volta de 98 EC.

Prossiga andando na verdade. (Vv 1-6)

João e todos os outros que conhecem a verdade amam a "senhora escolhida" e os filhos dela, que andam na verdade.

Ele a incentiva a continuar a cultivar o amor.

O amor significa 'prosseguir andando segundo os seus mandamentos'.

Acautele-se contra os enganadores. (Vv 7-13)

Os enganadores negam que Jesus Cristo tenha vindo na carne.

Os crentes têm de evitar todo aquele que não permanece no ensino de Cristo; não devem receber a tal no seu lar, nem mesmo cumprimentá-lo; senão poderão tornar-se partícipes das suas obras iníquas.

a nossos irmãos (3:16; 4:11); (4) o amor de Deus significa observarmos seus mandamentos (5:2, 3); (5) o amor perfeito lança fora o medo, removendo as restrições à franqueza no falar a Deus (4:17, 18); (6) o amor aos irmãos não é apenas uma questão de palavras, mas de ações, dando-lhes as coisas que temos, se estiverem padecendo necessidade (3:17, 18); (7) todo aquele que odeia seu irmão é homicida (3:15); e (8) os cristãos não devem amar nem o mundo, nem as coisas que há nele (2:15).

Segunda João. A segunda carta de João começa com as seguintes palavras: "O ancião, à senhora escolhida e aos filhos dela." (2Jo 1) Assim, com tato, João indica que ele é o escritor. Era deveras um "ancião", já tendo, por volta dessa época, cerca de 90 ou 100 anos. Era também ancião no sentido do crescimento cristão, e era 'coluna' da congregação. — Gál 2:9.

Alguns acham que esta carta "à senhora escolhida" seja dirigida a uma das congregações cristãs, e que os filhos sejam filhos espirituais, sendo os filhos da "irmã" (2Jo 13) membros de outra congregação. Por outro lado, alguns sustentam a ideia de que a carta foi dirigida realmente a uma pessoa, talvez chamada Kyria (palavra grega para "senhora").

Muitos dos pontos abordados por João na sua segunda carta são síntese de ideias da sua primeira carta. Ele fala da verdade que permanece naqueles que realmente a conhecem, e da benignidade imerecida e da paz de Deus. Alegra-se de que alguns continuam a 'andar na verdade'. Mostram amor uns aos outros e observam os mandamentos de Deus. No entanto, enganadores saíram pelo mundo afora, o anticristo negando que o Filho de Deus veio na carne. (Compare 2Jo 7 com 1Jo 4:3.) Em 2 João 10, 11, ele amplia as instruções dadas na sua primeira carta, mostrando quais as medidas que os membros da congregação devem tomar para com aqueles que se adiantam ao ensino do Cristo, e que surgem com seus próprios ensinamentos ou os de homens. João ordena que o cristão não deve cumprimentá-los, nem recebê-los em seu lar.

Terceira João. A terceira carta era do "ancião" para Gaio, com cumprimentos para outros na congregação. Foi escrita no costumeiro estilo de carta. É tão similar à primeira e à segunda carta em estilo e matéria, que é evidente que foi escrita pela mesma pessoa, a saber, o apóstolo João. Não se tem certeza de quem era Gaio. Embora nas Escrituras se mencionem diversas pessoas com este nome, este talvez fosse outro Gaio, visto que a carta foi escrita 30 anos ou mais depois de Atos, Romanos e Primeira Coríntios, em que também aparece o nome Gaio. — At 19:29; 20:4; Ro 16:23; 1Co 1:14.

João exorta à hospitalidade cristã e diz que certo Diótrefes, que gosta de ocupar o primeiro lugar na congregação, não recebe com respeito as mensagens de João ou de outros responsáveis, nem demonstra Diótrefes respeito para com os representantes viajantes da primitiva congregação cristã. Até mesmo queria lançar fora da congregação aqueles que recebiam tais irmãos com hospitalidade. Portanto, João mencionou que, se viesse pessoalmente, conforme esperava fazer, endireitaria

DESTAQUES DE TERCEIRA JOÃO

Carta inspirada dirigida a Gaio, que pode beneficiar todos os cristãos.

Escrita pelo apóstolo João por volta de 98 EC, mais ou menos na mesma época que as suas outras duas cartas.

Temos a obrigação de ser hospitaleiros para com concristãos. (Vv 1-8)

João teve grande alegria quando irmãos viajantes relataram sobre Gaio andar na verdade e seu amor, evidentemente expresso por recebê-los de modo hospitaleiro.

Somos "colaboradores na verdade", quando mostramos hospitalidade para com irmãos que saem a favor do nome de Deus.

Seja imitador, não daquilo que é mau, mas daquilo que é bom. (Vv 9-14)

Diótrefes, que gosta de ter o primeiro lugar, nega-se a aceitar algo de João com respeito.

Não recebe os irmãos viajantes e procura expulsar aqueles que querem mostrar-lhes hospitalidade.

Evite imitar o que é mau; imite o que é bom.

este assunto. (3Jo 9, 10) Recomenda a Gaio um irmão fiel, de nome Demétrio, que talvez fosse o portador da carta, exortando Gaio a receber de modo hospitaleiro aqueles que saíram para edificar as congregações cristãs.

Em todas as três cartas vemos enfatizados a unidade cristã, o amor a Deus demonstrado por se guardar os Seus mandamentos, evitar a escuridão e andar na luz, mostrar amor pelos irmãos, e continuar a andar na verdade. Mesmo na sua idade avançada, este "ancião", João, foi assim uma grande fonte de encorajamento e de força para as congregações na Ásia Menor e para todos os cristãos que leem as suas cartas.

JOAQUIM [provavelmente: Jeová Estabeleceu Firmemente]. Filho do Rei Jeoiaquim, de Judá, com Neusta. (2Rs 24:6, 8; 2Cr 36:8) É também chamado de Jeconias (variante de Joaquim), e de Conias (contração de Jeconias). — Est 2:6; Je 28:4; 37:1.

Aos 18 anos, Joaquim tornou-se rei e deu continuidade às práticas más de seu pai. (2Rs 24:8, 9; 2Cr 36:9 n.) O pai de Joaquim, Jeoiaquim, tinha estado sujeito ao rei babilônico, Nabucodonosor, mas rebelou-se no seu terceiro ano de vassalagem (618 AEC). (2Rs 24:1) Isto resultou em Jerusalém ser sitiada. A expressão "durante esse tempo" (2Rs 24:10) talvez não se refira ao breve reinado de Joaquim, mas ao período geral em que se enquadra, permitindo destarte que o sítio se tenha iniciado no reinado do seu pai, Jeoiaquim, conforme Daniel 1:1, 2 parece indicar. Jeoiaquim morreu, pelo que parece, durante este sítio, e Joaquim ascendeu ao trono de Judá. Seu governo terminou, porém, apenas três meses e dez dias depois, quando se rendeu a Nabucodonosor em 617 AEC (no mês de adar, segundo uma crônica babilônica). (2Rs 24:11, 12; 2Cr 36:9; Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. Grayson, 1975, p. 102) Em cumprimento da palavra de Jeová mediante Jeremias, ele foi levado para o exílio em Babilônia. (Je 22:24-27; 24:1; 27:19, 20; 29:1, 2) Outros membros da casa real, oficiais da corte, artífices e guerreiros, foram também exilados. — 2Rs 24:14-16; veja NABUCODONOSOR.

O registro em 2 Reis 24:12-16 declara que Nabucodonosor levou estes cativos para o exílio, junto com "todos os tesouros da casa de Jeová e os tesouros da casa do rei". O relato em Daniel 1:1, 2, menciona apenas uma "parte dos utensílios" como levados para Babilônia. A explicação pode ser que os tesouros mencionados em Segundo Reis envolviam especialmente os utensílios de ouro, que recebem destaque nesse relato, e que se permitiu que outros utensílios ficassem. Outra possibilidade é que, quando Jerusalém cedeu diante do sítio babilônico (que resultou da rebelião de Jeoiaquim contra o rei de Babilônia), "alguns dos utensílios da casa de Jeová" foram levados para Babilônia, e que, pouco tempo depois, quando o próprio Joaquim foi transferido para Babilônia, outros "objetos desejáveis da casa de Jeová" foram levados juntos. Tal possibilidade é sugerida pelo relato de 2 Crônicas 36:6-10. Pelo relato de Crônicas, parece que Nabucodonosor, depois de conquistar com êxito Jerusalém, partiu, mas depois 'mandou trazer [Joaquim] a Babilônia, junto com objetos desejáveis da casa de Jeová'. De modo similar, dez anos depois, na conquista e na destruição finais de Jerusalém (607 AEC), Nabucodonosor retirou-se para Ribla, "na terra de Hamate", deixando os pormenores depois da conquista entregues ao chefe de sua guarda pessoal, Nebuzaradã. — 2Rs 25:8-21.

Enquanto em Babilônia, Joaquim gerou sete filhos. (1Cr 3:16-18) Desta forma, preservou-se a linhagem real que conduzia ao Messias. (Mt 1:11, 12) Mas, conforme a profecia indicara, nenhum dos descendentes de Joaquim jamais governou na Jerusalém terrestre. Por conseguinte, foi como se Joaquim não tivesse filhos, não tendo nenhum descendente que o sucedesse qual rei. — Je 22:28-30.

No quinto ano do exílio de Joaquim, Ezequiel iniciou sua obra profética. (Ez 1:2) Cerca de 32 anos depois, evidentemente em 580 AEC, Joaquim foi liberto da prisão pelo sucessor de Nabucodonosor, Evil-Merodaque (Avil-Marduque), e foi-lhe dada uma posição de favor acima de todos os demais reis cativos. Depois disso, ele comia à mesa de Evil-Merodaque e recebia uma porção diária. — 2Rs 25:27-30; Je 52:31-34.

Foram encontrados documentos administrativos babilônios que alistam rações para Joaquim e cinco de seus filhos.

JOÁS. Este nome é grafado de duas maneiras em hebraico, embora apenas como "Joás" em português. A primeira e mais comum grafia, Yoh'ásh, é uma forma abreviada de Jeoás. O números 1 e 5 alistados abaixo têm a outra grafia, Yoh'ásh.

1. Benjamita da linhagem de Bequer. — 1Cr 7:6, 8.

2. Descendente de Judá através do terceiro filho mencionado dele, Selá. — 1Cr 2:3; 4:21, 22.

3. Pai do juiz Gideão; abiezrita da tribo de Manassés. (Jz 6:11, 15; 7:14; 8:13, 32) Joás, evidentemente, era homem de consideráveis posses e influência na comunidade, possuindo um altar dedicado a Baal, também um "poste sagrado", e servos domésticos. Quando seu filho Gideão secretamente derrubou este altar e o poste sagrado, e no seu lugar construiu um altar a Jeová, sobre o qual sacrificou um touro de sete anos, os cidadãos daquele lugar exigiram que Joás entregasse o filho para ser morto. A resposta de Joás foi: "Se [Baal] é Deus, que pleiteie em defesa de si mesmo." E com isso Joás começou a chamar seu filho de Jerubaal. — Jz 6:25-32; 8:29.

4. Um dos poderosos da tribo de Benjamim, que se juntaram às forças de Davi em Ziclague, quando este era proscrito por Saul; filho ou descendente de Semaá. — 1Cr 12:1-3.

5. Chefe designado pelo Rei Davi para supervisionar os suprimentos de azeite. — 1Cr 27:28, 31.

6. Um daqueles a quem o fiel profeta Micaías foi entregue por Acabe para ser encarcerado. Ele é chamado de "filho do rei". (1Rs 22:26, 27; 2Cr 18:25, 26) Esta expressão talvez se refira a um descendente do Rei Acabe, ou pode denotar um oficial de ascendência real ou alguém intimamente associado com a família real.

7. Forma abreviada de Jeoás, rei de Judá e filho de Acazias. (2Rs 11:2, 3, 21) Joás, como grafia alternativa de Jeoás, ocorre muitas vezes no texto massorético hebraico, conforme indicado nas notas de rodapé da Tradução do Novo Mundo. — 2Rs 12:19; 1Cr 3:11; 2Cr 24:1, 2; veja JEOÁS N.º 1.

8. Forma abreviada de Jeoás, rei de Israel, filho de Jeoacaz e neto de Jeú. (2Rs 14:1, 8, 9) Esta grafia alternativa (Joás) ocorre frequentemente no texto massorético. — 2Rs 13:9, 12, 13; 2Cr 25:17, 18, 21; Os 1:1; Am 1:1; veja JEOÁS N.º 2.

JOBABE.

1. Descendente de Sem através de Joctã. (Gên 10:21, 25, 29; 1Cr 1:23) A região exata povoada pela descendência de Jobabe é hoje desconhecida.

2. "Filho de Zerá, de Bozra"; monarca edomita que reinou algum tempo antes de Saul governar como primeiro rei de Israel. Jobabe sucedeu no trono a "Bela, filho de Beor". — Gên 36:31-34; 1Cr 1:43-45.

3. Rei de Madom, cidade no N da Palestina. Jobabe e outros monarcas juntaram-se a Jabim, rei de Hazor, numa ofensiva contra os israelitas, mas foram derrotados junto às águas de Merom. — Jos 11:1-8; 12:19.

4. Filho do benjamita Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 9.

5. Descendente do benjamita Saraim através de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 11, 18.

JOCBEÁ. Veja JOGBEÁ.

JOCDEÃO [possivelmente significando: Queima [Feita] Pelo Povo]. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 56) O lugar talvez possa ser identificado com Khirbet Raqʻa (Horvat Raqʻa), a uns 7 km ao S de Hébron.

JOCMEÃO [Que o Povo se Levante (ou: Eleve)].

1. Cidade efraimita dada aos coatitas. (1Cr 6:66, 68) Em Josué 21:22, Jocmeão evidentemente é chamada de "Quibzaim", talvez outro ou anterior nome do mesmo lugar. Sua localização é hoje desconhecida.

2. Região que beirava o território sob a jurisdição de Baana, filho de Ailude, e um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão. (1Rs 4:12) Talvez se trate de Jocneão.

JOCNEÃO. Cidade no Carmelo, conquistada por Josué. (Jos 12:7, 22) Originalmente designada à tribo de Zebulão (Jos 19:10, 11), Jocneão foi depois entregue aos levitas meraritas. (Jos 21:34) Hoje costuma ser identificada com Tell Qeimun (Tel Yoqneʻam), numa elevação ao sopé do monte Carmelo, a uns 11 km ao NO de Megido e sobranceira ao vale de Jezreel. Em 1 Reis 4:12, "Jocmeão" talvez seja erro de grafia de "Jocneão".

JOCSÃ [duma raiz que significa "armar um laço"]. Descendente de Abraão com Quetura; genitor de Sabá e de Dedã. — Gên 25:1-3; 1Cr 1:32.

JOCTÃ. Descendente de Éber, irmão de Pelegue e pai de 13 filhos varões. (Gên 10:25-29; 1Cr 1:19-23) Os nomes de alguns dos descendentes de Joctã parecem ser conservados em diversos lugares no S e no SO da Arábia. Tem-se sugerido que Joctã era progenitor dos povos originais da Arábia, diferentes das tribos descendentes dos filhos de Abraão com Agar e com Quetura. Os limites geográficos do território habitado pelos descendentes de Joctã são biblicamente descritos como estendendo-se "desde Mesa até Sefar" (Gên 10:30), mas não há certeza da região exata abrangida.

JOCTEEL.

1. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá (Jos 15:20, 33, 38), cuja localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

2. A cidade edomita de Sela, conquistada pelo Rei Amazias, de Judá, e que recebeu o novo nome de Jocteel. — 2Rs 14:1, 7; veja SELA, II N.º 2.

JODÁ. Antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus; alistado em terceiro lugar na descendência de Zorobabel. — Lu 3:26, 27.

JOEDE [Jeová É Testemunha]. Benjamita, cujo descendente Salu era habitante pós-exílico de Jerusalém. — Ne 11:4, 7.

JOEIRAR. A etapa final da separação dos grãos de cereais, tais como a cevada e o trigo, de sua palha e haste. Depois de a debulha ter soltado os grãos de cereal da palha, e a haste ter sido cortada em pedacinhos, a mistura toda, com uma pá ou um forcado de joeirar, é joeirada por ser lançada no ar, na direção contrária ao vento. (Is 30:24) A brisa, especialmente forte à noitinha, leva embora a palha, lança as hastes cortadas para o lado, e deixa os grãos pesados cair de novo na eira. (Ru 3:2; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 953) Depois de se passar o grão por uma peneira, para eliminar as pedrinhas e coisas semelhantes, ele está pronto para ser moído ou estocado. — Am 9:9; Lu 22:31.

Uso Figurado. Com frequência, emprega-se "joeirar" em sentido figurado. Por exemplo, Jeová determinou enviar "joeireiros" contra Babilônia e seus habitantes, para que a joeirassem. (Je 51:1, 2) Os "joeireiros" mostraram ser os medos e os persas, sob Ciro. A bem dizer, eles lançaram Babilônia e seus habitantes no ar, para que o vento os apanhasse e levasse embora como palha a ser queimada. (Mt 3:12; Lu 3:17) Similarmente, conforme predito, Jeová já usara Babilônia antes para joeirar os do seu povo, espalhando-os em derrota. (Je 15:7) E, mediante o profeta Isaías, Jeová deu ao seu povo a certeza de que viria o tempo em que eles reduziriam seus inimigos a palha e os joeirariam. (Is 41:14-16) Em Jeremias 4:11, diz-se que um "vento causticante" que viria contra Jerusalém não seria "para joeirar, nem para se fazer limpeza". Um vento tempestuoso, causticante, não seria apropriado para o joeiramento, de modo que isto indica a sua natureza destrutiva.

JOEL [Jeová É Deus].

1. Descendente de Issacar e cabeça de família na sua tribo. — 1Cr 7:1-4.

2. Descendente de Coate, filho de Levi; "filho de Azarias" e antepassado do N.º 5. — 1Cr 6:36-38.

3. Rubenita, cujo descendente Beerá foi levado ao exílio pelo rei assírio Tilgate-Pilneser (Tiglate-Pileser III). — 1Cr 5:3-10.

4. Cabeça dos gaditas que moravam em Basã. — 1Cr 5:11, 12.

5. Primogênito do profeta Samuel; descendente do N.º 2 e pai de Hemã, cantor levita. (1Cr 6:28, 33, 36; 15:17) Joel e seu irmão mais moço, Abias, tinham sido designados juízes por seu pai, mas sua desonestidade no cargo forneceu ao povo uma desculpa para pedir um rei humano. — 1Sa 8:1-5.

Em 1 Crônicas 6:28, o texto massorético (e certas traduções) diz que "Vasni" era o primogênito de Samuel. Os peritos, porém, concordam em geral que "Joel" era o que constava do hebraico original, leitura retida pela Pesito siríaca e pela edição lagardiana da Septuaginta grega. (Veja 1Sa 8:2.) A similaridade entre "Joel" e a terminação duma palavra precedente no texto ("Samuel") possivelmente fez com que um escriba inadvertidamente deixasse fora o nome "Joel". Pelo que parece, ele então confundiu a palavra hebraica wehash·she·ní (que significa "e o segundo [filho]") com o nome próprio "Vasni" e inseriu a letra waw (e) antes do nome Abias.

6. Um dos poderosos de Davi; irmão de Natã. — 1Cr 11:26, 38.

7. Levita gersonita da casa de Ladã, filho de Jeiel(i). (1Cr 23:7, 8) Joel, o chefe, e 130 de seus irmãos santificaram-se e ajudaram a levar a Arca do Pacto para Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:4, 7, 11-14) Joel e seu irmão Zetão foram mais tarde encarregados dos tesouros do santuário. — 1Cr 26:21, 22.

8. Príncipe, durante o reinado de Davi, da parte de Manassés que ficava ao O do Jordão; filho de Pedaías. — 1Cr 27:20-22.

9. Profeta de Jeová e escritor do livro bíblico que leva seu nome. Era filho de Petuel. — Jl 1:1; veja JOEL, LIVRO DE.

10. Levita coatita; filho de Azarias. No primeiro ano de Ezequias, Joel ajudou a levar os objetos impuros, removidos do templo pelos sacerdotes, para o vale do Cédron, a fim de serem eliminados. — 2Cr 29:1, 3, 12, 15, 16.

11. Um dentre diversos maiorais simeonitas, nos dias de Ezequias, que tomaram à força a terra de certos camitas e meunins, para expandir seus pastos. — 1Cr 4:24, 35, 38-41.

12. Um dos filhos de Nebo, que despediram as esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:43, 44.

13. Superintendente dos benjamitas que moravam em Jerusalém quando Neemias era governador; filho de Zicri. — Ne 11:4, 7-9.

JOEL, LIVRO DE. Livro inspirado das Escrituras Hebraicas, escrito por "Joel, filho de Petuel". (Jl 1:1) Virtualmente nada se sabe da vida deste profeta. Por suas referências a Judá, a Jerusalém e à casa de Jeová ali, pode-se inferir que profetizou em Judá e que talvez morasse em Jerusalém. (1:9, 14; 2:17, 32; 3:1, 2, 16-20) Ter ele mencionado a "baixada de Jeosafá" (3:2, 12) dá a entender que escreveu seu livro depois da grande vitória de Jeová a favor do Rei Jeosafá. Mas o período exato envolvido é duvidoso.

Tempo da Escrita. Os peritos atribuem diversamente ao livro de Joel datas desde antes de 800 AEC até cerca de 400 AEC. A respeito de seus

DESTAQUES DE JOEL

Uma profecia vívida que enfatiza a vingança de Jeová e a sua misericórdia.

Foi possivelmente escrito por volta de 820 AEC, nove anos depois de Uzias se tornar rei e cerca de um século depois da grande vitória de Jeová sobre Moabe, Amom e os habitantes de Seir, nos dias de Jeosafá.

Invasão de gafanhotos para assolar o país; está próximo o dia de Jeová. (1:1–2:11)

Falar-se-á da vindoura praga durante gerações.

A vegetação do país será assolada a ponto de cessarem as ofertas de cereais e de bebida na casa de Jeová.

Manda-se que os sacerdotes pranteiem e clamem a Jeová por socorro.

O dia de Jeová é marcado por uma invasão destrutiva da "sua força militar".

Israel é convidado a retornar a Jeová; Seu espírito será derramado. (2:12-32)

Os habitantes de Sião são convidados a 'retornar' a Jeová; ele restabelecerá a prosperidade deles e os protegerá contra o "nortenho".

Jeová derramará seu espírito sobre o seu povo, e dará portentos nos céus e na Terra antes de chegar seu "grande e atemorizante dia".

Aqueles que invocarem o nome de Jeová escaparão durante o Seu grande dia.

As nações serão julgadas na "baixada de Jeosafá". (3:1-21)

As nações serão julgadas por terem maltratado o povo de Deus.

São desafiadas a se prepararem para a guerra contra Jeová e a descerem à baixada de Jeosafá; ali serão esmagadas como uvas no lagar.

Naquele tempo, Jeová será refúgio para o seu povo.

Egito e Edom tornar-se-ão um ermo, ao passo que Judá será habitada e produzirá em abundância; Jeová residirá em Sião.

argumentos a favor de uma composição posterior ou anterior do livro, The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional; editada por James Orr, 1960, Vol. III, p. 1690) observa: "Muitos dos argumentos aduzidos são da espécie negativa, i.e., a consideração daquilo que o profeta não menciona ou a que não se refere [inclusive os caldeus, os assírios, um rei de Judá e o reino de dez tribos], e o argumento baseado no silêncio é notoriamente precário." De modo similar, não se pode determinar com certeza se Joel citou outros profetas ou foi citado por eles. Uma data após o exílio babilônico seria indicada se Joel (2:32) citou Obadias (17). Por outro lado, não só Obadias, mas até mesmo o bem anterior profeta Amós (compare Jl 3:16 com Am 1:2) talvez tenha citado Joel. Isto significaria que Joel escreveu seu livro o mais tardar no tempo de Uzias (Am 1:1), talvez por volta de 820 AEC. Embora não seja conclusivo, o lugar ocupado pelo livro de Joel no cânon hebraico, entre Oseias e Amós, parece favorecer o período anterior.

Autenticidade. Os judeus não questionavam a canonicidade do livro de Joel, mas o colocaram em segundo lugar entre os profetas "menores". Também se harmoniza por completo com o restante das Escrituras, como é evidente dos numerosos paralelos entre Joel e outros livros da Bíblia. (Compare Jl 2:2 com Sof 1:14, 15; Jl 2:4, 5, 10 com Re 9:2, 7-9; Jl 2:11 com Mal 4:5; Jl 2:12 com Je 4:1; Jl 2:13 com Êx 34:6, Núm 14:18, Sal 86:15 e 106:45; Jl 2:31 com Is 13:9, 10, Mt 24:29, 30 e Re 6:12-17.) O cumprimento das profecias de Joel fornece ainda outro argumento em favor da sua autenticidade. Conforme predito, Tiro, Filístia e Edom sofreram os julgamentos de Jeová. (Jl 3:4, 19; quanto a pormenores, veja EDOM, EDOMITAS; FILÍSTIA, FILISTEUS; TIRO.) No dia de Pentecostes do ano 33 EC, o apóstolo Pedro mostrou que o derramamento do espírito de Deus sobre os discípulos de Jesus Cristo era cumprimento da profecia de Joel. (Jl 2:28-32; At 2:17-21) Mais tarde, o apóstolo Paulo aplicou as palavras proféticas encontradas em Joel 2:32 tanto aos judeus como aos não judeus que invocam a Jeová com fé. — Ro 10:12, 13.

JOELA. Um dos guerreiros que vieram a Davi em Ziclague; filho de Jeroão de Gedor. — 1Cr 12:1, 7.

JOELHO, AJOELHAR(-SE). Esta junta da perna é importante para a sustentação do corpo. Por isso, joelhos vacilantes ou debilitados representam fraqueza; e joelhos trêmulos, temor. — Jó 4:4; Sal 109:24; Is 35:3; Da 5:6; He 12:12.

Todos, exceto 300, dentre os 10.000 homens de Gideão puseram-se de joelhos para beber água, evidentemente baixando o rosto na água. Nesta posição, não podiam estar alertas, preparados para um ataque de surpresa. Estavam mais preocupados em saciar a sede do que com a questão em jogo. Por outro lado, os 300 permaneceram de pé, apanhando a água com a mão e sorvendo-a dela, alertas, vigilantes e prontos. Os 9.700 negligentes foram, por conseguinte, dispensados. — Jz 7:3, 5-8.

Figurativamente, um filho que se diz ter 'nascido sobre os joelhos' duma pessoa que não era sua mãe, e assim gozava do favor e dos cuidados desta pessoa, era reconhecido como filho ou descendente dela, assim como o filho de Bila era considerado como filho de Raquel. — Gên 30:3-6; compare isso com Gên 50:23.

Jeová prometeu restaurar seu povo e o assemelhou a filhos de Sião, ou Jerusalém, que seriam 'afagados sobre os joelhos', isto é, bem cuidados, e reconduzidos a uma condição favorecida. — Is 66:12, 13.

Ajoelhar(-se). A palavra hebraica para "ajoelhar(-se)" (ba·rákh) tem a mesma raiz que a para "abençoar, bendizer", o que pode indicar que, pelo menos às vezes, conferiam-se bênçãos a pessoas ajoelhadas.

Ao implorar favor. A pessoa talvez se ajoelhasse como ato de respeito ou para implorar favor, como quando um "chefe de cinquenta", que representava o Rei Acazias, se ajoelhou diante de Elias para suplicar por sua vida e pela vida dos homens que o acompanhavam. (2Rs 1:13, 14) Foi de joelhos que um leproso suplicou a Jesus que o tornasse limpo. — Mr 1:40-42; também 10:17-22.

Na oração. Os verdadeiros adoradores frequentemente se ajoelhavam ao orar a Deus, sendo esta postura um indício apropriado da sua humildade. (Esd 9:5; At 9:36, 40; 21:3-6) Salomão se pôs de joelhos perante a congregação de Israel durante a sua oração por ocasião da dedicação do templo. (2Cr 6:13) Apesar dum decreto real, de que durante 30 dias se fizessem petições apenas ao Rei Dario, Daniel se ajoelhou em oração a Jeová três vezes por dia, enquanto as janelas do seu quarto de terraço estavam abertas em direção a Jerusalém. (Da 6:6-11) O próprio Jesus Cristo forneceu um exemplo de se ajoelhar em oração a Jeová. No jardim de Getsêmani, na noite em que foi traído, Jesus "dobrou os joelhos e começou a orar". — Lu 22:41.

Os praticantes da religião falsa ajoelhavam-se diante dos ídolos de seus deuses. Mas, nos dias de Elias, ainda havia 7.000 fiéis em Israel, "todos os joelhos que não se dobraram diante de Baal". — 1Rs 19:18; Ro 11:4.

Prestar homenagem ou reconhecimento de alta posição. Ajoelhar-se pode indicar que se presta homenagem ou se reconhece a alta posição de alguém superior. Os soldados ajoelharam-se diante de Jesus e prestaram-lhe homenagem, mas em zombaria. — Mt 27:27-31; Mr 15:16-20.

Jeová concedeu ao fiel ressuscitado Jesus Cristo uma posição superior e um nome que está acima de todo outro nome, "a fim de que, no nome de Jesus, se dobre todo joelho dos no céu, e dos na terra, e dos debaixo do chão". Todos os que obterão a vida terão de dobrar os joelhos em adoração a Jeová no nome de Jesus Cristo e reconhecer este como Senhor para a glória de Deus. Isto inclui os "debaixo do chão", mostrando evidentemente que os ressuscitados dos túmulos também têm de satisfazer este requisito. — Fil 2:9-11; Jo 5:28, 29; Ef 1:9, 10.

Requer-se primariamente o reconhecimento da supremacia de Jeová por parte dos que desejam ter o favor divino. Jeová declarou: "Jurei por mim mesmo . . . que diante de mim se dobrará todo joelho." (Is 45:23; Ro 14:10-12) Portanto, de modo apropriado, o salmista exortou fervorosamente coisraelitas: "Entrai, adoremos e dobremonos; ajoelhemo-nos diante de Jeová, Aquele que nos fez." — Sal 95:6; veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

JOEZER [Jeová É Ajuda]. Um dos guerreiros que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague, quando este ainda se achava sob restrições por parte de Saul; era coraíta. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 6.

JOGBEÁ. Uma das cidades fortificadas, com redis de pedra, construídas ou reconstruídas pelos gaditas antes de cruzarem o Jordão para ajudar na conquista de Canaã. (Núm 32:34-36) Num período posterior, as forças do juiz Gideão passaram por Jogbeá antes do seu ataque de surpresa ao acampamento midianita em Carcor. (Jz 8:10, 11) Jogbeá (Jocbeá) é identificada com el-Jubeihat, situada uns 1.050 m acima do nível do mar e a uns 10 km ao NO da atual ʽAmman (Rabbah).

JOGLI [Que Jeová Exponha (Revele)]. Danita, cujo filho, Buqui, era maioral da tribo de Dã para a distribuição da terra de Canaã. — Núm 34:18, 22, 29.

JOGOS. Logo cedo na história do homem tornou-se manifesto o interesse na diversão e no entretenimento. Diz-se que Jubal, da sétima geração a contar de Adão, foi "o fundador de todos os que manejam a harpa e o pífaro". (Gên 4:21) No decorrer do tempo, pelo menos no período pós-diluviano, também se desenvolveram jogos.

Egito e Mesopotâmia. Em áreas amplamente espalhadas do Egito, da Palestina e da Mesopotâmia, os arqueólogos têm desenterrado diversas formas de tabuleiros de jogo, dados e peças de jogo, alguns dos quais remontam a épocas anteriores a Abraão. Um relevo no portão dum templo egípcio retrata Ramsés III jogando algo similar a damas com uma das suas concubinas. Na maioria dos jogos lançavam-se dados ou pauzinhos para determinar as jogadas.

Pinturas egípcias, além de retratarem danças e pessoas tocando instrumentos, mostram cenas de moças egípcias brincando com bolas, fazendo malabarismo com várias delas ao mesmo tempo. Outros jogos juvenis, tais como cabo de guerra, envolviam equipes. Bolas de gude também eram populares.

Israel. A Bíblia não faz nenhuma referência direta a jogos entre os hebreus, mas existem indícios esparsos de certas formas de recreação, além da música, do canto, da dança e da conversação. Zacarias 8:5 fala de crianças brincando nas praças públicas, e em Jó 21:11, 12 se mencionam o canto e a dança de meninos. No tempo de Jesus, as crianças brincavam de imitar ocasiões felizes e tristes. (Mt 11:16, 17) Escavações feitas na Palestina trouxeram à luz brinquedos de crianças, tais como chocalhos, apitos, e panelas e carros em miniatura. Jó 41:5 talvez indique que se mantinham aves domadas. É bem provável que se praticasse o tiro ao alvo com flecha, e também com funda. (1Sa 20:20-22, 35-40; Jz 20:16) No entanto, jogos competitivos não parecem ter sido praticados pelos judeus até o período helênico.

Em Israel eram populares os enigmas e os jogos de adivinhação, conforme ilustrado pelo enigma que Sansão propôs aos filisteus. — Jz 14:12-14.

Grécia. Por volta do tempo em que Isaías começou a profetizar em Judá, os gregos começaram suas famosas competições atléticas das Olimpíadas, em honra a Zeus, no ano 776 AEC. Ao passo que os jogos em Olímpia continuaram sendo os mais famosos, três outras cidades gregas se tornaram importantes centros de competições. No istmo próximo a Corinto eram realizados os Jogos Ístmicos, consagrados a Posseidon. Delfos apresentava os Jogos Pítios, ao passo que os Jogos Nemeus, também em honra a Zeus, eram realizados perto de Nemeia.

Os Jogos Olímpicos eram celebrados cada quatro anos e tinham um profundo significado religioso. Sacrifícios religiosos e a adoração do fogo olímpico eram particularidades destacadas da festividade. Os Jogos Ístmicos, perto de Corinto, eram realizados de dois em dois anos.

O programa básico em todas essas competições incluía corridas a pé, luta de corpo a corpo, pugilismo, arremesso de discos e de dardos, corridas de carros, e outros eventos. Os participantes juravam observar o rígido programa de treinamento de dez meses, que ocupava a maior parte do seu tempo. Este treinamento era estritamente supervisionado por juízes que moravam junto com os participantes. Os em treinamento frequentemente se exercitavam sob condições mais difíceis do que na própria competição, os corredores treinando com pesos nos pés, e os pugilistas vestindo pesados uniformes. Amiúde gastavam-se anos no desenvolvimento das qualidades necessárias para se tornar um vencedor dos jogos. O prêmio consistia numa simples grinalda ou coroa de folhas, sendo usada a oliveira-brava nos Jogos Olímpicos, folhas de pinheiro nos Jogos Ístmicos, lauréis nos Jogos Pítios, e valisnéria nas competições de Nemeia. O prêmio era frequentemente exibido na linha de chegada, ao lado do juiz, inspirando os participantes nas corridas a pé a se empenharem ao máximo, com os olhos fixos no prêmio. Deixar de obedecer às regras, porém, resultava em desclassificação. Os jogos eram o assunto de conversa de todos, antes, durante e depois do evento. Os atletas vitoriosos eram elogiados e endeusados, cobertos de presentes e muito festejados. Corinto concedia aos atletas vencedores uma pensão vitalícia.

Roma. Os jogos romanos diferiam grandemente dos jogos gregos, tendo como modalidades principais a luta de gladiadores e outras exibições de extrema brutalidade. As competições de gladiadores começaram originalmente no terceiro século AEC, como ofício religioso nos funerais, e podem ter tido íntima relação com antigos ritos pagãos, em que os adoradores se laceravam, deixando o sangue escorrer em honra a seus deuses, ou em honra a seus mortos. (1Rs 18:28; compare isso com a proibição de tais práticas para Israel, em Le 19:28.) Os jogos romanos foram mais tarde dedicados ao deus Saturno. Nada os ultrapassava em crassa brutalidade e calosidade. O imperador Trajano certa vez fez realizar jogos que apresentaram 10.000 gladiadores, a maioria dos quais lutou até a morte, antes de terminar o espetáculo. Até mesmo alguns senadores, algumas mulheres "nobres", e um imperador, Cômodo, entraram na arena gladiatória. A partir do tempo de Nero, grande número de cristãos foram assassinados nestes eventos.

Jogos Pagãos Introduzidos na Palestina. No reinado de Antíoco Epifânio, no segundo século AEC, os judeus helenizantes introduziram a cultura e as competições atléticas gregas em Israel, e construiu-se um ginásio em Jerusalém, segundo o primeiro capítulo do livro apócrifo de Primeiro Macabeus. Declara-se em 2 Macabeus 4:12-15 que até mesmo os sacerdotes negligenciavam o cumprimento de seus deveres para participar dos jogos. Outros, porém, objetavam fortemente a tal adoção de costumes pagãos.

No primeiro século AEC, Herodes, o Grande, construiu um teatro em Jerusalém, um anfiteatro na planície, também um teatro e um anfiteatro em Cesareia, e instituiu a celebração de jogos a cada cinco anos, em honra de César. Além da luta de corpo a corpo, corridas de carros e outras competições, ele introduziu particularidades dos jogos romanos, providenciando lutas entre feras, ou a luta de homens condenados à morte com tais animais. Segundo Josefo, tudo isso resultou numa conspiração abortiva, de judeus ofendidos, para assassinar Herodes. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XV, 267-291 (viii, 1-4); XV, 331-341 (ix, 6).

O Conceito Cristão. Tertuliano, escritor do segundo e do terceiro séculos EC, delineou a posição dos primitivos cristãos diante do entretenimento comum entre os romanos, por dizer que os cristãos "não têm nada que ver, em falar, ver ou ouvir, com a loucura do circo, a sem-vergonhice do teatro, a selvageria da arena, a vaidade do ginásio". Acrescentou: "Por que deveríamos ofender-vos, se assumimos a existência de outros prazeres? . . . rejeitamos aquilo que vos agrada; o que agrada a nós, não vos dá prazer." (Apology [Apologia], XXXVIII, 4, 5) Com respeito ao treinamento físico ou a disciplina como um todo, o apóstolo Paulo resume a atitude cristã no seu conselho a Timóteo, em 1 Timóteo 4:7-10.

Uso Ilustrativo. Alguns aspectos dos jogos foram apropriadamente empregados por Paulo e por Pedro para ilustrar pontos do seu ensino. Em contraste com o prêmio buscado pelos competidores nos jogos gregos, mostrou-se que a coroa pela qual o cristão ungido se empenha não é uma grinalda perecível de folhas, mas a recompensa de vida imortal. (1Pe 1:3, 4; 5:4) Ele deve correr com a determinação de obter o prêmio e tem de manter os olhos fixos nele; olhar para trás seria desastroso. (1Co 9:24; Fil 3:13, 14) Deve competir segundo as regras duma vida de boa moral, para não ser desclassificado. (2Ti 2:5) O autodomínio, a autodisciplina e o treinamento são todos essenciais. (1Co 9:25; 1Pe 5:10) Os esforços do cristão devem ser bem dirigidos, visando a vitória, assim como os golpes do pugilista bem treinado são dados sem que ele desperdice energia; embora o objetivo dos golpes do cristão não sejam outro humano, mas coisas, inclusive as no seu íntimo, que poderiam levá-lo ao fracasso. (1Co 9:26, 27; 1Ti 6:12) Todos os pesos impeditivos e o enlaçador pecado da falta de fé devem ser removidos, assim como os competidores nas corridas se despojavam de roupas incômodas. O corredor cristão deve preparar-se para uma corrida que exige perseverança, e não uma breve arrancada de velocidade. — He 12:1, 2.

Deve-se observar que, em Hebreus 12:1, Paulo diz que "temos a rodear-nos uma tão grande nuvem de testemunhas [gr.: mar·tý·ron]". Que ele não se refere apenas a uma multidão de observadores é evidenciado pelo conteúdo do capítulo anterior, ao qual Paulo se refere por dizer: "Assim, pois, . . . " Portanto, Paulo incentiva os cristãos a prosseguirem na corrida, por indicar, não meros observadores, mas o excelente exemplo de outros que também eram corredores, e, em especial, por instar com eles a olhar atentamente para aquele que já foi vitorioso e que agora é seu Juiz, Cristo Jesus.

A ilustração em 1 Coríntios 4:9 talvez fosse tirada das competições romanas, sendo Paulo e seus coapóstolos assemelhados aqui àqueles que tomavam parte no último evento, no programa da arena — pois o evento mais sangrento era geralmente deixado para o fim, e os reservados para este tinham a morte como certa. Hebreus 10:32, 33 talvez tivesse similarmente os jogos romanos como fundo. (Veja TEATRO.) Realmente, é possível que o próprio Paulo tivesse estado exposto aos perigos dos jogos romanos, em vista da sua referência, em 1 Coríntios 15:32, a ter "lutado com feras em Éfeso". Alguns acham improvável que um cidadão romano fosse exposto a feras na arena, e eles sugerem que esta expressão é usada figuradamente para se referir a opositores ferinos em Éfeso. Todavia, a declaração de Paulo, em 2 Coríntios 1:8-10, a respeito do grave perigo a que ficou exposto no distrito da Ásia, onde ficava Éfeso, e de Deus o ter resgatado "de uma coisa tão grande como a morte", certamente se ajustaria mais a ele ter passado isso com feras literais na arena, do que à oposição humana que Paulo encontrou em Éfeso. (At 19:23-41) Assim, talvez fosse uma das diversas vezes em que Paulo esteve "perto da morte" no seu ministério. — 2Co 11:23; veja DIVERTIMENTOS.

JOIADA [forma abreviada de Jeoiada, que significa "Que Jeová Saiba"].

1. Filho de Paseia, que ajudou a reparar o Portão da Cidade Antiga, quando Neemias mandou reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:6.

2. Bisneto de Jesua e pai de Joanã (Jonatã) na linhagem pós-exílica dos sumos sacerdotes. (Ne 12:10, 11, 22) Um dos filhos de Joiada profanou a si mesmo e seu sacerdócio por se casar com a filha de Sambalá, o horonita, motivo pelo qual Neemias o enxotou. — Ne 13:28, 29.

JOIAQUIM [forma abreviada de Jeoiaquim, possivelmente significando "Jeová Levanta"]. Filho, e evidentemente sucessor, de Jesua, sumo sacerdote pós-exílico. (Ne 12:10, 12, 26) Parece ter ocupado este cargo na época em que Esdras retornou. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XI, 121 [v, 1]) Todavia, na época da chegada de Neemias mais tarde (455 AEC), o filho de Joiaquim, Eliasibe, já se tornara sumo sacerdote. — Ne 3:1.

JOIARIBE [forma abreviada de Jeoiaribe, que significa "Que Jeová Contenda; Jeová Pleiteou [Nossa] Causa"].

1. Cabeça duma casa paterna de sacerdotes; também chamado Jeoiaribe. (1Cr 24:6, 7) Representantes da sua casa (ou outro sacerdote com o mesmo nome) eram contemporâneos de Zorobabel, Neemias e Joiaquim. — Ne 12:1, 6; 11:4, 10; 12:12, 19, 26.

2. "Instrutor" no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 8:16.

3. Antepassado de Maaseias, de Judá. — Ne 11:5.

JOIAS. Veja ENFEITES (ORNAMENTOS); JOIAS E PEDRAS PRECIOSAS.

JOIAS E PEDRAS PRECIOSAS. Uma joia pode ser uma pedra preciosa, uma gema (uma pedra preciosa ou semipreciosa lapidada e polida), ou um adorno decorativo feito de metal precioso (mormente de ouro ou de prata), como engaste de tais pedras. Desde os primeiros tempos bíblicos, tanto homens como mulheres têm usado joias como adorno. Atualmente, o diamante, a esmeralda, o rubi e a safira em sentido estrito são considerados pedras preciosas, ao passo que outras pedras raras e belas são consideradas semipreciosas. Todavia, o termo hebraico traduzido "pedra preciosa" tem uma aplicação mais ampla, conforme indicado em Ezequiel 28:12, 13. Estas pedras preciosas se diferenciam de outros minerais mormente por serem raras, belas e duráveis.

A primeira referência bíblica a uma pedra preciosa ocorre em Gênesis 2:11, 12, onde Havilá é identificada como terra de ouro bom, tendo também "o bdélio e a pedra de ônix".

A opulência da pessoa era parcialmente medida pela posse de pedras preciosas; reis tais como Salomão e Ezequias, pelo que parece, as tinham em grande quantidade. (1Rs 10:11; 2Cr 9:10; 32:27) Pedras preciosas eram dadas de presente (1Rs 10:2, 10; 2Cr 9:1, 9), podiam constituir parte de um despojo de guerra (2Sa 12:29, 30; 1Cr 20:2) e eram artigos de intercâmbio comercial, como entre os antigos tírios (Ez 27:16, 22). Numa endecha inspirada a respeito do "rei de Tiro", Ezequiel declarou: "Toda pedra preciosa era a tua cobertura: rubi, topázio e jaspe; crisólito, ônix e jade; safira, turquesa e esmeralda; e era de ouro o artesanato dos teus engastes e dos teus encaixes em ti." (Ez 28:12, 13) Retrata-se a simbólica Babilônia, a Grande, como estando ricamente adornada de pedras preciosas. — Re 17:3-5; 18:11-17.

Embora os antigos arredondassem e polissem as pedras preciosas, em geral não parecem ter sido feitas angulares ou facetadas, como fazem os lapidadores dos tempos modernos. O esmeril (coríndon) ou o pó de esmeril eram usados pelos hebreus e pelos egípcios para polir pedras preciosas. Muitas vezes, estas eram esculpidas e gravadas. Pelo que parece, os hebreus sabiam fazer gravações em pedras preciosas muito antes da sua servidão no Egito, onde a gravação também era arte. O anel de chancela de Judá, evidentemente, era gravado. (Gên 38:18) Veja considerações adicionais sobre antigas joias e adornos, ou ornamentos, em ANEL; ARRECADA; BROCHE; COLAR; CONTAS; ENFEITES (ORNAMENTOS); NARINAS, ARGOLA PARA AS; PULSEIRA; TORNOZELEIRA.

Usos Associados com a Adoração. Os israelitas, no ermo, tiveram o privilégio de contribuir com várias coisas valiosas para o tabernáculo, e para o éfode e o peitoral do sumo sacerdote, sem dúvida, contribuindo artigos que os egípcios lhes deram quando instavam com eles para que partissem. (Êx 12:35, 36) Esses incluíam "pedras de ônix e pedras de engaste para o éfode e para o peitoral". (Êx 25:1-7; 35:5, 9, 27) Este éfode do sumo sacerdote tinha duas pedras de ônix nas ombreiras, com os nomes de 6 das 12 tribos de Israel gravados em cada pedra. "O peitoral do julgamento" era embelezado com quatro fileiras de pedras preciosas, declarando o relato: "Uma fileira de rubi, topázio e esmeralda era a primeria fileira. E a segunda fileira era de turquesa, safira e jaspe. E a terceira fileira era de pedra de lesem, ágata e ametista. E a quarta fileira era de crisólito, e ônix, e jade. Estavam colocadas em engastes de ouro na sua montagem." O nome de cada uma das 12 tribos de Israel, respectivamente, estava gravado em cada uma destas pedras. — Êx 39:6-14; 28:9-21; veja PEITORAL.

Embora Jeová não permitisse a Davi construir o templo em Jerusalém (1Cr 22:6-10), o rei idoso alegremente preparou materiais de valor para a sua construção, inclusive “pedras de ônix, e pedras para engastar com argamassa dura, e pedrinhas de mosaico, e toda pedra preciosa, e pedras de alabastro, em grande quantidade”. Fez contribuições substanciais de materiais, e o povo em geral também contribuiu. (1Cr 29:2-9) Quando Salomão construiu o templo, ele “recobriu a casa de pedra preciosa para beleza”, ou a crivou de pedras preciosas. — 2Cr 3:6.

Uso Figurado. O apóstolo Paulo, depois de identificar Jesus Cristo como o alicerce sobre o qual os cristãos devem edificar, mencionou materiais de construção de várias espécies, relacionados com o ministério cristão. Indicou que os materiais seletos incluiriam “pedras preciosas” figurativas, capazes de suportar a força do “fogo”. — 1Co 3:10-15.

As Escrituras, às vezes, usam pedras preciosas para simbolizar qualidades de coisas ou pessoas celestiais ou espirituais. Os céus foram abertos para Ezequiel, e, em duas visões, ele contemplou quatro criaturas viventes aladas, acompanhadas de quatro rodas, sendo a aparência de cada roda semelhante ao “brilho de crisólito”, isto é, tendo um matiz amarelo, ou possivelmente verde. (Ez 1:1-6, 15, 16; 10:9) Mais tarde, Daniel viu um anjo, “certo homem vestido de linho”, cujo “corpo era como crisólito”. — Da 10:1, 4-6.

Também Ezequiel, quando teve uma visão da glória de Jeová, viu “algo da aparência de pedra de safira [azul-escura], a semelhança dum trono”. (Ez 1:25-28; 10:1) A glória do próprio Jeová Deus é assemelhada à deslumbrante beleza das pedras preciosas, pois, quando o apóstolo João contemplou o trono celestial de Deus, ele disse: “O sentado é, em aparência, semelhante à pedra de jaspe e a uma pedra preciosa de cor vermelha, e ao redor do trono há um arco-íris, em aparência semelhante à esmeralda.” — Re 4:1-3, 9-11.

“A cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém”, isto é, “a esposa do Cordeiro”, é representada como possuindo um resplendor “semelhante a uma pedra mui preciosa, como pedra de jaspe, brilhando como cristal”. Os 12 alicerces da sua muralha “estavam adornados com toda sorte de pedra preciosa”, uma pedra diferente para cada alicerce: jaspe, safira, calcedônia, esmeralda, sardônio, sárdio, crisólito, berilo, topázio, crisópraso, jacinto e ametista. As 12 portas da cidade eram 12 pérolas. — Re 21:2, 9-21; veja CORAL, e artigos separados sobre diversos tipos de pedras preciosas.

JONAS [Pomba].

1. “Filho de Amitai”; profeta de Jeová, oriundo de Gate-Héfer (2Rs 14:25), cidade fronteiriça situada no território de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 13) Em cumprimento da palavra de Jeová, proferida por meio de Jonas, o Rei Jeroboão II, de Israel, teve êxito em restaurar “o termo de Israel desde a entrada de Hamate até o mar do Arabá [o Mar Salgado]”. (2Rs 14:23-25; compare isso com De 3:17.) Assim, parece que Jonas serviu como profeta para o reino de dez tribos em algum período durante o reinado de Jeroboão II. Trata-se, evidentemente, da mesma pessoa que Jeová comissionou para proclamar o julgamento contra Nínive (Jon 1:1, 2), e, por conseguinte, também do escritor do livro que leva o seu nome.

Em vez de cumprir sua designação de pregar aos ninivitas, Jonas decidiu fugir. No porto marítimo de Jope, conseguiu passagem num navio que ia para Társis (geralmente associada com a Espanha), a mais de 3.500 km ao O de Nínive. — Jon 1:1-3; 4:2.

Depois de embarcar no navio provido de convés, Jonas adormeceu profundamente nas “partes mais recônditas". No ínterim, os marujos, confrontados com um vento tempestuoso, divinamente enviado, que ameaçava destroçar o navio, clamaram por socorro a seus deuses, e, para aliviar o navio, arremessaram objetos ao mar. O capitão do navio acordou Jonas, instando com ele para que também invocasse seu "deus". Por fim, os marujos lançaram sortes para determinar quem era o culpado pela borrasca. É evidente que Jeová então fez que a sorte caísse em Jonas. Ao ser interrogado, Jonas confessou ter sido infiel à sua comissão. Não desejando que outros perecessem por sua culpa, pediu que o atirassem ao mar. Quando fracassaram todos os esforços de alcançar terra firme, os marujos fizeram a Jonas o que lhes pedira, e o mar cessou a sua fúria. — Jon 1:4-15.

À medida que Jonas afundava nas águas, algas se enrolaram em sua cabeça. Por fim, a sensação de afogamento passou, e ele se viu nas entranhas dum grande peixe. Jonas orou a Jeová, glorificando-o como Salvador, e prometendo pagar o que votara. No terceiro dia, o profeta foi vomitado em terra seca. — Jon 1:17–2:10.

É razoável acreditar que os ninivitas se arrependessem em serapilheira diante do aviso de Jonas?

Comissionado pela segunda vez para se dirigir a Nínive, ele empreendeu a longa viagem até lá. "Por fim, Jonas principiou a entrar na cidade numa caminhada de um dia, e continuava proclamando e dizendo: 'Apenas mais quarenta dias e Nínive será subvertida.'" (Jon 3:1-4) Não se revela na Bíblia se Jonas sabia falar assírio, ou se foi milagrosamente dotado da habilidade de falar naquela língua. Pode até mesmo ter falado em hebraico, sendo sua proclamação interpretada mais tarde por pessoa(s) que conhecia(m) este idioma. Se ele falou em hebraico, as palavras de Jonas devem ter suscitado muita curiosidade, muitos se perguntando o que era que este estrangeiro estava falando.

Alguns críticos acham inacreditável que os ninivitas, inclusive o rei, tenham acatado a pregação de Jonas. (Jon 3:5-9) Neste respeito, são interessantes as observações do comentador C. F. Keil: "A profunda impressão que a pregação de Jonas causou nos ninivitas, de modo que toda a cidade se arrependeu e se vestiu de saco e de cinzas, é bem inteligível, se simplesmente tivermos presente a grande suscetibilidade das raças orientais ao emocionalismo, o temor de um único Ser Supremo, que é peculiar a todas as religiões pagãs da Ásia, e a grande estima em que eram tidos a adivinhação e os oráculos na Assíria, desde os tempos mais antigos . . . ; e, se também levarmos em conta a circunstância de que o aparecimento dum estrangeiro, que, sem ter qualquer interesse pessoal concebível, e com o maior destemor, expôs à grande cidade real os modos ímpios dela e anunciou a sua destruição dentro de um curtíssimo período de tempo, com a confiança que era tão característica dos profetas enviados por Deus, não poderia deixar de causar profunda impressão na mente do povo, que seria ainda mais profunda se a notícia das obras miraculosas dos profetas de Israel tivesse penetrado até Nínive." — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. X, Jonas 3:9, pp. 407, 408.

Depois de se passarem 40 dias e nada ter acontecido a Nínive, Jonas ficou muito aborrecido por Jeová não ter trazido a calamidade sobre aquela cidade. Até mesmo chegou a orar a Deus para que lhe tirasse a vida. Mas Jeová respondeu a Jonas com a pergunta: "É de direito que se acendeu a tua ira?" (Jon 3:10–4:4) O profeta, depois disso, deixou a cidade, e, mais tarde, erigiu uma barraca para si. Ali, ao L de Nínive, Jonas ficou observando para ver o que sobreviria à cidade. — Jon 4:5.

O profeta ficou muito contente quando um cabaceiro cresceu milagrosamente para lhe fornecer sombra. Mas a sua alegria foi de pouca duração. No dia seguinte, bem cedo de manhã, um verme causou danos à planta, fazendo com que se secasse. Privado da sombra, Jonas ficou exposto a um causticante vento oriental, e ao sol abrasador sobre sua cabeça. De novo, pediu para morrer. — Jon 4:6-8.

Por meio deste cabaceiro, ensinou-se a Jonas uma lição de misericórdia. Ele sentiu pena do cabaceiro, provavelmente imaginando por que esta planta teve de morrer. Todavia, Jonas nem a plantara, nem cuidara dela. Por outro lado, Jeová, sendo o Criador e Sustentador da vida, tinha muito mais motivos para condoer-se de Nínive. O valor dos seus habitantes e do gado ultrapassava em muito o daquele cabaceiro. Por conseguinte, Jeová perguntou a Jonas: "Eu, da minha parte, não devia ter pena de Nínive, a grande cidade, em que há mais de cento e vinte mil homens que absolutamente não sabem a diferença entre a sua direita e a sua esquerda, além de haver muitos animais domésticos?" (Jon 4:9-11) Que Jonas deve ter compreendido o ponto é indicado pela sua narração cândida do que se deu com ele.

Pode ser que, algum tempo depois, Jonas tenha encontrado pelo menos uma das pessoas que haviam estado a bordo do navio que partiu de Jope, possivelmente no templo de Jerusalém, e tenha ficado sabendo dela dos votos feitos pelos marujos, depois que a tempestade amainou. — Jon 1:16; compare isso com Jon 2:4, 9; veja JONAS, LIVRO DE; NÍNIVE.

2. Pai dos apóstolos Pedro e André (Mt 16:17; Jo 1:40-42); também chamado João, em João 1:42; 21:15-17, em certos manuscritos.

JONAS, LIVRO DE. Único livro das Escrituras Hebraicas que trata exclusivamente da comissão dum profeta de Jeová para proclamar numa cidade não israelita, e para ela, uma mensagem de destruição, proclamação que resultou no arrependimento desta cidade. As experiências relatadas neste livro eram exclusivas do seu escritor, Jonas, filho de Amitai. Evidentemente, sendo a mesma pessoa que o Jonas de 2 Reis 14:25, ele deve ter profetizado durante o reinado do Rei Jeroboão II, de Israel (c. 844-804 AEC). Por conseguinte, é razoável situar os eventos registrados no livro de Jonas no nono século AEC. — Veja JONAS N.º 1.

Autenticidade. Devido ao caráter sobrenatural de muitos eventos mencionados no livro de Jonas, ele tem sido muitas vezes atacado pelos críticos da Bíblia. O aparecimento dum vento tempestuoso e sua rápida cessação, o peixe que tragou Jonas e três dias depois vomitou o profeta ileso, e o crescimento e a morte súbitos dum cabaceiro, têm todos sido rotulados de não históricos, porque tais coisas não ocorrem hoje em dia. Tal alegação poderia ter base se o livro de Jonas afirmasse tratar-se de ocorrências comuns lá naquele tempo. Mas não o faz. Relata eventos ocorridos na vida de alguém especialmente comissionado por Deus. Por conseguinte, os que sustentam que tais coisas simplesmente não podiam ter acontecido devem negar, quer a existência de Deus, quer a Sua capacidade de influir nas forças naturais e na vida vegetal, animal e humana de modo especial, a bem de seu propósito. — Veja Mt 19:26.

Que espécie de criatura marítima era capaz de engolir Jonas?

No passado, uma alegação favorita era que nenhuma criatura marítima era capaz de engolir um homem. Mas este argumento não é válido. O cachalote, com enorme cabeça quadrada, que constitui cerca de um terço do seu comprimento, é plenamente capaz de engolir um homem inteiro. (Mammals of the World [Mamíferos do Mundo], de Walker, revisado por R. Nowak e J. Paradiso, 1983, Vol. II, p. 901) É interessante saber que a evidência indica que o porto marítimo de Jope antigamente era sede de baleeiros. Por outro lado, é possível que o peixe que engoliu Jonas tenha sido o grande tubarão-branco. Um destes foi apanhado em 1939, tendo no estômago dois tubarões inteiros de 2 m de comprimento — cada um do tamanho aproximado de um homem. E os grandes tubarões-brancos têm percorrido todos os mares, inclusive o Mediterrâneo. (Australian Zoological Handbook [Manual de Zoologia da Austrália], Os Peixes da Austrália, de G. P. Whitley, Sydney, 1940, Parte 1 — Os Tubarões, p. 125; The Natural

DESTAQUES DE JONAS

As experiências de Jonas, quando foi designado para profetizar a um povo pagão, os habitantes de Nínive.

Foi escrito por volta de 844 AEC, uns 100 anos antes de a Assíria levar Israel ao exílio.

A fuga de Jonas. (1:1–2:10)

- Jonas é comissionado para avisar os ninivitas da ira de Jeová, mas toma um navio que vai a Társis.
- Levanta-se uma grande borrasca e suscita o temor dum naufrágio.
- Os marujos temerosos clamam aos seus deuses, procuram aliviar o navio e então lançam sortes para saber por causa de quem enfrentam a calamidade.
- A sorte recai em Jonas; ele manda que os marujos o lancem no mar, visto que a borrasca ocorre por causa dele.
- Os marujos, não querendo fazer isso, procuram levar o navio de volta à terra; quando isto fracassa, lançam Jonas no mar; a borrasca cessa imediatamente.
- Na água, Jonas é engolido por um grande peixe.
- De dentro das entranhas do peixe, ele ora a Jeová e promete pagar o que votou.
- Finalmente, Jonas é vomitado em terra seca.

Jonas vai a Nínive. (3:1–4:11)

- Jeová manda novamente que Jonas vá a Nínive para proclamar o Seu aviso.
- Jonas vai a Nínive e anuncia que a cidade será subvertida dentro de 40 dias.
- Os ninivitas arrependem-se; conforme mandados pelo rei, cobrem seus animais e a si mesmos de serapilheira e clamam a Deus por misericórdia; Jeová 'deplora' a predita calamidade.
- Jonas fica furioso porque Nínive há de ser poupada; erige uma barraca fora da cidade, senta-se na sombra dela e espera os acontecimentos.
- Jeová faz surgir um cabaceiro e provê a Jonas uma bem-vinda sombra; no dia seguinte, um verme ataca a planta e ela seca; aproveitando a reação de Jonas a isso, Jeová explica a Jonas por que Ele mostrou misericórdia para com os mais de 120.000 habitantes de Nínive.

History of Sharks [A História Natural dos Tubarões], de R. H. Backus e T. H. Lineaweaver III, 1970, pp. 111, 113) Deve-se notar, porém, que a Bíblia simplesmente declara: "Jeová providenciou um grande peixe para engolir Jonas", sem especificar que peixe era. (Jon 1:17) De modo que não se pode determinar exatamente de que "peixe" se tratava. De fato, o conhecimento que o homem tem das criaturas que habitam os mares e oceanos é bastante incompleto. A revista Scientific American (setembro de 1969, p. 162) comentou: "Como se deu no passado, maior exploração do domínio abissal sem dúvida revelará criaturas ainda não descritas, inclusive membros de grupos que há muito se considerava extintos."

Alguns acham que a autenticidade do livro de Jonas está em dúvida porque não há nenhuma confirmação da atividade deste profeta nos registros assírios. Na realidade, porém, a ausência de tal informação não deve surpreender. Era costume de nações da antiguidade proclamar seus êxitos, não seus fracassos e suas humilhações, e também apagar tudo o que lhes fosse desfavorável. Além disso, visto que não se preservaram nem se encontraram todos os registros antigos, ninguém pode dizer com certeza que nunca tenha existido um relato dos acontecimentos do tempo de Jonas.

A falta de certos pormenores (tais como o nome do rei assírio, e o lugar exato em que Jonas foi vomitado em terra seca) tem sido citada como ainda outra prova de o livro de Jonas não ser história verídica. Esta objeção, porém, desconsidera que todas as narrativas históricas são relatos condensados, o historiador registrando apenas as informações que considera importantes ou necessárias para seu objetivo. Como o comentarista C. F. Keil observa apropriadamente: "Não existe sequer um dos historiadores antigos cujas obras possam ser consideradas tão completas assim: e os historiadores bíblicos visam ainda menos comunicar coisas que não tenham íntima relação com o principal objeto de sua narrativa, ou com o significado religioso dos próprios fatos." — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. X, Introdução a Jonas, p. 381.

Visto que a evidência arqueológica tem sido interpretada como indicando que os muros que cercavam a antiga Nínive tinham apenas cerca de 13 km de circunferência, afirma-se que o livro de Jonas exagera o tamanho da cidade, ao descrevê-la como requerendo uma caminhada de três dias para atravessá-la. (Jon 3:3) Esta, porém, não é uma razão válida para se questionar a referência bíblica. Tanto no uso bíblico como no moderno, o nome duma cidade pode incluir seus subúrbios. De fato, Gênesis 10:11, 12, mostra que Nínive, Reobote-Ir, Calá e Resem constituíam "a grande cidade".

Não ter Jonas escrito na primeira pessoa tem sido usado para desacreditar o livro. Mas este argumento não leva em conta que era comum que os escritores bíblicos se referissem a si mesmos na terceira pessoa. (Êx 24:1-18; Is 7:3; 20:2; 37:2, 5, 6, 21; Je 20:1, 2; 26:7, 8, 12; 37:2-6, 12-21; Da 1:6-13; Am 7:12-14; Ag 1:1, 3, 12, 13; 2:1, 10-14, 20; Jo 21:20) Até mesmo antigos historiadores seculares, inclusive Xenofonte e Tucídides, fizeram isso. Todavia, é digno de nota que jamais foi questionada a genuinidade de seus relatos por tal motivo.

Com a sua declaração inicial, "começou a vir a haver a palavra de Jeová", o livro de Jonas afirma proceder de Deus. (Jon 1:1) Os judeus, desde os tempos mais antigos, têm aceito como genuíno este e outros livros proféticos com introdução similar. (Je 1:1, 2; Os 1:1; Miq 1:1; Sof 1:1; Ag 1:1; Za 1:1; Mal 1:1) Isto, em si, fornece um bom argumento em favor da sua autenticidade. Como tem sido observado: "É, com efeito, inconcebível . . . que as autoridades judaicas tivessem recebido tal livro no cânon da Escritura sem a evidência mais conclusiva de sua genuinidade e autenticidade." — The Imperial Bible-Dictionary (O Dicionário Bíblico Imperial), editado por P. Fairbairn, Londres, 1874, Vol. I, p. 945.

Ademais, este livro está em completa harmonia com o restante das Escrituras. Atribui a salvação a Jeová (Jon 2:9; compare isso com Sal 3:8; Is 12:2; Re 7:10), e a narrativa ilustra a misericórdia, a longanimidade, a paciência e a benignidade imerecida de Jeová ao lidar com humanos pecaminosos. — Jon 3:10; 4:2, 11; compare isso com De 4:29-31; Je 18:6-10; Ro 9:21-23; Ef 2:4-7; 2Pe 3:9.

Outra evidência que testifica a autenticidade deste livro da Bíblia é sua candura. Não encobre a atitude imprópria de Jonas para com sua comissão e para com a medida tomada por Deus, de poupar os ninivitas.

A evidência mais conclusiva, porém, é suprida pelo próprio Filho de Deus. Disse ele: "Nenhum sinal . . . será dado [a esta geração], exceto o sinal de Jonas, o profeta. Porque, assim como Jonas esteve três dias e três noites no ventre do enorme peixe, assim estará o Filho do homem três dias e três noites no coração da terra. Homens de Nínive se levantarão no julgamento com esta geração e a condenarão; porque eles se arrependeram com o que Jonas pregou, mas, eis que algo maior do que Jonas está aqui." (Mt 12:39-41; 16:4) A ressurreição de Cristo Jesus devia ser tão real quanto a libertação de Jonas do ventre do peixe. E a geração que ouvira a pregação de Jonas deve ter sido tão literal quanto a geração que ouviu o que Cristo Jesus disse. Homens míticos de Nínive jamais poderiam ressurgir no julgamento e condenar uma geração empedernida de judeus.

JONATÃ [Jeová Deu]. Grafia portuguesa de dois nomes hebraicos, Yoh·na·thán e a forma mais extensa Yehoh·na·thán. — Veja JEONATÃ.

1. Levita que serviu de sacerdote da adoração falsa na casa de Micá, em Efraim, e, mais tarde, com os danitas. O relato em Juízes, capítulos 17 e 18, refere-se repetidas vezes a um jovem levita que, em Juízes 18:30, é chamado de "Jonatã, filho de Gersom, filho de Moisés". Ter sido ele, anteriormente, descrito como sendo "da família de Judá" pode referir-se simplesmente a que morava em Belém, no território de Judá. — Jz 17:7.

O perambulante Jonatã chegou por fim à casa de Micá, nas montanhas de Efraim. Micá tinha erigido uma imagem esculpida na sua casa. Jonatã concordou em atuar como sacerdote para aquela família, embora não fosse da família de Arão e se usasse uma imagem na adoração. Mais tarde, cinco danitas que procuravam um lugar para parte da tribo se estabelecer, encontraram Jonatã. Pediram-lhe que indagasse a Deus se teriam êxito, e ele lhes deu uma resposta favorável em nome de Jeová.

Quando o corpo principal de 600 danitas, bem como suas famílias e seu gado, passaram pela casa de Micá, a caminho do N, levaram os objetos de adoração, inclusive a imagem esculpida. Também induziram o egoísta Jonatã a lançar sua sorte com eles, tornando-se sacerdote deles e não apenas sacerdote de uma só família. (Jz 17:7–18:21) Jonatã "e seus filhos se tornaram sacerdotes para a tribo dos danitas até o dia em que o país foi levado ao exílio". (Jz 18:30) Alguns comentadores aplicam isto a uma conquista do distrito, tal como a efetuada por Tiglate-Pileser III, ou a de todas as tribos setentrionais em 740 AEC. (2Rs 15:29; 17:6) Não obstante, visto que Samuel evidentemente escreveu o livro de Juízes, deve haver aplicação a um tempo anterior. Juízes 18:31 menciona que os danitas mantiveram a imagem esculpida "erigida para si todos os dias em que a casa do verdadeiro Deus permanecia em Silo". Isto sugere um período para a aplicação do versículo anterior, e reforça o conceito de que a família de Jonatã serviu como sacerdotes até que a Arca foi capturada pelos filisteus. Tem-se alegado que o versículo 30 devia rezar: 'Até o dia em que a arca foi levada ao exílio.' (1Sa 4:11, 22) Mas tal conclusão sobre a duração do sacerdócio da família de Jonatã pode estar correta, mesmo sem se alterar a leitura deste versículo, porque o versículo 30 pode estar considerando as coisas do ponto de vista de que aquela terra, em certo sentido, foi para o exílio quando a Arca foi capturada.

2. Filho mais velho e favorito do Rei Saul, benjamita, evidentemente com Ainoã, filha de Aimaás. (1Sa 14:49, 50) Jonatã se destaca principalmente por sua amizade altruísta a Davi, e seu apoio a este como o designado por Jeová para ser rei.

A primeira menção de Jonatã ocorre nos anos iniciais do reinado de Saul como comandante valente de mil guerreiros. (1Sa 13:2) Assim sendo, ele devia ter então cerca de 20 anos de idade, e, portanto, pelo menos chegando aos 60 quando morreu, por volta de 1078 AEC. (Núm 1:3) Davi tinha 30 anos por ocasião da morte de Jonatã. (1Sa 31:2; 2Sa 5:4) Destarte, no decorrer de sua amizade, Jonatã tinha evidentemente uns 30 anos a mais que Davi. Ser Jonatã já um jovem adulto quando Saul se tornou rei talvez ajude a explicar seu temperamento e seu ponto de vista. Nos seus anos formativos, é bem possível que Jonatã tenha sido influenciado pelo seu pai, o qual, até a ocasião de ser escolhido rei, demonstrava modéstia, obediência e respeito por Jeová e seus arranjos. — 1Sa 9:7, 21, 26; 10:21, 22.

Na informação inicial sobre Jonatã, ele, com coragem e êxito, liderou mil homens precariamente armados contra a guarnição filisteia em Geba. Em resposta, o inimigo se reuniu em Micmás. Secretamente, Jonatã e seu escudeiro deixaram Saul e seus homens e se aproximaram do posto avançado do inimigo. Basta este ato para demonstrar a bravura de Jonatã, sua capacidade de inspirar confiança nos outros, e, ainda assim, seu reconhecimento da orientação de Jeová, pois as suas ações dependiam dum sinal de Deus. Os dois combatentes destemidos abateram cerca de 20 filisteus, o que levou a uma batalha em plena escala e à vitória de Israel. (1Sa 13:3–14:23) À medida que a luta era travada, Saul precipitadamente jurou uma maldição sobre qualquer pessoa que comesse antes de terminar a batalha. Jonatã não estava a par disso, e comeu um pouco de mel silvestre. Mais tarde, quando confrontado por Saul, Jonatã não se esquivou de ser morto por ter comido mel. Todavia, foi resgatado pelo povo, que reconheceu que Deus estava com ele naquele dia. — 1Sa 14:24-45.

Tais feitos provam claramente que Jonatã era um guerreiro corajoso, capaz e varonil. Ele e Saul bem mereciam ser descritos como sendo "mais velozes do que as águias" e "mais poderosos do que os leões". (2Sa 1:23) Era arqueiro perito. (2Sa 1:22; 1Sa 20:20) Suas qualidades varonis talvez fizessem com que fosse especialmente querido por Saul. É evidente que eram muito achegados. (1Sa 20:2) Isto, contudo, não sobrepujou o zelo de Jonatã por Deus, nem sua lealdade para com seu amigo Davi.

Davi tinha sido introduzido na corte do rei para tocar música para Saul, visto que o espírito de Jeová tinha deixado o rei e tinha sido substituído por um espírito mau — algo que Jonatã pode ter notado. Embora jovem, Davi era "homem poderoso, valente, e homem de guerra", e Saul "chegou a amá-lo muito e [Davi] veio a ser seu escudeiro". — 1Sa 16:14-23.

A amizade especial de Jonatã e de Davi data duma época logo depois de Davi ter matado Golias. Este ato destemido, em defesa do povo de Jeová, deve ter emocionado muito a Jonatã. Ouvindo o relato que Davi fez disso, "a própria alma de Jonatã se ligou à alma de Davi, e Jonatã começou a amá-lo como a sua própria alma". (1Sa 18:1) Estes dois corajosos guerreiros e servos devotados de Deus "passaram a concluir um pacto" de amizade. Jonatã podia ver que Davi tinha o espírito de Deus. (1Sa 18:3) Ele não o encarava ciumentamente como um rival, como fazia Saul. Antes, seu respeito pela forma como Deus dirigia os assuntos era excelente exemplo para seu amigo mais jovem. Não satisfez o desejo de Saul, de matar Davi, mas, em vez disso, avisou Davi e tentou interceder em seu favor. Quando Davi se viu obrigado a fugir, Jonatã se encontrou com ele e fez um pacto, no sentido de que Davi protegeria tanto a ele como aos da sua casa. — 1Sa 19:1–20:17.

Jonatã falou de novo com Saul sobre Davi, o que quase lhe custou a vida, pois, num acesso de raiva, Saul arremessou uma lança contra seu próprio filho. Segundo haviam combinado, Jonatã e Davi se encontraram num campo, onde o filho do rei ostensivamente tinha ido praticar a arte de atirar com o arco. (1Sa 20:24-40) Os dois amigos renovaram seu vínculo de afeição e "começaram a beijar-se um ao outro e a chorar um pelo outro", como se tem observado que outros homens fizeram, e como se faz ainda hoje em algumas terras. (1Sa 20:41; Gên 29:13; 45:15; At 20:37) Mais tarde, Jonatã teve a oportunidade de entrar em contato com Davi pela última vez em Horesa e fortaleceu-lhe "a mão com respeito a Deus"; eles reafirmaram seu pacto. — 1Sa 23:16-18.

Não existe nenhum indício bíblico de que Jonatã participasse com seu pai nas expedições contra Davi. Mas, na batalha contra os inimigos de Deus, os filisteus, Jonatã lutou até à morte, morrendo no mesmo dia que dois de seus irmãos e seu pai. Os filisteus penduraram os cadáveres deles nos muros de Bete-Sã. No entanto, homens valentes de Jabes-Gileade os removeram e os sepultaram em Jabes. Mais tarde, Davi removeu os ossos de Saul e de Jonatã para Zela. (1Sa 31:1-13; 2Sa 21:12-14; 1Cr 10:1-12) Davi lamentou profundamente a morte de seu amigo íntimo, Jonatã, até mesmo entoando em honra de Saul e de Jonatã uma endecha intitulada "O Arco". (2Sa 1:17-27) O Rei Davi mostrou-se especialmente bondoso com Mefibosete, filho aleijado de Jonatã, que tinha cinco anos quando seu pai morreu. Por fim, Mefibosete obteve um lugar permanente à mesa do rei. (2Sa 4:4; 9:10-13) A linhagem de Jonatã continuou por gerações. — 1Cr 8:33-40.

3. Filho do sumo sacerdote Abiatar, e que serviu como correio quando Davi fugiu de Jerusalém durante a revolta de Absalão, mas que, pelo visto, aliou-se mais tarde ao rebelde Adonias. O pai de Jonatã, Abiatar, viajou junto com Davi quando o futuro rei foi proscrito por Saul, e, mais tarde, Abiatar foi constituído em sumo sacerdote. Na ocasião da usurpação de Absalão, Davi enviou Abiatar e Zadoque de volta à capital, para que pudessem fornecer-lhe informações. Jonatã, filho sacerdotal de Abiatar, é mencionado aqui pela primeira vez no relato bíblico. Ele e Aimaás, filho de Zadoque, deviam levar mensagens vitais de seus pais e de Husai a Davi. (2Sa 15:27-29, 36) Os dois correios não podiam entrar na cidade sem serem reconhecidos, de modo que esperaram junto a uma fonte ou poço chamado En-Rogel, perto da cidade. Quando parecia que Absalão aceitara o conselho de Husai, enviou-se um aviso aos dois mensageiros, Jonatã e Aimaás, que aguardavam isso. Eles correram para transmitir a mensagem ao rei. Descobertos e perseguidos, quase foram apanhados. Com a ajuda duma mulher, eles se esconderam num poço até que passou o perigo e então se dirigiram a Davi, aconselhando-o a atravessar o Jordão. — 2Sa 17:15-22.

Nos dias finais de Davi, Adonias, seu filho, conspirou para se tornar rei em lugar de Salomão, e Abiatar se aliou a Adonias. Talvez influenciado pelo exemplo de seu pai, Jonatã evidentemente se bandeou para o lado de Adonias. Foi Jonatã quem trouxe ao usurpador, que se banqueteava, as notícias inquietadoras de que Davi tinha frustrado o complô por fazer de Salomão o rei. A Bíblia não diz nada mais sobre Jonatã. Talvez tenha compartilhado o banimento de seu pai, mas, seja como for, o cargo de sumo sacerdote não continuou na sua família. — 1Rs 1:41-43; 2:26, 27.

4. Sobrinho do Rei Davi, que abateu um gigante que escarnecia de Israel em Gate. (2Sa 21:20, 21; 1Cr 20:6, 7) Este Jonatã é alistado como filho de Simeá, ou Simei, irmão do Rei Davi. Visto que se menciona um Jonadabe em 2 Samuel 13:3 como filho de Simeá, irmão de Davi, alguns comentadores acham que a referência é à mesma pessoa. — Veja JEONADABE, JONADABE N.º 1.

5. Um dos poderosos de Davi, das forças militares. Era filho de Sage, o hararita. — 2Sa 23:8, 32; 1Cr 11:26, 34.

6. Filho de Uzias, encarregado dos tesouros do Rei Davi "no campo, nas cidades e nas aldeias, bem como nas torres", distintos dos tesouros do rei em Jerusalém. (1Cr 27:25) Jonatã é mencionado depois do tesoureiro real Asmavete e antes dos responsáveis de cuidar de tarefas específicas, tais como os vinhedos ou os olivais. — 1Cr 27:25-28.

7. Homem de entendimento, secretário e conselheiro do Rei Davi. (1Cr 27:32) No texto massorético, o parentesco de Jonatã com Davi é indicado pela palavra hebraica dohdh, que geralmente significa "tio". Mas, em vista de duas referências nas Escrituras a um sobrinho de Davi de nome Jonatã, é provável que a palavra seja usada aqui em sentido mais amplo de "parente", sendo neste caso "filho do irmão" ou "sobrinho". (Ro; AS n; NM) Portanto, seria o N.º 4.

8. Um dos chefes militares no campo quando Nabucodonosor conquistou Jerusalém em 607 AEC; filho de Careá e irmão de Joanã. Depois de Gedalias ter sido encarregado do povo que restou no país, Jonatã e os outros líderes militares no campo dirigiram-se a ele e receberam garantia de segurança. (Je 40:7-10) Evidentemente, Jonatã estava também entre aqueles que deram a Gedalias o aviso, que este decidiu ignorar, a respeito do perigo de ser assassinado. — Je 40:13-16.

9. Um dos dois filhos de Jada e descendente de Judá através de Esrom e Jerameel. Seu irmão Jeter faleceu sem deixar filhos varões, mas Jonatã tinha dois, Pelete e Zaza. — 1Cr 2:3, 25, 26, 28, 32, 33.

10. Israelita da família de Adim, cujo filho Ebede retornou de Babilônia a Jerusalém junto com Esdras em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 6.

11. Filho de Asael, que possivelmente se opôs à proposta de Esdras, de que os judeus retornados despedissem suas esposas estrangeiras. Sugeriu-se, porém, que esta oposição não era à sugestão de Esdras, mas ao procedimento adotado para executá-la. — Esd 10:15 n.

12. Filho de Joiada e neto do sumo sacerdote Eliasibe. (Ne 12:10, 11) Pensa-se que o versículo 11, na realidade, deveria rezar "Joanã" em vez de "Jonatã", visto que Neemias 12:22, 23 se refere a Joanã como "filho de Eliasibe", e "filho" pode significar "neto". — Veja JOANÃ N.º 7.

13. Sacerdote que era cabeça da casa paterna de Maluqui, nos dias do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim. — Ne 12:12, 14.

14. Filho de Semaías, da família de Asafe, e pai de Zacarias, trombeteiro sacerdotal no cortejo que marchou sobre a muralha reconstruída de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31, 35, 36.

JOPE [[Cidade] Bela (Linda)]. Antigo porto marítimo situado a uns 55 km ao ONO de Jerusalém. A atual Yafo (árabe: Jaffa; fundida com Tel Aviv em 1950, e chamada agora Tel Aviv-Yafo) ocupa o lugar antigo. A cidade acha-se situada sobre uma colina rochosa que se eleva a uma altura de uns 35 m. Seu porto, o único porto natural entre o monte Carmelo e a fronteira do Egito, é formado

O atual porto de Yafo (Jope); nesta cidade, Pedro recebeu uma visão que o preparou para pregar a gentios.

por um recife baixo a uns 100 m da costa. Pode-se entrar no porto, quer por uma estreita abertura no recife, quer pela extremidade setentrional aberta, porém rasa. Rochedos bloqueiam o acesso desde o sul.

Jope ficava na fronteira do território original de Dã, embora não fosse necessariamente parte dele. (Jos 19:40, 41, 46) No entanto, Juízes 5:17 associa Dã com navios, e isto pode dar a entender que os danitas realmente controlavam o porto marítimo de Jope.

Em vista do extenso intercâmbio comercial do Rei Salomão com outras nações (1Rs 10:22, 28, 29), provavelmente foram melhoradas as instalações do porto de Jope. Era para Jope que os tírios levavam balsas da madeira extraída das florestas do Líbano, para ser usada na construção do templo. (2Cr 2:16) Mais tarde, o profeta Jonas, procurando fugir de sua designação, tomou um navio em Jope para ir a Társis. (Jon 1:3) Após o exílio babilônio, Jope de novo serviu como porto para receber os cedros do Líbano, empregados na reconstrução do templo. — Esd 3:7.

No primeiro século EC, existia uma congregação cristã em Jope. Dorcas (Tabita), uma mulher que 'abundava em boas ações e em dádivas de misericórdia', estava associada com essa congregação. Quando ela morreu, Pedro veio da vizinha Lida, a pedido, e, subsequentemente, ressuscitou Dorcas. À medida que as notícias deste milagre se espalharam por toda a Jope, muitos se tornaram crentes. (At 9:36-42) Pedro permaneceu em Jope por um bom número de dias, gozando da hospitalidade de certo Simão, curtidor, cuja casa ficava à beira-mar. (At 9:43; 10:6) Foi no terraço da casa de Simão que Pedro, quando em transe, recebeu a revelação divina a respeito de ser correta a pregação a não judeus, pouco antes de receber os mensageiros do gentio Cornélio. De modo que Pedro não hesitou em acompanhar os mensageiros a Cesareia. Também, seis irmãos judeus, pelo que parece de Jope, o acompanharam. — At 10:9-45; 11:5-14.

JOQUEBEDE [possivelmente: Jeová É Glória]. Filha de Levi, que se casou com Anrão, da mesma tribo, e que se tornou mãe de Miriã, Arão e Moisés. (Êx 6:20; Núm 26:59) Joquebede era mulher de fé; confiava no seu Deus Jeová. Em desafio ao decreto de Faraó, ela se negou a matar seu menino, mais tarde chamado Moisés, e, depois de três meses, quando este não mais podia ser escondido na casa, ela o colocou numa arca de papiro e o pôs entre os juncos à beira do Nilo. A filha de Faraó achou o menino e o tomou para si, mas, sucedeu que a própria mãe de Moisés foi chamada para amamentá-lo. Ao passo que o menino cresceu, Joquebede, junto com seu marido, ensinaram diligentemente aos seus filhos os princípios da adoração pura, conforme se refletiu posteriormente na vida destes. — Êx 2:1-10.

Segundo o texto massorético, Joquebede era irmã de Coate, pai de Anrão; isto significa que Anrão casou-se com a sua tia, o que não era ilícito naquele tempo. (Êx 6:18, 20) Todavia, alguns peritos acham que Joquebede era prima de Anrão, em vez de tia dele, porque a Septuaginta grega reza assim, transmitindo a mesma ideia que a Pesito siríaca e as tradições judaicas. Por exemplo, Êxodo 6:20 reza em parte: "Jocabede, a filha do irmão do pai dele." (LXX, Bagster) "Amrão tomou por mulher a Jocabed, filha de seu tio paterno." (LEB; So) "Amrão tomou por mulher a Jacobed, sua prima." (Fi) "Anrão casou-se com uma parenta sua, chamada Jocabede." (Kx) Uma nota de Rotherham (em inglês), a respeito da expressão "irmã de seu pai", diz: "Prov[avelmente] apenas membro feminino da família de seu pai." Thomas Scott, nas suas Explanatory Notes (Notas Explanatórias; 1832), diz: "Segundo a Septuaginta e as tradições judaicas, Joquebede era prima, não tia de Anrão." "Os melhores críticos supõem que Joquebede era prima-germana de Anrão, não sua tia." (Commentary [Comentário] de Clarke) Quando Números 26:59 diz que Joquebede era "filha de Levi", pode significar "neta", como ocorre em muitos outros lugares das Escrituras quando se usa "filho" para indicar "neto". Na sua tradução em inglês, F. Fenton comenta que a expressão 'nascida a Levi', neste mesmo versículo, "na linguagem idiomática hebraica não se refere ao próprio Levi, mas apenas a um descendente da Tribo. O espaço de tempo torna impossível ter ela sido filha do próprio Levi".

Por outro lado, se o texto massorético for correto em Êxodo 6:20, Joquebede era tia de Anrão, não sua prima. Admitindo-se a possibilidade de o pai de Joquebede ter sido Levi, sua mãe deve ter sido mais moça do que a mãe de Coate. Neste caso, Joquebede, embora apenas meia-irmã de Coate, teria sido tia de Anrão.

JOQUIM [forma abreviada de Jeoiaquim, possivelmente significando "Jeová Levanta"]. Descendente de Judá através do seu terceiro filho, Selá. — 1Cr 2:3; 4:21, 22.

JORA. Veja HARIFE.

JORAI. Gadita descendente de Abiail e que morava em Basã. — 1Cr 5:11, 13, 14.

JORÃO [forma abreviada de Jeorão, que significa "Jeová É Alto (Enaltecido)"].

1. Filho do Rei Toi, de Hamate. Jorão foi enviado com presentes caros, de ouro, prata e co-bre, junto com as congratulações de seu pai, ao Rei Davi, quando este derrotou Hadadezer, rei de Zobá. Davi, por sua vez, aceitou e santificou os presentes para Jeová. (2Sa 8:5, 9-11) Num relato paralelo, o nome de Jorão é grafado Hadorão. — 1Cr 18:9-11.

2. Descendente do levita Eliézer, filho de Moisés; ele parece ter vivido quando Davi era rei. — 1Cr 26:24, 25; Êx 18:2-4.

3. Rei de Israel durante 12 anos; filho de Acabe. Costuma ser identificado pela forma mais extensa do seu nome, Jeorão. (2Rs 3:1) No texto massorético encontramos a forma abreviada apenas em três capítulos. — 2Rs 8:16 n, 17-29; 9:14 n, 15-29; 2Cr 22:5 n, 6, 7; veja JEORÃO N.º 2.

4. Rei de Judá durante oito anos; filho de Jeosafá. O texto massorético apresenta seu nome às vezes na forma abreviada. (2Rs 8:21, 23, 24; 11:2; 1Cr 3:11 n) A forma abreviada é também encontrada no texto grego de Westcott e Hort, mas algumas traduções ajudam no entendimento por apresentarem o nome por inteiro. — Mt 1:8, NM, Sawyer, TC, We; veja JEORÃO N.º 3.

JORDÃO. Rio principal da Terra da Promessa, que constitui a fronteira natural entre a maior parte da Palestina oriental e ocidental. (Jos 22:25) Antigamente, o Jordão propriamente dito iniciava seu curso na saída da bacia de Hula (Hulé), uma região pantanosa e um lago agora drenados. A região ao N da bacia de Hula caracteriza-se por numerosos cursos de água, os mananciais do Jordão. As três correntes principais que formam o Jordão, de E a O, são o Nahr Banyas (Nahal Hermon), o Nahr el-Leddan (Nahal Dan) e o Nahr Hasbani (Nahal Senir). O Yarmuk e o Jaboque são os tributários principais do Jordão procedentes do L. Atualmente, a maior parte do Jordão é um rio muito lamacento.

Emergindo da bacia de Hula, o Jordão corre suavemente por uns 3 km, mas depois se precipita através de gargantas de basalto em caminho para o mar da Galileia. Saindo da extremidade meridional do mar da Galileia, o Jordão serpenteia até o Mar Morto por uns 320 km, embora a distância em linha reta seja apenas de uns 105 km. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 334.

Na distância de uns 16 km entre a bacia de Hula e o mar da Galileia, o Jordão desce uns 270 m. Seguindo do mar da Galileia até o Mar Morto, o Jordão apresenta 27 corredeiras e desce mais uns 180 m.

Abaixo do mar da Galileia, o Jordão corre através de um vale de 6 a 13 km de largura. Mas, em Jericó, este vale tem a largura de cerca de 22 km. É no nível mais baixo deste vale (o Zor), com uma largura de cerca de 500 m a 3 km, que o Jordão serpenteia através de moitas cerradas de espinheiros e sarsas, trepadeiras e arbustos, oleandros, tamareiras, salgueiros e choupos. Antigamente, leões percorriam as "orgulhosas moitas junto ao Jordão". (Je 49:19; 50:44; Za 11:3) Ainda se podem encontrar ali lobos e chacais. O verão é extremamente quente e úmido nesta selva, com temperaturas bem acima de 38°C. E na primavera, ao passo que a neve se derrete no monte Hermom, o Jordão inunda o Zor.

O nível superior do vale (o Ghor) fica até 46 m acima da selva do Jordão e se acha separado dela por morros calvos, de marga cinzenta, em erosão. A parte do Ghor que se estende por uns 40 km ao S do mar da Galileia tem terras cultivadas e pastos. Fora disso, a maior parte do Ghor não é cultivado. Todavia, no tempo de Abraão e de Ló, antes da destruição de Sodoma e Gomorra, evidentemente uma parte muito maior dele era produtiva, especialmente na vizinhança do Mar Morto. — Gên 13:10, 11.

As águas rasas do Jordão e suas numerosas corredeiras e redemoinhos o tornam inavegável. Relata-se que há pelo menos 60 lugares em que é possível vadear o rio fora do período de cheia. Nos tempos antigos, o controle dos vaus do rio era militarmente vantajoso, visto que eram os principais meios de cruzar o Jordão. — Jz 3:28; 12:5, 6.

Usualmente, a parte do Jordão abaixo do mar da Galileia tem a profundidade média de 1 a 3 m e a largura de aproximadamente 27 a 30 m. Mas, na primavera, o Jordão transborda as margens, e é então muito mais largo e fundo. (Jos 3:15) Na época da inundação, não teria sido seguro para a nação israelita, de homens, mulheres e crianças, atravessar o Jordão, especialmente não perto de Jericó. A correnteza ali é tão rápida, que em tempos mais recentes banhistas foram literalmente arrastados pela água. No entanto, Jeová represou milagrosamente o Jordão, tornando possível que os israelitas o cruzassem em terra seca. (Jos 3:14-17) Séculos mais tarde, um milagre similar ocorreu certa vez para Elias, quando na companhia de Eliseu, e uma vez para Eliseu sozinho. — 2Rs 2:7, 8, 13, 14.

O Jordão figurou também na cura milagrosa de Naamã. Ajudado pelos seus servos a ter o ponto de vista correto, Naamã, que considerava os rios de Damasco melhores do que todas as águas de Israel, obedientemente banhou-se sete vezes no Jordão. Depois da sétima vez, ele ficou completamente curado da sua condição leprosa. — 2Rs 5:10-14.

No primeiro século EC, João, o Batizador, imergiu muitos judeus arrependidos nas águas do

Jordão. Teve também o privilégio de batizar ali Jesus, o perfeito Filho de Deus. — Mt 3:1, 5, 6, 13-17; veja DISTRITO DO JORDÃO.

JORIM. Descendente do Rei Davi através de Natã, e antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus. (Lu 3:23, 29-31) Jorim talvez vivesse enquanto Uzias era rei de Judá.

JORNADA. A palavra "jornada" é frequentemente usada na Bíblia para indicar uma distância geral percorrida. (Gên 31:23; Êx 3:18; Núm 10:33; 33:8) A distância percorrida num dia dependia dos meios de transporte, bem como das condições e do tipo de terreno encontrados pelo viajante. A jornada média de um dia, por terra, era de talvez 32 km ou mais. Mas, a "jornada de um sábado" era bem menor. (Mt 24:20) Atos 1:12 indica que a "jornada de um sábado" era a distância que separava Jerusalém do monte das Oliveiras. Provavelmente por causa do cálculo de dois diferentes pontos de partida, Josefo dá esta distância uma vez como 925 m e outra vez como 1.110 m. Fontes rabínicas, à base de Josué 3:4, indicam que a "jornada de um sábado" era de 2.000 côvados (890 m).

JORQUEÃO. Pelo visto, um lugar em Judá, de que Raão era "pai", ou fundador. — 1Cr 2:44.

JOSA. Nos dias do Rei Ezequias, um dos maiorais simeonitas que conquistaram parte do território dos camitas e dos meunins, a fim de ter mais pastos. — 1Cr 4:24, 34, 38-41.

JOSAFÁ [forma abreviada de Jeosafá, que significa "Jeová É Juiz"].

1. Um dos guerreiros leais de Davi; era mitnita. — 1Cr 11:26, 43.

2. Sacerdote e um dos sete trombeteiros que acompanharam a Arca do Pacto a Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:24, 25.

JOSAVIAS [possivelmente de Josibias, que significa "Jah Faz Morar"]. Guerreiro de destaque no exército de Davi; filho de Elnaão. — 1Cr 11:26, 46.

JOSBECASA [possivelmente de raízes que significam "em quem permanece a aflição"]. Cabeça do 17.º grupo de músicos na casa de Jeová; filho de Hemã. — 1Cr 25:1, 4, 9, 24.

JOSÉ [forma abreviada de Josifias, que significa "Que Jah Acrescente (Aumente); Jah Acrescentou (Aumentou)"].

1. Primeiro dos dois filhos de Jacó com sua amada esposa Raquel. (Gên 35:24) Quando ele nasceu, Raquel, por ter sido estéril, exclamou: "Deus tirou o meu vitupério!" Ela lhe deu então o nome de José, dizendo: "Jeová me acrescenta outro filho", quer dizer, outro além de Dã e Naftali, que Raquel havia aceito como seus, embora fossem dados à luz por sua serva Bila. (Gên 30:3-8, 22-24) Naquela época, Jacó evidentemente tinha 91 anos de idade. — Veja Gên 41:46, 47, 53, 54; 45:11; 47:9.

Uns seis anos mais tarde, Jacó partiu de Padã-Arã com toda a sua família, para voltar à terra de Canaã. (Gên 31:17, 18, 41) Ao saber que seu irmão Esaú vinha ao seu encontro com 400 homens, Jacó dividiu em grupos seus filhos, suas esposas e suas concubinas, colocando Raquel e José na retaguarda, a posição mais segura. (Gên 33:1-3) José e sua mãe, portanto, foram os últimos a se curvar diante de Esaú. — Gên 33:4-7.

Depois, José morou com sua família respectivamente em Sucote, em Siquém (Gên 33:17-19) e em Betel. (Gên 35:1, 5, 6) Posteriormente, em caminho de Betel para Efrate (Belém), morreu Raquel, mãe de José, ao dar à luz Benjamim. — Gên 35:16-19.

Odiado por Seus Meios-Irmãos. À idade de 17 anos, José, em companhia dos filhos que Jacó teve com Bila e com Zilpa, pastoreava ovelhas. Enquanto empenhado nisso, embora fosse mais moço do que eles, não participou numa transgressão deles, mas conscienciosamente trouxe um relato mau sobre eles a seu pai. — Gên 37:2.

Jacó veio a amar José mais do que todos os outros filhos, por ser o filho da sua velhice. A aderência de José ao que é direito talvez contribuísse também para ele se tornar objeto especial do afeto do pai. Jacó mandou fazer para seu filho uma comprida túnica listrada, talvez do tipo usado por pessoas de destaque. Em resultado disso, José passou a ser odiado por seus meios-irmãos. Mais tarde, quando ele contou um sonho que indicava que ele ia ter preeminência sobre eles, seus irmãos passaram a odiá-lo ainda mais. Um segundo sonho, indicando até mesmo que não só seus irmãos, mas também seu pai e sua mãe (evidentemente não Raquel, que já havia falecido, mas talvez a família de Jacó ou sua principal esposa viva) se curvariam diante dele. Por contar este sonho, José foi censurado pelo pai, e o ciúme de seus irmãos intensificou-se. Ter José contado seus sonhos não significa que tinha sentimentos de superioridade. Ele apenas dava a conhecer o que Deus lhe revelara. Jacó talvez reconhecesse a natureza profética dos sonhos, porque "tomou nota da declaração". — Gên 37:3-11.

Em outra ocasião, Jacó, desta vez em Hébron, pediu que José verificasse o bem-estar do rebanho e dos seus irmãos, enquanto estes estavam na vizinhança de Siquém. Em vista da animosidade deles, esta não seria uma tarefa agradável para José. No entanto, sem hesitação, ele disse: "Eis-me aqui!" Partindo da baixada de Hébron, ele foi para Siquém. Informado por um homem ali que seus irmãos haviam partido para Dotã, José seguiu caminho. Quando seus irmãos o avistaram à distância, começaram a tramar contra ele, dizendo: "Eis aqui vem aquele sonhador. E agora vinde e matemo-lo, e joguemo-lo numa das cisternas . . . Vejamos então o que será dos sonhos dele." (Gên 37:12-20) O primogênito, Rubem, porém, desejava frustrar a trama assassina e insistiu em que não matassem José, mas que o lançassem numa cisterna seca. Ao chegar José, despiram-no da sua comprida veste listrada e seguiram a recomendação de Rubem. Depois, quando avistaram uma caravana de ismaelitas, Judá, na ausência de Rubem, persuadiu os outros que, em vez de matarem José, era melhor o venderem aos mercadores que passavam. — Gên 37:21-27.

Vendido Como Escravo. Apesar dos rogos de José pedindo compaixão, eles o venderam por 20 peças de prata. (Gên 37:28; 42:21) Mais tarde, levaram Jacó a crer que José havia sido morto por uma fera selvagem. Jacó ficou tão pesaroso com a perda de seu filho, que se negou a ser consolado. — Gên 37:31-35.

Por fim, os mercadores levaram José ao Egito e o venderam a Potifar, chefe da guarda pessoal de Faraó. (Gên 37:28, 36; 39:1) Esta compra feita pelo egípcio, Potifar, não era incomum, porque antigos documentos em papiro indicam que escravos sírios (José era meio sírio [Gên 29:10; 31:20]) eram valorizados naquele país.

Assim como José havia sido diligente em promover os interesses de seu pai, assim também se mostrou diligente e fidedigno como escravo. Com a bênção de Jeová, tudo o que José fazia era bem-sucedido. Por isso, Potifar, por fim, o encarregou de todos os assuntos domésticos. Parece, assim, que José era superintendente, cargo mencionado por registros egípcios relacionados com as grandes casas de egípcios influentes. — Gên 39:2-6.

Resiste à Tentação. No ínterim, José se tornara um bonito homem. De modo que a esposa de Potifar se enamorou dele. Pediu-lhe repetidas vezes para que tivesse relações sexuais com ela. Mas José, treinado no caminho da justiça, negou-se, dizendo: "Como poderia eu cometer esta grande maldade e realmente pecar contra Deus?" Isto, porém, não acabou com o perigo para José. A evidência arqueológica indica que a disposição das casas egípcias parece ter sido tal, que se tinha de atravessar a parte principal da casa para chegar aos depósitos. Se a casa de Potifar tinha disposição similar, teria sido impossível que José evitasse todo contato com a esposa de Potifar. — Gên 39:6-10.

Por fim, a esposa de Potifar se aproveitou do que ela achava ser uma oportunidade. Enquanto não havia outros homens na casa e José cuidava dos assuntos domésticos, ela o pegou pela veste, dizendo: "Deita-te comigo!" Mas, José largou sua veste na mão dela e fugiu. Então ela começou a gritar e a fazer parecer que José tivera intenções imorais para com ela. Quando contou isso ao marido, o enfurecido Potifar mandou que José fosse lançado na casa da prisão, aquela em que se mantinham detidos os prisioneiros do rei. — Gên 39:11-20.

Na Prisão. Parece que José, inicialmente, recebeu um tratamento severo na prisão. "Atribularam-lhe os pés com grilhetas, sua alma entrou em ferros." (Sal 105:17, 18) Mais tarde, porém, o oficial principal da casa da prisão, por causa da conduta exemplar de José sob circunstâncias adversas e da bênção de Jeová, deu-lhe um cargo de confiança sobre os outros presos. Nesta qualidade, o preso José mostrou novamente ser um administrador hábil, por cuidar de que se executasse todo o trabalho. — Gên 39:21-23.

De acordo com o relato bíblico de que Faraó tinha um copeiro-mor, num túmulo em Tebas retratam-se a vindima e a fabricação de vinho.

Depois, quando dois oficiais de Faraó, o chefe dos copeiros e o chefe dos padeiros, foram colocados na mesma prisão, José foi designado para cuidar deles. No decorrer do tempo, estes dois homens tiveram sonhos, os quais José explicou, depois de atribuir a interpretação a Deus. O sonho do copeiro indicava ser ele recolocado na sua posição em três dias. Por isso, José pediu que o copeiro se lembrasse dele e o mencionasse a Faraó, para que fosse solto da prisão. Explicou que havia sido raptado "da terra dos hebreus" e que não fizera nada que merecesse encarceramento. Provavelmente, para não dar má reputação à sua família, José não identificou os raptores. Depois, ele interpretou o sonho do padeiro no sentido de que este seria morto em três dias. Ambos os sonhos se cumpriram três dias depois, por ocasião do aniversário natalício de Faraó. Isto, sem dúvida, fortaleceu José quanto ao cumprimento certo dos seus próprios sonhos e o ajudou a continuar a perseverar. Então já se haviam passado uns 11 anos desde que fora vendido pelos seus irmãos. — Gên 40:1-22; compare isso com Gên 37:2; 41:1, 46.

Perante Faraó. O copeiro, novamente restabelecido no seu cargo, esqueceu-se de José. (Gên 40:23) No entanto, ao fim de dois anos completos, Faraó teve dois sonhos, que nenhum dos sacerdotes-magos e dos sábios do Egito sabia interpretar. Foi então que o copeiro trouxe José à atenção de Faraó. Faraó mandou imediatamente buscar José. Em harmonia com o costume egípcio, José, antes de comparecer perante Faraó, barbeou-se e mudou de roupa. Tampouco neste caso atribuiu a si mesmo o crédito, mas atribuiu a interpretação a Deus. Explicou então que ambos os sonhos de Faraó indicavam sete anos de fartura, seguidos por sete anos de fome. Além disso, recomendou medidas para amenizar as futuras condições de fome. — Gên 41:1-36.

Constituído em Segundo Governante do Egito. Faraó reconheceu em José, de 30 anos de idade, o homem suficientemente sábio para administrar os assuntos durante o tempo de fartura e o tempo de fome. Portanto, José foi constituído em segundo governante do Egito, dando-lhe Faraó seu próprio anel de sinete, finas roupas de linho e um colar de ouro. (Gên 41:37-44, 46; compare isso com Sal 105:17, 20-22.) Esta maneira de investidura é atestada por inscrições e murais egípcios. É também de interesse que, à base de antigos registros egípcios, sabe-se que diversos cananeus receberam altos cargos no Egito, e que a mudança de nome de José para Zafenate-Paneia não é sem paralelo. José recebeu também por esposa Asenate, filha de Potífera (egípcio, que significa "Aquele a Quem Rá Deu"), sacerdote de Om. — Gên 41:45.

Depois, José percorreu a terra do Egito e preparou-se para administrar assuntos do estado, armazenando posteriormente grandes quantidades de alimentos durante os anos de fartura. Antes de chegar a fome, sua esposa Asenate deu-lhe dois filhos, Manassés e Efraim. — Gên 41:46-52.

Os Meios-Irmãos Vêm Comprar Alimentos. Daí sobreveio a fome. Visto que ela se estendia muito além das fronteiras do Egito, pessoas de terras vizinhas vinham comprar alimentos de José. Por fim, até mesmo seus dez meios-irmãos chegaram e se curvaram diante dele, cumprindo assim parcialmente os dois sonhos anteriores de José. (Gên 41:53–42:7) Todavia, eles não o reconheceram, pois estava trajado de vestes reais e lhes falava por meio dum intérprete. (Gên 42:8, 23) Fingindo não os conhecer, José acusou-os de ser espiões, em vista de que afirmaram que eram dez irmãos, que haviam deixado em casa seu pai e seu irmão mais moço, e que outro irmão já não existia. Mas José insistiu em que eles eram espiões e os pôs em detenção. No terceiro dia, disse-lhes: "Fazei o seguinte e ficai vivos. Eu temo o verdadeiro Deus. Se fordes retos, fique preso um dos vossos irmãos na vossa casa de detenção [evidentemente aquela em que todos os dez ficaram detidos]; os demais de vós, porém, ide, tomai cereais para a fome nas vossas casas. Então me trareis o vosso irmão mais moço, para que as vossas palavras sejam achadas fidedignas; e não morrereis." — Gên 42:9-20.

Em vista destes acontecimentos, os meios-irmãos de José começaram a sentir que estavam sofrendo retribuição divina por o terem vendido como escravo, anos antes. Falaram sobre a sua culpa diante do seu irmão, a quem ainda não reconheceram. Ao ouvir as palavras deles, que refletiam arrependimento, José ficou tão emocionado, que teve de retirar-se da presença deles e chorar. Ao retornar, mandou prender Simeão até que os outros voltassem com o irmão mais moço deles. — Gên 42:21-24.

Os Meios-Irmãos Vêm com Benjamim. Quando os nove meios-irmãos de José disseram a Jacó o que acontecera no Egito, e quando descobriram que o dinheiro de todos eles tinha sido devolvido às suas sacas, todos ficaram com muito medo, e seu pai expressou pesar. Apenas a gravidade da fome, junto com a garantia de Judá pelo retorno seguro de Benjamim, induziram Jacó a permitir que seu filho mais moço acompanhasse os outros de volta ao Egito. — Gên 42:29–43:14.

Chegando ali, foram reunidos com Simeão, e, para a grande surpresa deles, foram todos convidados para uma refeição com o administrador de alimentos. Ao chegar José, deram-lhe um presente, prostraram-se diante dele e depois de responderem às indagações dele a respeito do seu pai, curvaram-se novamente diante dele. José, ao ver seu irmão germano, Benjamim, ficou tão emocionado, que se retirou da presença deles e chorou. Depois disso, conseguiu controlar seus sentimentos e mandou servir o almoço. Os 11 irmãos foram assentados à própria mesa deles, segundo a idade, e Benjamim recebeu porções cinco vezes maiores do que os outros. É provável que José fizesse isso para provar seus irmãos quanto a se abrigavam ciúme oculto. Mas, eles não o evidenciaram. — Gên 43:15-34.

Como na visita anterior, José mandou colocar o dinheiro de volta na saca de cada um deles (Gên 42:25), e adicionalmente mandou colocar seu cálice de prata na saca de Benjamim. Depois da partida deles, mandou alcançá-los e acusá-los de furtar seu cálice de prata. Talvez para incutir neles o grande valor que este tinha para ele e a natureza séria do suposto crime deles, o homem encarregado da casa de José devia dizer-lhes: "Não é esta a coisa de que meu amo bebe e por meio da qual interpreta peritamente os presságios?" (Gên 44:1-5) Naturalmente, visto que tudo isso era parte de um estratagema, não há base para se crer que José usasse literalmente o cálice de prata para interpretar presságios. Pelo visto, José queria apresentar-se como administrador duma terra em que a adoração verdadeira era desconhecida.

Deve ter sido grande a consternação dos seus irmãos quando o cálice foi encontrado na saca de Benjamim. Com as vestes rasgadas, retornaram à casa de José e se curvaram diante dele. José disse-lhes que todos, exceto Benjamim, estavam livres para ir embora. Mas, eles não queriam fazer isso, mostrando que desaparecera o espírito de inveja que 22 anos antes os induzira a vender seu irmão. Judá rogou eloquentemente a causa deles, oferecendo-se para tomar o lugar de Benjamim, para que seu pai não morresse de pesar, por Benjamim não ter voltado. — Gên 44:6-34.

José Revela Sua Identidade. José ficou tão afetado pelos rogos de Judá, que não pôde mais conter-se. Depois de pedir que todos os estranhos saíssem, identificou-se aos seus irmãos. Embora anteriormente muito maltratado por eles, não abrigava nenhuma animosidade. Disse: "Agora, não vos sintais magoados e não estejais irados com vós mesmos, por me terdes vendido para cá; porque foi para a preservação de vida que Deus me enviou na vossa frente. Pois este é o segundo ano de fome no meio da terra, e ainda haverá cinco anos em que não haverá nem lavoura nem colheita. Por conseguinte, Deus enviou-me na frente de vós, a fim de pôr para vós um restante na terra e para vos preservar vivos por meio dum grande escape. Agora, não fostes vós que me mandastes para cá, mas foi o verdadeiro Deus." (Gên 45:1-8) O perdão de José foi genuíno, porque chorou sobre todos os seus irmãos e os beijou. — Gên 45:14, 15.

Depois, José, segundo as ordens de Faraó, providenciou carroças para os seus irmãos, a fim de que trouxessem Jacó e toda a sua família ao Egito. Além disso, deu-lhes presentes e provisões para o caminho. E, ao partirem, ele os exortou a não 'ficarem exasperados uns com os outros no caminho'. — Gên 45:16-24.

O Pai de José Vem ao Egito. No começo, Jacó não quis acreditar que seu filho José ainda vivia. Mas, quando finalmente se convenceu, Jacó, aos 130 anos de idade, exclamou: "Ah! irei e o verei antes de eu morrer!" Mais tarde, em Berseba, enquanto em caminho para o Egito com toda a sua família, Jacó, em visão, recebeu aprovação divina para a mudança e foi informado: "José deitará a mão sobre os teus olhos." De modo que José havia de ser aquele que fecharia os olhos de Jacó quando este morresse. Visto que isso costumava ser feito pelo primogênito, Jeová revelou assim que José havia de receber o direito de primogênito. — Gên 45:25–46:4.

Informado da vinda de seu pai por Judá, que fora enviado à frente, José aprontou seu carro e foi ao encontro de Jacó em Gósen. Daí, com cinco dos seus irmãos, José se dirigiu a Faraó. Conforme orientados por José, seus irmãos identificaram-se como criadores de ovelhas e pediram para morar como forasteiros na terra de Gósen. Faraó concedeu-lhes este pedido, e José, depois de apresentar seu pai a Faraó, estabeleceu Jacó e sua família na melhor parte do país. (Gên 46:28–47:11) Assim, José, sábia e amorosamente, aproveitou o preconceito dos egípcios contra pastores. Isto resultou em proteger a família de Jacó contra a contaminação pela influência egípcia e eliminou o perigo de serem totalmente absorvidos pelos egípcios por casamento. Daí em diante, Jacó e toda a sua família dependiam de José. (Gên 47:12) Realmente, todos se curvaram diante de José como primeiro-ministro de Faraó, cumprindo os sonhos proféticos de José de maneira notável.

Efeito da Fome sobre os Egípcios. Com a continuação da fome, os egípcios gradualmente esgotaram todo o seu dinheiro e seu gado em troca de alimentos. Por fim, venderam a Faraó até mesmo suas terras e a si mesmos como escravos. José os fixou então em cidades, sem dúvida para facilitar a distribuição de cereais. Parece, porém, que esta ocupação das cidades era uma medida temporária. Visto que os egípcios teriam de voltar aos seus campos para lançar sementes, seria lógico que voltassem a morar novamente nas suas casas anteriores. Depois de novamente usufruírem as safras da terra, os egípcios, segundo o decreto de José, tinham de dar um quinto dos seus produtos a Faraó pelo uso da terra. Os sacerdotes, porém, estavam eximidos disso. — Gên 47:13-26.

Jacó Abençoa os Filhos de José. Cerca de 12 anos após o fim da fome, José levou seus dois filhos, Manassés e Efraim, perante Jacó. Foi então que Jacó indicou que o direito de primogenitura seria de José, sendo Efraim e Manassés encarados como iguais aos filhos do próprio Jacó. De modo que de José deviam derivar duas tribos distintas, com duas heranças tribais separadas. Embora isto desagradasse a José, Jacó, ao abençoar Efraim e Manassés, manteve sua mão direita posta no mais moço, Efraim. Por dar preferência a Efraim, ele indicou profeticamente que o mais moço se tornaria maior. — Gên 47:28, 29; 48:1-22; veja também De 21:17; Jos 14:4; 1Cr 5:1.

Jacó Abençoa José e Outros Filhos. Mais tarde, Jacó, no leito de morte, convocou todos os seus filhos e os abençoou individualmente. Comparou José ao "broto duma árvore frutífera". Esta "árvore frutífera" era o próprio patriarca Jacó, e José tornou-se um dos ramos de destaque. (Gên 49:22) Embora hostilizado por arqueiros e alvo de rancor, o arco de José "morava num lugar permanente e a força das suas mãos era ágil". (Gên 49:23, 24) Isto se podia dizer a respeito do próprio José. Seus meios-irmãos lhe tinham rancor e figurativamente atiraram nele para o destruir. No entanto, José retribuiu-lhes com misericórdia e benevolência, qualidades que eram como flechas que acabaram com o rancor deles. Os arqueiros inimigos não conseguiram matar José, nem enfraquecer sua devoção à justiça e sua afeição fraternal.

No entanto, em sentido profético, as palavras de Jacó podiam aplicar-se às tribos descendentes dos dois filhos de José, Efraim e Manassés, e suas batalhas futuras. (Veja De 33:13, 17; Jz 1:23-25, 35.) É de interesse notar que a tribo de Efraim produziu Josué (Oseias; Jeosué), sucessor de Moisés e líder da luta contra os cananeus. (Núm 13:8, 16; Jos 1:1-6) Outro descendente de José, Gideão, da tribo de Manassés, com a ajuda de Jeová, derrotou os midianitas. (Jz 6:13-15; 8:22) E Jefté, evidentemente também da tribo de Manassés, subjugou os amonitas. — Jz 11:1, 32, 33; compare isso com Jz 12:4; Núm 26:29.

Outros aspectos da bênção profética de Jacó também têm paralelo no que se passou com José. Quando José, em vez de se vingar, fez provisões para a família inteira de Jacó, ou Israel, ele era como pastor e pedra de apoio para Israel. Visto que Jeová dirigia os assuntos de modo que ele pudesse servir assim, José procedera das mãos do "Potentado de Jacó". José, provindo de Jeová Deus, tinha a ajuda Dele. Estava com o Todo-Poderoso no sentido de que estava do lado de Jeová, e, por isso, era beneficiário da Sua bênção. — Gên 49:24, 25.

As tribos descendentes de José por meio de Efraim e Manassés também receberiam a bênção de Jeová. Jacó disse: "[O Todo-Poderoso] te abençoará com as bênçãos dos céus acima, com as bênçãos da água de profundeza jazendo embaixo, com as bênçãos dos peitos e da madre." (Gên 49:25)

Isto garantia aos descendentes de José os necessários suprimentos de água do céu e do subsolo, bem como uma grande população. — Veja De 33:13-16; Jos 17:14-18.

As bênçãos que Jacó proferiu sobre o seu amado filho José haviam de servir de ornamento para as duas tribos descendentes de José. Essas bênçãos haviam de ser um ornamento superior às bênçãos das florestas e das fontes, que adornam os montes sempiternos e os morros de duração indefinida. Haviam de ser uma bênção permanente, continuando sobre a cabeça de José e dos descendentes dele enquanto houvesse montes e morros. — Gên 49:26; De 33:16.

José foi "selecionado dentre os seus irmãos" porque Deus o escolheu para desempenhar um papel especial. (Gên 49:26) Ele se havia distinguido por demonstrar excelente espírito e capacidade de supervisionar e organizar. Por isso, era apropriado que bênçãos especiais descessem sobre o alto da cabeça dele.

Depois de Jacó ter terminado de abençoar seus filhos, ele morreu. José lançou-se então sobre a face de seu pai e o beijou. Acatando o desejo de Jacó, de ser sepultado na caverna de Macpela, José providenciou que médicos egípcios embalsamassem o corpo de seu pai em preparação para a viagem a Canaã. — Gên 49:29–50:13.

Atitude para com Seus Irmãos. Depois do retorno do sepultamento de Jacó, os meios-irmãos de José, ainda atormentados pela consciência pesada, temiam que José se vingasse, e pediram perdão. Em vista disso, José irrompeu em lágrimas, consolando-os e assegurando-lhes que não havia motivo para terem medo: "Não tenhais medo, pois, estou eu no lugar de Deus? Quanto a vós, tencionastes o mal contra mim. Deus tencionou-o para o bem, com o objetivo de agir assim como no dia de hoje, para preservar vivo a muito povo. Agora, pois, não tenhais medo. Eu mesmo suprirei alimento a vós e às vossas criancinhas." — Gên 50:14-21.

Morte. José sobreviveu ao seu pai uns 54 anos, atingindo a idade de 110 anos. Teve o privilégio de ver até mesmo alguns dos seus bisnetos. Antes de morrer, José, em fé, solicitou que seus ossos fossem levados a Canaã por ocasião do Êxodo dos israelitas. Quando morreu, o corpo de José foi embalsamado e colocado num ataúde. — Gên 50:22-26; Jos 24:32; He 11:22.

O Nome José Recebe Destaque. Em vista da posição destacada de José entre os filhos de Jacó, era bem apropriado que seu nome fosse às vezes usado para designar todas as tribos de Israel (Sal 80:1) ou aquelas que foram incluídas no reino setentrional. (Sal 78:67; Am 5:6, 15; 6:6) Seu nome consta também em profecias bíblicas. Na visão profética de Ezequiel, a herança de José é uma porção dupla (Ez 47:13), um dos portões da cidade "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali" leva o nome de José (Ez 48:32, 35), e com referência à reunificação do povo de Jeová, fala-se de José como maioral de uma parte da nação e de Judá como maioral da outra parte. (Ez 37:15-26) A profecia de Obadias indicava que "a casa de José" participaria na destruição da "casa de Esaú" (Ob 18), e a de Zacarias indicava que Jeová salvaria "a casa de José". (Za 10:6) José, em vez de Efraim, aparece como uma das tribos do Israel espiritual. — Re 7:8.

Estar José alistado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:8 sugere que a profecia de Jacó, no leito de morte, teria aplicação ao Israel espiritual. Portanto, é digno de nota que o Potentado de Jacó, Jeová Deus, proveu Cristo Jesus como o Pastor Excelente que depôs a sua vida a favor das "ovelhas". (Jo 10:11-16) Cristo Jesus é também a pedra de alicerce sobre a qual repousa o templo de Deus composto dos israelitas espirituais. (Ef 2:20-22; 1Pe 2:4-6) E este Pastor e Pedra está com o Deus Todo-Poderoso. — Jo 1:1-3; At 7:56; He 10:12; compare isso com Gên 49:24, 25.

Paralelos Entre José e Cristo. Podem-se observar numerosos paralelos entre a vida de José e a de Cristo Jesus. Assim como José fora destacado como objeto especial da afeição de seu pai, assim também Jesus. (Veja Mt 3:17; He 1:1-6.) Os meios-irmãos de José lhe eram hostis. De modo similar, Jesus foi rejeitado pelos seus, os judeus (Jo 1:11), e seus meios-irmãos carnais, no começo, não exerciam fé nele. (Jo 7:5) A pronta obediência no acatamento da vontade de seu Pai, em ver como estavam seus meios-irmãos, paraleliza a pronta disposição de Jesus, de vir à terra. (Fil 2:5-8) As amargas experiências em que esta missão resultou para José são comparáveis ao que se deu com Jesus, especialmente quando ultrajado e finalmente morto numa estaca de tortura. (Mt 27:27-46) Assim como os meios-irmãos de José o venderam a uma caravana de midianitas-ismaelitas, assim os judeus entregaram Jesus à autoridade romana para ser executado. (Jo 18:35) Tanto José como Jesus, pelos sofrimentos, foram refinados e preparados para os seus papéis de salvar vidas. (Sal 105:17-19; He 5:7-10) A elevação de José ao cargo de administrador de alimentos, no Egito, e a salvação de vidas resultante disso, encontra um paralelo no enaltecimento de Jesus e em ele se tornar Salvador tanto de judeus como de não judeus. (Jo 3:16, 17; At 5:31) A trama dos irmãos de José, de prejudicá-lo, passou a ser o meio de Deus salvá-los da fome. Do mesmo modo, a morte de Jesus forneceu a base para a salvação. — Jo 6:51; 1Co 1:18.

2. Pai de Igal, o espia da tribo de Issacar, enviado por Moisés do ermo de Parã. — Núm 13:2, 3, 7.

3. Levita, "dos filhos de Asafe", designado por sortes, durante o reinado de Davi, para estar no primeiro dos 24 grupos de serviço de músicos. — 1Cr 25:1, 2, 9.

4. "Filho de Jonã"; antepassado de Cristo Jesus na linhagem de Maria, sua mãe terrestre. (Lu 3:30) José era descendente de Davi e vivia antes da destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios.

5. Um daqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, acatando a exortação de Esdras. — Esd 10:10-12, 42, 44.

6. Sacerdote da casa paterna de Sebanias, no tempo do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim, do governador Neemias e do sacerdote Esdras. — Ne 12:12, 14, 26.

7. "Filho de Matatias" e antepassado de Jesus Cristo do lado materno. (Lu 3:24, 25) José viveu anos depois do exílio babilônico.

8. Filho de certo Jacó; pai adotivo de Cristo Jesus, marido de Maria, e, posteriormente, pai de pelo menos quatro filhos, Tiago, José, Simão e Judas, e também de filhas. (Mt 1:16; 13:55, 56; Lu 4:22; Jo 1:45; 6:42) José era também chamado filho de Eli (Lu 3:23), sendo este evidentemente o nome de seu sogro. O justo José, sempre obediente à orientação divina, aderia de perto à Lei mosaica e se sujeitava aos decretos de César.

José, carpinteiro por profissão e habitante de Nazaré, tinha recursos financeiros bastante limitados. (Mt 13:55; Lu 2:4; compare Lu 2:24 com Le 12:8.) Era noivo da virgem Maria (Lu 1:26, 27), mas, antes de se unirem em matrimônio, ela ficou grávida por espírito santo. Não querendo fazer dela um espetáculo público, José pretendia divorciar-se dela secretamente. (Veja DIVÓRCIO.) Todavia, ao receber num sonho uma explicação dum anjo de Jeová, José levou Maria para sua casa como sua esposa legítima. No entanto, refreou-se de ter relações sexuais com ela até depois do nascimento do miraculosamente gerado filho dela. — Mt 1:18-21, 24, 25.

Em obediência ao decreto de César Augusto, para que as pessoas se registrassem nas suas próprias cidades, José, como descendente do Rei Davi, viajou com Maria para Belém, da Judeia. Ali Maria deu à luz Jesus e o deitou numa manjedoura, porque não havia outras acomodações disponíveis. Naquela noite, pastores, informados por um anjo a respeito do nascimento, vieram ver o menino recém-nascido. Uns 40 dias mais tarde, conforme exigido pela Lei mosaica, José e Maria apresentaram Jesus no templo, em Jerusalém, junto com uma oferta. Tanto José como Maria ficaram admirados ao ouvirem as palavras proféticas do idoso Simeão sobre as grandes coisas que Jesus faria. — Lu 2:1-33; compare isso com Le 12:2-4, 6-8.

Parece que algum tempo depois disso, enquanto moravam numa casa em Belém, Maria e seu filhinho foram visitados por alguns astrólogos orientais. (Embora Lucas 2:39 talvez pareça indicar que José e Maria voltaram a Nazaré logo depois de apresentarem Jesus no templo, deve ser lembrado que este texto faz parte dum relato muito condensado.) A intervenção divina impediu que a visita deles resultasse na morte de Jesus. Advertido em sonho que Herodes procurava a criancinha para destruí-la, José acatou as instruções divinas de fugir com a família para o Egito. — Mt 2:1-15.

Após o falecimento de Herodes, o anjo de Jeová apareceu novamente num sonho a José, dizendo: "Levanta-te, toma a criancinha e sua mãe, e vai para a terra de Israel." No entanto, ao saber que o filho de Herodes, Arquelau, governava em lugar de seu pai, temeu voltar para a Judeia, e, "recebendo em sonho um aviso divino, retirou-se para o território da Galileia e foi morar numa cidade chamada Nazaré". — Mt 2:19-23.

Todo ano, José levava toda a família para assistir à celebração da Páscoa em Jerusalém. Em certa ocasião, ao retornarem a Nazaré, depois de terem coberto a distância de um dia de viagem de Jerusalém, José e Maria deram pela falta de Jesus, que tinha 12 anos de idade. Procuraram por ele diligentemente e por fim o encontraram no templo em Jerusalém, escutando os instrutores ali e interrogando-os. — Lu 2:41-50.

O registro bíblico não diz nada sobre quanto treinamento José deu a Jesus. Sem dúvida, porém, ele contribuiu para Jesus progredir em sabedoria. (Lu 2:51, 52) José ensinou-lhe também a carpintaria, porque Jesus era conhecido como "o filho do carpinteiro" (Mt 13:55), e como "o carpinteiro". — Mr 6:3.

As Escrituras não mencionam especificamente a morte de José. Mas, parece que ele não sobreviveu a Jesus. Se tivesse vivido além da época da Páscoa de 33 EC, é pouco provável que Jesus, pregado na estaca, tivesse confiado Maria aos cuidados do apóstolo João. — Jo 19:26, 27.

9. Meio-irmão de Jesus Cristo. (Mt 13:55; Mr 6:3) José, igual aos seus outros irmãos, no começo não exercia fé em Jesus. (Jo 7:5) Mais tarde, porém, os meios-irmãos de Jesus, sem dúvida incluindo José, tornaram-se crentes. São mencionados como estando na companhia dos apóstolos e de outros, após a ascensão de Jesus ao céu, de modo que provavelmente estavam no grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos reunidos num quarto de andar superior, em Jerusalém, quando Matias foi escolhido por sortes como substituto para o infiel Judas Iscariotes. Parece que este mesmo grupo de cerca de 120, mais tarde, recebeu o espírito de Deus no dia de Pentecostes, em 33 EC. — At 1:9–2:4.

10. Homem rico, da cidade de Arimateia, de Judá, e membro de boa reputação do Sinédrio judaico. Embora homem bom e justo, que aguardava o Reino de Deus, José, por temor dos judeus descrentes, não se identificou abertamente como discípulo de Jesus Cristo. Todavia, não votou em apoio da ação injusta do Sinédrio contra Cristo Jesus. Mais tarde, solicitou corajosamente a Pilatos o corpo de Jesus, e, junto com Nicodemos, preparou-o para o sepultamento, e o colocou então num túmulo novo cortado na rocha. Este túmulo ficava num jardim perto do lugar onde Jesus foi pregado na estaca e pertencia a José de Arimateia. — Mt 27:57-60; Mr 15:43-46; Lu 23:50-53; Jo 19:38-42.

11. Homem proposto junto com Matias como candidato para o cargo de superintendência deixado vago pelo infiel Judas Iscariotes. José, também chamado Barsabás (talvez nome de família ou apenas um nome adicional) e cognominado Justo, era testemunha da obra, dos milagres e da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo. Todavia, Matias, não José, foi escolhido por sortes para substituir Judas Iscariotes, antes de Pentecostes de 33 EC, passando a ser "contado com os onze apóstolos". — At 1:15–2:1.

12. Levita, cognominado Barnabé e nativo de Chipre. (At 4:36, 37) Era companheiro íntimo do apóstolo Paulo. — Veja BARNABÉ.

JOSEBE-BASSEBETE. Cabeça dos três mais destacados poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:8) Em 1 Crônicas 11:11 ele é chamado de Jasobeão, forma provavelmente mais correta. Há outras dificuldades de escriba no texto de 2 Samuel 23:8, tornando necessário que o obscuro hebraico no texto massorético (que parece rezar: "Este era Adino, o esnita") seja corrigido para rezar: "Ele tinha brandido sua lança." (NM) Outras traduções modernas rezam de modo similar. (ALA; BJ; BLH; IBB; PIB) Assim se faz com que Samuel concorde com o livro de Crônicas e com o padrão de construção nesta parte da matéria. Fala-se de "três", mas introduzir outro nome, Adino, torna isso quatro. Além disso, atribui-se a cada um destes três poderosos uma façanha, de modo que, se a vitória sobre os 800 fosse atribuída a outra pessoa, não haveria aqui nenhuma proeza a ser atribuída a Josebe-Bassebete (Jasobeão). — Veja JASOBEÃO N.º 2.

Existe a possibilidade de que a façanha atribuída a Josebe-Bassebete, em 2 Samuel 23:8, não seja a mesma mencionada em 1 Crônicas 11:11. Isto talvez explique por que o relato de Samuel fala de 800 mortos, ao passo que o relato de Crônicas menciona 300 mortos.

JOSEQUE. Antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus. Joseque era descendente distante de Davi, através de Natã, e a quarta geração depois de Zorobabel, o que o coloca no fim da era das Escrituras Hebraicas. — Lu 3:23, 26, 27, 31.

JOSÉS [do hebr., forma abreviada de Josifias, que significa "Que Jah Acrescente (Aumente); Jah Acrescentou (Aumentou)"]. Irmão de Tiago, o Menor, e filho de Maria. (Mt 27:56; Mr 15:40, 47; veja TIAGO N.º 3.) Alguns manuscritos antigos rezam "José" em vez de "Josés".

JOSIAS [se for aparentada com uma raiz árabe: Que Jeová Cure; Jeová Curou].

1. Filho do Rei Amom, de Judá, com Jedida, filha de Adaías. (2Rs 22:1) Josias tinha pelo menos duas esposas, Hamutal e Zebida. (2Rs 23:31, 34, 36) Dos quatro filhos mencionados na Bíblia, apenas o primogênito, Joanã, não reinou sobre Judá. — 1Cr 3:14, 15.

Após o assassinato do seu pai e da execução dos conspiradores, Josias tornou-se rei de Judá aos oito anos de idade. (2Rs 21:23, 24, 26; 2Cr 33:25) Uns seis anos mais tarde, Zebida deu à luz o segundo filho de Josias, Jeoiaquim. (2Rs 22:1; 23:36) No oitavo ano do seu reinado, Josias procurou aprender e fazer a vontade de Jeová. (2Cr 34:3) Foi também por volta deste tempo que nasceu Jeoacaz (Salum), filho de Josias com Hamutal. — 2Rs 22:1; 23:31; Je 22:11.

No seu 12.º ano como rei, Josias começou uma campanha contra a idolatria, campanha que evidentemente se estendeu até o 18.º ano do seu reinado. Altares usados para a adoração falsa foram derrubados e dessacrados por se queimarem ossos humanos sobre eles. Também se destruíram postes sagrados, imagens entalhadas e estátuas fundidas. Josias estendeu seus esforços até mesmo à parte setentrional do que antes havia sido território do reino de dez tribos, mas fora desolado pela conquista assíria e pelo subsequente exílio. (2Cr 34:3-8) Evidentemente, as denúncias da idolatria, feitas por Sofonias e por Jeremias, surtiram um bom efeito. — Je 1:1, 2; 3:6-10; Sof 1:1-6.

Depois de o Rei Josias ter completado a purificação da terra de Judá, e enquanto mandava consertar o templo de Jeová, o sumo sacerdote Hilquias achou "o livro da lei de Jeová pela mão de Moisés", sem dúvida, o original. Safã, o secretário, encarregado por Hilquias deste achado sensacional, relatou o progresso do conserto do templo e depois leu o livro para Josias. Este rei fiel, ao ouvir a palavra de Deus, rasgou as suas vestes e então comissionou uma delegação de cinco homens para consultar a Jeová em seu nome e em nome do povo. A delegação dirigiu-se à profetisa Hulda, que então morava em Jerusalém, e trouxe de volta um relatório do seguinte teor: 'Haverá calamidade em consequência da desobediência à Lei de Jeová. Mas, porque tu, Rei Josias, te humilhaste, serás ajuntado ao teu cemitério em paz e não verás a calamidade.' — 2Rs 22:3-20; 2Cr 34:8-28; veja HULDA.

Subsequentemente, Josias reuniu todo o povo de Judá e de Jerusalém, inclusive os anciãos, os sacerdotes e os profetas, e leu para eles a Lei de Deus. Depois disso, concluíram um pacto de fidelidade perante Jeová. Seguiu-se então uma segunda e evidentemente mais intensa campanha contra a idolatria. Os sacerdotes de deuses estrangeiros, de Judá e Jerusalém, tiveram sua atuação cortada, e os sacerdotes levitas que se haviam envolvido na adoração imprópria nos altos foram destituídos do privilégio de servir junto ao altar de Jeová. Os altos construídos séculos antes durante o reinado de Salomão foram tornados totalmente impróprios para adoração. Em cumprimento duma profecia feita uns 300 anos antes, por um homem de Deus cujo nome não é dado, Josias derrubou o altar construído pelo Rei Jeroboão, de Israel, em Betel. Removeram-se os altos não somente em Betel, mas também nas outras cidades de Samaria, e os sacerdotes idólatras foram sacrificados sobre os altares em que haviam oficiado. — 1Rs 13:1, 2; 2Rs 23:1-20; 2Cr 34:29-33.

No 18.º ano do seu reinado, Josias providenciou a celebração da Páscoa em 14 de nisã. Esta ultrapassou todas as Páscoas já celebradas, desde os dias do profeta Samuel. O próprio Josias contribuiu 30.000 vítimas pascoais e 3.000 cabeças de gado. — 2Rs 23:21-23; 2Cr 35:1-19.

Cerca de quatro anos mais tarde, Josias tornou-se pai de Matanias (Zedequias) com sua esposa Hamutal. — 2Rs 22:1; 23:31, 34, 36; 24:8, 17, 18.

Perto do fim do reinado de 31 anos de Josias (659-629 AEC), o Faraó Neco levou seu exército para o norte, em ajuda dos assírios. Por motivos não revelados na Bíblia, o Rei Josias desconsiderou "as palavras de Neco provenientes da boca de Deus" e procurou rechaçar as forças egípcias em Megido, mas foi mortalmente ferido nesta tentativa. Ele foi levado de volta a Jerusalém num carro de guerra e faleceu em caminho, ou na chegada. A morte de Josias causou muito pesar aos seus súditos. "Todo o Judá e Jerusalém pranteavam por Josias. E Jeremias começou a entoar um canto fúnebre por Josias; e todos os cantores e todas as cantoras falam sobre Josias nas suas endechas até o dia de hoje." — 2Cr 35:20-25; 2Rs 23:29, 30; veja ASSÍRIA (A queda do império).

Embora três dos filhos e um dos netos de Josias reinassem sobre Judá, nenhum deles imitou seu belo exemplo de se voltar para Jeová de todo o coração, alma e força vital. (2Rs 23:24, 25, 31, 32, 36, 37; 24:8, 9, 18, 19) Isto indica também que, embora os esforços de Josias tivessem removido os apetrechos externos da idolatria, o povo, em geral, não se voltara para Jeová de pleno coração. Por conseguinte, a futura calamidade era certa. — Veja 2Rs 23:26, 27; Je 35:1, 13-17; 44:15-18.

2. "Filho de Sofonias", que morava em Jerusalém após o exílio, tratando-se provavelmente de Hem. — Za 6:10, 14.

JOSIBIAS [que significa "Jah Faz Morar"]. Simeonita, cujo descendente participou numa campanha de expansão de território. — 1Cr 4:24, 35, 38-41.

JOSIFIAS ["Que Jah Acrescente (Aumente); Jah Acrescentou (Aumentou)"]. Membro da casa paterna de Bani, cujo filho, Selomite, como cabeça da casa paterna, foi para Jerusalém junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 10.

JOSUÉ [forma abreviada de Jeosué, que significa "Jeová É Salvação"].

1. Filho de Num; efraimita que ministrava a Moisés e mais tarde foi designado seu sucessor. (Êx 33:11; De 34:9; Jos 1:1, 2) As Escrituras retratam Josué como líder intrépido e destemido, que confiava na certeza das promessas de Jeová, obedecia à direção divina e estava determinado a servir a Jeová em fidelidade. Seu nome original era Oseias, mas Moisés o chamava de Josué ou Jeosué. (Núm 13:8, 16) O registro bíblico, porém, não revela exatamente quando Oseias passou a ser conhecido como Josué.

Lidera a Luta Contra os Amalequitas. No ano 1513 AEC, quando os israelitas estavam acampados em Refidim, pouco depois da sua milagrosa libertação da potência militar egípcia no Mar Vermelho, os amalequitas lançaram um ataque não provocado contra eles. Josué foi então designado por Moisés para ser o comandante na luta contra os amalequitas. Sob a hábil liderança dele, os israelitas, com ajuda divina, derrotaram o adversário. Subsequentemente, Jeová decretou a derradeira aniquilação dos amalequitas, mandan-do que Moisés fizesse um registro escrito disso e o propusesse a Josué. — Êx 17:8-16.

Serve Como Ajudante de Moisés. Mais tarde, junto ao monte Sinai, Josué, como ajudante de Moisés, provavelmente era um dos 70 anciãos que tiveram o privilégio de observar a magnífica visão da glória de Jeová. Depois, Josué acompanhou Moisés parte do caminho monte Sinai acima, mas, pelo que parece, não entrou na nuvem, visto que se ordenou que apenas Moisés o fizesse. (Êx 24:9-18) Tanto ele como Moisés permaneceram no monte Sinai por 40 dias e 40 noites. Ao fim deste período, ao descer do monte Sinai junto com Moisés, Josué confundiu o som do canto de Israel relacionado com a sua idólatra adoração do bezerro com "um barulho de batalha". Sem dúvida, compartilhou com Moisés a indignação quando chegou a ver o bezerro de ouro, e talvez até mesmo ajudasse na sua destruição. — Êx 32:15-20.

Os israelitas, por se empenharem na adoração do bezerro, violaram o pacto solene que haviam feito com Jeová Deus. Isto talvez fosse o que induziu Moisés a mudar sua tenda (a "tenda de reunião") da área em que o povo estava acampado, visto que Jeová ainda não lhes perdoara o seu pecado, e, portanto, não estava mais no meio deles. Talvez para impedir que os israelitas entrassem na tenda de reunião numa condição impura, Josué ficava ali sempre que Moisés retornava ao acampamento israelita. — Êx 33:7-11; 34:9.

Numa ocasião posterior, quando Moisés, por causa dos resmungos do povo, achava que sua carga era pesada demais, Jeová mandou que ele escolhesse 70 anciãos para ajudá-lo. Estes anciãos deviam então ir à tenda de reunião. Mas dois deles, Eldade e Medade, sem dúvida por motivos válidos, permaneceram no acampamento. Quando o espírito de Deus passou a operar nos 68 reunidos na tenda de reunião, Eldade e Medade também começaram a proceder como profetas no acampamento. A notícia disso foi logo levada a Moisés. Então, Josué, sentindo ciúmes pelo seu senhor, instou que Moisés os reprimisse. Visto que Eldade e Medade, aparentemente, receberam o espírito separado da mediação de Moisés, Josué talvez achasse que isto detraía da autoridade do seu senhor. Mas, Moisés corrigiu Josué, dizendo: "Quisera eu que todo o povo de Jeová fosse profeta, porque Jeová poria seu espírito sobre eles!" — Núm 11:10-29; compare isso com Mr 9:38, 39.

Espia a Terra da Promessa. Foi algum tempo depois disso que os israelitas acamparam no ermo de Parã. Moisés enviou dali 12 homens para espiar a Terra da Promessa, sendo um deles Josué (Oseias, ou Jeosué). Quarenta dias depois, somente Josué e Calebe apresentaram um relatório favorável. Os outros dez espias desanimaram o povo, afirmando que Israel nunca poderia esperar derrotar os poderosos habitantes de Canaã. Em consequência disso, irromperam resmungos rebeldes no acampamento. Josué e Calebe rasgaram então suas vestes, e, ao tentarem mitigar os temores do povo, acautelaram-no contra a rebelião. Mas as suas palavras corajosas, que refletiam plena confiança na capacidade de Jeová, de cumprir Sua palavra, de nada adiantaram. De fato, "toda a assembleia falava em atirar pedras neles". — Núm 13:2, 3, 8, 16, 25–14:10.

Por causa da rebelião dos israelitas, Jeová sentenciou-os a perambular no ermo por 40 anos, até que todos os varões registrados (não incluindo os levitas, que não estavam registrados entre os outros israelitas para serviço militar; Núm 1:2, 3, 47), de 20 anos para cima, tivessem morrido. Dentre os varões registrados, apenas Josué e Calebe entrariam na Terra da Promessa, ao passo que os dez espias infiéis haviam de morrer do flagelo da parte de Jeová. — Núm 14:27-38; compare isso com Núm 26:65; 32:11, 12.

Designado Sucessor de Moisés. Perto do fim da peregrinação de Israel no ermo, Moisés e Arão, por deixarem de santificar a Jeová quanto à milagrosa provisão de água em Cades, também perderam o privilégio de entrar na Terra da Promessa. (Núm 20:1-13) Por isso, Jeová mandou que Moisés comissionasse Josué como seu sucessor. Na própria presença do filho de Arão, Eleazar, o novo sumo sacerdote, e diante da assembleia de Israel, Moisés impôs as mãos em Josué. Embora designado sucessor de Moisés, Josué não seria igual a ele em conhecer a Jeová "face a face". Não se transferiu toda a dignidade de Moisés para Josué, mas apenas a necessária para que fosse respeitado pela nação. Em vez de ter a comunicação mais direta que Moisés usufruíra com Jeová, como que de "face a face", Josué devia consultar o sumo sacerdote, a quem se confiaram o Urim e o Tumim, por meio dos quais se podia saber a vontade divina. — Núm 27:18-23; De 1:37, 38; 31:3; 34:9, 10.

Conforme divinamente orientado, Moisés deu a Josué certas instruções e encorajamento, para que pudesse plenamente desincumbir-se da sua comissão. (De 3:21, 22, 28; 31:7, 8) Por fim, quando se aproximava da sua morte, Moisés devia postar-se com Josué na tenda de reunião. Jeová comissionou então Josué, confirmando a designação anteriormente feita pela imposição das mãos de Moisés. (De 31:14, 15, 23) Subsequentemente, Josué participou de algum modo em escrever e em ensinar aos israelitas o cântico dado a Moisés por inspiração. — De 31:19; 32:44.

Atividades Como Sucessor de Moisés. Após a morte de Moisés, Josué preparou a entrada na Terra da Promessa. Despachou oficiais para instruírem os israelitas a aprontar-se para a travessia do Jordão daí a três dias; lembrou aos gaditas, aos rubenitas e à meia tribo de Manassés a sua obrigação de ajudar na conquista da terra; e enviou dois homens para espionar Jericó e a região circunvizinha. — Jos 1:1–2:1.

Depois do retorno dos dois espias, os israelitas partiram de Sitim e acamparam perto do Jordão. No dia seguinte, Jeová represou milagrosamente o Jordão, permitindo que a nação o atravessasse em solo seco. Para comemorar este evento, Josué erigiu 12 pedras no meio do leito do rio, e 12 pedras em Gilgal, o primeiro acampamento de Israel ao O do Jordão. Fez também facas de pederneira para a circuncisão de todos os varões israelitas nascidos no ermo. Assim, uns quatro dias depois, estavam em condições de celebrar a Páscoa. — Jos 2:23–5:11.

Depois, perto de Jericó, Josué encontrou-se com um príncipe angélico, do qual recebeu instruções sobre como tomar aquela cidade. Josué tratou do assunto concordemente, e, depois de devotar Jericó à destruição, proferiu uma maldição profética sobre quem a reconstruísse no futuro, a qual se cumpriu mais de 500 anos depois. (Jos 5:13–6:26; 1Rs 16:34) A seguir, avançou contra Ai. No começo, a força israelita de uns 3.000 homens sofreu derrota, por Jeová ter retirado sua ajuda, visto que Acã desobedientemente tomara despojos de Jericó para uso pessoal. Depois de Israel ter apedrejado Acã e sua família por este pecado, Josué usou uma emboscada contra Ai e reduziu a cidade a um montão desolado. — Jos 7:1–8:29.

Foi então que toda a congregação de Israel, inclusive mulheres, crianças e residentes forasteiros, foram para a vizinhança do monte Ebal. Ali, no monte Ebal, Josué construiu um altar, segundo as especificações delineadas na Lei. Ao passo que metade da congregação ficava em pé defronte do monte Gerizim, e a outra metade defronte do monte Ebal, Josué leu para ela a "lei, a bênção e a invocação do mal". "Não se mostrou haver palavra alguma de tudo o que Moisés ordenara que Josué não lesse em voz alta." — Jos 8:30-35.

Depois de retornarem ao acampamento em Gilgal, Josué e os maiorais de Israel tiveram uma visita de mensageiros gibeonitas. Reconhecendo que Jeová lutava pelos israelitas, os gibeonitas, por meio dum truque, conseguiram concluir um pacto de paz com Josué. Contudo, quando os fatos reais se tornaram conhecidos, Josué fez deles escravos. A notícia do que os gibeonitas tinham feito chegou também a Adoni-Zedeque, rei de Jerusalém. Por este motivo, ele e mais quatro reis cananeus empreenderam uma expedição punitiva contra eles. Atendendo um apelo por ajuda dos gibeonitas, Josué empreendeu uma marcha noturna desde Gilgal. Jeová lutou então a favor de Israel em defesa dos gibeonitas, indicando que ele não desaprovara o pacto anteriormente feito com eles. Mais das forças inimigas pereceram em resultado duma milagrosa saraivada do que na própria guerra. Jeová até mesmo escutou a voz de Josué, prolongando as horas da luz do dia para a batalha. — Jos 9:3–10:14.

Josué deu seguimento a esta vitória dada por Deus por capturar Maquedá, Libna, Laquis, Eglom, Hébron e Debir, quebrantando assim o poder dos cananeus na parte meridional do país. A seguir, os reis cananeus setentrionais, sob a liderança de Jabim, rei de Hazor, reuniram suas forças junto às águas de Merom para lutar contra Israel. Embora confrontado com cavalos e carros, Josué foi divinamente encorajado a não ter medo. Novamente, Jeová concedeu aos israelitas a vitória. Josué, segundo instruído, jarretou os cavalos e queimou os carros do inimigo. A própria Hazor foi incendiada. (Jos 10:16–11:23) Assim, num período de cerca de seis anos (veja Núm 10:11; 13:2, 6; 14:34-38; Jos 14:6-10), Josué derrotou 31 reis e subjugou grandes partes da Terra Prometida. — Jos 12:7-24; MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 737.

Chegou então o tempo para a distribuição das terras às respectivas tribos. Inicialmente, fez-se isso em Gilgal, sob a supervisão de Josué, do sumo sacerdote Eleazar e mais dez representantes divinamente designados. (Jos 13:7; 14:1, 2, 6; Núm 34:17-29) Depois de se fixar o tabernáculo em Silo, a repartição da terra por sortes prosseguiu ali. (Jos 18:1, 8-10) O próprio Josué recebeu a cidade de Timnate-Sera, na região montanhosa de Efraim. — Jos 19:49, 50.

Admoestação Final aos Israelitas, e Morte. Perto do fim da sua vida, Josué reuniu os anciãos, os cabeças, os juízes e os oficiais de Israel, admoestando-os a servir a Jeová em fidelidade e advertindo-os das consequências da desobediência. (Jos 23:1-16) Convocou também toda a congregação de Israel, recapitulando os tratos passados de Jeová com os antepassados deles e com a nação, e exortando-os então a servirem a Jeová. Josué disse: "Agora, se for mau aos vossos olhos servir a Jeová, escolhei hoje para vós a quem servireis, se aos deuses a quem serviram os vossos antepassados que estavam do outro lado do Rio ou aos deu-ses dos amorreus em cuja terra morais. Mas, quanto a mim e aos da minha casa, serviremos a Jeová." (Jos 24:1-15) A seguir, os israelitas renovaram seu pacto de obedecer a Jeová. — Jos 24:16-28.

Josué faleceu à idade de 110 anos e foi sepultado em Timnate-Sera. O bom efeito da sua inabalável lealdade a Jeová evidencia-se no fato de que "Israel continuou a servir a Jeová todos os dias de Josué e todos os dias dos anciãos que prolongaram seus dias depois de Josué". — Jos 24:29-31; Jz 2:7-9.

2. Dono dum campo em Bete-Semes, onde a Arca sagrada primeiro veio a parar e ficou exposta à vista, depois de ser devolvida pelos filisteus. — 1Sa 6:14, 18.

3. Principal de Jerusalém, no tempo do Rei Josias. Parece que os altos usados para adoração falsa ficavam perto da residência de Josué, mas Josias mandou demoli-los. — 2Rs 23:8.

4. Filho de Jeozadaque; primeiro sumo sacerdote a servir os israelitas repatriados após o seu retorno do exílio babilônico. (Ag 1:1, 12, 14; 2:2-4; Za 3:1-9; 6:11) Nos livros bíblicos de Esdras e Neemias, ele é chamado Jesua. — Veja JESUA N.º 4.

JOSUÉ, LIVRO DE. Este livro bíblico fornece um elo vital na história dos israelitas por mostrar como se cumpriram as promessas de Deus, feitas aos patriarcas Abraão, Isaque e Jacó. Provavelmente abrangendo um período de mais de 20 anos (1473-c. 1450 AEC), ele conta a conquista de Canaã, seguida pela distribuição de terras aos israelitas; e conclui com os discursos de Josué, exortando à fidelidade a Jeová.

Conter o livro nomes antigos de cidades (Jos 14:15; 15:15) e instruções pormenorizadas, e depois relatar como estas foram executadas, indica que se trata dum registro contemporâneo. (Veja exemplos em Jos 1:11-18; 2:14-22; 3:2–4:24; 6:22, 23.) Na realidade, o escritor identifica-se como vivendo no tempo de Raabe, de Jericó, e, portanto, como testemunha ocular. — 6:25.

Autenticidade. Na avaliação de alguns, porém, o livro de Josué não é história verídica. Este conceito baseia-se primariamente na suposição de que, visto os milagres mencionados no livro não serem da atual experiência humana, eles não podem ter acontecido. Questiona, portanto, a capacidade de Deus de realizar milagres, se não também a existência dele, bem como a integridade do escritor. Embelezar o escritor o seu relato com ficção, ao mesmo tempo apresentando-se como testemunha ocular, o tornaria culpado de fraude deliberada. Certamente, não é lógico concluir que um livro que honra a Deus como Cumpridor da sua palavra (Jos 21:43-45), que exorta à fidelidade a Ele (23:6-16; 24:14, 15, 19, 20, 23) e que abertamente admite os fracassos de Israel tenha sido produzido por uma testemunha falsa. — 7:1-5; 18:3.

Ninguém pode negar que a nação israelita veio à existência e ocupou a terra descrita no livro de Josué. Do mesmo modo, não há nenhuma base válida para se questionar a veracidade do relato deste livro a respeito da maneira em que os israelitas obtiveram a posse de Canaã. Nem os salmistas (Sal 44:1-3; 78:54, 55; 105:42-45; 135:10-12; 136:17-22), nem Neemias (Ne 9:22-25), nem o primeiro mártir cristão, Estêvão (At 7:45), nem o discípulo Tiago (Tg 2:25), nem o erudito apóstolo Paulo (At 13:19; He 4:8; 11:30, 31) duvidaram da sua autenticidade. E 1 Reis 16:34 registra o cumprimento da maldição profética de Josué proferida uns 500 anos antes por ocasião da destruição de Jericó. — Jos 6:26.

Escritor. Alguns peritos, embora reconheçam que o livro tenha sido escrito no tempo de Josué, ou perto dele, rejeitam o conceito judaico tradicional de que o próprio Josué o escreveu. A objeção principal deles é que alguns dos eventos registrados no livro de Josué aparecem também no livro de Juízes, o qual começa com as palavras: "E aconteceu depois da morte de Josué." (Jz 1:1) Não obstante, esta declaração inicial não necessariamente é indicador de tempo para todos os eventos encontrados no relato de Juízes. O livro não segue uma estrita ordem cronológica, porque menciona um evento que definitivamente ocorreu antes da morte de Josué. (Jz 2:6-9) Portanto, algumas coisas, tais como a captura de Hébron por Calebe (Jos 15:13, 14; Jz 1:9, 10), de Debir por Otniel (Jos 15:15-19; Jz 1:11-15), e de Lesem, ou Laís (Dã), pelos danitas (Jos 19:47, 48; Jz 18:27-29), podem igualmente ter ocorrido antes da morte de Josué. Até mesmo a ação dos danitas, de erigir uma imagem idólatra em Laís, razoavelmente poderia enquadrar-se no tempo de Josué. (Jz 18:30, 31) Na sua exortação concludente, Josué disse aos israelitas: "Removei os deuses a que vossos antepassados serviram do outro lado do Rio e no Egito, e servi a Jeová." (Jos 24:14) Se não tivesse havido idolatria, esta declaração teria pouco sentido.

Logicamente, pois, com exceção da parte concludente que relata a morte de Josué, o livro pode ser atribuído a ele. Assim como Moisés registrara os acontecimentos durante a sua vida, assim teria sido bem apropriado Josué fazer o mesmo. O próprio livro relata: "Então escreveu Josué estas palavras no livro da lei de Deus." — Jos 24:26.

Não Contraditório. Alguns acharam que o livro é contraditório por dar a entender que o país foi totalmente subjugado por Josué, quando ao mesmo tempo relata que grande parte dele ainda restava para ser tomada. (Veja Jos 11:16, 17, 23; 13:1.) Mas, estas aparentes discrepâncias são facilmente resolvidas quando se leva em conta que havia dois aspectos distintos na conquista. Primeiro, a guerra nacional, sob a liderança de Josué, quebrantou o poder dos cananeus. A seguir, exigiu ação individual e tribal para tomar plenamente posse do país. (17:14-18; 18:3) É provável que, enquanto Israel guerreava em outra parte, os cananeus se estabeleceram novamente em cidades tais como Debir e Hébron, de modo que estas tiveram de ser tomadas de novo por esforços individuais ou tribais. — Compare Jos 11:21-23 com Jos 14:6, 12; 15:13-17.

DESTAQUES DE JOSUÉ

Registro de como Jeová deu a terra de Canaã a Israel, em cumprimento do Seu juramento aos antepassados deles.

Eventos de aproximadamente os primeiros 20 anos após a morte de Moisés, ao fim da peregrinação de Israel no ermo.

Josué prepara Israel para entrar em Canaã, envia espias. (1:1–2:24)

- Jeová comissiona Josué para levar os israelitas para aquela terra.
- Josué ordena que Israel seja instruído a fim de se aprontar para cruzar o Jordão.
- Ele envia espias para investigar o país e a cidade de Jericó.
- Enquanto em Jericó, estes são escondidos por Raabe, a quem se promete que ela e todos os da sua casa que obedecerem às instruções dadas serão poupados na vindoura destruição de Jericó.

Israel cruza o Jordão a pé enxuto. (3:1–5:12)

- O povo santifica-se em preparação para a travessia do Jordão.
- Os sacerdotes que carregam a Arca são os primeiros a entrar no rio; o rio é milagrosamente represado a certa distância rio acima, e os israelitas o atravessam a pé enxuto.
- Para comemorar a travessia, pedras são tiradas do rio e erigidas em Gilgal; outras pedras são erigidas onde os sacerdotes haviam ficado em pé no leito do rio.
- Os varões israelitas nascidos no ermo são circuncidados; celebra-se uma Páscoa; cessa a provisão do maná, e Israel passa a comer dos produtos da terra.

A conquista de Jericó é seguida pela derrota em Ai. (5:13–8:35)

- O angélico príncipe do exército de Jeová aparece a Josué; Jeová diz a Josué como lutar contra Jericó.
- Durante seis dias sucessivos, os israelitas marcham diariamente uma vez em volta da cidade; no sétimo dia, marcham sete vezes em volta dela; após a volta final, dão um alto grito, as muralhas de Jericó caem e a cidade é devotada à destruição.
- Acã tira para si algo do que havia sido devotado à destruição.
- Por causa do pecado dele, Jeová retira sua ajuda e Israel sofre uma derrota em Ai; descobre-se o pecado de Acã, e ele e os da sua casa são apedrejados.
- O segundo ataque a Ai é bem-sucedido com a bênção de Jeová.
- Josué constrói um altar no monte Ebal e lê a Lei para o povo.

Os gibeonitas solicitam paz, ao passo que outros são destruídos. (9:1–12:24)

- Os habitantes de Gibeão, sabendo dos êxitos de Israel, com astúcia enganam Josué a fazer um pacto com eles.
- Cinco reis se unem para atacar os gibeonitas, mas Israel vem em ajuda de Gibeão; Jeová lança grandes pedras de saraiva e milagrosamente estende as horas da luz do dia, causando a derrota total dos atacantes.
- Os israelitas, sob Josué, capturam cidades no SO e no S.
- Obtêm a vitória sobre uma coalizão de reis no N.

A terra é repartida entre as tribos de Israel. (13:1–22:34)

- Rubem, Gade e a meia tribo de Manassés têm território ao L do Jordão.
- Calebe recebe Hébron; as tribos de Judá, Efraim e a outra meia tribo de Manassés recebem uma herança de terra por sortes.
- Ergue-se o tabernáculo em Silo, e lançam-se sortes ali sobre determinadas heranças de terra para as tribos remanescentes.
- Os levitas recebem cidades, das quais são cidades sacerdotais; reservam-se cidades de refúgio.
- Homens de Rubem, Gade e da meia tribo de Manassés constroem um altar junto ao Jordão; seu objetivo é entendido mal, até explicarem que deve servir de memorial de fidelidade a Jeová.

Josué exorta Israel a servir fielmente a Jeová. (23:1–24:33)

- Josué, em idade avançada, convoca uma assembleia dos líderes de Israel e exorta-os a permanecerem fiéis a Jeová.
- Numa assembleia em Siquém, ele recapitula os tratos de Deus e incentiva Israel a temer a Jeová e a servir somente a Ele; eles expressam sua determinação de fazer isso e confirmam suas obrigações pactuadas.
- Josué morre.

JOTÃO [Jeová É Perfeito; ou: Que Jeová Complete].

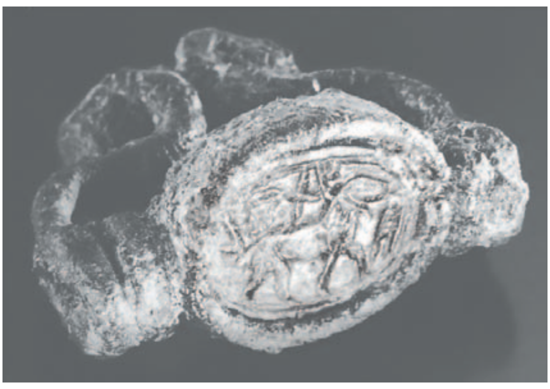
1. Descendente de Judá chamado de 'filho' de Jadai. — 1Cr 2:47.

2. Filho mais moço do juiz Gideão (Jerubaal), que morava em Ofra. (Jz 8:35; 9:5) Após a morte de Gideão, Abimeleque, filho dele com uma escrava, assassinou todos os outros filhos de Gideão, seus meios-irmãos, isto é, todos, menos Jotão, que se havia escondido. Depois, quando os proprietários de terras de Siquém fizeram de Abimeleque seu rei, Jotão postou-se no monte Gerizim, e, por meio duma ilustração, em que usava árvores, proferiu uma maldição profética sobre os proprietários de terras de Siquém e sobre Abimeleque. Após isso, Jotão fugiu e passou a morar em Beer. — Jz 9:6-21, 57.

3. Filho do Rei Uzias (Azarias), de Judá, com Jerusa (Jerusá), filha de Zadoque. (2Rs 15:32, 33; 1Cr 3:12; 2Cr 27:1; Mt 1:9) Depois de Uzias ser atacado de lepra, quando se irou com os sacerdotes por ser repreendido por eles pela invasão ilícita do templo e pela tentativa de oferecer incenso, Jotão começou a cuidar das tarefas reais em lugar de seu pai. Mas, aparentemente foi só depois da morte de Uzias que Jotão, aos 25 anos de idade, começou seu reinado de 16 anos (777-762 AEC). — 2Rs 15:5, 7, 32; 2Cr 26:18-21, 23; 27:8.

Isaías, Oseias e Miqueias serviram como profetas no tempo de Jotão. (Is 1:1; Os 1:1; Miq 1:1) Embora seus súditos se empenhassem em adoração imprópria nos altos, Jotão mesmo fazia o que era direito aos olhos de Jeová. — 2Rs 15:35; 2Cr 27:2, 6.

Durante o reinado de Jotão se fizeram muitas construções. Ele erigiu o portão superior do templo, fez muita construção na muralha de Ofel, construiu também cidades na região montanhosa de Judá, bem como fortes e torres nos bosques. — 2Cr 27:3-7.



Anel de sinete com o nome de Jotão.

Mas, Jotão não teve um reinado pacífico. Guerreou com os amonitas e finalmente triunfou sobre eles. Em resultado disso, durante três anos, eles pagaram um tributo anual de 100 talentos de prata (US$ 660.600) e de 10.000 coros (2.200 kl) tanto de trigo como de cevada. (2Cr 27:5) Durante o reinado de Jotão, a terra de Judá começou também a sofrer pressão militar do rei sírio Rezim e do rei israelita Peca. — 2Rs 15:37.

Quando Jotão morreu, ele foi sepultado na Cidade de Davi, e seu filho, Acaz, que tinha cerca de quatro anos quando Jotão se tornou rei, ascendeu ao trono de Judá. — 2Cr 27:7–28:1.

Visto que Jotão governou apenas por 16 anos, a referência de 2 Reis 15:30 ao "vigésimo ano de Jotão", evidentemente deve ser entendida como significando o 20.º ano depois de se tornar rei, isto é, o quarto ano de Acaz. O escritor do relato de Reis, neste ponto, talvez preferisse não apresentar o sucessor de Jotão, Acaz, por ainda ter de mencionar pormenores sobre o reinado de Jotão.

JOTBÁ [duma raiz que significa "vai bem; mostra-te satisfatório; faze bem"]. Domicílio de Haruz, avô materno do Rei Amom, de Judá. (2Rs 21:19) Jotbá é frequentemente identificada com a atual Khirbet Jefat (Horvat Yodefat), a uns 15 km ao N de Nazaré.

JOTBATA [duma raiz que significa "vai bem; mostra-te satisfatório; faze bem"]. Um bem regado acampamento dos israelitas no ermo. (Núm 33:33, 34; De 10:7) Não se pode determinar a sua localização exata. Todavia, ʽAin Tabah (ʽEn Yotvata), situada numa depressão pantanosa a uns 40 km ao N de Eziom-Géber, tem sido sugerida como possível identificação.

JOZABADE [forma abreviada de Jeozabade, provavelmente significando "Jeová Dotou"].

1. Guerreiro que se juntou a Davi em Ziclague; gederatita. — 1Cr 12:1-4.

2, 3. Duas pessoas com este nome estavam entre os cabeças de Manassés, que se bandearam para Davi quando ele estava em Ziclague e se tornaram chefes no exército dele. — 1Cr 12:20, 21.

4. Encarregado designado pelo Rei Ezequias para ajudar em cuidar dos dízimos, das contribuições e das coisas sagradas trazidas pelo povo; sem dúvida, era levita. — 2Cr 31:12, 13.

5. Chefe levita que contribuiu muitas ovelhas e gado para a grande celebração da Páscoa do Rei Josias. — 2Cr 35:1, 9, 18.

6. Um dos levitas pós-exílicos em cuja mão Esdras e seu grupo pesaram todos os itens preciosos que haviam trazido de Babilônia a Jerusalém em 468 AEC. (Esd 8:33, 34) Veja os N.º 8, 9 e 10.

7. Filho ou descendente de Pasur, e um dos sacerdotes que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos. — Esd 10:22, 44.

8. Um dos levitas incentivados por Esdras com bom êxito para despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 10:10, 11, 23, 44) Possivelmente o mesmo que os N.º 6, 9 e 10.

9. Um dos levitas associados com Esdras e Neemias, que leram e explicaram a Lei ao povo. (Ne 8:7-9) Possivelmente o mesmo que os N.º 6, 8 e 10.

10. Levita que estava "sobre os negócios externos" do templo reconstruído. (Ne 11:15, 16) Possivelmente o mesmo que os N.º 6, 8 e 9.

JOZACAR [Jeová Lembrou-se]. Servo do Rei Jeoás, de Judá. Ele e seu companheiro Jeozabade mataram seu governante em represália pela morte de Zacarias e talvez de outros filhos do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada. Todavia, Amazias, filho e sucessor de Jeoás, por sua vez, vingou a morte de seu pai por abater Jozacar e seu cúmplice. Jozacar era filho de Simeate, uma amonita. Ele é também chamado Zabade. — 2Rs 12:20, 21; 2Cr 24:20-22, 25-27; 25:1, 3.

JOZADAQUE. Veja JEOZADAQUE, JOZADAQUE.

JUBAL [possivelmente: Carneiro]. Filho de Lameque e Ada; descendente de Caim. Como "fundador de todos os que manejam a harpa e o pífaro", Jubal talvez inventasse tanto instrumentos de cordas como de sopro, ou talvez 'fundasse' uma profissão que deu considerável ímpeto aos avanços da música. — Gên 4:17-21.

JUBILEU. O ano que seguia todo ciclo de sete períodos de 7 anos, a contar da entrada de Israel na Terra da Promessa. A palavra hebraica yoh·vél (ou: yo·vél) significa "chifre de carneiro", e isto se refere ao toque dum chifre (ou buzina) de carneiro durante aquele 50.º ano, para proclamar liberdade em todo o país. — Le 25:9, 10 n; veja CHIFRE (BUZINA).

A partir da entrada na Terra da Promessa, a nação de Israel devia contar seis anos, durante os quais a terra era semeada, cultivada e ceifada; mas o sétimo ano devia ser um ano sabático, durante o qual a terra tinha de ficar de pousio. No sétimo ano, não se podia fazer nenhuma sementeira nem poda. Nem mesmo o que germinasse dos grãos derramados durante a colheita do ano anterior podia ser ceifado, e não se deviam colher as uvas das videiras não podadas. Cereais e frutas que crescessem por si mesmos estavam à disposição do dono, dos seus escravos, dos trabalhadores contratados, dos residentes forasteiros e dos pobres. Também se permitia que animais domésticos e selváticos comessem deles. (Le 25:2-7; Êx 23:10, 11) Deviam-se contar sete destes períodos de sete anos ($7 \times 7 = 49$), e o ano seguinte, o 50.º, devia ser um ano de jubileu.

O jubileu compartilhava certos aspectos com o ano sabático. A terra tinha novamente um repouso completo. Os mesmos regulamentos se aplicavam aos produtos da terra. (Le 25:8-12) Isto significava que os produtos do 48.º ano de cada ciclo de 50 anos seriam a fonte primária de alimentos para aquele ano e para um pouco mais do que os dois anos seguintes, até a colheita do 51.º ano, o ano após o jubileu. A bênção especial de Jeová sobre o sexto ano resultava numa colheita suficiente para prover alimentos durante o ano sabático. (Le 25:20-22) De modo similar, quando os judeus guardavam a Sua Lei, Deus fornecia uma colheita abundante e suficiente no 48.º ano, para suprir a nação durante o ano sabático, o jubileu que o seguia e o próximo ano, até a colheita.

O jubileu, em certo sentido, era um ano inteiro de festividades, um ano de liberdade. Guardá-lo demonstraria a fé que Israel tinha no seu Deus, Jeová, e seria um tempo de agradecimento e de felicidade com as Suas provisões.

Era no décimo dia do sétimo mês (no mês de tisri), no Dia da Expiação, que se tocava a buzina (shoh·fár, ou sho·fár, um chifre curvo de animal), proclamando liberdade em todo o país. Isto significava liberdade para os escravos hebreus, muitos dos quais se haviam vendido por causa de dívidas. Esse livramento normalmente só ocorreria no sétimo ano de servidão (Êx 21:2), mas o jubileu dava liberdade até mesmo àqueles que ainda não haviam servido por seis anos. Todas as propriedades hereditárias de terras que haviam sido vendidas (usualmente por motivo de reveses financeiros) eram devolvidas, e todo homem retornava à sua família e à sua propriedade ancestral. Nenhuma família devia cair na profundeza duma pobreza perpétua. Toda família devia usufruir honra e respeito. Nem mesmo aquele que tivesse desperdiçado seus bens podia perder para sempre a herança para a sua posteridade. Afinal, a terra pertencia realmente a Jeová, e os próprios israelitas, do ponto de vista de Jeová, eram residentes forasteiros e colonos. (Le 25:23, 24) Se a nação guardasse as leis de Deus, então, como ele disse: "Ninguém deve ficar pobre no teu meio." — Le 25:8-10, 13; De 15:4, 5.

Por motivo da lei do jubileu, nenhuma terra podia ser vendida perpetuamente. Deus providenciou que, se um homem vendesse alguma terra da sua propriedade hereditária, o preço da venda devia ser calculado segundo o número de anos que restavam até o jubileu. O mesmo cálculo valia quando a terra hereditária era comprada de volta pelo seu dono. Na realidade, a venda de terras, portanto, era apenas a venda do uso da terra e dos seus produtos pelo número de anos que faltavam até o ano do jubileu. (Le 25:15, 16, 23-28) Isto se aplicava a casas em povoações não muradas, que eram consideradas como campo aberto; mas as casas em cidades muradas não estavam incluídas na propriedade devolvida no jubileu. Uma exceção a isso eram as casas dos levitas, cuja única posse eram as casas e os pastios em torno das cidades levitas. A estes se devolviam as casas no jubileu; os pastios das cidades levitas não podiam ser vendidos. — Le 25:29-34.

A maravilhosa provisão do ano de jubileu pode ser avaliada melhor quando se consideram não apenas os resultados benéficos para os israelitas individuais, mas especialmente o efeito sobre a nação como um todo. Quando o arranjo do jubileu era corretamente observado, a nação voltava no ano de jubileu à plena e correta condição teocrática que Deus intencionou e estabeleceu no começo. O governo tinha base sólida. A economia nacional sempre era estável, e a nação não tinha dívidas esmagadoras. (De 15:6) O jubileu resultava em estáveis padrões de valores rurais, e impedia também uma grande dívida interna e sua resultante falsa prosperidade, que traz inflação, deflação e depressão econômica.

A lei do jubileu, quando obedecida, preservava a nação do desvio para o estado lastimável que hoje observamos em muitas terras, em que há virtualmente apenas duas classes, os extremamente ricos e os extremamente pobres. Os benefícios derivados pelo indivíduo fortaleciam a nação, porque ninguém ficaria desprivilegiado e esmagado em improdutividade por uma situação econômica péssima, mas todos poderiam contribuir com seus talentos e suas habilidades para o bem-estar nacional. Israel, com a provisão das bênçãos de Jeová sobre os produtos da terra e com a instrução provida, quando obediente, usufruía o governo perfeito e a prosperidade que somente a verdadeira teocracia podia dar. — Is 33:22.

Nos anos sabáticos, lia-se a Lei para o povo, especialmente durante a Festividade das Barracas, ou do Recolhimento. (De 31:10-12) Portanto, eles deveriam ter sido mais achegados a Jeová e deveriam ter mantido sua liberdade. Jeová advertiu os israelitas que eles sofreriam tragédia se fossem desobedientes e repetidas vezes desconsiderassem as leis dele (que incluíam as relativas aos anos sabáticos e de jubileu). — Le 26:27-45.

Contando-se os anos a partir da entrada dos israelitas na Terra da Promessa, seu primeiro ano de jubileu começou em tisri de 1424 AEC. (Le 25:2-4, 8-10) Entre o tempo da entrada na Terra da Promessa, em 1473 AEC, e a queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, os israelitas tinham a obrigação de celebrar 17 jubileus. Mas o comentário lastimável da sua história é que não davam valor a Jeová como seu Rei. Por fim, violaram seus mandamentos, inclusive as leis sabáticas, e sofreram a perda das bênçãos que ele lhes providenciara. As faltas deles lançaram vitupério sobre Deus perante as nações do mundo e impediu que alcançassem a excelência do Seu governo teocrático. — 2Cr 36:20, 21.

Sentido Simbólico. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs há alusões ao arranjo do jubileu. Jesus Cristo disse que ele veio para "pregar livramento aos cativos". (Lu 4:16-18) Mais tarde, ele disse com respeito à libertação da servidão ao pecado: "Se o Filho vos libertar, sereis realmente livres." (Jo 8:36) Visto que os cristãos gerados pelo espírito são declarados justos para a vida e gerados como filhos de Deus a partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC, o apóstolo Paulo podia escrever depois: "A lei desse espírito que dá vida em união com Cristo Jesus libertou-te da lei do pecado e da morte." (Ro 8:2) Durante o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, também outros, conforme indicado em Romanos 8:19-21, 'serão libertos da escravização à corrupção', e, depois de provarem sob prova a sua lealdade a Jeová, 'terão a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus'. Serão libertos do pecado inato e da morte a que este conduz. A custódia da própria terra será devolvida aos verdadeiros adoradores, para ser cuidada em harmonia com o propósito original de Jeová para com a humanidade. — Re 21:4; Gên 1:28; Is 65:21-25.

JUCAL [forma abreviada de Jeucal, que significa "Jeová É Capaz; Jeová Prevalece"]. "Filho de Selemias"; um dos príncipes de Judá que pediram que o profeta Jeremias fosse executado por enfraquecer as mãos dos guerreiros. — Je 38:1-4.

JUDÁ [Elogiado (Louvado); [Objeto de] Elogio (Louvor)].

1. Quarto filho de Jacó com sua esposa Leia. (Gên 29:35; 1Cr 2:1) Depois de passar uns nove anos da sua vida em Harã, em Padã-Arã, Judá foi levado para Canaã, junto com toda a família de Jacó. (Veja Gên 29:4, 5, 32-35; 30:9-12, 16-28;

31:17, 18, 41.) Subsequentemente, ele morou com seu pai em Sucote e então em Siquém. Depois de sua irmã Diná ter sido violentada pelo filho de Hamor, e Simeão e Levi a terem vingado matando todos os varões de Siquém, Judá, pelo visto, participou no saque da cidade. — Gên 33:17, 18; 34:1, 2, 25-29.

Relacionamento com José. No decorrer do tempo, José, por ser favorecido por Jacó, passou a ser odiado por Judá e os outros meios-irmãos. O ódio deles intensificou-se depois de José contar dois sonhos, que indicavam que se tornaria superior a eles. Portanto, quando Jacó enviou José para ver como estavam passando seus meios-irmãos, que cuidavam dos rebanhos, estes, ao vê-lo à distância, tramaram matá-lo. Mas, à sugestão de Rubem, que pensava em salvar a vida de José, lançaram-no numa cisterna seca. — Gên 37:2-24.

Depois, quando surgiu uma caravana de ismaelitas, Judá, evidentemente na ausência de Rubem, convenceu os outros de que, em vez de matarem José, seria melhor vendê-lo aos mercadores que passavam. (Gên 37:25-27) Apesar dos rogos por compaixão, de José, eles o venderam por 20 peças de prata (se foram siclos, US$44). (Gên 37:28; 42:21) Embora haja indícios de que a principal preocupação de Judá era salvar a vida de José e que a própria venda depois mostrou ser uma bênção para todos os envolvidos, Judá, igual aos outros, era culpado dum grave pecado, que por muito tempo lhe pesava na consciência. (Gên 42:21, 22; 44:16; 45:4, 5; 50:15-21) (Sob a Lei mosaica, mais tarde dada aos israelitas, este delito acarretava a pena de morte; Êx 21:16.) Depois, Judá participou também em enganar Jacó para fazê-lo pensar que José fora morto por uma fera. (Gên 37:31-33) Judá tinha então cerca de 20 anos.

A Família de Judá. Parece que, depois deste incidente, Judá deixou os seus irmãos. Passou a morar em tendas perto de Hira, o adulamita, e parece que se desenvolveu uma amizade entre eles. Durante este tempo, Judá casou-se com a filha do cananeu Sua. Com ela teve três filhos, Er, Onã e Selá. O mais moço, Selá, nasceu em Aczibe. — Gên 38:1-5.

Mais tarde, Judá escolheu Tamar como esposa para Er, seu primogênito. Mas, por causa da maldade dele, Er foi executado por Jeová. Judá mandou então que seu segundo filho, Onã, realizasse o casamento de cunhado. Mas Onã, embora tivesse relações sexuais com Tamar, "desperdiçou o seu sêmen na terra, para não dar descendência a seu irmão". Por isso, Jeová também o matou. Judá recomendou então que Tamar voltasse à casa de seu pai e aguardasse até que Selá ficasse adulto. No entanto, mesmo depois de Selá ter crescido, Judá, aparentemente raciocinando que seu filho mais moço também poderia morrer, não o deu em casamento a Tamar. — Gên 38:6-11, 14.

Portanto, depois de Judá se tornar viúvo, quando Tamar soube que seu sogro iria a Timná, disfarçou-se de prostituta e sentou-se à entrada de Enaim, na estrada pela qual passaria Judá. Este, não reconhecendo sua nora e presumindo que ela fosse prostituta, teve relações sexuais com ela. Mais tarde, quando se soube que Tamar estava grávida, Judá exigiu que ela fosse queimada como meretriz. Mas, quando lhe foi apresentada a evidência de que ele mesmo a engravidara, Judá exclamou: "Ela é mais justa do que eu, visto que não a dei a Selá, meu filho." Assim, sem se aperceber disso, Judá tomara o lugar de Selá em gerar prole legítima. Uns seis meses mais tarde, Tamar deu à luz os gêmeos Peres e Zerá. Judá não mais teve relações sexuais com ela. — Gên 38:12-30.

Ao Egito em Busca de Alimentos. Posteriormente, chegaram à terra de Canaã, atingida pela fome, relatos de que havia alimentos disponíveis no Egito. Por conseguinte, à direção de Jacó, dez dos seus filhos, inclusive Judá, foram ali em busca de alimentos. Naquela época, seu meio-irmão José servia como administrador de alimentos no Egito. Ao passo que José os reconheceu imediatamente, eles não o reconheceram. José acusou-os de serem espiões e advertiu-os de que não voltassem sem Benjamim, a quem haviam mencionado ao negarem que fossem espiões. José mandou também que um de seus meios-irmãos, Simeão, fosse preso e detido como refém. — Gên 42:1-25.

É compreensível que Jacó, presumindo que já perdera José e Simeão, não estivesse disposto a deixar Benjamim acompanhar seus outros filhos ao Egito. A declaração emocional de Rubem, de que Jacó podia entregar à morte os próprios dois filhos dele se não retornasse com Benjamim, não teve suficiente peso, talvez porque não se mostrara fidedigno ao violentar a concubina de seu pai. (Gên 35:22) Por fim, Judá conseguiu o consentimento de seu pai por prometer ser garantia por Benjamim. — Gên 42:36-38; 43:8-14.

Em caminho para casa, depois de terem comprado cereais no Egito, os filhos de Jacó foram alcançados pelo mordomo de José e acusados de furto (na realidade, um ardil de José). Quando o objeto, supostamente furtado, foi encontrado na saca de Benjamim, os homens retornaram e entraram na casa de José. Foi Judá quem respondeu à acusação, e eloquente e sinceramente pleiteou em favor de Benjamim e de seu pai, solicitando que ele fosse feito escravo em lugar de Benjamim.

José ficou tão comovido pelos sinceros rogos de Judá, que não mais conseguiu controlar suas emoções. Depois, a sós com seus irmãos, José identificou-se. Após perdoar-lhes terem-no vendido como escravo, José mandou que seus meios-irmãos fossem buscar Jacó e então voltassem ao Egito, visto que a fome iria continuar por mais cinco anos. — Gên 44:1–45:13.

Mais tarde, quando Jacó e toda a sua família se aproximavam do Egito, Jacó "enviou Judá na sua frente a José, para mandar informação na sua frente a Gósen". — Gên 46:28.

Superior Entre os Seus Irmãos. Por sua preocupação pelo pai idoso bem como por seu esforço nobre de preservar a liberdade de Benjamim às custas da sua própria, Judá mostrou-se superior entre os seus irmãos. (1Cr 5:2) Não era mais aquele Judá que na juventude participara no saque dos siquemitas e que tivera parte em fazer mal ao seu meio-irmão José, enganando depois seu próprio pai. Suas excelentes qualidades de liderança habilitaram Judá, como um dos cabeças das 12 tribos de Israel, a receber do seu moribundo pai uma bênção profética superior. (Gên 49:8-12) O cumprimento dela é considerado mais adiante.

2. Tribo que descendeu de Judá. Cerca de 216 anos depois de Judá ir ao Egito, junto com a família de Jacó, os varões vigorosos da tribo, de 20 anos de idade para cima, haviam aumentado para 74.600, número maior do que o de qualquer outra das 12 tribos. (Núm 1:26, 27) Ao fim dos 40 anos de peregrinação pelo ermo, os varões registrados de Judá haviam aumentado em 1.900. — Núm 26:22.

Foi sob a direção de Bezalel, de Judá, e de seu ajudante danita, Ooliabe, que se construiu o tabernáculo, sua mobília e seus utensílios. (Êx 35:30-35) Depois de o santuário ter sido erguido, Judá, junto com as tribos de Issacar e Zebulão, acampava ao L dele. — Núm 2:3-8.

Evidência Inicial de Liderança. A bênção profética de Jacó havia atribuído o papel de liderança a Judá (Gên 49:8; compare isso com 1Cr 5:2), e o cumprimento dela é confirmado até mesmo pela primitiva história da tribo. Sob a liderança do seu maioral Nasom, Judá encabeçava a marcha através do ermo. (Núm 2:3-9; 10:12-14) Também, esta tribo produziu Calebe, um dos dois espias fiéis que tiveram o privilégio de entrar novamente na Terra da Promessa. Embora já avançado em anos, Calebe teve participação ativa na conquista da terra aquinhoada a Judá. A própria tribo foi designada por Deus para tomar a dianteira na luta contra os cananeus, e ela fez isso em associação com os simeonitas. (Núm 13:6, 30; 14:6-10, 38; Jos 14:6-14; 15:13-20; Jz 1:1-20; compare isso com De 33:7.) Mais tarde, Judá, de novo à base duma autorização divina, liderou a ação punitiva militar contra Benjamim. — Jz 20:18.

A Herança de Judá. O território que foi dado à tribo de Judá fazia fronteira com os territórios de Benjamim e de Dã ao N (Jos 15:5-11; 18:11), o Mar Salgado (Mar Morto) ao L (Jos 15:5) e o Grande Mar (Mediterrâneo) ao O (Jos 15:12). A fronteira meridional parece ter seguido em direção ao SO, desde o ponto mais meridional do Mar Morto até a subida de Acrabim; dali, passava para Zim, subia em direção N perto de Cades-Barneia, e finalmente ia até o Mediterrâneo passando por Esrom, Adar, Carca, Azmom e o vale da torrente do Egito. (Jos 15:1-4) A parte deste território principalmente em torno de Berseba foi designada aos simeonitas. (Jos 19:1-9) Os queneus, uma família não israelita aparentada com Moisés por casamento, também passou a residir no território de Judá. — Jz 1:16.

Diversas regiões naturais distintas encontravam-se dentro das fronteiras designadas do antigo Judá. O Negebe, que em grande parte é um planalto de 450 a 600 m acima do nível do mar, jaz ao S. Ao longo do Mediterrâneo estende-se a planície da Filístia, com suas dunas de areia que às vezes penetram até 6 km terra adentro. Nos tempos primitivos, esta planície ondulante era uma região de vinhedos, olivais e campos de cereais. (Jz 15:5) Logo ao L dela surge uma região colinosa, cortada por numerosos vales, que atinge ao S uma altitude de uns 450 m acima do nível do mar. Esta é a Sefelá (que significa "Terra Baixa"), região antigamente coberta de sicômoros. (1Rs 10:27) É uma terra baixa em comparação com a região montanhosa de Judá, mais ao L, e que tem elevações que variam de uns 600 a mais de 1.000 m acima do nível do mar. Os morros calvos que ocupam a descida oriental dos montes de Judá constituem o ermo de Judá.

Sob a liderança de Josué, o poder dos cananeus parece ter sido quebrantado no território dado a Judá. Todavia, visto que evidentemente não se estabeleceram guarnições ali, os habitantes originais parecem ter voltado a cidades tais como Hébron e Debir, provavelmente enquanto os israelitas guerreavam em outro lugar. Portanto, estes lugares tiveram de ser capturados de novo. (Veja Jos 12:7, 10, 13; Jz 1:10-15.) Mas os habitantes da baixada, com seus carros bem equipados, não foram desapossados. Sem dúvida, estes incluíam os filisteus de Gate e de Asdode. — Jos 13:2, 3; Jz 1:18, 19.

Dos Juízes a Saul. Durante o período turbulento dos juízes, Judá, igual às outras tribos, repetidas vezes caiu na idolatria. Por isso, Jeová permitiu que nações circunvizinhas, especialmente os amonitas e os filisteus, invadissem o território de Judá. (Jz 10:6-9) Nos dias de Sansão, os de Judá não somente tinham perdido todo o controle sobre as cidades filisteias de Gaza, Ecrom e Ascalom, mas os filisteus realmente haviam passado a dominá-los. (Jz 15:9-12) Parece que foi só no tempo de Samuel que o território de Judá foi recuperado dos filisteus. — 1Sa 7:10-14.

Depois de Saul, da tribo de Benjamim, ser ungido por Samuel como primeiro rei de Israel, os homens de Judá lutaram lealmente sob a sua liderança. (1Sa 11:5-11; 15:3, 4) As batalhas mais frequentes eram contra os filisteus (1Sa 14:52), os quais parecem ter novamente obtido a superioridade sobre os israelitas. (1Sa 13:19-22) Mas, aos poucos, o poder deles foi reduzido. Com a ajuda de Jeová, Saul e seu filho Jonatã obtiveram vitórias sobre eles na região entre Micmás e Aijalom. (1Sa 13:23–14:23, 31) Mais tarde, quando os filisteus invadiram Judá, eles novamente foram derrotados depois de o jovem pastor Davi, de Judá, matar seu campeão Golias. (1Sa 17:4, 48-53) Subsequentemente, o Rei Saul colocou Davi, que já havia sido ungido como futuro rei de Israel, sobre os guerreiros israelitas. Neste cargo, Davi apoiou lealmente a Saul e obteve outras vitórias sobre os filisteus. (1Sa 18:5-7) Naquele tempo, a tribo de Judá era como "um leãozinho", não tendo ainda obtido poder régio na pessoa de Davi. — Gên 49:9.

Quando Saul passou a encarar Davi como ameaça para o seu reinado e o proscreveu, Davi ainda permaneceu leal a Saul como o ungido de Jeová. Nunca tomou partido com os inimigos de Israel, não prejudicou pessoalmente a Saul, nem permitiu que outros o fizessem. (1Sa 20:30, 31; 24:4-22; 26:8-11; 27:8-11; 30:26-31) Em vez disso, Davi lutou contra os inimigos de Israel. Em certa ocasião, Davi salvou dos filisteus a cidade de Queila, de Judá. — 1Sa 23:2-5.

Cumprimento da Bênção de Jacó em Davi. Por fim, veio o tempo devido de Deus para transferir o poder régio da tribo de Benjamim para a tribo de Judá. Em Hébron, após a morte de Saul, os homens de Judá ungiram Davi como rei. Mas as outras tribos apegaram-se à casa de Saul e constituíram o filho dele, Is-Bosete, como rei sobre eles. Ocorreram repetidos choques entre estes dois reinos, até que o mais forte apoiador de Is-Bosete, Abner, se bandeou para Davi. Pouco depois, Is-Bosete foi assassinado. — 2Sa 2:1-4, 8, 9; 3:1–4:12.

Depois disso, quando Davi obteve o reinado sobre todo o Israel, os 'filhos de Jacó', isto é, todas as tribos de Israel, elogiaram Judá e se prostraram diante do seu representante qual governante. Por isso, Davi pôde também avançar contra Jerusalém, embora fosse basicamente território benjamita, e, depois de capturar a fortaleza de Sião, torná-la sua capital. De modo geral, Davi atuou de maneira louvável. Assim, por meio dele, a tribo de Judá foi elogiada por qualidades tais como o juízo e a justiça, e também pelos serviços que prestou à nação, inclusive a manutenção da segurança nacional, como Jacó predissera na bênção no seu leito de morte. A mão de Judá estava deveras sobre a cerviz dos seus inimigos, quando Davi subjugou os filisteus (que haviam duas vezes tentado derrubá-lo como rei em Sião), bem como os moabitas, os sírios, os edomitas, os amalequitas e os amonitas. Assim, sob Davi, as fronteiras foram por fim estendidas aos limites ordenados por Deus. — Gên 49:8-12; 2Sa 5:1-10, 17-25; 8:1-15; 12:29-31.

Por motivo do pacto eterno para um Reino, feito com Davi, a tribo de Judá possuía o cetro e o bastão de comandante durante 470 anos. (Gên 49:10; 2Sa 7:16) Mas, somente durante os reinados de Davi e de Salomão havia um reino unido, em que todas as tribos de Israel se prostravam diante de Judá. Por causa da apostasia de Salomão perto do fim do seu reinado, Jeová arrancou dez tribos do próximo rei de Judá, Roboão, e as deu a Jeroboão. (1Rs 11:31-35; 12:15-20) Somente os levitas e as tribos de Benjamim e de Judá permaneceram leais à casa de Davi. — 1Rs 12:21; 2Cr 13:9, 10.

3. Judá, como reino, incluindo a tribo de Benjamim. (2Cr 25:5) Após a morte de Salomão, as outras dez tribos formaram um reino independente sob Jeroboão, o efraimita.

Pouco depois, no quinto ano de Roboão, o Rei Sisaque, do Egito, invadiu o reino de Judá até Jerusalém e capturou as cidades fortificadas em caminho. — 1Rs 14:25, 26; 2Cr 12:2-9.

Por um período de uns 40 anos durante os reinados dos reis Roboão, Abijão (Abias) e Asa, de Judá, houve repetidos conflitos entre os reinos de Judá e de Israel. (1Rs 14:30; 15:7, 16) Mas Jeosafá, sucessor de Asa, formou uma aliança matrimonial com o iníquo Rei Acabe, de Israel. Embora isto significasse haver paz entre os dois reinos, o casamento de Jeorão, filho de Jeosafá, com Atalia, filha de Acabe, mostrou-se desastroso para Judá. Jeorão, sob a influência de Atalia, tornou-se culpado de crassa apostasia. Durante o seu reinado, os filisteus e os árabes invadiram Judá e levaram cativos, e mataram, todos os seus filhos, exceto Jeoacaz (Acazias), o mais moço. Quando Acazias se tornou rei, ele também seguiu as diretrizes da iníqua Atalia. Depois da morte violenta de Acazias, Atalia matou todos os descendentes da realeza. Mas, sem dúvida por providência divina, o menino Jeoás, legítimo herdeiro do trono de Davi, foi escondido e assim sobreviveu. No ínterim, a usurpadora Atalia governou como rainha até a sua execução às ordens do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada. — 2Cr 18:1; 21:1, 5, 6, 16, 17; 22:1-3, 9-12; 23:13-15.

Embora seu reino começasse bem, Jeoás afastou-se da verdadeira adoração depois da morte do sumo sacerdote Jeoiada. (2Cr 24:2, 17, 18) O filho de Jeoás, Amazias, também deixou de continuar no caminho justo. Durante o seu reinado, após anos de coexistência pacífica, o reino de dez tribos e o reino de Judá se confrontaram de novo em batalha, sofrendo este último uma derrota humilhante. (2Cr 25:1, 2, 14-24) Com a exceção de sua invasão do santuário, o próximo rei de Judá, Uzias (Azarias), fazia o que era direito aos olhos de Jeová. Seu sucessor, Jotão, mostrou ser rei fiel. Mas Acaz, filho de Jotão, tornou-se notório pela prática de idolatria em grande escala. — 2Cr 26:3, 4, 16-20; 27:1, 2; 28:1-4.

Durante o reinado de Acaz, Judá sofreu invasões dos edomitas e dos filisteus, bem como do reino setentrional e da Síria. A coligação siro-israelita até mesmo ameaçou destronar Acaz e constituir em rei de Judá um homem que não era da linhagem davídica. Embora o profeta Isaías lhe assegurasse que isto não aconteceria, Acaz, sem fé, subornou o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III para vir em seu auxílio. Esta medida imprudente impôs a Judá o jugo pesado da Assíria. — 2Cr 28:5-21; Is 7:1-12.

Ezequias, filho de Acaz, restabeleceu a verdadeira adoração e rebelou-se contra o rei da Assíria. (2Rs 18:1-7) Consequentemente, Senaqueribe invadiu Judá e capturou muitas cidades fortificadas. Mas, Jerusalém nunca foi tomada, porque em uma só noite o anjo de Jeová matou 185.000 no acampamento dos assírios. Senaqueribe, humilhado, retornou a Nínive. (2Rs 18:13; 19:32-36) Uns oito anos antes, em 740 AEC, o reino de dez tribos chegara ao seu fim com a queda da sua capital, Samaria, diante dos assírios. — 2Rs 17:4-6.

O próximo rei de Judá, Manassés, filho de Ezequias, reviveu a idolatria. No entanto, ao ser levado cativo a Babilônia, pelo rei da Assíria, ele se arrependeu, e, depois de seu retorno a Jerusalém, empreendeu reformas religiosas. (2Cr 33:10-16) Mas, seu filho, Amom, voltou à idolatria. — 2Cr 33:21-24.

A última campanha ampla contra a idolatria ocorreu durante o reinado de Josias, filho de Amom. Todavia, era tarde demais para um genuíno arrependimento por parte do povo em geral. Por isso, Jeová decretou a completa desolação de Judá e de Jerusalém. Finalmente, o próprio Josias foi morto na tentativa de rechaçar as forças egípcias em Megido, quando estavam em caminho para ajudar o rei da Assíria em Carquemis. — 2Rs 22:1–23:30; 2Cr 35:20.

Os últimos quatro reis de Judá, Jeoacaz, Jeoiaquim, Joaquim e Zedequias, mostraram ser maus governantes. O Faraó Neco depôs Jeoacaz, impôs uma pesada multa à terra de Judá e fez rei a Jeoiaquim, irmão de Jeoacaz. (2Rs 23:31-35) Mais tarde, evidentemente depois de reinar por oito anos, Jeoiaquim foi tornado vassalo de Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, que anteriormente derrotara os egípcios em Carquemis. Jeoiaquim serviu o rei de Babilônia por três anos, mas depois se rebelou. (2Rs 24:1; Je 46:2) Após isso, Nabucodonosor, evidentemente pretendendo levar este rei rebelde como prisioneiro a Babilônia, veio contra Jerusalém. (2Cr 36:6) No entanto, Jeoiaquim nunca foi levado a Babilônia, porque morreu de maneira não revelada na Bíblia. A seguir, Joaquim tornou-se rei. Depois de governar apenas por três meses e dez dias, ele voluntariamente se rendeu a Nabucodonosor, e, junto com outros membros da família real e milhares de súditos, foi ao exílio em Babilônia. Nabucodonosor colocou então no trono de Judá a Zedequias, tio de Joaquim. — 2Rs 24:6, 8-17; 2Cr 36:9, 10.

Zedequias, no seu nono ano como rei vassalo, rebelou-se e recorreu ao poderio militar do Egito em busca de apoio contra Babilônia. (2Rs 24:18–25:1; 2Cr 36:11-13; Ez 17:15-21) Por isso, Nabucodonosor fez seus exércitos marchar para Judá. Jerusalém foi submetido a um sítio por 18 meses, até que suas muralhas foram finalmente brechadas. Embora Zedequias fugisse, ele foi capturado, seus filhos foram mortos diante dele e ele foi então cegado. No mês seguinte, a maioria dos sobreviventes foram levados ao exílio. Gedalias foi designado governador sobre os poucos remanescentes do povo humilde de Judá. Mas, depois de ele ser assassinado, o povo fugiu para o Egito. Assim, no sétimo mês de 607 AEC, a terra de Judá ficou completamente desolada. — 2Rs 25:1-26; para mais pormenores, veja os artigos sobre os respectivos reis.

Não se Perdeu o Governo. Este calamitoso fim do reino de Judá, porém, não significou que o cetro e o bastão de comandante tivessem para sempre desaparecido desta tribo. Segundo a profecia de Jacó, no leito de morte, a tribo de Judá havia de produzir um herdeiro real permanente, Siló (que significa "Aquele de Quem É; Aquele a Quem Pertence"). (Gên 49:10) Apropriadamente, pois, antes da derrubada do reino de Judá, Jeová, por meio de Ezequiel, dirigiu as seguintes palavras a Zedequias: "Remove o turbante e retira a coroa. Esta não será a mesma. Põe no alto o rebaixado e rebaixa o que estiver no alto. Uma ruína, uma ruína, uma ruína a farei. Também, quanto a esta, certamente não virá a ser de ninguém, até que venha aquele que tem o direito legal, e a ele é que terei de dá-lo." (Ez 21:26, 27) Aquele que tem o direito legal, conforme indicado pelo anúncio do anjo Gabriel à virgem judia Maria, uns 600 anos mais tarde, é o próprio Jesus, o Filho de Deus. (Lu 1:31-33) Portanto, é apropriado que Jesus Cristo leve o título de "o Leão que é da tribo de Judá". — Re 5:5.

Comparado com o Reino Setentrional. O reino de Judá usufruiu muito maior estabilidade e também durou cerca de 133 anos mais do que o reino setentrional. Diversos fatores contribuíram para isso. (1) Por causa do pacto de Deus com Davi, a linhagem real permaneceu intacta, ao passo que no reino setentrional menos da metade dos reis tiveram seus próprios filhos como sucessores. (2) A continuação do sacerdócio arônico no templo em Jerusalém teve a bênção de Jeová e tornou mais fácil o retorno da nação infiel ao seu Deus. (2Cr 13:8-20) Por outro lado, a instituição e continuação da adoração do bezerro no reino setentrional era considerada necessária para preservar a sua independência de Judá, e, pelo visto, foi por este motivo que nunca se fizeram esforços para eliminá-la. (1Rs 12:27-33) (3) Quatro dos 19 reis de Judá, Asa, Jeosafá, Ezequias e Josias, foram notáveis na sua devoção à adoração verdadeira e instituíram grandes reformas religiosas.

Todavia, a história de ambos os reinos ilustra a tolice de se desconsiderar as ordens de Jeová e de confiar em alianças militares para ter segurança. Também, destaca-se a longanimidade de Jeová com seu povo desobediente. Vez após vez ele enviou seus profetas entre o povo para exortar ao arrependimento, mas, seus avisos foram muitas vezes desacatados. (Je 25:4-7) Entre os profetas que serviram em Judá estavam Semaías, Ido, Azarias, Odede, Hanani, Jeú, Eliézer, Jaaziel, Miqueias, Oseias, Isaías, Sofonias, Habacuque e Jeremias. — Veja ISRAEL N.º 2 e 3.

Após o Exílio. Em 537 AEC, quando entrou em vigor o decreto de Ciro que permitiu aos israelitas voltar à terra de Judá e reconstruir ali o templo, parece que representantes das diversas tribos voltaram à sua pátria. (Esd 1:1-4; Is 11:11, 12) Em cumprimento de Ezequiel 21:27, nenhum rei da linhagem davídica jamais administrou os assuntos do povo repatriado. É também digno de nota que não se faz nenhuma menção de ciúmes tribais, indicando que Efraim e Judá deveras se tinham tornado um. — Is 11:13.

4. Pelo visto, trata-se do levita Hodavias, ou Hodeva. Os filhos dele retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:40; 3:9; Ne 7:43.

5. Levita alistado entre os que retornaram junto com Zorobabel. — Ne 12:1, 8.

6. Levita alistado entre aqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos. — Esd 10:23, 44.

7. Habitante benjamita de Jerusalém, que serviu ali como supervisor após o exílio. — Ne 11:7, 9.

8. Participante da marcha inaugural providenciada por Neemias, depois de ter sido completada a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31, 34.

9. Músico sacerdotal na marcha inaugural. — Ne 12:31, 35, 36.

JUDÁ, ERMO DE. Vertente oriental das montanhas de Judá, em geral desabitada e calva. (Jz 1:16) Esta região erma, de uns 16 a 24 km de largura, começa logo ao L do monte das Oliveiras e se estende uns 80 km ao longo da costa ocidental do Mar Morto. Consiste principalmente em morros arredondados, lisos e calvos de calcário mole, cortados por vales de torrente e ravinas. (FOTOS, Vol. 1, pp. 335, 747) Em direção ao Mar Morto, os morros arredondados são substituídos por desfiladeiros rochosos, e o próprio mar é marginado por um paredão de penhascos escarpados. Este ermo, que baixa uns 1.200 m em 24 km, é protegido contra os ventos ocidentais que trazem chuvas, e, por isso, recebe apenas pouca desta precipitação pluvial. Ao mesmo tempo, está à mercê dos ventos secos que vêm do L. Mas, quando chove mesmo, a água precipita-se através dos costumeiramente secos vales de torrente, e, durante semanas, na estação das chuvas, o ermo produz um pouco de vegetação.

Davi descreveu o ermo de Judá como "terra árida e esgotada, onde não há água". (Sal 63:cab., 1) Nenhum rio tem seu manancial no coração desta região árida, e não corre ali nenhuma água de superfície. Em nítido contraste, o rio que emana do visionário templo de Ezequiel flui através deste ermo e sustenta uma abundância de árvores ao longo das suas margens. — Ez 47:1-10.

Sem dúvida era para o desolado ermo de Judá que se mandava o 'bode para Azazel' no anual Dia da Expiação, depois de ser conduzido até ali do templo em Jerusalém. (Le 16:21, 22) No primeiro século EC, João, o Batizador, iniciou seu ministério num setor desta região ao N do Mar Morto. (Mt 3:1-6) Foi evidentemente em algum lugar do mesmo ermo que Cristo Jesus foi tentado pelo Diabo. — Mt 4:1.

JUDAÍSMO. O sistema religioso judaico. (Gál 1:13, 14) No primeiro século EC, o judaísmo, nas suas diversas formas, não se baseava exclusivamente nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Um dos mais destacados ramos do judaísmo, o dos saduceus, rejeitava o ensino bíblico da ressurreição e negava a existência de anjos. (Mr 12:18-27; At 23:8) Embora os fariseus, que constituíam ainda outro ramo importante do judaísmo, discordassem fortemente dos saduceus neste respeito (At 23:6-9), eles eram culpados de invalidar a Palavra de Deus por causa das suas muitas tradições antibíblicas. (Mt 15:1-11) O que dificultava a muitos aceitar a Cristo não era a Lei, que realmente era um tutor que conduzia a Ele (Gál 3:24), mas essas tradições antibíblicas. A Lei em si era boa e santa (Ro 7:12), mas as tradições de homens escravizavam os judeus. (Col 2:8) Foi o ardente zelo pelas 'tradições de seus pais' que induziu Saulo (Paulo) a ser ferrenho perseguidor dos cristãos. — Gál 1:13, 14, 23; veja FARISEUS; SADUCEUS.

JUDAS [do hebr., uma forma do nome Judá].

1. Antepassado de Jesus na linhagem de Natã a Maria. Judas, filho de José e pai de Simeão, era a sétima geração descendente de Natã, filho de Davi, e assim viveu antes do exílio babilônico. — Lu 3:30, 31.

2. Judas, o galileu, mencionado por Gamaliel no seu discurso perante o Sinédrio. (At 5:37) Por ocasião do registro relacionado com Quirino, governador da Síria, em 6 EC, Judas chefiou um levante judeu. Josefo menciona-o diversas vezes e declara que ele "incitava seus patrícios a se revoltarem, censurando-os por serem covardes ao consentirem em pagar tributo aos romanos e em tolerar amos mortais, depois de terem a Deus como seu senhor. Este homem era um sofista que fundou sua própria seita, não tendo nada em comum com as outras". (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 118 [viii, 1]) Num ponto, Josefo chama Judas de gaulanita, lugar que alguns relacionariam com uma região ao L do mar da Galileia. Mas, em outros lugares, o mesmo historiador diz que Judas era galileu, assim como fez Gamaliel. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XVIII, 4 [i, 1]; XVIII, 23 [i, 6]) Esses rebeldes enfatizavam a liberdade, mas não conseguiram obtê-la. Judas "pereceu, e todos os que lhe obedeciam foram espalhados". (At 5:37) Alguns dos seus descendentes também estiveram envolvidos em levantes. — The Jewish War, II, 433-440 (xvii, 8); VII, 253 (viii, 1).

3. Um dos 12 apóstolos, também chamado Tadeu e "Judas, filho de Tiago". O rol dos apóstolos, em Mateus 10:3 e Marcos 3:18, liga Tiago, filho de Alfeu, com Tadeu. Nas listas de Lucas 6:16 e Atos 1:13, Tadeu não está incluído; em vez disso, encontramos "Judas, filho de Tiago", o que leva à conclusão de que Tadeu é outro nome do apóstolo Judas. A possibilidade de serem confundidos os dois apóstolos chamados Judas talvez fosse o motivo de se usar às vezes o nome Tadeu. Alguns tradutores vertem Lucas 6:16 e Atos 1:13 por "Judas, irmão de Tiago", visto que o grego não fornece o parentesco exato. Mas a Pesito siríaca apresenta a palavra "filho". Por conseguinte, diversas traduções modernas rezam "Judas, filho de Tiago". (ALA; BJ; BLH; NM; PIB) A única menção bíblica de Judas sozinho ocorre em João 14:22. Este versículo chama-o de "Judas, não Iscariotes", tornando assim possível distinguir que Judas falou.

Em Mateus 10:3, a versão Almeida (edição revista e corrigida) inseriu "Lebeu, apelidado", antes de "Tadeu". Isto é baseado no Texto Recebido, mas o texto de Westcott e Hort omite isso, porque não consta em manuscritos tais como o Sinaítico.

4. Judas Iscariotes, filho de Simão, e apóstolo infame que traiu Jesus. A Bíblia fornece poucas informações diretas sobre a família e a formação de Judas. Tanto ele como seu pai se chamavam Iscariotes. (Lu 6:16; Jo 6:71) Costuma-se entender que este termo indica que eram de Queriote-Esrom, cidade da Judeia. Neste caso, Judas era o único dentre os 12 apóstolos que procedia da Judeia, os demais eram galileus.

Judas surge nos relatos evangélicos na lista dos apóstolos, algum tempo depois da Páscoa de 31 EC, e cerca de um ano e meio depois de Jesus ter iniciado seu ministério. (Mr 3:19; Lu 6:16) Daí a conclusão lógica de que Judas havia sido discípulo já por algum tempo antes de Jesus o tornar apóstolo. Muitos escritores pintam um quadro totalmente negro de Judas, mas, evidentemente, por algum tempo, ele havia sido um discípulo que achou favor perante Deus e Jesus; isto é indicado pela própria escolha dele como apóstolo. Além disso, confiou-se-lhe cuidar das finanças comuns de Jesus e dos 12. Isto mostra sua fidedignidade naquela época e sua capacidade ou sua instrução, especialmente visto que era Mateus quem tinha experiência em lidar com dinheiro e com números, mas não recebeu esta tarefa. (Jo 12:6; Mt 10:3) Não obstante, Judas tornou-se total e inescusavelmente corrupto. Sem dúvida, este é o motivo de ele ser colocado no fim da lista dos apóstolos e ser descrito como o Judas "que mais tarde o traiu" e "que se tornou traidor". — Mt 10:4; Lu 6:16.

Tornou-se Corrupto. Perto da Páscoa de 32 EC, Judas, junto com os outros apóstolos, foi enviado a pregar. (Mt 10:1, 4, 5) Pouco depois do retorno de Judas, e menos de um ano após ter sido feito apóstolo, ele foi publicamente denunciado por Cristo, embora não por nome. Alguns discípulos abandonaram Jesus Cristo, chocados pelos ensinos dele, mas Pedro disse que os 12 se apegariam a Ele. Em resposta, Jesus reconheceu que ele havia escolhido os 12, mas disse: "Um de vós é um caluniador [gr.: di·á·bo·los, que significa "diabo" ou "caluniador"]." O relato explica que aquele que já era caluniador era Judas, que "ia traí-lo, embora fosse um dos doze". — Jo 6:66-71.

Relacionado com este incidente, João diz: "Jesus sabia desde o princípio . . . quem era o que o havia de trair." (Jo 6:64) À base de profecias das Escrituras Hebraicas, Cristo sabia que ele seria traído por um associado íntimo. (Sal 41:9; 109:8; Jo 13:18, 19) Também Deus, pelo uso da presciência, havia discernido que este se tornaria traidor, mas é incoerente com as qualidades de Deus e seus tratos no passado pensar que Judas tinha de fracassar, como que predestinado. (Veja PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO.) Antes, conforme já mencionado, no começo do seu apostolado, Judas era fiel a Deus e a Jesus. De modo que João deve querer dizer que "desde o princípio" de quando Judas começou a tornar-se mau, passando a ceder à imperfeição e a inclinações pecaminosas, Jesus percebeu isso. (Jo 2:24, 25; Re 1:1; 2:23) Judas deve ter entendido que era ele o "caluniador" mencionado por Jesus, mas continuou a viajar com ele e os apóstolos fiéis, e evidentemente não mudou.

A Bíblia não entra em pormenores sobre os motivos do seu proceder corrupto, mas um incidente ocorrido em 9 de nisã de 33 EC, cinco dias antes da morte de Jesus, lança luz sobre o assunto. Em Betânia, na casa de Simão, o leproso, Maria, irmã de Lázaro, ungiu Jesus com óleo perfumado no valor de 300 denários, equivalente a cerca do salário anual de um trabalhador. (Mt 20:2) Judas objetou fortemente, dizendo que o óleo poderia ter sido vendido e o dinheiro "dado aos pobres". Pelo visto, os outros apóstolos apenas anuíram ao que parecia ser um argumento válido, mas Jesus os censurou. O motivo real da objeção de Judas era que ele cuidava da caixa de dinheiro e "era um ladrão . . . e costumava retirar dinheiro" posto na caixa. De modo que Judas era um ganancioso ladrão praticante. — Jo 12:2-7; Mt 26:6-12; Mr 14:3-8.

Preço da Traição. Judas, sem dúvida, sentiu-se ferido pela censura de Jesus a respeito do uso do dinheiro. Nesta ocasião, "Satanás entrou em Judas", provavelmente no sentido de que o traiçoeiro apóstolo entregou-se à vontade do Diabo, deixando-se usar como instrumento para executar a intenção de Satanás, de parar Cristo. Poucos dias depois, em 12 de nisã, Judas dirigiu-se aos principais sacerdotes e aos capitães do templo para ver quanto estes lhe pagariam para trair Jesus, novamente demonstrando sua avareza. (Mt 26:14-16; Mr 14:10, 11; Lu 22:3-6; Jo 13:2) Os principais sacerdotes se haviam reunido naquele dia com "os anciãos do povo", os homens influentes do Sinédrio. (Mt 26:3) Os capitães do templo talvez fossem convocados por causa da sua influência e para dar um aspecto legal a qualquer planejada detenção de Jesus.

Por que ofereceram os líderes religiosos judeus apenas 30 moedas de prata para Jesus ser traído?

Trinta moedas de prata (US$ 66, no caso de siclos) era o montante oferecido. (Mt 26:14, 15) A soma estabelecida pelos líderes religiosos parece destinada a mostrar seu desprezo por Jesus, encarando-o de pouco valor. Segundo Êxodo 21:32, o preço dum escravo era 30 siclos. Levando isso mais adiante, Zacarias, por seu trabalho de pastor do povo, foi pago "trinta moedas de prata". Jeová desprezou isso como sendo uma quantia muito pequena, considerando-se o salário dado a Zacarias como avaliação da maneira de o povo sem fé encarar o próprio Deus. (Za 11:12, 13) Por conseguinte, ao oferecerem apenas 30 moedas de prata por Jesus, os líderes religiosos mostraram considerá-lo de pouco valor. Ao mesmo tempo, porém, cumpriam Zacarias 11:12, tratando Jeová como de pouco valor por fazerem isso com o representante que ele enviara para pastorear Israel. O corrupto Judas "consentiu [no preço] e começou a buscar uma boa oportunidade para traí-lo [Jesus] a eles sem que houvesse uma multidão em volta". — Lu 22:6.

A Última Noite com Jesus. Judas, apesar de se ter voltado contra Cristo, continuou a associar-se com ele. Reuniu-se com Jesus e os apóstolos em 14 de nisã de 33 EC para a celebração da Páscoa. No decurso da refeição pascoal, Jesus ministrou aos apóstolos, humildemente lavando-lhes os pés. O hipócrita Judas permitiu que Jesus lhe fizesse isso. Mas, Jesus disse: "Nem todos vós estais limpos." (Jo 13:2-5, 11) Declarou também que um dos apóstolos ali à mesa o trairia. Judas, talvez para não parecer culpado, perguntou se era ele. Como identificação adicional, Jesus deu a Judas um bocado para comer e disse-lhe que fizesse depressa o que pretendia fazer. — Mt 26:21-25; Mr 14:18-21; Lu 22:21-23; Jo 13:21-30.

Judas deixou imediatamente o grupo. Uma comparação entre Mateus 26:20-29 e João 13:21-30 indica que ele partiu antes de Jesus instituir a celebração da Refeição Noturna do Senhor. A apresentação deste incidente por Lucas evidentemente não segue uma estrita ordem cronológica, porque Judas definitivamente já havia partido quando Cristo elogiou o grupo por ter ficado com ele; isto não se ajustaria a Judas, nem teria ele sido incluído no 'pacto para um reino'. — Lu 22:19-30.

Judas, mais tarde, encontrou Jesus com os apóstolos fiéis no jardim de Getsêmani, lugar que o traidor conhecia bem, porque já se haviam reunido ali antes. Liderou uma grande multidão, inclusive soldados romanos e um comandante militar. A turba tinha cassetetes e espadas, bem como tochas e lâmpadas, que necessitariam se nuvens encobrissem a lua cheia ou se Jesus estivesse nas sombras. Os romanos provavelmente não reconheciam Jesus, de modo que, segundo um sinal combinado, Judas cumprimentou Cristo e num ato de hipocrisia "beijou-o mui ternamente", identificando-o assim. (Mt 26:47-49; Jo 18:2-12) Posteriormente, Judas sentiu a enormidade da sua culpa. De manhã, tentou devolver as 30 moedas de prata, mas os principais sacerdotes se negaram a aceitá-las. Por fim, Judas lançou o dinheiro no templo. — Mt 27:1-5.

Morte. De acordo com Mateus 27:5, Judas enforcou-se. Mas, Atos 1:18 diz que, "jogando-se de cabeça para baixo, rebentou ruidosamente pelo meio e se derramaram todos os seus intestinos". Mateus parece tratar da maneira do pretendido suicídio, ao passo que Atos descreve o resultado. Juntando os dois relatos, parece que Judas tentou enforcar-se no alto dum penhasco, mas que a corda ou o galho da árvore rebentou, de modo que despencou e rebentou nos rochedos embaixo. A topografia em volta de Jerusalém torna isso concebível.

Relacionada com a sua morte há também a questão de quem comprou com as 30 moedas de prata o campo para servir de cemitério. Segundo Mateus 27:6, 7, os principais sacerdotes decidiram que não podiam colocar o dinheiro no tesouro sagrado, de modo que eles o usaram para comprar o campo. O relato de Atos 1:18, 19, falando de Judas, diz: "Este mesmo homem, portanto, comprou um campo com o salário da injustiça." A resposta parece ser que os sacerdotes compraram o campo, mas, visto que foi Judas quem forneceu o dinheiro, isso podia ser atribuído a ele. O Dr. A. Edersheim salientou: "Não era lícito incluir no tesouro do Templo, para a compra de coisas sagradas, dinheiro que fora ganho ilicitamente. Em tais casos, a Lei judaica prescrevia que o dinheiro devia ser devolvido ao doador, e, se este insistisse em doá-lo, que fosse induzido a gastá-lo em promover o bem[-estar] público. . . . Por um artifício da lei, o dinheiro ainda era considerado como pertencendo a Judas, e como tendo sido aplicado por ele na compra do bem-conhecido 'campo do oleiro'." (The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah [A Vida e a Época de Jesus, o Messias], 1906, Vol. II, p. 575) Esta compra resultou no cumprimento da profecia de Zacarias 11:13.

O proceder escolhido por Judas era deliberado, envolvendo malícia, ganância, orgulho, hipocrisia e maquinação. Ele depois sentiu remorso sob o peso da culpa, como talvez se desse com um assassino deliberado em resultado do seu crime. Todavia, Judas, de própria vontade, fizera um acordo com aqueles que Jesus disse que faziam prosélitos, tornando-os objetos para a Geena duas vezes mais do que eles mesmos, estando eles sujeitos ao "julgamento da Geena". (Mt 23:15, 33) Na última noite da sua vida terrestre, o próprio Jesus disse, na realidade, a respeito de Judas: "Teria sido melhor para este homem, se não tivesse nascido." Mais tarde, Cristo o chamou de "o filho da destruição". — Mr 14:21; Jo 17:12; He 10:26-29.

Substituição. Entre a ascensão de Jesus e Pentecostes de 33 EC, Pedro, aplicando a profecia do Salmo 109:8, explicou a um grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos reunidos que parecia apropriado escolher um substituto para Judas. Propuseram-se dois candidatos e lançaram-se sortes, o que resultou em Matias ser escolhido "para tomar o lugar deste ministério e apostolado, do qual Judas se desviou para ir para o seu próprio lugar". — At 1:15, 16, 20-26.

5. Um dos quatro meios-irmãos de Jesus. (Mt 13:55; Mr 6:3) Ele evidentemente acompanhou os seus três irmãos e sua mãe Maria logo cedo no ministério de Jesus, em Caná, quando Jesus realizou um milagre, e, mais tarde, acompanhou Jesus e os discípulos dele a Cafarnaum, para uma curta estada ali. (Jo 2:1-12) Bem mais de um ano depois, ele parece ter acompanhado Maria e os irmãos dele à procura de Jesus. (Mt 12:46) Não obstante, em 32 EC, os irmãos de Jesus, inclusive Judas, "não estavam exercendo fé nele". (Jo 7:5) Pouco antes de morrer, Jesus confiou sua mãe crente aos cuidados do apóstolo João, o que sugere fortemente que nem Judas, nem seus irmãos, ainda se haviam tornado discípulos. (Jo 19:26, 27) No entanto, talvez fosse a ressurreição de Cristo que ajudou a convencer Judas, porque ele estava com os apóstolos e outros que, entre o tempo da ascensão de Jesus e o dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, se reuniam e persistiam em oração. (At 1:13-15) Logicamente, pois, Judas devia ter estado entre os primeiros crentes a receber o espírito santo. Evidentemente, Judas é aquele que, por volta de 65 EC, escreveu o livro bíblico deste nome.

"Escravo de Jesus Cristo, mas irmão de Tiago." É desta maneira que o escritor da carta inspirada que leva seu nome se apresenta. Aparentemente, não se trata do "Judas, filho de Tiago", um dos 11 apóstolos fiéis de Jesus Cristo. (Lu 6:16) Ele chama a si mesmo de "escravo", não de apóstolo de Jesus Cristo; também, ele menciona os apóstolos na terceira pessoa. — Ju 1, 17, 18.

Embora as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs falem de outras pessoas chamadas Judas, este escritor bíblico se distingue dos outros por mencionar o nome de seu irmão. Isto dá a entender que seu irmão Tiago era bem conhecido entre os cristãos. Parece ter havido só uma pessoa com este nome que se destacou notavelmente. O apóstolo Paulo menciona este Tiago como uma das "colunas" da congregação de Jerusalém e "o irmão do Senhor". (Gál 1:19; 2:9; veja também At 12:17; 15:13-21.) Portanto, Judas era evidentemente meio-irmão de Cristo Jesus. (Mt 13:55; Mr 6:3) No entanto, com humildade, não procurou tirar vantagem do seu parentesco com o Filho de Deus, mas chamou a si mesmo de "escravo de Jesus Cristo".

Não se sabe quase nada sobre a vida de Judas. Logo cedo no ministério de Cristo Jesus, Judas talvez estivesse entre os que disseram: "Ele perdeu o juízo." (Mr 3:21) De qualquer modo, Judas e seus outros irmãos, naquela ocasião, não exerciam fé em Cristo Jesus. — Jo 7:5.

Todavia, depois da ressurreição, Jesus apareceu ao seu meio-irmão Tiago. (1Co 15:7) Sem dúvida, isso influiu muito em convencer não somente a Tiago, mas também a Judas e os outros irmãos que Jesus, deveras, era o Messias. Portanto, mesmo já antes de Pentecostes de 33 EC, eles persistiam em oração junto com os 11 apóstolos fiéis e com outros numa sala de andar superior em Jerusalém. Parece que estavam também entre os cerca de 120 reunidos na ocasião em que se escolheu por sortes a Matias para substituir o infiel Judas Iscariotes. (At 1:14-26) Neste caso, isto indicaria que receberam o espírito santo no dia de Pentecostes. — At 2:1-4.

6. Homem de Damasco que morava na rua Direita. Enquanto Saulo (Paulo) estava cego, logo após a sua conversão, ele se hospedou na casa de Judas, e foi para lá que se mandou Ananias para pôr as mãos sobre Saulo. (At 9:11, 17) O relato não diz se Judas, na época, era discípulo, mas isto não parece provável, visto que Ananias e outros, que eram discípulos, hesitavam em se chegar a Saulo por causa da reputação dele como perseguidor, mas Judas aceitara Saulo na sua casa. — At 9:13, 14, 26.

7. Judas, também chamado Barsabás, foi um dos dois discípulos enviados pelo corpo governante em Jerusalém para acompanhar Paulo e Barnabé na entrega da carta a respeito da circuncisão (c. 49 EC). Tanto Judas como seu companheiro Silas eram considerados "homens de liderança entre os irmãos". (At 15:22) A carta fora dirigida "aos irmãos em Antioquia, e Síria, e Cilícia". Judas e Silas são mencionados apenas como estando em Antioquia, e não há registro de que tenham ido mais longe. Eles deviam confirmar verbalmente a mensagem contida na carta. Judas era 'profeta', e, como orador visitante, proferiu muitos discursos aos irmãos em Antioquia, encorajando-os e fortalecendo-os. — At 15:22, 23, 27, 30-32.

Atos 15:33 indica que Judas e Silas retornaram a Jerusalém depois de "passarem ali algum tempo" com os cristãos em Antioquia. Certos manuscritos (tais como o Códice Ephraemi e o Códice Bezae) contêm o versículo 34, que reza, com variações: "Mas pareceu bem a Silas permanecer ainda ali; todavia, Judas partiu sozinho para Jerusalém." Este versículo é omitido em manuscritos fidedignos mais antigos (Sinaítico, Alexandrino, MS Vaticano N.º 1209). Provavelmente se tratava duma nota marginal para explicar o versículo 40, e, com o tempo, introduziu-se no texto principal.

Alguns comentadores sugeriram que Judas, chamado Barsabás, era o irmão de "José, chamado Barsabás", discípulo proposto para tomar o lugar de Judas Iscariotes. (At 1:23) Mas não há nenhuma evidência em apoio disso, exceto a mera similaridade do nome. Judas não é novamente mencionado na Bíblia depois de ter voltado a Jerusalém.

JUDAS, A CARTA DE. Carta inspirada das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, escrita por Judas, irmão de Tiago, e portanto, evidentemente, também meio-irmão de Jesus Cristo. (Veja JUDAS N.º 5.) Dirigida "aos chamados que são amados em relação com Deus, o Pai, e preservados para Jesus Cristo", esta carta geral, pelo visto, devia circular entre todos os cristãos. — Ju 1.

Na época em que Judas escreveu esta carta, desenvolvera-se uma situação ameaçadora. Homens imorais, animalescos, tinham-se introduzido sorrateiramente entre os cristãos e 'transformavam a benignidade imerecida de nosso Deus numa desculpa para conduta desenfreada'. Por este motivo,

DESTAQUES DE JUDAS

Aviso conciso e poderoso contra os iníquos que querem infiltrar-se na congregação.

Foi provavelmente escrita por volta de 65 EC, mais de 30 anos depois da morte e ressurreição de Cristo.

Situação que exige perseverança cristã. (Vv 1-4)

Homens ímpios introduziram-se sorrateiramente na congregação e usam a benignidade imerecida de Deus como desculpa para conduta desenfreada.

Os cristãos precisam travar uma luta árdua pela fé.

Atitudes, conduta e pessoas contra que prevenir-se. (Vv 5-16)

Não se deve esquecer que os israelitas salvos do Egito, aos quais depois faltou fé, foram destruídos.

Anjos que abandonaram a sua posição correta foram punidos.

As crassamente imorais Sodoma e Gomorra sofreram o julgamento do fogo eterno.

Apesar destes exemplos, alguns se empenham em introduzir práticas similares na congregação.

Miguel não ultrajava, nem mesmo ao falar com o Diabo; mas esses homens 'falam de modo ultrajante dos gloriosos'.

Seguem os maus exemplos de Caim, Balaão e Corá.

Constituem uma ameaça similar a rochedos sob a água; iguais a nuvens sem água e a árvores mortas, desarraigadas, eles não produzem nada proveitoso.

Enoque profetizou o julgamento de Deus contra tais pecadores ímpios.

Esses homens são resmungadores, queixosos de sua sorte na vida, egocêntricos, bem como lisonjeadores enganosos.

Como os cristãos podem resistir a esta má influência. (Vv 17-25)

Lembrar-se de que os apóstolos predisseram a presença de tais homens "no último tempo".

Os cristãos devem destacar-se como diferentes deles, edificando-se sobre o alicerce da fé, orando com espírito santo, mantendo-se no amor de Deus e aguardando a expressão da misericórdia de Jesus.

Devem também ajudar outros, mostrando misericórdia para com os que têm dúvidas, salvando-os por arrebatá-los do fogo.

Judas não escreveu, como originalmente pretendera, a respeito da salvação que todos os cristãos chamados para o Reino celestial de Deus têm em comum. Em vez disso, dirigido pelo espírito de Deus, ele forneceu exortações para ajudar concrentes a enfrentar com bom êxito as influências corrompedoras dentro da congregação. Judas admoestou-os a 'travarem uma luta árdua pela fé', por resistirem a pessoas imorais, por manterem a adoração pura e a conduta excelente, "orando com espírito santo". (Ju 3, 4, 19-23) Usando exemplos tais como os anjos que pecaram, os habitantes de Sodoma e Gomorra, Caim, Balaão e Corá, Judas provou vigorosamente que o julgamento de Jeová será executado em pessoas ímpias com a mesma certeza que foi sobre os anjos infiéis e os homens iníquos de tempos anteriores. Ele expôs também a baixeza daqueles que tentavam aviltar os cristãos. — Ju 5-16, 19.

Informações Ímpares. Embora a carta de Judas seja curta, ela contém informações não encontradas em outra parte na Bíblia. Somente ela menciona a disputa do arcanjo Miguel com o Diabo acerca do corpo de Moisés, e a profecia feita séculos antes por Enoque. (Ju 9, 14, 15) Não se sabe se Judas recebeu estas informações por revelação direta ou por transmissão fidedigna (quer oral, quer escrita). Neste último caso, isto talvez explique a presença de uma referência similar à profecia de Enoque no livro apócrifo de Enoque (que se pensa ter sido escrito provavelmente durante o segundo e o primeiro século AEC). Uma fonte comum pode ter fornecido a base para a declaração feita tanto na carta inspirada como no livro apócrifo.

Lugar e Tempo da Escrita. É provável que Judas tenha escrito sua carta na Palestina, visto que não há registro de ele ter alguma vez saído daquele país. À base da evidência interna, pode-se chegar a uma data aproximada da carta. Não mencionar Judas a chegada de Céstio Galo contra Jerusalém (66 EC), nem a queda desta cidade diante dos romanos sob Tito (70 EC), sugere que ele a escreveu antes do ano 66 EC. Se mesmo só uma parte da profecia de Jesus a respeito da destruição de Jerusalém já se tivesse cumprido (Lu 19:43, 44), Judas, sem dúvida, teria incluído esta execução do julgamento divino como mais um exemplo de aviso. Visto que Judas parece ter citado a segunda carta de Pedro, a respeito de ridicularizadores aparecerem "no último tempo" (compare 2Pe 3:3 com Ju 18), pode-se inferir que ele escreveu sua carta mais tarde, por volta de 65 EC.

Autenticidade. O livro bíblico de Judas foi aceito como canônico pelos primeiros catalogadores da Bíblia. Entre estes, do primeiro ao quarto século EC, estavam Clemente de Alexandria, Tertuliano, Orígenes, Eusébio, Cirilo de Jerusalém, Atanásio, Epifânio, Gregório Nazianzeno, Filástrio, Jerônimo e Agostinho. A carta consta também no Fragmento Muratoriano (c. 170 EC).

JUDEIA [do hebr.: De (Pertencente a) Judá]. Não há certeza das fronteiras exatas desta região da Palestina. Pelo visto, a Judeia abrangia uma área de aproximadamente 80 km de leste a oeste, e de uns 50 km de norte a sul. Samaria ficava ao norte e a Idumeia ao sul. O Mar Morto e o vale do Jordão constituíam a fronteira oriental. Todavia, quando o território idumeu foi incluído na Judeia, a fronteira meridional parece ter-se estendido desde abaixo de Gaza, no oeste, até Massada, no leste.

Em Mateus 19:1, a referência a Jesus partir da Galileia e chegar "às fronteiras da Judeia, do outro lado do Jordão", talvez signifique que Jesus partiu da Galileia, cruzou o Jordão e foi para o sul para entrar na Judeia através da Pereia.

Herodes, o Grande, era o "rei da Judeia" quando João, o Batizador, e Jesus nasceram. (Lu 1:5) Herodes havia sido anteriormente constituído rei da Judeia pelo senado romano. Seus domínios foram depois aumentados, e, no tempo da sua morte, incluíam a Judeia, a Galileia, Samaria, a Idumeia, a Pereia e outras regiões. Arquelau, filho de Herodes, o Grande, herdou o domínio sobre a Judeia, Samaria e a Idumeia. (Veja Mt 2:22, 23.) Mas, depois do seu banimento, a Judeia passou a ficar sob a administração de governadores romanos, que tinham sua residência oficial em Cesareia. Com exceção do breve reinado de Herodes Agripa I como rei da Palestina (At 12:1), governadores administraram os assuntos da Judeia até a revolta dos judeus em 66 EC.

Perto do fim do primeiro século AEC, em cumprimento de profecias, o prometido Messias, Jesus, nasceu em Belém, na Judeia. (Mt 2:3-6; Lu 2:10, 11) Depois da visita de alguns astrólogos orientais, José, pai adotivo de Jesus, alertado por um anjo, num sonho, a respeito da intenção de Herodes, o Grande, de destruir o menino, fugiu com a família ao Egito. Após a morte de Herodes, José não retornou à Judeia, mas estabeleceu-se em Nazaré, na Galileia. Fez isso porque Arquelau, filho de Herodes, governava então a Judeia, e também por causa do aviso divino dado a José num sonho. — Mt 2:7-23.

Na primavera de 29 EC, quando João, o Batizador, iniciou sua obra em preparação para a vinda do Messias, a Judeia estava sob a jurisdição do governador romano Pôncio Pilatos. Muitos, inclusive pessoas da Judeia, ouviram a pregação de João no ermo da Judeia e foram batizados em símbolo de arrependimento. (Mt 3:1-6; Lu 3:1-16) Quando Jesus iniciou seu ministério, menos de oito meses depois, os habitantes da Judeia receberam mais uma oportunidade de retornar a Jeová de pleno coração. Por algum tempo, os discípulos de Jesus imergiam até mesmo mais pessoas do que João, o Batizador. (Jo 3:22; 4:1-3) Depois de Jesus partir para a Galileia, grandes multidões de Jerusalém e da Judeia seguiram-no e assim se beneficiaram do ministério dele ali. (Mt 4:25; Mr 3:7; Lu 6:17) Muitos desses da Judeia, sem dúvida, iguais aos galileus, tiveram seu interesse suscitado por aquilo que viram Jesus fazer em Jerusalém na festividade (da Páscoa de 30 EC). (Jo 4:45) As notícias sobre os milagres de Jesus na Galileia, tais como a ressurreição do filho único duma viúva de Naim, também se espalharam pela Judeia. — Lu 7:11-17.

Todavia, surgiu uma intensa oposição contra Jesus da parte dos líderes religiosos da Judeia. Estes parecem ter exercido mais influência sobre o povo da Judeia do que sobre os galileus. Já a partir da época da Páscoa de 31 EC, Jesus não mais estava seguro na Judeia. (Jo 5:1, 16-18; 7:1) Não obstante, ele assistia às festividades em Jerusalém e aproveitava a oportunidade para pregar. (Jo 7:10-13, 25, 26, 32; 10:22-39) Foi provavelmente na Judeia, após a Festividade das Barracas em 32 EC, que Jesus enviou os 70. (Lu 10:1-24) Mais tarde, apesar das tentativas anteriores de o apedrejarem, Jesus, ao saber que seu amigo Lázaro tinha falecido, decidiu ir à Judeia. A subsequente ressurreição de Lázaro por Jesus, em Betânia, foi usada pelos líderes religiosos como motivo adicional de procurarem a morte dele. Alguns deles disseram: "Se o deixarmos assim, todos depositarão fé nele, e virão os romanos e tirarão tanto o nosso lugar como a nossa nação." — Jo 11:5-8, 45-53.

Ao passo que os Evangelhos sinópticos tratam principalmente do ministério de Jesus na Galileia (provavelmente por causa da melhor aceitação ali), Jesus não negligenciou a Judeia. De outro modo, seus inimigos não poderiam ter declarado perante Pilatos: "Ele atiça o povo por ensinar em toda a Judeia, principiando da Galileia até mesmo aqui." — Lu 23:5.

Após a morte e ressurreição de Cristo Jesus, Jerusalém e a Judeia continuavam a receber um testemunho cabal. (At 1:8) No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, sem dúvida havia pessoas da Judeia entre os 3.000 que aceitaram a pregação de Pedro e foram batizados. Depois disso, a congregação cristã em Jerusalém continuava a ter aumentos. (At 2) Mas, não sem oposição. (At 4:5-7, 15-17; 5:17, 18, 40; 6:8-12) Depois do apedrejamento do cristão Estêvão, houve uma perseguição tão feroz, que "todos, exceto os apóstolos, foram espalhados através das regiões da Judeia e de Samaria". (At 8:1) Mas, em vez de ser um impedimento, serem espalhados assim resultou na divulgação da mensagem cristã, e, pelo visto, formaram-se novas congregações na Judeia e em outros lugares. (At 8:4; Gál 1:22) Após a conversão do perseguidor Saulo de Tarso, "a congregação através de toda a Judeia, e Galileia, e Samaria, entrou então num período de paz, sendo edificada; e, como andava no temor de Jeová e no consolo do espírito santo, multiplicava-se". (At 9:31) O ex-perseguidor, o próprio apóstolo Paulo, pregou em Jerusalém e na Judeia. (At 26:20) Pelas atividades de Paulo e de outros, estabeleceram-se novas congregações de cristãos, e os apóstolos e os anciãos da congregação de Jerusalém serviram como corpo governante para todas elas. — At 15:1-33; Ro 15:30-32.

Aparentemente, muitos dos cristãos judeus que moravam na Judeia eram pobres. Portanto, deve ter sido muito animador para eles ser beneficiados com as medidas voluntárias de socorros organizadas em seu favor pelos seus irmãos cristãos em outras partes da terra. (At 11:28-30; Ro 15:25-27; 1Co 16:1-3; 2Co 9:5, 7) Ao continuarem com seu serviço fiel, os cristãos judeus na Judeia sofreram muita perseguição de patrícios descrentes. (1Te 2:14) Por fim, em 66 EC, quando os exércitos romanos sob Céstio Galo se retiraram de Jerusalém, esses cristãos, em obediência às palavras proféticas de Jesus, fugiram de Jerusalém e da Judeia para os montes, escapando assim da terrível destruição que sobreveio a Jerusalém em 70 EC. — Mt 24:15, 16; Mr 13:14; Lu 21:20, 21.

JUDEU, JUDIA [De (Pertencente a) Judá]. Pessoa pertencente à tribo de Judá. Este nome não ocorre no relato bíblico antes da queda do reino de dez tribos de Israel. No tempo de Ezequias, Isaías usou uma forma adjetiva da palavra, traduzida "idioma judaico". (Is 36:11, 13) Na maioria das vezes, o reino meridional era chamado Judá, e o povo era chamado filhos de Judá ou tribo dos filhos de Judá. O primeiro escritor bíblico a usar o nome judeus como referência direta ao povo foi o escritor dos livros de Reis, sem dúvida Jeremias, cujo serviço profético começou em 647 AEC. (Veja 2Rs 16:6; 25:25.) Após o exílio, este nome era aplicado a todos os israelitas que retornaram (Esd 4:12; 6:7; Ne 1:2; 5:17), e, finalmente, a todos os hebreus no mundo inteiro, para diferenciá-los das nações gentias. (Est 3:6; 9:20) Homens gentios que aceitaram a crença judaica e se tornaram prosélitos circuncisos também se declaravam judeus. (Est 8:17) No entanto, nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a expressão "residente forasteiro" talvez se refira a alguém que havia adotado a religião dos judeus (Je 22:3), e até mesmo nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs se distingue às vezes a tais pelo termo "prosélitos". (At 2:10; 6:5; 13:43) O termo "judia" é usado em Atos 24:24.

Quando Jesus era menininho, vieram astrólogos perguntando: "Onde está aquele que nasceu rei dos judeus?" (Mt 2:1, 2) Na estaca de tortura de Jesus, Pilatos colocou o título "Jesus, o Nazareno, o Rei dos Judeus". — Jo 19:19.

Uso Figurado. O apóstolo Paulo, ao argumentar que os judeus estavam enganados em se orgulhar da sua ascendência carnal e em basear-se nas obras da Lei para obter o favor de Deus, disse: "Porque não é judeu aquele que o é por fora, nem é circuncisão aquela que a é por fora, na carne. Mas judeu é aquele que o é no íntimo, e a sua circuncisão é a do coração, por espírito, e não por um código escrito. O louvor desse não vem de homens, mas de Deus." (Ro 2:28, 29) Aqui, Paulo, aproveitando-se do sentido do nome Judá, mostra que a verdadeira base para se obter louvor de Deus é ser servo de Deus de coração, por espírito. Este argumento é paralelo ao seu raciocínio em Romanos, capítulo 4, de que o verdadeiro descendente, ou semente, de Abraão são aqueles que têm a fé de Abraão. Ele salienta adicionalmente que, na congregação cristã, a nacionalidade da pessoa não tem importância, porque "não há nem judeu nem grego [gentio]". (Gál 3:28) O ressuscitado Jesus Cristo falou à congregação de Esmirna, consolando-a com respeito à perseguição que sofria, em grande parte às mãos dos judeus, dizendo: "Conheço . . . a blasfêmia dos que se dizem judeus, e que não são, mas que são sinagoga de Satanás". — Re 2:9.

JUDITE [forma feminina de Jeudi]. Uma das esposas de Esaú; filha de Beeri, o hitita, e constante fonte de amargura de espírito para Isaque e Rebeca. (Gên 26:34, 35) Ela talvez seja a Oolibama de Gênesis 36:2.

JUGO. Barra carregada nos ombros da pessoa, com fardos suspensos em ambas as pontas (veja Is 9:4), ou canga de madeira colocada no pescoço de dois animais de tração (usualmente bovinos) para puxar implementos agrícolas ou uma carroça. (Núm 19:2; De 21:3; 1Sa 6:7) Esta canga costumava ser mantida na posição por duas correias, cada uma em volta do pescoço de um animal. Alguns jugos, em vez de terem correias, tinham barras verticais em ambos os lados do pescoço do animal, ligadas por correias na frente do pescoço. Prendiam-se também jugos na testa dos animais, à base dos chifres. Os jugos sobre os ombros de humanos, no antigo Egito, para carregar água e outros fardos, tinham cerca de 1 m de comprimento e vinham equipados com correias nas extremidades, para se prenderem cargas.

Termos nos Idiomas Originais. Os termos gregos (zy·gós, zeú·gos) que transmitem a ideia de jugo derivam da palavra zeú·gny·mi, que significa "jungir; parelhar; juntar; amarrar; unir". Usualmente jungiam-se dois animais, de modo que a palavra grega zeú·gos pode denotar um "par" ou uma "junta" de animais, tal como "um par de rolas". (Lu 2:24; 14:19) O termo hebraico tsé·medh corresponde mais ou menos à palavra grega zeú·gos e pode designar uma "parelha" (Jz 19:3, 10), uma "junta" (1Sa 11:7; 1Rs 19:19, 21), ou uma "jeira", medida de terra que uma junta de bois podia lavrar num dia (1Sa 14:14; Is 5:10). No entanto, uma palavra hebraica inteiramente diferente ('ol ou 'ohl) refere-se ao instrumento usado para jungir ou unir coisas. (Núm 19:2) Outro termo hebraico (moh·táh, pau de jugo) é associado com jugos (Le 26:13; Is 58:6, 9; Je 27:2; 28:10, 12, 13; Ez 30:18; 34:27), e em 1 Crônicas 15:15 refere-se aos varais usados para carregar a Arca. A palavra grega zy·gós, além de designar um jugo, pode aplicar-se a diversos objetos que unem duas ou mais coisas. Por exemplo, o travessão duma balança 'junge' dois pratos; assim, zy·gós é traduzido "balança" em Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:5. Igual ao termo hebraico 'ol (Gên 27:40; Is 9:4), zy·gós pode também descrever a canga usada por alguém para carregar fardos distribuídos equitativamente em ambos os lados da canga.

Uso Figurado. Os escravos frequentemente tinham de carregar fardos (veja Jos 9:23; 1Ti 6:1), e, por esta razão, o jugo representava apropriadamente a escravidão ou sujeição a outra pessoa, tal como a sujeição de Esaú a Jacó (Gên 27:40), ou a sujeição a um governante ou a uma nação (1Rs 12:4-14; 2Cr 10:4-14; Ez 34:27), bem como a opressão e o sofrimento. (Is 58:6-9) Um jugo de ferro denotava uma servidão mais dura do que um jugo de madeira. (De 28:48; Je 28:10-14) E remover ou quebrar um jugo significava libertação da servidão, opressão e exploração. — Le 26:13; Is 10:27; 14:25; Je 2:20; 28:2, 4; 30:8; Ez 30:18.

Quando a cidade de Jerusalém caiu diante do Rei Nabucodonosor, seus habitantes ficaram debaixo do jugo pesado da submissão a Babilônia. Este jugo era especialmente duro para os homens mais idosos, que nunca tiveram de suportar tal coisa quando mais jovens. (Veja Is 47:6.) Evidentemente aludindo a isso na sua lamentação sobre a destruição de Jerusalém, Jeremias disse: "É bom que o varão vigoroso carregue o jugo durante a sua mocidade." Por aprender a carregar um jugo de sofrimento na mocidade, a pessoa achará muito mais fácil mais adiante na vida levar um jugo, sem perder a esperança. — La 3:25-30.

Ao passo que pessoas e nações têm oprimido outros, Jeová Deus nunca colocou um jugo opressivo, prejudicial, sobre os seus servos fiéis. Por meio do profeta Oseias, Jeová lembrou a Israel Seu tratamento misericordioso: "Continuei a puxá-los com as cordas do homem terreno, com os cordões do amor, de modo que me tornei para eles como os que retiram um jugo das suas queixadas, e suavemente eu levei alimento a cada um." (Os 11:4) Assim, nos tratos de Jeová com os israelitas, ele agiu como alguém que retira ou puxa o jugo para trás o suficiente para habilitar o animal a comer confortavelmente. Era somente quando eles quebravam seu jugo de submissão a Deus (Je 5:5) que passavam a ficar sob o jugo opressivo de nações inimigas. — Veja De 28:48; Je 5:6-19; 28:14.

A Lei dada à nação de Israel era um jugo, porque os colocava sob obrigações e responsabilidades para com Jeová Deus. Visto que a Lei era santa, justa e boa, o que ela prescrevia não prejudicava os israelitas. (Ro 7:12) No entanto, por causa da pecaminosidade e imperfeição deles, não puderam guardá-la perfeitamente, e, por isso, ela se mostrou um jugo que 'nem eles, nem seus antepassados foram capazes de levar' (porque resultava na condenação deles pela violação da Lei). Este ponto foi destacado por Pedro, quando mostrou que não era necessário impor aos cristãos não judeus a obrigação de observar "a lei de Moisés". (At 15:4-11) A própria Lei não causava escravidão, mas o pecado a causava. (Ro 7:12, 14) Assim, não somente seria impossível para alguém tentar obter a vida por guardar perfeitamente a Lei mosaica, mas também significaria para ele deixar-se "restringir novamente num jugo de escravidão", pois, por ser pecador e escravo do pecado, seria condenado pela Lei, a qual não fornecia nenhum sacrifício realmente eficaz pelos pecados, assim como fez o resgate de Cristo. — Gál 5:1-6.

Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, os judeus estavam sob o jugo da Lei mosaica, e, além disso, sobrecarregados por muitas tradições de homens. Jesus Cristo disse a respeito dos escribas e dos fariseus: "Amarram cargas pesadas e as põem nos ombros dos homens, mas eles mesmos não estão dispostos nem a movê-las com o dedo." (Mt 23:4) Portanto, dum ponto de vista espiritual, especialmente o povo comum estava 'sobrecarregado'. De modo que Jesus podia dizer: "Vinde a mim, todos os que estais labutando e que estais sobrecarregados, e eu vos reanimarei. Tomai sobre vós o meu jugo e aprendei de mim, pois sou de temperamento brando e humilde de coração, e achareis revigoramento para as vossas almas. Pois o meu jugo é benévolo e minha carga é leve." (Mt 11:28-30) Se o "jugo" mencionado por Jesus era aquele que lhe tinha sido imposto pelo seu Pai celestial, então isso significaria que outros podiam entrar sob o jugo com ele e ele os ajudaria. Por outro lado, se o jugo for aquele que o próprio Jesus põe em outros, então se referia a submeter-se à autoridade e direção de Cristo como discípulo dele. Em Filipenses 4:3, o apóstolo Paulo provavelmente se referia a determinado irmão na congregação filipense como "genuíno companheiro de jugo", isto é, alguém sob o jugo de Cristo.

Visto que o casamento vincula marido e mulher, é como um jugo. (Mt 19:6) Portanto, se um cristão ou uma cristã se casasse com alguém incrédulo, isso resultaria num "jugo desigual" (2Co 6:14), dificultando em muito a união de pensamento e de ação.

JUIZ. Homens suscitados por Jeová para libertar seu povo, antes do período dos reis humanos de Israel, eram conhecidos como juízes. (Jz 2:16) Moisés, como mediador do pacto da Lei e líder designado por Deus, julgou Israel por 40 anos. Mas o período dos juízes, conforme usualmente considerado, começou com Otniel, algum tempo depois da morte de Josué, e se estendeu até o profeta Samuel. Samuel não costuma ser contado entre os juízes. De modo que o período dos juízes se estendeu por uns 300 anos. — Jz 2:16; At 13:20.

Os juízes foram escolhidos e designados por Jeová dentre diversas tribos de Israel. Entre Josué e Samuel, mencionam-se 12 juízes (não se incluindo Débora), como segue:

Juiz	Tribo	Juiz	Tribo
Otniel	Judá	Jair	Manassés
Eúde	Benjamim	Jefté	Manassés
Sangar	(?)	Ibsã	Zebulão (?)
Baraque	Naftali (?)	Elom	Zebulão
Gideão	Manassés	Abdom	Efraim
Tola	Issacar	Sansão	Dã

A região exata sobre a qual cada juiz exercia jurisdição e as datas do seu juizado não podem ser determinadas em cada caso. Alguns talvez julgassem contemporaneamente em setores diversos de Israel, e havia períodos intermediários de opressão. — Veja MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 743; DIA DO JULGAMENTO (JUÍZO); TRIBUNAL DE JUSTIÇA; também os juízes de Israel sob os seus respectivos nomes.

JUÍZES, LIVRO DE. Livro bíblico que basicamente abrange um período de uns 330 anos, entre a conquista de Canaã por Israel e o começo da monarquia. Anteriormente, os israelitas haviam sido avisados de que não expulsarem eles os habitantes da terra, conforme divinamente ordenados, levaria a adotarem as práticas religiosas degradadas dos cananeus. Por fim, isto resultaria no desfavor de Jeová e em eles serem abandonados aos inimigos. (Êx 23:32, 33; 34:11-17; Núm 33:55; De 7:2-5) O registro histórico encontrado no livro de Juízes mostra como o aviso se transformou em realidade. Todavia, em vez de o livro lidar extensamente com a infidelidade de Israel e a resultante opressão por estrangeiros, ele narra primariamente as façanhas dos juízes e as maravilhosas libertações que Jeová realizou por meio deles. Assim se destacam a capacidade de Jeová salvar, e sua longanimidade, misericórdia, benignidade imerecida e justiça. Os próprios juízes se destacam como exemplos primorosos de fé. — He 11:32-34, 39, 40.

Disposição. O livro de Juízes está ligado ao livro bíblico precedente pelas palavras iniciais: "E aconteceu depois da morte de Josué." No entanto, alguns dos acontecimentos narrados nele evidentemente ocorreram antes de Josué morrer. Por exemplo, Juízes 2:6 reza: "Quando Josué mandou o povo embora, então os filhos de Israel seguiram seu caminho, cada um para a sua herança, para tomar posse do país." De modo que, pelo visto, Juízes 1:1–3:6 serve de introdução, recorrendo o escritor a eventos que aconteceram antes e depois da morte de Josué, a fim de fornecer o fundo histórico para o relato que segue. A seção desde o capítulo 3, versículo 7, até o fim do capítulo 16, basicamente se encontra em ordem cronológica e relata as atividades de 12 juízes (não se incluindo Débora), começando com Otniel e terminando com Sansão. A última parte do livro poderia ser chamada de apêndice e se ajusta a um período bem anterior ao juizado de Sansão. A captura de Laís pelos danitas razoavelmente poderia ter ocorrido antes da morte de Josué. (Veja Jos 19:47; Jz 18:27-29.) O crime sexual em massa dos homens de Gibeá e os eventos subsequentes, que resultaram quase no extermínio da tribo de Benjamim, provavelmente ocorreram poucos anos depois da morte de Josué. (Jz 19:1–21:25; Jos 24:31) Isto concederia tempo suficiente para os benjamitas terem aumentado de cerca de 600 homens (Jz 20:47) para quase 60.000 guerreiros no tempo do reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 7:6-12.

Escritor e Tempo da Composição. A evidência interna fornece uma base para se calcular quando o livro de Juízes foi escrito. Foi compilado quando havia um rei governando Israel. Senão, o escritor, referindo-se ao passado, não teria dito: "Naqueles dias não havia rei em Israel." (Jz 17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25) Todavia, era uma época em que os jebuseus ainda moravam em Jerusalém. (Jz 1:21) Visto que Davi, em 1070 AEC, arrebatou dos jebuseus "a fortaleza de Sião" (parte de Jerusalém) e transferiu para lá a sua capital (2Sa 5:6-9), o livro de Juízes deve ter sido escrito antes daquela

DESTAQUES DE JUÍZES

Narrativa vigorosa de libertações realizadas repetidas vezes por Jeová a favor de Israel por meio dos juízes, sempre que Israel abandonava práticas idólatras e buscava seriamente a sua ajuda.

O livro, provavelmente escrito por Samuel, abrange uns 330 anos entre a conquista de Canaã e o começo da monarquia.

Fundo histórico das condições prevalecentes durante o tempo dos juízes. (1:1–3:6)

Após a morte de Josué, as tribos de Israel deixam de expulsar do país os habitantes remanescentes de Canaã.

Em vez disso, casam-se com esses pagãos e são enlaçados pela religião falsa deles.

Jeová os abandona aos adversários; mas, de tempos em tempos, suscita juízes para libertá-los.

Libertações da opressão sempre que Israel abandonava a adoração falsa e clamava a Jeová por ajuda. (3:7–16:31)

Por meio de Otniel, Israel é liberto da subjugação de oito anos ao rei mesopotâmico Cusã-Risataim.

Os 18 anos de domínio do rei moabita Eglom terminam quando ele é morto por Eúde, o qual reúne então um exército israelita e subjuga os moabitas.

Sangar, sozinho, golpeia 600 filisteus, salvando assim Israel.

Baraque, incentivado pela profetisa Débora, derrota Jabim, acabando assim com os 20 anos de opressão de Israel por ele; Sísera, chefe do exército de Jabim, é morto por Jael, esposa de Héber, o queneu; Débora e Baraque comemoram esta vitória com um cântico.

Gideão é comissionado para libertar Israel dos sete anos de hostilização dos midianitas; Jeová concede a vitória, depois de reduzir o exército de Gideão a somente 300 homens; Gideão, a seguir, recusa a realeza.

Tola julga Israel por 23 anos, e Jair julga por 22 anos.

Israel sofre às mãos dos amonitas; Jeová provê libertação por meio de Jefté, o qual depois cumpre seu voto de entregar sua filha única ao serviço de Jeová.

Ibsã, Elom e Abdom julgam Israel num total de uns 25 anos.

Jeová dá a Sansão uma enorme força e o usa para livrar Israel dum domínio de 40 anos por parte dos filisteus; seu noivado com uma mulher filisteia de Timná lhe oferece oportunidades de agir contra eles; ser ele traído por Dalila, por fim, resulta numa situação em que ele, na morte, mata mais filisteus do que durante a sua vida.

Outras situações indesejáveis que surgiram durante o tempo dos juízes. (17:1–21:25)

Em Efraim, Micá erige no seu lar uma imagem e emprega um jovem levita como sacerdote.

Certos danitas vêm à casa de Micá e mais tarde furtam os objetos idólatras dele; levam também consigo o levita, para servir-lhes de sacerdote.

Homens da cidade benjamita de Gibeá são culpados dum crime sexual em massa contra a concubina dum levita; não serem os culpados entregues para punição resulta em as outras tribos empreenderem uma guerra punitiva contra Benjamim; esta tribo é quase que aniquilada.

data, provavelmente durante o reinado de Saul. Naquela época, Samuel era o principal defensor da verdadeira adoração, e, como profeta de Jeová, era a pessoa lógica para registrar este livro.

Autenticidade. Não se pode pôr em dúvida que o livro de Juízes ocupa legitimamente um lugar no cânon bíblico. É franco e honesto, e não oculta os graves pecados de Israel. Todo o livro dá glória e honra, não a juízes humanos, mas a Jeová Deus, como verdadeiro Libertador de Israel. Mostra que era o espírito de Deus que habilitava os juízes (Jz 3:9, 10; 6:34; 11:29; 13:24, 25; 14:6, 19; 15:14, 18; 16:20, 28-30) e estes, por sua vez, reconheciam a Jeová como Juiz (11:27) e Rei (8:23). Outros livros bíblicos inspirados citam eventos registrados nele. — 1Sa 12:9-11; 2Sa 11:21; Sal 83:9-12; Is 9:4; 10:26; He 11:32-34.

JUÍZO (JUSTIÇA). A manutenção ou administração do que é direito de maneira justa e imparcial, e segundo normas. A palavra hebraica mish·pát, frequentemente traduzida por “justiça” e “juízo”, “julgamento” (NM, Al, RS), também pode transmitir a ideia dum plano específico (Êx 26:30), costume (Gên 40:13), regra (2Cr 4:20) ou procedimento costumeiro (Le 5:10) na realização de coisas.

As duas palavras hebraicas mais frequentemente traduzidas por “justiça” na versão Almeida (tsé·dheq e tsedha·qáh) usualmente também são traduzidas por “justiça” na Tradução do Novo Mundo. (Gên 18:19; Jó 8:3) Embora juízo tenha conotações jurídicas, basicamente não há nenhuma distinção entre justiça e juízo. — Veja Am 5:24.

Uma palavra grega traduzida “em harmonia com a justiça” (NM) indica algo que é “justo” (Al, CBC) ou merecido. (Ro 3:8; He 2:2) “Julgamento” e “vingança” são os sentidos primários de outras duas palavras gregas às vezes traduzidas “justiça”. — Mt 12:20, NM, CBC; Lu 18:7, NM.

O supremo Juiz e Legislador (Is 33:22), Jeová Deus, “ama a justiça e o juízo”. (Sal 33:5) “Não depreciará o juízo e a abundância da justiça.” (Jó 37:23) Isto garante que ele nunca abandonará os que lhe são leais. (Sal 37:28) Jeová não é parcial nos tratos com as suas criaturas, mas aceita todos os que o temem e que praticam a justiça e lhes concede sua bênção. (At 10:34, 35) Pessoas e nações são punidas ou recompensadas segundo os seus atos. (Ro 2:3-11; Ef 6:7-9; Col 3:22–4:1) O juízo executado por Jeová também é equilibrado com misericórdia, oferecendo assim a homens e nações a oportunidade de se desviarem do seu proceder iníquo e deste modo escaparem da execução dos julgamentos adversos dele. — Je 18:7-10; Ez 33:14-16; veja DECLARAR JUSTO; JUSTIÇA.

A sabedoria de Jeová é muito superior à de humanos imperfeitos, e o homem, não Deus, tem de aprender a vereda da justiça. (Is 40:14) De modo que o homem não está em condições de julgar os atos de Deus como justos ou injustos, mas tem de aprender a harmonizar seu modo de pensar com as normas de justiça que Jeová revela na sua Palavra. Deus disse aos israelitas: "Quanto aos meus caminhos, acaso não são acertados, ó casa de Israel? Não são os vossos caminhos que não são acertados?" (Ez 18:29) Também, ser Jeová o Criador elimina toda base para se questionar a justeza das suas atividades. — Ro 9:20, 21; veja também Jó 40:8–41:34.

Portanto, Jeová sempre exigiu com justeza que aqueles que desejam obter Sua aprovação se familiarizem com as Suas normas de justiça e as sigam. (Is 1:17, 18; 10:1, 2; Je 7:5-7; 21:12; 22:3, 4; Ez 45:9, 10; Am 5:15; Miq 3:9-12; 6:8; Za 7:9-12) Iguais a Deus, eles têm de ser imparciais, visto que o fracasso neste sentido é injusto e viola a lei do amor. (Tg 2:1-9) No entanto, o exercício da justiça segundo as normas de Deus não é um fardo; na realidade, a felicidade do homem depende disso. (Sal 106:3; compare isso com Is 56:1, 2.) Esta verdade foi reconhecida por Blackstone, famoso jurista inglês: "[Deus] vinculou de forma tão íntima, entreteceu tão inseparavelmente as leis da justiça eterna com a felicidade de cada indivíduo, que esta não pode ser alcançada senão pela observância delas; e, se elas forem obedecidas pontualmente, isto não poderá senão produzir esta última." — Chadman's Cyclopedia of Law (Ciclopédia Jurídica de Chadman), 1912, Vol. I, p. 88.

O correto exercício da justiça pela autoridade governamental também contribui para a felicidade e o bem-estar dos seus súditos. (Veja Pr 29:4.) Visto que a justiça sempre será exercida por Jesus como Rei do Reino de Deus e por todos os que servem em cargos administrativos sob ele, seus súditos leais terão prazer em se sujeitar ao domínio justo dele. — Is 9:6, 7; 32:1, 16-18; 42:1-4; Mt 12:18-21; Jo 5:30; compare isso com Pr 29:2.

JÚLIA. Membro da congregação de Roma, a quem Paulo enviou saudações. (Ro 16:15) Júlia talvez fosse esposa ou irmã de Filólogo.

JÚLIO. Oficial do exército, ou centurião, romano do destacamento de Augusto, sob cuja custódia Paulo viajou para Roma. (At 27:1; veja AUGUSTO, DESTACAMENTO DE; OFICIAL DO EXÉRCITO.) Pelo visto, desde o começo da viagem, Júlio reconheceu que Paulo não era um prisioneiro comum, e mostrou-lhe bondade, por exemplo, por deixá-lo desembarcar para visitar amigos em Sídon. No entanto, mais tarde, quando Paulo sugeriu que, naquela ocasião, o prosseguimento da viagem seria perigoso, Júlio aceitou a opinião contrária do piloto e do dono do navio. Mais tarde, os soldados de Júlio impediram a fuga dos marujos, em harmonia com as palavras de Paulo: "A menos que estes homens permaneçam no barco, não podeis ser salvos." Quando ocorreu o naufrágio, Júlio salvou a vida de Paulo por não permitir que os soldados matassem os prisioneiros. — At 27:1-44.

JUMENTO [hebr.: hhamóhr; 'a·thóhn, "jumenta"; 'á·yir, "jumento adulto"; gr.: ó·nos; o·ná·ri·on, "jumentinho"]. Animal de casco duro, equídeo, que se distingue do cavalo por seu tamanho menor, crina mais curta, orelhas mais compridas e cauda de pelos mais curtos, com apenas tufos de crina na extremidade dela. Visto que os seus cascos pequenos, afiados, o tornam de passo mais firme do que o cavalo, o jumento é melhor adaptado ao terreno agreste e montanhoso, tão frequentemente encontrado na Palestina. Embora sejam proverbiais a estupidez e a obstinação do jumento (asno ou burro), na realidade sua inteligência é considerada superior à do cavalo, e ele é um animal paciente, resignado, que, assim como outros animais, com frequência tem sofrido abusos às mãos do homem.

O jumento (Equus asinus) já serve por muito tempo ao homem como animal de carga, meio de transporte e animal de tiro, ocorrendo a primeira menção dele nas Escrituras com relação a Abraão. (Gên 12:16; 22:3; Jos 15:18; 2Cr 28:15; Is 30:24) Evidentemente, do ponto de vista do trabalho duro de carregar fardos, feito pelo jumento, Jacó comparou seu filho Issacar a este animal. (Gên 49:14) Por outro lado, faz-se referência ao cio dos jumentos com relação à prostituição do reino de Judá com outras nações. — Ez 23:20.

Numa das suas visões, o profeta Isaías viu "um carro de guerra de jumentos". (Is 21:7) Isto indicaria que jumentos eram também usados em guerra, provavelmente como animais de carga, se não para carregar também guerreiros para a própria luta. Neste respeito, é de interesse notar que o historiador grego, Heródoto (IV, 129) fala do uso de jumentos pelo exército persa.

Sob a Lei, o jumento era um animal impuro. Portanto, visto que todos os primogênitos pertenciam a Jeová e o primogênito do jumento não podia ser oferecido em sacrifício, ele tinha de ser remido por se dar uma ovelha em troca dele, ou se tinha de quebrar-lhe a nuca. — Êx 13:13; 34:20.

Embora fossem impuros, jumentos foram consumidos em Samaria por causa da severidade da fome durante o sítio da cidade pelo Rei Ben-Hadade, e até mesmo a parte menos comestível do jumento, a cabeça ossuda, de pouca carne, na realidade tornou-se alimento de luxo, custando 80 peças de prata (no caso de siclos, US$ 176). — 2Rs 6:24, 25.

A lei de Deus ordenava tratamento bondoso para com os animais domésticos, tais como o jumento. Um jumento deitado sob a sua carga devia ser aliviado dela, e não se devia jungir um jumento com um touro. (Êx 23:5; De 22:10) O jumento, por ser inferior no tamanho e na força, e de natureza diferente, sofreria em resultado de tal jugo desigual.

O número de jumentos em Israel deve ter sido bastante grande, visto que, só na sua campanha contra os midianitas, tomaram 61.000 jumentos como despojo de guerra. (Núm 31:3, 32-34) A frequente menção deste animal nas Escrituras sugere que raras eram as famílias que não tinham um. (De 5:21; 22:4; 1Sa 12:3) Isto é também corroborado por haver cerca de um destes animais para cada seis homens (não incluindo escravos e cantores) que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. (Esd 2:1, 2, 64-67; Ne 7:66-69) O fato de o jumento reconhecer seu lugar com relação ao seu dono foi empregado como exemplo para censurar o Israel infiel, por causa do seu fracasso em reconhecer Jeová. — Is 1:3.

O jumento, ao morrer, era simplesmente arrastado sem cerimônia para fora da cidade e lançado no depósito de lixo. Deste modo, o profeta de Deus predisse o rebaixamento de Jeoiaquim, orgulhoso e sem fé, filho de Josias, rei de Judá: "Seu enterro será como se enterra um jumento, sendo arrastado e lançado fora, além dos portões de Jerusalém." — Je 22:19.

Tanto homens como mulheres, mesmo israelitas de destaque, montavam jumentos. (Jos 15:18; Jz 5:10; 10:3, 4; 12:14; 1Sa 25:42) Salomão, filho de Davi, para ir à sua unção para o cargo, montou a mula de seu pai, sendo a mula um animal híbrido descendente dum jumento. (1Rs 1:33-40) Era, portanto, bem apropriado que Jesus, maior do que Salomão, cumprisse a profecia de Zacarias 9:9 não por montar um cavalo, mas um jumentinho, "em quem nenhum da humanidade jamais montou". — Lu 19:30, 35.

Alguns acham que os relatos evangélicos divergem com respeito ao animal em que Jesus montou na sua entrada triunfal em Jerusalém. Marcos (11:7), Lucas (19:35) e João (12:14, 15) indicam que Jesus montou num jumentinho, ou jumento novo, mas eles não fazem menção da presença duma jumenta mais velha. No entanto, Mateus (21:7) escreve que os discípulos "trouxeram a jumenta e seu jumentinho, e colocaram sobre estes as suas roupas exteriores, e ele se sentou nelas". Obviamente, Jesus não se sentou em dois animais, mas nas roupas deitadas sobre o jumentinho. Evidentemente, por ele não montar a jumenta, mas, antes, seu jumentinho, Marcos, Lucas e João não mencionam a presença da jumenta nos seus relatos.

Jumento Selvagem. O jumento selvagem [hebr.: 'a·róhdh; aramaico: 'arádh] diferencia-se do jumento doméstico, não pela sua aparência, mas pela sua índole selvagem e intratável. Isto se harmoniza plenamente com a descrição bíblica dum animal como que com 'ligaduras soltas'. — Jó 39:5.

O habitat do jumento selvagem (Equus hemionus) é a planície desértica e a região salina, longe do rebuliço da cidade. Evita instintivamente os lugares habitados pelo homem, de modo que "não ouve os ruídos do batedor". O caso não é que o jumento selvagem não ouça bem; ele é extremamente arisco por causa dos seus apurados sentidos de audição, visão e olfato. Se um homem tentasse aproximar-se furtivamente deste animal, este dispararia com extrema rapidez. Os jumentos selvagens, irrequietos, migram em busca de plantas verdes, explorando até mesmo regiões montanhosas em busca de pastos. Alimentam-se de todo tipo de plantas verdes, chegando a roer até mesmo as raízes. O sal também faz parte da sua alimentação. (Jó 39:5-8) A preferência do jumento selvagem por uma vida livre e irrestrita, longe das habitações humanas, aumenta o significado do fato de que Nabucodonosor morou com estas criaturas durante os seus sete anos de insanidade. — Da 5:21; veja ZEBRA.

JUNCO [hebr.: 'agh·móhn]. Qualquer de uma variedade de plantas graminiformes que costumam crescer em brejos. Os verdadeiros juncos têm caule redondo, frequentemente oco, com três filas de folhas graminiformes, e pequenas flores acastanhadas ou esverdeadas. A designação 'agh·móhn talvez tenha incluído as diversas espécies de juncos, bem como as plantas semelhantes ao junco, da família do carriço.

Antigamente, empregavam-se juncos para acender o fogo de fornalha. (Jó 41:20) Em Jó 41:2, o "junco" talvez se refira a uma corda de juncos retorcidos ou a uma feita com suas fibras.

As outras referências bíblicas ao 'agh·móhn são ilustrativas. Jeová não se agradou dos jejuns do renegado Israel, acompanhados por se curvar cerimonialmente a cabeça tal qual o junco. (Is 58:5) Em Isaías 9:14, "junco" parece referir-se aos falsos profetas (a "cauda"), que apenas falavam o que os líderes da nação de Israel (a "cabeça", ou "broto") queriam ouvir. — Is 9:15; veja também 19:15, onde "junco" parece denotar os egípcios em geral.

JÚNIAS. Destinatário de saudações especiais na carta de Paulo aos romanos (16:7). Andrônico e Júnias eram seus "parentes". Embora a palavra grega usada aqui possa significar "patrício", o sentido primário é "parente consanguíneo da mesma geração". Os dois eram "companheiros de cativeiro" de Paulo, possivelmente tendo estado com ele numa prisão em alguma parte. Paulo chama ambos de "homens notáveis entre os apóstolos", talvez relembrando a sua boa reputação junto aos apóstolos. Eles estavam 'em união com Cristo por mais tempo do que o próprio Paulo', indicando que eram discípulos logo no começo.

JUNÍPERO.

1. [hebr.: beróhsh]. Tem-se dado ao termo hebraico para esta árvore diversos sentidos, tais como "abeto", "cipreste"; todavia, alguns lexicógrafos recomendam em boa base o junípero. (Veja Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, p. 148; The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible [O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete], editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 293.) Visto que a madeira era importada do Líbano pelo Rei Salomão (1Rs 5:8-10; 9:11; 2Cr 2:8), a árvore pode ser identificada com o Juniperus excelsa, uma sempre-verde alta, robusta, que atinge até 20 m de altura, tendo ramos amplos, pequenas folhas parecidas a escamas, e bagas pequenas, escuras. É muito fragrante. A madeira deste junípero é muito apreciada pela sua durabilidade.

O Juniperus excelsa é nativo do Líbano e costuma ser associado com aquela terra, estando incluído entre outras árvores como a "glória do Líbano". (2Rs 19:23; Is 14:8; 37:24; 60:13) O salmista chamou os juníperos de "casa", ou ninho, da cegonha. (Sal 104:17) A madeira do junípero foi usada extensamente na construção do templo por Salomão. (2Cr 3:5) As folhas das portas principais eram de madeira de junípero (1Rs 6:34), e o soalho era recoberto com ela. (1Rs 6:15) Em outra parte se diz que era usada para caibros (Cân 1:17), para pranchas em navios (Ez 27:5), para lanças (Na 2:3) e para instrumentos musicais (2Sa 6:5). Como árvore frondosa, é usada nas profecias de restauração para descrever a beleza e a fertilidade a serem dadas à terra do povo de Deus. — Is 41:19; 55:13; 60:13.

2. [hebr.: 'aroh·'ér ou 'ar·'ár]. A palavra árabe 'ar'ar ajuda a identificar esta árvore como provavelmente sendo o Juniperus phoenicia, árvore arbustiva encontrada na região do Sinai e também na área do deserto de Edom. O radical na forma hebraica de que é tirado o nome da árvore contém a ideia de "nudez" ou de estar "despojado" (veja Sal 102:17), e este junípero-anão é correspondentemente descrito como de aspecto um tanto sombrio, crescendo em áreas rochosas do deserto e em penhascos. É usado apropriadamente no livro de Jeremias na comparação do homem, cujo coração se desvia de Jeová, com uma "árvore solitária ['ar·'ár] na planície desértica", e também no aviso dado aos moabitas, de se porem em fuga e se tornarem "como o junípero [ka·'aroh·'ér] no ermo". — Je 17:5, 6; 48:1, 6 (veja, porém, a nota).

JURAMENTO. Declaração juramentada referente à veracidade do que se disse, ou de que a pessoa fará ou não fará certa coisa; frequentemente envolve um apelo a alguém superior, especialmente Deus.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas empregam-se duas palavras para denotar o que chamamos de juramento. Shevu·'áh significa "juramento ou declaração juramentada". (Gên 24:8; Le 5:4) O aparentado verbo hebraico sha·vá', que significa "jurar", deriva da mesma raiz que a palavra hebraica para "sete". De modo que "jurar" originalmente significava "vir a estar sob a influência de 7 coisas". (Theological Dictionary of the New Testament [Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento], editado por G. Friedrich; tradutor e editor: G. Bromiley, 1970, Vol. V, p. 459) Abraão e Abimeleque juraram sobre sete cordeiras ao fazerem o pacto junto ao poço de Berseba, que significa "Poço do Juramento; ou: Poço de Sete". (Gên 21:27-32; veja também Gên 26:28-33.) Shevu·'áh refere-se a uma declaração juramentada por parte de alguém no sentido de que fará ou não fará certa coisa. A palavra em si não tem a conotação duma maldição a sobrevir àquele que jura, caso deixe de cumprir o juramento. Esta é a palavra usada para o juramento ou declaração juramentada feita a Abraão por Jeová, que nunca deixa de cumprir sua palavra e sobre quem nunca poderia vir uma maldição. — Gên 26:3.

A outra palavra hebraica usada é 'a·láh, que significa "juramento, maldição". (Gên 24:41, n) Pode também ser traduzida por "juramento de obrigação". (Gên 26:28) Um léxico hebraico e aramaico de Koehler e Baumgartner (p. 49) define o termo como "maldição (ameaça de calamidade em caso duma má ação), lançada sobre uma p[essoa] por ela mesma ou por outros". Nos antigos tempos hebraicos, era considerado um assunto bem sério fazer um juramento. O juramento devia ser cumprido, mesmo em prejuízo de quem jurou. (Sal 15:4; Mt 5:33) A pessoa era considerada culpada perante Jeová se fizesse irrefletidamente uma declaração juramentada. (Le 5:4) A violação dum juramento podia ter por consequência a mais severa punição da parte de Deus. Entre as primitivas nações, e especialmente entre os hebreus, um juramento, em certo sentido, era um ato religioso, que envolvia Deus. O uso do termo 'a·láh, pelos hebreus, por dedução, tornava Deus partícipe no juramento e professava a prontidão de incorrer no julgamento que ele se agradasse de infligir em caso de infidelidade de quem jurou. Este termo nunca é usado por Deus com relação aos seus próprios juramentos.

Os correspondentes termos gregos são hór·kos (juramento) e o·mný·o (jurar), que ocorrem em Tiago 5:12. O verbo hor·kí·zo significa "pôr sob juramento" ou "advertir solenemente". (Mr 5:7; At 19:13) Outros termos aparentados com hór·kos significam "juramento afiançado" (He 7:20), "pôr sob solene obrigação ou juramento" (1Te 5:27), "perjuro, ou violador dum juramento" (1Ti 1:10) e "jurar sem cumprir, ou jurar falsamente" (Mt 5:33). A palavra grega a·na·the·ma·tí·zo é traduzida em Atos 23:12, 14 e 21, por 'obrigar-se com uma maldição'.

Expressões Usadas ao Jurar. Frequentemente, o juramento era feito por se jurar por Deus ou em nome de Deus. (Gên 14:22; 31:53; De 6:13; Jz 21:7; Je 12:16) Jeová jurou por si mesmo, ou pela sua própria vida. (Gên 22:16; Ez 17:16; Sof 2:9) Os homens às vezes usavam expressões de natureza formal, tais como: "Assim me [ou: te] faça Jeová e assim lhe acrescente mais, se . . . " eu (ou tu) deixar(es) de fazer segundo o juramento. (Ru 1:17; 1Sa 3:17; 2Sa 19:13) A asserção talvez fosse enfatizada por usar a pessoa o seu próprio nome. — 1Sa 20:13; 25:22; 2Sa 3:9.

Os pagãos apelavam similarmente aos seus deuses falsos. Jezabel, adoradora de Baal, não apelou a Jeová, mas a "deuses" ('elo·hím, com o verbo no plural), assim como também fez Ben-Hadade II, rei da Síria. (1Rs 19:2; 20:10) Na realidade, por causa da prevalência universal de tais expressões, a idolatria passou a ser representada na Bíblia como 'jurar por um deus falso' ou por aquilo que "não é Deus". — Jos 23:7; Je 5:7; 12:16; Am 8:14.

Em uns poucos casos muito sérios, ou quando a declaração solene era acompanhada por fortes sentimentos emocionais, as maldições ou punições resultantes do não cumprimento do juramento eram especificadas. (Núm 5:19-23; Sal 7:4, 5; 137:5, 6) Jó, argumentando em prol da sua retidão, recapitula sua vida e declara-se disposto a sofrer as mais terríveis punições se for achado culpado de violar as leis de Jeová, de lealdade, justiça, juízo e moral. — Jó 31.

No julgamento resultante do ciúme dum marido, a esposa, por responder: "Amém! Amém!" à leitura do juramento e da maldição pelo sacerdote, jurava assim a sua inocência. — Núm 5:21, 22.

O que importava praticamente num juramento era com frequência expresso por se afirmar algo não somente pelo nome de Jeová, mas, adicionalmente, pela vida do rei ou de alguém superior. (1Sa 25:26; 2Sa 15:21; 2Rs 2:2) "Por Jeová que vive", era costume dizer para dar peso à declarada determinação da pessoa ou à veracidade duma declaração. (Jz 8:19; 1Sa 14:39, 45; 19:6; 20:3, 21; 25:26, 34) Uma expressão menos vigorosa, que talvez não devesse ser considerada um juramento, mas que transmitia uma intenção muito séria e era declarada ao ouvinte como garantia, era jurar pela vida da pessoa à qual se falava, como nas palavras de Ana a Eli (1Sa 1:26) e na declaração de Urias ao Rei Davi. — 2Sa 11:11; também 1Sa 17:55.

Formas ou Ações Usadas. O mais frequente gesto usado ao se jurar parece ter sido o de levantar a mão direita em direção ao céu. O próprio Jeová é mencionado como fazendo um juramento desta maneira, de forma simbólica. (Gên 14:22; Êx 6:8; De 32:40; Is 62:8; Ez 20:5) Numa das visões de Daniel, um anjo levantou ambas as mãos para o céu ao fazer um juramento. (Da 12:7) A respeito de perjuros se diz que sua "direita é uma direita de falsidade". — Sal 144:8.

Quem solicitava de outro um juramento talvez lhe pedisse que colocasse a mão sob a sua coxa ou quadril. Quando Abraão mandou seu mordomo buscar uma esposa para Isaque, ele disse ao mordomo: "Por favor, põe a tua mão debaixo da minha coxa", após o que o mordomo jurou que obteria a moça dentre os parentes de Abraão. (Gên 24:2-4, 9) Do mesmo modo, Jacó exigiu um juramento de José, de que não fosse sepultado no Egito. (Gên 47:29-31) A respeito do significado desta prática, veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

Frequentemente, um juramento estava relacionado com a celebração de um pacto. Em tais casos, era comum a expressão: "Deus é testemunha entre mim e ti." (Gên 31:44, 50, 53) Fazia-se esta expressão também para reforçar a declaração dum fato ou duma verdade. Moisés tomou os céus e a terra por testemunhas ao considerar a relação de Israel no seu pacto juramentado com Jeová. (De 4:26) Muitas vezes, uma pessoa ou pessoas, um documento escrito, uma coluna ou um altar ficavam como testemunha e lembrete dum juramento ou dum pacto. — Gên 31:45-52; De 31:26; Jos 22:26-28; 24:22, 24-27; veja PACTO.

Sob a Lei. Casos em que se exigiam juramentos de certas pessoas, sob a Lei mosaica, eram: da esposa no julgamento de ciúme (Núm 5:21, 22), do fiador quando a propriedade deixada aos seus cuidados desapareceu (Êx 22:10, 11), dos anciãos duma cidade, no caso de um assassinato não solucionado (De 21:1-9). Juramentos voluntários de abstinência eram permitidos. (Núm 30:3, 4, 10, 11) Servos de Deus eram às vezes adjurados por alguém em autoridade, e eles falavam a verdade. Do mesmo modo, o cristão, quando sob juramento, não mente, mas diz toda a verdade exigida, ou se nega a responder, se isso poria em perigo os interesses justos de Deus ou de concristãos, caso em que tem de estar pronto para aguentar as consequências que talvez resultem da sua recusa de testificar. — 1Rs 22:15-18; Mt 26:63, 64; 27:11-14.

Em Israel, os votos eram considerados como tendo a força dum juramento, como sagrados, e para serem cumpridos, mesmo que isso resultasse numa perda para o votante. Achava-se que Deus vigiava para ver que os votos eram cumpridos, e como trazendo punição pelo não cumprimento. (Núm 30:2; De 23:21-23; Jz 11:30, 31, 35, 36, 39; Ec 5:4-6) Os votos da esposa e de filhas solteiras estavam sujeitos à confirmação ou ao cancelamento por parte do marido ou do pai, mas as viúvas e as mulheres divorciadas estavam obrigadas a cumprir seus votos. — Núm 30:3-15.

Jesus Cristo, no seu Sermão do Monte, corrigiu os judeus na prática deles de fazer juramentos levianos, vagos e indiscriminados. Passara a ser costume entre eles jurar pelo céu, pela Terra, por Jerusalém e até mesmo pela sua própria cabeça. Mas, visto que o céu é o "trono de Deus", a Terra é seu "escabelo", Jerusalém era sua cidade régia e a cabeça (ou vida) da pessoa dependia de Deus, fazer tal juramento era o mesmo que jurar em nome de Deus. Não era algo a ser tratado levianamente. De modo que Jesus disse: "Deixai simplesmente que a vossa palavra Sim signifique Sim, e o vosso Não, Não; pois tudo o que for além disso é do iníquo." — Mt 5:33-37.

Jesus Cristo não proibia com isso todos os juramentos, porque ele mesmo estava sob a Lei de Moisés, que exigia juramentos sob certas circunstâncias. Na realidade, quando o próprio Jesus foi julgado, ele foi posto sob juramento pelo sumo sacerdote, todavia não objetou a isso, mas deu uma resposta. (Mt 26:63, 64) Antes, Jesus estava mostrando que a pessoa não deve ter duas normas. Cumprir a palavra empenhada deve ser encarado como dever sagrado e ela deve ser cumprida, assim como se fosse um juramento; a pessoa deve ser sincera naquilo que diz. Ele lançou mais luz sobre o sentido das suas palavras quando expôs a hipocrisia dos escribas e dos fariseus, por dizer-lhes: "Ai de vós, guias cegos, que dizeis: 'Se alguém jurar pelo templo, isto não é nada; mas, se alguém jurar pelo ouro do templo, ele está sob obrigação.' Tolos e cegos! O que, de fato, é maior, o ouro ou o templo que santifica o ouro?" Prosseguiu, dizendo: "Quem jurar pelo céu, está jurando pelo trono de Deus e por aquele que está sentado nele." — Mt 23:16-22.

Estes escribas e fariseus, pelo seu raciocínio falso e seu casuísmo minucioso, conforme ali salientado por Jesus, justificavam não cumprirem eles certos juramentos, mas Jesus mostrou que tais juramentos da parte deles eram desonestos para com Deus e realmente vituperavam o nome dele (porque os judeus eram um povo dedicado a Jeová). Jeová declara explicitamente que ele odeia o juramento falso. — Za 8:17.

Tiago corrobora as palavras de Jesus. (Tg 5:12) Mas, essas declarações de Jesus e de Tiago contra tais práticas indiscriminadas não impedem que o cristão jure quando necessário, para assegurar a outros a seriedade das suas intenções ou a veracidade do que diz. Por exemplo, conforme Jesus ilustrou perante o sumo sacerdote judeu, o cristão não objetaria a jurar num tribunal, porque iria dizer a verdade, quer estivesse sob juramento, quer não. (Mt 26:63, 64) Até mesmo a decisão do cristão, de servir a Deus, é um juramento feito a Jeová, que coloca o cristão numa relação sagrada. Jesus colocou o juramento e o voto na mesma categoria. — Mt 5:33.

Também o apóstolo Paulo, para reforçar seu testemunho perante os seus leitores, faz o que equivale a um juramento, em 2 Coríntios 1:23 e Gálatas 1:20. Refere-se adicionalmente a um juramento como costumeiro e próprio para acabar com uma disputa e traz à atenção o fato de que Deus, "quando se propôs demonstrar mais abundantemente aos herdeiros da promessa a imutabilidade do seu conselho, interveio com um juramento", jurando por si mesmo, visto que não havia alguém maior por quem pudesse jurar. Isto dava à sua promessa uma garantia legal e uma dupla asseguração por meio de "duas coisas imutáveis, nas quais é impossível que Deus minta", a saber, a palavra de promessa de Deus e seu juramento. (He 6:13-18) Além disso, Paulo salienta que Cristo foi feito Sumo Sacerdote por um juramento de Jeová, e que ele foi dado em penhor dum pacto melhor. (He 7:21, 22) As Escrituras fazem mais de 50 referências ao próprio Jeová fazer juramentos.

Na noite em que Jesus foi preso, o apóstolo Pedro negou três vezes conhecer Jesus, passando finalmente a praguejar e a jurar. Lemos a respeito da terceira negação: "[Pedro] principiou então a praguejar e a jurar: 'Não conheço este homem [Jesus]!'" (Mt 26:74) Pedro, temeroso, tentava convencer os em volta dele que sua negação era verídica. Por jurar sobre o assunto, ele fazia um juramento no sentido de que suas palavras eram verazes e que podia sobrevir-lhe uma calamidade se não fossem. — Veja também MALDIÇÃO.

JURAR. Veja JURAMENTO.

JUROS. Preço ou taxa paga pelo devedor pelo uso daquilo que tomou emprestado.

Já no segundo milênio AEC, Babilônia havia desenvolvido plenamente um sistema de empréstimos. O Código de Hamurábi indica uma taxa de juros de 20 por cento sobre dinheiro e cereais, e estipula que o comerciante que cobrasse juros mais elevados perderia a quantia emprestada. Em contraste, a lei de Deus para Israel proibia fazer empréstimos com juros a um companheiro israelita em necessidade. Ninguém devia lucrar com os reveses financeiros de outros. (Êx 22:25; Le 25:36, 37; De 23:19) E Provérbios 28:8 indica que as fortunas acumuladas à base de juros ilicitamente cobrados se tornariam por fim propriedade daquele "que mostra favor aos de condição humilde".

No entanto, os israelitas podiam cobrar juros dos estrangeiros. (De 23:20) Comentadores judeus entendem que isto não se aplica a casos de necessidade, mas a empréstimos comerciais. (The Pentateuch and Haftorahs [O Pentateuco e as Haftorás], editado por J. H. Hertz, Londres, 1972, p. 849) Os estrangeiros, muitas vezes comerciantes, costumavam ficar em Israel apenas temporariamente, e era razoável que pagassem juros, em especial por eles também concederem empréstimos a outros à base de juros.

Ao passo que os israelitas retos obedeciam a lei de Deus a respeito de conceder empréstimos sem juros (Sal 15:5; Ez 18:5, 8, 17), emprestar com juros evidentemente tornou-se comum e causou dificuldades aos devedores necessitados. (Ne 5:1-11; Is 24:2; Ez 18:13; 22:12) Jesus Cristo, porém, defendeu a lei de Deus neste respeito e deu-lhe uma aplicação ainda mais ampla, dizendo: "Continuai . . . a emprestar sem juros, não esperando nada de volta." (Lu 6:34, 35) Portanto, seria impróprio negar ajuda a alguém que, por uma contínua adversidade e sem culpa sua, talvez não pudesse pagar a dívida. Mas, quando o empréstimo não era necessário para aliviar a pobreza, não havia objeção a que se cobrassem juros sobre o empréstimo. O próprio Jesus, numa das suas ilustrações, ao fazer com que o escravo iníquo fosse censurado por não depositar o dinheiro do seu amo junto aos banqueiros para render juros, deu a entender que é correto receber juros por capital investido. — Mt 25:26, 27; Lu 19:22, 23.

JUSABE-HESEDE. Um dos filhos de Zorobabel. — 1Cr 3:19, 20.

JUSTIÇA. As palavras hebraicas tsé·dheq e tsedha·qáh, bem como a grega di·kai·o·sý·ne, têm o sentido de "direiteza", "retidão", indicando um padrão ou norma que determina o que é reto. (Veja JUÍZO (JUSTIÇA). A palavra "justiça" é frequentemente usada com referência a um juiz, ou a um julgamento, o que dá ao termo um sentido um tanto jurídico. (Sal 35:24; 72:2; 96:13; Is 11:4; Re 19:11) Na Lei mosaica, em Levítico 19:36, tsé·dheq é usado quatro vezes com referência a transações comerciais: "Deveis mostrar ter balanças exatas ["justas", Al; BJ; CBC], pesos exatos, um efa exato e um him exato."

Deus Estabelece o Padrão. O perito em grego Kenneth S. Wuest diz: "Deus é o padrão objetivo que determina o sentido de dikaios [justo], e ao mesmo tempo mantém o sentido constante e imutável, visto que Ele é o Imutável." Ele cita então Cremer como dizendo: "A justiça no sentido bíblico é a condição de retidão, cujo padrão é Deus, determinado segundo a norma divina, que se mostra num comportamento em harmonia com Deus, e que acima de tudo tem que ver com sua relação com Deus, e com a andança perante Ele. Ela é isso, e é chamada de dikaiousune theou (justiça de Deus) (Rom. 3:21, 1:17), a justiça conforme é de Deus, e que é de valor perante Ele, justiça divina, veja Efé. 4:24; com a justiça assim definida, o evangelho (Rom. 1:17) vem ao mundo de nações, que estava habituado a aplicar uma norma diferente." — Studies in the Vocabulary of the Greek New Testament (Estudos do Vocabulário do Novo Testamento Grego), 1946, p. 37.

Lucas mostra em que sentido alguém é justo, ao dizer a respeito do sacerdote Zacarias e da sua esposa Elisabete (os pais de João, o Batizador): "Ambos eram justos diante de Deus por andarem inculpes de acordo com todos os mandamentos e exigências legais de Jeová." (Lu 1:6) A justiça é medida pela conformidade com a vontade de Deus e Suas ordens. Suas ordens específicas talvez variem de uma época para outra, e de pessoa para pessoa — a sua ordem dada a Noé, de construir uma arca, nunca foi repetida, nem se aplica aos cristãos a sua ordem a respeito da circuncisão. Não obstante, os padrões pessoais de Deus, sua personalidade, e o que ele é, conforme expressos nas suas palavras e no seu proceder, permanecem constantes e assim fornecem um padrão perfeito, 'como rocha' em firmeza e estabilidade, para se medir a conduta de todas as suas criaturas. — De 32:4; Jó 34:10; Sal 92:15; Ez 18:25-31; 33:17-20.

Bondade e Justiça. O apóstolo Paulo parece fazer uma distinção entre bondade e justiça ao dizer, quando fala sobre a morte sacrificial de Cristo: "Pois, dificilmente morrerá alguém por um justo; deveras, por um homem bom, talvez, alguém ainda se atreva a morrer. Mas Deus recomenda a nós o seu próprio amor, por Cristo ter morrido por nós enquanto éramos ainda pecadores." (Ro 5:7, 8) Um homem pode ser classificado como "justo" quando cumpre com suas obrigações, quando é equitativo, imparcial, honesto, não culpado de transgressão ou imoralidade, portanto, alguém que é conhecido pela sua conduta íntegra e sua retidão. A declaração de Paulo, porém, dá a entender uma certa superioridade do homem "bom". Para ser "bom", ele não podia, naturalmente, ser injusto; no entanto, há outras qualidades que o distinguem do homem que é primariamente conhecido pela sua justiça. O uso do termo grego mostra que aquele que se destaca ou distingue pela bondade é benévolo (disposto a fazer o bem ou a beneficiar outros) e benfeitor (expressando esta bondade por ações). Não se preocupa apenas em fazer o que a justiça exige, mas vai além disso, sendo motivado pela consideração sadia para com os outros, e pelo desejo de beneficiá-los e ajudá-los. — Veja Mt 12:35; 20:10-15; Lu 6:9, 33, 35, 36; Jo 7:12; At 14:17; Ro 12:20, 21; 1Te 5:15.

Evidentemente, Paulo está mostrando assim que, embora o homem conhecido como "justo" talvez granjeie o respeito ou mesmo a admiração dos outros, ele talvez não toque o coração deles tão fortemente, a ponto de impelir alguém a morrer por ele. No entanto, o homem que se destaca pela sua bondade, que é cordial, prestimoso, atencioso, misericordioso, benfeitor, granjeia afeição; e sua bondade talvez toque suficientemente o coração a ponto de que, por tal homem, alguém talvez esteja disposto a morrer.

Pode-se notar que, nas Escrituras, aquilo que é "bom" é contrastado com o que é "ruim" (Jo 5:29; Ro 9:11; 2Co 5:10), "íníquo" (Mt 5:45; Ro 12:9), e, naturalmente, "mau" (Ro 16:19; 1Pe 3:11; 3Jo 11). O "justo", por outro lado, é contrastado com o "pecador" (o injusto). (Mr 2:17; Lu 15:7) Assim como alguém pode ser pecador (por deixar de satisfazer normas justas), e ainda assim não necessariamente ser classificado como "ruim", "iníquo" ou "mau", do mesmo modo também, alguém pode ser "justo" e mesmo assim não necessariamente ser chamado de "bom", ou classificado como tal, no sentido já descrito.

José de Arimateia era conhecido como "bom e justo", estes termos, naturalmente, sendo sempre usados em sentido relativo quando aplicados a humanos imperfeitos. (Lu 23:50; compare isso com Mt 19:16, 17; Mr 10:17, 18; veja BENIGNIDADE [A Bondade de Jeová].) Os mandamentos da lei de Deus para Israel eram 'santos [por procederem de Deus], e justos [perfeitos em justiça], e bons [proveitosos em todos os sentidos para os que os cumprissem]'. — Ro 7:12; compare isso com Ef 5:9.

Jeová, o Justo. As palavras hebraicas tsé·dheq e tsedha·qáh, e a grega di·kai·o·sý·ne, ocorrem com frequência com referência à justeza dos modos de agir de Deus: como Soberano (Jó 37:23; Sal 71:19; 89:14), na administração e execução de julgamento e justiça (Sal 9:8; 85:11; Is 26:9; 2Co 3:9), na punição do seu povo professo (Is 10:22), na vindicação de si mesmo em julgamento (Sal 51:4; Ro 3:4, 5) e na vindicação do seu povo (Miq 7:9).

O próprio Jeová é chamado de "o lugar de permanência da justiça". (Je 50:7) Portanto, ele é o Justo, e toda a justiça da parte das suas criaturas resulta da sua relação com ele. Jeová se apega à sua própria norma de justiça sem alteração. Portanto, suas criaturas podem ter a máxima confiança nele. A seu respeito está escrito: "Justiça e juízo são o lugar estabelecido do teu trono." — Sal 89:14.

Justo ao exercer misericórdia. A justiça, o juízo, a santidade e a pureza de Jeová são tais, que ele não pode tolerar nenhum pecado. (Sal 5:4; Is 6:3, 5; Hab 1:13; 1Pe 1:15) Por conseguinte, ele não podia perdoar os pecados da humanidade sem satisfazer a justiça — na realidade, sem uma base legal. Mas, por meio da sua benignidade imerecida, ele fez este arranjo justo por fornecer seu Filho como oferta sacrificial, como propiciação ou cobertura dos pecados. Desta maneira, ele pode de modo justo exercer misericórdia para com os pecadores que aceitam este arranjo. Paulo expressa este assunto da seguinte maneira: "Mas agora, à parte da lei, foi manifestada a justiça de Deus, . . . sim, a justiça de Deus por intermédio da fé em Jesus Cristo . . . Pois todos pecaram e não atingem a glória de Deus, e é como dádiva gratuita que estão sendo declarados justos pela benignidade imerecida dele, por intermédio do livramento pelo resgate pago por Cristo Jesus. . . . para que [Deus] fosse justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem [inerentemente pecaminoso] que tem fé em Jesus." — Ro 3:21-26; veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

Busque a Justiça de Deus. Jesus admoestou seus ouvintes: "Persisti, pois, em buscar primeiro o reino e a Sua justiça [i.e., a de Deus], e todas estas outras coisas vos serão acrescentadas." (Mt 6:33) É preciso persistir em buscar o Reino; é preciso desejar este governo e ser leal a ele. Mas, não se deve esquecer que se trata do Reino de Deus; é necessário harmonizar-se com a vontade de Deus, com a norma de Deus quanto ao que é conduta certa e errada, e é preciso continuamente 'transformar a mente', para que todas as facetas da vida estejam em harmonia com a justiça de Deus. (Ro 12:2) A pessoa tem de se "revestir da nova personalidade, que foi criada segundo a vontade de Deus, em verdadeira justiça e lealdade". — Ef 4:23, 24.

Os judeus pensavam que estavam a salvo e que receberiam o Reino de Deus por buscarem estabelecer a sua própria justiça, mas não se sujeitaram à justiça de Deus. (Ro 10:1-3) Foi por isso que Jesus disse aos seus discípulos: "Pois eu vos digo que, se a vossa justiça não abundar mais do que a dos escribas e fariseus, de modo algum entrareis no reino dos céus." Esses homens tinham uma forma de justiça na sua obediência a certos requisitos da Lei e às suas acrescentadas tradições. Mas, na realidade, haviam invalidado a palavra de Deus por causa das suas tradições, e rejeitaram a Cristo, o caminho provido por Deus, por meio de quem poderiam ter obtido a verdadeira justiça. — Mt 5:17-20; 15:3-9; Ro 10:4.

Justiça não por meio das próprias obras. Por conseguinte, é evidente que homens imperfeitos nunca poderiam alcançar a verdadeira justiça — nunca poderiam estar à altura da justiça de Deus — quer pela dependência de obras da Lei mosaica, quer por suas próprias obras de autojustiça. (Ro 3:10; 9:30-32; Gál 2:21; 3:21; Tit 3:5) Os homens que Deus chamava de "justos" eram aqueles que tinham exercido fé em Deus e que não confiavam nas suas próprias obras, mas apoiavam essa fé por obras em harmonia com as normas justas dele. — Gên 15:6; Ro 4:3-9; Tg 2:18-24.

A Lei era justa. Isto não quer dizer que a Lei dada por meio de Moisés não atingia as normas de justiça de Deus. Ela as atingia, sim. O apóstolo argumenta: "Por conseguinte, a lei, da sua parte, é santa, e o mandamento é santo, e justo, e bom." (Ro 7:12; De 4:8) Servia ao propósito de Deus, de tornar manifestas as transgressões e de ser tutor para levar os judeus sinceros a Cristo, tendo ainda uma sombra das boas coisas vindouras. (Gál 3:19, 24; He 10:1) Mas não podia trazer verdadeira e plena justiça aos que estavam sob ela. Todos eram pecadores; não podiam guardar a Lei de modo perfeito; e seu sumo sacerdote não podia eliminar os pecados deles com os seus sacrifícios e serviços. Portanto, somente pela aceitação da provisão que Deus fez de Seu Filho podiam alcançar a justiça. (Ro 8:3, 4; He 7:18-28) Aqueles que aceitavam Cristo eram declarados justos, não como algo merecido, mas como dádiva, e Cristo tornava-se para eles "sabedoria de Deus, também justiça e santificação, e livramento por meio de resgate". Por conseguinte, a verdadeira justiça só pode vir por meio de Cristo. Isto enaltece a Jeová, atribuindo a ele, não ao homem ou às obras deste, o mérito de ser a Fonte de toda a justiça, "para que fosse assim como está escrito: 'Quem se jactar, jacte-se em Jeová.'" — 1Co 1:30, 31; Ro 5:17.

Benefícios da Justiça. Deus ama os justos e se importa com eles. Davi escreveu: "Eu era moço, também fiquei velho, e, no entanto, não vi nenhum justo completamente abandonado, nem a sua descendência procurando pão." (Sal 37:25) Salomão disse: "Jeová não fará que a alma do justo passe fome, mas repelirá a avidez dos iníquos." (Pr 10:3) Deus há de julgar a terra habitada em justiça, por Jesus Cristo, e ele criará "novos céus e uma nova terra", em que há de morar a justiça. (At 17:31; 2Pe 3:13) A derradeira posse da Terra é prometida aos justos; os iníquos hão de ser eliminados da Terra como "resgate" pelos justos, pois, enquanto os iníquos estão no controle, os justos não podem ter paz. E as possessões dos iníquos serão dos justos, conforme diz o provérbio: "A riqueza do pecador é algo entesourado para o justo." — Pr 13:22; 21:18.

Aquele que persevera em justiça tem assegurado desde já, e para todo o tempo vindouro, a boa vontade de Deus e a aprovação de homens de co-ração reto, porque "a recordação do justo está para ser abençoada [e isso "por tempo indefinido"], mas o próprio nome dos iníquos apodrecerá". — Pr 10:7; Sal 112:6.

Respeite e Acate os Justos. O proceder sábio é respeitar aqueles que Jeová considera justos, e aceitar o conselho e a repreensão deles, o que resultará em bem para os que os aceitam. Davi recebeu repreensão de Jeová por meio de homens justos, servos e profetas de Deus, e ele disse: "Se o justo me surrasse, seria benevolência; e se me repreendesse, seria óleo sobre a cabeça, que minha cabeça não desejaria recusar." — Sal 141:5.

"A Couraça da Justiça." Visto que a Bíblia nos diz: "Mais do que qualquer outra coisa a ser guardada, resguarda teu coração, pois dele procedem as fontes da vida", os cristãos precisam revestir-se da "couraça da justiça". (Pr 4:23; Ef 6:14) Para que o coração não se torne mau, é essencial que se siga a justiça de Deus, visto que o coração do homem decaído, pecaminoso, é traiçoeiro e desesperado. (Je 17:9) O coração precisa de muita disciplina e treinamento. O cristão só pode assegurar-se deste proceder por se apegar de perto às Escrituras, as quais, conforme diz o apóstolo Paulo, são 'proveitosas para ensinar, para repreender, para endireitar as coisas, para disciplinar em justiça, a fim de que o homem de Deus seja plenamente competente, completamente equipado para toda boa obra'. Ele deve aceitar com gratidão a disciplina recebida de homens justos, que fazem tal uso da Palavra de Deus. — 2Ti 3:16, 17.

JUSTIFICAÇÃO. Veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

JUSTO [do lat. Justus, que significa "Justo, Reto"].

1. Cognome de José Barsabás. Justo e Matias foram os dois candidatos sugeridos como possíveis substitutos de Judas Iscariotes qual apóstolo. A sorte caiu em Matias. Embora Justo não fosse escolhido, ter sido ele cogitado para o cargo mostra que era um discípulo maduro de Jesus Cristo. — At 1:23-26.

2. Crente coríntio, cujo lar era contíguo à sinagoga. Por causa da oposição dos judeus, Paulo 'saiu desta e entrou' na casa de Tício Justo, quer dizer, prosseguiu ali com a sua pregação; continuou a morar com Áquila e Priscila. — At 18:1-7.

3. Colaborador judeu do apóstolo Paulo. Justo, também chamado Jesus, foi um dos que haviam fortalecido Paulo durante o seu primeiro encarceramento em Roma e que também mandou seus cumprimentos aos colossenses. — Col 4:10, 11.

JUSTO, DECLARAR. Veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

JUTÁ [provavelmente: Lugar Extenso (ou Estendido)]. Localidade na região montanhosa de Judá, dada "aos filhos de Arão" como cidade sacerdotal. (Jos 15:20, 48, 55; 21:13, 16) Jutá é identificada com a atual Yatta, situada numa serra a uns 10 km ao S de Hébron.

L

LÃ. O pelo macio e crespo que forma o velocino de certos animais, especialmente das ovelhas. Era tosquiado e utilizado de forma extensiva pelos hebreus e por outros dos tempos antigos, para fazer roupas e para bordados. (Êx 35:4-6, 25; 36:8, 35, 37; 38:18; 39:1-8, 22-29; Le 13:47; Pr 31:13, 22; Ez 34:3) Roupas de lã isolam do calor e do frio e são confortáveis, aquecendo sem serem muito pesadas, e absorvendo a umidade, embora não deem ao usuário a sensação de estarem umedecidas.

Sob a Lei, os israelitas tinham de dar aos sacerdotes "a primeira lã tosquiada" de seus rebanhos. (De 18:3-5) Pessoas que não fossem sacerdotes estavam proibidas de "usar mescla de lã e de linho". — De 22:11; Le 19:19; veja PANO (Outros Usos).

A importância da lã nos tempos antigos é indicada pelo fato de o Rei Mesa, de Moabe, ter pago "cem mil cordeiros e cem mil carneiros não tosquiados" ao rei de Israel como tributo. (2Rs 3:4) A lã também era um valioso item comercial. — Ez 27:1, 2, 7, 16, 18.

Visto que a lã amiúde é branca em seu estado natural, às vezes é associada com a brancura e a pureza. Por exemplo, mediante o profeta Isaías, Jeová assemelhou os pecados perdoados à lã branca, dizendo: "Embora os vossos pecados se mostrem como escarlate, serão tornados brancos como a neve; embora sejam vermelhos como pano carmesim, tornar-se-ão como a lã." — Is 1:18-20.

Jeová fornece "a neve como lã", cobrindo a terra como um manto quente de lã branca. — Sal 147:16.

O "Antigo de Dias", Jeová Deus, é representado simbolicamente em visão com cabelos semelhantes à pura lã. (Da 7:9) Isto sugere muita idade e sabedoria, que são associadas com as cãs. (Compare isso com Jó 15:9, 10.) Similarmente, o apóstolo João viu "alguém semelhante a um filho de homem" e observou que "sua cabeça e seus cabelos eram brancos como a lã branca, como neve". (Re 1:12-14) Ser o cabelo deste personagem descrito desta maneira pode indicar que se embranquecera no caminho da justiça. — Pr 16:31.

LAADE. Descendente de Judá e o segundo mencionado dos dois filhos de Jaate. — 1Cr 4:1, 2.

LABÃ. Veja LABÃO N.º 2.

LABÃO [Branco].

1. Neto de Naor, irmão de Abraão. Era filho de Betuel, e irmão de Rebeca (Gên 24:15, 29; 28:5), e pai de Leia e de Raquel. (Gên 29:16) Labão residia na cidade de Harã, em Padã-Arã, uma área da Mesopotâmia. — Gên 24:10; 27:43; 28:6; 29:4, 5.

Labão é chamado de "filho de Betuel, o sírio [literalmente: "o arameu"]". É também mencionado como "Labão, o sírio". (Gên 28:5; 25:20; 31:20, 24) Essa denominação é apropriada em vista do fato de que residia em Padã-Arã, que significa "Planície (Baixada) de Arã (Síria)". Labão era um semita que morava numa região ocupada por pessoas que falavam aramaico, uma língua semítica.

O idoso Abraão enviou seu servo à região que acabamos de mencionar, a fim de procurar uma esposa para Isaque. (Gên 24:1-4, 10) Quando Labão ouviu o relato de Rebeca sobre seu encontro com o servo de Abraão, e viu os presentes que ela recebera, ele se dirigiu correndo a este servo, referindo-se a ele como alguém abençoado por Jeová, e demonstrou-lhe hospitalidade. (Gên 24:28-32) Depois disso, Labão desempenhou papel destacado nas negociações do casamento de Rebeca, a aprovação para tal casamento provindo tanto dele como de seu pai, Betuel. — Gên 24:50-61.

Anos depois, para escapar da vingança de Esaú e para conseguir uma esposa, Jacó viajou para a casa de seu tio, Labão, em Harã. (Gên 27:41–28:5) Já nessa época Labão tinha duas filhas, Leia e Raquel (Gên 29:16), e possivelmente alguns filhos. (Gên 31:1) Labão fez um acordo com Jacó de que, em troca de sete anos de serviço, ele daria a Jacó, como esposa, a sua filha mais moça, Raquel. Entretanto, Labão enganou Jacó na sua noite de núpcias, substituindo Raquel pela filha mais velha, Leia, repelindo os protestos de Jacó por apelar para o costume local, e então oferecendo Raquel a Jacó como esposa secundária, contanto que Jacó o servisse por outros sete anos. — Gên 29:13-28.

Quando Jacó, por fim, desejou partir, Labão instou com ele que permanecesse e continuasse servindo-o por um salário. (Gên 30:25-28) O acordo foi que Jacó ficasse com todos os ovídeos salpicados e malhados, com os ovídeos de coloração escura entre os carneiros novos, e com quaisquer cabras malhadas e salpicadas. (Gên 30:31-34) Mas as palavras posteriores de Jacó a Leia e Raquel, e também a Labão (Gên 31:4-9, 41), indicam que, nos anos que se seguiram, Labão com frequência alterava este acordo original, quando percebia que os rebanhos de Jacó estavam aumentando muito. A atitude de Labão para com Jacó não era a mesma de antes, e, orientado por Jeová, Jacó decidiu voltar à sua terra natal com sua família e seus rebanhos. — Gên 31:1-5, 13, 17, 18.

No terceiro dia depois da partida sigilosa de Jacó, Labão soube disto e foi no encalço de Jacó, alcançando-o na região montanhosa de Gileade. Contudo, um aviso da parte de Deus impediu que Labão prejudicasse Jacó. (Gên 31:19-24) Quando se encontraram, Labão e Jacó discutiram. Jacó apontou seus 20 anos de serviço fiel e de trabalho árduo, e mostrou como Labão lidara injustamente com ele, mudando dez vezes o seu salário. — Gên 31:36-42.

Labão estava muito interessado em recuperar os terafins ou ídolos domésticos, que Raquel, sem que Jacó o soubesse, havia roubado. Labão não conseguiu encontrá-los, pois Raquel os manteve escondidos. Labão talvez tivesse sido influenciado em suas ideias religiosas pelo povo adorador da lua entre o qual vivia, e isto pode ser indicado pelo emprego que fazia de presságios e por possuir terafins. No entanto, deve-se observar que é provável que outras razões, mais do que as simplesmente religiosas, tenham deixado Labão tão ansioso de localizar e recuperar os terafins. Tabuinhas descobertas em escavações feitas em Nuzi, perto de Quircuque, Iraque, revelam que, de acordo com as leis dos tempos patriarcais nessa região específica, a posse de tais ídolos domésticos por parte do marido de uma mulher lhe daria o direito de se dirigir a um tribunal e reivindicar o espólio de seu sogro falecido. Assim, Labão pode muito bem ter pensado que Jacó tivesse roubado os terafins com a intenção de, posteriormente, privar da herança os próprios filhos de Labão. Isto talvez explique por que, não conseguindo localizar os seus deuses domésticos, Labão se mostrou ansioso de celebrar um acordo com Jacó que garantisse que Jacó não retornaria, de posse dos deuses domésticos, após a morte de Labão, para privar da herança os seus filhos. — Gên 31:30-35, 41-52.

Labão fez um pacto de paz familiar com Jacó, e, como marco memorável, ergueram uma coluna de pedra e um montão de pedras. Usando o hebraico, Jacó chamou o montão de Galeede, que significa "Montão de Testemunho". Labão chamou-o de Jegar-Saaduta, usando uma expressão aramaica ou síria com o mesmo significado. Foi também chamado de "A Torre de Vigia". (Gên 31:43-53) Tendo-se despedido de seus netos e de suas filhas, Labão voltou para casa, e o registro bíblico não mais o menciona. — Gên 31:54, 55.

2. (Labã) Lugar mencionado em Deuteronômio 1:1, com relação a "planícies desérticas defronte de Sufe". A localização exata de Labã é desconhecida.

LÁBIO. Sendo parte da boca e tendo muito que ver com a formação das palavras, "lábio" (hebr.: sa·fáh; gr.: khei·los) é usado figuradamente no sentido de fala ou linguagem (Pr 14:3; 1Co 14:21), e é, ocasionalmente, empregado em paralelismos com "língua" (Sal 34:13; Pr 12:19) e com "boca". (Sal 66:14; Pr 18:7) Antes da confusão de línguas em Babel, "toda a terra continuava a ter um só idioma [literalmente: "lábio"] e um só grupo de palavras". (Gên 11:1, 6-9; faz-se o mesmo emprego no Sal 81:5; Is 19:18.) Por meio do profeta Sofonias, Deus prometeu dar aos povos "a transformação para uma língua [lábio] pura"; deste modo, falariam unidamente em louvor de Jeová e de seus justos propósitos por meio de Cristo Jesus. — Sof 3:9; compare isso com Pr 12:19.

Os lábios não constituem indício seguro do que há no coração, visto que o indivíduo pode empregá-los para fazer declarações hipócritas. (Mt 15:8) No entanto, os lábios não podem ocultar de Deus a real condição do coração (He 4:13), e, por fim, revelarão o que existe no coração. — Pr 26:23-26; Mt 12:34.

Moisés quis excusar-se de falar perante o Faraó porque era de "lábios incircuncisos", isto é, era como se seus lábios tivessem um prepúcio sobre eles, sendo assim compridos e grossos demais para falar com facilidade. É possível que tivesse alguma dificuldade na fala. (Êx 6:12, 30) Isaías, quando convocado por Jeová, desejava servir, mas lamentava que estava a bem dizer silenciado porque ele, um homem de lábios impuros, tinha contemplado a Jeová em visão, e não era apto a levar a mensagem pura de Deus. Jeová fez então com que os lábios de Isaías fossem purificados. — Is 6:5-7; compare isso com Jo 15:3; Is 52:11; 2Co 6:17.

A profecia de Oseias incentivava Israel a oferecer a Jeová os "novilhos" de seus lábios, que simbolizavam os sacrifícios de louvor sincero. (Os 14:2) O apóstolo Paulo alude a esta profecia ao exortar os concrentes a oferecerem a Deus "um sacrifício de louvor, isto é, o fruto de lábios que fazem declaração pública do seu nome". — He 13:15.

Figurativamente, um "lábio macio" indica linguagem enganosa. (Sal 12:2, 3) Tais lábios, bem como os lábios duros ou mentirosos, podem ser prejudiciais — ferindo em profundidade como uma espada, ou envenenando como uma víbora. (Sal 59:7; 140:3; Ro 3:13) A pessoa que "abre bem os seus lábios" é aquela que fala de modo impensado ou insensato. (Pr 13:3) Isso pode conduzi-la à ruína, pois para Deus todos são responsáveis por suas palavras. — De 23:23; Núm 30:6-8; Pr 12:13; compare isso com Jó 2:10; Mt 12:36, 37.

LABOR. Veja TRABALHADOR CONTRATADO; TRABALHO, OBRA; TRABALHOS FORÇADOS.

LAÇO. Veja ARMADILHA; CADEIAS (LAÇOS, VÍNCULO).

LACUM. Ponto fronteiriço de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 33) É possivelmente Khirbet Kushsha (Horvat Kush), junto ao rio Jordão, logo ao S do mar da Galileia.

LADÃ.

1. Efraimita ancestral de Josué. — 1Cr 7:22, 26, 27.

2. Levita gersonita de quem se originaram várias casas paternas. (1Cr 23:7-9; 26:21) Evidentemente, era chamado também de Libni. — Êx 6:17.

LÁDANO. Goma-resina macia, castanho-escura ou negra que exsuda das folhas e dos ramos de várias variedades de Cistus, esteva ou xara. A resina tem sabor amargo, mas cheiro fragrante. É usada em perfumes, e, em certa época, também era empregada extensivamente na medicina. Sobre essa substância, o antigo historiador grego Heródoto (III, 112), escreveu: "Extraem-no da barba dos bodes e das cabras, tal qual a goma que escorre lentamente das árvores. Empregam-no na composição de vários perfumes, e é principalmente com ele que os árabes se perfumam." — Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXIII, p. 263.

A palavra hebraica nekhó'th designa este item levado por uma caravana de ismaelitas, a quem José foi vendido, e um dos produtos excelentes que Jacó mandou que seus filhos levassem como presente àquele que era governante do Egito. (Gên 37:25; 43:11) Nekhó'th tem sido traduzido de forma variada por "especiarias" (Al), "resina" (CBC), "tragacanto" (IBB; PIB; VB); "arômatas" (ALA), e, segundo definido por Koehler e Baumgartner, "ládano" (NM). — Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), Leiden, 1958, p. 615.

LADRÃO. Alguém que deliberadamente se apossa do que pertence a outrem sem permissão, especialmente alguém que pratica a fraude e o engano, ou que rouba secretamente. O modo de agir dos ladrões no passado era praticamente o mesmo que o do presente. Roubavam geralmente à noite (Jó 24:14; Je 49:9; Mt 24:43; Lu 12:39; Jo 10:10; 1Te 5:2-5; 2Pe 3:10; Re 3:3; 16:15), e uma das formas comuns de entrar na casa era pela janela. (Jl 2:9) Por outro lado, ladrões e salteadores armavam emboscadas e caíam sobre suas vítimas em áreas desertas, onde era virtualmente impossível obter ajuda. Raramente hesitavam em empregar violência ou em ameaçar e pôr em perigo a vida daqueles de cujos objetos de valor se apoderavam. — Jz 9:25; Lu 10:30, 36; 2Co 11:26.

Os termos das línguas originais traduzidos "roubar" e "salteador" podem também referir-se a reter de outrem o que de direito lhe pertence, ou conseguir coisas de outros por meios fraudulentos ou por apropriar-se, para o seu próprio uso, daquilo que a pessoa estava obrigada a dar a outros. Por deixarem de pagar os dízimos que sustentavam a verdadeira adoração no templo, os judeus dos dias de Malaquias 'roubavam a Deus'. (Mal 3:8, 9) Provérbios 28:24 fala de uma pessoa roubar de seu pai ou de sua mãe, significando, evidentemente, privar de algum modo os pais do que lhes pertence de direito. Jesus Cristo condenou os cambistas por terem transformado o templo num "covil de salteadores". Isto sugere que os cambistas cobravam taxas exorbitantes por seus serviços. — Mt 21:12, 13.

Em sua segunda carta aos coríntios, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "A outras congregações roubei, por aceitar provisões, a fim de ministrar a vós." (2Co 11:8) Não havia nada de fraudulento em Paulo receber de outros as provisões para seu sustento. Mas, evidentemente, ele se referiu a isso como se tivesse roubado aquelas congregações no sentido de ter usado o que recebera delas para suprir suas necessidades enquanto labutava, não com elas, mas em favor dos coríntios.

Em alguns casos, roubar pode referir-se ao ato justificado de se apoderar daquilo a que se tem direito, sendo dada ênfase à maneira furtiva em que tal ato é executado. Para exemplificar, alguns israelitas 'furtaram' o corpo de Saul da praça pública de Bete-Sã. (2Sa 21:12) A tia do jovem Jeoás salvou-lhe a vida por 'furtá-lo dentre os seus irmãos', que foram mortos pela iníqua Atalia. — 2Rs 11:1, 2; 2Cr 22:11.

Condenado por Deus. A maioria das referências bíblicas ao roubo, contudo, refere-se à apropriação ilícita daquilo que pertence a outrem. A lei de Jeová dada a Israel dizia explicitamente: "Não deves furtar." (Êx 20:15; Le 19:11, 13; De 5:19; Mt 19:18) O ladrão tinha de fazer uma compensação dupla, quádrupla ou até mesmo quíntupla, dependendo do que a Lei delineava. Caso não pudesse fazê-lo, era vendido como escravo, recuperando, evidentemente, sua liberdade quando fizesse a plena compensação. (Êx 22:1-12) Além de fazer uma compensação, o ladrão que caíra em descrédito (Je 2:26) tinha de trazer uma oferta pela culpa e pedir ao sacerdote que fizesse a expiação pelos seus pecados. — Le 6:2-7.

Por fim, a nação de Israel passou a desconsiderar estas leis e, consequentemente, Jeová permitiu que ladrões e assaltantes, tanto de dentro como de fora, assolassem aquela nação. (De 28:29, 31; Ez 7:22) Práticas fraudulentas, especialmente a opressão dos pobres e dos necessitados, tornaram-se comuns. — Is 1:23; 3:14; Je 7:9-11; 21:12; 22:3; Ez 22:29; Miq 2:2.

Ao passo que o ladrão que furta para matar a fome talvez não seja tão repreensível como aquele que, como Acã e Judas Iscariotes, rouba por ganância e por causa dum coração ruim (Jos 7:11, 20, 21; Pr 6:30; Mt 15:19; Jo 12:4-6), os que desejam ter a aprovação de Deus não podem ser culpados de roubar. (Is 61:8; Ro 2:21) Embora os cristãos não estejam sob a Lei mosaica, estão sob o mandamento de amar o próximo. "O amor não obra o mal para com o próximo", por conseguinte, não há lugar para o roubo entre os cristãos. (Ro 13:9, 10; Mt 22:39; Tg 2:8) Qualquer ladrão que deseje viver sob o governo do Reino de Deus tem de arrepender-se de seu anterior proceder e aprender a trabalhar arduamente para ganhar seu sustento. (1Co 6:10; Ef 4:28; 1Pe 4:15) E o ex-ladrão genuinamente arrependido pode ficar seguro do perdão de Jeová. — Ez 33:14-16.

Uma expressão idiomática hebraica que literalmente significa "furtar o coração" tem o sentido de "ludibriar". — Gên 31:20, 26, n; compare isso com 2Sa 15:6.

LAEL [Pertencente a Deus]. Levita e pai de Eliasafe, o maioral da casa paterna dos gersonitas durante a jornada de Israel no ermo. — Núm 3:24.

LAGAR. Dispositivo usado para espremer frutos, de modo a extrair-lhes o sumo. Visto que a colheita das azeitonas ocorria depois da vindima, os mesmos lagares eram frequentemente utilizados para a extração tanto do suco das uvas como do óleo de oliva, ainda que, para as olivas, houvesse também um lagar de tipo coluna.

Os lagares comuns consistiam geralmente em duas depressões rasas, semelhantes a um tanque, escavadas na pedra calcária natural, o do nível superior sendo ligado por um canelete ao do nível inferior. (Núm 18:27, 30; 2Rs 6:27) As uvas ou as azeitonas eram pisadas ou esmagadas no reservatório superior (gath, Ne 13:15), permitindo que os sumos fluíssem por gravidade para o tanque inferior (yé·qev, Jz 7:25; Pr 3:10; Jl 2:24; Ag 2:16). Em Joel 3:13 ocorrem ambos os termos: "Vinde, descei, porque o lagar de vinho [gath] ficou cheio. Os tanques [ha·yeqa·vím, plural de yé·qev] de lagar estão realmente transbordando." Aparentemente, o termo yé·qev era também usado com referência aos lagares que consistiam num único tanque, no qual se dava tanto o pisar das uvas como o represamento do sumo. (Jó 24:11; Is 5:2; 16:10; Je 48:33) Os fundos destes lagares tinham uma inclinação maior do que o do tipo convencional, de dois tanques, para permitir o represamento do sumo na extremidade mais baixa. Quando o lagar era comprido e estreito, como um cocho, era chamado de pu·ráh. (Is 63:3; Ag 2:16) As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs também falam do lagar de vinho (le·nós, Mt 21:33), bem como do "recipiente para o lagar" (hy·po·lé·ni·on, Mr 12:1).

Descobriu-se um de tais lagares de vinho, cujo tanque quadrangular superior media 2,40 m de cada lado e tinha 38 cm de fundura. O tanque menor, cerca de 60 cm mais abaixo, para onde escorria o sumo, tinha 1,20 m de cada lado e 90 cm de fundura. Um lagar de vinho assim servia para Gideão malhar seu trigo. — Jz 6:11.

O esmagamento dos frutos nestes lagares era geralmente feito com os pés descalços ou por meio de pesadas pedras. De dois a sete lagareiros, ou mais, trabalhavam em equipe no lagar. Portanto, era digno de nota Isaías ter mencionado que o grande Lagareiro, Jeová, pisará sozinho a cuba de vinho. (Is 63:3) Por cima das cabeças dos lagareiros havia uma barra transversal, da qual pendiam cordas de apoio para os homens segurarem. Os borrifos do "sangue das uvas" manchavam as roupas exteriores dos lagareiros. (Gên 49:11; Is 63:2) Embora isso significasse muito trabalho árduo, a estação do calcamento era, em geral, uma época de regozijo; gritos e cantos alegres ajudavam a manter o ritmo do calcamento. (Jz 9:27; Je 25:30; 48:33) A expressão "segundo Gitite" (traduzido "lagares" na Septuaginta grega e na Vulgata latina) que aparece no cabeçalho de três Salmos (8, 81, 84), pode indicar que se tratava de canções da vindima.

Uso Figurado. Há vários casos, nas Escrituras, em que se faz menção ao lagar de vinho em sentido figurado. (Is 63:2, 3; La 1:15) No dia de Jeová, quando multidões se reunirem na baixada da decisão, proclamar-se-á a ordem: "Metei a foicinha, porque a colheita ficou madura. Vinde, descei, porque o lagar de vinho ficou cheio. Os tanques de lagar estão realmente transbordando; porque se tornou abundante a sua maldade." (Jl 3:13, 14) Similarmente, João observou, em visão, "a videira da terra" ser lançada "no grande lagar da ira de Deus", sendo ali pisada até que "saiu sangue do lagar, até à altura dos freios dos cavalos". O chamado "Fiel e Verdadeiro", "A Palavra de Deus", é aquele que pisa este lagar de vinho da "ira do furor de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso". — Re 14:19, 20; 19:11-16.

LAGAR DE VINHO. Veja LAGAR.

LAGARTA [hebr.: ga·zám]. O estágio larval das borboletas ou das mariposas. Pensa-se que a palavra hebraica ga·zám se deriva duma raiz que significa "cortar". Quando são muitas as lagartas, como gafanhotos, elas literalmente cortam ou tosquiam as folhas da vegetação, pedaço por pedaço, folha por folha, até que a planta fica quase que desnuda de sua folhagem. (Jl 1:4; 2:25; Am 4:9) Ao passo que o conceito tradicional é de que o termo hebraico ga·zám significa "gafanhoto", os tradutores da Septuaginta empregaram a palavra grega kám·pe, que significa lagarta. Também, Koehler e Baumgartner favorecem traduzir ga·zám por lagarta. (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 178) É assim traduzido, em Joel 1:4; 2:25, na tradução da Liga de Estudos Bíblicos e na Tradução do Novo Mundo; "palmerworm" [espécie de lagarta] na King James Version; "(gafanhoto) cortador" na versão Almeida, edição atualizada.

As lagartas são quase que exclusivamente vegetarianas. Seu apetite é voraz, algumas lagartas consumindo, num dia, vegetação equivalente ao dobro de seu próprio peso. Assim, em grandes números, causam consideráveis danos à vegetação.

LAGARTIXA. Veja GECO.

LAGARTO [hebr.: tsav]. Os lagartos (ou lagartixas) são répteis de quatro patas, geralmente pequenos, de cauda longa e pele escamosa. As patas do lagarto se projetam dos lados do corpo, estando suficientemente apartadas de modo a permitir pousar o abdome no solo sem dobrar as patas. Na Palestina podem-se encontrar mais de 40 espécies. Podem ser achados em árvores, em fendas tépidas nas rochas e nas paredes e tetos das casas. O lagarto está incluído entre as impuras "criaturas pululantes", em Levítico 11:29. Sugere-se que o nome hebraico dessa criatura se deriva duma raiz que significa "aderir ao solo". O Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento), de Brown, Driver e Briggs (1980, p. 839), sugere "lagarto" como tradução. Evidentemente, o termo hebraico tsav inclui pelo menos a família dos Agamídeos de lagartos, pois o termo árabe equivalente dabb refere-se ao egípcio lagarto-de-cauda-espinhosa (Uromastix aegyptius), o maior da espécie dos Agamídeos que se encontra em Israel. — Veja CAMALEÃO; GECO; LAGARTO DE AREIA.

Os léxicos, em geral, sugerem que a palavra hebraica kó·ahh também se refere a uma espécie de lagarto. Visto que o significado da raiz desse nome é "poder" ou "força", poderá referir-se ao lagarto-monitor do deserto (Varanus griseus), um lagarto forte e grande. Vive nas áreas secas e arenosas do deserto. Na Palestina, este lagarto atinge cerca de 1,20 m de comprimento. É necrófago, e acha-se na lista dos alimentos "impuros". — Le 11:29, 30.

Outra criatura alistada como impura para a alimentação dos israelitas é mencionada pela palavra hebraica hhó·met, em Levítico 11:30. Algumas traduções recentes (ALA; BJ) vertem-na por "lagarto da areia". O lagarto de areia é possivelmente um cinco [pequeno lagarto].

LAGARTO DE AREIA [hebr.: hhó·met]. Há alguma incerteza a respeito da impura 'criatura pululante' designada pelo termo hebraico hhó·met. (Le 11:30, 31) As traduções da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina indicam uma espécie de lagarto, e a palavra tem sido diversificadamente traduzida por "lagarto da areia" (ALA, BJ), "camaleão" (AT) e "lesma" (KJ, MC). É possivelmente um cinco [pequeno lagarto]. — Veja LAGARTO.

LAGO DE FOGO. Esta expressão ocorre somente no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), e é evidentemente simbólica. A Bíblia dá sua própria explicação e definição do símbolo, dizendo: "Este significa a segunda morte, o lago de fogo." — Re 20:14; 21:8.

A qualidade simbólica do lago de fogo fica mais evidente também do contexto de referências a ele no livro de Revelação. Diz-se que a morte é lançada nesse lago de fogo. (Re 19:20; 20:14) A morte, obviamente, não pode ser literalmente queimada. Ademais, o Diabo, uma invisível criatura espiritual, é lançado nesse lago. Sendo espírito, ele não pode ser prejudicado por fogo literal. — Re 20:10; compare isso com Êx 3:2 e Jz 13:20.

Visto que o lago de fogo representa a "segunda morte", e visto que Revelação 20:14 diz que tanto a "morte [como] o Hades" serão lançados nele, é claro que tal lago não pode representar a morte que o homem herdou de Adão (Ro 5:12), nem se refere ao Hades (Seol). Deve, por conseguinte, ser simbólico de outro tipo de morte, uma morte sem reversão, pois o registro em parte alguma menciona tal "lago" como entregando aqueles que estão nele, como o fazem a morte adâmica e o Hades (Seol). (Re 20:13) Assim, os não inscritos no "livro da vida", opositores impenitentes da soberania de Deus, são lançados no lago de fogo, que significa destruição eterna, ou a segunda morte. — Re 20:15.

Ao passo que os textos supramencionados tornam evidente a qualidade simbólica do lago de fogo, este tem sido usado por alguns em apoio da crença dum lugar literal de fogo e tormento. Tem-se recorrido a Revelação 20:10, porque fala do Diabo, a fera e o falso profeta serem "atormentados dia e noite, para todo o sempre" no lago de fogo. Contudo, isto não pode referir-se a tormento real consciente. Os que são lançados no lago de fogo sofrem "a segunda morte". (Re 20:14) Na morte não existe estado consciente e, portanto, nenhum sentimento de dor ou de sofrimento. — Ec 9:5.

Nas Escrituras, o tormento por fogo é relacionado com destruição e morte. Por exemplo, na tradução grega Septuaginta das Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra tormento (bá·sa·nos) é várias vezes usada com referência à punição por meio da morte. (Ez 3:20; 32:24, 30) Similarmente, sobre Babilônia, a Grande, o livro de Revelação diz que "os reis da terra . . . chorarão e baterão em si mesmos de pesar por causa dela, ao olharem para a fumaça do incêndio dela, enquanto estão parados à distância, por causa do seu temor do tormento [gr.: ba·sa·ni·smoú] dela". (Re 18:9, 10) Quanto ao significado do tormento, um anjo explica mais tarde: "Assim, com um lance rápido, Babilônia, a grande cidade, será lançada para baixo, e ela nunca mais será achada." (Re 18:21) Deste modo, o tormento por fogo aqui corresponde à destruição, e, no caso de Babilônia, a Grande, é uma destruição eterna. — Compare isso com Re 17:16; 18:8, 15-17, 19.

Por conseguinte, os que são 'atormentados para sempre' (do gr.: ba·sa·ní·zo) no lago de fogo sofrem a "segunda morte" da qual não há ressurreição. A palavra grega aparentada ba·sa·ni·stés é traduzida por 'carcereiro' em Mateus 18:34. (RS, NM, ED; compare isso com o v 30.) Assim, os que são lançados no lago de fogo serão mantidos sob restrição, ou "encarcerados" na morte por toda a eternidade. — Veja GEENA; TORMENTO.

LAÍS [Leão].

1. Homem de Galim, pai de Palti (Paltiel), a quem Saul deu como esposa sua filha Mical, ex-esposa de Davi. — 1Sa 25:44; 2Sa 3:15.

2. Cidade cananeia do norte, destruída pelos danitas, que depois a reconstruíram e lhe deram o nome de Dã (Jz 18:27-29); também chamada de Lesem. — Jos 19:47; veja DÃ N.º 3.

LAÍSA [Leão]. Cidade no território de Benjamim identificada por F.-M. Abel (Géographie de la Palestine [Geografia da Palestina], Paris, 1938, Vol. II, p. 368) com ‘Isawiya, uns 2,5 km ao NNE do monte do Templo, em Jerusalém. A previsão profética de Isaías a respeito do violento assírio, à medida que este investe contra um vilarejo após outro, conclama Laísa a ‘prestar atenção’ ao vindouro ataque. — Is 10:30.

LAMÃO. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 40) É em geral identificada com Khirbet el-Lahm (Horvat Lehem), cerca de 5 km ao L de Laquis.

LÂMEDE [ל]. A 12.ª letra no alfabeto hebraico. Lâmede (Lá·me·dh) corresponde em geral ao "l" em português. No hebraico, o salmista usa esta letra no início de cada um dos oito versos no Salmo 119:89-96.

LAMENTAÇÕES, LIVRO DE. Nos tempos bíblicos, lamentações ou endechas eram compostas e entoadas em memória de amigos falecidos (2Sa 1:17-27), de nações devastadas (Am 5:1, 2) e de cidades arruinadas (Ez 27:2, 32-36). O livro de Lamentações fornece um exemplo inspirado de tal composição lamentosa. Consiste em cinco poemas líricos (em cinco capítulos) que lamentam a destruição de Jerusalém às mãos babilônicas, em 607 AEC.

O livro reconhece que Jeová justificadamente trouxe a punição sobre Jerusalém e Judá devido ao erro de Seu povo. (La 1:5, 18) Destaca também a benevolência e a misericórdia de Deus, e mostra que Jeová é bom para aquele que espera nele. — La 3:22, 25.

Nome. No hebraico, este livro é chamado pela palavra inicial ’Eh·kháh!, que significa "Como!". Os tradutores da Septuaginta chamaram o livro de Thré·noi, que significa "Endechas; Lamentos". No Talmude Babilônico (Bava Batra 14*b*) ele é identificado pelo termo Qi·nóhth, que significa "Endechas; Elegias", e é chamado por Jerônimo de Lamentationes (latim). O nome em português, Lamentações, vem deste último título.

Lugar no Cânon Bíblico. No cânon hebraico, o livro de Lamentações é usualmente incluído entre os cinco Meghil·lóhth (Rolos), consistindo em O Cântico de Salomão, Rute, Lamentações, Eclesiastes e Ester. No entanto, nas cópias antigas das Escrituras Hebraicas, diz-se que o livro de Lamentações seguia o livro de Jeremias, como o faz nas Bíblias atuais em português.

Escritor. Na Septuaginta grega este livro é introduzido pelas palavras: "E aconteceu que, depois de Israel ter sido levado cativo e Jerusalém ter sido desolada, Jeremias sentou-se chorando e lamentando com este lamento sobre Jerusalém, e disse." Os targuns também identificam Jeremias como o escritor, introduzindo-o assim: "Jeremias, o profeta e grande sacerdote, disse." A introdução na recensão Clementina da Vulgata latina é: "E aconteceu que, depois de Israel ter sido levado ao cativeiro e Jerusalém ter ficado deserta, Jeremias, o profeta, estava sentado chorando e lamentou com este lamento sobre Jerusalém; e suspirando com espírito amargo, e gemendo pesarosamente, ele disse."

Estilo. Os cinco capítulos do livro de Lamentações consistem em cinco poemas, os primeiros quatro sendo acrósticos. O alfabeto hebraico tem 22 letras distintas (consoantes) e, em cada um dos primeiros quatro capítulos de Lamentações, os versos sucessivos começam com uma das 22 letras do alfabeto hebraico. Os capítulos 1, 2 e 4 têm cada um 22 versos em ordem alfabética, segundo o alfabeto hebraico, o verso 1 começando com a primeira letra hebraica, ’á·lef, o verso 2 com a segunda letra, behth, e assim por diante, até o fim do alfabeto. O capítulo 3 tem 66 versos e, nele, três versos sucessivos começam com a mesma letra hebraica, antes de passar para a letra seguinte.

Nos capítulos 2, 3 e 4 há uma inversão das letras ‘á·yin e pe’ (ali não se acham na mesma ordem como em Lamentações 1 e no Sal 119). Mas isto não significa que o escritor inspirado de Lamentações tenha cometido um erro. Numa análise do assunto, tem-se observado o seguinte: "A irregularidade em pauta deveria, menos ainda, ser atribuída a uma falha por parte do compositor . . ., pois a irregularidade é repetida em três poemas. É, ao invés, ligada a outra circunstância. Pois verificamos em outros poemas alfabéticos também, especialmente os mais antigos, muitos desvios da regra, o que inegavelmente prova que os compositores só se atinham rigorosamente à ordem do alfabeto enquanto se ajustasse ao transcurso do pensamento, sem qualquer artificialidade." (Commentary on the Old Testament [Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento], de C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch, 1973, Vol. VIII, As Lamentações de Jeremias, p. 338) Entre os exemplos então citados acham-se o Salmo 34, onde o verso da vau está faltando, e o Salmo 145, que omite o verso da letra nune. Não existir estrita aderência ao arranjo alfabético das letras hebraicas nestes escritos inspirados não nos deve causar preocupação. Ao passo que o uso de acrósticos sem dúvida servia como ajuda para a memória, a mensagem era de importância primária, e o conteúdo de ideias tinha precedência sobre qualquer artifício literário.

Lamentações, capítulo 5, não é um poema acróstico, embora realmente contenha 22 versos, o mesmo número de letras do alfabeto hebraico.

Tempo da Composição. A qualidade vívida de Lamentações mostra que o livro foi escrito pouco depois da queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, enquanto os eventos do sítio e o incêndio de Jerusalém pelos babilônios ainda estavam frescos na mente de Jeremias. Há acordo geral de que o livro de Lamentações foi escrito logo depois da queda de Jerusalém, e é razoável concluir-se que a sua escrita terminou em 607 AEC.

Cumprimento de Profecia. As palavras de Deuteronômio 28:63-65 tiveram cumprimento na experiência de Jerusalém, vividamente retratada no livro de Lamentações. O cumprimento de várias outras profecias e avisos divinos é também indicado neste livro. Por exemplo, compare Lamentações 1:2 com Jeremias 30:14; Lamentações 2:17 com Levítico 26:17; Lamentações 2:20 com Deuteronômio 28:53.

Conteúdo. No primeiro capítulo, começando com o versículo 12 , Jeremias personifica Jerusalém, a "mulher" Sião, em pacto com Deus, como que falando. (Is 62:1-6) Ela está agora desolada, como que enviuvada e destituída de seus filhos, uma mulher cativa colocada sob trabalhos forçados como escrava. No capítulo 2, o próprio Jeremias fala. No capítulo 3, Jeremias extravasa seus sentimentos, transferindo-os para a figura da nação como um "varão vigoroso". No capítulo 4, Jeremias continua seu lamento. No quinto capítulo, os habitantes de Jerusalém são representados como que falando. As expressões de reconhecimento do pecado, a esperança e confiança em Jeová, e o desejo de voltar-se para o caminho correto, conforme representados em todo o livro, não eram os reais sentimentos da maioria do povo. No entanto, havia um restante como Jeremias. Assim, o conceito expresso no livro de Lamentações é uma avaliação verdadeira da situação de Jerusalém conforme Deus a via.

O livro de Lamentações é, por conseguinte, um registro verdadeiro e valioso, inspirado por Deus.

LAMEQUE.

1. Filho de Metusael, e descendente de Caim. (Gên 4:17, 18) Seu período de vida e o de Adão transcorreram paralelamente, em parte. Lameque tinha duas esposas ao mesmo tempo, Ada e Zilá, e é o primeiro polígamo do registro bíblico. (Gên 4:19) Com Ada, teve um filho chamado Jabal, "o fundador dos que moram em tendas e têm gado", e Jubal, "o fundador de todos os que manejam a harpa e o pífaro". (Gên 4:20, 21) Por meio de Zilá, Lameque tornou-se pai de Tubalcaim, o "for-

DESTAQUES DE LAMENTAÇÕES

Cinco poemas que lamentam a tragédia que se abateu sobre Jerusalém e seus habitantes em 607 AEC às mãos dos babilônios.

Escrito por Jeremias logo após a destruição de Jerusalém.

Jerusalém é personificada como viúva destituída de seus filhos, não tendo ninguém para a consolar. (1:1-22)

- Ela reconhece que seu pecado contra Jeová é o motivo de sua aflição.
- Ela ora ao Todo-Poderoso para que puna os que se regozijam com o seu sofrimento.

Jeová agiu em ira contra Jerusalém. (2:1-22)

- Ele lançou Jerusalém "do céu para a terra".
- Ele rejeitou Seu santuário e não mostrou respeito nem para com o rei e nem para com o sacerdote.
- Em resultado, os que passam por ali se espantam com o que aconteceu com a cidade que era "a perfeição da lindeza".

O "varão vigoroso", que representa a nação, fala de sua aflição, contudo, expressa esperança. (3:1-66)

- Ele descreve sua atual situação desesperadora.
- Não obstante, sente-se confiante de que Jeová ouvirá as orações de seu povo e mostrará misericórdia.

Terríveis efeitos do cerco de Jerusalém. (4:1-22)

- A morte pela espada era melhor do que a morte pela fome; as mulheres até mesmo comiam seus próprios filhos.
- Sobreviventes fugitivos eram implacavelmente perseguidos nas regiões montanhosas e ermas.

Pede-se a Jeová que atente ao sofrimento do povo e volte a conceder-lhe seu favor. (5:1-22)

- A possessão hereditária de seu povo foi entregue a estranhos.
- Foram envergonhados e rebaixados.
- Oram a Jeová para que os traga de volta a ele, embora os tenha rejeitado com indignação.

jador de toda sorte de ferramenta de cobre e de ferro", e de uma filha chamada Naamá. — Gên 4:22.

O poema que Lameque compôs para suas esposas (Gên 4:23, 24) reflete o espírito violento daqueles dias. O poema de Lameque reza: "Ouvi a minha voz, ó esposas de Lameque; dai ouvidos à minha declaração: Matei um homem por contundir-me, sim, um jovem, por dar-me uma pancada. Se Caim há de ser vingado sete vezes, então Lameque setenta vezes e sete." Evidentemente Lameque apresentava um caso de defesa própria, arguindo que seu ato não foi de homicida deliberado, como o de Caim. Lameque afirmava que, ao defender-se, matara um homem que o atacara e ferira. Assim, seu poema constituía um apelo por imunidade contra quem quer que desejasse vingar-se dele por ter matado seu atacante.

Parece que nenhum dos descendentes de Caim, que incluiria a prole de Lameque, sobreviveu ao Dilúvio.

2. Descendente de Sete; filho de Metusalém e pai de Noé. (Gên 5:25, 28, 29; 1Cr 1:1-4) O período de vida deste Lameque e o de Adão também transcorreram paralelamente, em parte. Lameque tinha fé em Deus, e, depois de chamar seu filho de Noé (que provavelmente significa "Descanso; Consolo"), ele proferiu as seguintes palavras: "Este nos trará consolo do nosso trabalho e da dor das nossas mãos, que resulta do solo que Jeová amaldiçoou." (Gên 5:29) Estas palavras se cumpriram quando foi retirada a maldição sobre o solo, nos dias de Noé. (Gên 8:21) Lameque teve outros filhos e filhas. Ele viveu 777 anos, morrendo cerca de cinco anos antes do Dilúvio. (Gên 5:30, 31) Seu nome está alistado na genealogia de Jesus Cristo, em Lucas 3:36.

LAMI [Meu Pão]. Irmão de Golias, o geteu. O relato em 1 Crônicas 20:5, reza, em parte, que "Elanã, filho de Jair, chegou a golpear Lami, irmão de Golias, o geteu", durante uma guerra com os filisteus. Contudo, no texto paralelo de 2 Samuel 21:19, lê-se o seguinte: "Elanã, filho de Jaare-Oregim, o belemita, chegou a golpear a Golias, o geteu." Neste último texto parece que 'eth-lahh·mí (em português "Lami", o termo hebraico 'eth meramente denotando que Lami é o complemento de um verbo) foi lida erroneamente por um copista como se fosse behth hallahh·mí ("belemita"). Portanto, o original provavelmente dizia "chegou a golpear Lami", como diz o texto paralelo em 1 Crônicas 20:5. Isto harmonizaria esses dois textos neste ponto. Lami, portanto, era evidentemente irmão do Golias que Davi matou. Por outro lado, é possível que tenha havido dois Golias. — Veja GOLIAS.

LÂMPADA. Recipiente utilizado para produzir luz artificial. Tem um pavio para a queima de líquidos inflamáveis, como azeite, sendo que o pavio atrai o líquido por capilaridade para alimentar a chama. Os pavios eram de linho (Is 42:3; 43:17), de junco ou cânhamo descascado. O azeite de oliva era, em geral, o líquido que se usava nas lâmpadas antigas (Êx 27:20), embora também se usasse óleo de terebinto.

As cinco virgens discretas da ilustração de Jesus tinham cada qual uma lâmpada e um recipiente de óleo. (Mt 25:1-4) Os que vieram prender Jesus também portavam lâmpadas e tochas. — Jo 18:3.

Antiga lâmpada decorada com uma menorá estilizada.

Em geral, as lâmpadas domésticas eram feitas de cerâmica, embora se tenham também achado lâmpadas de bronze na Palestina. A lâmpada cananeia comum tinha o formato dum pires, com fundo arredondado e uma borda vertical. (FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 952) A borda tinha um bico de um lado, onde repousava o pavio. Às vezes, havia quatro bicos na borda, suprindo quatro lugares para pavios. Com o tempo, as lâmpadas passaram a ser confeccionadas de formas um tanto diversificadas, algumas tendo apenas duas aberturas, uma no alto (perto do centro) para encher o recipiente com óleo e a outra sendo uma espécie de bico que apoiava o pavio. Certas lâmpadas tinham uma alça na extremidade oposta ao bico, às vezes na posição horizontal, mas mais frequentemente na vertical. O tipo greco-romano não raro estampava figuras mitológicas humanas ou animais, mas os judeus confeccionavam lâmpadas com figuras de folhas de parreira ou rolos.

Primitivas lâmpadas em forma de pires eram em geral de tonalidade marrom. Os tipos fabricados no primeiro século EC tinham cores variadas, incluindo marrom-claro, laranja e cinza. Havia também as dos tempos romanos, com um revestimento vermelho vitrificado.

As lâmpadas usualmente usadas nas casas e em outros edifícios talvez fossem colocadas num nicho na parede, ou numa prateleira afixada à parede ou a uma coluna, ou podiam ficar suspensas no teto por meio duma corda. Às vezes eram colocadas sobre suportes de barro, madeira ou metal. Tais suportes permitiam que a luz irradiasse por todo o aposento. — 2Rs 4:10; Mt 5:15; Mr 4:21.

A Bíblia não menciona o uso de velas. Para ter luz, usava-se óleo (líquido) nas lâmpadas. Assim, a frequente tradução da palavra hebraica ner e da grega lý·khnos por "vela" na King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) é inapropriada, como em Jó 29:3 e Lucas 11:33, onde traduções modernas (como AT, BJ, NM, PIB) usam apropriadamente "lâmpada".

Uso no Santuário. No tabernáculo em Israel, o candelabro era feito de ouro e seu formato era diferente daquele do lampadário doméstico comum. Confeccionado segundo as instruções de Jeová Deus (Êx 25:31), era ornamentado, alternando-se botões e flores, e tinha três hastes de cada lado de um eixo central, havendo assim sete suportes para pequenas lâmpadas. Nestas lâmpadas usava-se apenas azeite puro de oliveira batido. (Êx 37:17-24; 27:20) Mais tarde, Salomão mandou confeccionar dez candelabros de ouro e um bom número de candelabros de prata para uso no templo. — 1Rs 7:48, 49; 1Cr 28:15; 2Cr 4:19, 20; 13:11.

Jeová Como Lâmpada e Fonte de Luz. Jeová é a suprema Fonte de luz e de orientação. Davi, depois de ser liberto das mãos de seus inimigos e de Saul, disse: "Tu és a minha lâmpada, ó Jeová, e é Jeová quem faz resplandecer a minha escuridão." (2Sa 22:29) Nos Salmos, emprega-se uma expressão ligeiramente diferente: "Tu mesmo acenderás a minha lâmpada, ó Jeová", representando-se ali a Jeová como aquele que acendia a lâmpada que Davi carregava para iluminar seu caminho. — Sal 18:28.

Jesus Cristo. Na Nova Jerusalém celestial, conforme observada pelo apóstolo João numa visão, "não haverá . . . noite". A luz da cidade não é a do sol e da lua, pois a glória de Jeová Deus ilumina diretamente a cidade, assim como a nuvem de luz que os hebreus chamavam de Shechinah iluminava o Santíssimo dos antigos tabernáculo e templo. (Le 16:2; compare isso com Núm 9:15, 16.) E o Cordeiro, Jesus Cristo, é a sua "lâmpada". Esta "cidade" derramará sua luz espiritual sobre as nações, os habitantes da "nova terra", para a orientação deles. — Re 21:22-25.

Reis da Linhagem de Davi. Jeová Deus colocou o Rei Davi no trono de Israel, e Davi mostrou ser um guia e líder sábio dessa nação, sob a direção de Deus. De modo que ele era chamado de "a lâmpada de Israel". (2Sa 21:17) Em seu pacto para um reino, feito com Davi, Jeová prometeu: "Teu próprio trono ficará firmemente estabelecido por tempo indefinido." (2Sa 7:11-16) Consequentemente, a dinastia ou linhagem familiar de governantes procedente de Davi, através de seu filho, Salomão, era uma "lâmpada" para Israel. — 1Rs 11:36; 15:4; 2Rs 8:19; 2Cr 21:7.

Quando o Rei Zedequias foi destronado e levado cativo a Babilônia, para ali morrer, parecia que a "lâmpada" se extinguira. Mas Jeová não abandonara seu pacto. Ele simplesmente manteve o governo do trono em suspenso, 'até que viesse aquele que tem o direito legal'. (Ez 21:27) Jesus Cristo, o Messias, o "filho de Davi", era o herdeiro permanente desse trono. Assim, a "lâmpada" de Davi jamais se extinguirá. Jesus é, pois, uma lâmpada eterna, na qualidade de quem tem a posse do Reino para sempre. — Mt 1:1; Lu 1:32.

A Palavra de Deus. Visto que "o homem tem de viver, não somente de pão, mas de cada pronunciação procedente da boca de Jeová" (Mt 4:4), os Seus mandamentos são como uma lâmpada, iluminando o caminho dos servos de Deus na escuridão deste mundo. O salmista declarou: "Lâmpada para o meu pé é a tua palavra e luz para a minha senda." (Sal 119:105) O Rei Salomão disse: "Pois o mandamento é uma lâmpada e a lei é uma luz, e as repreensões da disciplina são o caminho da vida." — Pr 6:23.

O apóstolo Pedro viu o cumprimento de muitas profecias sobre Jesus Cristo, e esteve pessoalmente presente na transfiguração de Jesus no monte. Em vista de tudo isso, Pedro podia dizer: "Por conseguinte, temos a palavra profética tanto mais assegurada; e fazeis bem em prestar atenção a ela como a uma lâmpada que brilha em lugar escuro, até que amanheça o dia e se levante a estrela da alva, em vossos corações." (2Pe 1:19) Portanto, encoraja-se os cristãos a permitirem que a luz da Palavra profética de Deus ilumine seus corações. Isto então fornece orientação no caminho seguro "até que amanheça o dia e se levante a estrela da alva".

Servos de Deus. No ano 29 EC, João, o filho de Zacarias, um sacerdote, apresentou-se, anunciando: "Arrependei-vos, pois o reino dos céus se tem aproximado." (Mt 3:1, 2; Lu 1:5, 13) Israel se desviara da obediência à Lei, e João fora enviado para pregar o arrependimento e apontar o Cordeiro de Deus. Ele teve êxito em fazer com que muitos dos filhos de Israel retornassem a Jeová, o Deus deles. (Lu 1:16) Assim, Jesus disse sobre João: "Esse homem era uma lâmpada acesa e brilhante, e vós, por um pouco de tempo, estáveis dispostos a alegrar-vos grandemente na sua luz. Mas, eu tenho o testemunho maior do que o de João, porque as próprias obras que meu Pai me determinou efetuar, as próprias obras que eu faço, dão testemunho de mim de que o Pai me mandou." — Jo 5:35, 36.

Jesus disse também a seus discípulos: "Vós sois a luz do mundo. Não se pode esconder uma cidade situada sobre um monte. As pessoas acendem uma lâmpada e a colocam, não debaixo do cesto de medida, mas no velador, e ela brilha sobre todos na casa. Do mesmo modo, deixai brilhar a vossa luz perante os homens, para que vejam as vossas obras excelentes e deem glória ao vosso Pai, que está nos céus." (Mt 5:14-16) O servo de Deus deve ter apreço pelo motivo pelo qual se lhe concede a luz, e deve dar-se conta de que seria absolutamente tolo e desastroso para ele recusar-se a deixar a luz brilhar de si como que duma lâmpada.

Outros Usos Figurados. Aquilo de que a pessoa depende para iluminar seu caminho é simbolizado por uma lâmpada. Com tal figura de linguagem, o provérbio contrasta o justo com o iníquo, dizendo: "A própria luz dos justos alegrar-se-á; mas a lâmpada dos iníquos — ela será apagada." (Pr 13:9) A luz dos justos se torna cada vez mais luminosa, mas, por mais que a lâmpada do iníquo pareça reluzir, e, consequentemente, por mais próspero que seus caminhos pareçam ser, Deus cuidará de que ele termine na escuridão, onde seu pé certamente tropeçará. Este é o desfecho que está em reserva para a pessoa que invoca o mal sobre seu pai e sua mãe. — Pr 20:20.

Ser apagada a lâmpada de alguém significa também que não há futuro para tal pessoa. Outro provérbio diz: "Porque se mostrará não haver futuro para quem é mau; a própria lâmpada dos iníquos será apagada." — Pr 24:20.

Bildade, quando insinuou que Jó ocultava alguma iniquidade secreta, disse a respeito de um iníquo: "A própria luz se há de escurecer na sua tenda, e nela a sua própria lâmpada se apagará." Mais adiante na sua argumentação, Bildade acrescentou: "Não terá progênie nem posteridade entre o seu povo." À luz do fato de que se disse que Salomão era uma lâmpada que Deus dera a Davi, seu pai, extinguir a lâmpada de alguém pode conter a ideia de que tal pessoa não teria progênie para receber a sua herança. — Jó 18:6, 19; 1Rs 11:36.

Os olhos da pessoa são, figurativamente, uma "lâmpada". Jesus disse: "A lâmpada do corpo é o olho. Se, pois, o teu olho for singelo [sincero; unidirecional; em foco; generoso], todo o teu corpo será luminoso; mas, se o teu olho for iníquo, todo o teu corpo será escuro." (Mt 6:22, 23, n) O olho é como uma lâmpada, porque com ele o corpo pode locomover-se sem tropeçar e sem esbarrar em algo. Jesus, naturalmente, tinha em mente 'os olhos do coração' (Ef 1:18), como as suas palavras no contexto indicam.

Provérbios 31:18, ao dizer a respeito da boa esposa que a "sua lâmpada não se apaga à noite", usa uma expressão figurativa que significa que ela trabalha diligentemente de noite e até mesmo se levanta antes do amanhecer para trabalho adicional. — Veja Pr 31:15.

Segundo Provérbios 20:27, "o fôlego do homem terreno é a lâmpada de Jeová, fazendo uma busca cuidadosa em todas as partes mais íntimas do ventre". Pelo que a pessoa 'exala' ou dá vazão, sejam expressões boas, sejam más, ela revela ou lança luz sobre sua personalidade ou íntimo. — Compare isso com At 9:1.

LANÇA. Veja ARMAS, ARMADURA.

LANCEIROS. Soldados armados de lança. Nos tempos antigos eles constituíam uma secção da infantaria leve, e eram apoiados por arqueiros e fundibulários. Os aurigas e cavalarianos não raro carregavam lanças. Os lanceiros faziam parte das forças de ocupação romana na Palestina, 200 deles sendo incluídos na escolta secreta que conduziu Paulo para fora de Jerusalém. — At 23:23.

LAODICEIA, LAODICENSES. Cidade situada na parte ocidental da Ásia Menor, cujas ruínas ficam perto de Denizli, a cerca de 150 km ao L de Éfeso. Era conhecida anteriormente como Dióspolis e Rhoas, mas foi evidentemente reconstruída no terceiro século AEC pelo governante selêucida Antíoco II, e assim chamada em homenagem à esposa dele, Laódice. Situada no fértil vale do rio Lico, Laodiceia ficava no entroncamento de principais rotas comerciais e estava ligada, por meio de estradas, a cidades como Éfeso, Pérgamo e Filadélfia.

Laodiceia usufruía grande prosperidade como cidade manufatureira e centro bancário. Um indício da grande riqueza dessa cidade é o fato de que, quando sofreu extensivos danos causados por um terremoto, no reinado de Nero, ela conseguiu reconstruir-se sem nenhuma ajuda financeira de Roma. (Anais, de Tácito, XIV, XXVII) A lã negra e lustrosa de Laodiceia, e as roupas fabricadas com ela, eram amplamente conhecidas. Sede de uma famosa escola de Medicina, esta cidade provavelmente também produzia o remédio para os olhos conhecido como pó frígio. Uma das principais deidades veneradas em Laodiceia era Asclépio, um deus da Medicina.

Esta cidade tinha uma grande desvantagem. Diferente da cidade vizinha de Hierápolis, com suas fontes termais famosas por suas propriedades curativas, e Colossos, com sua revigorante água fria, Laodiceia não dispunha de um suprimento permanente de água. A água tinha de vir canalizada de considerável distância, até Laodiceia, e provavelmente chegava morna à cidade. Na primeira parte do trajeto, a água era transportada por um aqueduto e, depois, mais perto da cidade, por meio de blocos cúbicos de pedra, perfurados ao meio e colados com cimento.

Parece que havia muitos judeus em Laodiceia. Segundo uma carta de magistrados laodicenses (citada por Josefo), os judeus, de acordo com a injunção de Caio Rabírio, tinham permissão de observar seus sábados e outros ritos sagrados. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIV, 241-243 [x, 20]) Pelo menos alguns dos judeus ali eram um tanto ricos. Isto se pode deduzir do fato de que, quando o governador Flaco ordenou o confisco das contribuições anuais para o templo em Jerusalém, o montante alegadamente foi de mais de 9 quilos de ouro.

No primeiro século EC, havia uma congregação cristã em Laodiceia e, aparentemente, se reunia na casa de Ninfa, uma irmã cristã local. Sem dúvida, os esforços de Epafras contribuíram para a formação dessa congregação. (Col 4:12, 13, 15) É provável também que os efeitos da obra de Paulo em Éfeso tenham alcançado Laodiceia. (At 19:10) Embora não ministrasse ali pessoalmente, Paulo, não obstante, preocupava-se com a congregação laodicense, chegando até mesmo a escrever-lhe uma carta. (Col 2:1; 4:16) Contudo, alguns peritos creem que a carta de Paulo pode ter sido simplesmente uma cópia daquela enviada a Éfeso. Naturalmente, isto é apenas uma teoria, uma tentativa de acomodar o fato de que a Bíblia não contém uma carta de Paulo aos laodicenses, embora Paulo realmente lhes tivesse escrito. A carta a Laodiceia talvez contivesse simplesmente informações não necessárias para nós hoje, ou talvez tenha repetido pontos adequadamente abrangidos em outras cartas canônicas.

A congregação de Laodiceia era uma das sete da Ásia Menor às quais o glorificado Jesus Cristo, numa revelação dada a João, dirigiu mensagens pessoais. (Re 1:11) Naquele tempo, perto do fim do primeiro século EC, a congregação laodicense tinha pouco que a recomendasse. Embora fosse materialmente rica, era espiritualmente pobre. Em vez do ouro literal, manipulado pelos banqueiros laodicenses, em vez das roupas de lã negra e lustrosa, fabricadas localmente, em vez do remédio para os olhos sem dúvida produzido pela classe médica laodicense, em vez das ferventes águas termais e medicinais da vizinha Hierápolis, a congregação laodicense precisava de coisas assim em sentido espiritual. Necessitava de "ouro refinado pelo fogo", para enriquecer sua personalidade (compare isso com 1Co 3:10-14; 1Pe 1:6, 7), roupas exteriores brancas, para lhe dar uma irrepreensível aparência cristã, sem quaisquer características não cristãs, que eram tão vergonhosas quanto a nudez física. (Compare isso com Re 16:15; 19:8.) Precisava do espiritual "unguento para os olhos", a ser aplicado para remover-lhe a cegueira quanto à verdade bíblica e às responsabilidades cristãs. (Veja Is 29:18; 2Pe 1:5-10; 1Jo 2:11.) Ela poderia comprar estas coisas de Cristo Jesus, aquele que batia à porta, se o acolhesse hospitaleiramente. (Veja Is 55:1, 2.) Tinha de tornar-se estimulantemente quente (veja Sal 69:9; 2Co 9:2; Tit 2:14) ou revigorantemente fria (veja Pr 25:13, 25), mas não devia continuar morna. — Re 3:14-22.

LAPIDOTE [possivelmente: Tochas; Lampejos]. O marido da profetisa israelita Débora. — Jz 4:4.

LAQUIS. Cidade de Judá, da Sefelá. (Jos 15:21, 33, 39) Identifica-se Laquis com Tell ed-Duweir (Tel Lakhish), uma elevação artificial cercada de vales e situada a cerca de 24 km a O de Hébron. Antigamente, este sítio ocupava uma posição estratégica na principal estrada que ligava Jerusalém com o Egito. Houve tempo em que a cidade abrangia uma área de cerca de 8 ha, e tinha, talvez, uma população de 6.000 a 7.500 pessoas.

Na época em que Israel conquistou Canaã, Jafia, rei de Laquis, juntou-se a outros quatro reis numa ofensiva militar contra Gibeão, cidade que tinha firmado a paz com Josué. (Jos 10:1-5) Em resposta ao pedido de ajuda de Gibeão, o exército israelita empreendeu uma marcha forçada de uma noite inteira, desde Gilgal. Com a ajuda de Jeová, derrotou a aliança cananeia, encurralou os próprios reis cananeus numa caverna, executando-os posteriormente. (Jos 10:6-27; 12:11) Mais tarde, a cidade de Laquis foi tomada em menos de dois dias de luta, e seus habitantes foram mortos.

Também, Horão, rei de Gezer, que veio ajudar Laquis, sofreu derrota. — Jos 10:31-35.

Alguns arqueólogos relacionam a campanha de Israel contra Laquis com uma grossa camada de cinzas que foi escavada em Tell ed-Duweir, em que se encontrou, entre outras coisas, um escaravelho de Ramsés. Mas a Bíblia não diz que essa cidade foi incendiada, como o faz no caso de Jericó (Jos 6:24, 25), Ai (Jos 8:28) e Hazor (Jos 11:11). Em vez disso, Josué 11:13 parece indicar que os israelitas raramente incendiavam "as cidades que estavam sobre os seus próprios montes de terra". Assim, não há base bíblica para se situar na época de Josué a destruição que provocou a camada de cinzas e, daí, datar a conquista israelita de Canaã concordemente. É também digno de nota que não se pode estabelecer com certeza a que Ramsés pertencia o escaravelho. Pelo menos um arqueólogo atribuiu o escaravelho a Ramsés III, e aventou a ideia de que Laquis fora destruída pelos filisteus no século 12 AEC.

Durante o reinado de Roboão (997-981 AEC), Laquis foi fortificada militarmente. (2Cr 11:5-12) Mais tarde, por volta de 830 AEC, o Rei Amazias fugiu para Laquis, para escapar de conspiradores, mas foi perseguido e morto ali. — 2Rs 14:19; 2Cr 25:27.

Sitiada por Senaqueribe. Laquis foi sitiada pelo rei assírio Senaqueribe em 732 AEC. Dali, ele mandou Rabsaqué, Tartã e Rabe-Saris a Jerusalém, com poderosa força militar, no empenho de mover o Rei Ezequias a render-se. Por meio de seu principal porta-voz, Rabsaqué, Senaqueribe desafiou a Jeová, e, mais tarde, mandou mensageiros a Jerusalém, levando cartas que continham mais zombarias e ameaças, visando provocar a rendição de Ezequias. Este desafio a Jeová Deus por fim levou ao aniquilamento pelo anjo de Deus, numa só noite, de 185.000 guerreiros assírios. — 2Rs 18:14, 17-35; 19:8-13, 32-35; Is 36:1-20; 37:8-13, 33-36.

Uma representação do sítio de Laquis, no palácio de Senaqueribe, em Nínive, indica que a cidade era cercada por uma muralha dupla, com torres a intervalos regulares, e que na vizinha área colinosa vicejavam palmeiras, videiras e figueiras. A cena que apresenta Senaqueribe recebendo os despojos de Laquis é acompanhada pela seguinte inscrição: "Senaqueribe, rei do mundo, rei da Assíria, sentado sobre um trono-nimedu e passando em revista o despojo (tomado) de Laquis (La-ki-su)." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 288.

Capturada Pelos Babilônios. Quando os babilônios, sob Nabucodonosor, tomaram de assalto a Judá (609-607 AEC), Laquis e Azeca foram as duas últimas cidades fortificadas a cair, antes de Jerusalém ser tomada. (Je 34:6, 7) O que se conhece como Cartas de Laquis (escritas em fragmentos de cerâmica, 18 das quais encontradas em Tell ed-Duweir em 1935 e 3 outras em 1938) parecem relacionar-se com este período. Uma destas cartas, dirigida evidentemente por um posto avançado ao comandante em Laquis, reza em parte: "Estamos atentos aos sinais de Laquis, segundo todas as indicações que meu senhor deu, porque não podemos ver Azeca." Esta mensagem sugere que Azeca já tinha sido tomada, e que não se recebia nenhum sinal dali. É também de interesse que quase todas as Cartas de Laquis legíveis contêm palavras como: "Que יהוה [Iavé ou Jeová] faça que meu senhor ouça hoje mesmo notícias de paz!" (Lachish Ostracon IV) Isto mostra que o uso do nome de Deus era comum naquela época. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 322.

Depois de Judá e Jerusalém terem permanecido desoladas por 70 anos, Laquis foi reocupada por judeus que retornaram do exílio. — Ne 11:25, 30.

Menção Profética. Em Miqueias 1:13, fala-se profeticamente a Laquis: "Prende o carro à parelha de corcéis, ó moradora de Laquis. Ela foi o começo do pecado para a filha de Sião, pois acharam-se em ti as revoltas de Israel." Estas palavras constituem parte dum quadro de derrota, e parecem sugerir que Laquis devia preparar-se para fugir. O "pecado" de Laquis não é considerado em nenhuma outra parte da Escritura. Talvez uma forma de idolatria introduzida em Jerusalém tenha-se originado em Laquis. Ou, o pecado talvez se relacionasse ao fato de Judá confiar nos cavalos e nos carros de guerra, talvez recebidos em Laquis, originários do Egito.

LARGURA DA MÃO. Medida linear, que corresponde aproximadamente à largura da mão na base dos dedos. A largura da mão é reconhecida como de 7,4 cm; quatro larguras de dedo equivalendo a uma largura da mão, e seis larguras da mão a um côvado. (Êx 25:25; 37:12; 1Rs 7:26; 2Cr 4:5; Ez 40:5, 43; 43:13) Segundo o Salmo 39:5, Davi disse: "Fizeste apenas poucos os meus dias"; no entanto, "apenas larguras da mão" aparece no texto massorético hebraico. (NM n) Cristo Jesus usou de maneira similar a palavra "côvado": "Quem de vós, por estar ansioso, pode acrescentar um só côvado à duração de sua vida?" — Mt 6:27.

LARGURA DUM DEDO. Medida linear, a menor mencionada na Bíblia. A largura dum dedo equivalia a $^1/_4$ da largura da mão ou a $^1/_{24}$ dum côvado (1,85 cm). Em Jeremias 52:21, a espessura do cobre usado para as colunas Jaquim e Boaz é fornecida como sendo de quatro larguras de dedo (7,4 cm). — 1Rs 7:15, 21.

LARVA. Veja GUSANO.

LASA. Local mencionado na mais antiga demarcação do termo cananeu. (Gên 10:19) A sua localização exata é incerta. Lasa ficava "perto" de Zeboim (NM; JP [ed. 1962]) ou então o termo cananeu se estendia da região em volta de Zeboim "até" Lasa. (BJ; CBC; MC) Com base na identificação de Jerônimo e na tradição judaica, muitos localizam Lasa em Callirrhoe, perto do litoral leste do Mar Morto, abaixo do uádi Zarga Ma'in. Outros relacionam Lasa com Laís (Dã).

LASEIA. Cidade cretense perto do porto chamado de Bons Portos. (At 27:8) Laseia é em geral identificada com ruínas situadas a cerca de 8 km ao L da atual Kaloi Limniones (Bons Portos).

LASSAROM. Cidade real cananeia, cujo rei foi derrotado pelos israelitas sob Josué. (Jos 12:7, 8, 18) Lassarom é muitas vezes associada ao distrito chamado Sarona, situado, conforme Eusébio, entre o monte Tabor e o mar da Galileia. Possivelmente a atual Sarona (Sharona), a cerca de 10 km a SO de Tiberíades, assinala a antiga localização.

LATÃO. Veja COBRE, LATÃO, BRONZE.

LATIM. Língua que pertence à família indo-europeia, e língua-mãe das línguas românicas, tais como o italiano, o espanhol, o francês, o português e o romeno. A última metade do segundo século EC testemunhou um movimento, por parte das forças religiosas de Roma, para que o latim substituísse o grego como a língua do bispado romano. Entre os resultados disso acha-se a produção da Vulgata latina, por Jerônimo, no quarto e quinto séculos EC, atrás apenas da Septuaginta grega como a mais famosa tradução antiga da Bíblia.

O latim era a língua da Roma Imperial, de modo que, quando Jesus Cristo esteve na terra, era a língua oficial da Palestina, embora não a língua comum do povo. Assim, não surpreende encontrarmos alguns latinismos nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. A própria palavra "latim" ocorre só uma vez na Bíblia, em João 19:20, onde se nos diz que a inscrição colocada acima de Jesus na estaca de tortura foi escrita em hebraico, grego e latim.

O latim nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs ocorre sob várias formas. Elas contêm mais de 40 nomes próprios latinos, de pessoas e de lugares, tais como Áquila, Lucas, Marcos, Paulo, Cesareia e Tiberíades. Nesta parte da Bíblia se encontram os equivalentes gregos de cerca de 30 palavras latinas de natureza militar, jurídica, monetária e doméstica, tais como centurio (Mr 15:39, centurião ou oficial do exército), denarius (Mt 20:2, denário) e speculator (Mr 6:27, guarda pessoal). Também ocorrem certas expressões ou idiotismos latinos, como "desejando satisfazer a multidão" (Mr 15:15) e "receberem suficiente fiança". (At 17:9) A sintaxe, ou disposição das frases e sentenças, às vezes sugere uma influência latina. Contudo, o quanto disso ocorreu é um assunto discutido por vários peritos.

Latinismos são encontrados principalmente em Marcos e Mateus, sendo usados mais por Marcos do que por qualquer outro escritor bíblico. Isto reforça a crença de que ele escreveu seu Evangelho em Roma, e principalmente para os gentios, em especial para os romanos. Paulo empregou poucos latinismos; não há nenhum na Septuaginta grega.

A presença de latinismos nas Escrituras é de interesse maior do que apenas acadêmico para os amantes da Bíblia. Harmoniza-se com o que a Bíblia mostra sobre a Palestina estar ocupada por Roma quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra. Ademais, o uso destes latinismos pelos melhores escritores seculares gregos do mesmo período argumenta que as Escrituras Cristãs foram deveras produzidas durante as épocas a respeito das quais relatam. Isto, portanto, comprova ainda mais a autenticidade das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs.

LAVADEIRO. Alguém que, nos tempos bíblicos, lavava roupa usada e também processava tecido novo, alvejando-o, encolhendo-o e removendo dele os óleos, em preparação para o tingimento. Em hebraico, o termo evidentemente vem duma raiz que significa "pisotear", isto é, lavar por ir calcando com os pés para soltar a sujeira. (Mal 3:2; veja BANHO.) A palavra grega para "lavadeiro" (gna·feús) é aparentada com gná·fos (percha; pente de cardador) e refere-se a alguém que prepara tecido novo ou lava e esfrega roupas sujas.

Os lavadeiros dos tempos antigos provavelmente conseguiam embranquecer bem a roupa por limpá-la e alvejá-la. Todavia, ao descrever a incomparável brancura das roupas de Jesus na cena da transfiguração, Marcos diz: "Sua roupagem exterior tornou-se cintilante, muito mais branca do que qualquer lavadeiro na terra poderia alvejar." — Mr 9:3.

Álcali. Em hebraico, a palavra para álcali é né·ther, um carbonato de sódio, também chamado natrão. É chamado de "álcali mineral", para diferençá-lo do "álcali vegetal". O natrão era um composto nativo da substância química, cujos compostos comerciais são conhecidos como soda calcinada

e sal soda (carboneto de sódio). Em Provérbios 25:20 faz-se alusão à sua efervescência, quando misturada com um ácido fraco. Embora em algumas traduções seja chamado de "nitro", não deve ser confundido com o moderno nitro, também chamado salitre, que pode ser nitrato de potássio ou de sódio.

Sozinho ou como componente do sabão, este álcali é um agente de limpeza muito eficaz. Este fato acrescenta força às palavras de Jeová sobre a profundeza da pecaminosidade de Israel: "Porém, mesmo que fizesses a lavagem com álcali e tomasses para ti grandes quantidades de barrela, teu erro certamente seria uma mancha diante de mim." — Je 2:22.

O mundo antigo obtinha este álcali de várias fontes de suprimento — de lagos ou de jazidas na Síria, Índia, Egito, e ao longo do litoral sudeste do Mar Morto. Consta que, além de usá-lo como detergente, os egípcios e outros usavam-no em lugar de fermento no fabrico de pão, empregavam-no como amaciante ao cozer carne, misturavam-no com vinagre contra dor de dente, e usavam-no para embalsamamento.

Barrela. A palavra hebraica bo·ríth, traduzida "barrela" ("sabão" em algumas traduções), refere-se a um álcali vegetal diferente do né·ther, o chamado álcali mineral. A diferença não se baseava na composição química, mas sim, na diferença da fonte de suprimento. Em Jeremias 2:22, ocorrem ambas as palavras no mesmo versículo. Quimicamente, a barrela dos tempos bíblicos era o carbonato de sódio ou o carbonato de potássio, dependendo de se a vegetação da qual se obtinham as cinzas crescia perto do mar, em solo salino, ou em região interiorana. As substâncias químicas das cinzas eram separadas por lixiviação ou por serem filtradas com água. Esta barrela difere da substância química que hoje se chama "soda cáustica", o hidróxido de potássio. A barrela do antigo lavadeiro era empregada, não só para limpar roupas (Mal 3:2), mas também para a redução de metais como o chumbo e a prata. — Is 1:25.

Potassa. A palavra hebraica bor é traduzida por "potassa" (NM), "sabão" (Al), "soda" (BJ), em Jó 9:30. Ali, ela é mencionada como sendo usada para limpar as mãos. Imagina-se que este agente de limpeza seja o carbonato de potássio ou o carbonato de sódio. A forma como era fabricada lhe dava o nome de potassa [potash, em inglês]: cinzas [ashes] de madeira eram primeiro lixiviadas, e daí a solução era fervida em potes [pots].

LAVAGEM DOS PÉS. Gesto apreciado e de hospitalidade, não raro praticado antes de se tomar uma refeição, no clima geralmente quente do antigo Oriente Médio, onde as pessoas costumeiramente usavam sandálias abertas, andavam em solo seco e viajavam a pé por estradas poeirentas. No lar mediano de pessoas comuns, o anfitrião fornecia as necessárias vasilhas e a água, e os visitantes lavavam os seus próprios pés. (Jz 19:21) O anfitrião mais rico usualmente ordenava que o escravo fizesse a lavagem dos pés, e isto era considerado uma tarefa servil. Abigail indicou a sua disposição de atender ao desejo de Davi de que ela se tornasse sua esposa, dizendo: "Eis a tua escrava como serva para lavar os pés dos servos do meu senhor." (1Sa 25:40-42) Em especial era uma demonstração de humildade e de consideração afetuosa para com os convidados, se o anfitrião ou a anfitriã pessoalmente lavasse os pés dos visitantes.

Não se lavavam os pés apenas como gesto de hospitalidade da parte do anfitrião para com seu convidado, mas eram também lavados costumeiramente antes de a pessoa se recolher à cama. (Cân 5:3) Especialmente digno de nota era o requisito de os sacerdotes levitas lavarem seus pés e as suas mãos antes de entrarem no tabernáculo ou antes de oficiarem junto ao altar. — Êx 30:17-21; 40:30-32.

Quando Jesus Cristo estava na Terra, o anfitrião talvez oferecesse ao seu convidado água para lavar os pés, desse-lhe um beijo e untasse a sua cabeça com óleo. Simão, o fariseu, negligenciou essas três expressões de hospitalidade ao receber Jesus. Assim, quando uma mulher pecadora que chorava molhou os pés de Jesus com as suas lágrimas, enxugou-as com o seu cabelo, beijou-lhe os pés, e daí untou-os com óleo perfumado, Cristo apontou a falha de Simão e daí disse à mulher: "Teus pecados estão perdoados." — Lu 7:36-50.

Jesus Cristo lavou os pés de seus apóstolos na última noite de sua vida terrestre, em 14 de nisã de 33 EC, fazendo isso para ensinar-lhes uma lição e 'estabelecer o modelo', em vez de instituir uma cerimônia. (Jo 13:1-16) Haviam ocorrido discussões entre os apóstolos sobre quem deles era o maior. Mesmo mais tarde naquela noite, depois de Jesus ter-lhes lavado os pés, eles tiveram outra discussão acalorada sobre quem parecia ser o maior. (Lu 22:24-27) Mas o que Jesus fizera não seria facilmente esquecido. Naquela noite, Jesus e os apóstolos estavam meramente ocupando um aposento e não eram convidados de alguém. Assim, não havia servos à disposição para lavar seus pés, o que, sem dúvida, teria sido o caso se eles fossem convidados de alguém. Nenhum dos apóstolos tomou a iniciativa de realizar essa tarefa servil em favor de outros. Contudo, numa ocasião apropriada durante a refeição, Jesus levantou-se, pôs de lado suas vestes exteriores, cingiu-se com uma toalha, pôs água numa bacia, e lavou os pés deles. Ele mostrou assim que, com humildade, cada qual devia ser o servo de outros e devia mostrar amor de maneiras práticas, fazendo coisas em favor do bem-estar de outros. Anfitriãs cristãs faziam isso, como é evidente da menção do apóstolo Paulo ao hospitaleiro ato de lavar os pés como uma das obras excelentes realizadas por viúvas cristãs. (1Ti 5:9, 10) As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs não alistam a lavagem formal dos pés como exigida cerimônia cristã. Não obstante, o exemplo que Jesus Cristo deu por meio deste ato é um lembrete para que os cristãos sirvam amorosamente a seus irmãos, mesmo em coisas pequenas e por realizar atos humildes em seu favor. — Jo 13:34, 35; veja BANHO.

LAVAR AS MÃOS. Em vez de mergulhá-las numa vasilha com água, nos tempos antigos era comum lavarem-se as mãos por se derramar água sobre elas. A água suja então escorria para a vasilha ou bacia, sobre a qual se posicionavam as mãos. — Veja 2Rs 3:11.

A Lei prescrevia que os sacerdotes lavassem as suas mãos e seus pés na bacia de cobre localizada entre o santuário e o altar antes de ministrarem junto ao altar ou entrarem na tenda de reunião. (Êx 30:18-21) A Lei também dizia que, em caso de se encontrar uma pessoa assassinada, e fosse impossível determinar com certeza quem foi o assassino, os anciãos da cidade mais próxima de onde se encontrou o morto deviam levar uma novilha, que ainda não havia sido colocada para trabalhar, ou que nunca havia puxado um jugo, para um vale de torrente em que corresse água, e ali quebrar a nuca da novilha. Depois disso, os anciãos deviam lavar as mãos sobre a novilha, denotando a sua inocência com respeito ao assassinato. (De 21:1-8) Também, segundo a Lei, a pessoa era considerada impura se fosse tocada por alguém que tivesse um fluxo e que não tivesse lavado as mãos. — Le 15:11.

Davi desejava ter mãos moralmente limpas, para poder adorar perante o altar de Jeová. (Sal 26:6) Por outro lado, Pilatos tentou em vão isentar-se da culpa de sangue, em relação com a morte de Jesus, por lavar as mãos diante do povo. Dessa maneira, porém, ele realmente não conseguiria escapar da responsabilidade pela morte de Jesus, uma vez que ele, e não a turba vociferante, tinha a autoridade para fazer o julgamento. — Mt 27:24.

Os escribas e os fariseus do primeiro século EC davam grande importância à lavagem das mãos, e criaram caso com Jesus Cristo porque os discípulos dele desconsideravam as tradições dos homens dos tempos antigos por não lavarem as mãos, antes de tomar uma refeição. Não se tratava de uma lavagem comum das mãos, por razões de higiene, mas sim de um ritual cerimonial. "Os fariseus e todos os judeus não comem sem lavar as mãos até os cotovelos." (Mr 7:2-5; Mt 15:2) O Talmude Babilônico (Sotah 4b) coloca alguém que come sem lavar as mãos no mesmo nível daquele que tem relações sexuais com uma prostituta, e diz que quem menosprezar a lavagem das mãos será "desarraigado do mundo". — Veja BANHO.

LÁZARO [provavelmente a forma gr. do nome hebr. Eleazar, que significa "Deus Ajudou"].

1. O irmão de Marta e Maria; sua ressurreição foi um dos notáveis milagres realizados por Jesus Cristo. (Jo 11:1, 2) Jesus nutria profundo amor por essa família, que morava em Betânia, "cerca de três quilômetros" de Jerusalém, na estrada para Jericó. (Jo 11:5, 18 n) Ele era recebido como convidado na casa deles, talvez frequentemente. — Lu 10:38-42.

As duas irmãs mandaram avisar Jesus, que naquela ocasião se achava do outro lado do rio Jordão, de que seu irmão Lázaro estava muito doente. Sem dúvida, elas acalentavam a esperança de que Jesus o curasse. (Jo 11:3, 21, 32) No entanto, em vez de dirigir-se imediatamente para Betânia, ou de curar Lázaro à distância, como fizera no caso do servo do oficial do exército (Mt 8:5-13), Jesus permaneceu onde se achava por mais dois dias. Ao chegar perto de Betânia, ele foi recebido por Marta, e depois também por Maria. Lázaro já havia falecido há quatro dias. — Jo 11:6, 17, 20, 30-32.

Ao falar com Marta, Jesus aproveitou a oportunidade para dar ênfase à ressurreição. (Jo 11:23-27) Logo ele acrescentaria maior significado a suas palavras. Chegando ao túmulo, ou caverna, em que Lázaro estava sepultado, Cristo ordenou que se removesse a pedra que selava a entrada. Daí, em oração a seu Pai celestial, Jesus mostrou que uma das razões desses acontecimentos era para 'que [a multidão ali presente] cresse que [Deus o] enviara'. (Jo 11:38-42) Daí Jesus clamou para que o falecido Lázaro saísse do túmulo, e ele saiu, sem dúvida para o assombro e a alegria dos presentes. — Jo 11:43, 44.

Este milagre levou muitos a terem fé em Jesus, mas fez também com que os principais sacerdotes e os fariseus passassem a tramar a morte dele. A ira dos principais sacerdotes aumentou ainda mais
